---

- <sup>\(1\)</sup> 石黑一雄在一篇题为《撒切尔的伦敦与政治变革时代的艺术家角色》（Thatcher's London and the role of the artist in a time of political change）的回忆性文章中称，莉诺·马歇尔太太（Mrs Lenore Marshall）是一九八二年冬他搬入的伦敦一幢维多利亚时代住宅的房东太太（“A few years later, following Lenore's sudden death, I dedicated The Remains of the Day to her memory.”）。

达林顿府

“你该知道，史蒂文斯，我可不希望你在我离开的这段时间里就一直被闭锁在这幢房子里。你何不开着那辆轿车，到某个地方消遣几天呢？你看起来是该好好享受一次休假了。”

这个建议突如其来，我一时间不知该如何应答才好。我记得我对于他的体恤下情表达了谢意，不过很有可能并没有做出任何明确的表态，因为我的雇主又接着道：

“我这话是认真的，史蒂文斯。我真的认为你应该休个假了。汽油的花费由我来承担。你们这帮家伙，你们总是把自己闭锁在这些深宅大院里忙这忙那，干吗不出去四处走走，看看你们这个美丽的国家呢？”

这不是我的雇主第一次提出这样一个问题了；看来，这倒确实是让他大为费心的一件事。在这种情况下，当我站在那个梯凳上的时候，我脑子里倒是浮现出了一个回答；大意是：虽然从旅行观光、游览乡村盛景的角度上来说，我们确实对这个国家所知甚少，但是干我们这一行的，对于英格兰的“见识”却实际上比大多数人都更胜一筹，因为我们就身处这个国家名流显贵云集的显赫府第当中。当然了，我在向法拉戴先生表达这一观点的时候，却又不太可能不给人一种自以为是的冒昧感觉。所以我也只能满足于简单地如此答复：

“这些年来，就在这幢府第当中，我已经尽享饱览英格兰的无限精华之特权了，先生。”

法拉戴先生似乎不太明白我的言下之意，因为他仍旧只是继续道：“我是认真的，史蒂文斯。一个人不能到处走走，见识一下自己的国家，这是大不应该的。接受我的建议，到外面去待上个几天吧。”

你也能预料得到，那天下午我根本就没把法拉戴先生的建议当真，只是把它当作一位美国绅士不太熟悉在英格兰通常哪些事该做、哪些事又不该做的又一例证。而我在接下来的几天里对这一建议的态度之所以发生了改变——的确，前往西南诸郡一游的打算在我的思绪中越来越挥之不去——无疑实质上应该归因于一我又何必隐瞒呢？——肯顿小姐的来信，如果不算圣诞贺卡的话，这是几乎七年来她写给我的第一封信。但还是让我马上讲清楚我这话是什么意思吧；我想说的是，肯顿小姐的来信引发了我一连串与达林顿府的管理事务相关的想法，我需要强调指出的是，正是由于府第的管理事务已经成为眼下的当务之急，才促使我重新考虑我的雇主那完全出自好意的建议。不过，还是让我进一步作一番解释吧。

事实上，在过去这几个月里，我在履行自己的职责方面犯下了一系列小小的差池。我应该说明，这些差池毫无例外，本身都是非常微不足道的。尽管如此，我想您也能理解，对于一个不习惯于犯下此类差池的人而言，这一发展趋势还是令我备感不安的，实际上，针对其源头，我也确实已经开始认真考虑各种防微杜渐的措施了。正如在这种情况下屡见不鲜的，之前我对于最显而易见的事实竟然一直都视而不见——也就是说，一直到我开始反复琢磨肯顿小姐来信的个中深意，我才终于豁然开朗，看清楚了那个简单的事实：最近几个月来的那些小小不言的差池也确实没什么大不了的，全都源自人员配置上的先天缺陷。

调整和改进之处的话，我相信我也并没有过分地自我吹嘘。同时我也该特别指出，这一次的状况的确是异乎寻常地困难才算是公道。

具体的情况是这样的。房产交易一旦结束——这次交易使达林顿家族在长达两个世纪之后，失去了对这座府第的所有权——法拉戴先生就知会我们，他不会马上入住这里，而是将再花四个月的时间对美国的事务做一个了结。不过与此同时，他又最殷切地希望前任东家的员工——他已经听说这批雇员具有极佳的声誉——能够继续留任达林顿府。当然，他所指的这批“员工”，仅是达林顿勋爵的几位亲属在房产交易期间临时照管这幢宅第时所留用的那六位骨干人员；但我很遗憾地向新雇主汇报，交易一旦完成，除了克莱门茨太太以外，对于其他员工另寻其他工作的情况我实在是无能为力。当我向法拉戴先生写信表达我对此种状况的遗憾时，我接到来自美国的答复，指示我去招募一批“配得上一座堂皇的古老英国府第”的新员工。我立刻着手尽力满足法拉戴先生的愿望，但您也知道，在现在这个时候要想招募到一批令人满意的高标准员工实在殊非易事，尽管经由克莱门茨太太的推荐，我很高兴地雇用了罗斯玛丽和阿格尼丝，但是直到去年春天法拉戴先生短暂地先期探访达林顿府，我跟他进行第一次事务性会晤之时，招聘工作并无更大的进展。也正是在那个场合下——在达林顿府那个显得异常空旷的书房里——法拉戴先生第一次跟我握了手，不过，在那之前我们相互之间也已经算不上是陌生人了；除了招聘雇员这一事务之外，我的新雇主在好几个其他方面也发现有必要求助于那些我也许只是因为走运才拥有的才能和品质，并且发现它们——我不妨冒昧地直言——是值得信赖和托付的。因此，我认为，他马上就感觉可以跟我以一种讲求实际、充分信任的方式坦诚地交谈，在这次会面结束前，他留给我一笔不算可观的资金由我全权掌管，为他不久之后入住达林顿府进行各个方面的准备之用。别的方面姑且不论，我想说的是，正是在这次面谈的过程中，当我提出在现在这种时候招聘到合格员工的难处时，法拉戴先生在经过片刻沉吟后，向我提出了他的要求：我应尽力拟定出一个人员配置规划——用他话说就是“某种仆佣的轮值表”——按照这一规划，这座府第或许可以就依靠目前的这四位员工正常地运转起来——也就说克莱门茨太太、那两位年轻的姑娘，外加我自己。他充分地理解，这样也许意味着要将这座府第中的好些部分“深藏密闭”起来，但我能否充分调动我所有的经验和专长，尽我之所能确保将此类损失控制在最低限度之内？回想过去，我手下曾有过十七名员工可供调度，而且就在不久前，达林顿府雇用的员工人数甚至达到过二十八位，相形之下，希望依靠设计出一个完善的人员配置规划，仅用四个人就能将这么大的府第管理得井井有条，这种想法往轻里说，

至少也是令人望而却步的。尽管我竭力不把自己的想法表露出来，我那深表怀疑的态度想必还是遮掩不住的，于是法拉戴先生又补充了一句，似乎是为了消除我的顾虑，说如果证明确属必要，也可以再增加一位雇员。但他又重复道，如果我能“试一下就用四个人”的话，他将感激不尽。

时至今日，我也不至于会说这是个糟糕的人员配置规划；毕竟，它可以使得只有四个人的团队能够承担起这么多其范围远远超乎预料的职责。不过，您无疑也会同意，最好的员工规划是能够留出清楚的误差范围的那一种，万一某位雇员生了病或是出于这样那样的原因而

然而，我担心在我急于赢得克莱门茨太太和两位姑娘支持的同时，我也许并没有对于我自己的局限做出非常严格的评估；尽管我在此类事务上的经验以及习惯性的审慎，使我不至于冒失地承担超出我实际能力所及的任务，但我也许疏忽了给我自己留出足够的余地。如果在几个月的实际应用当中，这种失察会以一种很不起眼却又相当显著的方式表现出来的话，我丝毫都不会感到吃惊。归根结底，我相信这个问题一句话就能说清：我给自己分派的工作实在是太多了。

人员配置规划中这样一个明显的缺点居然一直都未能引起我的注意，您可能会为此而感到吃惊，但您也会同意，一个人如果在一段时间内持久不断地沉湎于某种想法中无法自拔，是会经常出现这种当局者迷的问题的；直到相当意外地受到某种外部事件的激发，才会憬然醒悟到事情的真相。所以正是在这样的情况下，也就是说，我收到肯顿小姐的来信，她在这封长信中以深藏不露的笔触表达出对于达林顿府无可置疑的怀旧之情，而且一对此我相当肯定——还明确地暗示了她重返故地的强烈愿望，这不禁迫使我重新审视已经拟定的员工规划。直到这时，我才醒悟到达林顿府确实还需要另一位员工来扮演一个至关重要的角色；实际上，也正是因为缺少了这样的一个角色，才是我近来麻烦不断的的关键的中枢。我越是认真地考虑，事情也就越发清楚了：以其对于这座府第的衷心挚爱，以其堪为典范楷模的职业水准——这种素质如今几乎已经是无处寻觅了——肯顿小姐正是能使我为达林顿府完成一个完全令人满意的员工规划所需要的关键要素。

对目前的局面做出如此分析之后，没过多久我就觉得应该重新考虑一下几天前法拉戴先生主动提出的那个慷慨的建议了。因为我想到，那驱车远行的计划可以在工作方面很好地派上用处；也就是说，我可以在驱车前往西南诸郡的过程中，顺道拜访一下肯顿小姐，这样就可以当面探查一下她希望重返达林顿府工作的虚实。我应该说明的

是，我已经把肯顿小姐最近的那封来信反复阅读了好几次，她那方面有重返达林顿的这种暗示，绝对不可能只是出诸我的想象。

尽管如此，我有好几天却无法鼓起勇气向法拉戴先生再次提起此事。在这件事上，不管怎么说，有好几个方面我感觉需要自己先行厘清之后才能采取进一步的行动。比如说，这里面就有费用的问题。因为，即便我的雇主慷慨地主动表示“承担汽油的花费”，考虑到还有诸如住宿、用餐以及在旅途中可能消耗的各种小零食的开销，这样一次旅行的总花费仍旧可能会达到一个惊人的数目。此外还有什么样的服装适合这样一次旅行的问题，以及是否值得专门为此添置一套新衣服的问题。我已经拥有好多套顶级的礼服正装，有的是过去这些年间达林顿勋爵本人好心送给我的，有些则是曾在府里做客，因为有理由对于这里的服务水准深感满意的各位客人送的。很多套正装或许对于计划中的这次旅行来说太过正式了些，要不然就是以现在的眼光看来太过老式了些。不过我还有一套非正式场合穿的休闲套装，是一九三一或者三二年爱德华·布莱尔爵士送给我的一在当时实际上是全新的，而且差不多完全合身——这套服装应该很合适在我可能宿夜的任何宾馆旅店的客厅或是餐室穿着。不过，适合旅行时穿的衣服我却一套都没有——也就是我开车时穿的衣服——除非是我打算穿年轻的查默斯勋爵在大战期间送给我的那套服装，如果不计较对我来说明显太小了一些，也可以认为是适合这一场合的理想之选了。最后我自己计算了一下，我的积蓄应该能应付所有可能的花销，此外也许还足可以添置一套新衣。我希望您不要因为我在服装上面的盘算就认为我过于虚荣了；我这么计较只是因为谁都不知道在什么情况下您将不得不承认您是达林顿府里的人，如果碰到这样的情况，你的穿着装扮是否与你的地位相称就显得至关重要了。

事已至此，看来除了主动再跟法拉戴先生提出这次旅行以外，也别无他法了。当然，也有可能他半个月前的建议只不过是突发奇想，说过即忘，他已经不会再对这个想法表示赞同了。不过，通过这几个月来我对法拉戴先生的观察，他并非那种反复无常的绅士，而在一位雇主身上再没有比这种出尔反尔的品性更让人恼火的了。没有理由怀疑他会对之前自己热情提议的驾车远游计划表现得前后不一——他肯定不会再主动重提“承担汽油的花费”这一最为慷慨的承诺了。尽管如此，我还是要非常谨慎小心地选择一个向他重提这件事的最佳时机；因为，虽然如我所言，我从未有一时一刻怀疑过法拉戴先生会是个出尔反尔之辈，不过，如果专拣他心事重重或者心烦意乱的时候去提，那可就非常不智了。如果在这种情况下贸然拒绝了我的请求，其实并不能反映出我的雇主在这件事上的真实意图，可是否决的话一旦说出了口，我也就很难再把它提出来了。因此，显而易见，我必须明智地选择合适的时机。

最后，我认定一天当中最明智审慎的时刻应该是在客厅里摆好下午茶的时候。在那个时候，法拉戴先生通常外出去高地上散了一会儿步刚刚回来，所以他的思绪极少会沉浸在傍晚时分经常从事的阅读和写作当中。事实上，当我把下午茶端进来的时候，法拉戴先生总是会把之前正在阅读的图书或是杂志合上，站起身来在窗前伸展一下双臂，似乎预先就准备要跟我聊上几句。

如上所述，我相信我在时机选择这个问题上的判断是合情合理的；但实际情况的非我所愿则应完全归咎于我在另一个方向上的判断失误。换句话说，我并没有充分考虑到这样一个事实，即在一天当中的那个时刻，法拉戴先生想要进行的是那种轻松愉快、诙谐幽默的闲谈。如果昨天下午我把茶点端进来的时候知道他是这样一种心情，如

“哎呀，哎呀，史蒂文斯。一位女性朋友。而且是在你这个岁数。”

这场面真是再难堪不过了，达林顿勋爵是绝不会置一位雇员于这样的境地的。不过我这么说也并非对法拉戴先生有任何贬损之意；他毕竟是一位美国绅士，他的行为举止经常是大为不同的。他没有任何恶意，这一点是毫无疑问的；但您无疑也能理解，这处境对我而言是多么不自在。

“我还从没想到你居然是这样一位大受女性欢迎的男人啊，史蒂文斯，”他继续道。“这肯定能让你在精神上永葆青春，我猜想。但如此一来，我就真的不知道帮你去赴如此暧昧的约会对我而言是不是应该啦。”

自然，我忍不住想立刻而又毫不含糊地坚决否认我的雇主强加在我头上的这种不实的动机，但我及时地察觉到，我这么做的话无疑等于一口吞下了法拉戴先生的钓饵，那局面只会变得越发令人难堪。于是我只得继续尴尬地站在那儿，等着我的雇主允许我进行这次驾车的旅行。

“她要是真的来了，那就只能求上帝保佑啦，”法拉戴先生回答道。“也许你能让她尽量离我们远一点，史蒂文斯。也许你能把她带到摩根先生农场上的某个马厩里去。就用那些干草来招待她吧。她也许正是你的绝配呢。”

有好一会儿，我都不知道我的雇主到底在说些什么。然后我才意识到他是在开玩笑，我便竭力展露出恰如其分的微笑，不过我怀疑在我的表情当中应该能觉察得出一丝困惑，如果还算不上是震惊的话。

不过在接下来的日子里，我渐渐学会了对于我雇主的类似言语不再表示诧异，而且只要察觉到他的声音中有这种揶揄打趣的语气，我就会还以恰如其分的微笑。话虽如此，我却又从来都不能肯定在这种场合之下我确切地应该做些什么。也许我应该开怀大笑；或者报以自己的看法。这后一种可能性这几个月来都快成了我的心病了，而且对此我仍旧还没拿定主意。因为在美国很有可能是这样的：一位雇员提供的良好的专业服务当中应该包括有令其雇主开怀解颐的玩笑和戏谑。

如此说来，我的雇主极有可能满心期望我也能以相仿的方式去回应他善意的揶揄打趣了，我如果不予回应的话反而会被认为是一种疏

忽和失职了。这一点，如我之前所说，简直成了我的一块心病。但我又必须承认，我感觉这种揶揄打趣的事务并非我能以满腔的热情去履行的职责。在现如今这个瞬息万变的时代中，调整自己以适应那些传统上来说并非自己分内工作的职责，固然是非常好的；但是揶揄打趣就完全是另外一个范畴的事情了。别的且不说，首先第一点，你怎么能确定，在某个特定的场合哪一种对于此类揶揄打趣的回应才是雇主所真正期待的呢？如果你贸然回出一句意在打趣的调侃，结果却发现完全驴唇不对马嘴，那种灾难性的后果简直想都不太敢想。

不过，不久前我倒是确实有一次鼓足勇气尝试了一下那种戏谑的回答方式。当时我正在早餐室里伺候法拉戴先生喝早上的咖啡，这时他对我道：

“我猜想今天早上那公鸡打鸣一样的声音应该不是你弄出来的吧，史蒂文斯？”

我意识到，我雇主指的是一对收废铜烂铁的吉卜赛夫妇一早从这儿经过时那惯常的吆喝声。碰巧，那天早上我也正在琢磨我的雇主是否期望我去回应他的揶揄打趣这个进退失据的难题，而且一直都很担心他会如何看待我对他意在逗乐的开场屡屡都毫无反应这个问题。因此我就开始思考该如何机智地应对；我的回答应该是在万一对情况做出了误判也仍旧是安全稳妥、不会造成丝毫冒犯才对。过了有一会儿，我才说：

可是结果法拉戴先生却只是抬头看着我道：“你说什么，史蒂文斯？”

只有到了这时我才想到，我的俏皮话对于并不知道是吉卜赛人从我们这里经过的人来说，自然是不容易领会和理解的。到了这时，我就不知道到底该如何将这场戏谑的逗趣继续下去了；事实上，我决定最好是就此打住，假装想起某件需要我马上去处理的急事，就此告退，留下我的雇主大惑不解地坐在原地。

对于要求我去履行的这么一桩实际上是全新的职责而言，这个开端实在是再令人气馁不过了；令人气馁的程度之深，使我必须承认，在这方面我再也没有进行过进一步的尝试。不过与此同时，我也无法

逃避这样一种感觉，即法拉戴先生并不满意我对于他形形色色的揶揄打趣所做出的回应。确实，他近来甚至愈发频繁地坚持跟我逗乐打趣，应该就是加倍鼓励我以趣味相投的兴致予以积极的回应。可是即便如此，自打我那第一次说的关于吉卜赛人的俏皮话以来，我就再也没能当场就想出其他类似的俏皮话。

现如今，碰到类似的困难尤其会让人忧心忡忡，因为你已经不能像过去那样去跟同行们讨教以后再做决定了。在不久以前，如果你在工作上产生了任何类似职责不清的困扰，你都不会过于心焦，因为你知道，要不了多久，你的某位其见解颇受人尊重的同行就将陪同他的雇主前来做客，如此一来，你就有充裕的时间跟他讨教这个问题了。当然啦，在达林顿勋爵的时代，因为贵妇和士绅们经常一连多日在府里做客，你也很容易能跟随侍来访的同行们发展出一种相互理解的良好关系。确实，在那些繁忙的日子里，我们的仆役大厅里经常荟萃了一大批英格兰最优秀的专业同行，我们经常围坐在温暖的炉火旁边一直聊到深夜。而且不瞒你说，如果你在那样的任何一个夜晚走进我们的仆役大厅，你听到的将不只是各种闲言碎语和小道消息；你更有可能见证我们针对占据了楼上我们雇主们全副精力的那些重大事件，或者报上刊载的那些重大新闻所展开的激烈辩论。当然了，正如来自各行各业的同行们聚在一起的时候惯常都会做的那样，你也会发现我们正在讨论我们这个职业的方方面面。有时候，我们中间自然也会产生严重的分歧，大家争得个面红耳赤，但更常见的是，那里充满了互敬互谅的友好气氛。如果我报出几位常客的姓名的话，也许可以使您对于那些夜晚的格调气氛具有更直观的概念；我们的常客中包括了像是詹姆斯·钱伯斯爵士的贴身管家哈里·格雷厄姆先生，以及悉尼·狄金森先生的贴身男仆约翰·唐纳兹先生这样的人物。也有很多或许没那么著名的同行，但他们现场那生动活泼的表现使得他们的每一次造访都令人难忘；比如说约翰·坎贝尔先生的贴身管家威尔金森先生就以善于模仿知名人士而大名鼎鼎；又如伊斯特利府的戴维森先生，他在为某一观点辩论时表现出来的澎湃激情有时真会让陌生人惊骇万分，而在其他时刻的表现则唯有最为讨人喜欢的单纯善良；再如约翰·亨利·彼得斯先生的贴身管家赫尔曼先生，他那过激的观点无论是谁听到都不可能处之淡然，但他那与众不同的纵情大笑以及约克郡人特有的魅力又使得他备受所有人的喜爱。这类人物真是不胜枚举。尽管我们在处理问题的方式方法上难免有些小小的分歧，但在当初那些岁月里，在我们这个行业当中是存在着一种真正的同志情谊的。打个比方说，我们本质上都是从同一块布料上剪下来的布头和布尾。可是现在的情况已经是大为不同了，就算难得碰到某位雇员陪侍主人到我

们这儿来做客，他也更像是个完全的陌生人，除了英式足球以外就再也没有什么话可说，而且宁肯去“庄稼汉的纹章”喝几杯，也不愿在仆役大厅里围坐着炉火消磨那个夜晚——而且照现如今的风尚，他可能更愿意光顾明星酒馆。

不过，还是让我回到原来的话题吧。正如之前所说，昨天下午在法拉戴先生对我进行他的调侃打趣的过程中，我不得不站在客厅里度过那颇不自在的几分钟时间。我只能像往常一样以微笑来应答——至少借以表明我也在某种程度上以愉快的心情参与了他正在进行的打趣和调侃——一边等着看我的雇主是否会兑现有关我外出旅行的承诺。正如我所期盼的那样，他没经过多少耽搁就好意地照准了，不仅如此，法拉戴先生竟然还记得并重申了他之前“承担汽油的花费”的慷慨提议。

事已至此，我似乎也就再没什么理由不正式启动我前往西南诸郡的驾车出游计划了。我当然必须给肯顿小姐写封信告诉她我有可能从她那儿路过；我还需要安排好旅行中的穿着问题。我外出期间有关达林顿府里工作安排的其他各种问题也需要安排好。总之一句话，我已经找不到任何真正的理由不进行这次计划中的远行了。

第一天一傍晚

索尔兹伯里

不过，周围的景物终于变得无法辨识了，我知道我已经跨出了之前所有的边界。我曾听人描述过这一时刻，当扬帆起航，当终于看不见陆地的轮廓时的心情。我想，人们经常描绘的有关这一刻内心当中不安与兴奋混杂在一起的情感经验，应该跟我开着福特车渐渐驶入陌生区域的心情非常相近吧。这种心情就是在我转过一个弯道，发现自己驶上了一条环绕一座小山的盘山公路时袭上心头的。我能感觉到我左侧是壁立的陡坡，只不过由于路边树木丛生，繁茂的枝叶使我没办法看清罢了。那种我确实已经将达林顿府远远抛在后面的感觉陡然间涌上心头，我得承认我还当真感到了一阵轻微的恐慌——这种感觉又因为担心自己也许完全走错了路而变本加厉，唯恐自己正南辕北辙地朝荒郊野外飞驰而去。这种恐慌只不过一闪而过，但却让我放慢了车速。即使在我已经确认自己并没有走错路以后，我仍旧感觉必须先将车子暂停一会儿，等把情况完全探明以后才能安心。

我决定从车上下来，伸展一下腿脚，刚来到车外，那种正位于半山腰的感觉就更其强烈了。在道路的一侧，灌木丛和矮小的树木陡直地上升，而在另一侧，透过扶疏的枝叶，我能看到远处的乡野。

我相信自己已经沿着路边走了一小段，不时透过林木的缝隙窥视，希望能找到一个更好的视野，正当这时，我听到背后传来一个人的声音。到此为止，我想当然地以为就我一个人的，所以有些诧异地转过身去。就在不远处的公路对过，我能看到有一条人行小径的入口，小道沿山势向上，消失在灌木丛中。标志着小径入口的一块大石头上，坐着个白头发的瘦削男人，戴着顶布帽，正在抽一支烟斗。他又冲我喊了一声，我虽然听不清楚他说了些什么，但能看出他正向我招手示意我过去。我一时还以为他是个流浪汉，然后才看清楚他就是个本地人，正在享受清新的空气和夏日的阳光，我也就恭敬不如从命了。

“我只是有些好奇，先生，”他在我走近时说道，“你的腿脚到底有多硬朗。”

“你说什么？”

那人指了指上山的小径。“你的腿脚一定得非常硬朗，肺活量也得够大，才能到那上面去。我呢，两样条件都不具备，所以我只能待在这儿。但如果我的身体条件再好一点的话，我就会爬到上面去坐着啦。那儿有一块很不错的小地方，还有一条长凳什么的。在整个英格兰，你都甭想找到一处比那儿风景更好的地方啦。”

“如果你所言非虚，”我说，“我想我还是宁肯待在这儿。我碰巧正要进行一次驾车的远游，期间有望欣赏到诸多绝佳的胜景。倘若还没正式踏上旅途就已经见识到了最美的景色，那岂不是有些过于草率了吗？”

那人似乎没明白我的意思，因为他仍旧重复道：“你在整个英格兰都甭想找到更美的景色啦。不过我告诉你，你的腿脚一定得非常硬朗，肺活量也得够大才上得去。”然后他又补充道：“我看，以你的年纪来说你的身体状况还是很不错的，先生。我得说，你是完全能爬上去的，没有问题。我是说，就连我这样的，碰到天气好的时候都能上得去。”

我抬头看了看那条小径，确实很陡，而且高低不平。

“我跟你说，先生，你要是不上去看看，肯定会后悔的。再说了，谁知道呢，也许再过上个一两年就太晚了呢。”——他相当粗鄙地哈哈一乐——“最好趁你还行的时候上去看看。”

直到现在我才突然想到，那人当时这么说很有可能只不过是一种幽默的表达方式；也就是说，那只是一种善意的调侃。可我必须说，今天早上我只感觉他的表现实在是很无礼，不过也正是因为为了证明他那番暗示是多么愚蠢无稽，我才会赌气登上那羊肠小径的。

不管怎么说，我都非常高兴我这么做了。当然，那段山路走得确是相当费力——不过我可以夸口的是，这并没有真正难倒我——一小径沿着山势曲曲折折地向上延伸了一百码左右。随后就到达了一小片空旷地，那个人说的无疑就是这个地方了。迎面摆了一条长凳——确实，展现在面前是绵延数英里、最令人叹为观止的乡村胜景。

映入我眼帘的基本上就是一片片层层叠叠的田野，绵延不绝直到天际。地势起伏平缓，每一块田地都以树篱和树木为界。远处的田野中有一些小点点，我猜想那应该是绵羊。在我右手边，几乎就在地平线上，我想我能看到一座教堂的方塔。

不过这都是今天早上的事儿了。今天傍晚，我在这家舒适的宾馆里安顿下来，位置就在距索尔兹伯里市中心不远的一条街上。据我看这是家相对简朴的旅店，不过非常干净，完全符合我的要求。老板娘大约四十岁出头，由于法拉戴先生的那辆福特车，再加上我那身高品质的行头，显然把我当成了一位非常尊贵的上宾。今天下午——我是大约三点半到达索尔兹伯里——当我在她的登记簿上填写我的住址“达林顿府”时，我觉察到她看我的眼神中带上了一丝惶恐，显然是把我当成了某位住惯了里兹和多切斯特那类豪华饭店的士绅，担心我一旦看到这里的客房就会怒冲冲地离开她的宾馆。她告诉我前排朝向的客

房中还有一间双人房空着，不过她欢迎我以单人房的房价入住这间客房。

接着我就被领到了这个房间，在一天当中的那个时候，阳光正好将壁纸上的花卉纹样照亮，看着让人赏心悦目。房间里有两张单人床，还有两扇可以俯瞰街景的大窗。当我询问浴室在哪里的时候，老板娘以胆怯的声音回答说浴室就在我房间的对面，但要等晚餐过后才有热水供应。我请她为我送一壶茶上来，她离开后，我又进一步检查了一下这个房间。床很干净，铺得很齐整。屋角的洗脸池也很干净。朝窗外望去，可以看到街道对面有一家面包店，橱窗里陈列着各色糕点，还有一家药店和理发店。再往前，还能看到这条街跨过了一座小小的圆拱桥，再往下延伸就是相对郊区的地段了。我在洗脸池里用冷水洗了洗脸和手，提提精神，然后就在靠窗的一把硬背椅子上坐下，等我要的茶送上来。

我想应该是在四点刚过不久的时候，我离开宾馆，到索尔兹伯里的大街上去探个究竟。这里的街道宽阔而又通畅，赋予这个城市一种不可思议的开阔感，让人真想就在温暖和煦的阳光下，在大街上闲逛几个钟头。此外，我还发现这个城市拥有很多迷人之处；我屡次发现自己漫步经过一排排可爱的旧圆木门脸儿的住房，或是翻过某一座架在流经这个城市的众多溪流上面的步行小石桥。当然了，我并没有忘记去参观那座优美的大教堂，西蒙斯太太在她的著作中对这座大教堂可是赞誉有加。这座庄严的建筑并不难找，无论置身索尔兹伯里的什么地方，它那高耸的尖顶都清晰可见。确实，我在傍晚时分返回宾馆的途中，好几次扭头回顾，而每一次都会欣赏到灿烂的夕阳在那巍峨的尖顶后面逐渐西沉的景象。

容是最为贴切的。因为千真万确，今天早上当我站在那个高崖上饱览我面前的那片土地时，我真真切切地体会到了那种极为罕有却又确定无疑的情感——那种只有置身于“伟大”面前才会产生的情感。我们将这片土地称为我们的大不列颠，也许还有些人觉得这未免有些妄自尊大，但我却敢于冒昧地直言，唯有我们国家的风景才配得上使用这个崇高的形容词。

然而，这个“伟大”的确切含义到底是什么呢？它到底在哪里，或者体现在什么当中呢？我知道，这样一个问题是要远比我更为聪明的头脑才能回答的，但如果一定要我斗胆一猜的话，我会说，使我们的国土之美显得如此与众不同的正在于它欠缺那种明显的戏剧性或者奇崛的壮观色彩。个中的关键就在于那种静穆的优美，那种高贵的克制。就仿佛这片土地明知道自己的优美，知道自己的伟大，又感觉无须去彰显，去招摇。相形之下，像非洲和美洲这样的地方所呈现的景观，虽然无疑是令人赞叹激赏的，我敢肯定，正是因为它们这种毫无节制的自我标榜，在态度客观的观察者看来反倒会相形见绌。

这整个问题倒是跟这些年来在我们这个行当中曾引发诸多争议的那个问题非常相似：怎样才算得上一个“伟大的”管家？我还清楚地记得一天的工作结束后，我们围坐在仆役大厅的炉火旁，针对这个话题长时间展开的那些愉快的讨论。您应该注意到我说的是“怎样”才算是一个伟大的管家，而不是“谁”：因为对于在我们这代人中是谁确立了本行业的标准，其实是没有什么严重分歧的，也就是说，像沙勒维尔府的马歇尔先生或是布莱德伍德的莱恩先生就是个中翘楚。如果您有幸得识这样的人物，您无疑就会知道我所指的他们所拥有的特质到底是什么了。但您无疑也会明白，我为什么会说要对这种特质下一个确切的定义殊非易事了。

捎带说一句，由于对此我又有了深一层的思考，恐怕也不能说在谁算得上是伟大的管家这一点上是毫无疑义的。更严密的说法应该是：至少在那些对此类问题具有真知灼见的专业人士中间，对这一点是没有太大争议的。当然啦，达林顿府的仆役大厅就像任何地方的仆役大厅一样，必然要接受不同智力层次和认知水平的雇员，所以我记得曾有好多次我不得不紧咬嘴唇，才能容忍有些雇员——我不得不很遗憾地说，有时甚至是我自己属下的员工——兴奋不已地为比如说杰克·内伯斯之流的人物大唱赞歌。

我对于杰克·内伯斯先生并无任何成见，据我了解，他已在大战中不幸阵亡。我提到他只是因为他是个典型的实例而已。在三十年代

说起来，我并不怀疑内伯斯先生拥有良好的组织才能；据我理解，他的确以引人瞩目的方式主持、策划过好几次重大的社交盛会。但是在任何阶段，他就从未曾达到过一位伟大管家的境界。我本该在他声誉最隆之时说这番话的，正如我早该预料到的，他在出尽风头不过短短的几年之内很快就声名扫地了。

一位一度曾是他那一代口中交相赞誉的业内翘楚，短短的几年之内却又被确切地证明他其实一无是处，这样的翻覆多长时间会出现一次？然而，当初曾对他不吝溢美之词的同样那些雇员，又将忙着对某一新角色赞颂不已了，他们从来不知道适可而止，检讨一下自己的判断能力。这些仆役大厅里的话题人物总是集中于某个豪门巨室的管家，可能因为成功地筹办过两三次重大的社交盛会而一下子声名鹊起，成为众所瞩目的焦点人物的。随后，全英格兰上上下下的各个仆役大厅里就会谣诼纷起，其大意不过是某某要员或是显贵已经向他伸出了橄榄枝，或者全国至尊至贵的几户门庭正以堪称天价的高薪竞相对他进行延揽。但不过短短的几年之后，情况又复如何呢？同样是这位所向披靡的人物对于某桩大错却负有了不可推卸的责任，要么就是由于其他的原因而失去了雇主的宠幸，已经离开了他当初建功立业的门庭，就此不知所终了。与此同时，那同一批飞短流长的传播者们已经又找到了另一位后起之秀，继续津津乐道他的丰功伟绩了。我发现，那些来访的贴身男仆往往就是罪魁祸首，因为他们通常总是急不可耐地一心觊觎着管家的职位。就是他们这批人，总是一口咬定这位或是那位人物是最值得我辈效仿的榜样，要么就像是应声虫一样，热衷于一遍遍地传播某位特别的英雄人物据说已经就我们的专业问题所发表的卓识高见。

不过话说到这儿，我得赶紧补充一句，也有很多贴身男仆是从来都不会沉迷于这种蠢行的一他们事实上是具有最高鉴识能力的专业人士。当两三位这样的人士齐聚在我们的仆役大厅时——我指的是比如说像格雷厄姆先生这种水准的有识之士，只可惜我现在似乎已经跟他失

去了联系——我们能针对我们这个行业的方方面面进行某些最饶有兴味、最才华横溢的辩论和探讨。的确，时至今日，那些夜晚都算得那个时代留给我的最美好的记忆。

话休絮烦，还是让我们回到那个让我们真正感兴趣的问题吧，当年我们在仆役大厅度过的那些夜晚，若是没有被对这个行业缺乏任何基本认识的无知之徒的喋喋不休所毁掉的话，我们最热衷于讨论的问题便是：“怎样才算是一位伟大的管家？”

据我所知，这些年来这个问题虽然引发了无数的讨论，我们业内却鲜有制定出一项官方答案的尝试。我能想到唯一可以援以为例的便是海斯协会所设立的入会标准。您也许对海斯协会不甚了了，因为近些年来已极少为人谈及。不过在二十年代及三十年代早期，该协会却曾在伦敦及周边各郡产生过相当大的影响。事实上，已经有人觉得它的势力过于强大了，所以当它最终被迫关闭时，很多人认为这并非一件坏事，我想那是一九三二或者一九三三年的事儿。

尽管我对海斯协会向来都缺乏热情，我却认为它这一特别的声明倒至少是建立在一个重要的事实之上的。如果我们来审视一下那些我们公认为“伟大的”管家，如果我们来审视一下比如说马歇尔先生或者莱恩先生，那么那个看起来将他们与那些只不过是极有能力的管家区别开来的因素，最切近的描述也确实只有“尊严”这个词差堪承当了。

不管怎么说，尽管格雷厄姆先生对此一直秉持怀疑主义的态度，我犹记得曾经有好多个夜晚，我跟他一起深入地交换意见，试图厘清这种“尊严”具体内涵的情景。我们从来都未曾达成任何共识，不过我可以这样说，至少在我这方面，在我们深入探讨的过程中就此问题我已经形成了相当坚定的看法，而且大体而言，这些信念我迄今仍信奉不渝。如果可以的话，我想就在这儿试着谈谈我对这个“尊严”究为何物的看法。

这显然是个真实的故事，内容大致是有位管家随侍雇主远赴印度，多年服务于斯，在只能雇用当地仆佣的情况下仍能始终维持跟英国国内同样高的专业服务水准。话说有一天下午，这位管家走进餐厅去检查晚餐的准备工作是否已经全部就绪，结果却发现有一只老虎正懒洋洋地趴在餐桌底下。那位管家不动声色地离开餐厅，小心地把门关好，然后镇定自若地来到客厅，他的雇主正和几位客人在那儿喝茶。他礼貌地轻咳了一声，引起了雇主的注意，然后凑近主人的耳边悄声禀道：“非常抱歉，先生，有只老虎此刻正在餐厅里。也许您能许我使用十二号口径的猎枪？”

据传说，几分钟后，主人和客人听到了三声枪响。之后不久，当这位管家再度出现在客厅里更换新茶的时候，雇主问他是否一切顺利。

“非常顺利，谢谢您，先生，”他回答道。“晚餐的时间将一如既往，而且容我高兴地回禀，届时，刚刚发生的意外将不会留下任何可见的痕迹。”

最后这句话——“届时，刚刚发生的意外将不会留下任何可见的痕迹”——家父总会呵呵带笑地重复一遍，并且赞赏不已地摇摇头。他从未声称知道这位管家的尊姓大名，也从未说起还有人认识他，但他总

是坚持事件的过程就跟他的讲述不差分毫。不管怎么说，这个故事是真是假其实并不重要；重要的，当然是它透露了家父心目中理想的典范是什么样子。因为，当我回顾他的职业生涯时，我以后见之明能够看得出来，他有生之年都在努力成为他故事里的那个管家。而在我看来，在他事业的巅峰时期，家父已经实现了他的雄心壮志，夙愿得偿。因为尽管我可以肯定他绝对不会有在餐桌底下邂逅一只老虎的机会，当我将我所知道或者听人说起的他的事迹细细掂量之后，我至少能想起好几个实例，足以显示出他已完全具备了故事中他钦敬不已的那位管家的素质。

令查尔斯先生愧悔不已的是有天下午，他居然纵容自己跟另外两位客人一起喝得酩酊大醉——我姑且只将这两位绅士称呼为史密斯先生和琼斯先生，因为在某些社交圈子里很有可能有人还记得他们。在喝了一个多钟头以后，这两位绅士临时起意，想开车前往周边的几个村子兜兜风——那个时候汽车还是一样挺新奇的玩意儿。他们劝说查尔斯先生跟他们一起去，由于司机不巧正在休假，于是就请家父暂代司机之职。

一旦上路之后，史密斯和琼斯先生尽管都已是十足的中年人了，其行为举止却像是学童般轻佻幼稚，一路上高唱粗鄙俚俗的小曲儿，对沿途所见之事物风景所发的评论更是粗鄙不堪。尤有甚者，这两位绅士在当地的地图上注意到附近有三个村庄，名字分别叫作莫菲、萨尔塔什和布里戈恩。现在我已经不能完全肯定确切的村名了，但重点是它们让史密斯和琼斯先生想起了杂耍剧场里的一出表演，叫作“墨菲、萨尔特曼和布里吉德猫”，您也许也听说过。在注意到这一奇妙的巧合后，这两位绅士就燃起了去这三个村子一探究竟的雄心——权当是为了向这三位艺人致敬。照查尔斯先生的说法，家父在已经遵命带他们去过了一个村子，正要进入第二个的时候，史密斯或是琼斯先生注意到这个村子是布里戈恩——也就是说，照艺人姓氏顺序的话这应该是第三个，而非第二个。于是他们愤怒地要求家父马上掉转头，以便“以正确的顺序”依次参观这几个村子。这样一次折返势必大大增

加行车的里程，不过，查尔斯先生向我保证，家父将其当作完全合情合理的要求，毫无异议地接受下来，而且之后的表现也几乎是一如既往地彬彬有礼、无可挑剔。

可是史密斯和琼斯先生的注意力现在已经被吸引到家父身上，而且无疑已经对车窗外的景物感到相当厌烦了，于是就继之以对家父的“错误”大声嘲骂以自娱。查尔斯先生犹记得他对于家父的表现大为惊叹，因为家父没有流露出一丝一毫不安或是恼怒的迹象，仍旧镇定自若地继续开车，其表情既充满个人尊严，又随时乐于效力帮忙。然而家父的沉着镇定却没有办法再持续下去了。因为那两位绅士在厌倦了对家父的肆意辱骂之后，居然开始议论起了招待他们的主人——也就是家父的雇主约翰·西尔弗斯先生。而且其措辞越来越卑劣和恶毒，就连查尔斯先生都听不下去了一至少他是这样声称的一不得不出言制止，暗示这样的议论是颇为失礼的。

可是这番劝说却招致了极为激烈的反驳，以至于查尔斯先生不但要担心他将成为那两位绅士接下来辱骂的对象，甚至真的害怕自己有遭到人身伤害的危险了。可是正在这时，就在他们针对家父的雇主爆出了一句特别恶毒的含沙射影的攻击之后，家父突然间来了个急刹车。正是接下来发生的那一幕给查尔斯先生留下了不可磨灭的深刻印象。

家父就这样在那儿站了一段时间，一句话不说，只是用手拉着敞开的车门。最后，不知是史密斯还是琼斯先生说了一句：“我们不再继续走了吗？”

家父没有搭腔，而是继续默不作声地站在那里，既没有要求他们下车，也没有流露任何愿望或者意图。我很可以想象得出他那天的那

副模样：在车门构成的那个方框里，他那威严的黑色身影几乎完全挡住了他身后那柔美的赫特福德郡风光。查尔斯先生回忆说，那短短一段时间真是不可思议地令人怔忡不安，在此期间，尽管并没有参与方才两个人的不良言行，他仍旧感觉愧疚不已，罪责难逃。这种沉默的局面仿佛要无休无止地持续下去，一直等到史密斯或者琼斯先生终于鼓起勇气嗫嚅道：“我想我们刚才确实有些放肆鲁莽了。我们保证不会再这样了。”

家父沉吟了片刻，然后轻轻地把车门关上，回到驾驶座，继续那三个村庄的环游之旅——查尔斯先生肯定地对我说，剩余的游程几乎就是在一片沉默中完成的。

毋庸讳言，家父对这位将军自然是憎恶已极；不过他同样也认识到雇主目前生意上的前景全系于此次乡宅宴会能否成功举办——预计将有十八位客人莅临，这样的规模可绝非是小事一桩。于是家父做出了这样的答复，大意是他由衷地感激他个人的情感深得主人的体恤，但他可以向西尔弗斯先生保证，举办乡宅宴会期间所提供的一切服务都将符合应有的水准。

结果，家父所承受的磨难甚至比原本的预期还要严酷得多。一则，家父原本或许还抱有一线期望，以为在亲自见到这位将军以后也许能心生些许尊敬或是同情，从而缓解他对此人怀有的憎恶之情，而事实证明，这根本就是毫无来由的一厢情愿。这位将军身材痴肥、相貌丑陋，其仪态举止毫无教养，言谈话语粗鲁不文，不论说到什么都往军事术语上硬套。尤有甚者，这位绅士的贴身男仆并没有随侍前来，因为平常伺候他的男仆不巧病倒了。这就带来了一个微妙的难题，因为另有一位客人也没有带他的贴身男仆，于是乎府上的管家将亲自担任哪位客人的贴身男仆，哪位客人的贴身男仆只能由府上的普通男仆临时充当就成了一个问题。家父因为体贴雇主的处境，当即主动接下了为将军做贴身男仆的差事，这么一来就不得不跟他厌恶的那个人亲密相处长达四天之久。与此同时，那位将军因为浑然不知家父的感受，还利用一切机会大讲特讲他那丰功伟绩的从军历史——当然了，许多从过军的绅士都喜欢在房间里私下面对贴身男仆大肆夸耀当年的神勇。然而家父居然一丝不漏地隐藏了自己的情感，完美无瑕地履行了他的专业职责，以至于将军在离别之际由衷地向约翰·西尔弗斯先生盛赞他的管家是何等优秀，并留下一笔可观的小费以示谢意——家父毫不犹豫地请雇主将其捐献给了慈善机构。

通过从家父的职业生涯中援引的这两个实例——两者我都曾经确证，相信其确凿无疑——我希望您会同意，家父不但是证实了，他几乎就是海斯协会所谓的“与其职位相称之高尚尊严”的化身。若是有人将这种时刻下的家父与某位即便拥有杰克·内伯斯那类最高等级花式技巧的管家做一番对比，我相信他或许就能够初步分辨得出“伟大的”管家与只不过颇有能力的管家之间的不同了。至此，我们或许也就更能够理解家父为什么那么喜欢在餐桌底下发现了一只老虎却丝毫不惊惶失措的那个管家的故事了；那是因为他本能地知道在这个故事当中就隐含着“尊严”的真谛。言已至此，就容我这样地假定吧：“尊严”云云，其至关重要的一点即在于一位管家无论何时何地都能坚守其职业生命的能力。那些等而下之的管家只要稍遇刺激就会放弃其职业生命，回复原形。对于这样的人来说，身为管家就好比扮演某

个哑剧里的角色；轻轻一推，稍一翘起，那个假面就会跌落，露出底下的真身。伟大的管家之所以伟大，是由于他们能够化入他们的职业角色，并且是全身心地化入；他们绝不会为外部事件所动摇，不管这些事件是何等出人意料、令人恐慌或是惹人烦恼。他们呈现出的职业精神和专业风范就好比一位体面的绅士坚持穿着正式的套装：他绝不会容许自己因为宵小无赖的干扰或任何意外状况而在大庭广众之下宽衣解带；他在，也只有在他主动要这样做时才会将正装脱下，而且也毫无例外地是在他完全独处的情况下才会这么做。如我所言，这是关乎“尊严”的大计。

常听人说，真正的管家只存在于英国。在其他国家，无论实际上冠以什么样的头衔，有的只是男仆。我倒是认为此言不虚。欧陆民族无法造就管家，是因为他们从人种上说就不擅长克制情绪，极端的情绪自控是只有英国人才做得到的。欧陆民族一总的说来凯尔特人亦然，我想您无疑也会赞同——通常在情绪强烈的时刻难以自控，所以除非是在那种丝毫都不会有刺激和挑战的场合下，他们是无法保持其专业风范的。如果允许我再次沿用先前的那个比喻——请原谅我表述得如此粗俗——他们就像是一个受到一点最轻微的刺激就会把正装和衬衣一把扯下，尖声喊叫四处乱跑的人。一句话，“尊严”可不是这种人力所能及的。我们英国人在这方面比外国人具有重要的优势，也正是为此，当你想到某位伟大的管家时，他几乎理所当然地注定就是个英国人。

天上午面对那最优美的英格兰风光一样：一见之下，你自然会知道你就站在了伟大的面前。

我知道，总会有人断言任何像我这样试图去对“伟大”条分缕析的行为都是徒劳。“有些人就是有，有些人就是没有，清楚明白，”格雷厄姆先生总会这么说。“除此以外，就没什么好说的了。”可我认为，在这个问题上我们有责任去对抗失败主义的论调。对所有我们这样的从业者而言，对这些问题进行深入的思考就更是一种职业责任了，唯其如此，我们每个人才可能为我们自己赢得“尊严”而更好地努力。

第二天一上午

索尔兹伯里

我生性择床，换个地方总是睡不着，很不安稳地勉强浅睡了不长时间以后，我在大约一个钟头前就醒了。那时天还很黑，知道自己还要开整整一天的车，我努力想再多睡一会儿。结果证明是徒劳以后，我最终决定干脆起来算了，那时候还很黑，为了去屋角的洗脸池那儿刮脸我不得不打开了电灯。不过等我刮完脸以后我又把灯关了，我能看到晨光已经从窗帘的边沿透进了进来。

就在刚才我把窗帘拉开的时候，外面的光线仍旧非常暗淡，还有一层类似薄雾的东西影响了我的视线，就连街对面的面包店和药房都影影绰绰的。确实，顺着街道朝远处望去，在街道跨上那座小圆拱桥的地方，能看到薄雾从河面上升起，有一根桥柱子都几乎完全看不见了。外面阒无人迹，除了远处传来的某种锤击敲打的回声，以及这家旅店后侧的一个房间偶尔的咳嗽声以外，四下里仍旧悄无声息。老板娘显然还没有起床走动，看来要想在她宣布的七点半以前就吃上早饭是绝无可能了。

眼下，在我等待这个世界醒来的安静时刻里，我发现自己又在心底里温习起了肯顿小姐那封来信的内容。说起来了，我其实早就该解释一下我为什么还称呼她为“肯顿小姐”的。“肯顿小姐”其实应该被称呼为“本恩太太”才对，而且这已经有二十个年头了。可是因为我跟她认识并共事的时段仅限于她的少女时期，自从她去了英格兰西南成为“本恩太太”以后就再也没有见过她，您也许会原谅我仍旧使用我认识她时那已经不合礼俗的方式称呼她，而且这么多年来我在心里一直都是这样称呼她的。当然了，她的来信也给了我额外的理由可以继续把她当作“肯顿小姐”，因为她的婚姻不幸最终还是就要走向终点了。信里并没有细讲这方面的情况，这当然也是意料中的事，不过肯顿小姐已经明确无误地谈到，她事实上已经搬出本恩先生那位位于赫尔斯顿的住宅，目前寓居在小康普顿村附近的一位熟人家里。

她的婚姻以失败告终当然是个悲剧。此时此刻，她想必正在抱憾地思量多年前做出的那个决定是如何使得她在中年的后期落得如此孤独凄凉的。不难看出，处在这样的一种心绪之下，想到能重返达林顿府对她而言将是个不小的安慰。诚然，她在信中并没有一字一句明确

地表示故园重返的意愿；但遣词造句的种种委婉幽微之处在在传递出这一明白无误的讯息，字里行间深深地浸透着对于她在达林顿府度过的那些岁月的怀恋之情。当然了，肯顿小姐是无法期望在这个时候旧地重返就能重拾那些已经失去的岁月的，我们见面时我的首要责任就要提醒她这一点。我将不得不向她指出，现在的情况已经跟当初判若云泥——那种有一大帮仆从任凭差遣的日子恐怕在我们的有生之年都是一去不返了。不过再怎么说明肯顿小姐也是一位聪颖的女性，不须我多嘴她应该也已经意识到了世事的变迁。确实，头等重要的一点是，只要肯顿小姐愿意重返达林顿府并在那里一直工作到退休，我看这样的选择没有理由不会为她那已经充满了光阴虚掷、岁月蹉跎况味的人生带来一份真正的慰藉。

当然了，从我本人的专业角度来看，尽管肯顿小姐不再工作已经有了这么多年的时间，她显然仍将被证实是解决达林顿府目前困扰我们的最大难题的最佳解决方案。事实上，将其称之为“难题”，我或许都已经言过其实了。我所指的毕竟只是由我自身所造成的一系列微不足道的小差池，而我现在所力求的也不过是一种防患于未然的预防措施。诚然，这些小小不言的疏失一开始也确实让我大伤脑筋，不过一旦我腾出手来对这些病患进行一番正确的诊断，发现它们不过就是由明显的人手短缺所引发的表面症状以后，我也就不再为此而忧心忡忡了。正如我之前所言，肯顿小姐的到来就将彻底解决这些问题。

不过还是回到她的信上。里面有时的确透露出她对当前现状的某种绝望的情绪——这一点还是挺让人揪心的。她有一段话是这样开始的：“虽然我还不知道该如何有效地将我的余生填满……”在另一处，她又这样写道：“我的余生在我面前伸展为一片虚空。”不过正如我已经说过的，信中大部分的语气都透露出一种怀旧的乡愁。有一处，比如说，她写道：

“这整个插曲不禁让我想起了艾丽丝·怀特。你还记得她吗？事实上，我很难想象你会忘记她。就我而言，我仍旧时常想起她那些元音的发音方式以及只有她才能造得出来的、完全不合文法的独特的句子！你可知道她后来的下落如何？”

事实上我并不知道她后来的归宿，不过我不得不说，一想到那个恼人的女仆，的确给我带来了不少的乐趣——她最后成了我们恪尽职守的员工之一。在她信里的另外一处，肯顿小姐写道：

“当时我是多么喜欢从三楼的那几间卧室俯瞰大草坪以及远处那绿草如茵的开阔高地。那景色是否一如往昔，别来无恙？夏日的傍

晚，那景色中总带有某种神奇的魔力，现在我要向你坦白，想当初我不知浪费了多少宝贵的时间，就站在一扇窗前，直看得心醉神迷。”

然后她又继续写道：

“如果这回忆令人痛苦，敬请谅解。但我永远都不会忘记那一次我们俩一起望见令尊在凉亭前来回徘徊的情景，他低头看着地上，就仿佛一心想找回他失落在那里的某样珍宝。”

三十多年前的那个情景居然也如此鲜活地留在了肯顿小姐的记忆中，真让人又惊又喜。的确，那肯定是发生在她上文提到某个夏日的傍晚，我还清楚地记得爬到三楼的平台，但见一道道橘红色的夕照穿过每一扇半掩的卧室房门刺破了走廊上的昏沉。当我走过那一间间卧室时，透过其中的一扇门看到了肯顿小姐映在窗前的侧影，她转过身柔声叫道：“史蒂文斯先生，您有空吗？”我走进进去的时候，肯顿小姐已经又回头望着窗外了。下面，白杨的树影横陈在大草坪上。在我们视野的右侧是缓缓隆起的草坡，一直延伸到凉亭前，家父的身影就出现在那里，全神贯注地在那儿来回踱步——肯顿小姐形容得确实很形象，“就仿佛一心想找回他失落在那里的某样珍宝”。

我对这一幕情景一直永志不忘是有非常充分的理由的，我希望能解释清楚。此外，现在想来，考虑到初到达林顿府时她与家父之间关系的某些方面，那么这一幕情景会给肯顿小姐留下同样深刻的印象，或许也就并不那么令人惊奇了。

肯顿小姐和家父差不多是同时来到达林顿府的一也就是说，在一九二二年的春天——因为当时我一下子失去了女管家和副管家两位得力干将。原因是我这两位干将决定结婚并且辞职不干了。我一直都认为，这一类的男女关系对于整幢宅第里的秩序是一种严重的威胁。从那时算起，我又因为同样的原因失去了好几位雇员。当然了，在女仆和男仆中间发生这样的事情是完全可以预期的，而一个优秀的管家在进行人员配置时是一直都应该将这一因素考虑在内的；但是这样的婚配如果发生在高级职位的雇员当中，则将会对工作造成极具破坏性的影响。当然，如果两位员工碰巧相爱并决定结婚，那要进行问责就未免失礼之至了；但我发现真正让人着恼的是对本职工作并无真正的奉献热忱，频频更换工作岗位主要就是为了寻求罗曼司的那些人——女管家们就尤其难逃其咎。

不过得容我立刻补充一句，我说这话时脑子想的可绝非肯顿小姐。她当然最后也离了职并且结了婚，但我可以担保，她在我手下担

任女管家期间绝对恪尽职守，从不允许任何外务干扰到她的职业操守。

不过我扯得太远了。我方才讲到我们同时需要招聘一位女管家和一位副管家，而肯顿小姐正是在这时来到达林顿府接任了女管家一职——我记得她带来的推荐信对她的评价非常之高。事有凑巧，家父也正好在这个时候因为雇主约翰·西尔弗斯先生的去世，行将结束他在拉夫伯勒府杰出的服务工作，等于是既失去了工作，又没有了栖身之地。他当然仍旧是第一流的专业管家，但当时已经是七十几岁的高龄，并且饱受关节炎和其他病痛之苦。如此一来，若是要他跟那些高度职业化的年轻一辈管家竞争同一职位恐怕也难操胜算。有鉴于此，延请家父以其丰富的经验和卓著的声誉来达林顿府继续服务，将不失为一个合情合理的解决办法。

我记得那是家父和肯顿小姐加入我们的工作团队不久以后的一个早上，我正在餐具室里坐在桌前审阅文书账目，听到有一记敲门声。我还没说“请进”，肯顿小姐就推门走了进来，我记得当时我还有些错愕。她捧着一大瓶鲜花，笑吟吟地道：

“史蒂文斯先生，我想这些花能让您的餐具室显得明亮一点。”

“您说什么，肯顿小姐？”

“您的房间竟然如此阴暗冰冷，这实在太可惜了，史蒂文斯先生，您看外面是多么阳光明媚。我想这些花能给这里带来一点生气。”

“非常感谢您的好意，肯顿小姐。”

“不能让更多的阳光照进来真是太罪过了。墙面甚至都有点潮湿呢，您说是不是，史蒂文斯先生？”

我重新回到自己的账目上，说：“不过是水汽凝结罢了，我想，肯顿小姐。”

她把花瓶放到我面前的桌子上，然后又环顾了一下我的餐具室，说道：“如果您愿意的话，史蒂文斯先生，我以后可以给您多剪一些花送来。”

“肯顿小姐，我很感激您的好意。但这不是一间娱乐室。我倒宁肯将分心的因素保持在最低限度。”

“可也没有必要把您的房间弄得这么光秃秃的，而且全然没有色彩啊，史蒂文斯先生。”

“它现在这个样子就完全符合我的需要，肯顿小姐，不过还是非常感激您的好心。事实上，既然您正好在这儿，我倒确实有个具体的问题想跟您提一下。”

“哦，真的吗，史蒂文斯先生？”

“是的，肯顿小姐，只不过小事一桩。昨天我碰巧经过厨房，听到您在呼唤某个名叫威廉的人。”

“是吗，史蒂文斯先生？”

“确实，肯顿小姐。我听到您喊了好几遍‘威廉’这个名字。我能问一下您那是在跟谁说话吗？”

“哎呀，史蒂文斯先生，我想我当时应该是在跟令尊说话。这幢房子里再也没有第二个人叫威廉了，据我所知。”

“这是个很容易犯的小错误，”我面带浅笑道。“肯顿小姐，我能否请您以后称呼家父为‘史蒂文斯先生’呢？如果您是在向第三者提到他，那么您也许可以称他为‘老史蒂文斯先生’，以便于将家父跟在下区分开来。为此我将感激不尽，肯顿小姐。”

话说完之后我就又回到我的文书工作上来。可是让我感到惊讶的是，肯顿小姐并没有就此告退。“请原谅我打搅您了，史蒂文斯先生，”过了一会儿她说道。

“喔，肯顿小姐。”

“一个最可以理解的小差错，肯顿小姐。不过，如果您愿意稍稍考虑一下具体的情况，您可能就会看得出来，像您这样的人以对待‘下属’的方式跟家父这样的人说话，是不太妥当的。”

“我还是不太明白您的意思，史蒂文斯先生。您说像我这样的人，可是照我的理解，我是这里的女管家，而令尊则是副管家。”

“他的职位当然是副管家，如您所言。可是令我感到意外的是，以您的观察能力，您居然没有发现他实际上不止是个男管家。远远不止。”

“我的观察能力无疑已经差到了极点，史蒂文斯先生。我只观察到令尊是位很有能力的副管家，并以其相应的职位来称呼他。而照您的说法，令尊居然被像我这样的人直呼其名，他一定会感觉屈辱已极的。”

“肯顿小姐，听您的口气，您显然是根本就没有观察过家父。否则您就会明白，以您这样的年龄和资历是不该直呼他‘威廉’的，这本该是显而易见的。”

“史蒂文斯先生，我担任女管家的时间或许不长，不过应该说至少在我担任这个职务期间，我的能力还是得到过不少相当慷慨的评价的。”

“我一刻都没有怀疑过您的能力，肯顿小姐。但是只要您愿意多加观察的话，有成百上千的事例会让您意识到家父是位多么非同寻常、鹤立鸡群的人物，您必定可以从他身上获益良多的。”

“那我真是太感激您的忠告了，史蒂文斯先生。那就再请您不吝赐教，我到底能从观察令尊这上面学到哪些了不起的本领呢？”

“我还以为这对任何一个长眼睛的人来说都是不言而喻的呢，肯顿小姐。”

“但我们已经达成了共识，我在这方面的能力特别欠缺，不是吗？”

“肯顿小姐，如果您觉得以您现在的年纪来说您已经尽善尽美了的话，您将永远都无法提升到以您的能力无疑可以达到的高度。如果容我直言不讳的话，比如说，到现在您仍然经常不太确定哪样东西究竟放到了哪里以及哪样东西到底是哪样。”

这一下似乎挫了肯顿小姐的锐气，让她有些下不来台。她一度甚至看起来有点心烦意乱。然后她说：

“我初来乍到，是有一点手足无措，可这也是完全正常的吧。”

“啊，您这话算是说到了点子上，肯顿小姐。您要是观察过家父的话，就会看出他对府里的大事小情真是了如指掌，而且几乎从他踏入达林顿府的那一刻起就是这样的，而他还比您晚到了一个礼拜。”

肯顿小姐似乎思考了一下我这番话，然后才有点愠怒地道：

“我敢肯定老史蒂文斯先生对他的工作是非常擅长的，不过我向您保证，史蒂文斯先生，我也同样能把自己的工作做得很好。我会记

住以后用他的全称来称呼令尊的。现在，如果您没有别的事了，就请容许我告退了。”

在这次遭遇之后，肯顿小姐就不再试图把花往我的餐具室里送了，而且总的说来，我很高兴地观察到她的工作很快就步入了正轨。不仅如此，她显然是位对待工作非常严肃认真的女管家，而且年纪虽轻，却似乎毫不费力地就赢得了她属下各位员工的尊敬。

我还注意到，此后她的确开始以“史蒂文斯先生”来称呼家父。不过，我们在餐具室里的那段谈话过去两周以后的一个下午，我正在藏书室里做着点什么，这时肯顿小姐走进来对我说：

“打搅您了，史蒂文斯先生。不过如果您在寻找您的簸箕的话，我看到它就在外面的门厅里呢。”

“您说什么，肯顿小姐？”

“您的簸箕，史蒂文斯先生。您把它放在外面了。要我替您把它拿进来吗？”

“肯顿小姐，我刚才并没有用过簸箕。”

“啊，呃，那就请您原谅吧，史蒂文斯先生。我想当然地以为刚才是您使用过簸箕，并且把它放在了门厅里。很抱歉平白打搅了您。”

她已经准备离开了，又在门口转过身来说：

“哦，史蒂文斯先生。我本想自己把它放归原位的，可是现在必须先上楼一趟。不知道能否请您记得把它还回去呢？”

“当然了，肯顿小姐。多谢您留心和提醒。”

“这是我应该做的，史蒂文斯先生。”

我听着她的脚步声穿过门厅，开始上了主楼梯，然后我才朝门口走去。透过藏书室的两扇大门，可以一览无遗地将门厅和宅第的大门尽收眼底。肯顿小姐提到的那个簸箕就最为惹人注目地矗立在那空荡荡的、擦洗得光洁如镜的地板中央。

那是个虽说微不足道，但却令人恼火的疏失；那个簸箕不但从底层开向门厅的那五道房门那儿看去极为惹人注目，而且从楼梯和二楼的那几个露台上也可以看得一清二楚。我穿过门厅，把那个碍眼的物事拿起来，而直到这时我才意识到这次疏失的全部内涵：我突然想

起，约莫半个钟头前，正是家父在擦洗门厅的地板来着。起先，我简直都不敢相信家父会犯下这样的错误，不过我马上就提醒自己，这种小小不言的疏忽是每个人都难免偶尔会出现的，于是我的恼怒马上就转到了肯顿小姐头上，怪她居然如此毫无道理地小题大做。

然后，最多又过了一个礼拜，我正从厨房来到后廊上的时候，肯顿小姐从她的起坐间里出来，跟我说了一通显然是经过了一番排练的话：大意是尽管她因为让我注意到我的下属所犯的错误而深感不安，不过她和我本来就是一个团队，不得不通力合作，所以她希望我如果注意到女员工出了什么差错，请我务必也像她那样直言相告。说完这番话后，她接着又指出，餐厅里有几件已经摆上餐桌的银餐具上有明显的擦拭剂的残留。有一把餐叉的齿尖简直就是黑色的。我谢了她，她就又退回到了自己的起坐间。当然，她根本就没有必要特地来提醒我，银器正是家父的主要职责所在，而且是他深感自豪的一项工作。

很有可能还有不少其他这类的事例，我现在已经不记得了。反正在我记忆中，事态在某种程度上达到了高潮是在一个细雨蒙蒙的阴沉的午后，当时我正在弹子房里护理达林顿勋爵的各种运动奖牌和奖杯。肯顿小姐走了进来，站在门口说：

“史蒂文斯先生，我刚注意到这门外有样东西令我百思不得其解。”

“那是什么呢，肯顿小姐？”

“是爵爷的意思，要把楼梯平台上的那尊中国佬跟弹子房门外的这尊调换位置吗？”

“中国佬，肯顿小姐？”

“是的，史蒂文斯先生。原本一直摆在楼梯平台上的那尊中国佬的塑像，现在就在这扇门外面。”

“我恐怕，肯顿小姐，是您有点搞错了吧？”

“我不认为是我搞错了，史蒂文斯先生。我特别要求自己熟悉府内所有物品的摆放位置。那尊中国佬，我猜想，是被某个人擦拭过以后摆错位置了。如果您不相信的话，史蒂文斯先生，也许您可以移步出来自己看一下。”

“肯顿小姐，我现在手头还有事。”

“可是，史蒂文斯先生，您似乎并不相信我的话。既然如此，我想还是请您移步出来亲自看一下。”

“肯顿小姐，我现在正忙着，过会儿我再处理这件事吧。说起来这也算不上什么急务。”

“如此说来，史蒂文斯先生，您是认可我在这件事上并没有弄错喽。”

“肯顿小姐，在我腾出手来处理这件事之前，我是不会贸然认可任何结论的。可是我现在手头上还有事。”

我转身继续做我的事，可是肯顿小姐仍旧站在门口观察我。最后她又道：

“看得出来您手头的事很快就会做完了，史蒂文斯先生。我就在门外等您，等您一出来，这件事就可以最后定案了。”

“肯顿小姐，我想您是有些小题大做了。”

可是肯顿小姐已经离开了门口，而且果不其然，我在继续自己工作的时候，偶尔的脚步声以及其他的声响都会提醒我，她仍旧在门外等着。于是我就决定在弹子房里再多找些工作来做，寄希望于过一会儿以后她能意识到自己的位置是多么荒谬可笑，就此识时务地走开。然而，又过了一段时间以后，我已经把利用手边的工具能做的工作全都干完了，肯顿小姐却显然仍旧待在外面。我决定不再在这种幼稚的事情上浪费时间，于是考虑通过法式落地窗脱身。然而天公不作美——说白了，放眼一望，外面就有好几个大水坑和一块块烂泥地——再者说，还得有人再重新回到弹子房，从里面把落地窗闩好。最后，我认定最好的办法就是出其不意地冲出门去，怒气冲冲地大踏步离开。我于是尽可能悄无声息地先来到一个最佳的位置，从那儿可以发动这样的一次急行军，我紧握自己的清洁工具，一鼓作气地冲出门去，还没等大吃一惊的肯顿小姐醒过神来，我已经沿着走廊迈出去好几步了。可是她很快就回过味儿来，眨眼工夫已经抢到我的前头，挡住了我的去路。

“史蒂文斯先生，这尊中国佬摆错了地方，您不会不同意吧？”

“肯顿小姐，我忙得很。我很奇怪您除了一整天都在走廊里站着，居然就没有更好的事情可做了。”

“史蒂文斯先生，这尊中国佬摆放的位置到底是对还是不对？”

“肯顿小姐，我想请您把嗓门压低一点。”

“我只是想请您，史蒂文斯先生，转过身去看一看那尊中国佬。”

“肯顿小姐，请您把嗓门压低点。如果下属们听到我们扯着嗓门争论中国佬是否摆错了地方，那成何体统？”

“事实是，史蒂文斯先生，府里所有的中国佬塑像都已经脏了有一段时间啦！而现在，居然又摆错了地方！”

“肯顿小姐，您实在是莫名其妙。现在能否请您行个好放我过去？”

“史蒂文斯先生，劳您驾看看您身后的那尊中国佬好吗？”

“如果这对您来说如此重要，肯顿小姐，我可以认可，我后面的那尊中国佬或许是摆错了地方。可我必须要说，我实在有些搞不明白，您为什么会对这些微不足道的疏失如此地关切备至。”

“这些疏失本身或许微不足道，史蒂文斯先生，但您自己却要认识到那其中隐含的更重大的意义。”

“肯顿小姐，我不明白您的意思。现在能否请您好心让我过去。”

“那事实就是，史蒂文斯先生，您交托给令尊的工作已经远非他这个年纪的人所能承担得了啦。”

“肯顿小姐，您显然并不清楚您暗示的是什么。”

“不管令尊曾有过怎样的辉煌，史蒂文斯先生，他现在的力量都已经严重衰退了。这就是您所谓的这些‘微不足道的疏失’所暗含的真正意义，而如果您对此掉以轻心，那么要不了多久，令尊就将铸成大错。”

“肯顿小姐，您这只不过是在给自己出洋相。”

“我很抱歉，史蒂文斯先生，可我必须把话说完。我认为令尊身上的很多职责都该被卸下来了。比如说，不应该让他再继续端那些沉重的托盘了。他端着它们走进餐厅的时候，他那两只手抖得实在令人心惊。他迟早肯定会失手将托盘砸到某位夫人或是士绅的大腿上，就只是个时间问题罢了。不仅如此，史蒂文斯先生，这话我说出来很是冒昧，但我已经注意到了令尊的鼻子。”

“真的吗，肯顿小姐？”

“很遗憾是真的，史蒂文斯先生。前天傍晚，我眼看着令尊端着托盘脚步非常迟缓地朝餐厅走去，恐怕我很清楚地看到他的鼻尖上拖着长长的一条鼻涕，就在那些汤碗上面摇摇欲坠。我恐怕这样的上菜方式是很难令人食欲大开的。”

不过这会子经过细想以后，我倒不能肯定肯顿小姐那天当真把话说得如此毫无顾忌了。在我们多年密切共事的过程中，我们诚然越来越坦诚地交换意见，可是眼下我正在回忆的那个午后尚属我们订交的初始阶段，我觉得即便是肯顿小姐也不会如此直言不讳的。我不敢肯定她当真会冒昧到说出像是“这些疏失本身或许微不足道，可你自己却要认识到那其中隐含的更重大的意义”这样的话来。事实上，经过一番仔细的回想以后，我感觉应该是达林顿勋爵亲自跟我说这番话的，那是我跟肯顿小姐在弹子房门外那番交锋过后的大约两个月后，爵爷将我叫进了他的书房。那时，家父的境况在他摔倒以后已经有了重大的变化。

我在这里顺带描述的这一事件，不过是众多事例当中的一桩，而这些事例无不鲜明地表现出达林顿勋爵那羞涩而又谦逊的天性。近些年来，有关爵爷本人以及他在诸多重大事件当中所扮演的重要角色，坊间出现了大量不实之词，有些口耳相传，有些则付诸笔墨；更有甚者，有些极端无知的报道居然指鹿为马，断言爵爷的行为是由自我中心，要不然就是傲慢自负所驱使的。请容我在此说上一句，再也没有比这种论调更加悖乎常理、罔顾事实的了。爵爷后来所坚守的那些公

开立场是与他的本能和天性完全背道而驰的，而我敢断言，爵爷之所以能够勉为其难地克服他那远为恬淡退隐的一面，纯粹是出于深厚的道德责任感。无论近年来对达林顿勋爵的功过如何评说一如我之前所言，这其中的大部分纯粹是无稽之谈——我都该为爵爷说句公道话：他本质上是个真正的好人，一个彻头彻尾的绅士，时至今日，我都为自己能将最好的年华奉献给为这样一个人服务上而深感自豪。

在我说起的那个特别的午后，爵爷的年纪应该还在五十四五岁上；不过据我的回忆，他的头发已经完全灰白，他那瘦高的身形已经出现了在他的晚年变得异常显著的驼背的迹象。他几乎是在说话时，眼睛才会从那卷百科全书上抬一抬：

“令尊身体感觉好些了吧，史蒂文斯？”

“我可以很高兴地说，他已经完全康复了，先生。”

“听到这个消息真让人高兴。非常高兴。”

“谢谢您，先生。”

“听我说，史蒂文斯，令尊那边有任何一呃——迹象没有？我的意思是，有没有任何迹象显示令尊也许希望他的工作负担稍许减轻一些？撇开这次摔倒的事故不谈，我的意思是。”

“正如我所说的，先生，家父看来已经完全康复了，我相信他仍旧是个堪当重任之人。诚然，他最近在履行职责时确实出过一两个明显的差错，但在性质上无论如何都是微不足道的。”

“不过，我们谁都不希望任何类似的事情再度发生，是不是？我的意思是，令尊不小心跌倒这类的意外。”

“那是自然，先生。”

“而且当然啦，这种意外既然会发生在草坪上，那也就可能发生在任何地方。而且在任何时候。”

“是的，先生。”

“有可能发生在，比如说，令尊正在侍餐的晚宴当中。”

“是有可能，先生。”

“你听我说，史蒂文斯，不出半个月，那些代表当中的第一批就会来到这里了。”

“我们都已做好了充分的准备，先生。”

“在那之后，这幢房子里发生的所有事情都可能产生非同小可的结果。”

“是的，先生。”

“我的意思是说非同小可的结果。对于欧洲的发展全局而言都是如此。只要看看将要出席的人员名单，我认为这么说一点都不算夸张。”

“是的，先生。”

“这种时候可容不得有半点差池。”

“的确如此，先生。”

“你听我说，史蒂文斯，我的意思绝非是要令尊离开这个岗位。我只是请你重新考虑一下他所承担的职责范围。”我相信，说到这里的时候，爵爷再次低下头去假装看书，并局促不安地用手指比画着一个条目：“这些疏失本身或许微不足道，史蒂文斯，可你自己却必须要认识到那其中隐含的更重大的意义。令尊堪当重任的时代正在成为过去。在那种任何一个疏失都可能危及会议成功的工作领域，请切莫再派给他任何任务了。”

“绝对不会了，先生。对此我完全理解。”

“很好。那我就把此事交给你去斟酌办理了，史蒂文斯。”

应该说明的是，大约在一个礼拜以前，达林顿勋爵是亲眼看到家父意外跌倒的过程的。爵爷当时正在凉亭里招待两位客人，一位年轻的女士和一位绅士，眼看着家父端着一大托盘大受欢迎的茶点穿过草坪朝他们走来。草坪和凉亭之间有一段长约几码的小缓坡，那时候跟现在一样，有四块石板嵌入草中充当进阶的梯级。家父就是在走到这几块石板附近时摔倒的，托盘上所有的东西——茶壶、茶杯、茶托、三明治、蛋糕——在石板上方的草皮上撒得到处都是。等我接到警报赶过去的时候，爵爷和他那两位客人已经让家父面向一侧躺好，从凉亭里拿来的靠垫和小地毯权充枕头和毯子。家父已经神志不清，面色呈现出一种古怪的灰色。已经派人去请梅雷迪思大夫了，不过爵爷认为等大夫赶到之前应该先把家父从太阳地里转移出来；结果是让人搬来了一把带篷的轮椅，费了不少劲儿把家父转移到了室内。梅雷迪思大夫赶到的时候，家父已经苏醒过来，感觉好多了。大夫并没有待多久，

临走前只模棱两可地交代了几句，大意是家父也许是“工作过于劳累”了。

这个意外的发生显然让家父感觉非常难堪，到我们在达林顿勋爵的书房里谈话的时候，他早已经跟之前一样继续忙碌地工作了。于是，怎么才能提出这个减免其工作职责的话题可就殊非易事了。对我来说尤其麻烦的还在于这些年来家父跟我之间的交流越来越少，其原因我从来也没有真正搞清楚。以至于在他来到达林顿府以后，即便是针对工作进行一些简单的必要沟通时，那气氛也让双方都很尴尬。

思之再三，我认定最好还是选在家父的寝室里跟他私下谈这件事，这样的话等我走后他也可以不受打扰地仔细考虑一下他所面临的新处境。能在寝室里找到家父的时间只有他刚起床的一大早和临睡前的深夜里。我选择了前者，于是在某一天的清晨，我爬上仆役厢房的楼顶来到他居住的小阁楼外，轻轻敲了敲门。

在此之前，我极少有理由进入家父的寝室，一见之下我深为那个房间的逼仄和简陋而吃惊。确实，我记得当时的印象是跨入了一间牢房，后来想来，这种感觉或许跟天刚破晓时那苍白的光线以及空间的局促或者四壁的萧然也不无关系。因为家父已经拉开了窗帘，脸已经刮好，穿好全套制服坐在床沿上，显然他就一直坐在那里观看着天色的变化，等待黎明的到来。至少揣测起来他应该是在观看天空的，毕竟从他那个小小的窗口望去，只能看到屋瓦和雨水槽。他床头的那盏油灯已经捻灭，当我发现家父不以为然地瞥了一眼我手里的油灯——那是我特意带了来给摇摇晃晃的楼梯照个亮的一我就赶紧捻灭了它。油灯捻灭以后，我才更加清楚地注意到那照进房间的苍白光线的效果，以及它是如何照亮了家父那皱纹堆垒、棱角分明、仍旧令人敬畏不已的面容轮廓的。

“啊，”我说，短促地一笑，“我就知道父亲肯定已经起了床，而且为白天的工作做好了准备。”

“我起来已经三个钟头啦，”他说，颇为冷淡地上下打量了我一番。

“希望父亲不是因为关节炎的困扰才睡不好觉的。”

“我的睡眠已经足够了。”

父亲朝屋内唯一的那把椅子靠过去，那是把小小的木椅子，他把两只手全都撑在椅背上，借此站起身来。当我看到他站立在我面前的

时候，我真不知道他的腰弯背驼在多大程度上是因为年老体衰，又在多大程度上应归咎于为了适应这个小阁楼那陡斜的天花板而养成的习惯。

“我来是要跟您谈一件事，父亲。”

“那就简明扼要地说。我不能整个上午都听你瞎叨叨。”

“既然如此，父亲，那我就直奔主题了。”

“那就直奔主题，说完了事。我们这里还有人有工作要做呢。”

“很好。既然您希望我长话短说，我就恭敬不如从命了。事实是，父亲已经是越来越年老体衰。以至于现在就连履行副管家的日常职责也已经是心有余而力不足了。爵爷认为，我自己也有同感，如果允许父亲继续承担目前的职责，他随时都可能危及府内日常事务的正常运转，尤其是下周即将举行的国际盛会。”

父亲的面容，在那半明半暗的光线之下，没有丝毫的情绪波动。

“重点在于，”我继续道，“我们感觉父亲不应该再承担伺候用餐的工作了，不论席间是否有宾客在场。”

“在过去的五十四年间，我每天都负责伺候用餐，”家父说道，话音不疾不徐。

“除此以外，也已经决定父亲不该再端送盛放任何物品的托盘，不管需要走动的距离有多近。有鉴于已经做出的这些限制，也知道父亲尤其看重简洁明了，我已经在此列出了经过修正的日常职责的清单，切盼父亲自今日起就遵照执行。”

我自己都感觉不太情愿将我手里的那张清单直接递给他，于是就放在了他的床尾上。家父瞥了它一眼，然后就转过目光凝视着我。他的表情仍没有丝毫情绪变化的蛛丝马迹，他那双扶在椅背上的手却似乎完全放松了下来。不管是否已经弯腰驼背，他那威严的身形所造成的绝对影响仍旧不容小觑——正是那同样的影响力使得后座上两位烂醉的绅士恢复了清醒。最后，他说道：

“我上次摔倒纯粹是因为那几级石阶的缘故。都已经歪歪扭扭了。应该吩咐谢默斯赶快去把它们挪挪正，以免别的人也在那儿摔倒喽。”

“的确。总之，父亲能答应我务必细看一下那份清单吗？”

“应该吩咐谢默斯赶紧去把那几级台阶修理好。绝对要在那些绅士们从欧洲来到之前就弄好。”

“的确。那么，父亲，祝您早安。”

肯顿小姐在信中提到的那个夏日傍晚就在这次短暂会晤的不久后——当然，也可能就是那同一天的傍晚。我记不清到底是为了什么爬到宅第的最高层，来到一侧全都是一间间客房的那条走廊上了。但我想正如此前已经说过的那样，我仍生动地记得当时那最后的斜阳穿过每扇敞开的房门，一道道橘红色的光线投射到走廊上的情景。当我从那一间间无人使用的卧房门前走过时，肯顿小姐的侧影就映衬在其中一间卧室的窗户前，她看到我之后就喊我过去。

不过我看我是越来越沉溺于这些回忆当中了，这或许有点蠢吧。毕竟，目前的这次旅行是我千载难逢的一个机会，可以尽情品味英格兰乡村的众多绝胜佳景，我要是任由自己这么过度分心的话，以后我肯定会后悔不迭的。事实上，我注意到自己还没有在此记下来到这座城市途中的任何见闻——只约略提到一开始那在山坡上的短暂停留。考虑到我其实非常享受昨天的旅程，这真算得上一个不小的纰漏。

我相当仔细地规划过前往索尔兹伯里的这趟旅程，避开了几乎所有的主干道；在有些人看来这次行车路线像是在不必要地绕圈子，不过这样一来我就能欣赏到简·西蒙斯太太在其佳著中推荐的好多处美景了，我必须说，对此我是相当满意的。大部分的时间我都行驶在农

田牧地间，置身于绿草萋萋的怡人芳香中，而且我经常会不由自主地放慢车速，缓缓徐行，为的是更好地欣赏途经的一条溪流或是一道山谷的美景。不过据我的记忆，一直到已经行将接近索尔兹伯里的时候，我才真正又从车上下下来了一次。

当时我正行驶在一条长长的直路上，道路两旁都是开阔的草甸。事实上，到了这里土地已经变得非常广袤而又平坦，四面都可以看得很远，索尔兹伯里大教堂的尖塔已经在前方的天际线上清晰可见。一种宁静的心绪涌上心头，因为这个原因我想我又一次把车子开得非常慢了一可能时速不会超过十五英里。也是幸好如此，因为开得这么慢我才及时发现有一只母鸡正以最悠闲不过的步态横穿我前方的道路。我赶紧把福特车停下来，离那只母鸡只剩下一两英尺的距离，这么一来它倒也停下不走了，就站在我车前的路当间。过了一会儿，我见它仍旧一动不动，就按响了汽车喇叭，但这并没有什么用，只使得那只母鸡开始在地上啄起什么东西来了。恼怒之下，我打开车门开始下车，一只脚刚刚踩到脚踏板上时，我听到一个女人的声音喊道：

“哦，我真是太抱歉啦，先生。”

往周围一瞧，我才发现自己刚刚经过了路边的一幢农舍——一个系着围裙的年轻女人从里面跑了出来，想必是汽车喇叭惊动了她。她从我身边走过去，一个突然袭击把那只母鸡抓住，她把它抱小孩一样抱在怀里，一边再次向我道歉。我请她放宽心，这对我并没有造成什么妨碍，她说道：

“真是非常感谢您特意停下车来，没有从内莉身上轧过去。她是个好姑娘，总是给我们生出最大的鸡蛋。您特意把车停下来真是菩萨心肠。而且您可能还急着赶路吧？”

“哦，我一点儿都不着急赶路，”我微笑道。“这么多年以来，我这是头一回能这么消消停停地享受一下，我得承认，这真是一种相当愉快的经历。您看，我这纯是在享受驾车出游的乐趣呢。”

“哦，那敢情好，先生。您是要去索尔兹伯里吧，我估摸着。”

“确实。事实上，前面我们能看到的就是那座大教堂吧？听说那是一座恢宏壮丽的建筑。”

“哦，可不是嘛，先生，是很漂亮。呃，跟您说实话吧，我自己都还没去过索尔兹伯里呢，所以也讲不清楚它近看是个什么样子。不过我跟您说，先生，我们从这儿天天都能看到那个尖塔。有些日子雾

太大了，它就仿佛完全消失了似的。可是您自己也看得出来，像今天这样的好天气，它看上去有多漂亮啊。”

“赏心悦目。”

“您没有从我们内莉的身上轧过去，我真是感激不尽，先生。三年前，我们的乌龟就是这么被轧死的，也就在这个地方。为此我们全都非常伤心来着。”

“真是太惨了，”我说，面色非常沉重。

“哦，可不是嘛，先生。有人说我们庄稼人早就习惯了家畜伤亡了，才不是那么回事呢。我的小儿儿子一连哭了好几天。您肯为了内莉停车真是菩萨心肠，先生。既然您都已经下了车了，何不进屋喝杯茶呢？我们欢迎之至。这会给您在路上提提神的。”

“您太客气了，不过说实话，我觉得应该继续赶路了。我希望能适时地赶到索尔兹伯里，好有时间去看看那个城市的众多胜景呢。”

“说得也是，先生。那好吧，再次感谢您。”

我又上了路，出于某种原因——也许是因为我觉得还会有更多的家畜悠闲地横穿马路吧——我仍旧保持着刚才的缓慢车速。我必须得说，刚才的这桩小小的遭遇不禁使我的精神为之大好；我因为一念之善受到感激，又得到淳朴的善意回报，不禁使我对于未来几天里吉凶莫测的旅行计划感到一种特别的振奋之情。也就是怀着这样昂扬的情绪，我来到了索尔兹伯里。

不过我觉得还是应该暂时回头再说两句家父的事；因为我突然想到，在处理有关家父能力衰退这个问题上，给大家的印象可能是我的态度太过生硬，有些操之过急了。事实上，除了采取那样的方式以外，我当时也是别无选择的——一旦我把当时的整个大背景解释清楚，您肯定也会认同我这种说法的。概括说来，将在达林顿府召开的重要的国际会议已经迫在眉睫，处理问题已经容不得有任何放任姑息或是“转弯抹角”的余地了。还需提醒诸位一句的是，尽管在此后的大约十五年间，达林顿府确曾见证了诸多具有同等分量的重大事件的发生，但别忘了，一九二三年三月的那次会议正是这些重大事件中的第一桩；可以想象，正因为相对来说缺乏经验，大家也就更不敢马虎大意了。事实上，直到今天我仍然会经常回顾那次会议，出于不止一个原因，我将其视作我整个一生的转折点。首先，我想我的确把它看作我真正成长为一名成熟的管家的重大时刻。这并不代表说我认为自己

已经必然地成了一位“伟大的”管家；不管怎么说，这样的评判都是不应该由我来论定的。不过，如果有人愿意假定在我的整个职业生涯中至少已经具备了一丁点“尊严”的核心素质，那么此人应该也会希望将一九二三年三月的那次会议当作一个代表性的时刻，在那其中我也许显示出我已经具备了那种素质所要求的能力。那次会议无疑属于那样的重大事件之一：如果它在某个人发展过程的关键阶段不期而至，必将会挑战并且拓展其个人能力的极限，所以自那以后，此人便会以全新的标准来检视和要求自己了。当然了，那次会议之所以令人难忘亦有其他颇为不同的原因，在此我愿详细解释一下。

一九二三年的那次会议可以说是达林顿勋爵长期擘画的最终成果；的确，现在回顾起来，可以清楚地看到爵爷是如何从会议的大约三年前就开始朝着这个目标努力的。我记得，在大战结束合约起草的时候，他对此还并没有这么全神贯注，我想，公平合理地说来，他对合约的兴趣与其说是源自对于其内容的关注，还不如说是由于他跟卡尔—海因茨·布雷曼先生的友谊。

大战结束不久后，布雷曼先生初次造访达林顿府，那时他还是一身戎装，任何人都看得出来，他跟达林顿勋爵之间已经建立起了深厚的友谊。这并没有让我感到吃惊，因为任何人只要一瞥之下就看得出布雷曼先生是位高尚正派的士绅君子。从德国陆军退役以后，他在之后的两年间每隔一段时间都会再次造访，而你忍不住会有些震惊地注意到，他的境况已经是每况愈下了。他的衣着越来越敝旧，他的身形越来越单薄；他的眼睛里现出一种惊恐不安的神色，在他最后的几次造访中，他会长时间地凝视着虚空，忘记了爵爷就在他身旁，有时甚至在爵爷跟他说话时都茫然不觉。我本以为布雷曼先生是罹患了什么严重的疾病，可是听了爵爷当时的一番话，我才明白情况并非如此。

应该是临近一九二〇年末的时候，达林顿勋爵踏上了他数度柏林之行的首次旅程，我还记得那次初访对他造成的深刻影响。他回来以后一连好几天都心事重重，我还记得我有一次问他柏林之行是否愉快时，他的回答是：“令人不安，史蒂文斯。令人甚为不安。如此对待战败的敌人对我们而言实在是名誉扫地。这完全背离了我们国家的传统。”

不过，还有与此有关的另一件事一直生动地留在我的记忆当中。如今，原来的宴会厅已经不再摆放餐桌，那个宽敞的大厅由于其天花极高且非常华美，法拉戴先生就将其派作了类似画廊的用场。但是在

爵爷的时代，宴会厅还是经常使用的，常设的长餐桌可供三十位或更多的客人就座用餐；实际上，那个宴会厅是如此宽敞，只要在常设的长餐桌一头再加设几张小餐桌，就能供差不多五十位客人就座用餐。当然，在寻常的日子里，达林顿勋爵就跟如今的法拉戴先生一样，是在气氛更加亲切的餐厅里用餐的，那是招待十二位客人用餐的理想场所。不过我记得在那个特别的冬夜里，餐厅因为某种原因无法使用，达林顿勋爵只得跟唯一的一位客人——我想应该是爵爷任职外交部时期的同僚理查德·福克斯爵士——在那空旷的宴会厅里共进晚餐。您无疑也会同意，在侍餐的时候，最困难的情况就莫过于只有两个人用餐了。我本人是宁肯只伺候一位用餐者用餐的，哪怕他是个素不相识的陌生人。在有两个人一起用餐的情况下，就算其中一位是自己的主人，你也会发现最大的难题就在于很难做到既要全意殷勤又须完全不引起注意这一优质侍餐服务的核心要义；在这种情况下，你难免会有这样的怀疑，即你的在场是否妨碍了两位用餐者的谈话。

那天晚上，宴会厅里的大部分空间都处在黑暗中，两位绅士肩并肩坐在长餐桌的中间位置——因为餐桌过于宽大，不宜于对坐——照明只有餐桌上的烛台以及对面噼啪作响的炉火。为了将我的存在感减到最低，我决定站在比平常距离餐桌远得多的暗处。当然了，这一策略也有其明显的不利之处，每次我走向光亮处侍餐的时候，还没等我走到餐桌前，我前进的脚步就会产生又长又响的回声，以最招摇的方式让用餐者注意到我的到来；不过也确有一大优点，可以使我站在一旁待命时几乎不会被人注意到。正是在我这样侍立于离开两位绅士有一段距离的暗处的时候，我听到坐在两排空椅子中间的达林顿勋爵谈起了布雷曼先生，他的声音一如既往地平静而又温文，然而却在高大的四壁间产生了强烈的回响。

“他曾是我的敌人，”爵爷说道，“可是一一直都表现得像个绅士。在我们两国相互炮击的六个月期间，我们彼此都能以礼相待。他是位绅士，必须恪尽职守，我对他本人并无丝毫怨恨。我曾对他说：‘听我说，我们现在是敌人，我会不惜一切跟你战斗到底。但是在这一可悲的事务结束之后，等我们之间不必再相互为敌的时候，我们一定要一起喝一杯。’但可悲的是，这一君子协定却让我成了一个骗子。我的意思是，我跟他说过一旦战争结束以后我们就不再相互为敌了。如今我有何面目再去见他，跟他说我所言不虚呢？”

就在那同一个夜晚的稍后时段，爵爷一边摇着头，一边语气沉重地说：“我是为了维护世界的正义才打那场战争的。据我的理解，我并没有参加到针对日耳曼种族的仇杀当中。”

时至今日，每当听到针对爵爷的各种说法，每当听到这些日子里甚嚣尘上的有关他的行事动机的那些愚蠢的诛心之论，我就会高兴地回忆起他在那间空荡荡的宴会厅里说出的那番肺腑之言。在以后的这些岁月当中，针对爵爷的所作所为无论曾有过如何纷纭复杂的说法，至少我个人从未怀疑过，他所有的言行无不源自他内心深处渴望伸张“世界的正义”的终极愿望。

那个夜晚过后没多久，就传来了布雷曼先生在汉堡至柏林的一列火车上开枪自杀的噩耗。爵爷自然是很难过，并马上制订计划，对布雷曼夫人致以哀悼之情并予以经济援助。然而，在经过好几天的努力之后——其间我本人亦曾竭尽所能给以协助——爵爷都寻觅不到布雷曼先生家人的任何行踪。看来，他已经有挺长一段时间无家可归、妻离子散了。

有些来宾事实上是绝对“不宜公开”的，我得到指示要确保不能让仆佣们得悉他们的身份，有时甚至都不能让人看到他们。不过——我可以自豪而又感激地说一句——达林顿勋爵从来都未曾试图避过我的耳目；我还记得有好几次，某位大人物一句话说到一半就停下来，警惕地瞥上我一眼，而爵爷无一例外地都会保证说：“哦，但说无妨。在史蒂文斯面前您什么话都可以讲，这一点我可以向您保证。”

他们认为该国的经济乱象若不得到遏止，则极有可能以惊人之势蔓延至全世界。

等到一九二二年初的时候，爵爷已经开始为心中一个明确的目标而努力了。这就是将这群同道中那些最有影响力的人物齐集达林顿府，举办一场“非官方的”国际会议——会议将集中讨论《凡尔赛和约》中最为苛刻的几个条款的修订办法。为了使他们的努力不至于付诸东流，任何此类的会议都必须具有足够的分量，如此方能对于“官方的”国际会议产生决定性的影响——专为重新检讨和约的内容这一目的已经正式召开过几次会议，但其结果却只是徒增混乱和怨愤。我们当时的首相劳合·乔治先生已经呼吁于一九二二年春在意大利再次召开一次大型会议，爵爷最初的打算就是在达林顿府组织一次聚会以便确保意大利的会议能取得令人满意的结果。虽然爵爷和大卫爵士不遗余力地辛苦工作，但这一时限确实还是过于紧迫了；但随着乔治先生倡议举行的会议再度无疾而终，爵爷于是着眼于计划来年将于瑞士举行的下一次大型会议。

我还记得那段时期里的一天早上，我在早餐室里为达林顿勋爵端上咖啡的时候，他有点愤愤地把手里的《泰晤士报》折起来，说道：“这些法国人。我真是，说实话，史蒂文斯，有点受不了这些法国人。”

“是的，先生。”

“而且想想看我们还必须得在全世界面前跟他们手挽着手，肩并着肩。一旦被人提醒到这一点，你就巴不得好好去洗个澡。”

“是的，先生。”

“上次我在柏林的时候，史蒂文斯，奥费拉特男爵，家父的老朋友，走上前来跟我说：‘你们为什么要这样对待我们？难道你们看不出来再这样下去我们就承受不了了吗？’我真是很想直接告诉他，这全是那些可鄙的法国人干的。这么胡闹可绝非英国人的行事风格，我想跟他说。可我转念一想还是不能这么做：绝对不应该诋毁我们亲爱的盟国。”

可是事实上，正是由于法国人在解除德国人免受《凡尔赛和约》苛刻条款的限制方面最不肯通融，也就更为迫切地需要在达林顿府举行的聚会上至少请到一位对于本国的外交政策拥有明确影响力的法国绅士与会。的确，我就听到爵爷数度表达过这样的观点：如果没有这样的一位人士出席，则任何关于德国问题的讨论都不过是自娱自乐。

于是，爵爷就和大卫爵士开始着手解决筹备工作的这一至关重要的环节，在此期间，我亲眼目睹他们迭遭挫败仍不屈不挠的精神境界，真是令我感佩不已，五体投地。他们发出了无数信函和电报，而且在短短两个月内爵爷就三度亲赴巴黎斡旋。最后终于征得一位声名显赫的法国人的承诺——我将只称呼他为“杜邦先生”——同意在严格地“不宜公开”的基础上参加此次聚会，会议的日期也由此得以确定。也就是一九二三年那个令人难忘的三月。

随着会期越来越近，我所承受的压力在性质上虽远不如爵爷肩负的那么巨大，但也绝非是微不足道的。我非常清楚地意识到，如果有任何一位客人在达林顿府逗留期间稍感些微地不够舒适，就有可能造成无法想象的严重后果。不仅如此，由于与会人数的不确定性，我事先的准备工作也就格外复杂化了。这次会议的级别极高，正式的与会者仅限于十八位位高权重的绅士和两位女士——一位德国的伯爵夫人以及那令人敬畏的埃莉诺·奥斯汀太太，她当时还住在柏林；不过由于每位与会者都有充分的理由携秘书、贴身男仆和翻译一同前来，要想确知这些随同人员的人数几乎是不可能的。再者说来，有一部分与会者肯定会在三天的会期之前提早到来，以便为自己留出充足的时间做好准备工作并估定其他客人的具体心态；然而他们提前抵达的准确日期仍属未定之数。我能够确定的只有府里所有的仆役员工不仅需要不遗余力地努力工作，需要随时保持最为警觉的待命状态，而且还得具有非同寻常的灵活和变通性。事实上，我一度曾经认为如果不从府外引进更多人手帮忙的话，我们面临的这一巨大的挑战恐怕难以顺利完成。但如此一来，不但是爵爷肯定担心会引起外界的谣诼蜂起，也会使得我在承担不起任何失误的情势下，出现不得不仰赖完全不知底细的外人的窘境。于是，我开始着手以一种，在我想象中，一位将军为一场战役做准备的态度来为即将到来的重大日子做好准备：我以无以复加的谨慎态度拟定了一份特别的员工配置规划，预先考虑到各种可能发生的意外和不测；我仔细分析了我们的薄弱环节所在，为此专门制订了若干应急计划，以便在果然出现问题时即可施行补救措施；我甚至对全体员工做了一次军队里惯用的“鼓气讲话”，让大家认识到，尽管他们必须拼力工作到精疲力竭的程度，但能在未来的那几天里克尽厥职，他们必将感到莫大的自豪。“历史极有可能就在我们这个屋檐下创造出来，”我这样告诉他们。而他们因为深知我绝非那种夸大其词之辈，也就都能清楚地认识到某件意义重大的事件即将在我们府里上演了。

这样您或许就能理解，家父不巧在凉亭前摔倒时整个达林顿府里所笼罩的紧张气氛——那一意外就发生在第一批与会客人可能会到达的两周前一而且也该明白我为什么要说我们已经没有什么“转弯抹角”的余地了吧？可不管怎么说，家父居然很快就找到了办法，巧妙地规避了由不许他再端托盘的禁令对他的工作效能所造成的限制。一时间，大家经常看到他推着一辆手推车在府里到处走动的身影，车上满载着清洁用具、拖把、刷子，虽总是摆放得整整齐齐，旁边却又极不协调出现了茶壶、茶杯和茶碟，有时候看起来活像是街头小贩的卖货车。显然，他仍旧无可避免地只得放弃他在餐厅里侍餐的职责，但除此以外，拜那辆手推车之赐，他却完成了惊人的工作量。事实上，随着国际会议的巨大挑战日益迫近，家父身上似乎也发生了令人惊讶的变化。给人感觉简直就像是他被某种超自然的力量附了体，让他一下子年轻了二十岁；前些日子他脸上那种意气消沉的神色几乎一扫而光，他在府里各处工作起来简直浑身洋溢着青春的活力，在外人看来几乎要以为不是只有一个，而是有好几个这样的身影推着手推车在达林顿府里的各个走廊上奔忙呢。

至于肯顿小姐呢，我记得那些日子里日益增加的压力似乎也对她产生了明显的影响。举例说来，我记得那段时间里我有一次在后廊上跟她偶遇时的情形。对于达林顿府来说，后廊在整个仆役区域起到了主干的作用，由于进深过长，阳光无法照射进来，走廊里总是一副阴沉沉的场景。就算是在大晴天，后廊上也是一片昏暗，从那儿走过就像是穿过一条隧道一样。在我说起的那一次，如果我未曾从她朝我走来时鞋子踩在地板上的脚步声里认出她来，那就只能通过她的轮廓来辨认了。我在木地板上少数几处有道光线透进来的地方选了一处停下脚步，待她走近以后叫了一声：“啊，肯顿小姐。”

“有事吗，史蒂文斯先生？”

“肯顿小姐，不知道可否提醒您留意一下，楼上的床单需要在后天之前准备妥当。”

“床单已经全都准备好了，史蒂文斯先生。”

“啊，很高兴听您这么说。我不过是突然想到了而已，没什么别的意思。”

我正要起步往前走的时候，肯顿小姐却站在了原地。然后她朝我走近一步，一道光纹刚好落在她的脸上，我这才看清楚她那愤怒的表情。

“非常不幸，史蒂文斯先生，我真是忙得不可开交，我发现我几乎连一刻都不得闲。而您却明显地闲得很，我要是有您那么多闲工夫的话，我也会很高兴在府里四处溜达溜达，然后再同样地提醒您去特别注意一下那些你早就已经做好的工作的。”

“喔，肯顿小姐，根本没必要发那么大的火。我只是觉得有必要提醒您一声，您并没有因为太忙而疏忽了……”

“史蒂文斯先生，这已经是在过去的两天当中您第四或第五次感觉有此必要了。您居然有这么多时间在府里上上下下地闲逛，并且以您那毫无必要的指责无端地去打搅别人，这实在是让人感觉匪夷所思。”

“肯顿小姐，如果您居然有那么一时一刻认为我还有空闲时间的话，那就比以往任何时候都更清楚地显示出您是多么地缺乏经验了。我相信假以时日，再过几年，您对于在这样一幢府第里到底有多少大事小情需要操心，是会获得一些更为清楚的概念的。”

“您总是没完没了地提到我有‘多么缺乏经验’，史蒂文斯先生，然而您却显然无法指出我的工作中有任何疏失。否则，我确信您老早就不厌其烦地不吝赐教了。行了，我手头上还有很多工作要做，如果您不再这样跟在我屁股后面指手画脚，妨碍我做事，我将会感激不尽的。如果您实在是太多的闲暇需要消磨，那我建议您不如到外面去呼吸点新鲜空气，倒是更为有益一些。”

她咚咚地踩着地板从我身边走过，朝走廊那头走去。我决定最好还是到此为止，不要再深究下去，于是也就继续走我的路了。我就要来到厨房门口的时候，忽听得她怒冲冲的脚步声再次尾随而至。

“事实上，史蒂文斯先生，”她大声叫道，“我想请您从今往后不要再直接跟我说话了。”

“肯顿小姐，您这话到底是什么意思？”

“如果有必要传递什么信息的话，那就请您通过一位信使来传达。或者您也可以写一张字条，派人给我送来。这样的话，我们之间的工作关系，我肯定，将会融洽很多。”

“肯顿小姐……”

“我实在是太忙了，史蒂文斯先生。如果信息太复杂怕说不清楚的话，就请写张字条。或者您愿意的话，也可以跟玛莎或多萝西讲，

要不然就跟您认为值得信赖的某位男性员工讲。我现在必须得回去忙我的工作，只能留您一个人继续闲逛下去了。”

肯顿小姐的行径固然令人恼怒，可我也实在无暇多想，因为那时第一批客人已经到了。国外的代表预计还要两三天后才会陆续到达，不过被爵爷称作“主场团队”的三位绅士——外交部两位绝对“不宜公开”身份的公使和大卫·卡迪纳尔爵士——为了尽可能把准备工作做到位已经提早来到。一如既往，我在出入几位绅士正坐而论道，进行深入讨论的不同房间时，他们几乎不会对我有任何避讳，于是我不免对于进展到这一阶段的整体氛围多多少少也有了一定的印象。当然，爵爷和他的同僚们着重对于每一位即将与会的代表的基本情况相互间都尽可能精准地做了简要介绍；不过，他们关注的焦点都不可避免地集中在了一个人身上——也就是杜邦先生，那位法国绅士——同样重要的还有他个人可能的好恶倾向。实际上，有一次我走进吸烟室的时候，确信我听到其中一位绅士正在说：“欧洲的命运事实上可能全系于我们是否能在这一点上劝说杜邦先生改变他既有的观点。”

“哦，史蒂文斯，”他假作漠不关心地开口道，可是下面似乎就不知道该怎么继续下去了。我站在原地，准备一有机会就为他排忧解难。爵爷继续翻弄了一会儿书页，俯下身去细看其中的一个条目，然后才说：“史蒂文斯，我也知道我想请你去做的这件事有些不合常规。”

“先生？”

“只是因为现在我有太多重要的事情需要操心，实在分身乏术。”

“我很乐于为您效劳，先生。”

“我很抱歉向你提出这样的要求，史蒂文斯。我知道你自己也肯定忙得不可开交。可是我又不知道究竟该如何才能妥善地解决此事。”

我静等吩咐，而爵爷的注意力又重新回到了《名人录》上。然后他才又开了口，说话的时候头都没抬：“你应该，我想，熟谙人生的事实吧？”

“先生？”

“人生的事实，史蒂文斯。男女之事。你应该清楚的，是不是？”

“恐怕我不太明白您的意思，先生。”

“就让我们摆明了说吧，史蒂文斯。大卫爵士是我多年的老友。而且他在目前这次会议组织工作上的贡献是无可估量的。要是没有他，我敢说，我们就无法确保杜邦先生会同意出席此次会议。”

“的确如此，先生。”

“不过呢，史蒂文斯，大卫爵士也自有他的古怪之处。你自己或许也已经注意到了。他是带他的公子，雷金纳德，一起来的。充当他的秘书。问题是，他已经订婚了。小雷金纳德，我指的是。”

“是的，先生。”

“最近五年以来，大卫爵士一直试图告诉他的公子一些人生的基本事实。这位年轻人已经二十三岁了。”

“的确如此，先生。”

“我就有话直说了，史蒂文斯。我碰巧是这位年轻人的教父。所以呢，大卫爵士就请求我来负责向小雷金纳德传达有关的人生事实。”

“的确如此，先生。”

“大卫爵士本人发现这是个颇为艰巨的任务，他怀疑自己在雷金纳德的大婚之日前恐怕是完不成这个任务了。”

“的确如此，先生。”

“问题是，史蒂文斯，我也忙得分身乏术啊。对此大卫爵士应该是知道的，但他仍旧来求我帮忙。”爵爷停顿了一下，又继续去研究面前的书页了。

“您的意思是不是，先生，”我接过话头，“希望我来向这位年轻的绅士传达这方面的信息？”

“如果你不介意的话，史蒂文斯。这会让我如释重负的。大卫爵士每隔一两个钟头就会问我是不是已经跟他的公子讲解过了。”

“我明白，先生。这在目前的压力之下肯定是很令人心烦的。”

“当然，这已经远远超出了你的职责范围，史蒂文斯。”

“我会尽力而为的，先生。可是要找到合适的时机来传达这样的信息，恐怕会有一定的困难。”

“你只要愿意一试，我已经是感激不尽了，史蒂文斯。你真是太乐于助人了。听我说，没必要小题大做。只需传递基本的事实就够了。简单明了就是最好的方式，这是我的建议，史蒂文斯。”

“是的，先生。我将尽力而为。”

“真是感激不尽，史蒂文斯。请把进展的情况告诉我。”

您或许也能想象得到，我对于这一要求还是感到有点错愕的，而且放在平时，碰上这种事我一定会花上一点时间好好琢磨一下的。然后，这次却是在如此繁忙的节骨眼上突然降临到我头上来的，我可没那么多时间腾出来专门让它来占用，于是我决定一找到机会就速战速决。我记得就在我接受这个任务不过一个钟头左右，就注意到小卡迪纳尔先生独自一人待在藏书室里，他正端坐在一张写字台后面，埋头于几份文件当中。只要近距离地仔细观察一下这位年轻绅士，也就能体会爵爷——当然还有这位年轻绅士的尊亲为什么会知难而退了。我主人的这位教子一看就是一位态度诚恳、学究气十足的年轻人，五官清秀正派；可是碰上这样一个话题，你倒是宁肯对方更加轻松快活一点才好，甚而至于宁肯他是那种有些轻浮之气的年轻绅士。不管怎么说，既然已经决定了要快刀斩乱麻，我也就硬着头皮走进藏书室，在离卡迪纳尔先生的写字台不远处停下脚步，轻轻咳嗽了一声。

“打搅了，先生，我有个口信要转达给您。”

“哦，是吗？”卡迪纳尔先生急切地道，把目光从那些文件上抬了起来。“是家父的口信吗？”

“是的，先生。也可以这么认为吧。”

“请稍等。”

这位年轻绅士伸手从脚边的公文包里取出笔记本和铅笔。“请讲吧，史蒂文斯。”

我又轻咳了一声，尽可能保持一种就事论事的语气。

“大卫爵士希望您能知晓，先生，女士和绅士们在几个关键的地方是大为不同的。”

我在构思下句话的措辞时想必是停顿了片刻，因为卡迪纳尔先生这时叹了一口气，说：“对此我真是再清楚不过了，史蒂文斯。就请你有话直说好吗？”

“您已经很清楚了，先生？”

“家父总是低估了我的能力。对这整个领域我已经进行过广泛的阅读和扎实的基础研究工作。”

“真的吗，先生？”

“在过去这整整一个月里，除此以外我实际上就没考虑过其他的事情。”

“是吗，先生。既然如此，我要传达的这个口信或许就是多余的了。”

“你可以向家父保证，对于基本的情况我已经做到了充分的了解。这个公文包，”——他用脚碰了一下那个公文包——“就塞满了我对于但凡能够想到的每个可能的角度所做的笔记。”

“真的吗，先生？”

“我真的认为我已经充分考虑到了人类的大脑所能想到的每一种排列组合方式。希望你转告家父，请他但放宽心。”

“我会的，先生。”

卡迪纳尔先生显得轻松了一些。他又碰了碰那个公文包——我很想把眼睛别开，不去看它——然后说道：“我猜你也一直都纳闷为什么这个公文包我从不离手。好了，现在你知道了。想想要是给不该打开的人打开了会有什么样的结果吧。”

“那可就不能再尴尬了，先生。”

“可不是嘛，”他说，突然又把身子坐直了，“除非家父又想出了什么全新的因素，希望我进一步斟酌考虑。”

“我想不大可能会有了，先生。”

“没有吗？关于这位杜邦伙计就再也没有更多的资讯了吗？”

“恐怕是没有了，先生。”

我竭尽所能不流露出丝毫恼怒的情绪：原本以为已经圆满解决了的难题，这才发现实际上根本就还是原封未动地摆在我面前。我相信我正集中思想，准备重整旗鼓的时候，那位年轻的绅士突然间站起身来，一把抓起他的公文包，说：“好了，我想我该去呼吸点新鲜空气了。多谢你的帮忙，史蒂文斯。”

我本想在最短的时间内就另找机会再跟他谈一次的，可是实际证明已经是不可能了，主要是因为当天下午一比预定的时间早了足足有两天——美国的参议员刘易斯先生就到了。当时我正在楼下的餐具室里核对供货的清单，突然听到上头传来无可置疑的好几辆汽车驶进庭院停下来的声音。我赶忙上楼去的时候，在后廊里碰巧遇到了肯顿小姐——当然也就是我们上次不欢而散的同一场景——而或许正是这一令人不快的巧合促使她继续采用了跟上次一样的幼稚举动。因为在我问她是谁到了的时候，肯顿小姐径直地继续走她的路，只丢下一句话：“如果事态紧急就请人传个口信，史蒂文斯先生。”这实在太令人恼火了，不过当然了，我别无选择，只能赶紧往楼上跑去。

在我的印象中刘易斯先生是位人高马大的绅士，脸上总是挂着亲切的笑容。他的早到显然给爵爷和他的同僚们带来了不便，因为他们原指望还有一两天的独处时间可以比较充分地做好准备的。不过，刘易斯先生那不拘小节、令人愉快的举止态度，以及他在餐桌上的一番表态——美国“将永远站在正义的一方，为此而不惜承认凡尔赛已经铸成的错误”——却大大赢得了爵爷那“主场团队”的信任；随着酒过三巡菜过五味，席间的交谈已经慢慢地从诸如刘易斯先生的家乡宾州的诸多优点这样的话题，明确地转回到即将召开的会议上，而等到饭毕绅士们悠然点起雪茄的时候，他们提出来的某些深思熟虑的意见已经跟刘易斯先生到来前只在他们之间私下交流的看法同样私密了。其间，刘易斯先生曾对在座的诸公说道：

“先生们，我同意你们的看法，我们这位杜邦先生可能是位非常难以逆料的人物。不过容我告诉诸位，关于他至少有一点是肯定的，可以说有十足的把握。”他俯身向前，挥动着雪茄以示强调。“杜邦憎恨德国人。在战前他就憎恨他们，而如今更是变本加厉，他仇视德国人的程度之深恐怕是在座的诸位先生所难以理解的。”说完这句话后，刘易斯先生再次靠回到椅背上，脸上重又堆满亲切的笑容。“不过请告诉我，诸位先生，”他继续道，“你很难因为一个法国人憎恨

德国人而责怪于他，是也不是？毕竟，法国人这么做也是有其正当理由的，是也不是？”

说完，刘易斯先生环顾了一下餐桌边就座的几位绅士，一时间气氛略有些尴尬。这时达林顿勋爵说道：

“有些怨恨当然是在所难免的。可是话又说回来了，我们英国人也曾跟德国人进行过长期的苦战。”

“不过你们英国人又自不同了，”刘易斯先生道，“貌似你们已经不再真心憎恨德国人了。但法国人是这样看的：德国人毁灭了欧洲的整个文明，再怎么惩罚他们都不为过。当然了，这在我们美国人看来未免不切实际，不过我们一直感到困惑的倒是你们英国人为什么没有跟法国人持相同的观点。毕竟，诚如您刚才所说，不列颠在那场战争中也损失惨重。”

餐桌上又是一段尴尬的沉默，大卫爵士这才相当不确定地说：

“我们英国人在看待事物的方式上经常跟法国人有所不同，刘易斯先生。”

“啊，一种性情上的不同，您也许可以这么说。”刘易斯先生在说这句话时脸上的笑意似乎又加深了一点。他顾自点了点头，仿佛很多问题对他而言已经迎刃而解了，然后就抽起了雪茄。也可能是后见之明影响了我的记忆，不过我有一种明确的感觉：就是在那一刻我第一次在这位表面看来非常迷人的美国绅士身上觉察到某种古怪的，或许是某种两面三刀的东西。不过，就算我当真是在那一刻起了疑心，达林顿勋爵却显然是居之不疑。因为在又一次一两秒钟的尴尬沉默之后，爵爷似乎下定了决心。

“刘易斯先生，”他道，“让我开诚布公地说吧。我们大部分英国人都认为法国人目前的态度是有些可鄙的。您当然也许会称其为一种性情上的不同，不过容我冒昧地说一句，我们现在要讨论的却远非这一点东西而已。在冲突已经结束以后，再继续这样地仇视敌人是一种很不得体的行为。一旦你已经把一个人打倒在地上，就应该到此为止。你就不能再继续对他拳打脚踢了。在我们看来，法国人的行为已经变得越来越像野蛮人了。”

这番言辞似乎让刘易斯先生感到了某种程度的满意。他咕哝了一句什么话表示赞同，并透过餐桌上面已经相当浓厚的雪茄烟云冲着几位共同用餐的绅士满意地微微一笑。

第二天早上，又有更多的客人提前到达；就是来自德国的那两位女士——尽管大家都会觉得她们出身背景悬殊，两人居然是结伴同行的一随行的有一大群男女仆从，以及数不胜数的行李箱。下午的时候，一位意大利绅士也先期抵达，有一位贴身男仆、一位秘书、一位“专家”以及两位保镖随侍左右。我无法想象这位绅士究竟以为来到的是什么地方，竟然特意带来了保镖，不过我必须得说，在达林顿府看到有这么两位身材魁伟、一声不吭的壮汉，无论那位意大利绅士出现在哪里他们都如影随形，时刻以怀疑的目光警觉地窥伺着周围数码内的动静，这实在算得上是诡异的一景。顺带说一句，在这之后的几天当中我们才得知，这两位保镖的工作模式是两人轮流休息，以确保整个夜里至少有一位在主人身旁当值。我在刚听说这一安排以后就想马上知会肯顿小姐，以便她能相机做出安排，可是她再次拒绝跟我交谈，为了尽快落实此事，我也只得勉为其难地写了张字条，把它塞进了她起坐间的门下。

第二天，又有几位客人到达，距离正式的会期足足还有两天的时间，而达林顿府已经挤满了各个国家的客人，要么聚在房间里闲谈，要么无所事事地闲逛，在门厅里、走廊上和楼梯平台上，细看墙上的画作和各种饰品。客人们相互间当然都以礼相待，尽管如此，这一阶段却似乎弥漫着一种相当紧张的气氛，主要的原因是缺乏互信。这种焦躁不安的气氛也表现在随行的贴身男仆和仆佣相互之间那明显的冷淡态度上，我自己的员工则很高兴由于过于忙碌而无暇跟他们过多地打交道。

正是在这个节骨眼上，面对各路要求应接不暇之际，我偶然往窗外一瞥，发现了小卡迪纳尔先生的身影，他应该正在庭院里呼吸新鲜空气。他一如既往地紧紧夹着自己的公文包，正沿着环绕草坪的小径缓步闲行，深深地陷在思绪当中。我当然会想起对于这位年轻绅士，我还有任务没有完成，而且我灵机一动，感觉户外的环境因为可以亲近大自然，尤其是旁边还有鹅群可以拿来当作实例，倒不失为是传递我肩负的那类信息的理想场合。而且我还看出，如果我现在就快步走出去，藏身于小径旁边那高大的杜鹃花丛背后守株待兔，很快就能等到卡迪纳尔先生从我身边路过。到了那时，我就可以现身出来，向他传达我的信息。这诚然算不上什么无比精妙的谋略，可是话又说回来了，你也得承认这个任务固然有其自身的重要性，可是在那个节骨眼上却怎么也算不上最该优先考虑的要事。

地面和多数植物的叶子上都笼罩着一层薄霜，不过对于一年当中的这个时节来说，那算得上是温煦的一天。我快步穿过草坪，藏身于

灌木花丛之后，不久就听到卡迪纳尔先生的脚步声近了。不幸的是我稍稍估错了现身的时机。我原打算在卡迪纳尔先生距我的藏身之处尚有一段距离的时候就从树丛后出来的，那样他就会提早看到我，以为我正要前往凉亭，或者也许是园丁的小屋。这样的话我就能假装是意外撞见了，如此，便能赋予我们的谈话以一种临时起意的意味。结果却是我出来得稍晚了一点，恐怕真是吓了那位年轻绅士一跳，他马上把那宝贝公文包拿得离我远远的，用两条胳膊紧紧地抱在胸前。

“我非常抱歉，先生。”

“我的天哪，史蒂文斯。你吓了我一大跳。我还以为发生了什么不测呢。”

“非常抱歉，先生。不过我碰巧有件事要向您转达。”

“我的天哪，好吧，你可真是把我吓了一跳。”

“那就容我有话直说了，先生。您会注意到在我们的不远处有几只鹅。”

“鹅？”他有些困惑地四顾一望。“哦，是的。还确实有几只鹅。”

“同样的，还有鲜花和灌木。事实上，现在并非它们一年当中的鼎盛时节，不过您自然明白，先生，随着春天的到来，我们将会看到周围的环境发生一种改变——一种非常特别的改变。”

“是的，我确信现在的庭院并非它们最美的时节。可是跟你实话实说吧，史蒂文斯，我其实并不太留意大自然的美好。眼下的事态实在令人忧心忡忡。杜邦先生是满怀能够想象得到的最恶劣的心绪来到这里的。这也是我们最不想见到的情形。”

“杜邦先生已经来到了这里，先生？”

“大约半小时前。情绪简直坏透了。”

“那抱歉了，先生。我必须马上去招待他了。”

“那是自然，史蒂文斯。呃，感谢你特意出来跟我聊天。”

“请您原谅，先生。关于这个方面——也就是您所谓的大自然的美好，我碰巧还有一两句话要跟您说。如果您肯屈尊听我唠叨几句的话，我将不胜感激之至。不过恐怕这得等下次找机会再说了。”

“好的，我愿闻其详，史蒂文斯。虽然我个人更偏爱鱼类。对于鱼类我可以说是无所不知，不管是淡水的还是咸水的。”

“所有的生命都跟我们预期中的讨论息息相关，先生。不过，我必须向您告退了。我都不知道杜邦先生已经到了。”

我匆忙返回室内，迎头撞到的第一男仆忙不迭地跟我说：“我们正四处找您呢，先生。那位法国绅士已经到了。”

杜邦先生是位个头高挑、举止优雅的绅士，蓄着灰白的胡须，戴着单片眼镜。抵达时他穿的是一身人们经常看到欧陆士绅们度假时穿的那种服饰，确实，他在整个逗留期间，都始终刻意地保持着一副他完全是出于游赏和交情才会来到达林顿府的架势。正如卡迪纳尔先生指出的，杜邦先生抵达的时候情绪不佳；现在我已经记不清楚在他来到英国的这几天里到底都有什么事情惹得他不开心了，不过最让他难过的应该是他在伦敦观光时脚上就磨起来的几个痛疮，而且他很担心它们会化脓感染。我知会他的贴身男仆有事可以找肯顿小姐帮忙，可是这并没有妨碍杜邦先生每隔几个钟头就冲着我打一下响指，跟我说：“管家！我还需要一些绷带。”

会议在一九二三年三月最后一周的一个下雨的早上正式召开，为了顾及很多与会者“不宜公开”的性质，会场特意设在会客厅这样一个有些超乎想象的地方。事实上，在我看来，这种“非正式”的做派已经达到了稍显滑稽的程度。这样一个相当女性化的房间里挤满了这

么多表情严峻、一身深色正装的绅士，有的沙发上一下子并肩坐了三四个人，这一场景本身就够古怪的了；而且有的与会者又是如此坚决地一定要维持一种“这不过是次社交活动”的表象，居然到了不惜为此而将一份打开的报章杂志故意摊放在膝头上的程度。

在第一个上午的会议进程中我因为不得不频繁出入于会客厅，所以无法完全跟进会议的整个过程。不过我记得达林顿勋爵的开场白是首先正式欢迎各位嘉宾的莅临，然后就概述了一下需要放宽《凡尔赛和约》诸多条款的苛酷规定这一强烈的道德诉求的基本内涵，强调指出了他亲眼目睹的德国人民正在承受的巨大苦难。当然，这同样的感想我之前已经在很多场合听爵爷表达过了，可是他在这个庄严的场景中的发言句句出自肺腑，是如此令人信服，我不禁再次为之而动容。大卫·卡迪纳尔爵士接下来发言，虽然我错过了他发言的大部分内容，不过感觉基本上更偏重技术性的层面，而且坦白说我觉得是有些高深莫测。不过其基本的要旨似乎与爵爷的意思非常接近，他的讲话以呼吁不要让德国再继续赔款以及法国军队撤出鲁尔区做结。那位德国伯爵夫人紧接着发言，不过这个时候我不得不离开会客厅相当长一段时间，具体原因已经不记得了。等我再次进去的时候，来宾们已经开始进行开放式的讨论，而这些讨论的内容一大部分是关于商业贸易和金融利率的一就不是我能理解得了的了。

至少据我的观察而言，杜邦先生并没有参与到讨论当中，从他那闷闷不乐的行为举止上也很难看出他到底是在认真倾听别人的发言呢，还是全神贯注在别的思绪当中。在某个阶段，我碰巧在一位德国绅士的发言中间有事要离开，杜邦先生也突然站起身来，跟我一起走了出来。

“管家，”我们一走进门厅他就说道，“不知道能不能叫人帮我换换脚上的纱布。它们现在搞得我不舒服极了，根本就听不进那些绅士们在说些什么了。”

我记得，我在请求肯顿小姐给予协助以后一自然是派人送去的口信一就把杜邦先生安置在弹子房里坐等护士的到来，正在这时第一男仆急匆匆地从楼梯上奔下来，面带痛苦的神情告诉我家父在楼上病倒了。

我匆忙朝二楼跑去，刚转过楼梯口，就看到了一幅奇怪的景象。在走廊的尽头，几乎就正在那扇大窗户前面，映着灰蒙蒙的光线和窗外的雨景，家父定格在一个姿势当中，就好像正在参加某种庄严的仪式一般。他单膝跪地，脑袋低垂，好像正在奋力推着面前那辆手推

车，而那辆小车不知何故竟顽固地纹丝不动。两位卧房的女仆表示尊敬地离开一段距离，面带敬畏的神情注视着他所做出的努力。我走到家父面前，把他紧抓在手推车边缘的手松开，扶着他在地毯上躺下来。他双目紧闭，面如死灰，前额上满是汗珠。我叫人前来帮忙，及时搬来了一辆带篷的轮椅，家父就被转移到了他自己的房间。

将家父安置在床上以后，我一时颇有些手足无措，不知道接下来该如何是好；因为家父正处在这种情况下，我就这么一走了之实在不合情理，但我又真是一点空余时间都匀不出来。正当我站在门口踌躇不决之际，肯顿小姐出现在了身旁，并且说道：“史蒂文斯先生，在目前这种情况下，我比您还稍微多那么点空余时间。如果您愿意的话，我可以代您照顾一下令尊。我会带梅雷迪思大夫上这儿来进行诊治，要是有什么要紧的情况我会通知您的。”

“谢谢您，肯顿小姐，”我说，然后我就离开了。

当我返回会客厅的时候，一位神职人员正在讲述柏林的儿童所遭受的苦难。我立刻忙着为客人们添茶倒咖啡。有几位绅士，我注意到，正在饮用烈酒；尽管有两位女士在场，有一两位绅士已经开始抽起烟来。我记得当我手持空茶壶离开会客室的时候，肯顿小姐叫住了我，说：“史蒂文斯先生，梅雷迪思大夫正准备离开了。”

她说这番话的时候，我看到那位大夫正在门厅里穿戴雨衣和帽子，于是我就走上前去，那把茶壶还在我手里拿着。大夫面带不悦地望着我。“令尊的状况不太乐观，”他说。“如果情况恶化，马上通知我。”

“是，先生。谢谢您，先生。”

“令尊高寿了，史蒂文斯？”

“七十有二了，先生。”

梅雷迪思大夫想了一会儿，然后又说：“如果情况恶化，务必马上通知我。”

我再度向大夫致谢，然后送他出去。

也正是在那天傍晚，晚餐即将开始前，我无意中听到了刘易斯先生和杜邦先生的谈话。当时我出于某个原因上楼来到杜邦先生的房间，在敲门前我习惯性地稍停了片刻，听一下门内的动静。您或许没有养成这种习惯，为了避免在某些极不适宜的时候敲门打搅了别人而

采取这种小小的预防措施，我却一直都有这种习惯，而且我敢担保这在我们许多同行当中也是非常普遍的做法。也就是说，我们这样做的背后并无什么不可告人的动机，就拿这次来说，我根本不是有意要去偷听他们讲话的。然而，也是事出偶然，当我把耳朵贴到杜邦先生的房门上时，正巧听到了刘易斯先生的说话声，虽然我不记得当时听到的确切字句了，可他讲话的语气引起了我的怀疑。这位美国绅士的声音听来仍旧一如既往地亲切而又和缓——自打他来到这里以后，这声音已经为他赢得了很多人的好感——可是这会子却又带上了某种绝不会弄错的鬼鬼祟祟的成分。正是因为这一点，再加上他正在杜邦先生的房内、应该正在跟这位至关重要的人物侃侃而谈的事实，使得我没有去敲门，反而继续听了下去。

达林顿府各间卧室的房门都是很厚实的，我是无论如何也听不清楚完整的谈话内容的；因此上，我现在也很难回忆得起当时听到的确切的语句，其实当天的稍晚时候我向爵爷汇报此事时，情况就已经是如此了。话虽如此，这并不等于我对当时房内正在发生的事情没有一个相当清楚的概念。事实上，那位美国绅士正在表明这样的观点，即杜邦先生受到了爵爷以及其他与会者的操纵；他们故意将邀请杜邦先生与会的时间推后，以便于其他人等在他不在场时先行讨论重大的议题；即便在他来到之后，也有人看到爵爷与几位最重要的代表举行了好几次私下的讨论，而没有邀请杜邦先生参加。然后刘易斯先生就开始打小报告，把他来到这里第一天的晚宴上爵爷和其他人说过的那些话讲给杜邦先生听。

“坦白说吧，先生，”我听到刘易斯先生这么说，“我因为他们对于贵国人民的态度而惊骇万分。他们实实在在地使用了‘野蛮’和‘可鄙’这样的词汇。事实上，几个小时之后我就把它们原原本本地记在了我的日记里。”

杜邦先生简短地说了句什么，我没听清，然后刘易斯先生又说道：“我就跟您说吧，先生，我真是惊骇万分。这样的词汇能用来形容仅仅几年前还肩并肩站在一起的盟友吗？”

现在我已经不能确定当时自己有没有去敲门了；考虑到我听到的内容那令人警醒的性质，我当时的判断应该还是撤退为宜。反正是并没有在门外逗留太久——正如事后不久我责无旁贷必须跟爵爷解释清楚的那样——没有听到更多的内容，以便可以据以判断杜邦先生听了刘易斯先生的这番话以后到底会持一种什么样的态度。

与此同时，家父的状况既没有好转，也没有恶化。据我的理解，他多数的时间都在昏睡，有几次我有点空余时间爬到那个小阁楼上去探望他的时候，他确实是沉睡不醒。我实际上一直都没有机会再跟他说话，直到他病情再次发作后的第二天傍晚。

那次我进去的时候，家父也在睡梦中。可是肯顿小姐留下来照看家父的那个卧房的女仆一看到我就马上站起来，开始摇晃家父的肩膀。

“蠢丫头！”我叫道。“你这是在干什么？”

“史蒂文斯先生交代过，如果您再来的话就叫醒他。”

“让他睡吧。他这个病就是累的。”

“他说过一定要把他叫醒，先生，”那姑娘道，又开始摇晃家父的肩膀。

家父睁开眼睛，在枕头上微微侧了一下头，看着我。

“希望父亲现在感觉好些了，”我说。

他继续盯着我看了一会儿，然后问我：“楼下一切尽在掌控中吧？”

“情况一直都瞬息万变。这才刚过六点钟，所以父亲也很可以想象此刻厨房里的气氛了。”

家父的脸上掠过一丝不耐烦。“但一切都尽在掌控之中吧？”他又问了一遍。

“是的，我敢说您对此可以尽管放心。我很高兴父亲感觉好些了。”

他有些慎重地慢慢把胳膊从被单底下抽出来，疲惫地盯着自己的手背。看了好长一段时间。

“我很高兴父亲现在感觉已经大好了，”我最后又说了一遍。
“现在我真的最好还是回去了。就像我说的，现在的情况真是瞬息万变。”

他又继续看了自己的手背一阵子。然后才缓缓地道：“真希望我对你来说是个好父亲。”

我轻轻一笑道：“真高兴您现在感觉好些了。”

“我为你感到骄傲。一个好儿子。希望我对你来说也是个好父亲。但我想我并不是。”

“恐怕我们现在真是忙得不可开交，不过我们可以明天早上找时间再聊。”

家父仍旧望着自己的双手，仿佛对它们略有些恼怒似的。

“真高兴您现在感觉好些了，”我又说了一遍，然后就告退了。

来到楼下，我发现厨房里几乎是一片混乱，而且总体来说，各级员工无不笼罩在一种极端紧张的气氛当中。不过，我很高兴地记得，到大约一个钟头以后的晚宴时间，就我的团队而言，展现出来的就唯有高效以及专业性的镇定自若了。

看到那座富丽堂皇的宴会厅高朋满座的场景，总是让人过目难忘，那天傍晚就是如此。当然了，略显美中不足的是那一排排鱼贯入场、清一色身着晚宴礼服的绅士们在数量上超过女性的代表太多，整体的氛围未免显得有些过于严峻；不过话又说回来了，当年餐桌上方悬挂的那两盏巨型的枝形吊灯还是以煤气为燃料的一整个大厅因此都笼罩在一片清浅而又柔和的光晕之中——不像电气化时代以后的灯光那样亮得刺眼。在会议期间那第二次也是最后一次晚宴上一大部分来宾预计第二天用过午餐后就将动身离开——在座的来宾已经卸去了那在前几天里显而易见的大部分矜持和拘谨。不仅是闲谈更加随心和大声，我们发现斟酒的频率也显著提升。从专业的角度来看，晚宴进行得可说是相当顺畅，并无任何明显的差池；宴会临近结束之时，爵爷起身向众位宾客致辞。

他首先向在座的所有来宾表示感谢，因为在前两天的讨论当中“虽不时有令人振奋的坦率陈词”，却也始终秉持友好的精神以及乐见“善”最终获胜的意愿。他在前两天中亲眼目睹的团结一致已经远远超出了他之预期，他确信，在次日上午举行的“总结”会上，与会者必将达成充分共识，承诺各自都将在瑞士即将举行的重要国际会议之前采取有效的行动。大约正是在这个节骨眼上一我不知道他是否事先就已计划好要这么做——爵爷开始缅怀起了他的故友卡尔—海因茨·布雷曼先生。这实在是个小小的不幸，这一直都是爵爷心念系之的一个话题，而且他一提起来就会滔滔不绝地说个没完。或许有一点也该说明，即爵爷从来就不是那种可以被称为天生演说家的人，所以没过多久，整个宴会厅就响起了坐立不安的嘁嘁喳喳声，这表明听众们已经渐渐失去了耐心。说实话，到了爵爷终于把话讲完，敦请诸位来宾全体起立为“欧洲的和平与正义”而干杯之时，那种嘈杂的程度——或许也是大家尽兴畅饮的结果——在我看来已经迹近于失礼了。

众人纷纷再次落座，闲谈重又开始启动之际，突然响起一阵颇有权威性的指节敲击桌面的声音，杜邦先生已经站了起来。立刻，室内全都安静了下来。这位显赫的绅士以近乎严厉的目光环视了餐桌周围的众人一眼。然后他说：“我希望我并没有僭越在座的某位绅士所肩负的职责，不过迄今为止我还没有听到任何人提议大家共同举杯感谢我们的主人，最可敬、最仁厚的达林顿勋爵。”现场响起一阵喃喃的赞许声。杜邦先生继续道：“在过去这几天的时间里，大家在这幢府第里讲过了很多令人感兴趣的事。很多非常重要的事。”他稍作沉吟，此刻的宴会厅里一片肃静。

“有很多言论，”他继续道，“非常含蓄甚或坦率地批评——这个措辞还不算是言过其实——批评了敝国的外交政策。”他再次稍作沉吟，神色相当严峻。你也许都会以为他动怒了。“在这两天当中，我已经几次听到对于欧洲当前异常复杂的情势所做的详尽而又睿智的分析。不过恕我直言，还没有一种分析对于法国为什么会对其邻国秉持这样的态度表现出真正的理解。然而，”——他伸出一根手指——“现在不是进行此类辩论的时候。事实上，在过去的这几天当中我一直都刻意地避免参与这类辩论，因为我来到这里主要是为了倾听的。现在请容许我告诉诸位，我在这里听到的不少意见都给我留下了深刻的印象。不过诸位也许要问了，这印象到底有多么深刻呢？”杜邦先生再度稍作沉吟，以一种近乎悠闲的态度挨个儿扫视了一圈所有注视着他的面孔。最后他才继续道：“先生们——还有女士们，请原谅——对此我已进行过反复的思考，我希望借此机会推心置腹地跟诸位交个底：尽

管对于如何解读欧洲目前的真实现状，我本人与在座的诸位之间仍然存在着分歧，尽管如此，对于大家在这次会议中所提出的要旨，我深为信服，先生们，既为其正义性又为其务实性而深深信服。”一阵既宽慰而又欢欣的喃喃低语传遍了餐桌周围，可是这时杜邦先生却稍稍提高了嗓音，压过这阵窃窃私语继续道：“我很高兴向在座的诸位做出保证，我保证竭尽个人的绵薄之力，努力促成法国政策的重心之改变，以期符合本次会议的多数意见。而且我将赶在瑞士会议之前及早地采取行动。”

宴会厅里响起了阵阵掌声，我看到爵爷跟大卫爵士交换了一个眼色。杜邦先生举起手来，不知道是表示接受还是阻止大家的掌声。

“不过在我接下来向我们的主人达林顿勋爵表示感谢之前，我还有件小事不吐不快，希望能在此一抒胸臆。诸位也许有人会说，在餐桌上把自己胸臆中的东西吐出来可是有些失礼之举。”这句话引来了热情的欢笑。“不过我在这类事情上一直都是直言不讳的。这就像一定要正式地、公开地向达林顿勋爵表示感激之情一样，是他将我们召集到这里，并使得目前这种团结一致、友好善意的精神成为可能的；同样，我也相信一定要公开地谴责任何跑到这儿来滥用主人的殷勤好客，一门心思只想着散布不满和猜疑的宵小之辈。这种人不但在社交场合令人厌恶，在我们现今的社会气候之下更是极端危险的。”他再次稍作沉吟，整个宴会厅里再次鸦雀无声。杜邦先生继续语气平静、从容不迫地道：“对于刘易斯先生我只有一事不明：他那令人憎恶的行径在多大程度上代表了美国当局的态度？女士们、先生们，那就请容我斗胆一猜吧，因为对于这样一位几天来已经充分地展现出其欺诈水准之高的绅士，我们是没办法指望他能给我们提供一个诚实的答案的。所以，我也就只能姑且一猜了。当然了，如果德国不再继续赔款，美国自然会很关心我们对其债务的偿付能力。不过在过去这半年当中，我也曾有机会跟不少位高权重的美国人士直接讨论过这个问题，依我看来，该国对这一问题的看法要远比他们这位在座的同胞所代表的观点高瞻远瞩得多。我们所有这些关心欧洲未来福祉的人尽可以放宽心，因为事实上刘易斯先生现在的影响力——我们该怎么表述呢？——已经是今非昔比了。您也许会觉得我这么丝毫不肯假以辞色未免过于不近人情，但事实上，女士们、先生们，我已经算得上是仁至义尽了。您瞧，我并没有把这位绅士一直以来对我说的那些话原样搬出来——关于在座的每一位。他所说的那些话，其技巧是如此拙劣低能，其态度是如此厚颜无耻，其内容是如此粗鄙下流，简直令人难以

置信。不过谴责的话已经说够了，该是我们表示感谢的时候了。那就请跟我一起，女士们、先生们，我们一起举杯敬达林顿勋爵。”

杜邦先生在讲这番话的过程中，一直都不曾朝刘易斯先生的方向看过一眼，也确实，大家在向爵爷敬酒致谢、再次落座后，目光也似乎全都刻意地避免朝那位美国绅士看去。一种令人难堪的沉默一度笼罩了宴会现场，然后刘易斯先生终于站起身来。他的脸上仍习惯性地堆满了亲切的笑容。

“喔，既然每个人都发表了讲话，我不妨也来说上两句，”他说道，听他的声音明显是已经喝得很不少了。“对于我们的法国朋友刚才的那一番无稽之谈，我没什么话好说。对那样的言论我根本就不屑于理会。有多少人都曾妄图将此谰言强加到我头上，我见得多了，但让我来告诉诸位吧，先生们，这也不过是枉费心机。枉费心机罢了。”刘易斯先生突然停住了话头，一时间似乎不知该如何接下去才好了。终于他又笑了笑，继续道：“如我所说的，我不会再在我们那位法国朋友身上浪费时间了。不过事有凑巧，我倒确实还有几句话想说。既然我们现在都这么坦诚相见了，我也就实话实说吧。你们在座的诸位先生，恕我直言，你们全都不过是一群幼稚的梦想家罢了。你们要是不这么一门心思地想着掺和影响全球的那些重大事务的话，你们其实还都挺有魅力的。就拿我们这位善良的东道主来说吧。他是何等样人呢？他是位绅士。这一点我相信在座的没有任何人会反对的。一位典型的英国绅士。正派，诚实，用心良苦。可是这位爵爷却是个外行。”他在这个字眼上面略作停顿，并且环顾了一下众人。“他是个外行，而如今的国际事务已经轮不到这些外行的绅士们插手了。这一点，你们这些欧洲人越早明白越好。诸位在座的为人正派、用心良苦的绅士大人们，让我问你们一句，你们知道你们周围的这个世界正在变成什么样子吗？你们可以出于你们那高贵的本性治国理政的日子已经一去不复返了。只不过当然啦，你们这些欧洲人似乎都还没有意识到这一点。像我们善良的主人这样的绅士仍旧相信，他们就该去瞎掺和那些他们根本就不懂的事务。这两天以来，在这儿说了多少蠢话和废话。用心良苦、天真幼稚的蠢话和废话。你们这些欧洲人需要专业人士来掌管你们的事务。你们如果仍旧执迷不悟，很快你们就要大难临头了。举杯吧，先生们。让我们一起举杯一敬专业精神。”

现场一阵惊愕，寂然无声，没有一个人动弹。刘易斯先生耸了耸肩膀，举起酒杯向所有人照了一圈，一饮而尽，坐了回去。达林顿勋爵几乎马上就站了起来。

“我本不希望，”爵爷道，“在我们这济济一堂的最后一个夜晚陷入无谓的争执当中，因为这是个欢庆胜利的时刻，大家本该好好享受一下的。不过正是出于对您这种观点的尊重，刘易斯先生，我感觉就更不应该把它当作某个街头怪人的演说那样置之不理了。让我这么说吧：您所谓的‘外行’，先生，我想在座的大多数人更愿意称之为‘荣誉’。”

这番话引来了一阵响亮的赞许声，夹杂着几句“听听，听听”的感叹声以及几声鼓掌和喝彩。

“更重要的是，先生，”爵爷继续道，“我相信我很清楚您所谓的‘专业精神’指的是什么。它指的无非是通过欺骗和操纵的手段来为所欲为。它指的无非是依照自己的贪欲和利益来排定轻重缓急，而绝非是为了看到善良与正义在世界上获得胜利。如果这就是您所谓的‘专业精神’，先生，我实在是有些嗤之以鼻，巴不得对它敬而远之呢。”

这一席话赢得了迄今为止最为热烈的赞许声，继之以热情而又持久的鼓掌和喝彩。我看到刘易斯先生冲着自己的酒杯微微一笑，萎靡不振地摇了摇头。也正是在这个时候，我觉察到第一男仆来到我身边，附耳对我悄声道：“肯顿小姐想跟您说句话，先生。她就在门外。”

我尽可能小心翼翼地悄悄退出，因为爵爷仍然站在那儿，正在发表进一步的看法。

肯顿小姐一脸忧色。“令尊的情况非常危急，史蒂文斯先生，”她说。“我已经派人去请梅雷迪思大夫了，不过据我所知他可能要稍微耽搁一会儿。”

我的面色想必是有些摸不着头脑，因为肯顿小姐又接着道：“史蒂文斯先生，他的情况真的非常不好。您最好是去看看他。”

“我只能抽出一点点时间。先生们随时都有可能离席前往吸烟室。”

“当然。不过您现在务必要去一趟，史蒂文斯先生，要不然事后您也许会追悔莫及的。”

肯顿小姐已经在头前领路了，我们急匆匆地穿过府第，朝家父那个小阁楼上的房间奔去。莫蒂默太太，我们的厨娘，正站在家父的床头，身上的围裙都没摘。

“哦，史蒂文斯先生，”我们一进来她就道，“他已经快不行了。”

确实，家父的脸色已经变成了一种暗红色，我还从没见过哪个活人有过这样的面色。我听见肯顿小姐在我身后轻声说：“他的脉搏非常弱了。”我凝视了家父一会儿，轻轻摸了一下他的额头，然后就把手抽了回来。

“依我看，”莫蒂默太太道，“他是中风了。我这辈子亲眼看到过两次中风，我想他是中风了。”说着，她就哭了起来。我注意到她身上散发出浓烈的煎炸和烧烤的气味。我转过身对肯顿小姐道：

“这太让人难过了。可是，我现在必须回到楼下去了。”

“当然，史蒂文斯先生。大夫到的时候我会告诉您的。或者出现任何变故的时候。”

“谢谢您，肯顿小姐。”

我匆忙来到楼下，及时地赶上了绅士们正开始移师到吸烟室。几位男仆一看到我也似乎松了一口气，我马上示意他们各就各位。

不管在我暂时离开期间宴会厅里到底发生过什么，反正现在的客人当中洋溢着的是种货真价实的欢庆气氛。在整个吸烟室里，绅士们三五成群地站在一起，全都有说有笑，相互拍着对方的肩膀。刘易斯先生，据我判断，已经告退回自己的房间去了。我穿梭于诸位宾客之间，托盘上摆着一个装满波尔图葡萄酒的酒壶。我刚为一位绅士斟了一杯，一个声音在我背后说：“啊，史蒂文斯，你对鱼儿也感兴趣的，你说过。”

我转身，发现是小卡迪纳尔先生正对我笑逐颜开。我也微微一笑，说：“鱼儿，先生？”

“我小时候曾在鱼缸里养过各个品种的热带鱼。简直可以称得上个小水族馆了。我说，史蒂文斯，你没事吧？”

我又笑了笑。“我挺好的，谢谢您，先生。”

“你说得很是，我真该春天的时候再到这儿来一趟。那时候的达林顿府肯定美极了。上次我来这儿的时候，我想也是在冬天。我说，史蒂文斯，你确定你没事吗？”

“我好端端的，谢谢您，先生。”

“不是身体有什么不舒服吧？”

“绝对不是，先生。我暂且告退了。”

我又继续为他们几位客人斟酒。我背后爆发出一阵响亮的笑声，我听到那位比利时神职人员兴奋地嚷道：“这可真是异端邪说！绝对是异端邪说！”然后自己又放声大笑。我感觉有什么东西碰了一下我的胳膊肘，转身发现是达林顿勋爵。

“史蒂文斯，你没事吧？”

“没事，先生。我很好。”

“你看起来好像哭了。”

我笑了笑，掏出手帕迅速地擦了擦脸。“非常抱歉，先生。是劳累了一天，太紧张了。”

“是呀，确实够累的。”

有人跟爵爷讲话，他转过身去作答。我正准备继续四处走动侍酒的时候，透过敞开的房门看到了肯顿小姐，她正朝我点头示意。我就穿过人群朝门口走去，可是还没到门口，杜邦先生就拉了一下我的胳膊。

“管家，”他说，“不知道你能不能帮我找些干净的绷带过来。我的脚又受不了了。”

“好的，先生。”

我继续朝门口走去的时候，意识到杜邦先生就跟在我后头。我转过身对他说：“我会过来找您的，先生，一拿到绷带就马上过来。”

“请快一点，管家。真有点疼。”

“好的，先生。非常抱歉，先生。”

肯顿小姐仍然站在门厅里我第一次看到她的地方。我一出来，她就默不作声地朝楼梯走去，奇怪的是举动中又没有一点着急的意思。然后她才转过身来对我说：“史蒂文斯先生，我深感遗憾。令尊在大约四分钟以前过世了。”

“我知道了。”

她看了看她的手，然后又抬眼看着我的脸。“史蒂文斯先生，我深感遗憾，”她说。然后又补充道：“真希望我能说些什么。”

“不必了，肯顿小姐。”

“梅雷迪思大夫还没有到。”她低下头好一阵子，忍不住迸发出一声啜泣。不过她几乎马上就控制住了自己，声音沉着地问：“您想上去看看他吗？”

“我眼下实在是太忙了，肯顿小姐。过一会儿再说吧。”

“这样的话，史蒂文斯先生，您允许我为他合上眼睛吗？”

“如果您肯的话，我将感激不尽，肯顿小姐。”

她开始走上楼梯，但我又叫住她，跟她说：“肯顿小姐，请别把我此刻不肯马上上楼去为家父送终看作不近人情之举。您知道，我相信家父也会希望我现在履行好自己的职责。”

“当然，史蒂文斯先生。”

“否则的话，我感觉，反而会让他感到失望。”

“当然，史蒂文斯先生。”

我转过身，那装着波尔图葡萄酒的酒壶仍旧在我的托盘里，重又回到了吸烟室。在那个相对狭小的房间里，就像是出现了一片由黑色的晚宴礼服、灰白的头发和雪茄烟雾组成的森林。我在这帮绅士们当中缓步前进，寻找需要添酒的酒杯。杜邦先生拍了拍我的肩膀说：

“管家，我的事情你关照过没有？”

“我很抱歉，先生，可是眼下还没办法立刻为您提供帮助。”

“你这是什么意思，管家？你们的医疗用品都用光了吗？”

“实际的情况是，先生，有位大夫正往这儿赶。”

“啊，太好了！你已经叫了大夫来了。”

“是的，先生。”

“好，很好。”

杜邦先生重新回到他跟旁人的谈话中，我则继续在房间里转悠了一段时间。其间，那位德国伯爵夫人突然从男人堆里冒了出来，我还没来得及为她斟酒，她就自己拿起酒壶给自己倒了些波尔图。

“你得替我夸奖一下你们的厨娘，史蒂文斯，”她说。

“当然，夫人。谢谢您，夫人。”

“还有你和你的团队也表现得非常出色。”

“非常感谢您，夫人。”

“在晚宴进行当中，史蒂文斯，我一度还当真以为你至少一下子变成了三个人呢，”她说得开心地笑了起来。

我马上也报以一笑，说：“我很高兴能为您效劳，夫人。”

一会儿以后，我看到小卡迪纳尔先生就在不远处，还是独自一人站在那里，我猛然想到，这位年轻的绅士置身于这么一大群显赫的人物当中可能会有些畏畏缩缩的。反正他手里的酒杯也已经空了，我于是朝他走了过去。他看到我过来显得非常高兴，立刻把酒杯朝前一递。

“我想，你热爱大自然是件极好的事，史蒂文斯，”他在我给他斟酒的时候说道。“我敢说，达林顿勋爵有你这么一位行家里手帮他督促园丁的工作，也真是一大福气。”

“您说什么，先生？”

“大自然呀，史蒂文斯。那天我们不是一直都在谈论大自然的神奇奥妙吗？我非常同意你的看法，面对我们周围的这些伟大的奇迹，我们都未免太过沾沾自喜了。”

“是的，先生。”

“我的意思是说，你看看我们整天谈论的都是些什么。合约啦，疆界啦，赔款啦，占领啦。而大自然母亲却一直都以她美好的方式生生不息。这么想问题的话确实挺可笑的，你说是不是？”

“是的，确实是这样，先生。”

“我有时在想啊，如果万能的上帝将我们都创造成为一呃一某种植物什么的，是不是会更好一些？你知道，全都牢牢地扎根在土壤当中。这么一来，像战争啊，疆界啊之类的这些鬼话岂不从一开始就根本不会出现了吗？”

这位年轻的绅士似乎觉得这是个很有趣儿的想法。他笑了笑，又想了想，又笑了笑。我也和他一起笑了笑。然后他用胳膊肘轻轻捅了捅我说：“你能想象得出吗，史蒂文斯？”然后又笑了起来。

“是的，先生，”我也笑着说，“那将成为一个最为奇特的替代性选择。”

“可是我们仍旧需要像你这样的伙计来回地传递口信、端茶倒水什么的。要不然，我们又怎么能办成任何一件事呢？你能想象得出吗，史蒂文斯？我们全都扎根于土壤中？你想象一下！”

正当这时，一个男仆出现在我身后。“肯顿小姐想跟您说句话，先生，”他说。

我跟卡迪纳尔先生告了罪，朝门口走去。我注意到杜邦先生显然一直就守在门边，看到我走近了，他就问我：“管家，大夫到了吗？”

“我正要出去看看，先生。我马上就回来。”

“我真是有点疼。”

“我很抱歉，先生。大夫应该很快就到了。”

这一次杜邦先生就干脆跟着我走了出去。肯顿小姐又一次站在门厅里候着。

“史蒂文斯先生，”她说，“梅雷迪思大夫已经到了，现在到楼上去。”

她是特意压低了声音说的，可是我身后的杜邦先生却马上大声叫道：“啊，太好啦！”

我转身对他道：“那就请您随我来吧，先生。”

我把他领进弹子房，他在一把皮椅子上坐下来开始脱鞋子的时候，我赶紧把壁炉里的火拨旺。

“很抱歉这里实在有点冷，先生。大夫马上就会过来了。”

“谢谢你，管家。你做得很到位。”

肯顿小姐仍在门厅里等着我，我们俩默不作声地一起穿过整个府第。来到父亲的房间，发现梅雷迪思大夫正在做着一些记录，莫蒂默太太哭得很伤心。围裙还在她身上，显然她一直就是拿它来擦眼泪的；结果弄得她脸上尽是一道道油渍，她那副模样简直就像是在参加一场假扮黑人的滑稽说唱秀。我原本以为房间里肯定会弥漫着死亡的气息，但是拜莫蒂默太太一或者是她的围裙所赐，房间里居然一股子烧烤味儿。

梅雷迪思大夫起身对我说：“请节哀顺变，史蒂文斯。令尊发作的是一次严重的中风。他应该没有遭受太多的痛苦，这也算是不幸中的万幸。他这个病你无论做什么都已经无能为力了。”

“谢谢您，先生。”

“我这就走了。你会安排好一切后事吧？”

“是的，先生。不过如果方便的话，楼下有一位最为尊贵的绅士还需要您的诊治。”

“紧急吗？”

“他表达了迫切需要见到您的愿望，先生。”

我领梅雷迪思大夫下去，带他来到弹子房，然后立刻又返回了吸烟室，那里的气氛如果说有什么不同的话，就是已经变得越发欢快友好了。

当然了，绝不应该由我来暗示，我已经配得上跟我同辈的比如说马歇尔或是莱恩先生一样，跻身于“伟大”的管家之列了——虽然也不应讳言，确有很多人或许是出于谬赏之意，过于慷慨地倾向于如此认为。请容我澄清一下，当我说一九二三年的那次会议，尤其是那个夜晚在我的职业发展进程中构成了一个转折点的时候，我主要是以我自己那远为卑微的标准来衡量的。即便如此，如果您能考虑到那一晚我所承受的那些不可预料的压力，倘若我斗胆认为我在面对一切意外情况时，也许的确表现出了至少是某种程度上的“尊严”素质——这种素质只有像马歇尔先生，或者实事求是地说，像家父这样的管家才能具备的，您或许不会认为我是过于自欺了吧？的确，我又何必要惺惺作态呢？那一晚诚然会有种种令人悲痛的联想，但每忆及此，我发现一种巨大的成就感总会油然而生。

年十月德国政府请求美国总统威尔逊协调停战时，宣称接受威尔逊提出的十四点精神作为公平合约的基础。但协约国要求“德国赔偿一切从陆海空入侵协约国时对人民及其财产所造成的损失”。条约是一九一九年春巴黎和会时起草的，当时的决策者为“四大领袖”：英国首相劳合·乔治、法国总理克列孟梭、美国总统威尔逊和意大利总理奥兰多，前三人事实上握有决定权。战败国根本无权过问条约内容，其他协约国也只起配角作用。条约规定，德国的人口和领土均减少百分之十，德国的海外殖民地全部被瓜分。条约起草时，很难计算德国人赔偿损失的精确数字，尤其是对法国和比利时的赔款。到一九二一年，有一专门机构估定德国民众的损失总额为三百三十亿美元。尽管当时的经济学家认为筹集此项巨款势必扰乱国际金融秩序，协约国仍坚持要德国赔款。条约还规定，如果德国拖欠款项，协约国可以采取惩罚措施。四大领袖，尤其是克列孟梭，希望确保德国永远不会对世界造成军事威胁。和约包括许多这样的细则条款，比如德军人数不得超过十万，撤销总参谋部；禁止制造装甲车、坦克、潜水艇、飞机和毒气；只指定少量工厂生产武器弹药；拆除莱茵河以东五十公里内的一切堡垒和工事。《凡尔赛和约》遭到德国人的强烈反对，他们认为合约是强加给他们的，这与十四点精神背道而驰，认为合约要他们做出破坏德国经济的难以忍受的牺牲。《凡尔赛和约》在被批准后的几年间做出了不少有利于德国的修改。许多历史学家认为苛刻的合约以及后来对其条款的不认真执行，实际上为二十世纪三十年代德国军国主义的兴起铺平了道路。

第二天一傍晚

莫蒂默池塘，多塞特郡

看来，对于“怎样才算得上一个‘伟大’的管家”这个问题，似乎还有一个很大的维度迄今为止我还没有好好地思考过。对于这样一个如此心念系之，尤其是这些年来我已经反复思考过的问题，意识到这一点，不得不说真让我颇为忐忑不安。现在想来，我当初对于海斯协会有关其会员资格之规定的某些方面嗤之以鼻，或许是有些操之过急了。请先允许我解释清楚，我并无意收回自己对于“尊严”及其与“伟大”之间关键联系的个人观点。不过，我不免对于海斯协会的另一项规定做了些更为审慎的思考——亦即其公开承认加入协会的先决条件之一是“申请者须服务于显赫门庭”。我现在的感觉跟当初并无二致，仍旧认为这表现了该协会的一种不假思索的势利心态。不过，我现在想到，我所特别反对的或许只是他们对于何为“显赫门庭”的过时理解，而非其中所表达的一般原则。确实，在进一步对此问题进行一番思考以后，我相信，“伟大”的先决条件是“须服务于显赫门庭”这种说法本身也许确有其道理——只要对于“显赫”的理解比海斯协会的认识更加深入即可。

事实上，只要将我对于“显赫门庭”可能的诠释与海斯协会对它的理解做一比较，则我相信就能极为鲜明地体现出我们这一代与上一代管家在价值观上的根本差异。我这么说，不仅是想请您注意到这样一个事实，即我们这一辈对于雇主到底是地产贵族还是“经商致富”的态度已经没有那么势利了。我想说的是一我并不认为这种说法有失公允——我们是远比上一代更加理想主义的一代。我们的老辈更加关心的或许是雇主是不是有封号的贵族，或者是否出身于“旧”族，而我们更在意的则是雇主的道德地位。我这么说的意思并不是指我们一心瞩目于雇主的私人行为，我的意思是我们更加热切地希望效力于那些——可以这么说——其作为正在促进人类进步的绅士，这一追求在上一代看来想必是颇不寻常的。打个比方说，我们宁肯效力于像乔治·凯特里奇先生这样尽管出身卑微，却为大英帝国未来的福祉做出过无可争辩之卓越贡献的绅士，而不愿意侍奉那些虽有显赫的贵族出身，却只会把光阴虚掷在俱乐部和高尔夫球场上的老爷们。

当然，在实际中，很多出身于最高贵家族的绅士一直都有着致力于缓解当前面临之重大难题的传统，所以乍看之下，我们这代人的抱

负可能表现得与我们的先辈也并无多大差异。不过我敢断言，在态度上还是有根本之不同的，这种不同不仅表现在业内的同行相互间热衷于传达的种种话题，更反映在我们这一代中的众多翘楚人物在职位去留方面做出的选择上。做出这类决定所考虑的已不仅仅是所得薪水的高低、手下员工的多寡或者雇主门庭的显赫与否了；对我们这代人而言，我们职业声望的高低最根本地取决于我们雇主道德价值的高下上，我感觉这不失为一种公允的说法。

我相信，借助形象化的比喻方式可以最为鲜明地突出这两代人之间的不同。可以这么说，家父那一代管家更倾向于将世界看成是一架梯子——王室成员、公爵以及出身最古老世家的勋爵们居于顶端位置，那些“新贵”阶层等而次之，以此类推，直到降到一个基准点，基准点之下的层级就全由财富的多寡甚或有无来确定了。任何一位有雄心有抱负的管家只管竭尽全力往这架梯子顶上爬就是了，总的说来，爬得越高，其职业声望也就越大。这当然也正是海斯协会那套“显赫门庭”的观念所体现出来的价值观，而迟至一九二九年该协会还在大言不惭地公开发表此类声明，这一事实本身就已清楚不过地说明为什么其灭亡是不可避免的，甚至早就该到来的了。因为到了那个时候，这样的想法已经完全跟不上我们这个行业中涌现出来的佼佼者们的观念了。对于我们这代人而言，这个世界已经不再是一架梯子，而更像是一个轮子了，我相信这种说法还是相当准确的。或许我该进一步做些解释。

在我的印象中，是我们这代人最先认识到了前几代人全都忽略了一个事实：即世界上的那些重大的决定事实上并不是在公共议事厅里，或者在会期只有寥寥数日又完全置于公众和新闻界关注之下的某个国际会议上做出的。更多的情况下，那些关键性的决定反倒是在国内那些隐秘而又幽静的豪宅里经过讨论、进行权衡后做出的。在众目睽睽之下伴以无比盛大的排场和典礼所发生的一切，经常不过是执行在这样的豪宅内部经过几周甚或几个月的时间达成的决议，或只是对其进行官方的认可。因此在我们看来，这世界就是个轮子，以这些豪门巨宅为轴心而转动，由他们做出的那些重大决策向外辐射到所有围着他们转的人，不论穷人还是富人。我们所有这些拥有职业抱负的人，莫不竭尽所能以尽量靠近这个轴心为志向。因为正如我说，我们是充满理想主义的一代人，对我们来说，问题并不是简单地在多大程度上发挥出了我之所能，而是以我之所能达至了何种结果；我们每个人都怀抱着这样的渴望，愿为创造一个更加美好的世界略尽绵薄，做

出贡献；我们也都认识到，身在我们这一行，要想做到这一点，最可靠的途径就是效命于那些肩负着当代文明重任的伟大的士绅。

当然了，我这么说不过是最为宽泛地概而论之，我乐于承认，我们这一代中有太多人根本就没耐心去做这样深入的思考。反而言之，我敢肯定家父那一代当中也有很多人出于本能，已经意识到了他们的工作的这一“道德”维度。不过总的来说，我相信我这些概括还是准确无误的，而且我所描述的这种“理想主义的”动机至少在我个人的职业生涯中，确实起到了至关重要的作用。在我职业生涯的早期，我曾动不动就更换雇主——就是因为意识到那些环境全都无法给我带来持久的满足感——总算是天道酬勤，一直到有机会效命于达林顿勋爵我才终于安顿下来。

说也奇怪，我是直到今天才头一次从这个角度来考虑问题的；的确，当初我们在仆役大厅里围炉夜话的时候，曾花了那么多时间来讨论“伟大”的本质，像格雷厄姆先生这样杰出的管家和我都从来没有考虑到在这个问题当中还有这样的一整个维度。尽管我不会收回之前我对于“尊严”的特质所发表的任何观点，但我必须承认对于这一论题应该附加一个补充条款，即无论一位管家已在多大程度上具备了这样的素质，如果他未能成功地找到一个适当的通道来将他的成就发挥出来，他也很难期望同行们能够认可他的“伟大”。当然，我们也注意到像马歇尔和莱恩先生这样的人物，他们都只效命于那些其道德地位毫无争议的绅士——韦克林勋爵、坎伯利勋爵、伦纳德·格雷爵士——你不免会得到这样的印象，即他们是不会屈身侍奉那些成色不足的绅士的。确实，这个问题你越想就越明显：隶属于一个真正的显赫门庭确是达至“伟大”的先决条件。一个“伟大的”管家肯定只能是那种人：他在指点自己多年的服务生涯时能够自豪地说，他已经将他的全副才能用以服务一位伟大的绅士了——而通过这样的一位绅士，他也等于是服务了全人类。

我说过，这些年来我居然从来没有从这样的角度考虑过这个问题；不过话又说回来了，或许正是难得地出门进行这样一次旅行，才促使我对于这个我本以为早就彻彻底底思考清楚了的题目产生了如此出乎意料的新鲜观点。而且大约一个钟头之前发生的一个小状况想必也起到了推波助澜的作用，促使我沿着这样的思路来思考问题——我得承认，这个小状况还颇使我担了不小的心。

我在极为宜人的天气中心情愉快地开了一上午的车，然后又在一个乡村小酒馆里享用了一顿丰盛的午餐。但在刚驶入多塞特郡不久，

我就觉察到从汽车引擎那儿发出了一种过热的气味。一想到我可能对主人的福特车造成了某种损害，我当然吓得不敢，赶快就把车停了下来。

我发现自己正处在一条狭窄的小路当中，小路的两侧全都被繁茂的林木遮了个严实，很难看清周围的情况。往前也看不远，因为那条小路在前方大约二十码的地方就拐了个大弯。我意识到我不能在这儿长时间停留，因为如果前方有车转过那个弯道，弄不好就会跟我主人的福特车撞个正着。于是我又重新发动了引擎，发觉这次的气味已经没有先前那么强烈了，这才稍稍安了一下心。

我知道最好的办法是找一家修车行，或者是找一家绅士的大宅，宅里极有可能找到能看得出毛病出在哪里的司机。可是那条小路继续蜿蜒了不短的距离，道路两旁高大的树篱也一直都不曾间断，很大程度上挡住了我的视线，所以尽管我经过了几户人家的大门，有的院内明显是有车道的，我却一直都没办法瞥见里面的宅第。我又开了约莫半英里远，那恼人的气味已经是越来越浓了，这才终于摆脱了那条小路，开上了一段乡村的主干道路。我看到前方的不远处，没错，就在我的左侧，隐约浮现出一幢高大的维多利亚时代的宅第，宅前有一大片草坪，还有一条显然是由旧的马车道改造而成的汽车道。当我驶近那幢大宅时，我就更是大受鼓舞了，因为主建筑附设的车库大门敞开着，里面赫然停着一辆宾利汽车。

宅第的大门也敞开着，我于是将福特车沿着车道开了一小段，下车朝宅第的后门走去。开门的是个只穿了件衬衣的男人，也没有系领带，不过我在向他打听府上的司机时，他开心地回答说我“一下子就中了头彩”。听我描述了一下问题以后，他大步流星地来到福特车前，打开引擎盖只查看了几秒钟的时间就跟我说：“水，您哪。您的散热器里得加点水啦。”他貌似对这整个状况感到非常好笑，不过又很热心帮忙；他回到屋里去，不一会就提着一壶水和一个漏斗回来了。他在把散热器灌满的过程中，头低在引擎上方，开始亲切地跟我闲聊起来，知道我正驾车在这一区域旅行以后，他向我推荐了当地的一处美景，是个距此不过半英里远的池塘。

趁着这个工夫，我也好好观察了一下这幢大宅；宅子的高度要大于其宽度，有四层楼高，正立面几乎爬满了常春藤，一路都爬到了顶端的山墙上。可是透过窗户往里看去，却发现至少有一半的房间里都蒙着防尘布。一等那个人给散热器加满了水，重新盖好引擎盖，我就跟他说起了这件事。

“真是可惜啊，”他说。“这是幢很招人喜欢的老房子。实际情况是上校打算把它给卖了。他现在也是用不着这么大的房子了。”

我忍不住向他打听这里一共雇了多少人，听他说就只有他一个人，再有就是一个厨子每天傍晚过来做做饭的时候，我也并没有感到吃惊。看起来他是身兼管家、贴身男仆、司机和清洁工于一身了。他在大战期间曾是上校的勤务兵，他解释道：德军入侵比利时的时候他跟上校正在那里，协约国联军登陆时他跟上校也躬逢其盛。之后他又仔细地打量了我一番，这才说：

“现在我才明白了。一开始我还没看出来，不过现在我弄明白了。您就是他们说的那种顶尖级别的大管家。是那种名门贵族的大宅门里出来的。”

我跟他说这话也不算离谱以后，他又继续道：

“现在我算是明白了。一时间我还没看出来，您瞧，因为您说起话来十足就像个绅士。而且您还开着这么辆漂亮的古董车，”——他朝那辆福特做了个手势——“一开始我还想，哟，来了位货真价实的贵族老爷子。这就对啦，您哪。真是上流社会的做派，我是说。我还从来都没真正领教过呢，您瞧。我不过就是个退了伍的老勤务兵。”

然后他又问我受雇于哪户人家，我跟他说了以后，他侧着头，脸上露出好奇的神情。

“达林顿府，”他自语道。“达林顿府。肯定是个上流社会的人家，就连在下这样的白痴听着都觉得耳熟。达林顿府。等等，您说的不会就是达林顿勋爵的那个达林顿府吧？”

“以前确实是达林顿勋爵的府第，直到三年前爵爷逝世，”我告诉他。“如今是约翰·法拉戴先生的住处了，他是位美国绅士。”

“您在那样的地方工作，那就肯定是顶尖级别的大管家无疑啦。像您这样的如今剩下来的可不多了吧，呃？”然后他在问的时候语气明显有了变化。“您是说，您当真曾为那位达林顿勋爵工作过？”

他再次细细地打量了我一番。我说：

“哦，不是，我是受雇于约翰·法拉戴先生的，就是那位从达林顿家族手里买下那幢宅第的美国绅士。”

“喔，那您就不大可能认识那位达林顿勋爵了。我只是很好奇他到底什么样子。他是个什么样的人。”

我告诉那人我得上路了，郑重地感谢了他的热心帮助。他可真是个可亲可爱的小伙子，不厌其烦地引导我把车倒出大门，分别前，他俯下身再次推荐我去参观一下当地的那个池塘，反复告诉我该怎么到那儿去。

“那是个很美的小地方，”他补充道。“要是错过了你肯定会后悔的。事实上，上校这会子就正在那儿钓鱼呢。”

福特车确乎又回到了最佳状态，既然那个池塘离我预定的线路并不远，只需稍微绕一下，我就决定从善如流，采纳那位勤务兵的建议。他的指示听起来原本挺清楚的，可是我一且离开了主干道，打算照他的指示往那儿开，我就发现自己在那些狭窄而又曲里拐弯的小路上迷了路，那些小路就跟之前我第一次闻到那令人心焦的气味时的路段非常相似。有时候道路两旁的树木是如此浓密，几乎完全把阳光给遮住了，于是我的眼睛就不得不努力地去适应明亮的阳光与阴暗的浓荫之间的强烈反差。不过在经过一番搜寻之后，我终于还是找到了那个指向“莫蒂默池塘”的路标，于是在半个多钟头前，我顺利抵达了这个景点。

此刻我觉得自己真该深深地感激那位勤务兵，因为除了帮我修好了车以外，他还让我发现了这么一个万分迷人的所在，要是没有他，我是绝不可能找到这儿来的。池塘并不大一周长估计不过四分之一英里左右一只要站在任何一个突起的位置，它的全景你都可以尽收眼底。这里弥漫着一种异常静谧的气氛。池塘周遭遍植树木，其密度恰好能为池畔提供宜人的荫蔽，这里那里一丛丛高高的芦苇和香蒲钻出水面，也打破了那静止不动的天光云影。我脚上的鞋子颇不便于我绕着池畔走上一圈一从我现在坐着的位置就能看到池畔的小径逐渐没入了一片片深深的泥泞中一不过我要说，一见之下这正是此地风景的魅力所在，我真想踩着泥泞走上那么一圈。只有在想到这样一番探险可能导致的灾难性后果，想到这么一来我身上这套旅行服装就要毁于一旦了，我这才按捺住这一时的冲动，退而求其次地满足于坐在这条长凳上静静地欣赏。半个钟头过去了，我就这么坐在这里，静观池畔各个位置静坐垂钓者的进展。从我坐的那个位置，我大约能看到十来位钓客，不过那强烈的日光再加上低垂的枝柯形成的树荫却让我无法看清楚他们当中的任何一位，于是我也不得不放弃之前期望着不妨一试的那个小游戏：猜测哪位钓客有可能是刚刚帮了我一个大忙的那幢宅第的主人一那位退役的上校。

威克菲尔德先生和太太是对美国夫妇，已经在英国一据我所知，是在肯特郡的某个地方一定居了有二十年了。因为跟法拉戴先生在波士顿的社交圈里有些共同的熟人，他们有一天就造访了达林顿府，待到用过午餐，在下午茶之前离开。那个时候法拉戴先生来到达林顿府也不过几周的时间，他对这处房产的热情正是最为高涨的时候；于是威克菲尔德夫妇来访的大部分时间都花在参观这处房产上，由我的雇主亲自带领上上下下看了一个遍，连那些罩着防尘布的区域都没放过，实在是显得没这个必要。不过，威克菲尔德夫妇对于四处探访表现出来的兴致至少跟法拉戴先生一样高涨，我在府里各处忙我工作的时候，经常会听到从他们刚刚到达的地方传来的各式各样美国人所特有的赞叹和惊呼声。法拉戴先生是带领客人从顶楼开始参观的，等他们来到底层逐一参观那些富丽堂皇的厅堂时，他已经像是坐上了一飞冲天的飞机，陶陶然、飘飘然了，不厌其烦地向客人指出檐口和窗架上那精雕细琢的细部，手舞足蹈地描述“那些英国的爵爷”在每个房间都曾做过些什么。我当然不会有意去偷听，不过从听到的一句半句当中也就知道他们谈话的大意了，我不禁为我的雇主知识面之广博而感到吃惊，其中除了偶有不尽不实之处以外，足以透露出他对英式传统和习惯的深深迷恋。值得注意的还有，威克菲尔德夫妇——尤其是威克菲尔德太太——对我国的传统其实也所知甚详，从他们的言谈话语当中可以得知，他们自己也拥有一幢颇为富丽堂皇的英式旧宅。

在那次参观探访活动的某个阶段——我从门厅那儿穿过，本以为宾主一行已经到户外参观庭院去了一发现威克菲尔德太太并没有出去，正在仔细地检视通往餐厅的那道石质的拱形门廊。我从她身边经过时，轻声道了声“请原谅，夫人”，她转过头道：

“哦，史蒂文斯，也许你能够告诉我。这座拱廊看起来像是十七世纪的，不过它难道不是相当晚近的时候才添造的吗？也许就是达林顿勋爵的时代修建的？”

“有这个可能，夫人。”

“非常美。不过它有可能是仿造时期的一个产物，其实只有几年的历史。难道不是这样吗？”

“我不能确定，夫人，不过确实有此可能。”

接着，威克菲尔德太太刻意压低嗓音道：“不过请跟我说说，史蒂文斯，这位达林顿勋爵到底是什么样子的呢？你想必肯定是为他工作过的。”

“没有，夫人，我并没有。”

“哦，我还以为你有过呢。奇怪了，我怎么会有那样的想法呢。”

威克菲尔德太太转回头去继续端详那座拱廊，把手放在那上面道：“如此说来我们是没办法确定了。不过，在我看来它还是像一件仿造品。非常精妙，但是仿造的。”

本来我可能很快就会把这次短暂的交谈完全忘掉的；然而，在威克菲尔德夫妇离开后，我把下午茶给法拉戴先生端到会客厅里的时候，却注意到他显得颇为心事重重。经过开始的一段沉默后，他说：

“你知道吗，史蒂文斯，威克菲尔德太太对这幢宅子的好感并没有我原本料想的那般强烈。”

“是吗，先生？”

“事实上，她似乎认为我夸大了这座庄园的背景和世系。认为所有那些可以追溯到几世纪前的建筑特色都是我编造出来的。”

“真的吗，先生？”

“她不断地断言每一样东西这也是‘仿造的’那也是‘仿造的’。她甚至认为连你都是‘仿造的’，史蒂文斯。”

“真的吗，先生？”

“真的，史蒂文斯。我跟她说过你是货真价实的，一位货真价实的老牌英国管家。跟她说你在这幢老宅里已经工作了三十多年，效命

于一位货真价实的英国爵爷。可是威克菲尔德太太在这一点上都敢于反驳我。事实上，她反驳我的时候显得可有把握了。”

“是吗，先生？”

“威克菲尔德太太确信，史蒂文斯，你是在被我雇定以后才到这儿来工作的。事实上，她给人的印象是这都是你亲口告诉她的。你应该能够想象，这让我显得十足像个傻瓜。”

“这真是太令人遗憾了，先生。”

“我的意思是说，史蒂文斯，这确是一幢名副其实、历史悠久的英国府第，难道不是吗？我就是为了这个才花钱买下了的。你是一位名副其实的旧式英国管家，并不是什么小男仆假装冒充的。你是货真价实的，不是吗？我想要的是真货，我得到的难道不是真货吗？”

“我敢说您得到的确实是真货，先生。”

“那么你能跟我解释一下威克菲尔德太太到底在说些什么吗？对我来说这可真是个不解之谜。”

“关于我的职业，我确实有可能对这位夫人造成了一点点误导，先生。如果由此而导致了您的难堪，我要向您郑重地道歉。”

“我得说，这确实让我很难堪。那些人现在肯定把我当成吹牛大王和骗子手了。可是，你说你有可能对她造成了‘一点点误导’，你这话到底是什么意思？”

“我深表歉意，先生。我原不知道我有可能让您这么难堪的。”

“真该死，史蒂文斯，你为什么要跟她编这么个故事呢？”

我权衡了一下当时的情势，而后说道：“我深表歉意，先生。不过我这么做是出于本国传统礼俗的考虑。”

“你到底在说些什么呀，伙计？”

“我的意思是说，先生，在英国，一个雇员随便议论他前任的雇主是不符合礼俗的行为。”

“史蒂文斯，你不希望辜负前任雇主对你的信任，这很好。但你至于离谱到空口白牙地否认在我之前就再没有为别的人工作过吗？”

“如果您要这样说的话，这确实显得有些离谱了，先生。不过对于雇员来说，给人这样的印象的确经常被认为是值得称许的。就让我这么来说吧，先生，这就有点像是婚姻方面的习惯性做法。如果一位离过婚的女士陪同她的第二任丈夫抛头露面，通常认为还是压根不要提及她的前一段婚姻更为合适。在我们这一行里，也有类似的习惯性礼俗。”

“好吧，要是我能早点知道你们有这些讲究就好了，”我的雇主说着靠回到椅背上去。“这让我看起来活像是个傻瓜。”

当然了，现如今很多人对于达林顿勋爵都发表过很多无知的谬论，也许您会以为我是对自己跟爵爷的关系感到难堪或是羞耻，而正是为此才会做出了那样的举动。那就让我在此明确地予以澄清，事实绝非如此。现在人们听到的有关爵爷的传闻，其绝大多数都纯属无稽之谈，几乎没有任何事实的根据。在我看来，如果将我那古怪的举动解释为希望借此避免再次听到有关爵爷的无稽之谈，这确实倒是颇为讲得通的；也就是说，在这两次事件当中我都选择以善意的谎言予以应对，无非是为了避免不愉快的事情发生。我越想越是觉得这的确像是一个非常合理的解释；因为确实，这些日子以来最让我感到恼怒的就莫过于反复听到这种无知的谬论了。让我这么来说吧，达林顿勋爵是一位具有崇高道德地位的绅士——这种高度足以使那些传播有关他的无知谬论的绝大多数人都相形见绌——而且我非常乐意担保，他这种高度的道德感一直到他逝世都未曾有过丝毫的松懈。如果有人以为我会因为自己跟这样一位绅士的关系而感到后悔的话，那可绝对是大谬不然。事实上，您应该可以理解，在过去那么长的岁月中我都得以朝夕侍奉、亲炙爵爷，就等于是最为接近了这个世界运行的轴心，而这正是我这样的人所梦寐以求的最佳契机。我为达林顿勋爵整整服务了三十五年；如果我说在这些年间，我是真正意义上的“隶属于显赫门庭”的话，这肯定是有丝毫疑义的。回顾我迄今为止的职业生涯，我最大的满足即来自那段岁月所获得的成就，今天，对于自己居然能获得如此之殊荣，我体验到的唯有最为深切的自豪与感恩。

第三天一上午

汤顿市，萨默塞特郡

昨夜我投宿于萨默塞特郡汤顿城外不远处的一家小旅店，名叫“马车与马”。这是位于路边的一幢茅草屋顶的小村舍，在最后一线夕阳当中我来到这里的时候，从福特车内望去，那小旅店显得异常迷人。店老板领我走上一段木质楼梯，来到个小房间里，屋内陈设相当简朴却非常适用。他问我是否用过了晚餐，我就请他送一份三明治到我房间里，结果证明我这个选择虽说简单无比，却非常令人满意。不过随着夜幕的降临，我在房间里开始有点坐立不安了，最后我决定还是到楼下的酒吧里去尝一点当地的苹果酒。

总共有五六位顾客，全都聚在吧台周围——从外表看来都是干各种农活儿的一房间的其余部分还是空荡荡的。我向店老板要了一啤酒杯的苹果酒，在距离吧台有段距离的一张桌子边坐下来，打算放松一下，并且整理一下这一天来的思绪。不过没过多久我就意识到，我的出现还是干扰了那几位本地人，他们似乎觉得有必要表现一下好客之道。每次他们的闲谈稍有停歇，他们其中就总有一位朝我坐的方向偷瞄上一眼，仿佛是一心想找个机会跟我攀谈两句。最后，终于有个人提高嗓门对我说：

“看来您是要在楼上住一宿了，先生。”

我跟他说正是如此，说话的那位表示怀疑地摇了摇头道：“您在楼上恐怕是睡不了几个钟头的，先生。除非是您喜欢老鲍勃弄出来的动静，”——他指了指店老板——“砰砰地在这底下一直闹到夜半三更。天刚破晓您就会被他老婆冲他吼叫的声音给吵醒的。”

尽管店老板一叠声地抗议，还是引来周围人等的哄堂大笑。

“确实如此吗？”我说。说话间，我突然想到——最近有好多次在法拉戴先生面前也有同样的念头浮起——这时候我应该回应一句俏皮话之类的。的确，那帮当地人此时都颇有礼貌地保持着沉默，等着我下面的言辞。我于是搜索枯肠，最后终于道：

“堪称本地的鸡鸣变奏曲喽，无疑该是。”

起先，沉默仍在继续，仿佛那些当地人以为我还有进一步的发挥。不过在注意到我脸上那逗人发笑的表情时，这才爆发出一阵笑声，但笑得总有点困惑不解的意思。完了以后他们又重新回到之前的闲谈当中，我也再没有跟他们有什么言谈往还，直到不久之后互道了一声晚安。

我刚想到那句俏皮话的时候，还颇曾感觉沾沾自喜，而且我得承认，眼看着它的效果居然不过如此，我还是稍稍有些失望的。我尤其感到失望之处，我想，正在于最近的这几个月来我颇花了不少时间特用来提升我在这一领域的技巧。也就是说，最近我一直竭尽所能将这一技巧添加到我的职业锦囊当中，以便于可以满有把握地充分满足法拉戴先生在打趣调侃方面对我所抱的期望。

比如说，近来我只要有一点空余时间，就会回到房间里去听无线电广播——像是碰到法拉戴先生晚间外出的时候。我经常收听的一个节目叫作《每周两次或更多》，实际上每周播出三次，基本上是由两位主持人针对读者来信提出的各种话题进行幽默的评论。我一直都在认真地研究这个节目，因为它表现出来的谐趣，其品位一直都是最高的，而且在我看来，其基调也跟法拉戴先生可能期待我表现出来的风趣相去不远。从这个节目得到启发以后，我已经设计出了一个简单的演练方案，我争取每天至少实际操练一次；只要一有空闲，我就尝试以当时所处的即时环境为素材，构想出三句俏皮话来。或者，作为这同一种演练的变通方式，也可能会尝试着以过去一个钟头内发生的事件构想出三句俏皮话来。

如此一来，您可能也就会理解对于昨天晚上的那句俏皮话，我所感到的失望之情了。起先，我以为它不太成功的原因可能是我说得不够清楚。可是在我已经回房休息以后，我才想到我有可能已经冒犯了这些当地人。毕竟，我那句俏皮话很容易被理解为我是在暗示老板娘就像一只鸡——当时我可是绝无此意的。这个想法在我尽力入睡的过程中继续不断地折磨着我，我甚至都有些想在今天一早跟店老板正式道歉了。可是他在为我端来早餐时表现得非常愉快，情绪上没有任何的保留，最后我也就决定略过不提了。

不过这个小小的插曲极好地说明了那些脱口而出的俏皮话有可能带来的风险。由于谐趣的本质就在于当下的急智反应，你在顺应情势把一句俏皮话抛出去之前是不会有时间去充分评估它可能引发的各种后果的，你要是没有事先就掌握了必要的技巧和经验，就有极大的风险会脱口说出各种不甚得体的话语来。只要假以时间和勤学苦练，没

有理由认定我在这个领域就成不了行家里手，不过既然存在这样的风险，我已经决定现在最好还是暂时不要急着去履行法拉戴先生期望于我的这一责任，等我多加练习、熟谙此道以后再去表现不迟。

也许，我昨晚本该在我眼下正愉快地享用一杯早茶的这家店里住宿的。因为的确，外面的店招上大字写着，店里不仅提供“茶点、小吃和蛋糕”，还有“干净、安静而又舒适的客房”。这家店就位于汤顿的主街之上，离市集广场咫尺之遥，是一幢有些沉陷的建筑，外观以深色的木质桁梁为特色。眼下我就坐在它那宽敞的茶室里，墙面是橡木镶板，茶桌的数量我猜就是同时招待二十几位客人都丝毫不会显得拥挤。两位快活的年轻姑娘站在柜台后面负责招待顾客，柜台上陈列着琳琅满目的各色糕点。总而言之，这是个享用早茶的绝佳场所，可是愿意光顾此地的汤顿居民却出奇地稀少。眼下，店内的顾客除了我以外就只有两位上了年纪的女士，并肩坐在我对面靠墙的一张桌子边；还有一位男士——可能是位退休的农夫——坐在一扇巨大的凸窗旁边。我看不清他的长相，因为明亮的晨光此刻将他照得只剩下了一个剪影。不过我能看得出他正在仔细地阅读手里的报纸，时不时地抬头望一下窗外人行道上的过路人。他的这一举止起先让我以为他是在等什么人，不过后来看来他不过是想跟路经此处的熟人们打个招呼。

我自己几乎隐藏在茶室最里面的靠墙位置，不过即便隔着整个房间的距离，我依然能清楚地看到户外阳光朗照的街道，还能辨认得出对面人行道上的路标，上面指出了几个附近的目的地。其中一个目的地是默斯登村。您或许也会觉得“默斯登”这个地方听来耳熟，我昨天在道路交通图上第一次看到这个地方时心里也是一动。实际上，我必须承认，我甚至一度想稍稍调整一下既定的路线，绕点路前去亲眼看看那个村庄。萨默塞特郡的默斯登曾是吉芬公司的所在地，在过去，人们都是向默斯登发送订单，订购吉芬公司生产的抛光用深色蜡

烛的，该产品是“切成薄片后与上光蜡粉以手工混制而成”。在很长一段时间里，吉芬的产品绝对是市面上最好的银器上光剂，一直到战前不久，市场上出现了新式化工替代品以后，对这一优质产品的需求才开始衰落。

我记得，吉芬银器上光剂是二十年代初问世的，而且我能肯定，我并非唯一一个将这一产品的出现与我们业内心态上的转变紧密联系在一起的人——那一转变将为银器清洁上光的工作推到了至为重要的中心位置，而且总体说来直到今天仍是如此。这一重心的转移，我认为，就像这一时期其他众多的转变一样，是一种代际间的变革；正是在那些年间，我们这一代管家已经“长大成人”，尤其是像马歇尔先生这样的人物，在使银器上光成为核心要务方面扮演了关键性的角色。当然这并不是说为银器清洁上光的工作——尤其是那些会摆上餐桌的银制器皿——在过去并没有得到严肃的对待。但如果说，比如家父那一代管家并没有把这项工作看得有如此重要，这应该不算是失公允的；有如下事实可资证明：在当时，大户人家的管家极少有人亲自监管银器清洁上光的工作，大都认为交给像是副管家这样的下属去督管也就足够了，只不过时不时地检查一下而已。大家公认是马歇尔先生首度全面认识到了银器的重要意义——亦即，阖府上下再也没有其他任何物件会像餐桌上的银器那般受到外人如此深入的仔细审视，由是，银器也就起到了衡量一户人家整体水准的公共指数的作用。马歇尔先生是第一位因为将沙勒维尔府的银器抛光到前此无法想象的程度，使得来访的淑女士绅为之而心醉神迷的人物。势所必然，全国上下的管家们在各自雇主的压力之下，很快也就将全副精力集中在银器的清洁上光这一问题之上了。我记得，很快也就有好几位管家异军突起，每一位都宣称自己发现了可以超过马歇尔先生的妙方——这种妙方他们又无不装模作样地当作独得之秘概不外传，就如同那些独守祖传食谱秘方的法国名厨一般。可是我确信——在当时我就这么认为——像是杰克·内伯斯之辈所卖弄的那些煞有介事而又神秘兮兮的上光步骤对于最终的结果是极少甚至根本就不会有任何作用的。在我看来，这项工作并无任何神秘可言：只要你使用上好的上光剂，只要你加以严格的督责即可。吉芬曾是当时所有独具慧眼的管家们的共同选择，只要使用得法，你就无须担心自家的银器会比任何人家的有丝毫逊色。

里宾特洛甫先生估计还要一个多钟头才能到，爵爷于是就建议先带客人参观一下达林顿府——这个策略曾帮助不少精神紧张的客人放松下来。不过我在继续忙我的工作的时候，多次听到哈利法克斯勋爵在府里不同的地方不断地表达着他对于当晚那次会晤的疑虑之情，达林顿勋爵对他的反复安抚也终归是徒劳。可是又过了一段时间，我突然听到哈利法克斯勋爵惊呼道：“我的天哪，达林顿，尊府的这些银器真是太赏心悦目了。”当时我听到这样的赞誉自然是非常高兴，不过这个小插曲所带来的真正令人满意的结果却是两三天后才出现的，达林顿勋爵特意对我说：“顺便说一句，史蒂文斯，咱们的银器那天晚上给哈利法克斯勋爵留下了极为深刻的美好印象，使得他整个的心绪都为之而一变。”这是一我记得很清楚——爵爷的原话，所以那可绝非是我个人的想入非非：银器所保持的良好状态对于缓和那晚哈利法克斯勋爵和里宾特洛甫先生之间的紧张关系，的确做出了虽说微不足道却又是意义重大的贡献。

话已至此，关于里宾特洛甫先生的情况我再多说几句或许也不为过。当然，现在大家普遍接受的看法是里宾特洛甫先生是个大骗子手：那些年间希特勒的计划就是尽可能长时间地欺骗英国，隐瞒其真实意图，而里宾特洛甫先生在我们国家唯一的使命即具体地实施这一骗术。如我所说，这是大家普遍持有的观点，我并不想在此提出异议。然而，令人着恼的是听到大家如今说起这件事来的那种口气，就仿佛他们从未有一时一刻上过里宾特洛甫先生的当似的一仿佛就只有达林顿勋爵一个人相信他是位高尚的绅士，只有爵爷一个人跟他建立过工作上的关系似的。事实是，在整个的三十年代，里宾特洛甫先生在所有那些最为显赫的宅第中都被视为一位备受尊敬的人物，甚至是

再怎么讲，这类组织对于本国政治生活的核心而言也根本就是无足轻重的。您应该能够理解，达林顿勋爵是那种只会致力于那些真正

的核心事务的绅士，而且多年以来他所努力罗致的也都是那些对于这类令人厌恶的边缘组织避之唯恐不及、距离十万八千里的人士。他们不但备受尊敬，而且都是对英国的政治生活具有真正影响力的人物：政治家、外交家、军方人士和神职人员。的确，这其中就有犹太人，单单这一个事实就足以说明，有关爵爷的大多数传闻是多么地荒诞无稽。

我们这一行中也有一些人认为无论为什么样的雇主服务都是没什么实质性的不同的；认为我们这代人中盛行的那种理想主义——即我们这些做管家的应力争去为那些能够促进人类福祉的伟大的绅士们服务的这种观念——只不过是唱高调，并无现实的基础。当然，显而易见，散布这种怀疑主义论调的个人，结果无一例外地证明自己只是我们这一行中的平庸之辈——他们知道自己根本就不具备跃居显要位置的能力，所以只能力图将尽可能多的同行拉低到他们自己的水平——没有人愿意认真对待这样的观点。即便如此，如果能够从自己的职业生涯中举出一些实例，以清楚地烛照出他们是何等大谬不然，这仍旧是令人感到满意的赏心乐事。当然了，我们所追求的是为自己的雇主提供全面而又持久的服务，其价值绝不该被降低至几个特定的实例——比如上述跟哈利法克斯勋爵有关的这件事。但我要说的是，正是这一类的实例，透过时间的流逝愈加清晰地彰显出一个无可辩驳的事实；即此人曾经有幸身处于那些重大事件至为枢纽的位置，实践了自己的职业操守。而且此人或许有权利体验到一种满足感，这是那些安于为平庸的雇主服务之辈所永远无缘体味的一这种满足感就在于，它让你有理由可以说，我所付出的努力，不管多么微不足道，毕竟对于历史的进程做出了属于自己的贡献。

不过也许一个人不该如此频繁地回望过去。毕竟，摆在我面前的仍有要求我尽心服务的好多个年头。法拉戴先生不仅是位最好的雇主，他还是位美国绅士，这肯定是我责无旁贷的义务，向他充分展示英国最高的服务水准。既然如此，将自己的注意力聚焦于当下就是至

为重要的了；必须谨防因为过去所取得的一点点成就而滋生任何自满的情绪。因为不得不承认，在过去的几个月中，达林顿府内的现状已经显得不那么尽如人意了。近来已经出现了几次小小的疏失，这其中就包括去年四月发生的那个跟银器有关的小插曲。万幸的是当时法拉戴先生并没有客人在场，不过即便如此，那对我而言也是极端难堪的一刻。

事情发生在某天上午的早餐时间，在他那方面，法拉戴先生一要么是他宅心仁厚，不忍苛责，要么就是因为他是美国人，所以对那次差错的程度缺乏认识——自始至终未曾有过只字的埋怨。他在餐桌前就座以后，只是拿起一把餐叉细看了一下，用指尖碰了碰叉尖，然后就将注意力转移到晨报的头版新闻上去了。他整个的姿态都是以一种漫不经心的方式做出的，不过当然了，我已经全都看在了眼里，马上快步走上前去，拿走了那样碍眼的东西。可能因为我心里不安，动作太快了一点，因为法拉戴先生略为有些吃惊，嘟囔了一句：“啊，史蒂文斯。”

我拿着那把餐叉快步走出房间，没作任何耽搁马上又拿了一把令人满意的餐叉回来。我朝餐桌走去的时候——法拉戴先生显然已经全神贯注于他的报纸当中——我也想到我可以悄没声地把餐叉放在桌布上，不要打搅了我的主人读报。可是，我已经想到了法拉戴先生有可能是为了不让我感到难堪才佯装浑然不觉的，如果我这么偷偷摸摸地把餐叉换回去，恐怕会被主人误解为对于自己的疏失我非但不痛心疾首，反而自鸣得意——或者更糟，是试图予以遮掩了。正是为此，我于是决定我应该带有某种强调的意味把餐叉放回到桌上才算合适，结果是又让主人吃了一惊，他抬眼一看，又嘟囔了一句：“啊，史蒂文斯。”

类似这样的疏失，在过去的这几个月里，自然是对我身为管家的自尊心的一种伤害，不过话又说回来了，我认为这只是人手短缺造成的，并没有理由相信它们是更加严重的问题的先兆。并不是说人手短缺的问题无足轻重；不过只要肯顿小姐当真愿意重返达林顿府，我相信这样的小小疏漏也就自然会成为过去。当然了，我们必须谨记，肯顿小姐在来信上并没有愿意复职的明确表示——顺便提一下，昨晚在关灯之前我又在房内重读了一遍。事实上，我必须承认确实有这种可能，即我出于一厢情愿的工作上的考虑，而过于夸大了她那方面有此意愿的蛛丝马迹。因为我必须承认，昨晚我不无惊讶地发现，还真的很难明确指出她来信当中有任何一段清楚明白地表示出了她想回来工作的愿望。

不过话又说回来了，现在也不值当地再在这样的问题上煞费苦心地去思忖揣测，因为很可能在四十八个钟头之内我就能够跟肯顿小姐当面进行晤谈了。不过我还是得承认，昨天晚上我躺在黑暗当中，听着楼上传来的店老板和老板娘洗洗涮涮的声响，我还是颇花了不少的时间，在我脑子里反复地琢磨肯顿小姐信中的字句。

第三天一傍晚

莫斯科姆村，近塔维斯托克，德文郡

我觉得也许有必要再回到爵爷对待犹太人的这个问题上多说几句，既然排犹主义的这整个问题，我意识到，近来已经变得如此敏感。尤其是，让我在此澄清一下外界有关达林顿府绝不雇用犹太人的传闻。既然这一指控直接就落在我本人的管辖范围，我也就能有绝对的权威予以批驳了。在我服侍爵爷的这全部的岁月当中，我的雇员里面一直都有很多的犹太人，而且我要再补充一句的是，他们从来都没有因为其种族的缘故而受到任何不同的对待。你真是猜不出这些荒唐无稽的指控到底所为何来一除非，这是非常荒谬可笑的，它们全都源自三十年代初期那短暂的几个星期里发生的几件完全无足轻重的小事，在那段时间里卡罗琳·巴尼特太太曾对爵爷拥有过某种非同寻常的影响力。

巴尼特太太是查尔斯·巴尼特先生的遗孀，当时四十开外一位非常健美端庄，有人也会说是光彩照人、魅力四射的女士。她拥有聪颖无比、令人敬畏有加的盛誉，在当年，你经常能听说她是如何在宴会上就当今某个重大问题将这位或是那位饱学之士羞辱得无地自容的传闻。在一九三二年的大半个夏季里，她曾是达林顿府的常客，经常跟爵爷一谈就是几个钟头，就重大的社会或者政治问题深入地交换意见。我记得，也正是这位巴尼特太太，曾带领爵爷数度深入伦敦东区最贫穷的地段，进行“有向导引领的视察工作”，其间，爵爷曾亲自实地访问了那些年间很多身陷赤贫境地的人家。这也就是说，巴尼特太太极有可能在促使爵爷越来越关心我们国家的贫困问题上做出过重要的贡献，如此说来，她对于爵爷的影响也不能说全都是负面的。不过当然了，她是奥斯瓦尔德·莫斯利爵士领导的“黑衫党”组织的成员，而爵爷与奥斯瓦尔德爵士仅有的几次接触也就在那年夏天的几个星期之内。我猜想，应该就是在这短短的几周里发生在达林顿府里的几桩完全不具有典型意义的事件，给那些荒唐无稽的指控提供了完全站不住脚的所谓依据。

我将其称为“事件”，但其中有一些根本就不值一提。比如说，我记得在一次晚宴上听到他们提到某一份报纸，爵爷对此的反应是：“哦，你们说的是那份犹太宣传单啊。”同样还是在那段时期里另有一次，我记得他指示我不要再给某个定期上门募捐的当地慈善组织捐

款，因为其管理委员会“或多或少都是犹太人组成的”。我之所以记得这些确切的表达，是因为当时乍听之下我真是大为惊讶，爵爷此前可是从未对于犹太民族表露过任何的敌意。

再后来，当然就是终于出了那档子事。有天下午爵爷把我叫到他的书房里，起先只是一些大而化之的闲谈，问问我府里的情况是否一切正常，然后他就说：

“最近我反反复复思考良久，史蒂文斯。思考良久。我已经得出了结论。我们达林顿府里不能雇用犹太员工。”

“先生？”

“这是为了我们府里着想，史蒂文斯。是为了来我们这里做客的客人的利益着想。我已经就此做过认真的调查，史蒂文斯，我现在就是要让你知道我的结论。”

“很好，先生。”

“告诉我，史蒂文斯，目前我们的员工当中就有几位，对吧？犹太人，我是说。”

“我相信目前我们的员工当中有两名是属于这个类别的，先生。”

“啊。”爵爷沉吟了半晌，凝视着窗外。“当然，你必须让他们离开。”

“您说什么，先生？”

“这非常令人遗憾，史蒂文斯，可我们别无选择。必须考虑到我的客人们的安全与康乐。我可以向你保证，对此问题我已做过认真的调查，而且彻彻底底地考虑清楚了。这完全是出于我们最大利益的考虑。”

这其中涉及的两位员工，事实上都是卧房的女仆。所以，如果不事先将此情况告知肯顿小姐就采取任何行动的话，那将是极为不妥的，于是我决定当天傍晚去她的起坐间里喝可可的时候就跟她说一声。对于每天工作结束以后去她的起坐间里碰个面的这种安排，或许应该稍作说明。应该说，这种安排完全是事务性的一虽说时不时地，我们也会讨论一些非正式的话题。我们安排这种会面的理由非常简单：我们发现我们各自的公务经常都过于繁忙，经常是一连好几天我们连交换一些最基本的信息的机会都没有。我们认识到这种情况会严

重地危及正常工作的平稳运转，而最直接有效的补救办法莫过于在一天工作结束以后，在肯顿小姐的起坐间里不受打扰地待上个一刻钟左右的时间。我必须重申的是，这些会面主要都是工作性质的；也就是说，打个比方，我们可能会商量即将举行的某一社交活动的具体计划，或者讨论某位新近招募的员工的适应情况。

总之，言归正传，您应该可以理解，考虑到要告诉肯顿小姐我即将解雇她手下的两位女仆，我内心也难免会有些波澜起伏。实事求是地说，这两位女仆一直以来都是非常令人满意的优秀雇员——既然近来犹太人的问题已经变得如此敏感，我不如索性把话挑明了一出于本意，我是完全反对将她们解雇的。尽管如此，我在这一问题上的职责又是非常明确的，而且我也看得很清楚，即便是我不负责任地将我个人的质疑和盘托出，也是完全于事无补的。这是个艰巨的任务，可是正因为如此，就尤其要求我要颇有尊严地予以完成。也正是为此，当天傍晚在我们的日常交谈即将结束的时候，我才把这件事提了出来，而且是以尽可能简明扼要和就事论事的态度提出的，我具体是这样说的：

“明天上午十点半，我将在我的餐具室里跟这两位雇员谈一下。如果届时您能差她们过来一趟的话，肯顿小姐，我将感激不尽。至于您事先是否要将我会跟她们谈的内容知会她们，就交由您全权决定吧。”

话已至此，肯顿小姐像是全然无言以对了。我于是继续道：“那好，肯顿小姐，感谢您的可可。我想我也该回房休息了。明天又是繁忙的一天。”

在这个时候，肯顿小姐终于开口说话了：“史蒂文斯先生，我简直不相信自己的耳朵。鲁思和萨拉在我手底下已经工作了有六年多了。我完全信任她们，她们也的确信任我。她们在达林顿府里的工作非常出色。”

“我相信这都是事实，肯顿小姐。可是，我们决不能让私人情感渗透进我们的判断中来。好了，我现在真的要跟您道声晚安了……”

“史蒂文斯先生，我非常气愤，你居然可以坐在那儿轻轻松松地说出刚才那番话，就仿佛你不过是在跟我讨论家用食品的订货似的。我实在是无法相信。你说鲁思和萨拉要被解雇，就因为她们是犹太人？”

“肯顿小姐，我刚刚已经把全部的实情跟您解释过了。爵爷已经做出了决定，你我是没有任何可以争辩的余地的。”

“你难道就没有想过，史蒂文斯先生，以这样的理由解雇鲁思和萨拉根本就是一错的吗？我不会容忍这样的事情发生。我不会在居然发生这种事情的宅第中继续工作下去了。”

“肯顿小姐，我请求您不要这么激动，并请您以与您的职位相称的态度规范您的言行。这是一桩简单明了的事务。如果爵爷希望终止这两份特定的雇用合同的话，那么别人谁都没有资格说三道四。”

“我警告你，史蒂文斯先生，如果你明天把我的两位姑娘给解雇了的话，我也跟着一起走。”

“肯顿小姐，我很惊讶于您居然做出这样的反应。我肯定不需要提醒您我们的职业责任不应以自己的癖好和情感为出发点，而应遵从我们雇主的意愿。”

“我要告诉你的是，史蒂文斯先生，你如果明天解雇了我的两位姑娘，那将是大错特错的，那将是莫大的罪恶，我决不会继续在这样的宅第中工作下去了。”

“肯顿小姐，请容我向您提个忠告，您所处的地位还不足以使您做出如此趾高气扬的决断。事实上，现今的世界是个异常复杂而又危机四伏的所在。有很多事情，比如说有关犹太民族的本质这样的问题，都不是处在你我这样地位的人能够理解的。然而爵爷，我冒昧说一句，肯定比我们更有资格判定怎么做才是最好的。好了，肯顿小姐，我真的必须告退了。再次感谢您的可可。明天上午十点半。请让那两名相关的雇员过来见我。”

第二天上午，从那两位女仆踏进我餐具室的那一刻看来，肯顿小姐已经跟她们说过了，因为她们俩都是抽抽搭搭地进来的。我尽可能简明扼要地将情况向她们解释了一下，特别强调了她们的工作一直都是非常令人满意的，因此肯定会拿到评价很高的推荐信。据我的记忆，她们俩自始至终都没说过任何值得注意的话，那次面谈最多也就持续了三四分钟的时间，她们就像来的时候一样，抽抽搭搭地离开了。

自从解雇了那两位女仆以后，肯顿小姐一连好多天对我的态度都极其冷淡。确切说来，有时对我甚至相当粗鲁，而且还是当着其他员工的面。尽管我们仍旧保持着每天傍晚碰个头、喝杯可有的习惯，会

面的时间却变得异常短促，而且气氛也很不友好。事情都过去半个月了，她的态度仍然没有缓和的迹象，我想您也应该能够理解，我也开始有些不耐烦了。于是在我们某次碰头一起喝可可的时候，我故意语带讽刺地跟她说：

“肯顿小姐，我还以为您这会儿应该已经递上辞呈来了呢，”说完我轻轻一笑。我想，我当时是希望她的态度能够终于和缓下来，做出某种和解的回应之类的，如此一来，我们就能把这整件事彻底抛到一边去了。可是肯顿小姐却只是目光严厉地看着我说：

“我仍旧一如既往，很想把辞呈递上去，史蒂文斯先生。只是因为我这段时间实在太忙，没有时间实际着手这件事。”

我得承认，她这番话还当真让我担心了好一阵子，唯恐她的这个威胁是当真的。不过随着时间一周周地过去，显然她并没有离开达林顿府的打算，而且随着我们之间的气氛逐渐趋向和缓，我想我也开始时不时地提起她曾经威胁要辞职的这件事来取笑她。比如说，如果碰上我们正在讨论府里即将举行的某项重大的社交活动，我就会故意找补一句：“也就是说，肯顿小姐，那得假设您届时还会跟我们在一起。”即便是在事情已经过去了好几个月以后，这样的取笑仍会让肯顿小姐一下子就默不作声了——虽说到了这个阶段，我想这更多的是出于尴尬而非恼怒。

最后，当然了，这件事基本上也就逐渐被淡忘了。不过我记得这件事最后一次又被提起，是在那两位女仆被辞退的一年多以后。

有一天下午我在会客厅为达林顿勋爵奉上茶点的时候，是爵爷首先旧事重提的。那个时候，卡罗琳·巴尼特太太对爵爷拥有巨大影响的时期已经过去了一的确，那位夫人已经完全不再是达林顿府的座上宾了。还有一点值得指出的是，爵爷到了那时也已经认识到“黑衫党”那丑陋的真面目，跟该组织中断了所有的联系。

“哦，史蒂文斯，”他对我道。“我一直都想再跟你谈谈。关于去年的那件事。就是那两位犹太女仆。你还记得吧？”

“当然，先生。”

“我想，现在也没办法找到她们的去向了吧，是不是？我当初的处理方式是错的，所以我总想能为她们受到的错待做一点补偿。”

“我一定去追查一下这件事，先生。不过时至今日，我一点都没有把握是否还有可能查明她们的去向。”

“你就尽力而为吧。当初的做法是错的。”

我猜想我跟爵爷的这番交谈肯顿小姐应该是有兴趣知道的，而且我也认为只有把这件事告诉她才是唯一正确的做法——即使冒着再次把她激怒的风险。却不料，在那个雾蒙蒙的下午，我在凉亭里碰到她跟她说起这件事的时候，竟产生了某些意想不到的结果。

“我刚才还一直在想呢，肯顿小姐。现在想来感觉还是挺滑稽的，可是您知道，就在一年前的这个时候，您还一直执意打算要辞职来着呢。一想起来我就觉得挺好玩儿的。”我说完呵呵一笑，可是我身后的肯顿小姐却默不作声。等我终于回头去看她的时候，发现她正透过玻璃，怔怔地望着窗外铺天盖地的浓雾。

“您可能没有想到，史蒂文斯先生，”她终于说道，“我曾经多么认真地考虑过要离开这里。发生的那件事对我的冲击太大了。我如果还有一丝一毫值得让人尊敬的地方，我敢说老早就已经离开达林顿府了。”她沉吟片刻，我把目光转向外面远处的白杨树。然后她用倦怠的口气继续道：“那是怯懦，史蒂文斯先生。完完全全就是怯懦。我能到哪儿去呢？我没有家人。只有一位姨妈。我很爱她，可如果跟她住在一起的话，我没有一天不会感觉我整个的一生都被蹉跎掉了。当然，我也的确曾安慰过自己，我很快就能找到一个新的职位。可是我太害怕了，史蒂文斯先生。每次我一想到要离开这里，我眼前

就会浮现出我孤零零流落在外的情景，而周围没有一个认识我、关心我的人。您瞧，我所有的高尚原则总共也就值这么多。我真是为自己感到羞愧难当。可我就是离不开这儿，史蒂文斯先生，我就是下不了一走了之的决心。”

肯顿小姐再次停了下来，像是深陷在思绪当中。于是我想这倒是个好机会，就尽可能精确地把之前我和达林顿勋爵之间的那番对话复述了一遍。转述完以后，我又加了一句：

“事已至此，覆水难收，不过能听到爵爷如此毫不含糊地宣称当初那件事完全是个可怕的误会，至少让人心下大为宽慰。我只是觉得您应该愿意听到这个消息，肯顿小姐，因为我记得您当时为了这件事是跟我一样深感苦恼和难过的。”

“不好意思，史蒂文斯先生，”我身后的肯顿小姐以一种全新的声音说道，就仿佛她刚从梦中被惊醒一样，“我真是搞不懂你了。”我转过身来面向她的时候，她继续道：“我记得，你当时认为让鲁思和萨拉卷铺盖走人才是唯一正确而又正当的做法。对于这件事你当时根本就是兴高采烈的。”

“肯顿小姐，您这种说法实在是既不正确又不公道。那整个事件曾引起我极大的忧虑，的确的确是万分的忧虑。在这幢宅子里发生这样的事情，那绝非是我乐于看到的。”

“那为什么，史蒂文斯先生，你为什么当时不这样跟我说呢？”

我笑了笑，可是一时间竟也无言以对。还没等我想出应对之词，肯顿小姐已经把手里的针线活放下来道：

“你有没有意识到，史蒂文斯先生，如果你去年就肯跟我分享你的感受的话，那对我的意义有多么重大？你明知道我那两个姑娘被解雇的时候，我是多么五内俱焚。你有没有意识到那会对我有多大的帮助？为什么，史蒂文斯先生，为什么，为什么，为什么你总是要去假装呢？”

对于我们的谈话这突然间匪夷所思的转向，我又笑了笑。“说真的，肯顿小姐，”我说，“我不是很确定能明白您的意思。假装？真是的，我为什么要……”

“我因为鲁思和萨拉不得不离开我们而痛苦万分。而令我感觉更加痛苦的是我当时以为自己是完全孤立无援的。”

“说真的，肯顿小姐……”我端起那个我用来放使用过的瓷器的托盘。“对那样的解雇我自然是极不赞同的。我还以为那是不言自明的。”

她没再说什么，离开前我回头看了她一眼。她再次怔怔地望着窗外的景色，但到了这个时候，凉亭里面已经差不多完全暗了下来，我能看到的，就只是暗淡和空茫的背景映衬下的她的侧影。我向她告了个退，就走出了凉亭。

由于回忆两位犹太雇员遭到解雇的那一事件，连带地也让我想起另一件事，我想可以被称为是那整个事件的一个有些奇怪的必然结果：就是那个叫丽萨的女仆的到来。也就是说，我们不得不找人替代那两位被解雇的女仆，而这位丽萨就成为其中的一位。

这个年轻女人是带着一封最为可疑的推荐信前来应征那个空缺的，任何一位有点经验的管家从中都能看出，她离开前一个职位的时候是蒙受着某种嫌疑的。更有甚者，肯顿小姐和我在面试的时候发现，显然她在任何一个工作岗位上最长都没有干够一个月的时间。总之一句话，她整个的态度和作风在我看来都极不适合在达林顿府供职。然而，令我吃惊的是，对这个姑娘的面试结束以后，肯顿小姐却开始坚持我们应该雇用她。“我在这个姑娘身上看到了极大的潜力，”面对我的反对她继续道。“我会将她置于我的直接监管之下，我会负责让她证明她是能够干得好的。”

我记得我们因为意见分歧僵持了好一阵子，或许只是因为解雇那两位女仆的事件在我们的脑海中是如此切近，我才没有像原本可能的那样坚持己见，反对肯顿小姐的主张。不管怎么说吧，结果是我终于让了步，尽管我还是这么说：

“肯顿小姐，我希望您能意识到如此一来，雇用这个姑娘的责任就完完全全落到您的肩膀上了。因为在我看来，至少在目前她毫无疑问是远远没有资格成为我们团队的一员的。我现在姑且允许她加入进来，但前提是您必须亲自负责监督她在职业上的发展。”

“这姑娘会表现得很不错的，史蒂文斯先生。你就等着瞧吧。”

让我吃惊的是，在接下来的几个礼拜当中，这位年轻的姑娘倒是的确取得了长足的进步。她的态度简直是每日一新，就连她走路和执行任务的仪态——在刚开始的那几天里实在是懒散邋遢到了惨不忍睹的程度——居然也有了极为显著的改善。

随着时间一周周过去，这姑娘像是发生了奇迹一般，居然已经蜕变为我们团队中非常有用的一员，肯顿小姐的成功是显而易见了。她似乎特别喜欢给丽萨分配一些需要负担那么一点额外责任的工作任务，我要是在旁边看着，她肯定就会特意跟我交换个眼神，脸上不乏几分揶揄的表情。那天夜里我们在肯顿小姐的起坐间里一边喝可可一边闲谈的时候，丽萨可是个逃不过的重要话题。

“毫无疑问，史蒂文斯先生，”她对我这么说，“听说丽萨迄今为止居然还没有犯什么值得一提的大错儿，您想必非常失望吧。”

“我一点都没有感到失望，肯顿小姐。我很为您也为我们大家感到高兴。我承认，到目前为止，您已经在这个姑娘身上取得了些微的成功。”

“些微的成功！瞧瞧您脸上的微笑，史蒂文斯先生。我一提到丽萨，您就总会浮现出这样的笑容。这笑容本身就在告诉我们一个有趣的故事。一个非常有趣的故事，一点没错。”

“喔，真的吗，肯顿小姐？我能请教到底是个什么样的故事吗？”

“的确非常有趣，史蒂文斯先生。您居然对她抱有如此悲观的偏见，这本身就非常有趣。一定是因为丽萨是个漂亮姑娘的缘故，这一点是毫无疑问的。而且我已经注意到了，您对于咱们团队中的漂亮姑娘总是抱有一种奇怪的厌恶之情。”

“您自己也很清楚您这绝对是无稽之谈，肯顿小姐。”

“啊，可我真的已经注意到了，史蒂文斯先生。您不喜欢我们的团队中有漂亮姑娘。也许是因为我们的史蒂文斯先生害怕因此而分心？难道我们的史蒂文斯先生终究也是血肉之躯，不能完全信得过自己吗？”

“真有你的，肯顿小姐。我要是觉得您这番话里哪怕有那么一丁点儿的道理，我也许就会耐着性子跟您好好地探讨一番了。照目前的情况来看，我想我还是省点心想想别的去吧，由着您怎么高兴怎么说去。”

“啊，可是为什么那心虚的笑容仍旧挂在您的脸上呢，史蒂文斯先生？”

“那根本就不是什么心虚的笑容，肯顿小姐。我只是为您那惊人的瞎扯功夫感觉有些好笑罢了。”

“您脸上挂的就是心虚的笑容，史蒂文斯先生。而且我已经注意到您是如何几乎都不敢正眼瞧丽萨了。当初您为什么那么强烈地反对录用她，那原因现在已经开始变得非常清楚了。”

“我当初的反对意见都绝对是有真凭实据的，肯顿小姐，您自己也心知肚明。这姑娘前来应聘的时候是完全够不上录用标准的。”

当然了，您想必也能理解，我们是从来不会在员工们听得到的情况下以这样的语气调侃抬杠的。不过也差不多就在那个时候，我们的可可之夜在本质上虽然仍属于工作性质，却也经常会为这种无伤大雅的闲扯留出相应的空间——应该说，这对于纾解辛苦工作的一天所带来的压力是大为有益的。

丽萨和我们一起工作了大约有八九个月的时间——到了这个时候我已经基本上忘掉她的存在了——然后就跟第二男仆双双消失不见了。当然了，对于任何一位大户人家的管家而言，这种事情已经是其日常生活的一部分了。事情诚然非常令人恼火，不过你也得学着去接受。事实上，在这类“夜奔”的事件当中，这一次还算是比较文明的。除了一点食物以外，这对小情侣并没有顺带携走任何府里的财物，不仅如此，人家两位还都分别留下了书信。第二男仆，他的名字我已经记不得了，留了一张短笺给我，大致的内容是：“请不要对于我们过于苛责。我们相爱了并且就要正式成婚。”丽萨给“女管家”写了一封长信，在他们失踪以后的第二天一早，肯顿小姐带着这封信来到了我的餐具室。我记得那封信里有很多拼写错误和不通的句子，详细描述了他们俩是如何相爱，第二男仆是个多么出色的人，以及他们的未来是何等地美妙无比。我还记得其中有一句的大意是这样的：“我们没有钱但是谁在乎这个我们已经有了爱情谁还想要别的什么呢我们拥有了彼此再也别无所求。”这封信虽然足足写了有三页纸，可是没有一个字对肯顿小姐给予她的无微不至的照顾表示感激，也没有任何因为让我们大家都感到失望了的歉意表示。

肯顿小姐明显地非常难过。我在快速浏览那年轻女人的长信期间，她始终都坐在我面前的桌子旁边，低头看着自己的双手。事实上——这也让我觉得挺匪夷所思的——我真不记得曾见过她有比那天早上更失魂落魄的时候。当我把那封信放到桌子上的时候，她说道：

“这么看来，史蒂文斯先生，还是你对了，是我错了。”

“肯顿小姐，你实在没必要自寻烦恼，”我说。“这种事情总是有的。我们无论做什么，都是没办法防止这些事情发生的。”

“错在我身上，史蒂文斯先生。我诚心接受。你一直都是对的，一如既往，错的是我。”

“肯顿小姐，你这话我实在是无法苟同。你在那个姑娘身上创造了奇迹。通过你的指导，她已经多少次用事实证明了实际上当初是我错认了她。说真的，肯顿小姐，现在发生的这种事情也可能发生在任何雇员身上。你在她的身上已经取得了了不起的成就。你有绝对充分的理由为她的忘恩负义感到失望，可是没有任何理由为她的错误感到自责。”

肯顿小姐看上去仍旧很灰心丧气。她轻声道：“你这么说真是宽宏大量，史蒂文斯先生。我非常感激。”然后她疲惫不堪地叹了口气，说道：“她真傻。她本来完全可以有一个锦绣前程的。她有这个能力。有那么多年轻女人就像她那样把大好的机会全都浪费掉了，为的又是什么呢？”

我们俩不约而同地看着我们之间桌子上的那几张信纸，然后肯顿小姐怒冲冲地把头别了过去。

“的确，”我说。“真是种浪费，你说得没错。”

“真傻。那姑娘以后肯定会后悔的。她只要肯坚持下去，会过上不错的生活的。不出一两年，我就能让她够资格去个规模不大的公馆里担任女管家的。你也许觉得这有些痴心妄想，史蒂文斯先生，可是你瞧瞧这才几个月的时间，我已经把她调教成什么样子了。可是现在，她就这么把这一切全都抛下了。真是白忙活了一场。”

“她真是傻透了。”

我已经开始收拾面前的那几张信纸，想着或许应该把它们存档备查。可是我在这么做的时候，又有点不太确定肯顿小姐是否打算让我保留这封信，抑或她更希望由她自己保留，于是我又把那几张信纸放回到我们之间的桌子上。可是不管我怎么做，肯顿小姐一直都显得心不在焉。

“她日后肯定会后悔莫及的，”她又说了一遍。“太傻了。”

不过看起来我已经有些迷失在这些陈年往事的记忆中了。这绝非我的本意，不过或许这也并非什么坏事，因为如此一来，我至少就可

以避免过分地沉溺于今天傍晚发生的那些事情中了一我确信这些事情终于算是告一段落了。因为刚刚过去的那几个钟头，我必须坦言，对我来说实在是一种煎熬。

眼下我之所以来到这里，今晚之所以流落到只能仰仗泰勒先生和太太的慷慨大度才有地方过夜的地步，全都是因为我自己的一个愚蠢的、令人恼怒的简单疏忽造成的：即我居然把那辆福特车开得完全没有了汽油。一位旁观者如果从这件事以及昨天因散热器缺水而造成的麻烦上得出我这个人办事天性就缺乏条理的结论，那也不能说是完全没有道理的。当然了，可以稍稍为我开脱的理由也不是没有：我在驾车长途旅行方面毕竟还是个新手，这类愚蠢的疏忽也还不算是特别离谱。可是话又说回来了，当我想到良好的组织才能和深谋远虑恰恰是干我们这一行最重要的职业素养之时，不管怎么说，我也就很难避免再次深为自己感到失望和沮丧了。

不过在汽油耗尽之前的那一个小时左右的时间里我一直都有些丧魂失魄的，这也是事实。我原本是计划夜宿塔维斯托克镇的，在不到八点的时候我就到了那里。可是在镇上那家最大的客栈里，店家却告诉我，由于当地正在举办一个农产品交易会，他们所有的房间都已经客满了。他们向我推荐了其他几家旅店，我一家家问过去，但每一家都以同样的理由向我道歉。最后，在镇子边上的一家家庭旅馆里，老板娘建议我不妨继续朝前再开个几英里，路边有她亲戚开的一家小旅店——那家店，她向我保证肯定会有空房，因为距离塔维斯托克太远，不会受到交易会的影响。

她给了我详尽的指示，当时感觉是够清楚的了，现在也不可能说清楚到底是谁的错了，反正结果我是没有发现这家路边旅店的任何踪

影。而在往前开了十五分钟左右以后，我发现自己已经驶入了一条蜿蜒穿越荒凉开阔的高沼地的长路。道路两侧看上去都像是沼泽地，而且一阵薄雾正慢慢漫过我眼前的道路。在我左手边，我能看到太阳落山的最后一缕霞光。天际线时不时会被不远处田野当中的谷仓以及农舍的轮廓打破，否则的话，我真像是已经被遗落在了荒无人烟的野地。

我记得大约是到了这个时候，我才掉转车头，往回开了一段距离，想找到之前经过的一个岔路口。可是等我开上那条岔路以后，却发现这条路比我刚才离开的那条路线更加荒凉。有一段时间，我就在近乎全黑的道路中行驶，两旁都是高大的树篱，然后又发现那条路开始爬起了陡坡。事已至此，我已经放弃了找到那家路边旅店的希望，决定还是继续往前开，等来到下一个城镇或是乡村的时候再找栖身之地。我可以明天一早再返回预定的路线，那应该是很容易做到的，我这样说服自己。就在这个时候，在山路爬了一半的时候，引擎开始发出了突突的噪声，我这才第一次注意到汽油已经用光了。

福特车又继续爬行了几码远，然后就停了下来。我走下车来评估一下当下的情势时，发现我只剩下几分钟的天光可用了。我站在一条陡路之上，被茂密的树木和灌木树篱夹在当中；再往山上望去，在老远的地方才看到连绵不断的树篱有了个缺口，衬着背后的天空现出一道栅栏门的宽大轮廓。我开始朝山上的那个地方走去，心想从那道栅栏门那儿也许能辨明自己的方位；或许甚至有希望在附近看到一家农舍，我能够指望得到及时的帮助。可是最后出现在我眼前的景象却不禁让我有点仓皇失措了。那扇门的另一侧是一片地势陡降的草地，视野所及只能看到面前二十码左右的距离，再往下就什么都看不清了。越过那片牧场隆起的高坡，远远的有一个小村庄一直线距离十足有一英里左右。透过薄雾可以辨别出一座教堂的尖塔，尖塔周围是一片深色石板瓦的屋顶；散布四处的烟囱里正冒出缕缕白烟。我得承认，在那一刻，我的内心是颇为灰心丧气的。当然了，当时的情况绝对说不上令人绝望；福特车并没有损坏，只不过没了汽油。半个小时之内就能走到那个小村庄，到了那里以后我肯定是能找到个投宿的地方和一桶汽油的。可是独立伫立在一个荒凉的山坡上，透过一扇栅栏门望着远处一个村庄的灯火，天光几乎已经完全褪尽，雾气越来越浓，那滋味实在不怎么好受。

可是徒然地意气消沉也于事无补。不管怎么说，浪费掉那天光仅存的最后几分钟时间就真是太傻了。我下坡走向福特车旁，把一些必需品放进一个公文包里。然后用一盏自行车灯把自己武装起来——那盏

灯投射出来的光柱居然出人意料地明亮——我就开始寻找一条能让我步行前往那个村庄的道路。虽然我往山上走了挺长一段距离，已经把那扇栅栏门远远抛在后面了，可我还是找不到这么一条道儿。这时我才感觉到那条路已经不再向上攀升，而是开始朝那个村庄相反的方向缓缓地蜿蜒而下一透过树篱枝叶的缝隙我不时能瞥见那个村庄的灯火——我的心头再次感到一阵灰心丧气。事实上，我一度怀疑最好的策略是不是应该重新回到福特车那里，干脆在车里坐等另一位司机开车经过。可是到了这个时候，天色几乎已经完全黑了下来，我很清楚，如果在这样的情况下招手去拦截路过的车辆，是很容易会被人误以为拦路抢劫的。再者说了，自打我从福特车里出来，还没有一辆车从我身边开过；事实上，打从我离开塔维斯托克以来，我压根就不记得曾经看到过一辆其他的汽车。最后我打定主意，还是回到那扇栅栏门附近，就从那儿走下那个草坡，尽量朝着村里的灯火直线前进，不去管它有没有什么适合行走的道路了。

结果我发现，那个斜坡倒并非太过险峻。一片片牧草地，一片紧接着一片，朝着村庄的方向铺展开去，而下坡的时候只要尽量贴着草地的边缘，走起来倒也并不太费力。只有那么一次，在距离村庄已经很近的地方，我实在找不到一条可以进入下面一片草地的明显通道了，我只得拿着那盏自行车灯来回地探照挡住我去路的灌木树篱。最后终于被我找到了一个小缺口，我人是可以勉强钻过去，只不过我外套的肩部和裤脚的卷边就得做出点牺牲了。不仅如此，最后那几片草地变得越来越泥泞不堪，我只能故意强忍着不把灯光朝我的鞋子和裤脚上面照，免得自己越发灰心丧气。

渐渐地，我发现自己终于走上了一条通往村庄的经过铺砌的小路，也正是在沿着这条道路往下走的时候，我碰见了泰勒先生，今晚好心接待我的东道主。他从我前面几码远的一个拐弯处走出来，很有礼貌地等着我赶上他，然后他碰了一下帽檐向我致意，主动问我是否有可以为我效劳之处。我尽量简明扼要地解释了一下我的处境，补充说明若是承蒙他指点一处不错的旅店，我将不胜感激之至。言已至此，泰勒先生不禁摇头道：“本村恐怕没有这样的旅店，先生。约翰·汉弗莱斯先生平常倒是会接待过往的客人入住‘十字钥’的，可是不巧他眼下正在整修旅店的房顶。”不过，还没等这个令人失望的消息发挥其全部的效力，泰勒先生马上就接口说：“如果您不介意稍微将就一点的话，先生，我们可以为您提供一个房间和一个床铺供您过夜。没有任何特别之处，不过我老伴儿肯定会负责把一切都收拾得干干净净、舒舒服服的。”

我相信自己也客套了几句，或许是颇为言不由衷，大意是我不能这么麻烦他们。泰勒先生对此的回答是：“实不相瞒，先生，您若是肯光临寒舍，那将是我们的莫大荣幸。我们这个莫斯科姆村可是不大见到像您这样的人物莅临的。而且恕我直言，天都这么晚了，除此以外您恐怕也没别的办法可想了。我要是就这么着把您扔在这黑更半夜里不管的话，我老伴儿是绝不会轻饶于我的。”

事实上，近来我变得越来越容易沉湎于这些回忆当中了。自打几周前第一次产生了再次见到肯顿小姐的希望之后，我想我已经花费了大量时间用来反复思量我们之间的关系为什么会经历了那样的变化。经过多年的共事，我们之间已经稳定地确立起一种良好的工作互信，可是在一九三五或是一九三六年，这种关系却产生了确确实实的转变。实际上，到了最后，我们就连每天的工作结束后一起喝杯可可、聊聊天的例行性会面都放弃了。可是引起这种改变的到底是什么，究竟哪一串具体的事件真正要为此负责呢？我始终都没办法完全确定。

近来在反复琢磨的时候，我觉得那天傍晚肯顿小姐不请自来、发生在我的餐具室里的那个奇怪的小插曲有可能就是个关键的转折点。她为什么要到我的餐具室里来，我已经记不真切了。感觉上她可能是捧了一瓶花来使“餐具室显得明亮一点”，可是这么一来，我可能又把它跟多年前我们刚开始共事时她那次同样的举动给搞混了。我确实记得在这些年间，她至少有三次试图把鲜花带进我的餐具室，不过也许真是我记混了，认定这就是那个特别的傍晚她来找我的原因。可是无论如何，我都想特别强调一下，尽管这些年来我们的工作关系都很融洽，我却从来也没有放任到允许女管家可以成天随意进出我的餐具室的程度。管家的餐具室，至少在我看来，是个办公要地，是家务运营的心脏，在性质上并不亚于一场战役当中的司令部，所以，在这其中的大小物件，每一样都必须完完全全依照我的意愿摆放得井井有条——并且要维持原样——这是绝对不能含糊的。我可不是允许各色人等进进出出、又是质询又是聒噪抱怨个没完的那种管家。如果想要一切事

务都能顺畅协调地得以施行，管家的餐具室就一定得确保私密和清静，这是显而易见、毋庸置疑的。

事有凑巧，那天傍晚她进入我的餐具室的时候，我其实并没有在处理公事。也就是说，那时正是一天的工作接近尾声，那个礼拜又碰巧风平浪静，因此我也难得地享受到一个钟头左右的闲暇时间。前面已经说过，我已经不太确定肯顿小姐是不是捧着一瓶花进来的了，不过我确实记得她是这样说的：

“史蒂文斯先生，您的房间在晚上显得甚至比白天还要令人不快。那个电灯泡太暗了，肯定是不适合用来阅读的。”

“它完全合乎需要，谢谢您，肯顿小姐。”

“说真的，史蒂文斯先生，这个房间活像个囚室。只需要在墙角摆上一张小床，就完全想象得出那死刑犯在这儿度过最后几个钟头时光的情景。”

也许对此我也说过一句什么，我不记得了。总之，我的目光并没有离开面前的书本，时间一分一秒地过去，我正等着肯顿小姐告退然后离开呢，却不料突然听到她说：

“现在我很好奇您到底在读什么呢，史蒂文斯先生。”

“不过一本书而已，肯顿小姐。”

“这个我看得出来，史蒂文斯先生。可到底是本什么书呢——这才是让我大感兴趣的。”

我一抬头，发现肯顿小姐正朝着我走过来。我把书一合，把它紧紧地抓在手里、贴在胸口，站起身来。

“说真的，肯顿小姐，”我说，“我必须请您尊重我的隐私。”

“可是你为什么要是对自己读的书感到这么难为情呢，史蒂文斯先生？我相当怀疑这可能是本相当下流的书呢。”

“这是绝不可能的，肯顿小姐，爵爷的书架上面是没有一本你所谓的‘下流’的书的。”

“我曾听说很多学术性的书籍当中都包含最下流的段落，可我从来都没有胆量去找找看。好了，史蒂文斯先生，请你务必让我看看你在读的到底是本什么书。”

“肯顿小姐，我必须请您不要再纠缠我了。我难得有这么点属于自己的空闲时间，而您却非要这样胡搅蛮缠，这真是让人难以忍受。”

可是肯顿小姐却继续向我走来，我必须承认，在这种情况下最好以什么样的举动来应对还真是有点难以确定。我曾想到过干脆把书往桌子的抽屉里一扔，然后把抽屉锁上，不过这未免有些过于戏剧化了。我只能往后退了几步，那本书仍紧贴在我胸口上。

“请让我看看你抱在怀里的到底是本什么书，史蒂文斯先生，”肯顿小姐道，继续步步紧逼，“看过以后我就不再打搅你，让你尽管去享受阅读的乐趣了。这到底是本什么书啊，为什么你这么着急上火地要去藏藏掖掖呢？”

“肯顿小姐，您是否发现了这到底是本什么书，其实对我来说根本就无所谓。可是就原则而论，我反对您就这么不请自来，并且侵犯我的私人时间。”

“我很好奇，这到底是一本完全高尚的书呢，史蒂文斯先生，还是你其实是在保护我，以免我受到它可怕的影响呢？”

这时她已经站到了我面前，而突然间，气氛发生了奇怪的变化——就仿佛我们俩一下子一起被推到了另一个时空当中。恐怕我也很难把我的意思完全解释清楚。我所能说的只是，我们周围的一切突然间变得完全凝固了；在我的印象中，肯顿小姐的态度也发生了突然的变化；她的表情奇怪地严肃了起来，我猛然间感觉她几乎像是被吓到了。

“请让我看看你的书，史蒂文斯先生。”

她伸出手，开始轻轻地把我的手的那本书往外抽。我感觉在她这样做时我最好还是把目光从她身上避开，可是她人靠我这么近，要想做到这一点，就只能把我的脑袋扭到一个很不自然的角度。肯顿小姐继续非常轻柔地掰开我握着那本书的手指，简直可以说是一根手指掰开以后再去掰另一根手指。这个过程似乎持续了很长的时间——在此期间我一直都尽量保持着那个很不自然的姿态——一直到我听到她说：

“天哪，史蒂文斯先生，这根本就不是什么见不得人的书嘛。只不过是感伤的爱情故事。”

我相信，大概正是在这个时候，我决定无须再忍耐下去了。我不记得当时我所说的具体字句了，不过我记得我相当坚决地将肯顿小姐

请出了我的餐具室，这个小插曲也就此告一段落。

我想，我应该就这个小插曲所实际涉及的那本书的情况再多说两句。那本书确实可以被描述为一部“感伤的罗曼司”——有不少这类小说摆放在藏书室里，也放在几间客房里，主要是供女客们消遣之用。而我之所以会选择阅读此类作品，有一个很简单的原因；这是一种维持并且提高自己对于英语这门语言的掌握程度的极为有效的方法。我个人认为——不知道您是否同意——就我们这一代管家而言，都一直过于强调高雅的口音和对语言的掌握在专业期许方面的地位；我的意思是说，有时候这些因素被强调得过了头，甚至不惜以牺牲更为重要的专业素质为代价。尽管如此，我从来也没有否认优雅的口音和对语言的熟练掌握自是一种极有魅力的特质，而且一直都认为，尽我所能地发展自己在这方面的能力也是我分内的职责。而最直接有效的一种方法就是在零碎的空余时间里尽可能多读上几页文辞优美的书籍。这就是我多年以来一直采取的策略方法，而我之所以经常选择肯顿小姐那天傍晚发现我在看的那类作品，只是因为其中那众多措辞优雅的对话对我具有极大的实用价值。换了一本分量更重的书籍——比如说一本学术专著——虽然总体来说更有提高自身修养的价值，但它更倾向于大量使用学术术语，这对于我在跟绅士淑女们日常交流过程中起到的作用反而非常有限。

我极少有时间或者意愿把任何一本这类的罗曼司从头到尾读一遍，就我的认识，它们的情节全都甚为荒唐可笑——确实够得上感伤已极——若非因为前面提到的那些益处，我是一分一秒的时间都不愿意浪费在它们身上的。不过话虽如此，如今我也不介意坦白承认——我并不觉得这其中有任何应该感到羞愧的地方——从这些故事当中我有时候也确实能得到一些附带的乐趣。或许当初我不太愿意承认这一点，不过就像我说过的，这有什么好自感羞愧的呢？一个人为什么就不该放松心情，去享受那些绅士淑女陷入爱河的故事之乐呢？况且他们之间又是以最为优雅的遣词造句去尽情倾诉爱慕之情的。

不过我这么说并非是想暗示那天傍晚我处理这件事的方式有欠妥当。因为您必须理解，问题在于这牵涉到一个重要的原则。事实上，在肯顿小姐长驱直入我的餐具室的那一刻，我已经“下班”了。当然，任何一位以其职业为荣的管家，任何一位矢志于追求海斯协会所谓“与其职位相称之尊严”的管家，在面对他人时是决不会允许自己“下班”的。所以在那一刻走进来的到底是肯顿小姐还是一个完全的陌生人，都是无关紧要的。任何一位具有专业素养的管家在别人面前都必须完全彻底地活在自己的角色中；他一刻都不能被人看到自己一

会儿将这个角色抛到一边，一会儿又披挂整齐，就仿佛那职位不过是哑剧演员的一件戏服而已。只有在唯一的一种情况之下，一位注重其尊严的管家可以随意地卸下他的职业角色；那就是在他完全独处的时刻。如此说来，您也就可以理解，肯顿小姐在我不无道理地认定自己是独自一人的时刻硬闯了进来，这件事也就成了一个至关重要的原则性问题、一个的确的确关乎尊严的问题了，因为我在任何人面前都不得有一丝一毫不符合我的角色设定的表现。

其实，我不过就说了句我们的女管家情绪“近来有些阴晴不定”，所以颇有些惊讶于格雷厄姆先生闻言居然点了点头，探身挨近我，以一种心照不宣的语气对我说：

“我早就料到了，只是不知道还有多长时间。”

我问他这话到底什么意思，格雷厄姆先生继续道：“你们的肯顿小姐呀。她今年多大年纪了？三十三？三十四？已经错过了做母亲的最佳年龄，不过还不算太晚。”

“肯顿小姐，”我向他保证，“可是位恪尽职守的职业女性。我碰巧知道，她根本就无意于组建家庭。”

可是格雷厄姆先生却面带微笑摇了摇头道：“如果一个女管家告诉你她不想组建家庭，你可千万不可信以为真。说起来了，史蒂文斯先生，咱们就坐在这里掰着指头数一下，至少得有十多位女管家都信誓旦旦地这么宣称过，结果还不是嫁了人，离开了我们这一行。”

我记得那天傍晚我还颇有自信地对格雷厄姆先生的理论置之不理，可打那以后，我必须承认，我就发现自己很难摆脱肯顿小姐这些神秘外出可能是去会一位追求者这样的想法。这的确是个令人颇为困扰的念头，因为不难看出，肯顿小姐的离开将是我们工作上相当重大的损失，一个达林顿府将很难从中恢复过来的重大损失。而且，我不得不承认，颇有些其他的小征兆看来也在支持格雷厄姆先生的理论。比方说，收取信件一直都是我的一项职责，我忍不住注意到肯顿小姐已经开始相当规律地收到一大约每周一次一同一位通信者的来信，而且这些信件上盖的都是本地的邮戳。在此我或许应该指出的一点是，这样的变化我几乎是不可能注意不到的，因为此前她在达林顿府里这么多年间本来是极少收到信件的。

此外，还有其他一些隐微的迹象也在支持格雷厄姆先生的观点。比方说，虽然她继续以一贯的全副勤勉态度履行其职责，她的情绪总的来说却变得有些阴晴不定，这是我迄今为止从未有见到过的。而事实上，当她一连好几天情绪特别高涨的时候一而且没有任何明显的理由一几乎就跟她经常性地突然陷入长时间的郁郁寡欢同样让我备感困扰。如我所说，她自始至终都保持着绝对的专业态度，可话又说回来了，为达林顿府的长远利益着想是我的职责，如果这些迹象果如格雷厄姆先生所言，预示着肯顿小姐正考虑为了爱情的缘故离开工作岗位，我自然是有责任就此事做些进一步的探究的。于是在某个我们惯常碰面一起喝杯热可可的傍晚，我就不揣冒昧把问题提了出来：

“您礼拜四还要外出吗，肯顿小姐？我是说您休假的那天。”

我原以为我这么问她，她多半是要生气的，可是恰恰相反，她简直就像是好长时间以来一直都在等着提出这个话题的机会似的。因为她以几分如释重负的口气说：

“哦，史蒂文斯先生，那不过是之前我在格兰切斯特宅工作时认识的一个人。事实上，他当时是那座宅子的管家，不过他现在已经完全离开了这一行，受雇于附近的一家商号。他不知怎的得知了我在这里工作，就开始给我写信，建议我们重续旧交。史蒂文斯先生，长话短说就是这么回事。”

“我明白了，肯顿小姐。偶尔离开这儿出去走走确实也能让人感觉身心舒畅。”

“我发现正是如此，史蒂文斯先生。”

出现了一阵短暂的沉默。然后肯顿小姐像是下定了决心，继续道：

“说起我的这位旧相识。我记得他在格兰切斯特宅做管家的时候，他可真是壮志凌云。事实上，我想他的终极梦想就是成为像达林顿府这样的豪门巨室的管家。哦，可我现在一想起他当初的那些管理方法！说真的，史蒂文斯先生，如果您现在看到他那些做法的话，我能想象得出您会有什么样的表情。也真是难怪他壮志难酬了。”

我轻轻一笑。“以我的经验，”我说，“有太多的人相信自己有能力在更高等级的岗位上工作，对于这更高的岗位所要求的素质却没有丝毫的概念。这样的工作肯定不是任何人都干得了的。”

“这话说得是。史蒂文斯先生，如果您当初就有机会对他做出观察的话，真不知道您到底会怎么说！”

“干我们这一行的，肯顿小姐，到了这样的级别以后，就真不是每个人都能胜任的了。心怀凌云壮志自是容易，可是如果不具备特定的素质，一个做管家的到了一定的层次以后就真是再难有所进境了。”

肯顿小姐像是对这番话默想了片刻，然后道：

“我突然想到，您肯定已经心满意足了，史蒂文斯先生。毕竟，您看，您已经处在了事业的顶峰，对于这个领域的方方面面，无不尽在您的掌握之中。我真是无法想象您还会有什么样的人生目标。”

我一时还真想不出对此该如何回应。在继之而起的一阵略显尴尬的沉默当中，肯顿小姐把目光转向手里盛热可可的杯子的底部，就好

像被她在那里发现的某样东西给吸引住了。最后，在经过一番考虑之后，我说：

“就我而言，肯顿小姐，我得一直等到尽我之所能协助爵爷把他为自己设定的那些伟大的任务统统完成以后，我的职业才能算得上是圆满了。爵爷的工作大功告成之日，到他对自己已经取得的荣誉终于感到满足了，到他满意地知道他已经做到了每个人对他提出的所有的合理要求以后，只有到了那一天，肯顿小姐，我才能够自称为，如您所言，一个心满意足之人。”

她可能对我的这番话感到了一丝困惑；或者也许是其中有些地方让她感到了不快。总之，她的情绪似乎就是在那一刻发生了改变，我们之间的谈话马上就丧失了一开始那种相当私人化的基调。

就在那次谈话以后不久，我们在她的起坐间里举行的这些热可可聚谈便无疾而终了。事实上，我清楚地记得我们最后那次以这种方式进行的聚谈；我本来是希望跟肯顿小姐商量一下一桩即将到来的社交盛会的安排——苏格兰的一群名流显贵将来此举行一次周末聚会。事实上，那个活动尚有一个月左右的时间才会举行，不过对于盛大活动的具体安排及早进行讨论一直就是我们的习惯。就在那天傍晚，对于那次活动的方方面面我已经径自谈论了有一会儿了，这才意识到肯顿小姐一直都没怎么表态；又过了一段时间，我已经清楚地发现她的心思其实完全就不在这上头。我有几次还特地问她：“您在听我说话吗，肯顿小姐？”尤其是在我针对某一点说了一大段话以后，虽然经我这么一问以后，她每次都会变得稍稍警醒一点，可是不出几秒钟，我就看得出来她已经又神游天外了。在我滔滔不绝地讲了好几分钟以后，她唯一的反应也不过就是回一句类似“当然，史蒂文斯先生”，或者“我非常同意，史蒂文斯先生”这样的话。最后我终于对她说：

“很抱歉，肯顿小姐，不过我看我们再继续下去也没什么意思了。您像是根本就不觉得这次讨论有什么重要的。”

“很抱歉，史蒂文斯先生，”她说，稍稍坐直了身子。“只是因为今晚真的有点累了。”

“您现在越来越容易累了，肯顿小姐。在过去您可是从来不需要求助于这样的借口的。”

让我吃惊的是，肯顿小姐突然勃然变色道：

“史蒂文斯先生，我这个礼拜都忙得不可开交。我已经很累了。事实上，三四个钟头以前我就希望赶快上床休息了。我真是非常、非常累了，史蒂文斯先生，难道您一点都看不出来吗？”

我原本也没有期望她会为一直都心不在焉而向我道歉的，可是这个回答之强硬，我必须说，还是让我有点吃惊。不过，我决定还是不跟她卷入一场无谓的争执，我刻意停顿了好一会儿以后，这才心平气和地道：

“如果您的感受是这样的话，肯顿小姐，那我们也就根本无须再继续这些晚上的碰面了。我很抱歉，我居然一直都没有觉察到这样的碰面给您造成了这么大的不便。”

“史蒂文斯先生，我只是说我今天晚上很累……”

“不，不，肯顿小姐，这是完全可以理解的。您本来就工作繁忙，这些碰面等于又给您增加了不必要的负担。即便是不以这种方式每天碰面，也还有很多其他的方法可以保证在我们之间实现工作层面上的必要沟通。”

“史蒂文斯先生，实在没这个必要。我只是说……”

“我是认真的，肯顿小姐。事实上，已经有一段时间，我一直都在考虑是不是还要继续这样的碰面，既然它们平白又延长了我们本已经非常忙碌的日常工作。我们每天在您这儿碰面晤谈的方式虽已延续了多年，但这一事实本身并不成其为我们就该寻求一种更方便的安排方式的理由。”

“史蒂文斯先生，请别这样，我相信这些碰面还是非常有用的……”

“可是它们给您带来了不便啊，肯顿小姐。它们使您精疲力竭。请容我建议，从今往后，我们就只在正常的工作时间内找些空当来沟通重要的信息。万一不能及时地找到对方，我建议我们写个字条留在对方的房门上。在我看来这不失为一种完善的解决办法。好了，肯顿小姐，很抱歉耽误了您这么长时间。非常感谢您的热可可。”

自然—我又何必不肯承认呢？—我偶尔也会暗自思忖，如果对于我们晚间的晤谈问题我的态度不是如此决绝的话—也就是说，如果在那以后的几个星期里，面对肯顿小姐好几次恢复晚间晤谈的建议，我的态度肯于软化的话，长远看来事态的发展究竟会是怎么样的。直到

现在我才开始考虑这个问题，是因为有鉴于此后事态的发展，我很有理由认为当初我在一劳永逸地决定终止那些晚间碰头的例会之时，我也许并没有完全意识到我的所作所为可能带来的全部影响。的确，甚至可以说我的这个小小的决定竟在某种程度上成为一个关键的转折点；我的这一决定使得事态的发展无可避免地迈向了最终的结果。

不过话又说回来了，人一旦凭借着后见之明，开始在自己的过去当中找寻类似的“转折点”，我想就常常会开始觉得它们无处不在。不仅是我针对我们的晚间晤谈所做的决定，还有在我的餐具室里发生的那个小插曲，如果愿意这么想的话，也可以被视作是这样的“转折点”。人们也许会问，如果那天傍晚肯顿小姐捧着花瓶走进来的时候，我的反应稍有不同，那又会有什么样的结果呢？还有，在肯顿小姐收到姨妈的死讯后，我跟她在餐厅里不期而遇的那一次一大约跟这些事件发生在同一个时期——或许也可以被视作另一个这样的“转折点”。

那死讯是几个钟头前送到的；的确，那天早上就是我敲开她起坐间的房门，亲手把那封信递给她的。我走进去待了一小会儿，跟她讨论了某件工作上的事务，我记得我们围坐在她的桌前，而她就是在我们交谈中间把那封信拆开的。她一下子就呆住了，值得赞扬的是她的神态仍能保持镇定，将那封信从头到尾看了至少有两遍。然后她把信小心地塞回信封，抬头看着桌子对面的我。

“是我姨妈的伴当约翰逊太太写来的。她说我姨妈前天去世了。”她顿了顿，然后说：“葬礼定在明天举行。不知道我能不能告假一天？”

“肯定可以安排的，肯顿小姐。”

“谢谢您，史蒂文斯先生。请原谅，不过我也许现在想单独待一会儿。”

“当然了，肯顿小姐。”

我告退离开，可是直到我已经出来以后，这才想起我实际上并没有明确向她致以慰唁之意。我完全可以想象这消息对她是个多大的打击，因为她姨妈一直以来在方方面面对她而言就像是她的亲生母亲一样。我在走廊里犹豫了一会儿，思量着我是否应该返回去敲开门，好好弥补一下我的疏漏。可是我接着又想，要是我真这么做的话，极有可能会打扰到她不欲公开流露的哀伤之情。的确，就在那一刻，肯顿小姐极有可能就在距离我只有几英尺之遥的屋内痛哭失声。这种

想法在我心里激起了一种奇怪的感觉，使得我就在那走廊上独自踌躇、徘徊了良久。不过最终我还是判定，最好还是另找机会表达我的慰问之情，于是就先离开了。

结果是我直到当天下午才又见到她，如前所说，我是在餐厅里碰到她的，她正把瓷器往餐具柜里放。在此之前，肯顿小姐的丧亲之痛已经在我心头盘踞了好几个钟头，我一直都在琢磨最好是做点什么或是说点什么才能稍稍减轻一下她的情感负担。因此，我在听到她走进餐厅的脚步声以后——我当时正在门厅里忙着某样工作——我等了约莫有一分钟，就放下手里的工作走进了餐厅。

“啊，肯顿小姐，”我说。“今天下午您感觉还好吗？”

“挺好的，谢谢您，史蒂文斯先生。”

“一切都还正常吧？”

“一切都很正常，谢谢您。”

“我一直想问问您，最近这批新到的员工有没有给您带来什么特别的麻烦。”我轻轻一笑。“一时间有这么多人同时到来，很容易出现各种各样的小麻烦和小问题。我敢说，在这样的時候如果我们能稍稍探讨一下，即便是我们这一行当中的佼佼者都经常能得益匪浅呢。”

“谢谢您，史蒂文斯先生，不过我对新来的那两个姑娘感到非常满意。”

“有鉴于近来有多位新员工加入进来，您不觉得目前的人员配置规划有必要做些调整吗？”

“我不觉得有什么调整的 necessity，史蒂文斯先生。不过如果我的想法有变的话，我会第一时间告诉您的。”

她转头继续整理餐具柜，我一时打算就此离开餐厅了，事实上，我相信我实际上已经朝餐厅门口走了几步了，不过我停下脚步，转过头来又对她说：

“这么说来，肯顿小姐，您觉得新来的几位员工适应得还不错喽？”

“两个姑娘表现得都非常好，我可以向您保证。”

“啊，很高兴听您这么说。”我又短促地一笑。“我只是想了解一下情况，因为我们都知道，她们俩都没有在这样规模的宅第里工作过。”

“的确如此，史蒂文斯先生。”

我看着她把瓷器往餐具柜里摆，等着看看她还有什么想说的。过了好一会儿，看到她很明显再没有什么话要说了，我才开口道：“事实上，肯顿小姐，请恕我直言。我已经注意到最近有一两件工作做得有失水准。我真觉得对于新来的这批员工，您也许还是不要这么沾沾自喜才好。”

“您这话是什么意思，史蒂文斯先生？”

“就我个人而言，肯顿小姐，每当有新的员工到来，我都会加倍注意，以确保一切都不出问题。我会在各个方面检查他们的工作成效，并试图评估他们与其他员工相处得如何。毕竟，对于他们在业务方面以及整体的精神面貌方面的影响有个清楚的认识是非常重要的。我不得不很遗憾地指出，肯顿小姐，不过我相信您在这些方面可能稍稍有点粗心大意。”

肯顿小姐一时间显得有些困惑不解。然后她转身看着我，脸色明显绷得紧紧的。

“您说什么，史蒂文斯先生？”

“比方说，肯顿小姐，虽说这些餐具清洗的情况符合我们一贯的高标准，可是我注意到它们摆放在厨房架子上的方式，尽管目前来看并无显而易见的危险，不过长此以往，餐具的破损率恐怕就会超过必要的标准了。”

“是这样吗，史蒂文斯先生？”

“是的，肯顿小姐。还有啊，早餐厅后面那个小壁龛也有段时间没有打扫过了。恕我失礼，不过还有一两件其他的小事可以提一下。”

“您不必再特别强调了，史蒂文斯先生。我会遵照您的建议，重新检查新来的女仆的工作。”

“忽略了这么明显的小瑕疵，这可不像是您的做派啊，肯顿小姐。”

肯顿小姐把脸别过去，脸上再次出现了那种表情，就像是努力想弄清楚让她困惑不已的某一件事。她的神色与其说是生气，不如说是疲惫。然后她把餐具柜一关，说：“失陪了，史蒂文斯先生，”径自离去。

可是，总是在悬想当年的某时某刻若是不像当初那般行事的话，结局将会怎样，这又有什么意义呢？这样下去，恐怕只会徒然让自己心烦意乱。总之，说说当初的哪件事成了“转折点”自是无妨，可是这样的时刻也只能在回顾当中才能追认。自然，如今在回顾这些往事的时候，它们在我的人生当中确实呈现为异常关键而又珍贵的时刻；可是在当时自然是不会有这种想法的。反而会觉得在我面前还有数不尽的日、月、年，可以在其中慢慢地理清我跟肯顿小姐关系当中的那些别扭和无常；将来还有无数的机会可以弥补这个或那个误会所造成的影响。当时可是绝对没有丝毫迹象显示，这些显然都是渺不足道的小事竟会致使所有的梦想永远都无法兑现。

不过我看我是变得有些过度内省了，而且还是一种性质相当阴郁的内省。无疑，这肯定是跟夜静更深，以及今晚所经受的那一连串恼人的事件有关。无疑，我现在的心境肯定也跟明天我应该就能在多年睽违之后终于又能见到肯顿小姐这一事实不无关系——只要我能在当地的汽修厂买到汽油，就像泰勒夫妇向我保证的那样——我预计明天午饭时间就能到达小康普顿。当然，没有任何理由认为我们的重逢不会是友好而又热诚的。事实上，以我的预期，我们的会晤——除了几句在此情况下必不可少的朋友间的嘘寒问暖以外——主要应该还是以谈工作为主。也就是说，既然肯顿小姐的婚姻已经是不幸地貌似走向了失败，而且连家都没有了，那么我的责任就是要确认她是否还有兴趣回到达林顿府重操旧业。在此我也不妨直说了吧，今晚再次重读她的来信以后，我倾向于认为我此前对于其中某些字句的解读或许有先入为主和强作解人之嫌，实在不够明智。不过我仍旧认为她来信当中的特定段落的确流露出一不只是一星半点的怀旧之情，尤其是当她写下类似这样的话语时：“当时我是多么喜欢从三楼的那几间卧室里俯瞰大草坪以及远处那绿草如茵的开阔高地。”

主人泰勒先生和太太也绝非是故意让我承受刚刚经历的这番苦楚的。但事实就是如此，一旦我在他们的餐桌前坐下来准备用晚餐，一旦他们的几位邻居开始过来拜访，那一连串最令人难熬的事件就在我身边轮流开始上演了。

农舍楼下的房间看起来被泰勒先生和太太用作了餐厅兼日常的起居室。房间相当温馨舒适，正中摆放着一张农家的厨房里常见的那种做工粗糙的大木桌，桌面没有上漆，布满了切肉刀和切面包的刀子留下的细小刀痕。尽管我们仅靠墙角架子上的一盏油灯那昏黄的光线照明，这些刀痕仍旧清晰可见。

“并不是说我们这个偏僻地方没有供电，先生，”用餐期间泰勒先生对我说，同时朝那盏油灯点了点头。“可是线路出了问题，我们有差不多两个月没有电了。不过实不相瞒，我们也并不太想念有电的那些日子。咱们这个村子里有几户人家就从来没用过电灯。油灯的光线给人的感觉更加温暖。”

泰勒太太给我们端上来可口的肉汤，我们以脆皮面包佐餐，那时还没有什么迹象预示着今天晚上还会有什么令人发怵的事情发生，我本以为也就再花一小时左右的时间愉快地聊聊天就可以上床休息了。然而，我们刚刚吃完晚饭，泰勒先生正给我倒一杯邻居家酿的艾尔啤酒的时候，听到屋外的砾石路上传来了脚步声。在我听来，黑暗当中逐渐逼近一幢孤零零的偏僻村舍的脚步声里自有一点点不祥的味道，不过无论是主人还是主妇倒都像是并没有觉得来人有什么恶意。因为从泰勒先生的问话当中就只听得出好奇的语气：“哈啰，来的是谁啊？”

他这话更像是自言自语，可是接着我们就听到门外有人大声地自报家门，就像是回答他这句问话一样：“是我，乔治·安德鲁斯。正巧打这儿路过。”

紧接着，泰勒太太就将一位身材魁梧、五十来岁的男人迎了进来，看他的穿着打扮，他这一天应该都在干农活儿。从他熟不拘礼的态度上可以看出他是这儿的常客，他在进门的一个小凳子上坐下，有点费劲地脱下脚上的威灵顿橡胶靴，一边跟泰勒太太闲聊了几句。然后朝餐桌走来，停下脚步，在我面前以立正姿势站得笔直，就像是军队里向长官进行汇报一样。

“敝姓安德鲁斯，先生，”他说。“祝您晚上好。听闻您的不幸遭遇我深感遗憾，不过我希望您在敝村莫斯科姆度过的这一夜不至于

让您太过失望。”

我有点困惑不解，这位安德鲁斯先生又是怎么听说他所谓的我的“不幸遭遇”的呢？不管怎么说，我还是面带微笑地回答说，我绝没有感到什么“失望”，对于受到的盛情款待唯有不尽的感激之情。我说这话当然指的是泰勒先生和太太的好心相助，谁知安德鲁斯先生像是自认为也被包括在我所感激的对象当中了，因为他马上就自卫一样地举起两只巨掌，说道：

“哦，不，先生，您太客气啦。我们非常高兴您能来到这里。像您这样的人物可是不会经常途经敝村的。您能在此停留我们更是高兴还来不及呢。”

听他这话的意思，像是说这整个村子的人都已经知道了我的“不幸遭遇”以及随后入住这幢农舍的经过。我后来发现，事实上也差不多正是如此；我只能猜想，就在我刚刚被领进这个卧室以后一在我洗净双手，正尽力补救一下外套和裤脚的污损之际一泰勒先生和太太就把有关我的消息讲给了路过的村民们听了。总而言之，几分钟以后就又来了一位客人，那人的外貌跟安德鲁斯先生非常相像一也就是说，同样是肩宽背厚、务农为业，脚下一双沾满泥浆的威灵顿橡胶靴，而且他进门和脱靴的方式就跟安德鲁斯先生如出一辙。事实上，他们两位的相貌和做派真是太像了，我还真以为他们是兄弟俩，直到新来者自我介绍说：“敝姓摩根，先生，特雷弗·摩根。”

摩根先生先是对于我的“不幸”表达了遗憾之情，向我保证第二天一早一切都会迎刃而解，然后又表示整个村庄是多么欢迎我的到来。当然，稍早之前我已经听到过类似的亲切致意了，可是摩根先生的原话居然是：“像您这样的绅士居然来到莫斯科姆村，这真是我们的无上荣光，先生。”

我还没来得及想好跟如何回答他这番话，屋外的小径上就又传来了更多的脚步声。不久，一对中年夫妇就被迎了进来，主人向我介绍他们是哈里·史密斯先生和太太。这两位看起来却全然不像是务农的；史密斯太太是位发了福的大块头女人，不禁令我想起了二三十年代在达林顿府服务近二十年之久的厨娘莫蒂默太太。哈里·史密斯先生却和太太形成了鲜明的对比，是个小个儿，眉头紧锁，表情一直都很紧张。他们在桌边坐下以后，史密斯先生对我说：“您的车就是停在荆棘山上的那辆古董福特吧，先生？”

“如果您说的就是俯瞰这个村子的那座小山的话，”我说。“不过听您说您居然见到了那辆车，我倒是挺惊讶的。”

“我并没有亲眼见到，先生。不过戴夫·桑顿刚才开着拖拉机回家的时候，在路上见到了它。看到居然有那么一辆车停在路边，他大为惊讶，他还特地停下拖拉机，下来看了看。”说到这里，哈里·史密斯先生转过头去对着围桌而坐的其他人说道：“真是漂亮极了，那辆车。他说他从来也没见过这么漂亮的车。把林赛先生从前开的那辆车完全给比下去了！”

这引起大家的哄堂大笑，泰勒先生特地给我解释说：“林赛先生是从前住在离这儿不远的那幢大房子里的一位绅士，先生。他干过一两件挺出格的事，惹得周围的乡亲们不大待见他。”

这话引起一阵噼噼啪啪的赞同声。然后有个人说：“祝您健康，先生，”举起一大杯泰勒太太刚才给大家斟满的艾尔啤酒，紧接着大家就全体共同举杯向我敬起酒来。

我微笑道：“我向诸位保证，能来到贵地是我的荣幸。”

“您太客气了，先生，”史密斯太太道。“这才是真正的绅士风度。那个林赛先生根本就不是什么绅士。他也许有很多钱，可他绝不是个绅士。”

这话再次赢得大家的一致赞同。然后泰勒太太凑在史密斯太太的耳边悄声说了句什么，史密斯太太回答说：“他说他会尽快赶过来的。”这两位太太一起转脸看着我，神色有些不太自然，还是史密斯太太开口道：“我们跟卡莱尔医生说了您在这儿的消息，先生。医生表示非常高兴能有机会跟您结识。”

“我想他还有病人要接诊，”泰勒太太表示歉意地补充道。“恐怕我们无法确定他能在您需要休息之前及时赶过来。”

这个时候，那位眉头紧锁的小个子男人哈里·史密斯先生再次探身向前说道：“那位林赛先生，他真是大错特错了，不是吗？做出那样的事来。自以为不知道比我们高明多少，把我们全都当傻瓜。哼，我可以告诉您，先生，很快他就知道不是这么回事儿啦。咱们村里可是有不少肯动脑筋、喜欢讨论的人。咱们这里有的是明确的主见，而且从来不会羞于把它表达出来。你们那位林赛先生很快就知道厉害，学了乖啦。”

“他不是绅士，”泰勒先生平静地道。“他根本就不是个绅士，那位林赛先生。”

“一点都不假，先生，”哈里·史密斯先生道。“你只要打眼一看，就看得出他不是个绅士。不错，他是有一幢漂亮的房子，一身上等的套装，可尽管如此你就是知道。他也很快就露了馅儿啦。”

又是一阵噼噼啪啪的赞同声，一度所有在场的人都似乎在考虑向我透露当地这位名人的故事是否合适。后来还是泰勒先生打破了沉默。

“哈里说得没错。你一打眼就能看得出谁是真正的绅士，谁是衣着光鲜的冒牌货。就拿您自己来说吧，先生。使您成为一位绅士的可不是您身上衣服的剪裁，甚至不是您谈吐的优雅方式，而是别的某一种特质。很难说得清楚，可是只要眼睛不瞎，一打眼就看得出来。”

这话引来了大家更多的赞同。

“卡莱尔先生应该很快就到了，先生，”泰勒太太插嘴道。“您肯定会跟他谈得很愉快的。”

“卡莱尔先生也有那样的特质，”泰勒先生道。“他是有的。他是个真正的绅士，一点不假。”

摩根先生自打进来以后就没怎么开口，这时候探身向前对我说：“您觉得这种特质到底是什么呢，先生？也许拥有这种特质的人能说得更加清楚。我们一直都在这么议论谁有谁没有的，可我们绝不可能比我们议论的对象更明智。也许您能指点我们一二，先生。”

大家顿时安静了下来，我能感到所有人都把脸转向了我这边。我轻咳了一声，说：

“让我来对于我可能具备也可能不具备的特质发表意见，是极不合适的。不过，就这个具体的问题而言，我料想大家所谓的这种特质可能可以最为方便地用‘尊严’二字来界定。”

我认为对此无须再做任何进一步的解释了。的确，我不过是在倾听大家谈话的过程中将我头脑中一闪而过的想法随口说了出来，若非大家的突然要求，我都很怀疑自己是否还会说出这番话来的。不过，大家对我的回答倒似乎是颇为满意。

“您的话很有道理，先生，”安德鲁斯先生道，频频点头，其他几位也应声附和。

“那位林赛先生也确实需要更多一点尊严才好，”泰勒太太道。“可是他这一类人的问题就在于他们错把装腔作势、趾高气扬当成了尊严。”

“不过请注意，”哈里·史密斯先生插嘴道，“应该说我非常尊重您的意见，先生。不过，尊严可并非绅士们所独有的。尊严是这个国家的每一个男人和女人都可以凭自己的努力去争取并且能够最终得到的。恕我冒昧直言，先生，不过就像我方才说过的，我们这里的人在需要表达自己观点的时候是不会客套的。而这就是我的看法，不管说得对不对。尊严可并不只是绅士们所独有的。”

当然，我觉察到哈里·史密斯先生对于“尊严”的理解跟我的原意是大相径庭的，不过要想跟这些人解释清楚我的观点，这个任务就未免过于艰巨了。所以我觉得最好的办法莫过于简单地微微一笑并加以认可：“当然，您说得很对。”

这话非常有效，马上就驱散了哈里·史密斯先生刚才说那番话时所造成的那种轻微的紧张气氛。而哈里·史密斯先生本人却似乎变本加厉，变得毫无顾忌了，因为他倾身向前，继续说道：

“毕竟，这就是我们抗击希特勒的目的。如果希特勒得逞了的话，我们现在就全都沦为奴隶了。全世界就将只有几个主子和数以亿万计的奴隶了。而我不需要提醒在座的任何一位，作为奴隶可是没有任何尊严可言的。而这正是我们为之而奋斗，也是我们最终所赢得的。我们赢得了成为自由公民的权利。这就是生为英国人的一项基本人权，不管你是谁，不管是贫穷还是富有，你生而自由，你生而拥有自由表达你的观点的权利，你可以投票选举你支持的议员，或者投票将其罢免。这就是尊严的真正意义，如果您恕我冒昧直言的话，先生。”

“好了，好了，哈里，”泰勒先生道。“我看得出你又在为你的某个政治演说热身呢。”

这引起一阵笑声。哈里·史密斯先生有点腼腆地微微一笑，不过却又继续道：

“我这不是在谈政治。我只是想说说我的看法，仅此而已。你要是个奴隶的话，你就不可能有任何尊严。不过每一个英国人，只要他愿意，对此都会有深刻的体会。因为我们曾为了这种权利而浴血奋战。”

“我们这个村子也许看起来只是个偏僻的小地方，先生，”他妻子道。“可是我们在战争中的付出超过了我们分所应该的程度。远远超过了。”

她这句话一说完，气氛一下子就变得相当凝重了，一直到泰勒先生最终对我说：“哈里为我们地方上做了大量的人员组织工作。只要给他半点机会，他就会详详细细地告诉你这个国家的管理方式到底错在了哪里。”

“啊，可我这次说的倒恰恰是这个国家对在了那里。”

“您本人跟政治的关系算得上密切吗，先生？”安德鲁斯先生问。

“并没有什么直接的关系，”我说，“尤其是这些年。战前也许算得上有过接触吧。”

“我刚刚想起一两年前的时候有位下院议员就叫史蒂文斯先生的。我在无线电上听过他的一两次演说。他对于住房问题有一些很有道理的看法。那不会就是您本人吧，先生？”

“哦，当然不是，”我笑道。现在回想起来，我真是一点都搞不懂当时我怎么会说出下面那番话来的；我只能说，置身于当时的那种环境当中，看来确乎是有如此表达的必要的。因为我接下来是这么说的：“事实上，相比而言，我个人更关心的是国际事务而非内政方针。是外交政策，也就是说。”

这番话对于我的听众们似乎产生的效果真让我有点感到吃惊。也就是说，他们似乎油然而生出一种敬畏之情。我赶紧补充说：“我可从来都没担任过任何高级职务，请注意。我所能够施加的任何一点点影响，都纯粹是非官方意义上的。”不过那种鸦雀无声的寂静仍旧维持了好几秒钟。

“请原谅，先生，”泰勒太太最后道，“不过您可曾见到过丘吉尔先生？”

“丘吉尔先生？他确实有几次造访过敝府。不过坦白说来，泰勒太太，在我最为经常地与闻国际大事的那段时期内，丘吉尔先生还不是如今这样关键的人物，也没人当真以为他日后会成为这样的大人物。当年更为经常性的来访者是艾登<sup>(3)</sup>先生和哈利法克斯勋爵这些人。”

“可是您毕竟是见到过丘吉尔先生本人的，对吧，先生？能够这么说是多大的荣幸啊。”

“丘吉尔先生的很多观点我也并不认同，”哈里·史密斯先生道，“不过毫无疑问，他的确是个伟人。能跟他这样的人物商讨大事，那肯定也是相当了不起的。”

“呃，我必须重申，”我说，“我跟丘吉尔先生并无太多的接触。不过您说得很对，能有机会结识他确是令人深感满足的幸事。事实上，总而言之，我想我的确是非常幸运的，这是我首先必须承认的一点。毕竟，我何幸之有，不但能够结识丘吉尔先生，而且还跟其他来自美洲和欧洲的众多伟大领袖和重要人物打过交道。您可能会觉得我何幸之有，居然能蒙这些伟人不弃，倾听我对于当时那些重大事件的意见，不错，回想起来，我的确备感荣宠。毕竟，能在这样一个国际的舞台上扮演一个角色，无论那个角色是何其渺小，的确是一种莫大的荣幸。”

“请恕我多嘴，先生，”安德鲁斯先生道，“不过艾登先生到底是个什么样的人呢？我的意思是在私底下。我一直都有个印象，觉得他是个非常正派的君子。是那种无论高低贵贱，他都愿意跟你交谈的人。我这个印象对吗，先生？”

“我想，大体而言，这是一种很精确的描述。不过当然了，最近这些年来我都再没有见过艾登先生，也许压力之下他已经有了很大的改变，也未可知。因为我曾经亲眼目睹过这样的实例，公共生活在短短的几年内就能把一个人改变到你都认不出来的程度。”

“这一点我毫不怀疑，先生，”安德鲁斯先生道。“就连咱们的哈里也不例外。他自己涉足政治也就几年的时间，打那以后他就跟变了一个人一样。”

大家又是一阵哄笑，而哈里·史密斯先生则把肩一耸，脸上勉强掠过一丝微笑。然后他说：

“我的确把大量精力投入到了竞选工作中。这当然只是地方性的，不要说是您交往过的那些大人物了，就算是重要程度只及他们一半的那种人，我也一个都没见过，先生，可是尽管我人微言轻，我相信我是在竭尽绵薄，做好我的本分。在我看来，英国是个民主国家，为了捍卫它的民主制度，我们这个村子里的人经受过的磨难并不亚于任何人。现在也该当我们来行使我们的权利了，这是我们每个人的职责。我们村里有不少优秀的年轻人为了能使我们享有这种权利而牺牲

了生命，依我之见，我们在座的每一个人都对他们有所亏欠，唯有尽好我们的本分才是对他们应有的回报。我们都有自己坚定不移的主见，我们的责任就是让大家都听到我们的见解。没错，我们这里地处偏远，我们只是个小村庄，我们大家都不再年轻了，而且我们的村子也越来越小了。在我看来，我们必须对我们村子里那些为国捐躯的小伙子们有个交代。这也正是为什么，先生，我投入这么多的时间和精力，就是确保我们的声音能够被上层听到。就算是我本人因此而有了改变，或者是提早把我送进了坟墓，我也在所不惜。”

“我可是警告过您的，先生，”泰勒先生微笑道。“好容易碰上个像您这样的人物，哈里是决不会不让您听听他那套长篇大论就轻易把您放过去的。”

大家又是一阵哄笑，不过我几乎马上就接口道：

“我想我非常理解您的立场，史密斯先生。我也很能理解您希望这个世界变得更加美好、您和本地的村民们应该拥有为使这个世界更加美好而贡献一己之力的良好愿望。这种情怀值得我们为之而鼓掌喝彩。我敢说，这跟促使我在战前投身于那些国际大事的出发点是非常类似的。所以，就如眼下的情形一样，尽管我们对于世界和平的把控无比脆弱，我也唯愿自己能够竭尽绵薄。”

“恕我直言，先生，”哈里·史密斯先生道，“不过我的观点跟您略有不同。对于像您这样的人物来说，要发挥您的影响总是轻而易举的事情。您可以将国内那些最有权势的大人物视作自己的朋友，跟他们称兄道弟。可是像我们村里的这些人呢，先生，我们年复一年可能连一个真正的绅士都见不着——也许应该把卡莱尔医生除外。他确实是位一流的医生，可是容我冒昧，他可没有像您这样的人脉。我们这些身处穷乡僻壤的人，很容易会忘掉我们身为公民的责任。这也正是我这么卖力地投身竞选活动的原因所在。不管大家同不同意我的政见——我知道，就算是在眼下的这个小屋里也没有人会同意我说的每一句话——至少我能促使他们开始思考。至少我提醒他们应该想到自己肩负的职责。我们生活于其中的是一个民主国家。我们曾为了它而浴血奋战。我们全都应该尽我们的本分，做好我们的本职工作。”

“真不知道卡莱尔大夫到底出了什么事，”史密斯太太道。“我相信我们这位绅士应该是需要来一点有教养的谈话了。”

这话又激起了更多的笑声。

“实际上，”我说，“尽管非常高兴能跟大家坦诚相见，但我得坦白承认我开始觉得有些疲惫不堪了……”

“那是肯定的，先生，”泰勒太太道，“您一定是已经非常累了。或许也应该再去给您拿一条毯子来。这个时候晚上真是冷得多了。”

“不，真的不用了，泰勒太太，夜里我肯定会睡得非常舒服的。”

可还没等我从桌边站起来，摩根先生就又道：

“我刚才还在想，先生，我们都很喜欢无线电里的有个伙计，叫作莱斯利·曼德雷克的。不知道您会不会碰巧认识他？”

我回答说并不认识他，正要再次起身准备告退的时候，却又被更多的这种是否认识各色人物的问题给耽搁住了。于是，一直等到史密斯太太大声宣告又有人来了的时候，我仍旧在桌旁坐着：

“啊，有人来了。我想应该是大夫终于到了。”

“我真的该告退了，”我讨饶道。“我真感觉筋疲力尽了。”

“可我敢肯定这次一定是大夫到了，先生，”史密斯太太道。“请您一定再多待几分钟。”

她正说话间，有一记敲门声响起，有个声音道：“是我呀，泰勒太太。”

被迎进来的那位绅士还相当年轻—大概四十开外—又高又瘦；真是够高的，事实上，他进门的时候必须得稍稍弯弯腰才行。他刚刚向我们大家道了个晚上好，泰勒太太已经忙不迭地跟他说：

“这位就是我们的绅士，大夫。他的汽车在荆棘山上抛了锚，结果他就不得不忍受哈里没完没了的政治演说了。”

医生走到桌前，向我伸出手来。

“在下理查德·卡莱尔，”我起身跟他握手时，他笑容可掬地道。“您的车运气真是糟透了。不过，相信您在这里肯定会得到很好的照顾。恐怕会被照顾得太好了一点，也未可知。”

“谢谢您，”我回答道。“每个人对我都再好不过了。”

“那敢情好，很高兴您能来到敝村。”卡莱尔大夫在几乎正对着我的桌对面落座。“您是从国内的哪个地方来的？”

“牛津郡，”我说，确实，我还真不容易抑制住加上“先生”这个称呼的本能。

“好地方啊。我有个叔叔就住在牛津城外。真是个好地方。”

“这位绅士刚刚才告诉我们，大夫，”史密斯太太道，“他认识丘吉尔先生呢。”

“是吗？我以前认识他的一个侄子，不过早就失去联系了。我还从来没有荣幸见这位伟人一面呢。”

“不光是丘吉尔先生，”史密斯太太继续道。“他还认识艾登先生。还有哈利法克斯勋爵呢。”

“真的吗？”

我能感觉到大夫的目光正在仔细地审视我。我正准备恰如其分地解释几句，还没等我开口，安德鲁斯先生就对医生道：

“这位绅士刚才告诉我们，他想当年曾参与过很多外交事务呢。”

“这是真的吗？”

我感觉卡莱尔大夫又继续观察了我相当长的一段时间。然后他才又重拾愉快的态度，问我道：

“这次驾车出游是四处游玩喽？”

“大体上算是吧，”我说，轻轻一笑。

“附近可是有不少的乡村胜景。哦，对了，安德鲁斯先生，很抱歉那把锯子还没还给您呢。”

“完全不用着急，大夫。”

有那么一小会儿，大家关注的中心暂时从我身上转移开来，我也终于能够不再说话了。然后，抓住一个貌似恰当的时机，我站起身来道：“恕我先行告退了。这真是个最令人愉快的夜晚，不过我现在真的必须告退了。”

“真遗憾您已经要离开了，先生，”史密斯太太道。“大夫才刚到。”

哈里·史密斯先生越过他妻子欠身跟卡莱尔大夫说：“我原本还希望这位绅士能对您那些有关大英帝国的观点发表些意见呢，大夫。”然后他又转向我继续道：“我们的大夫主张帝国内的所有小国都应该独立。我没什么学识，明知道他这个观点是错误的却又没法予以证实。不过我一直都有浓厚的兴趣，想听听像您这样的人物对这个问题究竟是怎么看的，先生。”

于是卡莱尔大夫的目光似乎再度审视了我一遍。然后他说：“是很遗憾，不过我们必须得让这位绅士上床休息了。这一天真够辛苦的，我想。”

“的确，”我说，再次轻轻一笑，然后开始起身绕过餐桌。让我尴尬的是，屋里所有的人，包括卡莱尔大夫在内，全都站了起来。

“非常感谢大家，”我面带微笑地致谢道。“泰勒太太，晚餐美味极了。祝各位晚安。”

大家齐声回答：“晚安，先生。”我都快走出房间的时候，医生的声音又让我停在了门口。

“我说，老伙计，”他说道，我转过身，看到他仍旧站着。“明天一早我就要去一趟斯坦伯里。我很愿意把你捎到你停车的那个地方。省得你再走过去。我们还可以顺道从特德·哈达克的修车铺那儿买上一桶汽油。”

“那真是太感谢啦，”我说。“可我不希望给您增添任何麻烦。”

“一点都不麻烦。七点半你看可以吗？”

“您这可真是帮了我的大忙了。”

“那好，就七点半了。请确保您的贵客在七点半前起床并且用完了早饭哦，泰勒太太。”然后又转向我补充道：“这样的话，我们终究还是可以谈一谈了。只是如此一来哈里就没办法心满意足地亲眼目睹我出乖露丑了。”

大家又是一阵哄笑，再一次互道晚安之后，我才终于能够上楼来到了我的这间避难所。

我确信我无须强调今晚由于大家对我个人那不幸的误解，使我感到多么地惶愧不安。我现在只能说的是，我实在也是不知道自己该怎么做，才能适时地避免情势演变成那样；因为等我意识到正在发生什

么的时候，事态已经进展到我若是把真相挑明势必会让所有人都大为难堪的程度。不管怎么说吧，这整件事虽说令人感到遗憾，倒也并没有造成任何实质性的伤害。我反正第二天一早就要离开这些人，而且应该再也不会碰到他们了。再对这件事耿耿于怀看来也就没什么必要了。

事有凑巧，我突然想到了一个实例，我相信恰好可以充分说明哈里·史密斯先生的观点所包含的真确性的实际限度。这一实例又碰巧是我的亲身经历，是发生在战前大约一九三五年的一个小插曲。

我记得，某一天的深夜——已经过了午夜——爵爷打铃把我叫进了会客室，用完晚餐以后爵爷就一直在那儿款待三位贵宾。那天夜里，我自然是已经有好几次被叫进会客室添补酒水饮料了，而且这几次我都发现宾主正就某些重大的议题进行深入的讨论。不过，就在我最后这次进入会客室的时候，宾主却都停下了话头，而且目不转睛地看着我。这时候爵爷道：

“请过来一下好吗，史蒂文斯？斯潘塞先生想跟你说句话。”

爵爷所说的那位绅士继续盯视了我一会儿，并没有改变他扶手椅里略显慵懒的坐姿。然后他才说：

“我的朋友，我有个问题想问问你。我们有个一直争执不下的问题需要你的帮助。告诉我，你认为我们跟美国之间的债务状况是导致目前贸易低迷的关键性因素吗？抑或，你认为这只是个幌子，问题的根源其实是我们放弃了货币的金本位？”

乍听之下，我自然是对这个问题有些吃惊，不过我很快也就明白了真实的状况；也就是说，很明显对方原本就期望我对这个问题束手无策的。的确，在我弄明白这是怎么一回事并且想出该怎么回答的这一小会儿中间，我甚至刻意表现出一副苦思冥想的表情，因为我看到在座的那几位绅士正愉快地相视而笑。

“非常抱歉，先生，”我说，“可对于这个问题我实在是无能为力。”

到了这个时候，我已经对当时的状况心知肚明了，不过那几位绅士仍继续窃笑不已。然后斯潘塞先生又开口道：

“那么，你也许能在另一个问题上帮到我们。倘若法国和布尔什维克之间当真达成了裁减军备的协议，你认为这对于欧洲的币值问题到底是利还是弊呢？”

“非常抱歉，先生，可对于这个问题我实在是无能为力。”

“哦，天哪，”斯潘塞先生道。“所以在这方面你也帮不上我们的忙了。”

又是一阵强忍住的笑声，然后爵爷才说：“很好，史蒂文斯。那就这样吧。”

“拜托了，达林顿，我还有一个问题想请教一下我们这位朋友，”斯潘塞先生道。“我亟需他在这个困扰我们许多人的问题上给予帮助，我们也全都认为这个问题对于我们该如何制定外交政策至关重要。我的朋友，请一定帮帮我们这个忙。赖伐尔<sup>(4)</sup>先生最近针对北非形势的演说的真实意图到底是什么？你也认为他这只不过是对于他自己党内民族主义极端分子迎头痛击的一个策略吗？”

“很抱歉，先生，可我在这个问题上实在帮不上忙。”

“你们看，先生们，”斯潘塞先生转向其他人道，“在这些问题我们的朋友都无法对我们有所帮助。”

这话又引起了一阵笑声，这一次几乎是毫无遮掩的了。

“然而，”斯潘塞先生继续道，“我们却仍旧坚持要将这个国家的重大决策权交到我们这儿的这位朋友以及像他这样的数百万民众手中。这也就难怪，受制于我们目前的议会制，面对众多的难题我们全都一筹莫展了，不是吗？那还不如干脆就请母亲联盟的委员会去筹备一场战役得了。”

这句话引来了一阵毫不掩饰的开心的大笑，爵爷在笑声当中悄声对我说：“谢谢你，史蒂文斯。”我这才得以告退。

这当然是一个稍稍令人有些不舒服的场景，不过这在我的职业生涯中根本算不上是我碰到的最难应付、甚至最不寻常的事情，您无疑也会同意，任何一位像样的专业人士都应该有能力镇定自若地予以应对。第二天早上，我几乎已经把这个小插曲完全都抛诸脑后了，我正站在弹子房里的一个梯凳上为肖像画掸尘的时候，达林顿勋爵走了进来，对我说：

“你瞧，史蒂文斯，那实在是太可怕了，我们昨天夜里让你承受的那番折磨。”

我停下手里的工作，说：“没有的事，先生。能效犬马之劳，我高兴还来不及呢。”

“那实在是太可怕了。我想全都是因为晚餐吃得太尽兴的缘故。请接受我的歉意。”

“谢谢您，先生。不过我很高兴地向您保证，昨晚我并没有感觉太过为难。”

爵爷相当疲惫地走到一把皮扶手椅前，坐下来叹了口气。从我在梯凳上的有利地势望去，我可以清清楚楚地看到他那映照在阳光中的整个瘦高的身形——冬日的阳光透过法式落地窗照进来，几乎洒满了整个房间。我记得，就在那一刻，我又一次深刻地认识到，短短几年的时间当中，生活的重压已经让爵爷付出了多么沉重的代价。他的体格原本就偏于纤瘦，如今已经瘦得让人有些心惊了，瘦得甚至都有些脱了形，他的头发已经过早地变白了，他的面容则显得紧张而又枯槁。良久，他望着落地窗外远处那开阔的草坡，然后他才又说：

“那实在是挺可怕的。不过你知道，史蒂文斯，斯潘塞先生是想向伦纳德爵士证明一个观点。实际上，如果这对你算得上是种安慰的话，你的确协助我们证实了一个非常重要的观点。伦纳德爵士一直都

在重复那些老套的废话。说什么人民的意志就是最明智的仲裁这类的老生常谈。你能相信吗，史蒂文斯？”

“的确，先生。”

“我们这个国家对已经过时的观念的认识实在是太慢了。其他的大国都已经充分地认识到，要想迎接每个新时代的各种挑战，就必须扬弃那些陈旧的，有时甚至是广受爱戴的习惯做法。可是我们的大不列颠却不是这个样子。仍旧有很多就像昨晚伦纳德爵士那样的论调。这也是为什么斯潘塞先生觉得有必要证实一下他的观点的原因所在。而且我告诉你，史蒂文斯，如果伦纳德爵士这样的人物能够因此而清醒过来，并认真思考一下，那么请相信我，你昨晚上所受的那番折磨就并没有白费。”

“的确，先生。”

达林顿爵爷又叹了口气。“我们总是落在最后，史蒂文斯。总是最后一个死抱着已经过时的体系不放。可是我们迟早必须要去面对现实。民主已经是一种属于过去的时代的诉求了。目前的世界太过复杂，已经不适合普选这一类的制度了。因为数不胜数的议会辩论只能导致停滞不前。在早些年也许还很不错，但在当今的世界呢？斯潘塞先生昨晚是怎么说的来着？他已经表述得很清楚了。”

“我相信，先生，他是将现今的议会制度比作了母亲联盟的委员会企图去筹备一场战役。”

“一点没错，史蒂文斯。我们这个国家，坦白说，已经远远落后于时代了。所有有远见卓识的人士都有必要让伦纳德爵士这类的守旧之士认识到这一点。”

“的确，先生。”

“我问问你，史蒂文斯。我们如今正处在一连串持续不断的危机当中。这是我跟惠特克先生一起去北方的时候亲眼所见的。人民在受苦。普通的正派的劳动人民尤其苦不堪言。德国和意大利已经开始以实际行动进行内部整顿。我想，包括无耻的布尔什维克也在以他们的方式进行整改。就连罗斯福总统，你看看他，他也代表美国人民义无反顾地采取了若干大胆的改革。可是你再看看我们这儿，史蒂文斯。年复一年，情况没有丝毫的改善。我们所做的就唯有争吵、辩论和因循守旧。任何不错的想法还没等经过一半必需的各种委员会的审批，就已经被修改得功效全无了。为数极少的几位有见识有职权的人士也

都被他周围那群无知之辈聒噪得止步不前。你从中会得出什么样的看法，史蒂文斯？”

“这个国家看起来的确正处于一种令人遗憾的境地当中，先生。”

“就是嘛。看看德国和意大利，史蒂文斯。看看强权的领导一旦得到认可，将有多大的作为吧。人家那儿可没有这套普选的谬论胡言。要是你的房子着了火，你是不会把全家都召集到会客厅里，花上一个钟头的时间来讨论各种逃生办法的，是也不是？这个办法也许曾经是挺不错的，可当今的世界已经变得无比复杂化了。你不能指望每个路人都通晓政治、经济和国际贸易之类的事务吧。况且他又为什么要去通晓这些东西呢？事实上，你昨晚回答得就很好，史蒂文斯。你是怎么说的来着？大意是这不属于你的认识范畴？5就是啊，它为什么应该属于你的认识范畴呢？”

在回忆达林顿勋爵当初的这些言论之时，我突然认识到以现在的眼光看来，他的很多观点自然是已经显得相当奇怪—有时候甚至是令人讨厌了。但无可否认的是，他那天早上在弹子房里对我说的那番话中自有某种重要的真确性存在。当然了，期望任何一位管家居然能够令人信服地回答斯潘塞先生那晚向我提出的那类问题，本身就是极为荒谬的，而哈里·史密斯先生那类人居然宣称人的“尊严”就端赖他是否能够对这样的问题具有明确的主见，那自然也就大谬不然了。就让我们把话说清楚吧：一个管家的职责就是提供优质的服务，而不是去瞎掺和那些国家大事。事实上，这一类国家大事无一例外都远远超出了你我这类人的理解范围，像我们这样的人若想做出一点成绩来，就必须认识到最佳的途径便是专注于属于我们认识范畴之内的那些事务；换言之，就是全心全意为那些真正掌握了文明命脉的伟大绅士们提供可能的范围内最好的服务。这一点貌似显而易见，但我马上就能想出太多相反的实例，即太多的管家至少曾经一度对此并不以为然。的确，哈里·史密斯先生今晚的那些话颇让我想起整个二三十年代困扰了我们这一代很多人的那种具有误导倾向的理想主义。我指的是在我们这一行中曾经盛行一时的一种观点，它主张任何一位具有严肃抱负的管家都应该以不间断地对其雇主进行重新的评估为己任—审视雇主的行为动机，分析其所持观点可能产生的结果。唯有通过这种途径，这派观点认为，你方能确保自己的服务善为人用，自己的才干得其所哉。虽然我在某种程度上愿意认同这种论点当中所包含的理想主义色彩，不过几乎毫无疑问的是，这正如史密斯今晚的那番慷慨陈词一般，是思想误入歧途之后的产物。你只需看看那些试图将此要求付

诸实践的管家们的实际情况，就会看到他们的事业——有些人的事业原本可能前途无量——结果只能是一事无成。我本人至少就认识两位同行，原本都是颇有些能力的，却从一个雇主跳到另一个雇主，永远感到不满，从来无法在任何地方安顿下来，终于落得个四处漂泊、销声匿迹的结果。出现这样的结果是丝毫都不会令人感到吃惊的。因为就实际操作的层面而言，你根本就绝无可能一边对雇主采取挑剔批判的态度，同时还能提供优质的服务。你的注意力如果因为这些考虑而受到干扰，你不单单是无法满足更高水准的服务所提出的各项要求；更为根本的问题在于，一个总是一心想就其雇主的事务形成他自己“明确的主见”的管家，就必定会缺乏所有优秀的从业者理当具备的一项根本性的素质，那就是忠诚。请不用误解我的意思；我所指的并非是那些平庸的雇主因为留不住高素质的专业人士为自己服务，因而抱怨员工们缺乏的那种盲目的“忠诚”。的确，我倒是最不会主张将自己的忠诚轻率地奉献给任何一位碰巧暂时雇用了你的绅士或淑女的那种人。然而，一个管家若是真想对于生命中的任何事情或是任何人具有任何一点价值的话，那就必须要在某个时刻停止无休止的找寻；就必须要有个时刻，他可以对自己这么说：“这位雇主具备了所有我认为高贵而且可敬的品质。从此以后我将献身于为他提供服务的事业当中。”这才是一种明智的忠诚。这其中又有什么“有损尊严”的呢？你只不过是接受了一个不容回避的事实：像你我这样的人是永远都不可能来到一个可以理解当今的世界大事的位置上的，最好的办法无一例外就是要完全信任我们已经认定为明智而又可敬的那位雇主，将我们全副的精力都奉献给为他提供最好的服务上，鞠躬尽瘁，死而后已。看看像马歇尔先生或者莱恩先生这样的管家——两人无疑都是我们这一行里最了不起的人物。我们能够想象马歇尔先生会跟坎伯利勋爵就其最近调任外交部一事进行磋商吗？我们会因为莱恩先生并没有在伦纳德·格雷爵士每一次发表下院演讲前对其进行诘难的习惯，就对他减少了丝毫的敬佩之情吗？我们当然不会。这样的态度当中有什么“有损尊严”的地方，又有什么该受谴责之处呢？既如此，如果由于时移世易的缘故，达林顿勋爵当初的那些努力已经被证明是受到了误导、甚至可以说是愚蠢之举，我在任何意义上又有什么该当受到责备的地方呢？在我为爵爷服务的这几十年间，一直都是爵爷独自一人在判定是非、权衡利弊，做出决断并一以贯之，而我只是恰如其分地谨守本分，负责处理好我本职范围内的那些事务。就我的工作而言，我可以说已经鞠躬尽瘁、克尽厥职，确实做到了众人或许会认定为“第一流”的水准。如果爵爷的一生及其事业在今天看来，已经至多被当

作是一种可悲的浪费，那也实在并非是我的过错——如果我为此而感到任何的遗憾或是羞惭的话，那可就真是违情悖理的苛责了。

第四天一下午

小康普顿，康沃尔郡

我终于抵达了小康普顿，此时我正在玫瑰花园旅店的餐厅里坐着，刚刚用完了午餐。窗外的雨一直下个没完。

这家玫瑰花园旅店虽说称不上豪华，却绝对算得上家常而又舒适，住在这里即使有些额外的花销你也会乐于承担的。它就位于村镇广场的一角，位置非常便捷，是一座相当迷人地爬满常春藤的庄园主宅第，我想大约能容纳三十几位客人入住。不过，我现在所在的这间“餐厅”却是在主宅一侧加盖的一幢现代风格的附属建筑——一个很长的平顶房间，其特色是房间的两侧各有一排宽大的窗户。从一侧望出去就是村镇广场；另一侧对着的是后花园，这家旅店应该就是由此而得名的。花园的避风设施看来做得很到位，园内也摆放了几套桌椅，天气晴好的时候应该是个用餐或是享用茶点的理想所在。事实上，我知道就在刚才还有几位客人已经开始准备在那儿用餐了，可是天公不作美，被来势汹汹的乌云给扰了清兴。大约一个钟头前服务员把我迎进餐厅的时候，员工们正急急忙忙地把花园里的桌椅拆除——而那几位刚刚还坐在那儿的客人，包括一位衬衣的领口还塞着一块餐巾的绅士，全都站在旁边，一脸手足无措的表情。在这之后，暴雨很快就倾盆而至，其势头之猛使得所有的客人一时间全都停止了用餐，惊讶地望着窗外的雨势。

我自己的桌子位于村镇广场的这一侧，所以过去这一个钟头的大部分时间里我都在观望那大雨落在广场以及停在外面的福特和其他几辆汽车上。这会子雨势已经有点稳定了下来，不过仍旧甚大，我也只好打消了出去在村里四处逛逛的雅兴。当然，我也曾想过不如现在就动身前去拜会肯顿小姐；可是我已经在信上告诉她我将在三点钟登门拜访，所以我觉得如果提前过去给她一个措手不及恐怕殊为不智。看来雨势如果不能尽快停歇的话，我很可能只得待在餐厅里喝喝茶，一直等到合适的时间直接从这儿动身了。我已经跟侍餐的那位年轻的女招待确认过了，到肯顿小姐目前的住处步行需要一刻钟左右，也就是说我至少还有四十分钟的时间需要消磨。

我也应该顺带说一句，我还没有傻到会对事情万一不谐的可能性没有任何心理准备。我其实再清楚不过了，我从未接到肯顿小姐任何

表示她很高兴跟我会面的答复。不过，以我对于肯顿小姐的了解，我倾向于认为大可把没有任何回信视作她的默许；如果会面果真有什么不便的话，我确信她肯定会毫不犹豫地告诉我的。再者说了，我也已经在信中讲清楚了我在这个旅店里订了房间，任何临时的变故都可以通过旅店留话给我；既然并没有任何此类的留言，那我相信我是可以将其视作一切正常的另一重保证的。

眼下的这瓢泼大雨真是令人始料未及，因为自打离开达林顿府，我实在是三生有幸，每天早上都是阳光明媚的好天气。事实上，今天一开始总的来说也是相当顺遂，早餐享用的是泰勒太太为我准备的产自农场的新鲜鸡蛋和吐司，卡莱尔大夫七点半的时候也依约开车来到门前，我因此得以在任何令人尴尬的交谈得以展开前就辞别了泰勒夫妇一夫妻俩再次坚拒了我给予酬劳的任何提议。

“我给你找到了一罐汽油，”卡莱尔大夫一边请我坐到他那辆路虎车的副驾驶座，一边对我说。我对他周到的考虑表示感谢，当我问及油钱的时候，我发现他也是坚决不肯接受。

“这是什么话，老朋友。不过是我在车库后面找到的一点剩油。不过也该够你开到克罗斯比门了，你可以在那里把油箱加得满满的。”

现在的莫斯科姆村沐浴在朝阳当中，其中心地带是一座由几家小店铺簇拥环绕的教堂，昨天傍晚的时候我曾经在山上看到过它的尖塔。不过，我并没有机会细细观赏这个村庄，因为卡莱尔大夫已经迅速地把车开上了一座农场的车道。

“这是条捷径，”他说，我们一路经过了几个谷仓和停在那儿的农用车辆。到处一个人影都不见，我们一度被一扇紧闭的大门挡住了去路，大夫说：“抱歉，老伙计，有劳你帮个忙吧。”

我从车上下来，刚要举步朝那扇门走去，附近的一个谷仓里就传出一阵狂怒的狗吠声，我把门打开，再度回到大夫的路虎车上时，不禁长出了一口气。

汽车沿着被大树夹在中间的狭窄山路往上攀爬时，我们交换了几句客套话，他问了我几句昨晚在泰勒家睡得可好之类的话。然后他相当突然地说道：

“我说，希望你不会认为我太过失礼。不过你该不会是某户人家的男仆之类的人吧？”

我得承认，听他这么说，我真是长出了一口气。

“您说得没错，先生。事实上，我是位于牛津附近的达林顿府的管家。”

“我想也是。所有那些见过温斯顿·丘吉尔等等的说法。当时我心里想，要么这个家伙是在大吹牛皮，要么就是一然后我突然想到，这倒是个简单的解释。”

卡莱尔大夫继续驾驶着汽车沿陡峭蜿蜒的山路往前开，一边转头向我微微一笑。我说：

“我并没有有意欺骗任何人，先生。可是……”

“哦，无须解释，老伙计。我很明白那是怎么回事。我的意思是说，你是那种一见之下就会给人深刻印象的样本。本地的这些村民肯定至少要把你当成一位勋爵或是公爵了。”大夫开怀大笑。“时不时地被人误认为一位爵爷，那感觉想必也不坏吧。”

继续往前行驶的过程中，有段时间我们都没再说话。然后卡莱尔大夫又对我说：“喔，希望你在这段跟我们短暂相处的时间内过得还算愉快。”

“的确非常愉快，谢谢您，先生。”

“那你觉得莫斯科姆的这些居民怎么样？都还不坏吧，呃？”

“非常迷人，先生。泰勒先生和太太待人尤其亲切善良。”

“希望你别总是这么叫我‘先生’了，史蒂文斯先生。确实，他们真是相当不赖。就我而言，我很乐于就在这里安度余生。”

我感觉从卡莱尔说这番话的语气当中听出了一丝古怪的意味。他再度发问的时候，口吻中也流露出一种有些奇怪的审慎意味：

“这么说，你觉得他们都挺迷人的，呃？”

“的确，大夫。非常意气相投。”

“那么他们昨晚都跟你说了些什么呢？希望他们没有用村里那些愚蠢的飞短流长惹得你不胜其烦。”

“绝对没有，大夫。事实上，昨晚的谈话显得相当真诚，还发表了一些非常有趣的观点。”

“哦，你说的是哈里·史密斯，”大夫笑道。“别把他放在心上。他的话听上一小会儿还是挺好玩儿的，不过他的脑子真是乱成了一锅粥。有时候你会觉得他像个共产党，可是他紧接着发表的那些言论，又让他听起来像是个极端保守反动的铁杆托利党<sup>(1)</sup>。而事实是他的脑子就像是一锅粥。”

“啊，他那些言论听起来非常有趣。”

“昨晚上他对你做的是什么样的演讲？大英帝国？还是国民医疗？”

“史密斯先生将自己限制在了更为普遍性的话题上。”

“哦？比如说？”

我轻咳了一声。“史密斯先生对于尊严的本质有些自己的思考。”

“啊哈。哈里·史密斯居然开始谈论哲理性的话题了。他怎么会说到这上面去的？”

“我相信史密斯先生是在强调他在村里开展的竞选工作的重要性。”

“啊，是吗？”

“他一直在向我强调这样一个观点，即莫斯科姆村的居民们对于各种各样的重大政治事件均持有非常明确的主见。”

“啊，那就对了。这听起来才像是哈里·史密斯其人。你大概也猜得到，那当然全都是一派胡言。哈里一天到晚地四处鼓动每个人都来关注各种重大议题。不过事实上，大家都宁肯不受他这个打扰。”

我们又有了片刻的沉默。最后，我说：

“恕我冒昧问一句，先生。不过我可否认为史密斯先生在某种程度上被大家视为了丑角？”

“嗯。这么说的话就有点过了，依我看。这儿的老百姓的确还有拥有某种政治良知的。他们感觉他们应该对这对那拥有明确的态度，正如哈里敦促他们去做的那样。可是其实，他们跟任何地方的老百姓没什么两样。他们只想平平静静地过他们的日子。哈里总有一大堆主意，想要改变这个那个的，可是说实话，村里头没有一个人希望发生什么剧烈的变动，即便是这些变动有可能会给他们带来好处。这里的

老百姓只想不受打扰地去过他们平静的小日子。他们不想受到这样或是那样问题的烦扰。”

大夫的语气中带出来的那种厌恶的腔调让我有些吃惊。不过他马上就恢复了常态，短促地一笑，道：

“从你那侧望去，村子相当漂亮。”

的确，在那一路段，下方不远处的村庄已经清晰可见。当然了，晨光赋予了村庄一种非常不同的面貌，但除此之外，那景色就跟昨天我在傍晚熹微的暮色中第一次看到它时相差无几，从这一点上我也可以猜想得出，我们距离我丢下福特车的地方已经非常近了。

“史密斯先生的观点似乎是，”我说，“一个人的尊严端赖于是否具有明确的主见之类的。”

“啊，不错，尊严。我都忘了。不错，这么说来哈里是想给它下一个哲学上的定义了。我的天哪。我想肯定全都是一派胡言。”

“他的那些结论也不一定都能得到大家的认可，先生。”

卡莱尔大夫点了点头，不过似乎已经沉浸在了自己的思绪当中。
“你知道吗，史蒂文斯先生，”终于，他说道，“我刚来到这个乡下地方的时候，我还是个坚定的社会主义者。信奉要全心全意为全体人民服务这类的信条。那时候是四九年。社会主义能让老百姓活得有尊严。这就是我初来乍到时的信念。对不起，你肯定不想听这样的蠢话。”他快活地转向我。“那么你呢，老伙计？”

“对不起，您指的是什么，先生？”

“你认为尊严到底是怎么一回事。”

我不得不说，这样直截了当的询问还是让我颇感意外的。“这是很难用几句话就解释清楚的，先生，”我说。“不过我想，这个问题归结为一点，无非就是不要当众宽衣解带。”

“对不起。什么意思？”

“尊严啊，先生。”

“啊。”大夫点了点头，不过看起来有点茫然。然后他说：“喏，这段路你应该觉得有些熟悉了吧。白天看来也可能大为不同了。啊，这就是那辆车啦？我的天哪，实在是太漂亮了！”

卡莱尔大夫把车停在福特车的正后方，从车上下来后再次说道：“天哪，多漂亮的车。”话音未落，他已经从车上拿出一个漏斗和一桶汽油，非常友善地帮我将汽油注入福特车的油箱。我原本还担心车子出了更严重的毛病，等我试着点火发动，听到引擎马上发出健康的突突声苏醒了过来，所有的担心也就烟消云散了。我向卡莱尔大夫道了谢，彼此别过，不过之后仍旧跟在他的路虎车后面又沿着蜿蜒的山路走了约莫一英里路，这才分道扬镳。

大约在九点左右，我越过郡界，进入了康沃尔郡。这时距离暴雨倾盆至少还有三个钟头的时间，天空中的云彩仍旧是一片雪白。事实上，今天上午我途经的很多景色都堪称迄今为止我所见到的最为迷人的美景。可不幸的是，我在大部分的时间里却不曾好好地给予它们应得的关注；因为我不妨直说，由于在当天之内我就将与肯顿小姐久别重逢——那些无法预知的意外状况姑且不谈——一念及此，我就不由得有些心神不定。还有就是，在开阔的田野间飞速行驶，一连好几英里都不见一个人影和一部车辆，要么就是小心地从那些妙不可言的小村庄中穿村而过，有的只不过是几幢石砌的村舍凑在一起，我发现自己重又沉溺于某些陈年旧事的回忆中不能自拔了。眼下，我坐在小康普顿这家舒适的旅社的餐厅里，手上还有一点时间可供消磨，我一边望着窗外村镇广场人行道上溅起的雨滴，一边忍不住在那些回忆往事的同一轨迹上继续低回徜徉。

有一个回忆尤其已经在我的脑海中翻腾了整整一上午——或者说应该说只是个记忆的片段，记忆中的那一刻出于某种原因在这些年间一直异常鲜明地印刻在我的脑海中。那个记忆是我独自一人站在肯顿小姐起坐间门外的后廊上；门是关着的，我也并没有正对着那扇门，而是半对着它，为是否应该敲门而举棋不定；因为我记得，我就在那时突然间确信一门之隔、距我仅几码之遥的肯顿小姐实际上正在伤心地哭泣。如我所说的那样，这一刻已经牢牢地嵌入了我的记忆中，同样难以忘怀的还有当时我站在那里内心深处升腾而起的那种特别的感受。然而，我现在却记不清到底是什么原因导致我那样站在后廊之上了。现在看来，之前我在试图理清类似回忆的时候，很有可能将这一幕情景归到了肯顿小姐刚刚收到姨妈死讯之后了；也就是说我将她一个人留在房间里独自悲伤，来到走廊的时候才意识到我并没有向她致以应有的慰唁那一次。可是如今在经过仔细的思量以后，我相信在这件事上我极有可能有些搞混了；这个记忆当中的片段实际上是源自肯顿小姐的姨妈去世至少几个月后的某个晚上——事实上就是小卡迪纳尔先生相当意外地突然造访达林顿府的那一晚。

卡迪纳尔先生的父亲大卫·卡迪纳尔爵士多年来一直都是爵爷的挚友兼同僚，但在我此刻正在讲述的那天晚上，爵士因为一次骑马的事故不幸去世已经有三四年时间了。与此同时，小卡迪纳尔先生已经开始成为知名的专栏作家，专擅以警言妙句来评论国际事务。显然，达林顿勋爵颇不喜欢这样的专栏，因为我就记得有好几次，他放下手里的报纸，特意对我说出这样的话来：“小雷吉又在写这些哗众取宠的玩意儿了。幸好他父亲是眼不见心不烦了。”不过卡迪纳尔先生的专栏倒是并没有妨碍他在府里常来常往；的确，爵爷从未忘记这位年轻人是他的教子，一直将他视如己出。尽管如此，卡迪纳尔先生倒也谨守礼仪，从来都不会不提前打个招呼就跑过来用餐，所以那天傍晚我去应门的时候，发现是他双臂抱着公文包站在门外，还是有点吃惊的。

“哦，哈啰，史蒂文斯，你好吗？”他说。“今晚不巧碰上了点小麻烦，不知道达林顿勋爵会不会许我借宿一夜。”

“很高兴再次见到您，先生。我这就去禀报爵爷您来了。”

“原本打算住在罗兰先生府上的，可是好像是有了些误会，他们已经去了别的什么地方。希望这个时候贸然前来不会造成太大的不便。我是说，今晚没有任何特别的安排，对吧？”

“我相信，先生，晚饭后爵爷是有几位客人要前来造访的。”

“哦，真不走运。我好像来得不是时候。我最好还是低调小心为上。反正今晚我还有几篇稿子要赶出来。”卡迪纳尔先生指了指他的公文包。

“我这就启禀爵爷说您来了，先生。不管怎么说，您正好可以跟他一起用餐。”

“那太好了，我正希望如此。不过我想莫蒂默太太应该不会很高兴见到我这时候过来蹭饭的。”

我把小卡迪纳尔先生一个人留在会客室里，前往书房去禀告爵爷，发现他正全神贯注地阅读某一本书。我向他禀告卡迪纳尔先生刚刚到访的时候，意外地发现有一抹不耐烦的神色从他脸上闪过。然后他往椅背上一靠，就像是想弄清楚某个难题。

“告诉卡迪纳尔先生我马上就下去，”他终于道。“他可以先自己随意消遣一小会儿。”

我回到楼下后，发现卡迪纳尔先生正相当烦躁不安地在会客室里走来走去，没事找事地细细查看着那些他想必早就已经再熟悉不过的小摆件。我传达了爵爷的口信，问他需要我给他送些什么酒水茶点过来。

“哦，眼下就给我来点茶吧，史蒂文斯。今晚爵爷要会什么客？”

“抱歉，先生，这个问题恐怕我帮不到您。”

“什么都不知道？”

“很抱歉，先生。”

“唔，奇了怪了。哦，好吧。今晚最好还是低调小心为上。”

我记得此后没过多久，我下楼来到了肯顿小姐的起坐间。她正坐在桌前，但她面前的桌子上空空如也，她手上也没有任何的活计；的确，从她的行为举止上可以看得出来，恐怕在我敲门前她已经这个样子坐了有段时间了。

“卡迪纳尔先生来了，肯顿小姐，”我说。“今晚要睡在他通常使用的那间客房。”

“好的，史蒂文斯先生。我外出前会安排好的。”

“啊，您晚上要外出吗，肯顿小姐？”

“确实要外出，史蒂文斯先生。”

也许是我脸上流露出一丝惊讶，因为她继续道：“您应该记得，史蒂文斯先生，我们半个月前就讨论过的。”

“是的，当然了，肯顿小姐。请您原谅，我只是一时间把这件事给忘了。”

“有什么问题吗，史蒂文斯先生？”

“没有，肯顿小姐。今晚有几位客人要来，不过您没有理由为此就留在府内。”

“我们确实半个月前就说好我今晚要外出的，史蒂文斯先生。”

“那是当然，肯顿小姐。我必须请您原谅。”

我转身要离开，不过在门口又因为肯顿小姐的话停了下来：

“史蒂文斯先生，我有件事想告诉您。”

“是吗，肯顿小姐？”

“跟我那位旧识相关。今晚我就是要去见他的。”

“是这样啊，肯顿小姐。”

“他已经向我求了婚。我想您有权知道这件事。”

“的确，肯顿小姐。这是件很让人高兴的事。”

“我还在考虑是否答应。”

“是吗。”

她低头望了一眼自己的双手，不过目光几乎马上又转回到我的身上。“我那位旧识下个月就要去西南部担任一个新职了。”

“是吗。”

“我也说了，史蒂文斯先生，求婚的事情我还在考虑。不过，我想还是应该让您知道这件事。”

“对此我非常感激，肯顿小姐。衷心祝您度过一个愉快的夜晚。我这就先告退了。”

应该是在大约二十分钟以后，我又再次碰到了肯顿小姐，而这个时候我正忙着准备晚餐。事实上，我当时捧着一个摆得满满的托盘，正走到后楼梯的中间，突然听到楼下一阵怒冲冲的脚步踩得地板砰砰直响。我转过身去，看到肯顿小姐正从楼梯下面瞪着眼睛望着我。

“史蒂文斯先生，据我的理解，您是不是希望今天晚上我留下来当班？”

“没有的事，肯顿小姐。正如您指出的，您的确早就已经知会过我了。”

“可我看得出来，您对于我今晚外出表现得很不高兴。”

“恰恰相反，肯顿小姐。”

“你以为在厨房里弄得这么一连片鸡飞狗跳，在我门外头来回这么砰砰砰地跺脚就能让我改变主意了吗？”

“肯顿小姐，厨房里的那一点点小骚动只不过是因为卡迪纳尔先生最后一刻才赶了来用餐。绝对不存在任何您今晚不该外出的理

由。”

“我希望把话跟你讲清楚，史蒂文斯先生，不管有没有你的恩准我横竖都是要去的。我几个礼拜前就已经安排好了。”

“的确如此，肯顿小姐。而且我想再次向您表明，希望您今晚过得非常愉快。”

用餐的时候，两位绅士之间的气氛似乎有点古怪。好一阵子，两人只是一言不发地默默用餐，爵爷尤其显得心不在焉。有一次，卡迪纳尔先生问道：

“今晚有什么特别之处吗，先生？”

“嗯？”

“您今晚的客人啊。不同寻常吗？”

“恐怕我不能奉告，我的孩子。事关绝密。”

“老天爷。我想这也就意味着我不该列席打扰了。”

“列席什么，我的孩子？”

“今晚将要发生的不论什么事呀！”

“哦，那些事你是丝毫都不会感兴趣的。总之，今晚的事情是最高机密。你是不能与闻的。哦，不，绝对不行。”

“哦，老天爷。听起来这可真是非同寻常。”

卡迪纳尔先生非常热切地望着爵爷，可是爵爷却自顾继续用起餐来，再没多说一句话。

饭毕，两位绅士退席来到吸烟室喝波尔图、抽雪茄。在收拾餐厅同时也为迎接今晚的客人整理会客室的过程中，我不得不几次三番经过吸烟室的大门，于是我也就不可避免地注意到两位绅士跟刚才用餐时的不言不语大为不同，而是开始用相当激烈的语气交谈起来。一刻钟以后，甚至响起了怒气冲冲的声音。当然了，我并没有驻足细听，不过也免不了听到爵爷的喊叫：“可是这不关你的事，我的孩子！不关你的事！”

两位绅士终于从吸烟室出来的时候，我正在餐厅里。两人似乎都已经冷静了下来，走过门厅时只听见爵爷对卡迪纳尔先生说：“给我记住了，我的孩子。我是信任你的。”对此，卡迪纳尔先生恼怒地嘟

嚷了一声：“是，是，我向您保证。”随后两人的脚步声就分开了，爵爷返回自己的书房，卡迪纳尔先生则走向藏书室。

差不多正好八点半的时候，院子里传来汽车停下的声音。我打开大门，迎面是个司机，越过他的肩膀我可以看到几位警员正分散到庭院四处不同的位置。下一刻，我就将两位显贵的绅士迎进屋内，爵爷在门厅里迎接，然后马上将来客引入会客室。约莫十分钟以后，又传来一辆汽车的声音，我开门迎接的客人是里宾特洛甫先生，德国大使，那时候已经是达林顿府的常客了。爵爷前来迎接，两位绅士交换了一个尽在不言中的眼神，然后一起走进了会客室。几分钟后，我被叫进去为客人提供茶点酒水，四位绅士正在讨论不同种类的香肠各自的优点，至少表面上看来气氛还是挺欢快友好的。

这之后，我就在会客室外面的门厅里坚守自己的岗位——也就是门厅的拱门入口处，每逢重要会谈我照例都守在这里——一直到大约两个钟头以后，后门的门铃响了，我才不得不离开那里。下楼后，我发现一位警员和肯顿小姐站在一起，要求我证实后者的身份。

“完全是为了安全起见，小姐，绝无冒犯之意，”警官这么嘟囔了一句，重又回到了户外的夜色当中。

我在给后门上门的时候，注意到肯顿小姐在等着我，就说：

“相信您肯定度过了一个愉快的夜晚，肯顿小姐。”

她没有搭腔，于是，在我们一起穿过黑暗的厨房时我又重复了一遍：“相信您肯定度过了一个愉快的夜晚，肯顿小姐。”

“确实如此，谢谢您，史蒂文斯先生。”

“听您这么说我很高兴。”

在我身后，肯顿小姐的脚步声突然停了下来，我听到她说：

“你就没有一丁点的兴趣，想知道今晚在我的旧识和我之间发生过什么事吗，史蒂文斯先生？”

“我不是有意要有所怠慢，肯顿小姐，不过我真的必须马上回到楼上去。事实是，具有全球性重要意义的事件此时就正在府内进行当中呢。”

“府里又何曾发生过不重要的事呢，史蒂文斯先生？好吧，既然你这么匆忙，我也就直接告诉你得了：我已经接受了我那位旧识的求婚。”

“您说什么，肯顿小姐？”

“我已经答应嫁给他了。”

“啊，真的吗，肯顿小姐？那就请您允许我向您道贺了。”

“谢谢你，史蒂文斯先生。当然，我会很高兴服务至合约期满。不过，如果您能够稍早些许我离职的话，我们都将不胜感激。我的旧识两周后就得前往西南部就任他的新工作了。”

“我将尽我所能及早找到顶替您的人选，肯顿小姐。现在，我就先失陪了，我必须回到楼上去了。”

我重又开始迈步向前，可就在我已经来到通往走廊的门口时，我听见肯顿小姐叫了一声：“史蒂文斯先生，”于是我再度转过身来。她仍旧原地未动，因此在跟我讲话时不得不稍稍提高了一下嗓门，结果在黑暗而又空寂如洞窟的厨房内造成了一种相当诡异的回声。

“我是不是该这样认为，”她说，“在我为府里服务这么多年以后，除了你刚才的那句话以外，对于我可能离开的消息你就再没别的可说了？”

“肯顿小姐，您已经得到了我最为热忱的道贺。不过我要再重复一遍，楼上正在进行事关全球意义的重要会谈，我必须回到我的岗位上去了。”

“你知道吗，史蒂文斯先生，在我的旧识和我的心目当中你一直都是个非常重要的人物。”

“真的吗，肯顿小姐？”

“是的，史蒂文斯先生。我们经常拿有关于你的逸闻趣事来自娱自乐，消磨时间。比如说，我的旧识就总是喜欢让我向他展示你在往膳食上撒胡椒时把鼻孔捏起来的样子，真是乐此不疲，我的演示总能逗得他哈哈大笑。”

“是吗。”

“他还很是喜欢你对员工们的‘鼓气讲话’。我必须说，我已经成为模仿你那些讲话的行家里手了。我只消模仿你的口吻说上个两三句，就能让我们俩全都笑破了肚皮。”

“是吗，肯顿小姐。请您原谅，我必须得告退了。”

我上楼来到门厅里，重又回到我的岗位上。不过，还没过五分钟时间，卡迪纳尔先生就出现在藏书室的门口，招手叫我过去。

“真不想麻烦你，史蒂文斯，”他说。“不过能不能请你再给我拿点白兰地来？先前你送进来的那一瓶像是已经喝完了。”

“您想要什么酒水点心请尽管吩咐，先生。不过，有鉴于您还有专栏文章须要完成，我很怀疑再喝更多的白兰地是否妥当。”

“我的专栏不会有什么问题的，史蒂文斯。你就行行好，再给我拿点白兰地来吧。”

“那就好，先生。”

过了一会儿，当我回到藏书室的时候，卡迪纳尔先生正在书架前往来徘徊，仔细查看着架上藏书的书脊。我能看到旁边的一张书桌上胡乱地散放着好几张稿纸。我走上前来的时候，卡迪纳尔先生感激地轻呼了一声，扑通一声坐在一把皮质扶手椅上。我走上去，往杯里倒了点白兰地，给他递了过去。

“你知道，史蒂文斯，”他说，“咱们已经是多年的老朋友了，对不对？”

“的确，先生。”

“每次到这儿来，我都期望着能跟你好好聊一聊。”

“是的，先生。”

“你愿意跟我一起喝一杯吗？”

“非常感谢您的好意，先生。可是不行，谢谢您，我不能那么做。”

“我说，史蒂文斯，你在这儿过得好吗？”

“非常之好，谢谢您，先生，”我说着，轻轻一笑。

“没觉得有什么不舒服的吗？”

“有点累吧，也许，不过我身体很好，谢谢您，先生。”

“既然如此，你就该坐下来。不管怎么说，我刚才也说了，咱们是多年的老朋友了。所以我真是应该跟你以诚相待。你无疑也该猜到了，今晚我到这儿来并非纯粹是出于凑巧。是有人向我通风报信的，

你知道。关于今晚这儿将有什么事情发生。就在此刻，就在门厅的那一侧。”

“是的，先生。”

“我真心希望你能坐下来，史蒂文斯。希望咱们能像朋友那样说话，你站在那里端着那个该死的托盘就像是随时都打算走开似的。”

“对不起，先生。”

我把托盘放下，在卡迪纳尔先生指给我的那把扶手椅上坐下一以一种谦恭得体的坐姿。

“这样就好些了，”卡迪纳尔先生道。“听我说，史蒂文斯，我猜想首相<sup>(2)</sup>现在就在会客室里吧，是不是？”

“首相吗，先生？”

“哦，没关系，你不必告诉我的。我很理解你的位置相当微妙。”卡迪纳尔先生长叹一声，厌倦地看了一眼散置在书桌上的稿件。然后他说：

“我应该都无须向你说明我对爵爷怀有的是种什么样的感情，是不是，史蒂文斯？我是说，他对我来说一直就是我的另一位父亲。我都无须向你说明，史蒂文斯。”

“是的，先生。”

“我对他关切备至。”

“是的，先生。”

“我知道你也一样。对他关切备至。是不是，史蒂文斯？”

“的确如此，先生。”

“那就好。这么一来我们也就知道彼此的立场了。可是我们必须面对现实。爵爷正身处险境。而且我眼看着他越陷越深，不瞒你说，我真是忧心忡忡。他已经深陷其中无法自拔了，你知道吗，史蒂文斯？”

“真的吗，先生？”

“史蒂文斯，你知道就在我们坐在这里闲话的同时正在发生什么吗？距我们只有几码之外的地方正在发生什么吗？就在那个房间里——

我并不需要你来证实——英国的首相和德国的大使此刻正共处一室。爵爷真是神通广大，居然能促成这样的会谈，而他相信——衷心地相信——他这是在做一件高尚的好事，善莫大焉。你可知道爵爷今晚为什么会将这几位大人物邀请到这里吗？你可知道有什么样的事情正在这里发生吗，史蒂文斯？”

“恐怕我并不知道，先生。”

“恐怕你并不知道。告诉我，史蒂文斯，难道你根本就不关心吗？你就不好奇吗？老天爷，伙计，这幢房子里正在发生一件至关重要的大事。你就一点都不感到好奇吗？”

“处在我这样的位置上是不宜于对这样的事感到好奇的，先生。”

“可是你关心爵爷啊。你对爵爷关心备至，你刚刚告诉我的。如果你真心关心爵爷的话，难道你不该感到担心吗？不该至少有那么一丁点好奇吗？英国首相和德国大使经由你的雇主的撮合，深夜来到这里进行密谈，你就一点都不感到好奇吗？”

“我并不是说我不感到好奇，先生。可是我的职责本分是不允许我对这类事情表现出好奇的。”

“你的职责本分不允许？啊，我想你肯定是认为这才叫忠心耿耿。对不对？你认为这就是忠心耿耿吗？如此说来，到底是对爵爷，还是对王国政府忠心耿耿呢？”

“很抱歉，先生，我不明白您这话到底是什么意思。”

卡迪纳尔先生再次长叹一声，摇了摇头。“我没什么意思，史蒂文斯。坦白说吧，我不知道应该怎么做才对。可是你至少可以感到好奇吧。”

他沉吟半晌，在此期间，他像是一直在茫然地紧盯着我们脚边的那一圈地毯。

“你确定不想跟我一起喝一杯吗，史蒂文斯？”他终于开口说道。

“不了，谢谢您，先生。”

“我还是告诉你吧，史蒂文斯。爵爷正被人玩弄于股掌之上呢。我已经做了大量的调查，我对于德国当下情势的了解不亚于国内的任何一个人，我告诉你吧，爵爷正在被人愚弄和利用呢。”

我没有搭腔，卡迪纳尔先生则继续茫然地盯着地面。过了半晌，他才继续道：

“爵爷是个高尚的大好人。但事实是，现在的局势他根本就玩不转了。他被人算计了。纳粹拿他当个小卒子一样摆布。你注意到没有，史蒂文斯？至少这三四年以来情况一直都是这样，你注意到没有？”

“很抱歉，先生，我并没有注意到曾出现过任何类似的情况。”

“难道你就从来都没有产生过怀疑？哪怕一丝一毫的疑心：那位希特勒先生，通过我们亲爱的朋友里宾特洛甫先生，一直都把爵爷当作一个小卒子一样摆布利用，就像他摆布柏林他眼皮子底下的其他任何一个一个小卒子一样易如反掌吗？”

“很抱歉，先生，我恐怕并没有注意到曾出现过任何类似的情况。”

“不过我也猜到你大概是不会注意到的，史蒂文斯，因为你从来都不会感到好奇。你只是任由一切在你眼皮子底下发生，从来也没想过要去看看那正在发生的到底是什么。”

卡迪纳尔先生调整了一下在扶手椅上的坐姿，以便坐得稍微端正一点，有一度他像是一心专注于旁边书桌上尚未完成的文稿。然后他又说道：

“爵爷是个真正的绅士。这正是问题的症结所在。他是个绅士，他跟德国人打了一场战争，他出于本能就要对那已经败北的敌人表现出慷慨和友谊。这是他的本能。而这就因为他是个绅士，一个货真价实的英国老绅士。这一点你肯定已经看到了，史蒂文斯。你怎么可能看不到呢？他们也正是一直都在利用这一点，对他的这种本能进行操控，将这种善良高贵的本能转变成了另一种东西——某种他们可以用来为自己邪恶的目的服务的东西，这一点你怎么可能看不到呢？你肯定已经看到了，史蒂文斯。”

卡迪纳尔先生再次紧盯着地板。沉吟良久之后才说：

“我还记得好几年来这儿的那次，那位美国老兄在这儿的那次。我们举行了一次盛大的会议，家父亲自参加了筹备工作。我还记得那位美国老兄比我现在醉得还厉害，他当着所有来宾的面，在宴会上站起来致辞。他指着爵爷的鼻子说他是外行。说他是拙劣的外行，成事不足败事有余，说他根本就是书生意气不自量力。唉，我不

得不说，史蒂文斯，那位美国老兄还真是说到了点子上。这还真是无可否认的事实。当今的世界太过险恶，是容不得你那些善良高贵的本能的。你自己也亲眼看到了，是不是，史蒂文斯？他们是如何操控那些善良和高贵的力量，将它们玩弄于股掌之上的。你自己也亲眼看到了，是也不是？”

“很抱歉，先生，可我不觉得自己已经看到您说的这些情况。”

“你不觉得已经看到了。哦，我真不知道你到底是怎么了，可我一定得采取点行动了。要是家父还在的话，他绝对不会袖手旁观，肯定会出面阻止的。”

卡迪纳尔先生再次陷入沉默，而且一度显得极度伤感——可能因为重又勾起了对亡父的回忆。“你难道就心安理得吗，史蒂文斯，”他终于道，“眼看着爵爷就这么走到了悬崖边上？”

“很抱歉，先生，我不是很明白您到底是什么意思。”

“你不明白，史蒂文斯？好吧，既然我们是朋友，我就把话挑明了吧。在过去这几年当中，爵爷可能是希特勒先生在本国为他摇旗呐喊，助他实施其宣传诡计最为得力的一枚棋子了。尤其是因为他为人真诚、品德高尚，根本认识不到他所作所为的真实性质，那效果就更好了。仅仅在过去的三年当中，柏林已经跟我国六十余位最有影响力的人士建立起了卓有成效的联系，而爵爷就是最为关键的推动者。这对于德方起到的作用可是大了去了。里宾特洛甫先生几乎可以完全绕过我们的外交部门，直接接触到我们的最高层。就好像他们搞过那次卑鄙的纽伦堡集会又举办了那届卑鄙的奥运会<sup>(3)</sup>还嫌不够似的，你知道他们现在正撮弄着爵爷鼓捣什么吗？你知道他们现在正在讨论什么吗？”

“恐怕我并不知道，先生。”

“爵爷之前一直试图劝说首相本人接受邀请，访问德国与希特勒先生会面。他真心诚意地认为首相对于德国的现政权存在着严重的误解。”

“我看不出对于这件事有什么好反对的，先生。爵爷一贯都致力于促进国与国之间更好地相互理解。”

“还不止于此，史蒂文斯。就在这一刻，除非是我大错特错了，就在这一刻，爵爷正在讨论请陛下<sup>(4)</sup>亲自访德，与希特勒先生会面的构想。我们的新国王一直都很热衷于纳粹思想，这也不是秘密了。

哼，显然陛下本人现在都很急切地想接受希特勒先生的邀请呢。就在这一刻，史蒂文斯，爵爷正在尽一切努力想排除外交部对这一骇人听闻的提议所持的反对意见。”

“很抱歉，先生，可是我看不出爵爷的所作所为当中哪怕有一丝一毫不够高尚的地方。毕竟，他在尽其所能，确保欧洲能继续维持既有的和平。”

“告诉我，史蒂文斯，你当真就没想到过我有可能是对的吗，不管这种可能性有多小？难道你对我这长篇大套的说法就没有一丝一毫的好奇吗？”

“很抱歉，先生，可我不得不说，我毫无保留地信任爵爷的判断是最为明智的。”

“任何一个具有明智判断力的人，都不会在莱茵兰事件<sup>(5)</sup>之后对希特勒先生说的每一句话仍旧坚信不疑了。爵爷真是螳臂当车，不自量力啊。哦，老天，这么一来我算是彻底得罪你了。”

“没有的事，先生，”我说，因为我已经听到会客室传来了叫人的铃声，立刻站起身来。“看来爵爷有事要吩咐。恕我告退了。”

会客室里弥漫着浓厚的雪茄烟雾。的确，那几位无比显贵的绅士还在不停地抽着雪茄，每个人的表情都异常肃穆，而且一言不发，爵爷吩咐我去酒窖里取一瓶特别年份的上好波尔图葡萄酒来。

时值夜静更深，这个时候从后楼梯下楼的脚步声肯定会显得格外响亮，无疑也因此而惊醒了肯顿小姐。因为当我摸黑沿着走廊往前走的时候，通往她起坐间的门打开了，她出现在门口，屋内的灯光照亮了她的身影。

“没想到您还在这儿，肯顿小姐，”我走近她的时候说。

“史蒂文斯先生，我刚才的举动真是太傻了。”

“请原谅，肯顿小姐，不过我现在实在没有时间跟您交谈。”

“史蒂文斯先生，您千万别把我刚才说的任何话放在心上。我真是一时犯了傻。”

“您说的任何一句话我都没往心里去，肯顿小姐。事实上，我都不记得您指的到底是什么了。极端重大的事件正在楼上进行当中，我实在没时间停下来跟您闲话客套了。我建议您还是早点休息吧。”

说完后我就忙不迭地继续往前走，一直等我都快走到厨房大门口的时候，走廊上才重新陷入一片黑暗，这说明肯顿小姐已经关上了她起坐间的房门。

我在酒窖里没花多长时间就找到那瓶要找的葡萄酒，并为把酒端给客人做好了必要的准备工作。如此，就在我跟肯顿小姐短暂邂逅之后不过几分钟的时间，我就再次沿着同样那条走廊往回走了，这次是用托盘端着那瓶酒。当我走近肯顿小姐的房门时，我从门框的缝隙中透出的灯光知道她还在里面。而就是那一刻——我现在可以肯定了一这些年来一直牢牢地铭刻在了我的记忆当中：就是那一刻，我在黑暗的走廊中停下脚步，手里端着托盘，内心深处涌起一种越来越肯定的感觉，就在几码开外、房门的另一侧，肯顿小姐正在哭泣。据我的记忆所及，我的这种确信并没有任何确凿的证据可以证实——我当然也并没有听到任何的哭泣声——然而我记得当时我非常肯定，如果我敲门进去的话，一定会发现她正满面泪痕。我不知道我在那儿站立了多久；当时的感觉似乎很久很久，可事实上我想也只不过几秒钟罢了。因为，当然了，我的职责是赶快回到楼上去为国内那几位至尊至贵的绅士上酒，我认为自己是不可能耽搁太久的。

我回到会客室的时候，发现那几位绅士的神情仍旧相当严肃。不过除此之外，我也没有机会对当时的气氛产生其他印象了，因为我刚刚把酒送进去，爵爷就亲自接过托盘，对我说：“谢谢你，史蒂文斯，交给我就行了。这里没你的事了。”

再次穿过门厅，我又回到拱门下我惯常的位置，在接下来的一个钟头左右的时间里，也就是直到客人最终离去之前，再没有任何需要我离开这个守望的位置的事情发生。不过，我侍立在那里的那一个钟头的时间，这些年来却一直异常鲜明地留在我的记忆当中。起先，我的心情——我并不介意承认这一点——是有些低落的。不过就在我继续伫立在那里的过程中，一件有些奇怪的事情就开始发生了；也就是说，我的内心深处开始涌起一种深切的成就感。我不记得当时我对这种感觉是如何认识的了，不过如今回顾起来，这其中的缘由也就并不难解释了。毕竟，我刚刚经历了一个极端煎熬的夜晚，而在此期间我竭尽所能，始终都保持了一种“与我的职位相称的高尚尊严”——不仅如此，我还是以一种就连家父也会引以为傲的方式做到这一点的。在门厅的对面，就在我的目光一直停驻其上的那两扇大门后面，就在我刚刚履行过职责的那个房间里，欧洲几位最有权势的绅士正在商讨着我们这块大陆的终极命运。有谁还能怀疑，就在那一刻，我已经真真切切地靠近了所有管家都梦寐以求的那个决定着世界运行的轴心？我可

以这样认为，当我伫立在那里思量着当晚的那些重大事件时——那些已经发生以及仍在进行当中的事件——在我看来，它们就是我这一生所能达到的所有成就的一个总结。除此以外，我看不出还能有别的什么原因，可以解释那晚我何以会感受到那种令我如此振奋昂扬的成就感了。

第六天一傍晚

韦茅斯

这座海边小镇是多年来我一直都很想来看看的地方。我已经听很多人谈起曾在这里度过了多么愉快的假期，而西蒙斯太太也在《英格兰奇景》中称其为“连续多日都能让游客游兴不减的小镇”。事实上，她还特别提到了这个我流连漫步了半个钟头的码头，尤其推荐游客在傍晚时分码头被各色彩灯照亮的时候前来游赏。刚刚我才从一位管理人员那里得知，彩灯“很快”就要亮起了，所以我已经决定就坐在这张长椅上，等待这一刻的到来。从我坐的位置可以尽情欣赏海上落日的奇景，尽管还余留着不少的日光——那天是个响晴的好天——我能看到沿海岸一线，这里那里已经开始亮起了灯光。与此同时，码头上依旧人群熙攘；在我背后，无数脚步踩在木板栈道上发出的咚咚声不绝于耳，从来就没有间断过。

我是昨天下午来到这个小镇的，决定在这儿多住一晚，好让自己能够从容悠闲地在这儿享受这一整天的时光。我得说，有一整天的时间不用再开着车在路上走，对我来说委实是种解脱；因为自己开车虽说也是种颇有乐趣的活动，但开久了也是会让人觉得有点疲累的。不管怎么说，我还有充足的时间可以在这儿多待这么一天；明天一早动身的话，就能确保在下午茶之前返回达林顿府。

从我和肯顿小姐在小康普顿玫瑰花园旅店的茶室见面到现在，已经有整整两天的时间了。的确，结果我们是在那里见的面，是肯顿小姐主动来旅店找的我，这完全出乎了我的意料。用过午餐以后，我正在无所事事地消磨时间的时候——我也不过就是坐在原地，望着窗外不绝如缕的雨滴——一名旅店的员工来通知我说，前台有位女士想要见我。我起身来到外面的大堂，却没有见到任何我认识的人。这时前台的接待员才跟我说：“那位女士在茶室里等您呢，先生。”

走进接待员指示的那扇门，我发现那间茶室里摆满了各不匹配的扶手椅和临时凑合的茶桌。除了肯顿小姐以外就再没有别的客人了，我一走进去，她就站起身来，面带微笑把手伸给了我。

“啊，史蒂文斯先生。真高兴再次见到您。”

“本恩太太，非常高兴。”

由于下雨的缘故，室内的光线特别昏暗，于是我们就将两把扶手椅挪到了那扇凸窗前。在灰蒙蒙的天光中肯顿小姐和我就这样谈了两个小时候左右的时间，在此期间雨仍旧毫不停歇地落在外面的广场上。

当然，她是有些显老了，不过起码在我看来，她老得还是非常优雅的。她的身材仍旧很苗条，她的身姿也一如既往地挺拔。她仍旧保持着跟过去一样的姿态，把头高高地仰起，几乎带一点挑衅的神气。当然了，由于惨淡的日光正落在她的脸上，我也不由得注意到那到处出现的皱纹。不过总体说来，坐在我面前的肯顿小姐看起来还是与这些年来一直留驻在我记忆中的那个人惊人地相似。也就是说，总的来说，能够再次见到她真是极其让人高兴的一件事。

刚见面的那二十分钟左右，我们的交谈就跟初次见面的陌生人差不多；她礼貌地问起我旅途一路上的情况，我的假期过得是否愉快，我都经过了哪些市镇，参观了哪些名胜，等等。继续深谈下去的时候，必须说，我想我才开始注意到岁月的流逝对她造成的更大的影响，给她带来的更加微妙的变化。比如说，肯顿小姐显得，在某种程度上，更加迟钝了。也可能这只是随着年岁渐长而变得更加沉静了，在一段时间内我的确也尽量想这样来看待她的这一变化。可是我心下仍旧不免觉得，我看到的其实是一种对于生活的厌倦；那曾经让她显得那么生机勃勃，有时甚至显得激动易怒的火花，现在看来已经不复存在了。事实上，时不时地，在她停下话头，在她面色平静下来的时候，我想我在她的面容当中瞥见的是一种类似忧伤的神情。不过话又说回来了，这也可能完全是我的误解。

过了一小会儿，我们乍一相逢，最初那几分钟内出现的那种小小的不自在就已经涣然冰释了，我们的交谈也就转向了更为私人性的话题。我们先是叙旧，回忆起过去的众多旧相识，交换了一些有关他们的后续的消息，我得说，这真是最为愉快的时刻。不过，与其说是我们交谈的内容，倒不如说是她讲完一段话后的浅浅一笑，她不时流露出来的淡淡的反讽口吻，她肩膀和双手的习惯性姿态，开始明白无误地让我们渐渐重拾起多年前我们交谈时的节奏和习惯。

也大约正是到了这个阶段，我才能够对她的现状有了些确切的认识。比如说，我得知她的婚姻状态并非如她的来信让人感觉到的那般岌岌可危；虽然她的确曾经离家在外住了四五天时间——我收到的来信就是在那期间写的一她其实已经搬回去了，而本恩先生也是非常高兴她终于已经回心转意。“幸好我们当中至少有一个人能够理智地对待这类事情，”她微笑着说道。

当然了，我也知道，这种事情我本是无缘置喙的，而且我也应该澄清一下，若不是出于非常重要的工作方面的考虑，您也许还记得，我是做梦也不会想去打探这方面的私事的；我之所以如此不揣冒昧，完全是为解决目前达林顿府里人手缺乏的问题。不管怎么说，肯顿小姐倒似乎完全不介意向我倾诉这方面的私事，而我也将此视为一种令人愉快的证据，足以充分证明我们当年的工作关系是何等密切而又深厚。

我记得，那之后肯顿小姐又继续泛泛地谈了几句有关她丈夫的一些情况，他很快就要退休了，时间是早了一点，主要是因为他健康状况欠佳，也因为她女儿已经结了婚，今年秋天就要生孩子了。事实上，肯顿小姐把她女儿在多塞特郡的地址也给了我，我必须得说，看到她如此热切地要我在返程的途中一定去看看她，我真有点受宠若惊。虽然我向她解释了我不会途经多塞特郡的那一部分，肯顿小姐却仍竭力敦促于我，说：“凯瑟琳久闻您的大名，史蒂文斯先生。她要是能见到您一定会高兴坏了的。”

我这方面，我则尽我所能向她讲述了一下达林顿府的现状。我试着向她说明法拉戴先生是位多么蔼然可亲的雇主；讲述了宅第本身发生的一些变化，我们做出的一些调整和变更，哪些部分干脆盖上防尘布暂时关闭起来，还有就是目前员工的配置安排。我感觉我一谈到达林顿府，肯顿小姐的兴致就明显更高了，很快，我们就一起回忆起各种各样的陈年旧事，一边说一边忍不住开怀畅笑。

我记得我们只有一次提到了达林顿勋爵。我们很开心地回忆起跟小卡迪纳尔先生有关的一两件往事，我也就不得不告诉肯顿小姐，这位年轻的绅士后来在大战当中在比利时阵亡了。而且我也顺势说到了爵爷对这一噩耗的反应：“当然了，爵爷一直将卡迪纳尔先生视若己出，这一噩耗真是让他悲痛欲绝。”

我本不想让令人难过的话题破坏了融洽愉悦的气氛，所以几乎立刻就想把话头转开。可是正如我所担心的，肯顿小姐早已经读到了报刊上对于爵爷的那些诋毁和中伤，尽管它们的意图并没有得逞；不可避免地，她也就借着这个话题稍稍问了我一些具体的情况。我记得自己原本很不愿意接这个茬儿的，不过最终还是这么对她说：

“事实上，本恩太太，整个大战期间一直都有不少对于爵爷的可怕的诋毁——尤其是那家报社。国难当头之际，爵爷也就一直都隐忍不发，可是战争结束后，那些含沙射影的攻击仍旧持续不断，喔，爵爷也就觉得没有理由再继续默默地承受下去了。现在回过头来再看，也

许一眼就能看出在那种时候、那样的气候之下跟媒体对簿公堂的风险之大。可是你也了解爵爷的为人，他真心诚意地相信他一定能讨回公道。当然了，其结果反而使那份报纸的发行量激增。而爵爷的令名却彻底给毁了。真的，本恩太太，官司打完以后，爵爷整个人完全垮了。达林顿府里也变得无比萧索。那天我把茶点为他端进会客室，结果，唉……那景况真是惨不忍睹。”

“我非常难过，史蒂文斯先生。我根本就不知道情况糟到了这个分上。”

“哦，是呀，本恩太太。可是不谈这个了吧。我知道你记忆中的达林顿府，还是当初经常举办盛大聚会、贵客盈门的样子。那才是爵爷应该被记住的样子。”

就像我说的，这是我们唯一提到达林顿勋爵的地方。总的来说，我们谈到的都是非常令人愉快的往事，我们一起在茶室里度过的这两个钟头，应该说是极为愉快的。我依稀记得在我们畅谈期间还有不少别的客人进来，坐上一会儿就又走了，不过我们的注意力丝毫都没有因此而受到一点分散。的确，当肯顿小姐抬头看了一眼壁炉架上的时钟，说她必须得回去了的时候，你简直都不敢相信时间已经过去了整整两个钟头。得知肯顿小姐得冒着雨走到村外还有点距离的公共汽车站以后，我坚持开车送她过去，我们从前台借了一把雨伞，一起来到了外面。

我停放福特车的地方，周围已经形成了好几个大水洼，我不得不略为搀扶了一下肯顿小姐，送她来到副驾驶那边的车门前。不过，很快我们便沿着村里的主要街道开了下去，途经几家店铺后，我们就来到了开阔的乡野中间。坐在我身边的肯顿小姐原本一直都安静地望着车窗外的景色，这时转向我说：

“你干吗那样子顾自微笑呢，史蒂文斯先生？”

“哦……你一定要原谅我，本恩太太，不过我正好想起你信上写到的某些事。一开始读到的时候，我还真有点担心，不过现在看来应该是没什么担心的理由了。”

“哦？你指的具体是哪些事呢，史蒂文斯先生？”

“哦，倒也没什么特别的，本恩太太。”

“哦，史蒂文斯先生，你真的一定要告诉我。”

“喔，比方说，本恩太太，”我说着轻轻一笑，“在信上的某一处，你写道——让我想想看——‘我的余生在我面前伸展为一片虚空’。大概是这个意思。”

“真的吗，史蒂文斯先生？”她说，也轻轻一笑。“我不可能写过这样的话呀。”

“哦，我敢保证你确实写了，本恩太太。我记得非常清楚。”

“哦，天哪。好吧，也许有那么几天我的确有那样的感受。不过那很快也就过去了。我可以向你保证，史蒂文斯先生，伸展在我面前的人生并非是一片虚空。首先，我们的外孙就要出生了。这是头一个，后面也许还有好几个呢。”

“是呀，的确。对你们来说真是好极啦。”

我们默不作声地又朝前开了几分钟。然后肯顿小姐道：

“那么你呢，史蒂文斯先生？你回到达林顿府以后又会有什么样的未来在等着你呢？”

“喔，不管等着我的到底是什么，本恩太太，我知道那都不可能是一片虚空。如果是的话倒好了。可是不会的，只有工作，工作，做不完的工作。”

说到这里我们俩都笑了。接着，肯顿小姐指了指前面不远处已经可以望见的一个有顶棚的公共汽车候车亭。我们驶近以后，她说：

“你能陪我一起等一会儿吗，史蒂文斯先生？公共汽车只要几分钟就会到的。”

从车上下来的时候，雨仍不住点地下个不停，我们赶紧钻进了候车亭。那候车厅是石砌的，上面有个瓦顶，看起来相当牢靠，它也确实需要建得牢靠些，因为它毫无遮蔽地矗立在那里，背后就是空旷的田地。候车亭里面，处处油漆剥落，不过倒是挺干净的。肯顿小姐在候车的长椅上坐下，我则一直在看得见公共汽车驶来的地方站着。公路的对面，目光所及也只有更多的农田；一排电线杆将我的视线一直引向遥远的天边。

我们默不作声地等了几分钟以后，我终于还是鼓起勇气说：

“恕我冒昧，本恩太太。可事实上我们可能很长时间都再也不能见面了。不知道你是否允许我问你一个相当私人性的问题？这个问题已经困扰了我相当一段时间了。”

“当然可以，史蒂文斯先生。毕竟我们是有多年交情的老朋友了。”

“的确，就像你说的，我们是有多年交情的老朋友了。我就是想问问你，本恩太太——如果你感觉不该告诉我的话，那就不必回答我了。可事实是，这些年来你写给我的那些信，尤其是最近这一封，似乎一直在暗示你过得——这话该怎么说呢？——很不幸福。我就是想知道，你是不是在某种程度上一直都在受到虐待。原谅我这么冒昧直言，可就像我说的，这个问题已经让我担了很长时间的心的。如果我这么大老远地特地来看你，结果却连问都没问你一声，我会感觉非常愚蠢的。”

“史蒂文斯先生，你根本没必要这么难为情。毕竟我们都是老朋友了，不是吗？事实上，你竟然这么关心我，我真是深受感动。在这件事上，你尽可以大放宽心。外子从来没有以任何方式错待过我。他压根儿就不是个性情残忍、脾气暴躁的人。”

“我必须说，本恩太太，听你这么一说真是让我如释重负。”

我朝雨中探身出去，寻找公共汽车的踪影。

“我能看出你并没有非常满意，史蒂文斯先生，”肯顿小姐道。
“你不相信我的话吗？”

“哦，并非如此，本恩太太，完全不是这么回事。只不过事实并没有改变，这些年来你过得好像并不幸福。我的意思是说——请恕我直言——你已经有好几次离开你丈夫了。如果他并不曾错待于你，那么，喔……这可就真让人想不通，你的不幸福到底是什么原因导致的了。”

我再次望向外面的蒙蒙细雨。过了半晌，终于，我听到身后的肯顿小姐说：“史蒂文斯先生，我该如何解释才好呢？连我自己都不太清楚我为什么会做出这样的事情来的。可这是事实，我已经有过三次离家出走了。”她沉吟了片刻，在此期间我继续呆望着马路对面的农田。然后她说道：“我想，史蒂文斯先生，你是想问我是否爱我的丈夫。”

“说真的，本恩太太，我绝不会自以为是地……”

“我觉得我还是应该回答你，史蒂文斯先生。正如你所说，我们可能很多年都无缘再见了。是的，我确实爱我丈夫。一开始我并不爱他。一开始我有很长一段时间都不爱他。多年前我在离开达林顿府

的时候，我其实并没有真切地意识到我的的确确是离开了它。我想我只不过是把它当作了又一种激怒你的伎俩，史蒂文斯先生。来到这里并且发现自己已经嫁为人妻以后，对我来说不啻于一记晴空霹雳。在很长很长的一段时间里面，我都很不幸福，确实是非常不幸福。可是一年一年地就这么过去了，爆发了战争，凯瑟琳也渐渐长大了，有一天我猛然惊觉我是爱我丈夫的。你跟某个人一起生活了这么长时间，你发现你已经习惯跟他在一起了。他是个善良、可靠的好人，所以是的，史蒂文斯先生，我已经渐渐爱上了他。”

肯顿小姐再一次陷入沉默，过了一会儿她才继续道：

“不过，当然了，这也并不意味着偶尔就不会有这种的时候——在极其孤独的时刻——你会想要对自己说：‘我的人生中犯了个多么可怕的错误。’而且你会开始想象一种不同的生活，一种你原本可能拥有的更好的生活。比方说吧，我开始想象一种本来可以跟你在一起的生活，史蒂文斯先生。而我想正是在这样的時候，我会为一些琐事而怒不可遏，而离家出走。不过我每次这样做了以后，要不了多久我也就会明白过来——我的本分就是跟我丈夫在一起。毕竟，时光是不能倒流的。一个人是不能永远沉溺在可能的状况中无法自拔的。你应该明白你所拥有的并不比大多数人更差，或许还更好些，应该要心存感激才是。”

我想当时我并没有马上做出回应，因为我是颇花了一点时间才完全消化了肯顿小姐所说的这一番话的。不仅如此，您应该也能体会，这番话里隐含的深意也真是让我心有戚戚。的确——我又何必再遮遮掩掩？——在那一刻，我的心都碎了。不过，很快地，我还是转向她，面带微笑地说：

“你说得对，本恩太太。诚如你所说的，时光是不能倒流的，已经来不及了。的确，我要是知道正是这样的想法造成了你和你丈夫的不幸的话，我是绝对没办法心安理得的。我们每个人都应该，正如你指出的，对我们实际上拥有的东西心怀感激。而且从你告诉我的情况来看，本恩太太，你是有理由感到满意的。事实上，容我冒昧多嘴，随着本恩先生即将退休，还有马上就要降生的小外孙，你跟本恩先生以后还有好多无比幸福的岁月在等着你们。你可千万不要再让任何这类愚蠢的想法横亘在你自己和你应得的幸福之间了。”

“那是当然，你说得对，史蒂文斯先生。真是感谢你的良苦用心。”

“啊，本恩太太，公共汽车好像开过来了。”

我走出候车亭招手示意停车，肯顿小姐站起身来到候车亭边。直到汽车停了下来，我才又偷觑了肯顿小姐一眼，结果发现她眼里盈满了泪水。我微笑着说：

“好了，本恩太太，你自己一定要好好保重。大家都说，退休以后才是夫妻生活中最美好的那一段。你一定要尽你的所能使这些岁月成为你自己和尊夫的幸福时光。我们也许再也无缘见面了，本恩太太，所以我请求你务必把我的这番话记在心上。”

“我会的，史蒂文斯先生，谢谢你。也谢谢你特意开车送我这一程。这次能再次见到你真是太高兴了。”

“再次见到你真是非常非常高兴，本恩太太。”

码头上的彩灯已经亮了起来，我身后的人群刚刚发出一阵大声的欢呼表示欢迎。还有不少天光尚存一海面上的天空已经变为浅红色——不过看来过去半个钟头之内聚集在码头上的人群都希望夜色快点降临。我想，这倒正好印证了刚才还跟我坐在一条长凳上的那个人的观点，我们之间曾有过一段略显奇特的交谈。他的说法是，对于好多人而言，傍晚是一天当中最好的部分，是他们最期盼的一段时光。依我看来，这种说法似乎也不无几分道理，要不然的话，码头上的这些人又怎么会只不过因为灯光亮起，就不约而同地欢呼雀跃呢？

当然了，那人也只是拿黄昏来打个比方，不过眼看着他的话这么快就在现实中得到了应验，也实在有趣得紧。我想在我注意到他之前，他应该已经在我旁边坐了有一会儿了，因为我只顾沉溺在两天前跟肯顿小姐见面的回忆当中难以自拔了。事实上，一直到他大声地开口说话，我才觉察到原来旁边还坐着他这么个人：

“海边的空气对人可是大有裨益啊。”

我抬起头来，看到一位体格健壮、年近七旬的男人，穿了件已经很旧了的花呢夹克，衬衣的领口敞着。他正凝望着海面，也许是在看远处的几只海鸥，所以根本就闹不清他到底是不是在我说话。不过既然没有别人回应，既然附近也看不到还有其他的人可能会做出回应，我最后还是回了一句：

“是呀，我相信肯定是大有裨益的。”

“医生都说这对你有好处。所以只要天气允许，我就尽可能多地到这儿来。”

那人接着又跟我絮叨起了他的各种小病小灾，只是为了对我点个头、笑一笑，才会偶尔把一直凝视着落日的目光掉转过来。我也是在他无意间提及直到三年前正式退休，他一直都是附近一户人家的管家，这才真正开始注意去听他讲话。经过询问以后，我得知他担任管家的那户人家的宅第规模很小，也只有他这么一个全职的雇员。当我问到他的手底下可曾有过专职的员工跟他一起工作时——或许在大战前——他回答道：

“哦，那个时候，我还只不过是个男仆。那个时候啊，我还压根儿都不知道当管家的窍门儿呢。要真想成为那些大户人家的管家，对你的要求得有多高，你真是做梦都想不到呢。”

话已至此，我想也该向他表明我的身份了，虽说我不太确定他是不是明白“达林顿府”的斤两，我这位伴当看起来倒是肃然起敬。

“我还一本正经地想向你解说其中的窍门儿呢，”他笑道。“幸亏你及早告诉了我，要不然我可真是关公面前耍大刀了。这也正好说明，你在跟一位陌生人攀谈的时候，永远都不知道你到底是在跟谁讲话。这么说来，你手底下肯定有过一大帮子雇员吧，我想。我是说战前。”

他是个性情开朗的伙计，又像是真的很感兴趣，所以我坦诚我的确花了点时间跟他讲了讲昔日达林顿府的盛况。主要的我是想告诉他，在筹备和监管我们过去经常举办的那些盛大活动时，需要掌握哪些——用他的话来说——“窍门儿”。的确，我相信我甚至还向他透露了我的好几个用以调动员工额外潜能的“秘诀”，以及当管家需要掌握的各种“戏法儿”——就跟变魔术的没什么两样——靠这些戏法儿，一个管家就能让某一样东西在合适的时间出现在合适的地点，而根本不会让客人们窥见这样的操作背后那经常是庞大而又复杂的运作机巧。我也说过，我这位伴当看起来是真的很感兴趣，但在说了一阵以后我也觉得应该见好就收了，于是就以这样一句话做了个归结：

“当然了，在我现在的雇主手下，情况可就大不相同了。他是位美国绅士。”

“美国人，呃？说起来，现在也只有他们才能摆得起这个谱儿了。这么说来你还继续留在那个府里。大概也是一揽子交易的组成部分吧。”他转过脸来冲我咧嘴一笑。

“是呀，”我说，也轻声一笑。“就像你说的，是一揽子交易的一部分。”

那人又把凝视的目光再次转回到海面上，深吸了一口气，又心满意足地叹了口气。然后，我们又默不作声地一起在那儿坐了好一会儿。

“事实上，当然了，”半晌后我又说，“我把我全副的精力都献给了达林顿勋爵。我把所能奉献的一切全都奉献给了他，而现在一喔——我真是发现我还可以奉献的已经所剩无几了。”

那人没有言语，不过点了点头，于是我继续道：

“自打我的新雇主法拉戴先生来到以后，我一直都非常努力，真的是非常努力地想向他提供我希望他能享受到的那种服务。我已经竭尽了全力，可是不管我怎么做，我都发现距离我当初为自己制定的标准还差了一大截。我的工作中也开始出现了越来越多的失误。尽管这些失误本身都无足轻重——至少到目前为止是这样。可它们都是我以前从来都不会犯的那种失误，而且我知道它们意味着什么。老天作证，我真是已经竭尽了全力，可就是没有用。我能够付出的已经全都付出了。而我把它们全都奉献给了达林顿勋爵。”

“哎呀，朋友。我说，要不要块手绢儿？我应该揣着一条来着。找到了。还挺干净的。今天早上只拿它来擤了一次鼻子，仅此而已。你拿去用吧，朋友。”

“哦天哪，不用，谢谢你，我没事了。很抱歉，恐怕是因为这次旅行让我太累了。非常抱歉。”

“你肯定是非常依恋这位什么勋爵。你说他已经过世三年了？我看得出你真是对他情深义重啊，朋友。”

“达林顿勋爵并不是个坏人。他绝不是个坏人。至少他还有勇气在他生命的最后阶段承认是他自己犯了错误。爵爷是个勇敢的人。他在人生中选择了一条自己的道路，结果却发现他是误入了歧途，但他至少可以说，那是他自己的选择。而至于我，我连这样的话都不能说。你知道吗，我信赖他。我信赖爵爷的智慧。在我为他服务的所有这些年间，我一直坚信我所做的全都是有价值的。我甚至都不能说是我自己犯了错。说真的一你不得不扪心自问——在这其中到底又有什么样的尊严呢？”

“听我说，朋友，我不敢保证听明白了你说的每一句话。可如果你问我的话，我得说，你的态度可是完全不对头，知道吗？人不能总是朝后看，要不然肯定是要意气消沉的。好吧，你的工作是不能做得像当年一样好了。可我们不全都是这样吗，对不对？到了某个时候，我们全都得把脚搁起来休息了。你看看我。自打我退休的那天起，我就快活得像只云雀一样。好吧，就算是你我都已经不再是精力充沛的青春盛年，可是你仍旧得继续往前看。”我相信就是在这个时候他又说：“你得学会享受你的人生。傍晚是一天当中最美好的时光。你已经做完了一天的工作。该是你搁起脚来好好享受一下的时候了。我就是这么看的。随便找个人问问，他们也都会这么说的。傍晚是一天当中最美好的时光。”

“我确信你说得很有道理，”我说。“真抱歉，我真是非常失态。我想我是有些累过头了。这些天来我一直都在路上奔波，你知道。”

那个人离开已经有二十分钟左右了，不过我仍旧坐在长椅上没动，等着观看当晚那刚刚已经开始的余兴活动——即码头彩灯亮起的进展情况。像我已经说过的，特意聚集到码头的那些寻欢作乐的人群为迎接这个小小的节目表现出来的欢快之情，似乎再次印证了我刚才那位伴当所言的真确性；因为对于这么多人来说，傍晚确是一天当中最令人享受的时光。如此看来，他的建议或许果真是有点道理的，我的确应该不要再这么频繁地回顾往事，而应该采取一种更为积极的人生态度，把我剩余的这段人生尽量过好。毕竟，总是这样没完没了地往回看，总是自责我们当初的生活并没有尽如人意，终究又有什么好处呢？而且对于你我这样的人来说，现实的残酷肯定还在于，除了将我们的命运交付到身处这个世界的轴心、雇佣我们的服务的那些伟大绅士们的手中之外，归根结底，我们别无选择。整日地自寻烦恼，忧心于当初究竟该怎么做又不该怎么做方是人生之正途，又有什么意义呢？你我之辈，只要是至少曾为了某项真实而有价值的事业而竭尽绵薄、稍作贡献，谅必就已经尽够了。我们当中若是有人准备将大部分的生命奉献给这样的理想和抱负，那么毋庸置疑，值得为之自豪和满足的就在于这献身的过程本身，而不应计较其结果究竟如何。

顺带说一句，几分钟前，就在彩灯刚刚亮起后不久，我还特意从坐着的长椅上转过身去，更仔细地研究了一会儿在我背后那些有说有笑的人群。在码头上漫步徜徉的人各种年龄段都有：有带着小孩的一家人；有手挽手一起散步的夫妻，小夫妻老夫妻都有。我背后不远处聚在一起的那六七个人稍稍引起了我的好奇心。我一开始想当然地以

为他们是趁此良宵结伴外出的一帮朋友。可是听了一会儿他们的谈话以后，这才发现他们不过是碰巧在我身后的这个地方偶遇的一帮陌生人。显然，他们刚才全都一时间驻足观望，等待彩灯初上的那一刻，随后才又继续友好地攀谈起来。此刻他们就在我的注视之下，一起开心地大笑。真是奇怪，人们相互间居然能这么快就建立起热络的感情。可能只是因为对于即将到来的夜晚的共同期待，才将这几个人联系在一起。不过呢，我倒也觉得这其实是跟揶揄打趣的本事有更大的关系。眼下听着他们的谈话，听得出来他们相互间玩笑逗趣个不断。想来，这正是很多人都会喜欢的搭话和交谈方式。事实上，刚才跟我坐一条凳子的那位伴当恐怕原本也期望我能跟他玩笑打趣一番。一果真如此的话，我可真是扫了他的兴了。也许我真应该开始更加热心地看待戏谑打趣这件事了。毕竟，认真想来，热衷于开开玩笑也并非什么要不得的蠢行——尤其是在它真能成为联络人际关系的锁钥的情况下。

《长日将尽》译后记

日裔英国作家石黑一雄（Kazuo Ishiguro, 1954年12月8日—）因“以其巨大的情感力量，发掘了隐藏在我们与世界的虚幻联系之下的深渊”而荣获二〇一七年度诺贝尔文学奖，瑞典文学院并进而明确指出石黑一雄的文学创作的三个关键词是“时间、记忆与自我欺骗”。想来，石黑本人对此应该也是非常认可的，因为他在访谈中谈到自己创作的要点时，就说过：“我基本上就是依赖回忆。”

《长日将尽》（The Remains of the Day）是石黑一雄的第三部长篇小说，荣获一九八九年度的布克奖，真正奠定了他国际一流作家的地位，这部小说与之前的两部长篇《远山淡影》（A Pale View of Hills, 1982）和《浮世画家》（An Artist of the Floating World, 1986）的的确确全篇都是以主人公的回忆展开和构成的。

以第一人称回忆过去、讲述奇遇、敷演故事甚至说三道四可以说是长篇小说这一体裁最传统也最常用的一种叙事策略，与全知全能的第三人称（也称为“上帝视角”）叙事分庭抗礼，共为长篇小说叙事方式的两大宗派。相较于第三人称叙事，采用第一人称的好处在于容易获得读者的共鸣，读者很容易就会对叙述者的价值观产生认同，直至在情感上都会与主人公同悲同喜。但这仅限于可靠的叙述者，在叙述者是“可靠的”情况下，叙述者的情感倾向和价值判断与作者或者说体现在作品中的整体倾向是一致的，读者可以大体上将叙述者的声音等同于作者的声音，现代主义兴起之前的小说基本上都是这种情况，典型的如维多利亚时代长篇小说繁荣期的众多作品，像狄更斯的《大卫·科波菲尔》和夏洛蒂·勃朗特的《简·爱》等。现代主义兴起之后情况就大不一样了，亨利·詹姆斯的小说艺术就集中在对叙事角度的强调上，与此联系在一起的是叙述者的声音首次变得不那么可靠起来。詹姆斯故意选择感知视角、理解能力受到限制的叙述者，典型的比如说孩子，用这种受限的视角去观察，用这种尚不能完全理解叙述对象的声音去讲述，由此就会造成叙述者讲述的内容与成熟的读者实际感受到的内涵之间的一种微妙的、巨大的偏差，这种有意味的偏差对于读者所造成的审美和情感的冲击是极大的。美国文学批评家韦恩·布斯（Wayne Booth）在其叙事学名著《小说修辞学》（The Rhetoric of Fiction）中首次对所谓“不可靠的叙述”进行了命名和

论述：“当叙述者的言行与作品的范式（即隐含作者的范式）保持一致时，叙述者就是可靠的，否则就是不可靠的。”

《长日将尽》的第一人称叙述就是典型的“不可靠叙述”。如果说亨利·詹姆斯的不可靠叙述源于叙述者观察和理解能力方面的受限，石黑一雄的不可靠叙述则是由于叙述者自身的有意回避和遮遮掩掩。

《长日将尽》的情节是由英国豪门巨族达林顿府的管家史蒂文斯独自驾车前往西南部六天行程中的回忆所构成的。史蒂文斯为达林顿勋爵工作了三十多年的时间，亲眼见证了达林顿府一战和二战期间最为辉煌的鼎盛时期，在这个时期，这个显赫的贵族府第实际上成为对于整个大英帝国的大政方针尤其外交政策起到巨大影响的权力中枢，“这世界就是个轮子，以这些豪门巨宅为轴心而转动”，通过达林顿勋爵，纳粹德国的驻英大使“里宾特洛甫先生几乎可以完全绕过我们的外交部门，直接接触到我们的最高层”。但在二战以后，由于达林顿勋爵在战前一直奉行不光彩的亲纳粹政策，达林顿府盛极而衰，已经由世界的“轴心”沦落到“门前冷落车马稀”的境况。在爵爷也身败名裂、郁郁而终（小说暗示爵爷是自杀身亡）之后，连达林顿府都已转手卖给了美国商人法拉戴先生，达林顿府作为世袭贵族达林顿家族的祖产，在世代相传以后终于为外姓——而且是外国人所有了。在达林顿府的全盛时期，身为管家史蒂文斯手下有三十几个全职员工供他差遣，而在此时，府里的员工加上他这个大管家也就只剩下了四个人，宅第的相当一部分已经关闭起来，不再使用。新主人法拉戴先生好意地主动提出让史蒂文斯驾车外出去休个假，汽油费由他来负担；而更主要的是因为府里现在的人手实在是捉襟见肘，史蒂文斯就想力促三十年前共事过的女管家肯顿小姐重返达林顿府任职，由此即可一举解决府里人手不够的难题，所以想借此休假机会顺道前往肯顿小姐的住处亲自劝她重新出山，结果却无功而返。《长日将尽》这部小说写的就是史蒂文斯这六天驾车出游的沿途见闻，更主要的是对于过去他这大半辈子管家生涯的断续回忆与思考。

那么他都回忆和思考了些什么？我们为什么又说他的叙述是不可靠的？他为什么要有意无意地躲闪和回避？他躲闪和回避的又是什么呢？

干了大半辈子职业管家的史蒂文斯，他回忆和思考的一个最为重要的问题就是：怎样才能算得上是个“伟大的”管家？一个“伟大的”管家与一个极有能力的管家的本质区别又在哪里？史蒂文斯认为

就在于他是否拥有一种“尊严”。那么这种“尊严”到底又是一种什么东西，它具体的内涵应该如何表述？史蒂文斯在经过一番深入的思考，并以自己的父亲管家生涯中的实际言行作为实例，得出结论说：

“‘尊严’云云，其至关紧要的一点即在于一位管家无论何时何地都能坚守其职业生命的能力”；“伟大的管家之所以伟大，是由于他们能够化入他们的职业角色，并且是全身心地化入”。身为“管二代”，史蒂文斯还进而将他们这代管家与以他父亲为代表的上一代管家在价值观上的不同做了一番比较，他认为老一辈更关心的是雇主是否是有封号的世家贵族，而他们这一代更关心的则是雇主的道德地位，他们更加理想主义，更希望效力于那些为人类的进步作出贡献的士绅：这个世界是个轮子，以那些豪门巨族为轴心转动，而他们这些有理想的管家莫不以尽可能地靠近这个轴心为志向，他们这个职业的终极价值就体现在为那些肩负着当代文明大任的伟大士绅们服务，如果，也只有做到了这一点，你才可以被称为一位“伟大的”管家：

“一个‘伟大的’管家肯定只能是那种人：他在指点自己多年的服务生涯时能够自豪地说，他已经将他的全副才能用以服务一位伟大的绅士了——而通过这样的一位绅士，他也等于是服务了全人类”。

那么史蒂文斯为之而效力了三十多年的达林顿勋爵，他是否居于这个世界的轴心位置，他是否是位伟大的士绅，他的作为是否促进了人类的进步呢？

达林顿勋爵当然居于这个世界的轴心，用史蒂文斯自己的话说：“是我们这代人最先认识到了前几代人全都忽略了一个事实：即世界上的那些重大的决定事实上并不是在公共议事厅里，或者在会期只有寥寥数日又完全置于公众和新闻界关注之下的某个国际会议上做出的。更多的情况下，那些关键性的决定反倒是在国内那些隐秘而又幽静的豪宅里经过讨论、进行权衡后做出的。”小说中集中描写过在达林顿府召开的两次会议（外加无数“不宜公开”的密谈）：一是一九二三年三月召开的国际会议，达林顿勋爵邀请了来自世界各国的高级外交官和政要、杰出的神职人员、退役的军方士绅、作家与思想家共二十几位正式代表参加；还有一次规模虽没有这么盛大，却直接邀请到包括纳粹德国驻英大使与英国首相在内的最高级别的官员到达林顿府进行密谈。正如史蒂文斯和肯顿小姐之间的那段对话所显示的那样：史蒂文斯向肯顿小姐抱歉说他实在太忙，没时间详细探问她跟他的求婚者会面的结果，因为“具有全球性重要意义的事件此时就正在府内进行当中呢”，而肯顿小姐则回答：“府里又何曾发生过不重要的事呢，史蒂文斯先生？”

那么达林顿勋爵是否是位伟大的绅士呢？他的作为是否促进了人类文明的进步呢？用史蒂文斯自己的话说：“无论近年来对达林顿勋爵的功过如何评说……我都该为爵爷说句公道话：他本质上是个真正的好人，一个彻头彻尾的绅士，时至今日，我都为自己能将最好的年华奉献给为这样一个人服务上而深感自豪。”达林顿勋爵参加过一战，对阵的敌人是德国，但他出于绅士的原则和本能，对于已经败北的敌人就自然会表现出慷慨和友善。加之战后签订的《凡尔赛和约》的确对于德国有诸多不公开的条款，这就激起了达林顿勋爵的同情和义愤，尤其是在他的一位德国挚友自杀之后，他开始致力于为德国争取平等的国际权益，一九二三年的那次重要的国际会议就是专门为此而召开的。可以说到此为止，达林顿勋爵的所作所为是完全正当的。但在纳粹政权上台以后，德国已经从之前的牺牲者一变而成咄咄逼人的侵略者，达林顿勋爵却仍旧秉持之前的亲德、挺德立场，执迷不悟，终至于成为纳粹德国的帮凶。如果说一九二三年的那次会议还是完全正当的，那么到一九三六年他一手安排纳粹德国的驻英大使与英国首相到达林顿府密谈，甚至想促成英王在那个时候亲访德国，与希特勒会谈，用勋爵的教子的话说就是：“在过去这几年当中，爵爷可能是希特勒先生在本国为他摇旗呐喊，助他实施其宣传诡计最为得力的一枚棋子了”。而之所以走到这一步，居然正是因为勋爵是位真正的绅士，因为他为人真诚，品德高尚。所以答案是：达林顿勋爵确实是位品德高尚的绅士，但他却并没有成为一位伟大的绅士，他非但未能促进人类文明的进步，反而沦落为纳粹的棋子和帮凶。

这也可以解释史蒂文斯的回忆为什么会躲躲闪闪、避重就轻，甚至自我欺骗了。表面看来，史蒂文斯的遣词造句非常正式、规范，面面俱到而又谨小慎微，恰合他大半辈子的管家身份，但表面上滴水不漏的叙述当中，暗底里却有潜流涌动，甚至暗潮汹涌。他一方面说他们这代管家有着理想主义的追求，良禽择木而栖，要选择真正伟大的绅士为其服务，在助其促进全人类的福祉中实现自己的职业价值，成为“伟大的”管家；另一方面在勋爵的教子小卡迪纳尔明确向他指出勋爵已成为纳粹的棋子和帮凶以后，他又采取鸵鸟政策，故意视而不见，并且为自己找借口，说像他们这样的人是完全不可能理解当今的国际大事的，最好的办法就是完全信赖他们已经认定是既明智又可敬的那位雇主，将全副精力奉献于为他提供最好的服务上。他一方面坚称达林顿勋爵是位伟大的绅士，他为自己将最美好的年华奉献给为这样一个人服务上而深感自豪，另一方面却又在两次截然不同的场合有意地回避他是否曾为达林顿勋爵服务的话题，甚至不惜矢口否认。他一方面义愤填膺地为爵爷声辩，说人们攻击爵爷是个排犹主义者绝

对是卑鄙龌龊的无耻谰言，一方面又因为奉爵爷之命开除了两个犹太女仆而难以释怀，几成心病……这种前后不一，甚至完全矛盾的表述实在是太多了，而其根源则在于达林顿勋爵并非如他所愿意相信的那般完美，但正视这一点就等于抹杀了他三十年来鞠躬尽瘁地工作的意义，乃至把他整个人生的意义也都一笔抹杀了，而这是他绝对无法面对的残酷真相。

达林顿勋爵具有真正的绅士精神，秉持Noblesse oblige（位高则任重）的道义责任，在一战后为明显受到不公平待遇的战败国德国鸣不平，并且不限于道义上的支持，勇于行动，以殚精竭虑的实际作为运筹帷幄，奔走呼号，其精神何等高尚，其行为何等高贵。在为德国争取平等待遇的那次国际会议上，勋爵曾跟美国的政客刘易斯先生有过一次正面的交锋，刘易斯先生说他们凭借自己高贵的精神治国理政的时代已经一去不复返了，现在的国际事务需要专业人士来掌管，他们都是外行，他们根本就搞不清状况，仅凭着美好的愿望只能是成事不足败事有余。勋爵则反驳说他所谓的专业精神无非是通过欺骗和操纵来为所欲为，是依照自己的贪欲和利益来排定轻重缓急，而他所谓的外行，他更愿意称之为“荣誉”。多年后，当爵爷运用自己的影响力居然将英国首相拉到自己家里来和纳粹德国的驻英大使进行密谈的时候，他当初的至交兼同道的儿子，也是他的教子的小卡迪纳尔因为不愿看到他所尊敬的教父跨入万劫不复的境地，特意赶来苦苦相劝，但爵爷却置之不理。借酒浇愁的小卡迪纳尔对史蒂文斯吐露了真情，他重提当初刘易斯与爵爷争执这一幕，而他现在的看法已经完全倒了个个儿：“唉，我不得不说，史蒂文斯，那位美国老兄还真是说到了点子上。这还真是无可否认的事实。当今的世界太过险恶，是容不得你那些善良高贵的本能的。你自己也亲眼看到了，是不是，史蒂文斯？他们是如何操控那些善良和高贵的力量，将它们玩弄于股掌之上的。你自己也亲眼看到了，是也不是？”执迷不悟的达林顿勋爵一意孤行，直至成为纳粹德国最有力的棋子和帮凶，直落得身败名裂、自杀身亡的下场，而所有这一切，他又都是出于最为高贵的本性，秉持最为高尚的道义责任而做出来的。这是何等的悲剧！

而怀抱理想主义、一心想做一个“伟大的”管家的史蒂文斯呢？他年轻时也曾频繁更换雇主，直到他有机会效命于达林顿勋爵才安顿下来，这一干就是三十几年。因为他认为“良禽择木而栖，良臣择主而事”，他认定了勋爵就是他要找的明主，就是能够实现他伟大管家抱负的伟大绅士。史蒂文斯的父亲也是位管家，而且他对父亲评价甚高，认为父亲的作为体现出了他最为看重的职业尊严，堪为伟大管家

然后又牺牲了爱情。史蒂文斯虽说差不多一开始就跟肯顿小姐有过冲突，但在多年的共事中逐渐建立起工作上相互信任、情感上也相互信赖的亲密关系。整部小说都是以史蒂文斯的口吻叙述的，正如对于达林顿勋爵的叙述是一种不可靠的叙述一样，他对于肯顿小姐的叙述也一直都是躲躲闪闪的，原因就在于他不敢正视他对肯顿小姐的真情，而根源仍在他为了所谓的管家的职业精神而只得压抑甚至牺牲自己的情感。尽管在对有关肯顿小姐的往事回忆中史蒂文斯没有只字提及自己对她的真情实感，但在貌似客观中立的叙述中随处可见他对她的依恋以及因无法对她的情感做出回应而隐含的负疚之情。已经分离三十多年后的史蒂文斯反复阅读肯顿小姐的来信，几乎到了能够背诵的程度，切盼她能重返达林顿府再次与他共事，为此而不惜有意地曲解信里的字句，故意夸大了肯顿小姐重返达林顿府的意愿。有关肯顿小姐有几个场景深深地印在史蒂文斯的脑海中，永远无法忘怀，仅各举一个无限美好、一个无限伤痛的场景为例：他反复提到一次傍晚时分，他不知因为什么工作而来到楼上，夕阳透过客卧一扇扇半掩的房门照射到走廊上，而透过一扇门，他看到肯顿小姐映在窗前的侧影；肯顿小姐向他挥手，柔声叫他过去，他和肯顿小姐一起看到花园中他父亲在凉亭前来回踱步的身影。三十多年以后，肯顿小姐在来信中再次提到这个场景，形容老史蒂文斯“就仿佛一心想找回他失落在那里的某样珍宝”，史蒂文斯认为形容得非常形象，这个场景对他来说是否也正是一样已经失落的珍宝呢？另一个场景则让他伤痛不已，尽管他抵死也不会承认。他独自一人站在肯顿小姐起坐间外面的后廊上，为是否敲门而举棋不定，因为他突然间确信就在一门之隔、相距仅几码之遥的地方，肯顿小姐正在伤心地哭泣。他一方面说这一刻已经牢牢地嵌入了他的记忆中，“同样难以忘怀的”还有当时他在那里内心

深处升腾而起的那种特别的感受，但另一方面他又说现在他却又记不清他到底出于什么原因站在那后廊上了。他甚至（有意无意地）把这个场景张冠李戴，安在肯顿小姐得知姨妈的死讯之后了，那么那恸哭就是哀悼她姨妈了。但结果却并不是。既然这个场景已经根植在他的记忆深处，他又怎么会张冠李戴呢？他然后才好像恍然大悟一般，想起那是在肯顿小姐的姨妈去世已几个月后的事情，确切地说是发生在小卡迪纳尔意外来访的那个夜晚。那个夜晚发生了什么？明的层面上是我们上文已经提到的，达林顿勋爵居然安排英国首相和纳粹德国驻英大使在那个夜晚到他家里密谈，小卡迪纳尔为了让教父能悬崖勒马，闯上门来做最后的规劝（小说并没有明写，而只通过史蒂文斯的口吻说听到他们爷俩在吸烟室里激烈地争吵）。在史蒂文斯职业生涯的层面上，他由开始的情绪低落而渐渐涌起了一种深深的成就感，认为在如此煎熬的一个夜晚，当欧洲几位最有权势的绅士就在他的服侍之下决定着这块大陆的终极命运的过程中，他始终都保持了一种与他的职位相称的“高贵尊严”，他因此而将这一晚视作他职业生涯的顶点，是他“这一生所能达到的所有成就的一个总结”。这是明的层面，那么暗的层面呢？——则是肯顿小姐在多年的期盼、多次的努力和试探之后，终于灰心绝望，在那一夜接受了一位旧识本恩先生的求婚。肯顿小姐为之痛哭失声的是自己已经破碎的爱情，那站在门外的史蒂文斯内心翻涌的又是一种什么样的“特别的感受”呢？

为了实现自己成为伟大管家的理想和抱负，史蒂文斯不惜牺牲父子的亲情（这种牺牲并非单方面的，可以看出老史蒂文斯也做出了同样的牺牲）和男女间的爱情，以至于成为一个几乎压抑了一切正常情感、完全不近人情的工作机器。就在他自以为已经实现了人生的终极目标、职业的终极价值以后，却才发现他借以实现目标和价值的这位伟大的绅士，其实却是纳粹的帮凶、民族的罪人，他最后竟羞于承认他曾是这位爵爷的管家。这是何等的悲剧！

那么肯顿小姐呢？她的人生遭际又是怎样的呢？透过史蒂文斯的讲述，我们大体上可以理清肯顿小姐如下的人生轨迹：她和老史蒂文斯先生差不多同时来到达林顿府，担任女管家的职务。她的长相我们不得而知，但我们知道她是一个热情、活泼、性格开朗而又倔强的女子（“她仍旧保持着跟过去一样的姿态，把头高高地仰起，几乎带一点挑衅的神气”）。刚来没多久，她就捧着一瓶鲜花闯入史蒂文斯那修道院一样寒素的餐具室里，想为他那间阴暗的房间带来一点生气。谁知史蒂文斯非但不领情，还在有关老史蒂文斯的称呼问题上向她兴师问罪，导致颇有一段时间两人在工作问题上相互挑刺，甚至不相往

来，靠传递口信或是小纸条进行工作上的沟通。随着老史蒂文斯身体的恶化，两人的关系也日渐改善，两人一起透过窗户看着老史蒂文斯在花园里徘徊的场景就出现在此时。老史蒂文斯去世的时候是肯顿小姐守在他的床前，并为他合上了双眼。到这个阶段，肯顿小姐明显已经对史蒂文斯由最初的好感进入愿意信托终身的阶段。由她提议，两人养成了一天的工作结束后一起在她的起坐间里喝杯热可可、聊聊天的习惯。之后两人的关系又经受过一次严峻的考验，即史蒂文斯遵照爵爷的指示解雇了两个犹太女佣，嫉恶如仇的肯顿小姐强烈反对，甚至声称如果当真解雇她们，她也会随之而辞职，她对于史蒂文斯的态度也由此变得冷淡甚至粗暴。直到几个月后，两人在凉亭里不期而遇，史蒂文斯第一次谈到他对解雇犹太雇员这件事也一样深感苦恼和难过时，两人这才冰释前嫌，而且无疑情感又更进了一步，不但重新和好，还相互调侃。之后肯顿小姐采取了关键性的一步，她不请自来地闯入史蒂文斯的餐具室碰到他正在读一本浪漫小说那一次无疑是要进行表白的，当然她更希望史蒂文斯能主动向她表白。结果却因为史蒂文斯的不通人情、不解风情而不欢而散。事已至此，肯顿小姐已经感觉到她的感情付出就要落空了，但她仍不死心，在一次可可聚会上又做了最后的一次试探，她问史蒂文斯，在他的事业已经到达顶峰，对此他已心满意足以后，他还有什么样的人生目标。对于肯顿小姐而言，这是个生死攸关的问题，她付出的情感能否有个完满的结果就在此一举了。结果史蒂文斯竟然说，一直得等到他协助爵爷实现了他为自己设定的所有伟大目标以后，他的人生才算是圆满，而丝毫没有个人情感方面的考虑。加之肯顿小姐最为亲近的姨妈去世后，史蒂文斯非但没有对她致以慰唁之情（他本来是打算这样做的），却（阴差阳错地）反而对她负责的工作横加挑剔，于是在对于史蒂文斯的感情上，肯顿小姐基本上已经完全绝望了。她开始跟之前的一位旧相识本恩先生约会，并在那个关键性的夜晚接受了本恩先生的求婚，婚后随丈夫迁居康沃尔郡的小康普顿。肯顿小姐的婚姻（有可能）幸福吗？在史蒂文斯开车前去跟她会面前，我们已经知道她有好几次离家出走的经历了，而在那次会面当中，虽满怀伤痛却仍比史蒂文斯更勇敢地直面自己真情实感的肯顿小姐这样对他说：“不过，当然了，这也并不意味着偶尔就不会有这种的时候——在极其孤独的时刻——你会想要对自己说：‘我的人生中犯了个多么可怕的错误。’而且你会开始想象一种不同的生活，一种你原本可能拥有的更好的生活。比方说吧，我开始想象一种本来可以跟你在一起的生活，史蒂文斯先生……”

为了所谓的理想抱负，史蒂文斯不但虚掷了自己的一生，还辜负了肯顿小姐的真情，使她的前半生尽付蹉跎，余生成为“一片虚空”。对于肯顿小姐而言这又是何等的悲剧！

石黑一雄说他写《长日将尽》的出发点是想书写“你是如何为了成就事业而荒废了你的人生，又是如何在个人的层面上蹉跎了一辈子的”，他写的一直都是公共历史之下的个人记忆，是内在的冲突而非外在的压力，他认为个人的疏离感源自自我的认同，来自内心深处，而非外部强加。石黑一雄的创作基本上都建立在一种回溯型的叙事结构之上，不管具体采用第一还是第三人称，小说的主人公都有一个痛苦的过去，不愿去直面却又摆脱不了往事的纠缠，为了能够继续生活下去，就必须对这个痛苦的过往进行一番清理。情感上的不愿和不忍直视导致了讲述本身的犹疑、躲闪和自我欺骗，但这个过去又必须得到清理，否则这种回溯本身也就失去了意义。由此而导致了主人公不同层次的叙述层层叠加，导致不同层次的含义之间的微妙差异，而只有越过这层层遮蔽的“死荫的幽谷”，才能最终抵达自我和解的彼岸，获得继续生活下去的勇气。

石黑一雄曾说过，对他而言“创作从来都不是宣泄愤怒或狂躁的手段，而是用来抒发某种遗憾，纾解忧愁”，“现实世界并不完美，但作家能够通过创造心目中的理想世界与现实抗衡，或者找到与之妥协的办法”。可以说他的文学创作就是为了给人们提供一种“缓慢前进的勇气和信心”，是为那无可慰藉之人提供心灵的慰藉（to console the unconsole）。

Darlington Hall

It seems increasingly likely that I really will undertake the expedition that has been preoccupying my imagination now for some days. An expedition, I should say, which I will undertake alone, in the comfort of Mr Farraday's Ford; an expedition which, as I foresee it, will take me through much of the finest countryside of England to the West Country, and may keep me away from Darlington Hall for as much as five or six days. The idea of such a journey came about, I should point out, from a most kind suggestion put to me by Mr Farraday himself one afternoon almost a fortnight ago, when I had been dusting the portraits in the library. In fact, as I recall, I was up on the step-ladder dusting the portrait of Viscount Wetherby when my employer had entered carrying a few volumes which he presumably wished returned to the shelves. On seeing my person, he took the opportunity to inform me that he had just that moment finalized plans to return to the United States for a period of five weeks between August and September. Having made this announcement, my employer put his volumes down on a table, seated himself on the chaise-longue, and stretched out his legs. It was then, gazing up at me, that he said.

'You realize, Stevens, I don't expect you to be locked up here in this house all the time I'm away. Why don't you take the car and drive off somewhere for a few days? You look like you could make good use of a break.'

Coming out of the blue as it did, I did not quite know how to reply to such a suggestion. I recall thanking him for his consideration, but quite probably I said nothing very definite for my employer went on:

‘I’m serious, Stevens. I really think you should take a break. I’ll foot the bill for the gas. You fellows, you’re always locked up in these big houses helping out, how do you ever get to see around this beautiful country of yours?’

This was not the first time my employer had raised such a question; indeed, it seems to be something which genuinely troubles him. On this occasion, in fact, a reply of sorts did occur to me as I stood up there on the ladder; a reply to the effect that those of our profession, although we did not see a great deal of the country in the sense of touring the countryside and visiting picturesque sites, did actually ‘see’ more of England than most, placed as we were in houses where the greatest ladies and gentlemen of the land gathered. Of course, I could not have expressed this view to Mr Farraday without embarking upon what might have seemed a presumptuous speech. I thus contented myself by saying simply:

‘It has been my privilege to see the best of England over the years, sir, within these very walls.’

Mr Farraday did not seem to understand this statement, for he merely went on: ‘I mean it, Stevens. It’s wrong that a man can’t get to see around his own country. Take my advice, get out of the house for a few days.’

As you might expect, I did not take Mr Farraday’s suggestion at all seriously that afternoon, regarding it as just another instance of an American gentleman’s unfamiliarity with what was and what was not commonly done in England. The fact that my attitude to this same suggestion underwent a change over the following days – indeed, that the notion of a trip to the West Country took an ever-increasing hold on my thoughts – is no doubt substantially attributable to – and why should I hide it? – the arrival of Miss Kenton’s letter, her first in almost seven years if one discounts the Christmas cards. But let me make it immediately clear what I mean by this; what I mean to say is that Miss Kenton's letter set off a certain chain of ideas to do with professional matters here at Darlington Hall, and I would underline that it was a preoccupation with these very same professional matters that led me to consider anew my employer's kindly meant suggestion. But let me explain further.

The fact is, over the past few months, I have been responsible for a series of small errors in the carrying out of my duties. I should say that these errors have all been without exception quite trivial in themselves. Nevertheless, I think you will understand that to one not accustomed to committing such errors, this development was rather disturbing, and I did in fact begin to entertain all sorts of alarmist theories as to their cause. As so often occurs in these situations, I had become blind to the obvious - that is, until my pondering over the implications of Miss Kenton's letter finally opened my eyes to the simple truth: that these small errors of recent months have derived from nothing more sinister than a faulty staff plan.

It is, of course, the responsibility of every butler to devote his utmost care in the devising of a staff plan. Who knows how many quarrels, false accusations, unnecessary dismissals, how many promising careers cut short can be attributed to a butler's slovenliness at the stage of drawing up the staff plan? Indeed, I can say I am in agreement with those who say that the ability to draw up a good staff plan is the cornerstone of any decent butler's skills. I have myself devised many staff plans over the years, and I do not believe I am being unduly boastful if I say that very few ever needed amendment. And if in the present case the staff plan is at fault, blame can be laid at no one's door but my own. At the same time, it is only fair to point out that my task in this instance had been of an unusually difficult order.

What had occurred was this. Once the transactions were over - transactions which had taken this house out of the hands of the Darlington family after two centuries - Mr Farraday let it be known that he would not be taking up immediate residence here, but would spend a further four months concluding matters in the United States. In the meantime, however, he was most keen that the staff of his predecessor - a staff of which he had heard high praise - be retained at Darlington Hall. This 'staff' he referred to was, of course, nothing more than the skeleton team of six kept on by Lord Darlington's relatives to administer to the house up to and throughout the transactions; and I regret to report that once the purchase had been completed, there was little I could do for Mr Farraday to prevent all but Mrs Clements leaving for other employment. When I wrote to my new employer conveying my regrets at the situation, I received by reply from America instructions to recruit a new staff 'worthy of a grand old English house'. I immediately set about trying to fulfil Mr Farraday's wishes, but as you know, finding recruits of a satisfactory standard is no easy task nowadays, and although I was pleased to hire Rosemary and Agnes on Mrs Clements's recommendation, I had got no further by the time I came to have my first business meeting with Mr Farraday during the short preliminary visit he made to our shores in the spring of last year. It was on that occasion - in the strangely bare study of Darlington Hall - that Mr Farraday shook my hand for the first time, but by then we were hardly strangers to each other; quite aside from the matter of the staff, my new employer in several other instances had had occasion to call upon such qualities as it may be my good fortune to possess and found them to be, I would venture, dependable. So it was, I assume, that he felt immediately able to talk to me in a businesslike and trusting way, and by the end of our meeting, he had left me with the administration of a not inconsiderable sum to meet the costs of a wide range of preparations for his coming residency. In any case, my point is that it was during the course of this interview, when I raised the question of the difficulty of recruiting suitable staff in these times, that Mr Farraday, after a moment's reflection, made his request of me; that I do my best to draw up a staff plan - 'some sort of servants' rota' as he put it - by which this house might be run on the present staff of four - that is to say, Mrs Clements, the two young girls, and myself. This might, he appreciated, mean putting sections of the house 'under wraps', but would I bring all my experience and expertise to bear to ensure such losses were kept to a minimum? Recalling a time when I had had a staff of seventeen under me, and knowing how not so long ago a staff of twenty-eight had been employed here at Darlington Hall, the idea of devising a staff plan by which the same house would be run on a staff of four seemed, to say the least, daunting. Although I did my best not to, something of my scepticism must have betrayed itself, for Mr Farraday then added, as though for reassurance, that were it to prove necessary, then an additional member of staff could be hired. But he would be much obliged, he repeated, if I could 'give it a go with four'.

Now naturally, like many of us, I have a reluctance to change too much of the old ways. But there is no virtue at all in clinging as some do to tradition merely for its own sake. In this age of electricity and modern heating systems, there is no need at all to employ the sorts of numbers necessary even a generation ago. Indeed, it has actually been an idea of mine for some time that the retaining of unnecessary numbers simply for tradition's sake - resulting in employees having an unhealthy amount of time on their hands - has been an important factor in the sharp decline of professional standards. Furthermore, Mr Farraday had made it clear that he planned to hold only very rarely the sort of large social occasions Darlington Hall had seen frequently in the past. I did then go about the task Mr Farraday had set me with some dedication; I spent many hours working on the staff plan, and at least as many hours again thinking about it as I went about other duties or as I lay awake after retiring. Whenever I believed I had come up with something, I probed it for every sort of oversight, tested it through from all angles. Finally, I came up with a plan which, while perhaps not exactly as Mr Farraday had requested, was the best, I felt sure, that was humanly possible. Almost all the attractive parts of the house could remain operative: the extensive servants' quarters - including the back corridor, the two still rooms and the old laundry - and the guest corridor up on the second floor would be dust-sheeted, leaving all the main ground-floor rooms and a generous number of guest rooms. Admittedly, our present team of four would manage this programme only with reinforcement from some daily workers; my staff plan therefore took in the services of a gardener, to visit once a week, twice in the summer, and two cleaners, each to visit twice a week. The staff plan would, furthermore, for each of the four resident employees mean a radical altering of our respective customary duties. The two young girls, I predicted, would not find such changes so difficult to accommodate, but I did all I could to see that Mrs Clements suffered the least adjustments, to the extent that I undertook for myself a number of duties which you may consider most broad-minded of a butler to do.

Even now, I would not go so far as to say it is a bad staff plan; after all, it enables a staff of four to cover an unexpected amount of ground. But you will no doubt agree that the very best staff plans are those which give clear margins of error to allow for those days when an employee is ill or for one reason or another below par. In this particular case, of course, I had been set a slightly extraordinary task, but I had nevertheless not been neglectful to incorporate 'margins' wherever possible. I was especially conscious that any resistance there may be on the part of Mrs Clements, or the two girls, to the taking on of duties beyond their traditional boundaries would be compounded by any notion that their workloads had greatly increased. I had then, over those days of struggling with the staff plan, expended a significant amount of thought to ensuring that Mrs Clements and the girls, once they had got over their aversion to adopting these more 'eclectic' roles, would find the division of duties stimulating and unburden-some.

I fear, however, that in my anxiety to win the support of Mrs Clements and the girls, I did not perhaps assess quite as stringently my own limitations; and although my experience and customary caution in such matters prevented my giving myself more than I could actually carry out, I was perhaps negligent over this question of allowing myself a margin. It is not surprising then, if over several months, this oversight should reveal itself in these small but telling ways. In the end, I believe the matter to be no more complicated than this: I had given myself too much to do.

You may be amazed that such an obvious shortcoming to a staff plan should have continued to escape my notice, but then you will agree that such is often the way with matters one has given abiding thought to over a period of time; one is not struck by the truth until prompted quite accidentally by some external event. So it was in this instance; that is to say, my receiving the letter from Miss Kenton, containing as it did, along with its long, rather unrevealing passages, an unmistakable nostalgia for Darlington Hall, and - I am quite sure of this - distinct hints of her desire to return here, obliged me to see my staff plan afresh. Only then did it strike me that there was indeed a role that a further staff member could crucially play here; that it was, in fact, this very shortage that had been at the heart of all my recent troubles. And the more I considered it, the more obvious it became that Miss Kenton, with her great affection for this house, with her exemplary professionalism - the sort almost impossible to find nowadays - was just the factor needed to enable me to complete a fully satisfactory staff plan for Darlington Hall.

Having made such an analysis of the situation, it was not long before I found myself reconsidering Mr Farraday's kind suggestion of some days ago. For it had occurred to me that the proposed trip in the car could be put to good professional use; that is to say, I could drive to the West Country and call on Miss Kenton in passing, thus exploring at first hand the substance of her wish to return to employment here at Darlington Hall. I have, I should make clear, reread Miss Kenton's recent letter several times, and there is no possibility I am merely imagining the presence of these hints on her part.

For all that, I could not for some days quite bring myself to raise the matter again with Mr Farraday. There were, in any case, various aspects to the matter I felt I needed to clarify to myself before proceeding further. There was, for instance, the question of cost. For even taking into account my employer's generous offer to 'foot the bill for the gas', the costs of such a trip might still come to a surprising amount considering such matters as accommodation, meals, and any small snacks I might partake of on my way. Then there was the question of what sorts of costume were appropriate on such a journey, and whether or not it was worth my while to invest in a new set of clothes. I am in the possession of a number of splendid suits, kindly passed on to me over the years by Lord Darlington himself, and by various guests who have stayed in this house and had reason to be pleased with the standard of service here. Many of these suits are, perhaps, too formal for the purposes of the proposed trip, or else rather old-fashioned these days. But then there is one lounge suit, passed on to me in 1931 or 1932 by Sir Edward Blair - practically brand new at the time and almost a perfect fit - which might well be appropriate for evenings in the lounge or dining room of any guest houses where I might lodge. What I do not possess, however, is any suitable travelling clothes - that is to say, clothes in which I might be seen driving the car - unless I were to don the suit passed on by the young Lord Chalmers during the war, which despite being clearly too small for me, might be considered ideal in terms of tone. I calculated finally that my savings would be able to meet all the costs I might incur, and in addition, might stretch to the purchase of a new costume. I hope you do not think me unduly vain with regard to this latter matter; it is just that one never knows when one might be obliged to give out that one is from Darlington Hall, and it is important that one be attired at such times in a manner worthy of one's position.

During this time, I also spent many minutes examining the road atlas, and perusing also the relevant volumes of Mrs Jane Symons's The Wonder of England. If you are not familiar with Mrs Symons's books - a series running to seven volumes, each one concentrating on one region of the British Isles - I heartily recommend them. They were written during the thirties, but much of it would still be up to date - after all, I do not imagine German bombs have altered our countryside so significantly. Mrs Symons was, as a matter of fact, a frequent visitor to this house before the war; indeed, she was among the most popular as far as the staff were concerned due to the kind appreciation she never shied from showing. It was in those days, then, prompted by my natural admiration for the lady, that I had first taken to perusing her volumes in the library whenever I had an odd moment. Indeed, I recall that shortly after Miss Kenton's departure to Cornwall in 1936, myself never having been to that part of the country, I would often glance through Volume III of Mrs Symons's work, the volume which describes to readers the delights of Devon and Cornwall, complete with photographs and - to my mind even more evocative - a variety of artists' sketches of that region. It was thus that I had been able to gain some sense of the sort of place Miss Kenton had gone to live her married life. But this was, as I say, back in the thirties, when as I understand, Mrs Symons's books were being admired in houses up and down the country. I had not looked through those volumes for many years, until these recent developments led me to get down from the shelf the Devon and Cornwall volume once more. I studied all over again those marvellous descriptions and illustrations, and you can perhaps understand my growing excitement at the notion that I might now actually undertake a motoring trip myself around that same part of the country.

It seemed in the end there was little else to do but actually to raise the matter again with Mr Farraday. There was always the possibility, of course, that his suggestion of a fortnight ago may have been a whim of the moment, and he would no longer be approving of the idea. But from my observation of Mr Farraday over these months, he is not one of those gentlemen prone to that most irritating of traits in an employer - inconsistency. There was no reason to believe he would not be as enthusiastic as before about my proposed motoring trip - indeed, that he would not repeat his most kind offer to 'foot the bill for the gas'. Nevertheless, I considered most carefully what might be the most opportune occasion to bring the matter up with him; for although I would not for one moment, as I say, suspect Mr Farraday of inconsistency, it nevertheless made sense not to broach the topic when he was preoccupied or distracted. A refusal in such circumstances may well not reflect my employer's true feelings on the matter, but once having sustained such a dismissal, I could not easily bring it up again. It was clear, then, that I had to choose my moment wisely.

In the end, I decided the most prudent moment in the day would be as I served afternoon tea in the drawing room. Mr Farraday will usually have just returned from his short walk on the downs at that point, so he is rarely engrossed in his reading or writing as he tends to be in the evenings. In fact, when I bring in the afternoon tea, Mr Farraday is inclined to close any book or periodical he has been reading, rise and stretch out his arms in front of the windows, as though in anticipation of conversation with me.

As it was, I believe my judgement proved quite sound on the question of timing; the fact that things turned out as they did is entirely attributable to an error of judgement in another direction altogether. That is to say, I did not take sufficient account of the fact that at that time of the day, what Mr Farraday enjoys is a conversation of a light-hearted, humorous sort. Knowing this to be his likely mood when I brought in the tea yesterday afternoon, and being aware of his general propensity to talk with me in a bantering tone at such moments, it would certainly have been wiser not to have mentioned Miss Kenton at all. But you will perhaps understand that there was a natural tendency on my part, in asking what was after all a generous favour from my employer, to hint that there was a good professional motive behind my request. So it was that in indicating my reasons for preferring the West Country for my motoring, instead of leaving it at mentioning several of the alluring details as conveyed by Mrs Symons's volume, I made the error of declaring that a former housekeeper of Darlington Hall was resident in that region. I suppose I must have been intending to explain to Mr Farraday how I would thus be able to explore an option which might prove the ideal solution to our present small problems here in this house. It was only after I had mentioned Miss Kenton that I suddenly realized how entirely inappropriate it would be for me to continue. Not only was I unable to be certain of Miss Kenton's desire to rejoin the staff here, I had not, of course, even discussed the question of additional staff with Mr Farraday since that first preliminary meeting over a year ago. To have continued pronouncing aloud my thoughts on the future of Darlington Hall would have been, to say the very least, presumptuous. I suspect, then, that I paused rather abruptly and looked a little awkward. In any case, Mr Farraday seized the opportunity to grin broadly at me and say with some deliberation.

‘My, my, Stevens. A lady-friend. And at your age.’

This was a most embarrassing situation, one in which Lord Darlington would never have placed an employee. But then I do not mean to imply anything derogatory about Mr Farraday; he is, after all, an American gentleman and his ways are often very different. There is no question at all that he meant any harm; but you will no doubt appreciate how uncomfortable a situation this was for me.

'I' d never have figured you for such a lady's man, Stevens,' he went on. 'Keeps the spirit young, I guess. But then I really don't know it's right for me to be helping you with such dubious assignations.'

Naturally, I felt the temptation to deny immediately and unambiguously such motivations as my employer was imputing to me, but saw in time that to do so would be to rise to Mr Farraday's bait, and the situation would only become increasingly embarrassing. I therefore continued to stand there awkwardly, waiting for my employer to give me permission to undertake the motoring trip.

Embarrassing as those moments were for me, I would not wish to imply that I in any way blame Mr Farraday, who is in no sense an unkind person; he was, I am sure, merely enjoying the sort of bantering which in the United States, no doubt, is a sign of a good, friendly understanding between employer and employee, indulged in as a kind of affectionate sport. Indeed, to put things into a proper perspective, I should point out that just such bantering on my new employer's part has characterized much of our relationship over these months - though I must confess, I remain rather unsure as to how I should respond. In fact, during my first days under Mr Farraday, I was once or twice quite astounded by some of the things he would say to me. For instance, I once had occasion to ask him if a certain gentleman expected at the house was likely to be accompanied by his wife.

'God help us if she does come,' Mr Farraday replied.

'Maybe you could keep her off our hands, Stevens. Maybe you could take her out to one of those stables around Mr Morgan's farm. Keep her entertained in all that hay. She may be just your type.'

For a moment or two, I had not an idea what my employer was saying. Then I realized he was making some sort of joke and endeavoured to smile appropriately, though I suspect some residue of my bewilderment, not to say shock, remained detectable in my expression.

Over the following days, however, I came to learn not to be surprised by such remarks from my employer, and would smile in the correct manner whenever I detected the bantering tone in his voice. Nevertheless, I could never be sure exactly what was required of me on these occasions. Perhaps I was expected to laugh heartily; or indeed, reciprocate with some remark of my own. This last possibility is one that has given me some concern over these months, and is something about which I still feel undecided. For it may well be that in America, it is all part of what is considered good professional service that an employee provide entertaining banter. In fact, I remember Mr Simpson, the landlord of the Ploughman's Arms, saying once that were he an American bartender, he would not be chatting to us in that friendly, but ever-courteous manner of his, but instead would be assaulting us with crude references to our vices and failings, calling us drunks and all manner of such names, in his attempt to fulfil the role expected of him by his customers. And I recall also some years ago, Mr Rayne, who travelled to America as valet to Sir Reginald Mauvis, remarking that a taxi driver in New York regularly addressed his fare in a manner which if repeated in London would end in some sort of fracas, if not in the fellow being frogmarched to the nearest police station.

It is quite possible, then, that my employer fully expects me to respond to his bantering in a like manner, and considers my failure to do so a form of negligence. This is, as I say, a matter which has given me much concern. But I must say this business of bantering is not a duty I feel I can ever discharge with enthusiasm. It is all very well, in these changing times, to adapt one's work to take in duties not traditionally within one's realm; but bantering is of another dimension altogether. For one thing, how would one know for sure that at any given moment a response of the bantering sort is truly what is expected? One need hardly dwell on the catastrophic possibility of uttering a bantering remark only to discover it wholly inappropriate.

I did though on one occasion not long ago, pluck up the courage to attempt the required sort of reply. I was serving Mr Farraday morning coffee in the breakfast room when he had said to me:

‘I suppose it wasn’t you making that crowing noise this morning, Stevens?’

My employer was referring, I realized, to a pair of gypsies gathering unwanted iron who had passed by earlier making their customary calls. As it happened, I had that same morning been giving thought to the dilemma of whether or not I was expected to reciprocate my employer’s bantering, and had been seriously worried at how he might be viewing my repeated failure to respond to such openings. I therefore set about thinking of some witty reply; some statement which would still be safely inoffensive in the event of my having misjudged the situation. After a moment or two, I said:

‘More like swallows than crows, I would have said, sir. From the migratory aspect.’ And I followed this with a suitably modest smile to indicate without ambiguity that I had made a witticism, since I did not wish Mr Farraday to restrain any spontaneous mirth he felt out of a misplaced respectfulness.

Mr Farraday, however, simply looked up at me and said: ‘I beg your pardon, Stevens?’

Only then did it occur to me that, of course, my witticism would not be easily appreciated by someone who was not aware that it was gypsies who had passed by. I could not see, then, how I might press on with this bantering; in fact, I decided it best to call a halt to the matter and, pretending to remember something I had urgently to attend to, excused myself, leaving my employer looking rather bemused.

It was, then, a most discouraging start to what may in fact be an entirely new sort of duty required of me; so discouraging that I must admit I have not really made further attempts along these lines. But at the same time, I cannot escape the feeling that Mr Farraday is not satisfied with my responses to his various banterings. Indeed, his increased persistence of late may even be my employer's way of urging me all the more to respond in a like-minded spirit. Be that as it may, since that first witticism concerning the gypsies, I have not been able to think of other such witticisms quickly enough.

Such difficulties as these tend to be all the more preoccupying nowadays because one does not have the means to discuss and corroborate views with one's fellow professionals in the way one once did. Not so long ago, if any such points of ambiguity arose regarding one's duties, one had the comfort of knowing that before long some fellow professional whose opinion one respected would be accompanying his employer to the house, and there would be ample opportunity to discuss the matter. And of course, in Lord Darlington's days, when ladies and gentlemen would often visit for many days on end, it was possible to develop a good understanding with visiting colleagues. Indeed, in those busy days, our servants' hall would often witness a gathering of some of the finest professionals in England talking late into the night by the warmth of the fire. And let me tell you, if you were to have come into our servants' hall on any of those evenings, you would not have heard mere gossip; more likely, you would have witnessed debates over the great affairs preoccupying our employers upstairs, or else over matters of import reported in the newspapers; and of course, as fellow professionals from all walks of life are wont to do when gathered together, we could be found discussing every aspect of our vocation. Sometimes, naturally, there would be strong disagreements, but more often than not, the atmosphere was dominated by a feeling of mutual respect. Perhaps I will convey a better idea of the tone of those evenings if I say that regular visitors included the likes of Mr Harry Graham, valet-butler to Sir James Chambers, and Mr John Donalds, valet to Mr Sydney Dickenson. And there were others less distinguished, perhaps, but whose lively presence made any visit memorable; for instance, Mr Wilkinson, valet-butler to Mr John Campbell, with his well-known repertoire of impersonations of prominent gentlemen; Mr Davidson from Easterly House, whose passion in debating a point could at times be as alarming to a stranger as his simple kindness at all other times was endearing; Mr Herman, valet to Mr John Henry Peters, whose extreme views no one could listen to passively, but whose distinctive belly-laugh and Yorkshire charm made him impossible to dislike. I could go on. There existed in those days a true camaraderie in our profession, whatever the small differences in our approach. We were all essentially cut from the same cloth, so to speak. Not the way it is today, when on the rare occasion an employee accompanies a guest here, he is likely to be some newcomer who has little to say about anything other than Association Football and who prefers to pass the evening not by the fire of the servants' hall, but drinking at the Ploughman's Arms - or indeed, as seems increasingly likely nowadays, at the Star Inn.

I mentioned a moment ago Mr Graham, the valet-butler to Sir James Chambers. In fact, some two months ago, I was most happy to learn that Sir James was to visit Darlington Hall. I looked forward to the visit not only because visitors from Lord Darlington's days are most rare now - Mr Farraday's circle, naturally, being quite different from his lordship's - but also because I presumed Mr Graham would accompany Sir James as of old, and I would thus be able to get his opinion on this question of bantering. I was, then, both surprised and disappointed to discover a day before the visit that Sir James would be coming alone. Furthermore, during Sir James's subsequent stay, I gathered that Mr Graham was no longer in Sir James's employ; indeed that Sir James no longer employed any full-time staff at all. I would like to have discovered what had become of Mr Graham, for although we had not known each other well, I would say we had got on on those occasions we had met. As it was, however, no suitable opportunity arose for me to gain such information. I must say, I was rather disappointed, for I would like to have discussed the bantering question with him.

However, let me return to my original thread. I was obliged, as I was saying, to spend some uncomfortable minutes standing in the drawing room yesterday afternoon while Mr Farraday went about his bantering. I responded as usual by smiling slightly - sufficient at least to indicate that I was participating in some way with the good-humouredness with which he was carrying on - and waited to see if my employer's permission regarding the trip would be forthcoming. As I had anticipated, he gave his kind permission after not too great a delay, and furthermore, Mr Farraday was good enough to remember and reiterate his generous offer to 'foot the bill for the gas'.

So then, there seems little reason why I should not undertake my motoring trip to the West Country. I would of course have to write to Miss Kenton to tell her I might be passing by; I would also need to see to the matter of the costumes. Various other questions concerning arrangements here in the house during my absence will need to be settled. But all in all, I can see no genuine reason why I should not undertake this trip.

DAY ONE – EVENING

Salisbury

Tonight, I find myself here in a guest house in the city of Salisbury. The first day of my trip is now completed, and all in all, I must say I am quite satisfied. This expedition began this morning almost an hour later than I had planned, despite my having completed my packing and loaded the Ford with all the necessary items well before eight o'clock. What with Mrs Clements and the girls also gone for the week, I suppose I was very conscious of the fact that once I departed, Darlington Hall would stand empty for probably the first time this century – perhaps for the first time since the day it was built. It was an odd feeling and perhaps accounts for why I delayed my departure so long, wandering around the house many times over, checking one last time that all was in order.

It is hard to explain my feelings once I did finally set off. For the first twenty minutes or so of motoring, I cannot say I was seized by any excitement or anticipation at all. This was due, no doubt, to the fact that though I motored further and further from the house, I continued to find myself in surroundings with which I had at least a passing acquaintance. Now I had always supposed I had travelled very little, restricted as I am by my responsibilities in the house, but of course, over time, one does make various excursions for one professional reason or another, and it would seem I have become much more acquainted with those neighbouring districts than I had realized. For as I say, as I motored on in the sunshine towards the Berkshire border, I continued to be surprised by the familiarity of the country around me.

But then eventually the surroundings grew unrecognizable and I knew I had gone beyond all previous boundaries. I have heard people describe the moment, when setting sail in a ship, when one finally loses sight of the land. I imagine the experience of unease mixed with exhilaration often described in connection with this moment is very similar to what I felt in the Ford as the surroundings grew strange around me. This occurred just after I took a turning and found myself on a road curving around the edge of a hill. I could sense the steep drop to my left, though I could not see it due to the trees and thick foliage that lined the roadside. The feeling swept over me that I had truly left Darlington Hall behind, and I must confess I did feel a slight sense of alarm - a sense aggravated by the feeling that I was perhaps not on the correct road at all, but speeding off in totally the wrong direction into a wilderness. It was only the feeling of a moment, but it caused me to slow down. And even when I had assured myself I was on the right road, I felt compelled to stop the car a moment to take stock, as it were.

I decided to step out and stretch my legs a little and when I did so, I received a stronger impression than ever of being perched on the side of a hill. On one side of the road, thickets and small trees rose steeply, while on the other I could now glimpse through the foliage the distant countryside.

I believe I had walked a little way along the roadside, peering through the foliage hoping to get a better view, when I heard a voice behind me. Until this point, of course, I had believed myself quite alone and I turned in some surprise. A little way further up the road on the opposite side, I could see the start of a footpath, which disappeared steeply up into the thickets. Sitting on the large stone that marked this spot was a thin, white-haired man in a cloth cap, smoking his pipe. He called to me again and though I could not quite make out his words, I could see him gesturing for me to join him. For a moment, I took him for a vagrant, but then I saw he was just some local fellow enjoying the fresh air and summer sunshine, and saw no reason not to comply.

‘Just wondering, sir,’ he said, as I approached, ‘how fit your legs were.’

‘I beg your pardon?’

The fellow gestured up the footpath. ‘You got to have a good pair of legs and a good pair of lungs to go up there. Me, I haven’t got neither, so I stay down here. But if I was in better shape, I’d be sitting up there. There’s a nice little spot up there, a bench and everything. And you won’t get a better view anywhere in the whole of England.’

‘If what you say is true,’ I said, ‘I think I’d rather stay here. I happen to be embarking on a motoring trip during the course of which I hope to see many splendid views. To see the best before I have properly begun would be somewhat premature.’

The fellow did not seem to understand me, for he simply said again: ‘You won’t see a better view in the whole of England. But I tell you, you need a good pair of legs and a good pair of lungs.’ Then he added: ‘I can see you’re in good shape for your age, sir. I’d say you could make your way up there, no trouble. I mean, even I can manage on a good day.’

I glanced up the path, which did look steep and rather rough.

‘I’m telling you, sir, you’ll be sorry if you don’t take a walk up there. And you never know. A couple more years and it might be too late’ – he gave a rather vulgar laugh – ‘Better go on up while you still can.’

It occurs to me now that the man might just possibly have meant this in a humorous sort of way; that is to say, he intended it as a bantering remark. But this morning, I must say, I found it quite offensive and it may well have been the urge to demonstrate just how foolish his insinuation had been that caused me to set off up the footpath.

In any case, I am very glad I did so. Certainly, it was quite a strenuous walk - though I can say it failed to cause me any real difficulty - the path rising in zigzags up the hillside for a hundred yards or so. I then reached a small clearing, undoubtedly the spot the man had referred to. Here one was met by a bench - and indeed, by a most marvellous view over miles of the surrounding countryside.

What I saw was principally field upon field rolling off into the far distance. The land rose and fell gently, and the fields were bordered by hedges and trees. There were dots in some of the distant fields which I assumed to be sheep. To my right, almost on the horizon, I thought I could see the square tower of a church.

It was a fine feeling indeed to be standing up there like that, with the sound of summer all around one and a light breeze on one's face. And I believe it was then, looking on that view, that I began for the first time to adopt a frame of mind appropriate for the journey before me. For it was then that I felt the first healthy flush of anticipation for the many interesting experiences I know these days ahead hold in store for me. And indeed, it was then that I felt a new resolve not to be daunted in respect to the one professional task I have entrusted myself with on this trip; that is to say, regarding Miss Kenton and our present staffing problems.

But that was this morning. This evening I found myself settled here in this comfortable guest house in a street not far from the centre of Salisbury. It is, I suppose, a relatively modest establishment, but very clean and perfectly adequate for my needs. The landlady, a woman of around forty or so, appears to regard me as a rather grand visitor on account of Mr Farraday's Ford and the high quality of my suit. This afternoon - I arrived in Salisbury at around three thirty - when I entered my address in her register as 'Darlington Hall', I could see her look at me with some trepidation, assuming no doubt that I was some gentleman used to such places as the Ritz or the Dorchester and that I would storm out of the guest house on being shown my room. She informed me that a double room at the front was available, though I was welcome to it for the price of a single.

I was then brought up to this room, in which, at that point of the day, the sun was lighting up the floral patterns of the wallpaper quite agreeably. There were twin beds and a pair of good-sized windows overlooking the street. On inquiring where the bathroom was, the woman told me in a timid voice that although it was the door facing mine, there would be no hot water available until after supper. I asked her to bring me up a pot of tea, and when she had gone, inspected the room further. The beds were perfectly clean and had been well made. The basin in the corner was also very clean. On looking out of the windows, one saw on the opposite side of the street a bakery displaying a variety of pastries, a chemist's shop and a barber's. Further along, one could see where the street passed over a round-backed bridge and on into more rural surroundings. I refreshed my face and hands with cold water at the basin, then seated myself on a hard-backed chair left near one of the windows to await my tea.

I would suppose it was shortly after four o'clock that I left the guest house and ventured out into the streets of Salisbury. The wide, airy nature of the streets here give the city a marvellously spacious feel, so that I found it most easy to spend some hours just strolling in the gently warm sunshine. Moreover, I discovered the city to be one of many charms; time and again, I found myself wandering past delightful rows of old timber-fronted houses, or crossing some little stone footbridge over one of the many streams that flow through the city. And of course, I did not fail to visit the fine cathedral, much praised by Mrs Symons in her volume. This august building was hardly difficult for me to locate, its looming spire being ever-visible wherever one goes in Salisbury. Indeed, as I was making my way back to this guest house this evening, I glanced back over my shoulder on a number of occasions and was met each time by a view of the sun setting behind that great spire.

And yet tonight, in the quiet of this room, I find that what really remains with me from this first day's travel is not Salisbury Cathedral, nor any of the other charming sights of this city, but rather that marvellous view encountered this morning of the rolling English countryside. Now I am quite prepared to believe that other countries can offer more obviously spectacular scenery. Indeed, I have seen in encyclopedias and the National Geographic Magazine breathtaking photographs of sights from various corners of the globe; magnificent canyons and waterfalls, raggedly beautiful mountains. It has never, of course, been my privilege to have seen such things at first hand, but I will nevertheless hazard this with some confidence: the English landscape at its finest - such as I saw it this morning - possesses a quality that the landscapes of other nations, however more superficially dramatic, inevitably fail to possess. It is, I believe, a quality that will mark out the English landscape to any objective observer as the most deeply satisfying in the world, and this quality is probably best summed up by the term 'greatness'. For it is true, when I stood on that high ledge this morning and viewed the land before me, I distinctly felt that rare, yet unmistakable feeling - the feeling that one is in the presence of greatness. We call this land of ours Great Britain, and there may be those who believe this a somewhat immodest practice. Yet I would venture that the landscape of our country alone would justify the use of this lofty adjective.

And yet what precisely is this 'greatness'? Just where, or in what, does it lie? I am quite aware it would take a far wiser head than mine to answer such a question, but if I were forced to hazard a guess, I would say that it is the very lack of obvious drama or spectacle that sets the beauty of our land apart. What is pertinent is the calmness of that beauty, its sense of restraint. It is as though the land knows of its own beauty, of its own greatness, and feels no need to shout it. In comparison, the sorts of sights offered in such places as Africa and America, though undoubtedly very exciting, would, I am sure, strike the objective viewer as inferior on account of their unseemly demonstrativeness.

The whole question is very akin to the question that has caused much debate in our profession over the years: what is a 'great' butler? I can recall many hours of enjoyable discussion on this topic around the fire of the servants' hall at the end of a day. You will notice I say 'what' rather than 'who' is a great butler; for there was actually no serious dispute as to the identity of the men who set the standards amongst our generation. That is to say, I am talking of the likes of Mr Marshall of Charleville House, or Mr Lane of Bridewood. If you have ever had the privilege of meeting such men, you will no doubt know of the quality they possess to which I refer. But you will no doubt also understand what I mean when I say it is not at all easy to define just what this quality is.

Incidentally, now that I come to think further about it, it is not quite true to say there was no dispute as to who were the great butlers. What I should have said was that there was no serious dispute among professionals of quality who had any discernment in such matters. Of course, the servants' hall at Darlington Hall, like any servants' hall anywhere, was obliged to receive employees of varying degrees of intellect and perception, and I recall many a time having to bite my lip while some employee - and at times, I regret to say, members of my own staff - excitedly eulogized the likes of, say, Mr Jack Neighbours.

I have nothing against Mr Jack Neighbours, who sadly, I understand, was killed in the war. I mention him simply because his was a typical case. For two or three years in the mid-thirties, Mr Neighbours's name seemed to dominate conversations in every servants' hall in the land. As I say, at Darlington Hall too, many a visiting employee would bring the latest tales of Mr Neighbours's achievements, so that I and the likes of Mr Graham would have to share the frustrating experience of hearing anecdote after anecdote relating to him. And most frustrating of all would be having to witness at the conclusion of each such anecdote otherwise decent employees shaking their heads in wonder and uttering phrases like: 'That Mr Neighbours, he really is the best.'

Now I do not doubt that Mr Neighbours had good organizational skills; he did, I understand, mastermind a number of large occasions with conspicuous style. But at no stage did he ever approach the status of a great butler. I could have told you this at the height of his reputation, just as I could have predicted his downfall after a few short years in the limelight.

How often have you known it for the butler who is on everyone's lips one day as the greatest of his generation to be proved demonstrably within a few years to have been nothing of the sort? And yet those very same employees who once heaped praise on him will be too busy eulogizing some new figure to stop and examine their sense of judgement. The object of this sort of servants' hall talk is invariably some butler who has come to the fore quite suddenly through having been appointed by a prominent house, and who has perhaps managed to pull off two or three large occasions with some success. There will then be all sorts of rumours buzzing through servants' halls up and down the country to the effect that he has been approached by this or that personage or that several of the highest houses are competing for his services with wildly high wages. And what has happened before a few years have passed? This same invincible figure has been held responsible for some blunder, or has for some other reason fallen out of favour with his employers, leaves the house where he came to fame and is never heard of again.

Meanwhile, those same gossipers will have found yet some other newcomer about whom to enthuse. Visiting valets, I have found, are often the worst offenders, aspiring as they usually do to the position of butler with some urgency. They it is who tend to be always insisting this or that figure is the one to emulate, or repeating what some particular hero is said to have pronounced upon professional matters.

But then, of course, I hasten to add, there are many valets who would never dream of indulging in this sort of folly - who are, in fact, professionals of the highest discernment. When two or three such persons were gathered together at our servants' hall - I mean of the calibre of, say, Mr Graham, with whom now, sadly, I seem to have lost touch - we would have some of the most stimulating and intelligent debates on every aspect of our vocation. Indeed, today, those evenings rank amongst my fondest memories from those times.

But let me return to the question that is of genuine interest, this question we so enjoyed debating when our evenings were not spoilt by chatter from those who lacked any fundamental understanding of the profession; that is to say, the question 'what is a great butler?'

To the best of my knowledge, for all the talk this question has engendered over the years, there have been very few attempts within the profession to formulate an official answer. The only instance that comes to mind is the attempt of the Hayes Society to devise criteria for membership. You may not be aware of the Hayes Society, for few talk of it these days. But in the twenties and the early thirties, it exerted a considerable influence over much of London and the Home Counties. In fact, many felt its power had become too great and thought it no bad thing when it was forced to close, I believe in 1932 or 1933.

The Hayes Society claimed to admit butlers of 'only the very first rank'. Much of the power and prestige it went on to gain derived from the fact that unlike other such organizations which have come and gone, it managed to keep its numbers extremely low, thus giving this claim some credibility. Membership, it was said, never at any point rose above thirty and much of the time remained closer to nine or ten. This, and the fact that the Hayes Society tended to be a rather secretive body, lent it much mystique for a time, ensuring that the pronouncements it occasionally issued on professional matters were received as though hewn on tablets of stone.

But one matter the Society resisted pronouncing on for some time was the question of its own criteria for membership. Pressure to have these announced steadily mounted, and in response to a series of letters published in A Quarterly for the Gentleman's Gentleman, the Society admitted that a prerequisite for membership was that 'an applicant be attached to a distinguished household'.

'Though of course,' the Society went on, 'this by itself is far from sufficient to satisfy requirements.' It was made clear, furthermore, that the Society did not regard the houses of businessmen or the 'newly rich' as 'distinguished', and in my opinion this piece of out-dated thinking crucially undermined any serious authority the Society may have achieved to arbitrate on standards in our profession. In response to further letters in A Quarterly, the Society justified its stance by saying that while it accepted some correspondents' views that certain butlers of excellent quality were to be found in the houses of businessmen, 'the assumption had to be that the houses of true ladies and gentlemen would not refrain long from acquiring the services of any such persons'. One had to be guided by the judgement of 'the true ladies and gentlemen', argued the Society, or else 'we may as well adopt the proprieties of Bolshevik Russia'. This provoked further controversy, and the pressure of letters continued to build up urging the Society to declare more fully its membership criteria. In the end, it was revealed in a brief letter to A

Quarterly that in the view of the Society - and I will try and quote accurately from memory - 'the most crucial criterion is that the applicant be possessed of a dignity in keeping with his position. No applicant will satisfy requirements, whatever his level of accomplishments otherwise, if seen to fall short in this respect.'

For all my lack of enthusiasm for the Hayes Society, it is my belief that this particular pronouncement at least was founded on a significant truth. If one looks at these persons we agree are 'great' butlers, if one looks at, say, Mr Marshall or Mr Lane, it does seem to be that the factor which distinguishes them from those butlers who are merely extremely competent is most closely captured by this word 'dignity'.

Of course, this merely begs the further question: of what is 'dignity' comprised? And it was on this point that the likes of Mr Graham and I had some of our most interesting debates. Mr Graham would always take the view that this 'dignity' was something like a woman's beauty and it was thus pointless to attempt to analyse it. I, on the other hand, held the opinion that to draw such a parallel tended to demean the 'dignity' of the likes of Mr Marshall. Moreover, my main objection to Mr Graham's analogy was the implication that this 'dignity' was something one possessed or did not by a fluke of nature; and if one did not self-evidently have it, to strive after it would be as futile as an ugly woman trying to make herself beautiful. Now while I would accept that the majority of butlers may well discover ultimately that they do not have the capacity for it, I believe strongly that this 'dignity' is something one can meaningfully strive for throughout one's career. Those 'great' butlers like Mr Marshall who have it, I am sure, acquired it over many years of self-training and the careful absorbing of experience. In my view, then, it was rather defeatist from a vocational standpoint to adopt a stance like Mr Graham's.

In any case, for all Mr Graham's scepticism, I can remember he and I spending many evenings trying to put our fingers on the constitution of this 'dignity'. We never came to any agreement, but I can say for my part that I developed fairly firm ideas of my own on the matter during the course of such discussions, and they are by and large the beliefs I still hold today. I would like, if I may, to try and say here what I think this 'dignity' to be.

You will not dispute, I presume, that Mr Marshall of Charleville House and Mr Lane of Bridewood have been the two great butlers of recent times. Perhaps you might be persuaded that Mr Henderson of Branbury Castle also falls into this rare category. But you may think me merely biased if I say that my own father could in many ways be considered to rank with such men, and that his career is the one I have always scrutinized for a definition of 'dignity'. Yet it is my firm conviction that at the peak of his career at Loughborough House, my father was indeed the embodiment of 'dignity'.

I realize that if one looks at the matter objectively, one has to concede my father lacked various attributes one may normally expect in a great butler. But those same absent attributes, I would argue, are every time those of a superficial and decorative order, attributes that are attractive, no doubt, as icing on the cake, but are not pertaining to what is really essential. I refer to things such as good accent and command of language, general knowledge on wide-ranging topics such as falconing or newt-mating - attributes none of which my father could have boasted. Furthermore, it must be remembered that my father was a butler of an earlier generation who began his career at a time when such attributes were not considered proper, let alone desirable in a butler. The obsessions with eloquence and general knowledge would appear to be ones that emerged with our generation, probably in the wake of Mr Marshall, when lesser men trying to emulate his greatness mistook the superficial for the essence. It is my view that our generation has been much too preoccupied with the 'trimmings'; goodness knows how much time and energy has gone into the practising of accent and command of language, how many hours spent studying encyclopedias and volumes of 'Test Your Knowledge', when the time should have been spent mastering the basic fundamentals.

Though we must be careful not to attempt to deny the responsibility which ultimately lies with ourselves, it has to be said that certain employers have done much to encourage these sorts of trends. I am sorry to say this, but there would appear to have been a number of houses in recent times, some of the highest pedigree, which have tended to take a competitive attitude towards each other and have not been above 'showing off' to guests a butler's mastery of such trivial accomplishments. I have heard of various instances of a butler being displayed as a kind of performing monkey at a house party. In one regrettable case, which I myself witnessed, it had become an established sport in the house for guests to ring for the butler and put to him random questions of the order of, say, who had won the Derby in such and such a year, rather as one might to a Memory Man at the music hall.

My father, as I say, came of a generation mercifully free of such confusions of our professional values. And I would maintain that for all his limited command of English and his limited general knowledge, he not only knew all there was to know about how to run a house, he did in his prime come to acquire that 'dignity in keeping with his position', as the Hayes Society puts it. If I try, then, to describe to you what I believe made my father thus distinguished, I may in this way convey my idea of what 'dignity' is.

There was a certain story my father was fond of repeating over the years. I recall listening to him tell it to visitors when I was a child, and then later, when I was starting out as a footman under his supervision. I remember him relating it again the first time I returned to see him after gaining my first post as butler - to a Mr and Mrs Muggeridge in their relatively modest house in Allshot, Oxfordshire. Clearly the story meant much to him. My father's generation was not one accustomed to discussing and analysing in the way ours is and I believe the telling and retelling of this story was as close as my father ever came to reflecting critically on the profession he practised. As such, it gives a vital clue to his thinking.

The story was an apparently true one concerning a certain butler who had travelled with his employer to India and served there for many years maintaining amongst the native staff the same high standards he had commanded in England. One afternoon, evidently, this butler had entered the dining room to make sure all was well for dinner, when he noticed a tiger languishing beneath the dining table. The butler had left the dining room quietly, taking care to close the doors behind him, and proceeded calmly to the drawing room where his employer was taking tea with a number of visitors. There he attracted his employer's attention with a polite cough, then whispered in the latter's ear: 'I'm very sorry, sir, but there appears to be a tiger in the dining room. Perhaps you will permit the twelve-bores to be used?'

And according to legend, a few minutes later, the employer and his guests heard three gun shots. When the butler reappeared in the drawing room some time afterwards to refresh the teapots, the employer had inquired if all was well.

'Perfectly fine, thank you, sir,' had come the reply. 'Dinner will be served at the usual time and I am pleased to say there will be no discernible traces left of the recent occurrence by that time.'

This last phrase - 'no discernible traces left of the recent occurrence by that time' - my father would repeat with a laugh and shake his head admiringly. He neither claimed to know the butler's name, nor anyone who had known him, but he would always insist the event occurred just as he told it. In any case, it is of little importance whether or not this story is true; the significant thing is, of course, what it reveals concerning my father's ideals. For when I look back over his career, I can see with hindsight that he must have striven throughout his years somehow to become that butler of his story. And in my view, at the peak of his career, my father achieved his ambition. For although I am sure he never had the chance to encounter a tiger beneath the dining table, when I think over all that I know or have heard concerning him, I can think of at least several instances of his displaying in abundance that very quality he so admired in the butler of his story.

One such instance was related to me by Mr David Charles, of the Charles and Redding Company, who visited Darlington Hall from time to time during Lord Darlington's days. It was one evening when I happened to be valeting him, Mr Charles told me he had come across my father some years earlier while a guest at Loughborough House - the home of Mr John Silvers, the industrialist, where my father served for fifteen years at the height of his career. He had never been quite able to forget my father, Mr Charles told me, owing to an incident that occurred during that visit.

One afternoon, Mr Charles to his shame and regret had allowed himself to become inebriated in the company of two fellow guests - gentlemen I shall merely call Mr Smith and Mr Jones since they are likely to be still remembered in certain circles. After an hour or so of drinking, these two gentlemen decided they wished to go for an afternoon drive around the local villages - a motor car around this time still being something of a novelty. They persuaded Mr Charles to accompany them, and since the chauffeur was on leave at that point, enlisted my father to drive the car.

Once they had set off, Mr Smith and Mr Jones, for all their being well into their middle years, proceeded to behave like schoolboys, singing coarse songs and making even coarser comments on all they saw from the window. Furthermore, these gentlemen had noticed on the local map three villages in the vicinity called Morphy, Saltash and Brigoon. Now I am not entirely sure these were the exact names, but the point was they reminded Mr Smith and Mr Jones of the music hall act, Murphy, Saltman and Brigid the Cat, of which you may have heard. Upon noticing this curious coincidence, the gentlemen then gained an ambition to visit the three villages in question - in honour, as it were, of the music hall artistes. According to Mr Charles, my father had duly driven to one village and was on the point of entering a second when either Mr Smith or Mr Jones noticed the village was Brigoon - that is to say the third, not the second, name of the sequence. They demanded angrily that my father turned the car immediately so that the villages could be visited 'in the correct order'. It so happened that this entailed doubling back a considerable way of the route, but, so Mr Charles assures me, my father accepted the request as though it were a perfectly reasonable one, and in general, continued to behave with immaculate courtesy.

But Mr Smith's and Mr Jones's attention had now been drawn to my father and no doubt rather bored with what the view outside had to offer, they proceeded to amuse themselves by shouting out unflattering remarks concerning my father's 'mistake'. Mr Charles remembered marvelling at how my father showed not one hint of discomfort or anger, but continued to drive with an expression balanced perfectly between personal dignity and readiness to oblige. My father's equanimity was not, however, allowed to last. For when they had wearied of hurling insults at my father's back, the two gentlemen began to discuss their host - that is to say, my father's employer, Mr John Silvers. The remarks grew even more debased and treacherous so that Mr Charles - at least so he claimed - was obliged to intervene with the suggestion that such talk was bad form.

This view was contradicted with such energy that Mr Charles, quite aside from worrying he would become the next focus of the gentlemen's attention, actually thought himself in danger of physical assault. But then suddenly, following a particularly heinous insinuation against his employer, my father brought the car to an abrupt halt. It was what happened next that had made such an indelible impression upon Mr Charles.

The rear door of the car opened and my father was observed to be standing there, a few steps back from the vehicle, gazing steadily into the interior. As Mr Charles described it, all three passengers seemed to be overcome as one by the realization of what an imposing physical force my father was. Indeed, he was a man of some six feet three inches, and his countenance, though reassuring while one knew he was intent on obliging, could seem extremely forbidding viewed in certain other contexts. According to Mr Charles, my father did not display any obvious anger. He had, it seemed, merely opened the door. And yet there was something so powerfully rebuking, and at the same time so unassailable about his figure looming over them that Mr Charles's two drunken companions seemed to cower back like small boys caught by the farmer in the act of stealing apples.

My father had proceeded to stand there for some moments, saying nothing, merely holding open the door. Eventually, either Mr Smith or Mr Jones had remarked: 'Are we not going on with the journey?'

My father did not reply, but continued to stand there silently, neither demanding disembarkation nor offering any clue as to his desires or intentions. I can well imagine how he must have looked that day, framed by the doorway of the vehicle, his dark, severe presence quite blotting out the effect of the gentle Hertfordshire scenery behind him. Those were, Mr Charles recalls, strangely unnerving moments during which he too, despite not having participated in the preceding behaviour, felt engulfed with guilt. The silence seemed to go on interminably, before either Mr Smith or Mr Jones found it in him to mutter: 'I suppose we were talking a little out of turn there. It won't happen again.'

A moment to consider this, then my father had closed the door gently, returned to the wheel and had proceeded to continue the tour of the three villages - a tour, Mr Charles assured me, that was completed thereafter in near silence.

Now that I have recalled this episode, another event from around that time in my father's career comes to mind which demonstrates perhaps even more impressively this special quality he came to possess. I should explain here that I am one of two brothers - and that my elder brother, Leonard, was killed during the South African War while I was still a boy. Naturally, my father would have felt this loss keenly; but to make matters worse the usual comfort a father has in these situations - that is, the notion that his son gave his life gloriously for king and country - was sullied by the fact that my brother had perished in a particularly infamous manoeuvre. Not only was it alleged that the manoeuvre had been a most un-British attack on civilian Boer settlements, overwhelming evidence emerged that it had been irresponsibly commanded with several floutings of elementary military precautions, so that the men who had died - my brother among them - had died quite needlessly. In view of what I am about to relate, it would not be proper of me to identify the manoeuvre any more precisely, though you may well guess which one I am alluding to if I say that it caused something of an uproar at the time, adding significantly to the controversy the conflict as a whole was attracting. There had been calls for the removal, even the court-martialling, of the general concerned, but the army had defended the latter and he had been allowed to complete the campaign. What is less known is that at the close of the Southern African conflict, this same general had been discreetly retired, and he had then entered business, dealing in shipments from Southern Africa. I relate this because some ten years after the conflict, that is to say when the wounds of bereavement had only superficially healed, my father was called into Mr John Silvers's study to be told that this very same personage - I will call him simply 'the General' - was due to visit for a number of days to attend a house party, during which my father's employer hoped to lay the foundations of a lucrative business transaction. Mr Silvers, however, had remembered the significance the visit would have for my father, and had thus called him in to offer him the option of taking several days' leave for the duration of the General's stay.

My father's feelings towards the General were, naturally, those of utmost loathing; but he realized too that his employer's present business aspirations hung on the smooth running of the house party - which with some eighteen or so people expected would be no trifling affair. My father thus replied to the effect that while he was most grateful that his feelings had been taken into account, Mr Silvers could be assured that service would be provided to the usual standards.

As things turned out, my father's ordeal proved even worse than might have been predicted. For one thing, any hopes my father may have had that to meet the General in person would arouse a sense of respect or sympathy to leaven his feelings against him proved without foundation. The General was a portly, ugly man, his manners were not refined, and his talk was conspicuous for an eagerness to apply military similes to a very wide variety of matters. Worse was to come with the news that the gentleman had brought no valet, his usual man having fallen ill. This presented a delicate problem, another of the house guests being also without his valet, raising the question as to which guest should be allocated the butler as valet and who the footman. My father, appreciating his employer's position, volunteered immediately to take the General, and thus was obliged to suffer intimate proximity for four days with the man he detested. Meanwhile, the General, having no idea of my father's feelings, took full opportunity to relate anecdotes of his military accomplishments - as of course many military gentlemen are wont to do to their valets in the privacy of their rooms. Yet so well did my father hide his feelings, so professionally did he carry out his duties, that on his departure the General had actually complimented Mr John Silvers on the excellence of his butler and had left an unusually large tip in appreciation - which my father without hesitation asked his employer to donate to a charity.

I hope you will agree that in these two instances I have cited from his career - both of which I have had corroborated and believe to be accurate - my father not only manifests, but comes close to being the personification itself, of what the Hayes Society terms 'dignity in keeping with his position'. If one considers the difference between my father at such moments and a figure such as Mr Jack Neighbours even with the best of his technical flourishes, I believe one may begin to distinguish what it is that separates a 'great' butler from a merely competent one. We may now understand better, too, why my father was so fond of the story of the butler who failed to panic on discovering a tiger under the dining table; it was because he knew instinctively that somewhere in this story lay the kernel of what true 'dignity' is. And let me now posit this: 'dignity' has to do crucially with a butler's ability not to abandon the professional being he inhabits. Lesser butlers will abandon their professional being for the private one at the least provocation. For such persons, being a butler is like playing some pantomime role; a small push, a slight stumble, and the façade will drop off to reveal the actor underneath. The great butlers are great by virtue of their ability to inhabit their professional role and inhabit it to the utmost; they will not be shaken out by external events, however surprising, alarming or vexing. They wear their professionalism as a decent gentleman will wear his suit: he will not let ruffians or circumstances tear it off him in the public gaze; he will discard it when, and only when, he wills to do so, and this will invariably be when he is entirely alone. It is, as I say, a matter of 'dignity'.

It is sometimes said that butlers only truly exist in England. Other countries, whatever title is actually used, have only manservants. I tend to believe this is true. Continentals are unable to be butlers because they are as a breed incapable of the emotional restraint which only the English race is capable of. Continentals - and by and large the Celts, as you will no doubt agree - are as a rule unable to control themselves in moments of strong emotion, and are thus unable to maintain a professional demeanour other than in the least challenging of situations. If I may return to my earlier metaphor - you will excuse my putting it so coarsely - they are like a man who will, at the slightest provocation, tear off his suit and his shirt and run about screaming. In a word, 'dignity' is beyond such persons. We English have an important advantage over foreigners in this respect and it is for this reason that when you think of a great butler, he is bound, almost by definition, to be an Englishman.

Of course, you may retort, as did Mr Graham whenever I expounded such a line during those enjoyable discussions by the fire, that if I am correct in what I am saying, one could recognize a great butler as such only after one had seen him perform under some severe test. And yet the truth is, we accept persons such as Mr Marshall or Mr Lane to be great, though most of us cannot claim to have ever scrutinized them under such conditions. I have to admit Mr Graham has a point here, but all I can say is that after one has been in the profession as long as one has, one is able to judge intuitively the depth of a man's professionalism without having to see it under pressure. Indeed, on the occasion one is fortunate enough to meet a great butler, far from experiencing any sceptical urge to demand a 'test', one is at a loss to imagine any situation which could ever dislodge a professionalism borne with such authority. In fact, I am sure it was an apprehension of this sort, penetrating even the thick haze created by alcohol, which reduced my father's passengers into a shamed silence that Sunday afternoon many years ago. It is with such men as it is with the English landscape seen at its best as I did this morning: when one encounters them, one simply knows one is in the presence of greatness.

There will always be, I realize, those who would claim that any attempt to analyse greatness as I have been doing is quite futile. 'You know when somebody's got it and you know when somebody hasn't,' Mr Graham's argument would always be.

'Beyond that there's nothing much you can say.' But I believe we have a duty not to be so defeatist in this matter. It is surely a professional responsibility for all of us to think deeply about these things so that each of us may better strive towards attaining 'dignity' for ourselves.

DAY TWO – MORNING

Salisbury

Strange beds have rarely agreed with me, and after only a short spell of somewhat troubled slumber, I awoke an hour or so ago. It was then still dark, and knowing I had a full day's motoring ahead of me, I made an attempt to return to sleep. This proved futile, and when I decided eventually to rise, it was still so dark that I was obliged to turn on the electric light in order to shave at the sink in the corner. But when having finished I switched it off again, I could see early daylight at the edges of the curtains.

When I parted them just a moment ago, the light outside was still very pale and something of a mist was affecting my view of the baker's shop and chemist's shop opposite. Indeed, following the street further along to where it runs over the little round-backed bridge, I could see the mist rising from the river, obscuring almost entirely one of the bridge-posts. There was not a soul to be seen, and apart from a hammering noise echoing from somewhere distant, and an occasional coughing in a room to the back of the house, there is still no sound to be heard. The landlady is clearly not yet up and about, suggesting there is little chance of her serving breakfast earlier than her declared time of seven thirty.

Now, in these quiet moments as I wait for the world about to awake, I find myself going over in my mind again passages from Miss Kenton's letter. Incidentally, I should before now have explained myself as regards my referring to 'Miss Kenton'. 'Miss Kenton' is properly speaking 'Mrs Benn' and has been for twenty years. However, because I knew her at close quarters only during her maiden years and have not seen her once since she went to the West Country to become 'Mrs Benn', you will perhaps excuse my impropriety in referring to her as I knew her, and in my mind have continued to call her throughout these years. Of course, her letter has given me extra cause to continue thinking of her as 'Miss Kenton', since it would seem, sadly, that her marriage is finally to come to an end. The letter does not make specific the details of the matter, as one would hardly expect it to do, but Miss Kenton states unambiguously that she has now, in fact, taken the step of moving out of Mr Benn's house in Helston and is presently lodging with an acquaintance in the nearby village of Little Compton.

It is of course tragic that her marriage is now ending in failure. At this very moment, no doubt, she is pondering with regret decisions made in the far-off past that have now left her, deep in middle age, so alone and desolate. And it is easy to see how in such a frame of mind, the thought of returning to Darlington Hall would be a great comfort to her. Admittedly, she does not at any point in her letter state explicitly her desire to return; but that is the unmistakable message conveyed by the general nuance of many of the passages, imbued as they are with a deep nostalgia for her days at Darlington Hall. Of course, Miss Kenton cannot hope by returning at this stage ever to retrieve those lost years, and it will be my first duty to impress this upon her when we meet. I will have to point out how different things are now - that the days of working with a grand staff at one's beck and call will probably never return within our lifetime. But then Miss Kenton is an intelligent woman and she will have already realized these things. Indeed, all in all, I cannot see why the option of her returning to Darlington Hall and seeing out her working years there should not offer a very genuine consolation to a life that has come to be so dominated by a sense of waste.

And of course, from my own professional viewpoint, it is clear that even after a break of so many years, Miss Kenton would prove the perfect solution to the problem at present besetting us at Darlington Hall. In fact, by terming it a ‘problem’ , I perhaps overstate the matter. I am referring, after all, to a series of very minor errors on my part and the course I am now pursuing is merely a means of pre-empting any ‘problems’ before one arises. It is true, these same trivial problems did cause me some anxiety at first, but once I had had time to diagnose them correctly as symptoms of nothing more than a straightforward staff shortage, I have refrained from giving them much thought. Miss Kenton’s arrival, as I say, will put a permanent end to them.

But to return to her letter. It does at times reveal a certain despair over her present situation - a fact that is rather concerning. She begins one sentence: ‘Although I have no idea how I shall usefully fill the remainder of my life ...’ And again, elsewhere, she writes: ‘The rest of my life stretches out as an emptiness before me.’ For the most part, though, as I have said, the tone is one of nostalgia. At one point, for instance, she writes:

‘This whole incident put me in mind of Alice White. Do you remember her? In fact, I hardly imagine you could forget her. For myself, I am still haunted by those vowel sounds and those uniquely ungrammatical sentences only she could dream up! Have you any idea what became of her?’

I have not, as a matter of fact, though I must say it rather amused me to remember that exasperating housemaid - who in the end turned out to be one of the most devoted. At another point in her letter, Miss Kenton writes:

‘I was so fond of that view from the second-floor bedrooms overlooking the lawn with the downs visible in the distance. Is it still like that? On summer evenings there was a sort of magical quality to that view and I will confess to you now I used to waste many precious minutes standing at one of those windows just enchanted by it.’

Then she goes on to add:

‘If this is a painful memory, forgive me. But I will never forget that time we both watched your father walking back and forth in front of the summerhouse, looking down at the ground as though he hoped to find some precious jewel he had dropped there.’

It is something of a revelation that this memory from over thirty years ago should have remained with Miss Kenton as it had done with me. Indeed, it must have occurred on just one of those summer evenings she mentions, for I can recall distinctly climbing to the second landing and seeing before me a series of orange shafts from the sunset breaking the gloom of the corridor where each bedroom door stood ajar. And as I made my way past those bedrooms, I had seen through a doorway Miss Kenton’s figure, silhouetted against a window, turn and call softly: ‘Mr Stevens, if you have a moment.’ As I entered, Miss Kenton had turned back to the window. Down below, the shadows of the poplars were falling across the lawn. To the right of our view, the lawn sloped up a gentle embankment to where the summerhouse stood, and it was there my father’s figure could be seen, pacing slowly with an air of preoccupation - indeed, as Miss Kenton puts it so well, ‘as though he hoped to find some precious jewel he had dropped there’.

There are some very pertinent reasons why this memory has remained with me, as I wish to explain. Moreover, now that I come to think of it, it is perhaps not so surprising that it should also have made a deep impression on Miss Kenton given certain aspects of her relationship with my father during her early days at Darlington Hall.

Miss Kenton and my father had arrived at the house at more or less the same time - that is to say, the spring of 1922 - as a consequence of my losing at one stroke the previous housekeeper and under-butler. This had occurred due to these latter two persons deciding to marry one another and leave the profession. I have always found such liaisons a serious threat to the order in a house. Since that time, I have lost numerous more employees in such circumstances. Of course, one has to expect such things to occur amongst maids and footmen, and a good butler should always take this into account in his planning; but such marrying amongst more senior employees can have an extremely disruptive effect on work. Of course, if two members of staff happen to fall in love and decide to marry, it would be churlish to be apportioning blame; but what I find a major irritation are those persons - and housekeepers are particularly guilty here - who have no genuine commitment to their profession and who are essentially going from post to post looking for romance. This sort of person is a blight on good professionalism.

But let me say immediately I do not have Miss Kenton in mind at all when I say this. Of course, she too eventually left my staff to get married, but I can vouch that during the time she worked as a housekeeper under me, she was nothing less than dedicated and never allowed her professional priorities to be distracted.

But I am digressing. I was explaining that we had fallen in need of a housekeeper and an under-butler at one and the same time and Miss Kenton had arrived - with unusually good references, I recall - to take up the former post. As it happened, my father had around this time come to the end of his distinguished service at Loughborough House with the death of his employer, Mr John Silvers, and had been at something of a loss for work and accommodation. Although he was still, of course, a professional of the highest class, he was now in his seventies and much ravaged by arthritis and other ailments. It was not at all certain, then, how he would fare against the younger breed of highly professionalized butlers looking for posts. In view of this, it seemed a reasonable solution to ask my father to bring his great experience and distinction to Darlington Hall.

As I remember it was one morning a little while after my father and Miss Kenton had joined the staff, I had been in my pantry, sitting at the table going through my paperwork, when I heard a knock on my door. I recall I was a little taken aback when Miss Kenton opened the door and entered before I had bidden her to do so. She came in holding a large vase of flowers and said with a smile:

‘Mr Stevens, I thought these would brighten your parlour a little.’

‘I beg your pardon, Miss Kenton?’

‘It seemed such a pity your room should be so dark and cold, Mr Stevens, when it’s such bright sunshine outside. I thought these would enliven things a little.’

‘That’s very kind of you, Miss Kenton.’

‘It’s a shame more sun doesn’t get in here. The walls are even a little damp, are they not, Mr Stevens?’

I turned back to my accounts, saying: ‘Merely condensation, I believe, Miss Kenton.’

She put her vase down on the table in front of me, then glancing around my pantry again said: ‘If you wish, Mr Stevens, I might bring in some more cuttings for you.’

‘Miss Kenton, I appreciate your kindness. But this is not a room of entertainment. I am happy to have distractions kept to a minimum.’

‘But surely, Mr Stevens, there is no need to keep your room so stark and bereft of colour.’

‘It has served me perfectly well this far as it is, Miss Kenton, though I appreciate your thoughts. In fact, since you are here, there was a certain matter I wished to raise with you.’

‘Oh, really, Mr Stevens.’

‘Yes, Miss Kenton, just a small matter. I happened to be walking past the kitchen yesterday when I heard you calling to someone named William.’

‘Is that so, Mr Stevens?’

‘Indeed, Miss Kenton. I did hear you call several times for “William”. May I ask who it was you were addressing by that name?’

‘Why, Mr Stevens, I should think I was addressing your father. There are no other Williams in this house, I take it.’

‘It’s an easy enough error to have made,’ I said with a small smile. ‘May I ask you in future, Miss Kenton, to address my father as “Mr Stevens”? If you are referring to him to a third party, then you may wish to call him “Mr Stevens senior” to distinguish him from myself. I’m most grateful, Miss Kenton.’

With that I turned back to my papers. But to my surprise, Miss Kenton did not take her leave. ‘Excuse me, Mr Stevens,’ she said after a moment.

‘Yes, Miss Kenton.’

‘I am afraid I am not quite clear what you are saying. I have in the past been accustomed to addressing under-servants by their Christian names and saw no reason to do otherwise in this house.’

‘A most understandable error, Miss Kenton. However, if you will consider the situation for a moment, you may come to see the inappropriateness of someone such as yourself talking “down” to one such as my father.’

‘I am still not clear what you are getting at, Mr Stevens. You say someone such as myself, but I am as far as I understand the housekeeper of this house, while your father is the under-butler.’

‘He is of course in title the under-butler, as you say. But I am surprised your powers of observation have not already made it clear to you that he is in reality more than that. A great deal more.’

‘No doubt I have been extremely unobservant, Mr Stevens. I had only observed that your father was an able under-butler and addressed him accordingly. It must indeed have been most galling for him to be so addressed by one such as I.’

‘Miss Kenton, it is clear from your tone you simply have not observed my father. If you had done so, the inappropriateness of someone of your age and standing addressing him as “William” should have been self-evident to you.’

‘Mr Stevens, I may not have been a housekeeper for long, but I would say that in the time I have been, my abilities have attracted some very generous remarks.’

‘I do not doubt your competence for one moment, Miss Kenton. But a hundred things should have indicated to you that my father is a figure of unusual distinction from whom you may learn a wealth of things were you prepared to be more observant.’

‘I am most indebted to you for your advice, Mr Stevens. So do please tell me, just what marvellous things might I learn from observing your father?’

‘I would have thought it obvious to anyone with eyes, Miss Kenton.’

‘But we have already established, have we not, that I am particularly deficient in that respect.’

‘Miss Kenton, if you are under the impression you have already at your age perfected yourself, you will never rise to the heights you are no doubt capable of. I might point out, for instance, you are still often unsure of what goes where and which item is which.’

This seemed to take the wind out of Miss Kenton’s sails somewhat. Indeed, for a moment, she looked a little upset. Then she said:

‘I had a little difficulty on first arriving, but that is surely only normal.’

‘Ah, there you are, Miss Kenton. If you had observed my father who arrived in this house a week after you did, you will have seen that his house knowledge is perfect and was so almost from the time he set foot in Darlington Hall.’

Miss Kenton seemed to think about this before saying a little sulkily:

‘I am sure Mr Stevens senior is very good at his job, but I assure you, Mr Stevens, I am very good at mine. I will remember to address your father by his full title in future. Now, if you would please excuse me.’

After this encounter, Miss Kenton did not attempt to introduce further flowers into my pantry, and in general, I was pleased to observe, she went about settling in impressively. It was clear, furthermore, she was a housekeeper who took her work very seriously and in spite of her youth, she seemed to have no difficulty gaining the respect of her staff.

I noticed too that she was indeed proceeding to address my father as ‘Mr Stevens’. However, one afternoon perhaps two weeks after our conversation in my pantry, I was doing something in the library when Miss Kenton came in and said:

‘Excuse me, Mr Stevens. But if you are searching for your dust-pan, it is out in the hall.’

‘I beg your pardon, Miss Kenton?’

‘Your dust-pan, Mr Stevens. You’ve left it out here. Shall I bring it in for you?’

‘Miss Kenton, I have not been using a dust-pan.’

‘Ah, well, then forgive me, Mr Stevens. I naturally assumed you were using your dust-pan and had left it out in the hall. I am sorry to have disturbed you.’

She started to leave, but then turned at the doorway and said:

‘Oh, Mr Stevens. I would return it myself but I have to go upstairs just now. I wonder if you will remember it?’

‘Of course, Miss Kenton. Thank you for drawing attention to it.’

‘It is quite all right, Mr Stevens.’

I listened to her footsteps cross the hall and start up the great staircase, then proceeded to the doorway myself. From the library doors, one has an unbroken view right across the entrance hall to the main doors of the house. Most conspicuously, in virtually the central spot of the otherwise empty and highly polished floor, lay the dust-pan Miss Kenton had alluded to.

It struck me as a trivial, but irritating error; the dust-pan would have been conspicuous not only from the five ground-floor doorways opening on to the hall, but also from the staircase and the first-floor balconies. I crossed the hall and had actually picked up the offending item before realizing its full implication; my father, I recalled, had been brushing the entrance hall a half-hour or so earlier. At first, I found it hard to credit such an error to my father. But I soon reminded myself that such trivial slips are liable to befall anyone from time to time, and my irritation soon turned to Miss Kenton for attempting to create such unwarranted fuss over the incident.

Then, not more than a week later, I was coming down the back corridor from the kitchen when Miss Kenton came out of her parlour and uttered a statement she had clearly been rehearsing; this was something to the effect that although she felt most uncomfortable drawing my attention to errors made by my staff, she and I had to work as a team, and she hoped I would not feel inhibited to do similarly should I notice errors made by female staff. She then went on to point out that several pieces of silver had been laid out for the dining room which bore clear remains of polish. The end of one fork had been practically black. I thanked her and she withdrew back into her parlour. It had been unnecessary, of course, for her to mention that the silver was one of my father's main responsibilities and one he took great pride in.

It is very possible there were a number of other instances of this sort which I have now forgotten. In any case, I recall things reaching something of a climax one grey and drizzly afternoon when I was in the billiard room attending to Lord Darlington's sporting trophies. Miss Kenton had entered and said from the door:

'Mr Stevens, I have just noticed something outside which puzzles me.'

'What is that, Miss Kenton?'

'Was it his lordship's wish that the Chinaman on the upstairs landing should be exchanged with the one outside this door?'

'The Chinaman, Miss Kenton?'

'Yes, Mr Stevens. The Chinaman normally on the landing you will now find outside this door.'

'I fear, Miss Kenton, that you are a little confused.'

'I do not believe I am confused at all, Mr Stevens. I make it my business to acquaint myself with where objects properly belong in a house. The Chinamen, I would suppose, were polished by someone then replaced incorrectly. If you are sceptical, Mr Stevens, perhaps you will care to step out here and observe for yourself.'

'Miss Kenton, I am occupied at present.'

'But, Mr Stevens, you do not appear to believe what I am saying. I am thus asking you to step outside this door and see for yourself. '

'Miss Kenton, I am busy just now and will attend to the matter shortly. It is hardly one of urgency. '

'You accept then, Mr Stevens, that I am not in error on this point. '

'I will accept nothing of the sort, Miss Kenton, until I have had the chance to deal with the matter. However, I am occupied at present. '

I turned back to my business, but Miss Kenton remained in the doorway observing me. Eventually, she said:

'I can see you will be finished very shortly, Mr Stevens. I will await you outside so that this matter may be finalized when you come out. '

'Miss Kenton, I believe you are according this matter an urgency it hardly merits. '

But Miss Kenton had departed, and sure enough, as I continued with my work, an occasional footstep or some other sound would serve to remind me she was still there outside the door. I decided therefore to occupy myself with some further tasks in the billiard room, assuming she would after a while see the ludicrousness of her position and leave. However, after some time had passed, and I had exhausted the tasks which could usefully be achieved with the implements I happened to have at hand, Miss Kenton was evidently still outside. Resolved not to waste further time on account of this childish affair, I contemplated departure via the french windows. A drawback to this plan was the weather - that is to say, several large puddles and patches of mud were in evidence - and the fact that one would need to return to the billiard room again at some point to bolt the french windows from the inside. Eventually, then, I decided the best strategy would be simply to stride out of the room very suddenly at a furious pace. I thus made my way as quietly as possible to a position from which I could execute such a march, and clutching my implements firmly about me, succeeded in propelling myself through the doorway and several paces down the corridor before a somewhat astonished Miss Kenton could recover her wits. This she did, however, rather rapidly and the next moment I found she had overtaken me and was standing before me, effectively barring my way.

‘Mr Stevens, this is the incorrect Chinaman, would you not agree?’

‘Miss Kenton, I am very busy. I am surprised you have nothing better to do than stand in corridors all day.’

‘Mr Stevens, is that the correct Chinaman or is it not?’

‘Miss Kenton, I would ask you to keep your voice down.’

‘And I would ask you, Mr Stevens, to turn around and look at that Chinaman.’

‘Miss Kenton, please keep your voice down. What would employees below think to hear us shouting at the top of our voices about what is and what is not the correct Chinaman?’

‘The fact is, Mr Stevens, all the Chinamen in this house have been dirty for some time! And now, they are in incorrect positions!’

‘Miss Kenton, you are being quite ridiculous. Now if you will be so good as to let me pass.’

‘Mr Stevens, will you kindly look at the Chinaman behind you?’

‘If it is so important to you, Miss Kenton, I will allow that the Chinaman behind me may well be incorrectly situated. But I must say I am at some loss as to why you should be so concerned with these most trivial of errors.’

‘These errors may be trivial in themselves, Mr Stevens, but you must yourself realize their larger significance.’

‘Miss Kenton, I do not understand you. Now if you would kindly allow me to pass.’

‘The fact is, Mr Stevens, your father is entrusted with far more than a man of his age can cope with.’

‘Miss Kenton, you clearly have little idea of what you are suggesting.’

‘Whatever your father was once, Mr Stevens, his powers are now greatly diminished. This is what these “trivial errors” as you call them really signify and if you do not heed them, it will not be long before your father commits an error of major proportions.’

‘Miss Kenton, you are merely making yourself look foolish.’

‘I am sorry, Mr Stevens, but I must go on. I believe there are many duties your father should now be relieved of. He should not, for one, be asked to go on carrying heavily laden trays. The way his hands tremble as he carries them into dinner is nothing short of alarming. It is surely only a matter of time before a tray falls from his hands on to a lady or gentleman’s lap. And furthermore, Mr Stevens, and I am very sorry to say this, I have noticed your father’s nose.’

‘Have you indeed, Miss Kenton?’

‘I regret to say I have, Mr Stevens. The evening before last I watched your father proceeding very slowly towards the dining room with his tray, and I am afraid I observed clearly a large drop on the end of his nose dangling over the soup bowls. I would not have thought such a style of waiting a great stimulant to appetite.’

But now that I think further about it, I am not sure Miss Kenton spoke quite so boldly that day. We did, of course, over the years of working closely together come to have some very frank exchanges, but the afternoon I am recalling was still early in our relationship and I cannot see even Miss Kenton having been so forward. I am not sure she could actually have gone so far as to say things like: 'these errors may be trivial in themselves, but you must yourself realize their larger significance'. In fact, now that I come to think of it, I have a feeling it may have been Lord Darlington himself who made that particular remark to me that time he called me into his study some two months after that exchange with Miss Kenton outside the billiard room. By that time, the situation as regards my father had changed significantly following his fall.

The study doors are those that face one as one comes down the great staircase. There is outside the study today a glass cabinet displaying various of Mr Farraday's ornaments, but throughout Lord Darlington's days, there stood at that spot a bookshelf containing many volumes of encyclopedia, including a complete set of the Britannica. It was a ploy of Lord Darlington's to stand at this shelf studying the spines of the encyclopedias as I came down the staircase, and sometimes, to increase the effect of an accidental meeting, he would actually pull out a volume and pretend to be engrossed as I completed my descent. Then, as I passed him, he would say: 'Oh, Stevens, there was something I meant to say to you.' And with that, he would wander back into his study, to all appearances still thoroughly engrossed in the volume held open in his hands. It was invariably embarrassment at what he was about to impart which made Lord Darlington adopt such an approach, and even once the study door was closed behind us, he would often stand by the window and make a show of consulting the encyclopedia throughout our conversation.

What I am now describing, incidentally, is one of many instances I could relate to you to underline Lord Darlington's essentially shy and modest nature. A great deal of nonsense has been spoken and written in recent years concerning his lordship and the prominent role he came to play in great affairs, and some utterly ignorant reports have had it that he was motivated by egotism or else arrogance. Let me say here that nothing could be further from the truth. It was completely contrary to Lord Darlington's natural tendencies to take such public stances as he came to do and I can say with conviction that his lordship was persuaded to overcome his more retiring side only through a deep sense of moral duty. Whatever may be said about his lordship these days - and the great majority of it is, as I say, utter nonsense - I can declare that he was a truly good man at heart, a gentleman through and through, and one I am today proud to have given my best years of service to.

On the particular afternoon to which I am referring, his lordship would still have been in his mid-fifties; but as I recall, his hair had greyed entirely and his tall slender figure already bore signs of the stoop that was to become so pronounced in his last years. He barely glanced up from his volume as he asked:

‘Your father feeling better now, Stevens?’

‘I’m glad to say he has made a full recovery, sir.’

‘Jolly pleased to hear that. Jolly pleased.’

‘Thank you, sir.’

‘Look here, Stevens, have there been any - well - signs at all? I means signs to tell us your father may be wishing his burden lightened somewhat? Apart from this business of him falling, I mean.’

‘As I say, sir, my father appears to have made a full recovery and I believe he is still a person of considerable dependability. It is true one or two errors have been noticeable recently in the discharging of his duties, but these are in every case very trivial in nature.’

‘But none of us wish to see anything of that sort happen ever again, do we? I mean, your father collapsing and all that. '

'Indeed not, sir. '

'And of course, if it can happen out on the lawn, it could happen anywhere. And at any time. '

'Yes, sir. '

'It could happen, say, during dinner while your father was waiting at table. '

'It is possible, sir. '

'Look here, Stevens, the first of the delegates will be arriving here in less than a fortnight. '

'We are well prepared, sir. '

'What happens within this house after that may have considerable repercussions. '

'Yes, sir. '

'I mean considerable repercussions. On the whole course Europe is taking. In view of the persons who will be present, I do not think I exaggerate. '

'No, sir. '

'Hardly the time for taking on avoidable hazards. '

'Indeed not, sir. '

'Look here, Stevens, there's no question of your father leaving us. You're simply being asked to reconsider his duties.' And it was then, I believe, that his lordship said as he looked down again into his volume and awkwardly fingered an entry: 'These errors may be trivial in themselves, Stevens, but you must yourself realize their larger significance. Your father's days of dependability are now passing. He must not be asked to perform tasks in any area where an error might jeopardize the success of our forthcoming conference. '

‘Indeed not, sir. I fully understand.’

‘Good. I’ll leave you to think about it then, Stevens.’

Lord Darlington, I should say, had actually witnessed my father’s fall of a week or so earlier. His lordship had been entertaining two guests, a young lady and gentleman, in the summerhouse, and had watched my father’s approach across the lawn bearing a much welcome tray of refreshments. The lawn climbs a slope several yards in front of the summerhouse, and in those days, as today, four flagstones embedded into the grass served as steps by which to negotiate this climb. It was in the vicinity of these steps that my father fell, scattering the load on his tray - teapot, cups, saucers, sandwiches, cakes - across the area of grass at the top of the steps. By the time I had received the alarm and gone out, his lordship and his guests had laid my father on his side, a cushion and a rug from the summerhouse serving as pillow and blanket. My father was unconscious and his face looked an oddly grey colour. Dr Meredith had already been sent for, but his lordship was of the view that my father should be moved out of the sun before the doctor’s arrival; consequently, a bath-chair arrived and with not a little difficulty, my father was transported into the house. By the time Dr Meredith arrived, he had revived considerably and the doctor soon left again making only vague statements to the effect that my father had perhaps been ‘over-working’.

The whole episode was clearly a great embarrassment to my father, and by the time of that conversation in Lord Darlington’s study, he had long since returned to busying himself as much as ever. The question of how one could broach the topic of reducing his responsibilities was not, then, an easy one. My difficulty was further compounded by the fact that for some years my father and I had tended - for some reason I have never really fathomed - to converse less and less. So much so that after his arrival at Darlington Hall, even the brief exchanges necessary to communicate information relating to work took place in an atmosphere of mutual embarrassment.

In the end, I judged the best option to be to talk in the privacy of his room, thus giving him the opportunity to ponder his new situation in solitude once I took my leave. The only times my father could be found in his room were first thing in the morning and last thing at night. Choosing the former, I climbed up to his small attic room at the top of the servants' wing early one morning and knocked gently.

I had rarely had reason to enter my father's room prior to this occasion and I was newly struck by the smallness and starkness of it. Indeed, I recall my impression at the time was of having stepped into a prison cell, but then this might have had as much to do with the pale early light as with the size of the room or the bareness of its walls. For my father had opened his curtains and was sitting, shaved and in full uniform, on the edge of his bed from where evidently he had been watching the sky turn to dawn. At least one assumed he had been watching the sky, there being little else to view from his small window other than roof-tiles and guttering. The oil lamp beside his bed had been extinguished, and when I saw my father glance disapprovingly at the lamp I had brought to guide me up the rickety staircase, I quickly lowered the wick. Having done this, I noticed all the more the effect of the pale light coming into the room and the way it lit up the edges of my father's craggy, lined, still awesome features.

'Ah,' I said, and gave a short laugh, 'I might have known Father would be up and ready for the day.'

'I've been up for the past three hours,' he said, looking me up and down rather coldly.

'I hope Father is not being kept awake by his arthritic troubles.'

'I get all the sleep I need.'

My father reached forward to the only chair in the room, a small wooden one, and placing both hands on its back brought himself to his feet. When I saw him stood upright before me, I could not be sure to what extent he was hunched over due to infirmity and what extent due to the habit of accommodating the steeply sloped ceilings of the room.

‘I have come here to relate something to you, Father.’

‘Then relate it briefly and concisely. I haven’t all morning to listen to you chatter.’

‘In that case, Father, I will come straight to the point.’

‘Come to the point then and be done with it. Some of us have work to be getting on with.’

‘Very well. Since you wish me to be brief, I will do my best to comply. The fact is, Father has become increasingly infirm. So much so that even the duties of an under-butler are now beyond his capabilities. His lordship is of the view, as indeed I am myself, that while Father is allowed to continue with his present round of duties, he represents an ever-present threat to the smooth running of this household, and in particular to next week’s important international gathering.’

My father’s face, in the half-light, betrayed no emotion whatsoever.

‘Principally,’ I continued, ‘it has been felt that Father should no longer be asked to wait at table, whether or not guests are present.’

‘I have waited at table every day for the last fifty-four years,’ my father remarked, his voice perfectly unhurried.

‘Furthermore, it has been decided that Father should not carry laden trays of any sort for even the shortest distances. In view of these limitations, and knowing Father’s esteem for conciseness, I have listed here the revised round of duties he will from now on be expected to perform. '

I felt disinclined actually to hand to him the piece of paper I was holding, and so put it down on the end of his bed. My father glanced at it then returned his gaze to me. There was still no trace of emotion discernible in his expression, and his hands on the back of the chair appeared perfectly relaxed. Hunched over or not, it was impossible not to be reminded of the sheer impact of his physical presence - the very same that had once reduced two drunken gentlemen to sobriety in the back of a car. Eventually, he said:

'I only fell that time because of those steps. They're crooked. Seamus should be told to put those right before someone else does the same thing. '

'Indeed. In any case, may I be assured Father will study that sheet? '

'Seamus should be told to put those steps right. Certainly before these gentlemen start arriving from Europe. '

'Indeed. Well, Father, good morning. '

That summer evening referred to by Miss Kenton in her letter came very soon after that encounter - indeed, it may have been the evening of that same day. I cannot remember just what purpose had taken me up on to the top floor of the house to where the row of guest bedrooms line the corridor. But as I think I have said already, I can recall vividly the way the last of the daylight was coming through each open doorway and falling across the corridor in orange shafts. As I walked on past those unused bedrooms, Miss Kenton's figure, a silhouette against a window within one of them, had called to me.

When one thinks about it, when one remembers the way Miss Kenton had repeatedly spoken to me of my father during those early days of her time at Darlington Hall, it is little wonder that the memory of that evening should have stayed with her all of these years. No doubt, she was feeling a certain sense of guilt as the two of us watched from our window my father's figure down below. The shadows of the poplar trees had fallen across much of the lawn, but the sun was still lighting up the far corner where the grass sloped up to the summerhouse. My father could be seen standing by those four stone steps, deep in thought. A breeze was slightly disturbing his hair. Then, as we watched, he walked very slowly up the steps. At the top, he turned and came back down, a little faster. Turning once more, my father became still again for several seconds, contemplating the steps before him. Eventually, he climbed them a second time, very deliberately. This time he continued on across the grass until he had almost reached the summerhouse, then turned and came walking slowly back, his eyes never leaving the ground. In fact, I can describe his manner at that moment no better than the way Miss Kenton puts it in her letter; it was indeed 'as though he hoped to find some precious jewel he had dropped there'.

But I see I am becoming preoccupied with these memories and this is perhaps a little foolish. This present trip represents, after all, a rare opportunity for me to savour to the full the many splendours of the English countryside, and I know I shall greatly regret it later if I allow myself to become unduly diverted. In fact, I notice I have yet to record here anything of my journey to this city - aside from mentioning briefly that halt on the hillside road at the very start of it. This is an omission indeed, given how much I enjoyed yesterday's motoring.

I had planned the journey here to Salisbury with considerable care, avoiding almost entirely the major roads; the route might have seemed unnecessarily circuitous to some, but then it was one that enabled me to take in a fair number of the sights recommended by Mrs J. Symons in her excellent volumes, and I must say I was well pleased with it. For much of the time it took me through farmland, amidst the pleasant aroma of meadows, and often I found myself slowing the Ford to a crawl to better appreciate a stream or a valley I was passing. But as I recall, I did not actually disembark again until I was quite near Salisbury.

On that occasion, I was moving down a long, straight road with wide meadows on either side of me. In fact, the land had become very open and flat at that point, enabling one to see a considerable distance in all directions, and the spire of Salisbury Cathedral had become visible on the skyline up ahead. A tranquil mood had come over me, and for this reason I believe I was again motoring very slowly - probably at no more than fifteen miles per hour. This was just as well, for I saw only just in time a hen crossing my path in the most leisurely manner. I brought the Ford to a halt only a foot or two from the fowl, which in turn ceased its journey, pausing there in the road in front of me. When after a moment it had not moved, I resorted to the car horn, but this had no effect other than to make the creature commence pecking at something on the ground. Rather exasperated, I began to get out and had one foot still on the running board when I heard a woman's voice call:

Glancing round, I saw I had just passed on the roadside a farm cottage - from which a young woman in an apron, her attention no doubt aroused by the horn, had come running. Passing me, she swooped up the hen in her arms and proceeded to cradle it as she apologized to me again. When I assured her no harm had been done, she said:

‘I do thank you for stopping and not running poor Nellie over. She's a good girl, provides us with the largest eggs you've ever seen. It's so good of you to stop. And you were probably in a hurry too.’

‘Oh, I'm not in a hurry at all,’ I said with a smile.
‘For the first time in many a year, I'm able to take my time and I must say, it's rather an enjoyable experience. I'm just motoring for the pleasure of it, you see.'

'Oh, that's nice, sir. And you're on your way to Salisbury, I expect.'

'I am indeed. In fact, that's the cathedral we can see over there, isn't it? I'm told it's a splendid building.'

'Oh, it is, sir, it's very nice. Well, to tell you the truth, I hardly go to Salisbury myself, so I couldn't really say what it's like at close quarters. But I tell you, sir, day in day out we have a view of the steeple from here. Some days, it's too misty and it's like it's vanished altogether. But you can see for yourself, on a fine day like this, it's a nice sight.'

'Delightful.'

'I'm so grateful you didn't run over our Nellie, sir. Three years ago a tortoise of ours got killed like that and on just about this very spot. We were all very upset over that.'

'How very tragic,' I said, sombrely.

'Oh, it was, sir. Some people say we farm people get used to animals being hurt or killed, but that's just not true. My little boy cried for days. It's so good you stopped for Nellie, sir. If you'd care to come in for a cup of tea, now that you've got out and everything, you'd be most welcome. It would set you on your way.'

'That's most kind, but really, I feel I should continue. I'd like to reach Salisbury in good time to take a look at the city's many charms.'

'Indeed, sir. Well, thank you again.'

I set off again, maintaining for some reason - perhaps because I expected further farm creatures to wander across my path - my slow speed of before. I must say, something about this small encounter had put me in very good spirits; the simple kindness I had been thanked for, and the simple kindness I had been offered in return, caused me somehow to feel exceedingly uplifted about the whole enterprise facing me over these coming days. It was in such a mood, then, that I proceeded here to Salisbury.

But I feel I should return just a moment to the matter of my father; for it strikes me I may have given the impression earlier that I treated him rather bluntly over his declining abilities. The fact is, there was little choice but to approach the matter as I did - as I am sure you will agree once I have explained the full context of those days. That is to say, the important international conference to take place at Darlington Hall was by then looming ahead of us, leaving little room for indulgence or 'beating about the bush'. It is important to be reminded, moreover, that although Darlington Hall was to witness many more events of equal gravity over the fifteen or so years that followed, that conference of March 1923 was the first of them; one was, one supposes, relatively inexperienced, and inclined to leave little to chance. In fact, I often look back to that conference and, for more than one reason, regard it as a turning point in my life. For one thing, I suppose I do regard it as the moment in my career when I truly came of age as a butler. That is not to say I consider I became necessarily, a 'great' butler; it is hardly for me, in any case, to make judgements of this sort. But should it be that anyone ever wished to posit that I have attained at least a little of that crucial quality of 'dignity' in the course of my career, such a person may wish to be directed towards that conference of March 1923 as representing the moment when I demonstrated I might have a capacity for such a quality. It was one of those events which at a crucial stage in one's development arrive to challenge and stretch one to the limit of one's ability and beyond, so that thereafter one has new standards by which to judge oneself. That conference was also memorable, of course, for other quite separate reasons, as I would like now to explain.

The conference of 1923 was the culmination of long planning on the part of Lord Darlington; indeed, in retrospect, one can see clearly how his lordship had been moving towards this point from three years or so before. As I recall, he had not been initially so preoccupied with the peace treaty when it was drawn up at the end of the Great War, and I think it is fair to say that his interest was prompted not so much by an analysis of the treaty, but by his friendship with Herr Karl-Heinz Bremann.

Herr Bremann first visited Darlington Hall very shortly after the war while still in his officer's uniform, and it was evident to any observer that he and Lord Darlington had struck up a close friendship. This did not surprise me, since one could see at a glance that Herr Bremann was a gentleman of great decency. He returned again, having left the German army, at fairly regular intervals during the following two years, and one could not help noticing with some alarm the deterioration he underwent from one visit to the next. His clothes became increasingly impoverished, his frame thinner; a hunted look appeared in his eyes, and on his last visits, he would spend long periods staring into space, oblivious of his lordship's presence or, sometimes, even of having been addressed. I would have concluded Herr Bremann was suffering from some serious illness, but for certain remarks his lordship made at that time assuring me this was not so.

It must have been towards the end of 1920 that Lord Darlington made the first of a number of trips to Berlin himself, and I can remember the profound effect it had on him. A heavy air of preoccupation hung over him for days after his return, and I recall once, in reply to my inquiring how he had enjoyed his trip, his remarking: 'Disturbing, Stevens. Deeply disturbing. It does us great discredit to treat a defeated foe like this. A complete break with the traditions of this country.'

But there is another memory that has remained with me very vividly in relation to this matter. Today, the old banqueting hall no longer contains a table and that spacious room, with its high and magnificent ceiling, serves Mr Farraday well as a sort of gallery. But in his lordship's day, that room was regularly required, as was the long table that occupied it, to seat thirty or more guests for dinner; in fact, the banqueting hall is so spacious that when necessity demanded it, further tables were added to the existing one to enable almost fifty to be seated. On normal days, of course, Lord Darlington took his meals, as does Mr Farraday today, in the more intimate atmosphere of the dining room, which is ideal for accommodating up to a dozen. But on that particular winter's night I am recollecting the dining room was for some reason out of use, and Lord Darlington was dining with a solitary guest - I believe it was Sir Richard Fox, a colleague from his lordship's Foreign Office days - in the vastness of the banqueting hall. You will no doubt agree that the hardest of situations as regards dinner-waiting is when there are just two diners present. I would myself much prefer to wait on just one diner, even if he were a total stranger. It is when there are two diners present, even when one of them is one's own employer, that one finds it most difficult to achieve that balance between attentiveness and the illusion of absence that is essential to good waiting; it is in this situation that one is rarely free of the suspicion that one's presence is inhibiting the conversation.

away from table than I might usually have done. Of course, this strategy had a distinct disadvantage in that each time I moved towards the light to serve the gentlemen, my advancing footsteps would echo long and loud before I reached the table, drawing attention to my impending arrival in the most ostentatious manner; but it did have the great merit of making my person only partially visible while I remained stationary. And it was as I was standing like that, in the shadows some distance from where the two gentlemen sat amidst those rows of empty chairs, that I heard Lord Darlington talk about Herr Bremann, his voice as calm and gentle as usual, somehow resounding with intensity around those great walls.

‘He was my enemy,’ he was saying, ‘but he always behaved like a gentleman. We treated each other decently over six months of shelling each other. He was a gentleman doing his job and I bore him no malice. I said to him: “Look here, we’re enemies now and I’ll fight you with all I’ve got. But when this wretched business is over, we shan’t have to be enemies any more and we’ll have a drink together.” Wretched thing is, this treaty is making a liar out of me. I mean to say, I told him we wouldn’t be enemies once it was all over. But how can I look him in the face and tell him that’s turned out to be true?’

And it was a little later that same night that his lordship said with some gravity, shaking his head: ‘I fought that war to preserve justice in this world. As far as I understood, I wasn’t taking part in a vendetta against the German race.’

And when today one hears talk about his lordship, when one hears the sort of foolish speculations concerning his motives as one does all too frequently these days, I am pleased to recall the memory of that moment as he spoke those heartfelt words in the near-empty banqueting hall. Whatever complications arose in his lordship’s course over subsequent years, I for one will never doubt that a desire to see ‘justice in this world’ lay at the heart of all his actions.

It was not long after that evening there came the sad news that Herr Bremann had shot himself in a train between Hamburg and Berlin. Naturally, his lordship was greatly distressed and immediately made plans to dispatch funds and commiserations to Frau Bremann. However, after several days of endeavour, in which I myself did my best to assist, his lordship was not able to discover the whereabouts of any of Herr Bremann’s family. He had, it seemed, been homeless for some time and his family dispersed.

It is my belief that even without this tragic news, Lord Darlington would have set upon the course he took; his desire to see an end to injustice and suffering was too deeply ingrained in his nature for him to have done otherwise. As it was, in the weeks that followed Herr Bremann’s death, his lordship began to devote more and more hours to the matter of the crisis in Germany. Powerful and famous gentlemen became regular visitors to the house - including, I remember, figures such as Lord Daniels, Mr John Maynard Keynes, and Mr H. G. Wells, the renowned author, as well as others who, because they came ‘off the record’, I should not name here - and they and his lordship were often to be found locked in discussion for hours on end.

Some of the visitors were, in fact, so ‘off the record’ that I was instructed to make sure the staff did not learn their identities, or in some cases, even glimpse them. However - and I say this with some pride and gratitude - Lord Darlington never made any efforts to conceal things from my own eyes and ears; I can recall on numerous occasions, some personage breaking off in mid-sentence to glance warily towards my person, only for his lordship to say: ‘Oh, that’s all right. You can say anything in front of Stevens, I can assure you.’

Steadily, then, over the two years or so following Herr Bremann's death, his lordship, together with Sir David Cardinal, who became his closest ally during that time, succeeded in gathering together a broad alliance of figures who shared the conviction that the situation in Germany should not be allowed to persist. These were not only Britons and Germans, but also Belgians, French, Italians, Swiss; they were diplomats and political persons of high rank; distinguished clergymen; retired military gentlemen; writers and thinkers. Some were gentlemen who felt strongly, like his lordship himself, that fair play had not been done at Versailles and that it was immoral to go on punishing a nation for a war that was now over. Others, evidently, showed less concern for Germany or her inhabitants, but were of the opinion that the economic chaos of that country, if not halted, might spread with alarming rapidity to the world at large.

By the turn of 1922, his lordship was working with a clear goal in mind. This was to gather under the very roof of Darlington Hall the most influential of the gentlemen whose support had been won with a view to conducting an 'unofficial' international conference - a conference that would discuss the means by which the harshest terms of the Versailles treaty could be revised. To be worthwhile, any such conference would have to be of sufficient weight so that it could have a decisive effect on the 'official' international conferences - several of which had already taken place with the express purpose of reviewing the treaty, but which had succeeded in producing only confusion and bitterness. Our Prime Minister of that time, Mr Lloyd George, had called for another great conference to be held in Italy in the spring of 1922, and initially his lordship's aim was to organize a gathering at Darlington Hall with a view to ensuring a satisfactory outcome to this event. For all the hard work on his and Sir David's part, however, this proved too harsh a deadline; but then with Mr George's conference ending yet again in indecision, his lordship set his sights on a further great conference scheduled to take place in Switzerland that following year.

I can remember one morning around this time bringing Lord Darlington coffee in the breakfast room, and his saying to me as he folded The Times with some disgust: 'Frenchmen. Really, I mean to say, Stevens. Frenchmen.'

'Yes, sir.'

'And to think we have to be seen by the world to be arm in arm with them. One wishes for a good bath at the mere reminder.'

'Yes, sir.'

'Last time I was in Berlin, Stevens, Baron Overath, old friend of my father, came up and said: "Why do you do this to us? Don't you see we can't go on like this?" I was jolly well tempted to tell him it's those wretched Frenchmen. It's not the English way of carrying on, I wanted to say. But I suppose one can't do things like that. Mustn't speak ill of our dear allies.'

But the very fact that the French were the most intransigent as regards releasing Germany from the cruelties of the Versailles treaty made all the more imperative the need to bring to the gathering at Darlington Hall at least one French gentleman with unambiguous influence over his country's foreign policy. Indeed, I heard several times his lordship express the view that without the participation of such a personage, any discussion on the topic of Germany would be little more than an indulgence. He and Sir David accordingly set upon this final crucial lap of their preparations and to witness the unswerving determination with which they persevered in the face of repeated frustrations was a humbling experience; countless letters and telegrams were dispatched and his lordship himself made three separate trips to Paris within the space of two months. Finally, having secured the agreement of a certain extremely illustrious Frenchman - I will merely call him 'M. Dupont' - to attend the gathering on a very strict 'off the record' basis, the date for the conference was set. That is to say, for that memorable March of 1923.

As this date grew ever nearer, the pressures on myself, though of an altogether more humble nature than those mounting on his lordship, were nevertheless not inconsequential. I was only too aware of the possibility that if any guest were to find his stay at Darlington Hall less than comfortable, this might have repercussions of unimaginable largeness. Moreover, my planning for the event was complicated by the uncertainty as to the numbers involved. The conference being of a very high level, the participants had been limited to just eighteen very distinguished gentlemen and two ladies - a German countess and the formidable Mrs Eleanor Austin, at that time still resident in Berlin; but each of these might reasonably bring secretaries, valets and interpreters, and there proved no way of ascertaining the precise number of such persons to expect. Furthermore, it became clear that a number of the parties would be arriving some time before the three days set aside for the conference, thus giving themselves time to prepare their ground and gauge the mood of fellow guests, though their exact arrival dates were, again, uncertain. It was clear then that the staff would not only have to work extremely hard, and be at their most alert, they would also have to be unusually flexible. In fact, I was for some time of the opinion that this huge challenge ahead of us could not be surmounted without my bringing in additional staff from outside. However, this option, quite aside from the misgivings his lordship was bound to have as regards gossip travelling, entailed my having to rely on unknown quantities just when a mistake could prove most costly. I thus set about preparing for the days ahead as, I imagine, a general might prepare for a battle: I devised with utmost care a special staff plan anticipating all sorts of eventualities; I analysed where our weakest points lay and set about making contingency plans to fall back upon in the event of these points giving way; I even gave the staff a military-style 'pep-talk', impressing upon them that, for all their having to work at an exhausting rate, they could feel great pride in discharging their duties over the days that lay ahead.

'History could well be made under this roof,' I told them. And they, knowing me to be one not prone to exaggerated statements, well understood that something of an extraordinary nature was impending.

You will understand then something of the climate prevailing around Darlington Hall by the time of my father's fall in front of the summerhouse - this occurring as it did just two weeks before the first of the conference guests were likely to arrive - and what I mean when I say there was little room for any 'beating about the bush'. My father did, in any case, rapidly discover a way to circumvent the limitations on his effectiveness implied by the stricture that he should carry no laden trays. The sight of his figure pushing a trolley loaded with cleaning utensils, mops, brushes arranged incongruously, though always tidily, around teapots, cups and saucers, so that it at times resembled a street-hawker's barrow, became a familiar one around the house. Obviously he still could not avoid relinquishing his waiting duties in the dining room, but otherwise the trolley enabled him to accomplish a surprising amount. In fact, as the great challenge of the conference drew nearer, an astonishing change seemed to come over my father. It was almost as though some supernatural force possessed him, causing him to shed twenty years; his face lost much of the sunken look of recent times, and he went about his work with such youthful vigour that a stranger might have believed there were not one but several such figures pushing trolleys about the corridors of Darlington Hall.

As for Miss Kenton, I seem to remember the mounting tension of those days having a noticeable effect upon her. I recall, for instance, the occasion around that time I happened to encounter her in the back corridor. The back corridor, which serves as a sort of backbone to the staff's quarters of Darlington Hall, was always a rather cheerless affair due to the lack of daylight penetrating its considerable length. Even on a fine day, the corridor could be so dark that the effect was like walking through a tunnel. On that particular occasion, had I not recognized Miss Kenton's footsteps on the boards as she came towards me, I would have been able to identify her only from her outline. I paused at one of the few spots where a bright streak of light fell across the boards and, as she approached, said: 'Ah, Miss Kenton.'

'Yes, Mr Stevens?'

'Miss Kenton, I wonder if I may draw your attention to the fact that the bed linen for the upper floor will need to be ready by the day after tomorrow.'

'The matter is perfectly under control, Mr Stevens.'

'Ah, I'm very glad to hear it. It just struck me as a thought, that's all.'

I was about to continue on my way, but Miss Kenton did not move. Then she took one step more towards me so that a bar of light fell across her face and I could see the angry expression on it.

'Unfortunately, Mr Stevens, I am extremely busy now and I am finding I have barely a single moment to spare. If only I had as much spare time as you evidently do, then I would happily reciprocate by wandering about this house reminding you of tasks you have perfectly well in hand.'

'Now, Miss Kenton, there is no need to become so bad-tempered. I merely felt the need to satisfy myself that it had not escaped your attention ...'

‘Mr Stevens, this is the fourth or fifth time in the past two days you have felt such a need. It is most curious to see that you have so much time on your hands that you are able to simply wander about this house bothering others with gratuitous comments.’

‘Miss Kenton, if you for one moment believe I have time on my hands, that displays more clearly than ever your great inexperience. I trust that in years to come, you will gain a clearer picture of what occurs in a house like this.’

‘You are perpetually talking of my “great inexperience”, Mr Stevens, and yet you appear quite unable to point out any defect in my work. Otherwise I have no doubt you would have done so long ago and at some length. Now, I have much to be getting on with and would appreciate your not following me about and interrupting me like this. If you have so much time to spare, I suggest it might be more profitably spent taking some fresh air.’

She stamped past me and on down the corridor. Deciding it best to let the matter go no further, I continued on my way. I had almost reached the kitchen doorway when I heard the furious sounds of her footsteps coming back towards me again.

‘In fact, Mr Stevens,’ she called, ‘I would ask you from now on not to speak to me directly at all.’

‘Miss Kenton, whatever are you talking about?’

‘If it is necessary to convey a message, I would ask you to do so through a messenger. Or else you may like to write a note and have it sent to me. Our working relationship, I am sure, would be made a great deal easier.’

‘Miss Kenton ...’

‘I am extremely busy, Mr Stevens. A written note if the message is at all complicated. Otherwise you may like to speak to Martha or Dorothy, or any members of the male staff you deem sufficiently trustworthy. Now I must return to my work and leave you to your wanderings. '

Irritating as Miss Kenton's behaviour was, I could not afford to give it much thought, for by then the first of the guests had arrived. The representatives from abroad were not expected for a further two or three days, but the three gentlemen referred to by his lordship as his 'home team' - two Foreign Office ministers attending very much 'off the record' and Sir David Cardinal - had come early to prepare the ground as thoroughly as possible. As ever, little was done to conceal anything from me as I went in and out of the various rooms in which these gentlemen sat deep in discussion, and I thus could not avoid gaining a certain impression of the general mood at this stage of the proceedings. Of course, his lordship and his colleagues were concerned to brief each other as accurately as possible on each one of the expected participants; but overwhelmingly, their concerns centred on a single figure - that of M. Dupont, the French gentleman - and on his likely sympathies and antipathies. Indeed, at one point, I believe I came into the smoking room and heard one of the gentlemen saying: 'The fate of Europe could actually hang on our ability to bring Dupont round on this point. '

It was in the midst of these preliminary discussions that his lordship entrusted me with a mission sufficiently unusual for it to have remained in my memory to this day, alongside those other more obviously unforgettable occurrences that were to take place during that remarkable week. Lord Darlington called me into his study, and I could see at once that he was in a state of some agitation. He seated himself at his desk and, as usual, resorted to holding open a book - this time it was Who's Who - turning a page to and fro.

'Oh, Stevens,' he began with a false air of nonchalance, but then seemed at a loss how to continue. I remained standing there ready to relieve his discomfort at the first opportunity. His lordship went on fingering his page for a moment, leaned forward to scrutinize an entry, then said: 'Stevens, I realize this is a somewhat irregular thing to ask you to do.'

'Sir?'

'It's just that one has so much of importance on one's mind just now.'

'I would be very glad to be of assistance, sir.'

'I'm sorry to bring up a thing like this, Stevens. I know you must be awfully busy yourself. But I can't see how on earth to make it go away.'

I waited a moment while Lord Darlington returned his attention to Who's Who. Then he said, without looking up: 'You are familiar, I take it, with the facts of life.'

'Sir?'

'The facts of life, Stevens. Birds, bees. You are familiar, aren't you?'

'I'm afraid I don't quite follow you, sir.'

'Let me put my cards on the table, Stevens. Sir David is a very old friend. And he's been invaluable in organizing the present conference. Without him, I dare say, we'd not have secured M. Dupont's agreement to come.'

'Indeed, sir.'

'However, Stevens, Sir David has his funny side. You may have noticed it yourself. He's brought his son, Reginald, with him. To act as secretary. The point is, he's engaged to be married. Young Reginald, I mean.'

'Yes, sir.'

'Sir David has been attempting to tell his son the facts of life for the last five years. The young man is now twenty-three.'

'Indeed, sir.'

‘I’ll get to the point, Stevens. I happen to be the young man’s godfather. Accordingly, Sir David has requested that I convey to young Reginald the facts of life.’

‘Indeed, sir.’

‘Sir David himself finds the task rather daunting and suspects he will not accomplish it before Reginald’s wedding day.’

‘Indeed, sir.’

‘The point is, Stevens, I’m terribly busy. Sir David should know that, but he’s asked me none the less.’ His lordship paused and went on studying his page.

‘Do I understand, sir,’ I said, ‘that you wish me to convey the information to the young gentleman?’

‘If you don’t mind, Stevens. Be an awful lot off my mind. Sir David continues to ask me every couple of hours if I’ve done it yet.’

‘I see, sir. It must be most trying under the present pressures.’

‘Of course, this is far beyond the call of duty, Stevens.’

‘I will do my best, sir. I may, however, have difficulty finding the appropriate moment to convey such information.’

‘I’d be very grateful if you’d even try, Stevens. Awfully decent of you. Look here, there’s no need to make a song and dance of it. Just convey the basic facts and be done with it. Simple approach is the best, that’s my advice, Stevens.’

‘Yes, sir. I shall do my best.’

‘Jolly grateful to you, Stevens. Let me know how you get on.’

I was, as you might imagine, a little taken aback by this request and ordinarily the matter might have been one I would have spent some time pondering. Coming upon me as it did, however, in the midst of such a busy period, I could not afford to let it preoccupy me unduly, and I thus decided I should resolve it at the earliest opportunity. As I recall, then, it was only an hour or so after being first entrusted with the mission that I noticed the young Mr Cardinal alone in the library, sitting at one of the writing tables, absorbed in some documents. On studying the young gentleman closely, one could, as it were, appreciate the difficulty experienced by his lordship - and indeed, by the young gentleman's father. My employer's godson looked an earnest, scholarly young man, and one could see many fine qualities in his features; yet given the topic one wished to raise, one would have certainly preferred a lighter-hearted, even a more frivolous sort of young gentleman. In any case, resolved to bring the whole matter to a satisfactory conclusion as quickly as possible, I proceeded further into the library, and stopping a little way from Mr Cardinal's writing desk, gave a cough.

'Excuse me, sir, but I have a message to convey to you.'

'Oh, really?' Mr Cardinal said eagerly, looking up from his papers. 'From Father?'

'Yes, sir. That is, effectively.'

'Just a minute.'

The young gentleman reached down to the attaché case at his feet and brought out a notebook and pencil. 'Fire away, Stevens.'

I coughed again and set my voice into as impersonal a tone as I could manage.

'Sir David wishes you to know, sir, that ladies and gentlemen differ in several key respects.'

I must have paused a little to form my next phrase, for Mr Cardinal gave a sigh and said: 'I'm only too aware of that, Stevens. Would you mind coming to the point?'

'You are aware, sir?'

'Father is perpetually underestimating me. I've done extensive reading and background work on this whole area.'

'Is that so, sir?'

'I've thought about virtually nothing else for the past month.'

'Really, sir. In that case, perhaps my message is rather redundant.'

'You can assure Father I'm very well briefed indeed. This attaché case' - he nudged it with his foot - 'is chock-full of notes on every possible angle one can imagine.'

'Is that so, sir?'

'I really think I've thought through every permutation the human mind is capable of. I wish you'd reassure Father of that.'

'I will, sir.'

Mr Cardinal seemed to relax a little. He prodded once more his attaché case - which I felt inclined to keep my eyes averted from - and said: 'I suppose you've been wondering why I never let go of this case. Well, now you know. Imagine if the wrong person opened it.'

'That would be most awkward, sir.'

'That is, of course,' he said, sitting up again suddenly, 'unless Father has come up with an entirely new factor he wants me to think about.'

'I cannot imagine he has, sir.'

'No? Nothing more on this Dupont fellow?'

‘I fear not, sir.’

I did my best not to give away anything of my exasperation on discovering that a task I had thought all but behind me was in fact still there unassaulted before me. I believe I was collecting my thoughts for a renewed effort when the young gentleman suddenly rose to his feet and clutching his attaché case to his person, said: ‘Well, I think I’ll go and take a little fresh air. Thanks for your help, Stevens.’

It had been my intention to seek out a further interview with Mr Cardinal with minimum delay, but this proved to be impossible, owing largely to the arrival that same afternoon - some two days earlier than expected - of Mr Lewis, the American senator. I had been down in my pantry working through the supplies sheets, when I had heard somewhere above my head the unmistakable sounds of motor cars pulling up in the courtyard. As I hastened to go upstairs, I happened to encounter Miss Kenton in the back corridor - the scene, of course, of our last disagreement - and it was perhaps this unhappy coincidence that encouraged her to maintain the childish behaviour she had adopted on that previous occasion. For when I inquired who it was that had arrived, Miss Kenton continued past me, stating simply: ‘A message if it is urgent, Mr Stevens.’ This was extremely annoying, but, of course, I had no choice but to hurry on upstairs.

My recollection of Mr Lewis is that of a gentleman of generous dimensions with a genial smile that rarely left his face. His early arrival was clearly something of an inconvenience to his lordship and his colleagues who had reckoned on a day or two more of privacy for their preparations. However, Mr Lewis’s engagingly informal manner, and his statement at dinner that the United States ‘would always stand on the side of justice and didn’t mind admitting mistakes had been made at Versailles’ seemed to do much to win the confidence of his lordship’s ‘home team’; as dinner progressed, the conversation had slowly but surely turned from topics such as the merits of Mr Lewis's native Pennsylvania back to the conference ahead, and by the time the gentlemen were lighting their cigars, some of the speculations being offered appeared to be as intimate as those exchanged prior to Mr Lewis's arrival. At one point, Mr Lewis said to the company:

'I agree with you, gentlemen, our M. Dupont can be very unpredictable. But let me tell you, there's one thing you can bet on about him. One thing you can bet on for sure.' He leaned forward and waved his cigar for emphasis. 'Dupont hates Germans. He hated them before the war and he hates them now with a depth you gentlemen here would find hard to understand.' With that, Mr Lewis sat back in his chair again, the genial smile returning fully to his face. 'But tell me, gentlemen,' he continued, 'you can hardly blame a Frenchman for hating the Germans, can you? After all, a Frenchman has good cause to do so, hasn't he?'

There was a moment of slight awkwardness as Mr Lewis glanced around the table. Then Lord Darlington said:

'Naturally, some bitterness is inevitable. But then, of course, we English also fought the Germans long and hard.'

'But the difference with you Englishmen,' Mr Lewis said, 'seems to be that you don't really hate the Germans any more. But the way the French see it, the Germans destroyed civilization here in Europe and no punishment is too bad for them. Of course, that looks an impractical kind of position to us in the United States, but what's always puzzled me is how you English don't seem to share the view of the French. After all, like you say, Britain lost a lot in that war too.'

There was another awkward pause before Sir David said, rather uncertainly:

'We English have often had a different way of looking at things from the French, Mr Lewis.'

‘Ah. A kind of temperamental difference, you might say.’ Mr Lewis’s smile seemed to broaden slightly as he said this. He nodded to himself, as though many things had now become clear to him, and drew on his cigar. It is possible this is a case of hindsight colouring my memory, but I have a distinct feeling that it was at that moment I first sensed something odd, something duplicitous perhaps, about this apparently charming American gentleman. But if my own suspicions were aroused at that moment, Lord Darlington evidently did not share them. For after another second or two of awkward silence, his lordship seemed to come to a decision.

‘Mr Lewis,’ he said, ‘let me put it frankly. Most of us in England find the present French attitude despicable. You may indeed call it a temperamental difference, but I venture we are talking about something rather more. It is unbecoming to go on hating an enemy like this once a conflict is over. Once you’ve got a man on the canvas, that ought to be the end of it. You don’t then proceed to kick him. To us, the French behaviour has become increasingly barbarous.’

This utterance seemed to give Mr Lewis some satisfaction. He muttered something in sympathy and smiled with contentment at his fellow diners through the clouds of tobacco smoke by now hanging thickly across the table.

The next morning brought more early arrivals; namely, the two ladies from Germany – who had travelled together despite what one would have imagined to have been the great contrast in their backgrounds – bringing with them a large team of ladies-in-waiting and footmen, as well as a great many trunks. Then in the afternoon, an Italian gentleman arrived accompanied by a valet, a secretary, an ‘expert’ and two bodyguards. I cannot imagine what sort of place this gentleman imagined he was coming to in bringing the latter, but I must say it struck something of an odd note to see in Darlington Hall these two large silent men staring suspiciously in all directions a few yards from wherever the Italian gentleman happened to be. Incidentally, the working pattern of these bodyguards, so it transpired over the following days, entailed one or the other of them going up to sleep at unusual hours so as to ensure at least one was on duty throughout the night. But when on first hearing of this arrangement I tried to inform Miss Kenton of it, she once again refused to converse with me, and in order to accomplish matters as quickly as possible I was actually obliged to write a note and put it under the door of her parlour.

The following day brought several more guests and with two days yet to go to the start of the conference, Darlington Hall was filled with people of all nationalities, talking in rooms, or else standing around, apparently aimlessly, in the hall, in corridors and on landings, examining pictures or objects. The guests were never less than courteous to one another, but for all that, a rather tense atmosphere, characterized largely by distrust, seemed to prevail at this stage. And reflecting this unease, the visiting valets and footmen appeared to regard one another with marked coldness and my own staff were rather glad to be too busy to spend much time with them.

It was around this point, in the midst of dealing with the many demands being made on my attention, that I happened to glance out of a window and spotted the figure of the young Mr Cardinal taking some fresh air around the grounds. He was clutching his attaché case as usual and I could see he was strolling slowly along the path that runs the outer perimeter of the lawn, deeply absorbed in thought. I was of course reminded of my mission regarding the young gentleman and it occurred to me that an outdoor setting, with the general proximity of nature, and in particular the example of the geese close at hand, would not be an unsuitable setting at all in which to convey the sort of message I was bearing. I could see, moreover, that if I were quickly to go outside and conceal my person behind the large rhododendron bush beside the path, it would not be long before Mr Cardinal came by. I would then be able to emerge and convey my message to him. It was not, admittedly, the most subtle of strategies, but you will appreciate that this particular task, though no doubt important in its way, hardly took the highest priority at that moment.

There was a light frost covering the ground and much of the foliage, but it was a mild day for that time of the year. I crossed the grass quickly, placed my person behind the bush, and before long heard Mr Cardinal's footsteps approaching. Unfortunately, I misjudged slightly the timing of my emergence. I had intended to emerge while Mr Cardinal was still a reasonable distance away, so that he would see me in good time and suppose I was on my way to the summerhouse, or perhaps to the gardener's lodge. I could then have pretended to notice him for the first time and have engaged him in conversation in an impromptu manner. As it happened, I emerged a little late and I fear I rather startled the young gentleman, who immediately pulled his attaché case away from me and clutched it to his chest with both arms.

'I'm very sorry, sir.'

'My goodness, Stevens. You gave me a shock. I thought things were hotting up a bit there.'

'I'm very sorry, sir. But as it happens, I have something to convey to you.'

'My goodness, yes, you gave me quite a fright.'

'If I may come straight to the point, sir. You will notice the geese not far from us.'

'Geese?' He looked around a little bewildered. 'Oh yes. That's what they are.'

'And likewise the flowers and shrubs. This is not, in fact, the best time of year to see them in their full glory, but you will appreciate, sir, that with the arrival of spring, we will see a change - a very special sort of change - in these surroundings. '

'Yes, I'm sure the grounds are not at their best just now. But to be perfectly frank, Stevens, I wasn't paying much attention to the glories of nature. It's all rather worrying. That M. Dupont's arrived in the foulest mood imaginable. Last thing we wanted really. '

'M. Dupont has arrived here at this house, sir? '

'About half an hour ago. He's in the most foul temper. '

'Excuse me, sir. I must attend to him straight away. '

'Of course, Stevens. Well, kind of you to have come out to talk to me. '

'Please excuse me, sir. As it happened, I had a word or two more to say on the topic of - as you put it yourself - the glories of nature. If you will indulge me by listening, I would be most grateful. But I am afraid this will have to wait for another occasion. '

'Well, I shall look forward to it, Stevens. Though I'm more of a fish man myself. I know all about fish, fresh water and salt. '

'All living creatures will be relevant to our forthcoming discussion, sir. However, you must now please excuse me. I had no idea M. Dupont had arrived. '

I hurried back to the house to be met immediately by the first footman saying: 'We've been looking all over for you, sir. The French gentleman's arrived. '

M. Dupont was a tall, elegant gentleman with a grey beard and a monocle. He had arrived in the sort of clothes one often sees continental gentlemen wearing on their holidays, and indeed, throughout his stay, he was to maintain diligently the appearance of having come to Darlington Hall entirely for pleasure and friendship. As Mr Cardinal had indicated, M. Dupont had not arrived in a good temper; I cannot recall now all the various things that had upset him since his arrival in England a few days previously, but in particular he had obtained some painful sores on his feet while sightseeing around London and these, he feared, were growing septic. I referred his valet to Miss Kenton, but this did not prevent M. Dupont snapping his fingers at me every few hours to say: 'Butler! I am in need of more bandages.'

His mood seemed much lifted on seeing Mr Lewis. He and the American senator greeted each other as old colleagues and they were to be seen together for much of the remainder of the day, laughing over reminiscences. In fact, one could see that Mr Lewis's almost constant proximity to M. Dupont was proving a serious inconvenience to Lord Darlington, who was naturally keen to make close personal contact with this distinguished gentleman before the discussions began. On several occasions I witnessed his lordship make attempts to draw M. Dupont aside for some private conversation, only for Mr Lewis smilingly to impose himself upon them with some remark like: 'Pardon me, gentlemen, but there's something that's been greatly puzzling me,' so that his lordship soon found himself having to listen to some more of Mr Lewis's jovial anecdotes. Mr Lewis apart, however, the other guests, perhaps through awe, perhaps through a sense of antagonism, kept a wary distance from M. Dupont, a fact that was conspicuous even in that generally guarded atmosphere, and which seemed to underline all the more the feeling that it was M. Dupont who somehow held the key to the outcome of the following days.

The conference began on a rainy morning during the last week of March 1923 in the somewhat unlikely setting of the drawing room - a venue chosen to accommodate the 'off the record' nature of many of the attendances. In fact, to my eyes, the appearance of informality had been taken to a faintly ludicrous degree. It was odd enough to see that rather feminine room crammed full with so many stern, dark-jacketed gentlemen, sometimes sitting three or four abreast upon a sofa; but such was the determination on the part of some persons to maintain the appearance that this was nothing more than a social event that they had actually gone to the lengths of having journals and newspapers open on their knees.

I was obliged during the course of that first morning to go constantly in and out of the room, and so was unable to follow the proceedings at all fully. But I recall Lord Darlington opening the discussions by formally welcoming the guests, before going on to outline the strong moral case for a relaxing of various aspects of the Versailles treaty, emphasizing the great suffering he had himself witnessed in Germany. Of course, I had heard these same sentiments expressed by his lordship on many occasions before, but such was the depth of conviction with which he spoke in this august setting that I could not help but be moved afresh. Sir David Cardinal spoke next, and though I missed much of his speech, it seemed to be more technical in substance, and quite frankly, rather above my head. But his general gist seemed to be close to his lordship's, concluding with a call for a freezing of German reparation payments and the withdrawal of French troops from the Ruhr region. The German countess then began to speak, but I was at this point, for some reason I do not recollect, obliged to leave the drawing room for an extended period. By the time I reentered, the guests were in open debate, and the discussion - with much talk of commerce and interest rates - was quite beyond me.

M. Dupont, so far as I could observe, was not contributing to the discussions, and it was hard to tell from his sullen demeanour if he was attending carefully to what was being said or else deeply engrossed in other thoughts. At one stage, when I happened to depart the room in the midst of an address by one of the German gentlemen, M. Dupont suddenly rose and followed me out.

‘Butler,’ he said, once we were in the hall, ‘I wonder if I could have my feet changed. They are giving me so much discomfort now, I can hardly listen to these gentlemen.’

As I recall, I had conveyed a plea to Miss Kenton for assistance - via a messenger, naturally - and had left M. Dupont sitting in the billiard room awaiting his nurse, when the first footman had come hurrying down the staircase in some distress to inform me that my father had been taken ill upstairs.

I hurried up to the first floor and on turning at the landing was met by a strange sight. At the far end of the corridor, almost in front of the large window, at that moment filled with grey light and rain, my father’s figure could be seen frozen in a posture that suggested he was taking part in some ceremonial ritual. He had dropped down on to one knee and with head bowed seemed to be pushing at the trolley before him, which for some reason had taken on an obstinate immobility. Two chambermaids were standing at a respectful distance, watching his efforts in some awe. I went to my father and releasing his hands from their grip on the edge of the trolley, eased him down on to the carpet. His eyes were closed, his face was an ashen colour, and there were beads of sweat on his forehead. Further assistance was called, a bath-chair arrived in due course, and my father was transported up to his room.

Once my father had been laid in his bed, I was a little uncertain as to how to proceed; for while it seemed undesirable that I leave my father in such a condition, I did not really have a moment more to spare. As I stood hesitating in the doorway, Miss Kenton appeared at my side and said:

‘Mr Stevens, I have a little more time than you at the moment. I shall, if you wish, attend to your father. I shall show Dr Meredith up and notify you if he has anything noteworthy to say.’

‘Thank you, Miss Kenton,’ I said, and took my leave.

When I returned to the drawing room, a clergyman was talking about the hardships being suffered by children in Berlin. I immediately found myself more than occupied replenishing the guests with tea and coffee. A few of the gentlemen, I noticed, were drinking spirits, and one or two, despite the presence of the two ladies, had started to smoke. I was, I recall, leaving the drawing room with an empty teapot in my hand when Miss Kenton stopped me and said: 'Mr Stevens, Dr Meredith is just leaving now.'

As she said this, I could see the doctor putting on his mackintosh and hat in the hall and so went to him, the teapot still in my hand. The doctor looked at me with a disgruntled expression. 'Your father's not so good,' he said. 'If he deteriorates, call me again immediately.'

'Yes, sir. Thank you, sir.'

'How old is your father, Stevens?'

'Seventy-two, sir.'

Dr Meredith thought about this, then said again: 'If he deteriorates, call me immediately.'

I thanked the doctor again and showed him out.

It was that evening, shortly before dinner, that I overheard the conversation between Mr Lewis and M. Dupont. I had for some reason gone up to M. Dupont's room and was about to knock, but before doing so, as is my custom, I paused for a second to listen at the door. You may not yourself be in the habit of taking this small precaution to avoid knocking at some highly inappropriate moment, but I always have been and can vouch that it is common practice amongst many professionals. That is to say, there is no subterfuge implied in such an action, and I for one had no intention of overhearing to the extent I did that evening. However, as fortune would have it, when I put my ear to M. Dupont's door, I happened to hear Mr Lewis's voice, and though I cannot recall precisely the actual words I first heard, it was the tone of his voice that raised my suspicions. I was listening to the same genial, slow voice with which the American gentleman had charmed many since his arrival and yet it now contained something unmistakably covert. It was this realization along with the fact that he was in M. Dupont's room, presumably addressing this most crucial personage, that caused me to stop my hand from knocking, and continue to listen instead.

The bedroom doors of Darlington Hall are of a certain thickness and I could by no means hear complete exchanges; consequently, it is hard for me now to recall precisely what I overheard, just as, indeed, it was for me later that same evening when I reported to his lordship on the matter. Nevertheless, this is not to say I did not gain a fairly clear impression of what was taking place within the room. In effect, the American gentleman was putting forward the view that M. Dupont was being manipulated by his lordship and other participants at the conference; that M. Dupont had been deliberately invited late to enable the others to discuss important topics in his absence; that even after his arrival, it was to be observed that his lordship was conducting small private discussions with the most important delegates without inviting M. Dupont. Then Mr Lewis began to report certain remarks his lordship and others had made at dinner on that first evening after his arrival.

'To be quite frank, sir,' I heard Mr Lewis say, 'I was appalled at their attitude towards your countrymen. They actually used words like "barbarous" and "despicable". In fact, I noted them in my diary only a few hours afterwards.'

M. Dupont said something briefly which I did not catch, then Mr Lewis said again: 'Let me tell you, sir, I was appalled. Are these words to use about an ally you stood shoulder to shoulder with only a few years back?'

I am not sure now if I ever proceeded to knock; it is quite possible, given the alarming nature of what I heard, that I judged it best to withdraw altogether. In any case, I did not linger long enough - as I was obliged to explain to his lordship shortly afterwards - to hear anything that would give a clue as to M. Dupont's attitude to Mr Lewis's remarks.

The next day, the discussions in the drawing room appeared to reach a new level of intensity and by lunchtime, the exchanges were becoming rather heated. My impression was that utterances were being directed accusingly, and with increasing boldness, towards the armchair where M. Dupont sat fingering his beard, saying little. Whenever the conference adjourned, I noticed, as no doubt his lordship did with some concern, that Mr Lewis would quickly take M. Dupont away to some corner or other where they could confer quietly. Indeed, once, shortly after lunch, I recall I came upon the two gentlemen talking rather furtively just inside the library doorway, and it was my distinct impression they broke off their discussion upon my approach.

In the meantime, my father's condition had grown neither better nor worse. As I understood, he was asleep for much of the time, and indeed, I found him so on the few occasions I had a spare moment to ascend to that little attic room. I did not then have a chance actually to converse with him until that second evening after the return of his illness.

On that occasion, too, my father was sleeping when I entered. But the chambermaid Miss Kenton had left in attendance stood up upon seeing me and began to shake my father's shoulder.

'Foolish girl!' I exclaimed. 'What do you think you are doing?'

'Mr Stevens said to wake him if you returned, sir.'

'Let him sleep. It's exhaustion that's made him ill.'

‘He said I had to, sir,’ the girl said, and again shook my father’s shoulder.

My father opened his eyes, turned his head a little on the pillow, and looked at me.

‘I hope Father is feeling better now,’ I said.

He went on gazing at me for a moment, then asked: ‘Everything in hand downstairs?’

‘The situation is rather volatile. It is just after six o’clock, so Father can well imagine the atmosphere in the kitchen at this moment.’

An impatient look crossed my father’s face. ‘But is everything in hand?’ he said again.

‘Yes, I dare say you can rest assured on that. I’m very glad Father is feeling better.’

With some deliberation, he withdrew his arms from under the bedclothes and gazed tiredly at the backs of his hands. He continued to do this for some time.

‘I’m glad Father is feeling so much better,’ I said again eventually. ‘Now really, I’d best be getting back. As I say, the situation is rather volatile.’

He went on looking at his hands for a moment. Then he said slowly: ‘I hope I’ve been a good father to you.’

I laughed a little and said: ‘I’m so glad you’re feeling better now.’

‘I’m proud of you. A good son. I hope I’ve been a good father to you. I suppose I haven’t.’

‘I’m afraid we’re extremely busy now, but we can talk again in the morning.’

My father was still looking at his hands as though he were faintly irritated by them.

‘I’m so glad you’re feeling better now,’ I said again and took my leave.

On descending, I found the kitchen on the brink of pandemonium, and in general, an extremely tense atmosphere amongst all levels of staff. However, I am pleased to recall that by the time dinner was served an hour or so later, nothing but efficiency and professional calm was exhibited on the part of my team.

It was always something of a memorable sight to see that magnificent banquet hall employed to its full capacity and that evening was no exception. Of course, the effect produced by unbroken lines of gentlemen in evening suits, so outnumbering representatives of the fairer sex, was a rather severe one; but then again, in those days, the two large chandeliers that hang over the table still ran on gas - resulting in a subtle, quite soft light pervading the room - and did not produce the dazzling brightness they have done ever since their electrification. On that second and final dinner of the conference - most guests were expected to disperse after lunch the following day - the company had lost much of the reserve that had been noticeable throughout the previous days. Not only was the conversation flowing more freely and loudly, we found ourselves serving out wine at a conspicuously increased rate. At the close of dinner, which from a professional viewpoint had been executed without any significant difficulties, his lordship rose to address his guests.

He opened by expressing his gratitude to all present that the discussions during the previous two days, ‘though at times exhilaratingly frank’, had been conducted in a spirit of friendship and the desire to see good prevail. The unity witnessed over the two days had been greater than he could ever have hoped for, and the remaining morning’s session of ‘rounding up’ would, he trusted, be rich in commitments on the part of participants concerning action each would be taking before the important international conference in Switzerland. It was around this point - and I have no idea if he had planned to do so beforehand - that his lordship began to reminisce about his late friend, Herr Karl-Heinz Bremann. This was a little unfortunate, the topic being one close to his lordship's heart and one he was inclined to explicate at some length. It should also be said, perhaps, that Lord Darlington was never what might be called a natural public speaker, and soon all those small sounds of restlessness that betray that an audience's attention has been lost grew steadily around the room. Indeed, by the time Lord Darlington had finally come round to bidding his guests rise and drink to 'peace and justice in Europe', the level of such noises - perhaps on account of the liberal amounts of wine that had been consumed - struck me as bordering on the ill-mannered.

The company had seated themselves again, and conversation was just beginning to resume, when there came an authoritative rapping of knuckles upon wood and M. Dupont had risen to his feet. At once, a hush fell over the room. The distinguished gentleman glanced around the table with a look almost of severity. Then he said: 'I hope I am not trespassing over a duty ascribed to someone else present here, but then I had heard no proposals for anyone to give a toast in thanks to our host, the most honourable and kind Lord Darlington.' There was a murmur of approval. M. Dupont went on: 'Many things of interest have been said in this house over the past days. Many important things.' He paused, and there was now utter stillness in the room.

'There has been much', he continued, 'which has implicitly or otherwise criticized - it is not so strong a word - criticized the foreign policy of my country.' He paused again, looking rather stern. One might even have thought him to be angry. 'We have heard in these two days several thorough and intelligent analyses of the present very complex situation in Europe. But none of them, may I say, has fully comprehended the reasons for the attitude France has adopted towards her neighbour. However,' - he raised a finger - 'this is not the time to enter into such debates. In fact, I deliberately refrained from entering into such debates during these past days because I came principally to listen. And let me say now that I have been impressed by certain of the arguments I have heard here. But how impressed, you may be asking.' M. Dupont took another pause during which his gaze travelled in an almost leisurely manner around all the faces fixed upon him. Then at last he said:

'Gentlemen - and ladies, pardon me - I have given much thought to these matters and I wish to say here in confidence to you, that while there remains between myself and many of those present differences of interpretation as to what is really occurring in Europe at this moment, despite this, as to the main points that have been raised in this house, I am convinced, gentlemen, convinced both of their justice and their practicality.' A murmur which seemed to contain both relief and triumph went around the table, but this time M. Dupont raised his voice slightly and pronounced over it: 'I am happy to assure you all here that I will bring what modest influence I have to encourage certain changes of emphasis in French policy in accordance with much of what has been said here. And I will endeavour to do so in good time for the Swiss conference.'

There was a ripple of applause, and I saw his lordship exchange a look with Sir David. M. Dupont held up his hand, though whether to acknowledge the applause or to stem it was not clear.

'But before I go on to thank our host, Lord Darlington, I have some small thing I would wish to remove from my chest. Some of you may say it is not good manners to be removing such things from one's chest at the dinner table.' This brought enthusiastic laughter. 'However, I am for frankness in these matters. Just as there is an imperative to express gratitude formally and publicly to Lord Darlington, who has brought us here and made possible this present spirit of unity and goodwill, there is, I believe, an imperative to openly condemn any who come here to abuse the hospitality of the host, and to spend his energies solely in trying to sow discontent and suspicion. Such persons are not only socially repugnant, in the climate of our present day they are extremely dangerous.' He paused again and once more there was utter stillness. M. Dupont went on in a calm, deliberate voice: 'My only question concerning Mr Lewis is this. To what extent does his abominable behaviour exemplify the attitude of the present American administration? Ladies and gentlemen, let me myself hazard a guess as to the answer, for such a gentleman capable of the levels of deceit he has displayed over these past days should not be relied upon to provide a truthful reply. So, I will hazard my guess. Of course, America is concerned about our debt payments to her in the event of a freeze in German reparations. But I have over the last six months had occasion to discuss this very matter with a number of very highly placed Americans, and it seems to me that thinking in that country is much more far-sighted than that represented by their countryman here. All those of us who care for the future well-being of Europe will take comfort from the fact that Mr Lewis is now - how shall we put it? - hardly the influence he once was. Perhaps you think me unduly harsh to express these things so openly. But the reality is, ladies and gentlemen, I am being merciful. You see, I refrain from outlining just what this gentleman has been saying to me - about you all. And with a most clumsy technique, the audacity and crudeness of which I could hardly believe. But enough of condemnations. It is time for us to thank. Join me then, please, ladies and gentlemen, in raising your glasses to Lord Darlington.'

M. Dupont had not once looked over in Mr Lewis's direction during the course of this speech, and indeed, once the company had toasted his lordship and were seated again, all those present seemed to be studiously avoiding looking towards the American gentleman. An uneasy silence reigned for a moment, and then finally Mr Lewis rose to his feet. He was smiling pleasantly in his customary manner.

‘Well, since everyone’s giving speeches, I may as well take a turn,’ he said, and it was at once apparent from his voice that he had had a good deal to drink. ‘I don’t have anything to say to the nonsense our French friend has been uttering. I just dismiss that sort of talk. I’ve had people try to put one over on me many times, and let me tell you, gentlemen, few people succeed. Few people succeed.’ Mr Lewis came to a halt and for a moment seemed at a loss as to how he should go on. Eventually he smiled again and said: ‘As I say, I’m not going to waste my time on our French friend over there. But as it happens, I do have something to say. Now we’re all being so frank, I’ll be frank too. You gentlemen here, forgive me, but you are just a bunch of naïve dreamers. And if you didn’t insist on meddling in large affairs that affect the globe, you would actually be charming. Let’s take our good host here. What is he? He is a gentleman. No one here, I trust, would care to disagree. A classic English gentleman. Decent, honest, well-meaning. But his lordship here is an amateur.’ He paused at the word and looked around the table. ‘He is an amateur and international affairs today are no longer for gentlemen amateurs. The sooner you here in Europe realize that the better. All you decent, well-meaning gentlemen, let me ask you, have you any idea what sort of place the world is becoming all around you? The days when you could act out of your noble instincts are over. Except of course, you here in Europe don’t yet seem to know it. Gentlemen like our good host still believe it’s their business to meddle in matters they don’t understand. So much hog-wash has been spoken here these past two days. Well-meaning, naïve hog-wash. You here in Europe need professionals to run your affairs. If you don’t realize that soon you’re headed for disaster. A toast, gentlemen. Let me make a toast. To professionalism.’

There was a stunned silence and no one moved. Mr Lewis shrugged, raised his glass to all the company, drank and sat back down. Almost immediately, Lord Darlington stood up.

‘I have no wish,’ his lordship said, ‘to enter into a quarrel on this our last evening together which we all deserve to enjoy as a happy and triumphant occasion. But it is out of respect for your views, Mr Lewis, that I feel one should not simply cast them to one side as though they were uttered by some soapbox eccentric. Let me say this. What you describe as “amateurism”, sir, is what I think most of us here still prefer to call “honour”.’

This brought a loud murmur of assent with several ‘hear, hear’s’ and some applause.

‘What is more, sir,’ his lordship went on, ‘I believe I have a good idea of what you mean by “professionalism”. It appears to mean getting one’s way by cheating and manipulating. It means ordering one’s priorities according to greed and advantage rather than the desire to see goodness and justice prevail in the world. If that is the “professionalism” you refer to, sir, I don’t much care for it and have no wish to acquire it.’

This was met by the loudest burst of approval yet, followed by warm and sustained applause. I could see Mr Lewis smiling at his wine glass and shaking his head wearily. It was just around this stage that I became aware of the first footman beside me, who whispered: ‘Miss Kenton would like a word with you, sir. She’s just outside the door.’

I made my exit as discreetly as possible just as his lordship, still on his feet, was embarking on a further point.

Miss Kenton looked rather upset. ‘Your father has become very ill, Mr Stevens,’ she said. ‘I’ve called for Dr Meredith, but I understand he may be a little delayed.’

I must have looked a little confused, for Miss Kenton then said: 'Mr Stevens, he really is in a poor state. You had better come and see him.'

'I only have a moment. The gentlemen are liable to retire to the smoking room at any moment.'

'Of course. But you must come now, Mr Stevens, or else you may deeply regret it later.'

Miss Kenton was already leading the way, and we hurried through the house up to my father's small attic room. Mrs Mortimer, the cook, was standing over my father's bed, still in her apron.

'Oh, Mr Stevens,' she said upon our entry, 'he's gone very poorly.'

Indeed, my father's face had gone a dull reddish colour, like no colour I had seen on a living being. I heard Miss Kenton say softly behind me: 'His pulse is very weak.' I gazed at my father for a moment, touched his forehead slightly, then withdrew my hand.

'In my opinion,' Mrs Mortimer said, 'he's suffered a stroke. I've seen two in my time and I think he's suffered a stroke.' With that, she began to cry. I noticed she reeked powerfully of fat and roast cooking. I turned away and said to Miss Kenton:

'This is most distressing. Nevertheless, I must now return downstairs.'

'Of course, Mr Stevens. I will tell you when the doctor arrives. Or else when there are any changes.'

'Thank you, Miss Kenton.'

I hurried down the stairs and was in time to see the gentlemen proceeding into the smoking room. The footmen looked relieved to see me, and I immediately signalled them to get to their positions.

Whatever had taken place in the banqueting hall after my departure, there was now a genuinely celebratory atmosphere amongst the guests. All around the smoking room, gentlemen seemed to be standing in clusters laughing and clapping each other on the shoulder. Mr Lewis, so far as I could ascertain, had already retired. I found myself making my way through the guests, a decanter of port upon my tray. I had just finished serving a glass to a gentleman when a voice behind me said: 'Ah, Stevens, you're interested in fish, you say.'

I turned to find the young Mr Cardinal beaming happily at me. I smiled also and said: 'Fish, sir?'

'When I was young, I used to keep all sorts of tropical fish in a tank. Quite a little aquarium it was. I say, Stevens, are you all right?'

I smiled again. 'Quite all right, thank you, sir.'

'As you so rightly pointed out, I really should come back here in the spring. Darlington Hall must be rather lovely then. The last time I was here, I think it was winter then too. I say, Stevens, are you sure you're all right there?'

'Perfectly all right, thank you, sir.'

'Not feeling unwell, are you?'

'Not at all, sir. Please excuse me.'

I proceeded to serve port to some other of the guests. There was a loud burst of laughter behind me and I heard the Belgian clergyman exclaim: 'That is really heretical! Positively heretical!' then laugh loudly himself. I felt something touch my elbow and turned to find Lord Darlington.

'Stevens, are you all right?'

'Yes, sir. Perfectly.'

'You look as though you're crying.'

I laughed and taking out a handkerchief, quickly wiped my face. 'I'm very sorry, sir. The strains of a hard day.'

'Yes, it's been hard work.'

Someone addressed his lordship and he turned away to reply. I was about to continue further around the room when I caught sight of Miss Kenton through the open doorway, signalling to me. I began to make my way towards the doors, but before I could reach them, M. Dupont touched my arm.

'Butler,' he said, 'I wonder if you would find me some fresh bandages. My feet are unbearable again.'

'Yes, sir.'

As I proceeded towards the doors, I realized M. Dupont was following me. I turned and said: 'I will come and find you, sir, just as soon as I have what is required.'

'Please hurry, butler. I am in some pain.'

'Yes, sir. I'm very sorry, sir.'

Miss Kenton was still standing out in the hall where I had first spotted her. As I emerged, she walked silently towards the staircase, a curious lack of urgency in her manner. Then she turned and said: 'Mr Stevens, I'm very sorry. Your father passed away about four minutes ago.'

'I see.'

She looked at her hands, then up at my face. 'Mr Stevens, I'm very sorry', she said. Then she added: 'I wish there was something I could say.'

'There's no need, Miss Kenton.'

'Dr Meredith has not yet arrived.' Then for a moment she bowed her head and a sob escaped her. But almost immediately, she resumed her composure and asked in a steady voice: 'Will you come up and see him?'

‘I’m very busy just now, Miss Kenton. In a little while perhaps.’

‘In that case, Mr Stevens, will you permit me to close his eyes?’

‘I would be most grateful if you would, Miss Kenton.’

She began to climb the staircase, but I stopped her, saying: ‘Miss Kenton, please don’t think me unduly improper in not ascending to see my father in his deceased condition just at this moment. You see, I know my father would have wished me to carry on just now.’

‘Of course, Mr Stevens.’

‘To do otherwise, I feel, would be to let him down.’

‘Of course, Mr Stevens.’

I turned away, the decanter of port still on my tray, and reentered the smoking room. That relatively small room appeared to be a forest of black dinner jackets, grey hair and cigar smoke. I wended my way past the gentlemen, searching for glasses to replenish. M. Dupont tapped my shoulder and said:

‘Butler, have you seen to my arrangements?’

‘I am very sorry, sir, but assistance is not immediately available at this precise moment.’

‘What do you mean, butler? You’ve run out of basic medical supplies?’

‘As it happens, sir, a doctor is on his way.’

‘Ah, very good! You called a doctor.’

‘Yes, sir.’

‘Good, good.’

M. Dupont resumed his conversation and I continued my way around the room for some moments. At one point, the German countess emerged from the midst of the gentlemen and before I had had a chance to serve her, began helping herself to some port from my tray.

‘You will compliment the cook for me, Stevens,’ she said.

‘Of course, madam. Thank you, madam.’

‘And you and your team did well also.’

‘Thank you most kindly, madam.’

‘At one point during dinner, Stevens, I would have sworn you were at least three people,’ she said and laughed.

I laughed quickly and said: ‘I’m delighted to be of service, madam.’

A moment later, I spotted the young Mr Cardinal not far away, still standing on his own, and it struck me the young gentleman might be feeling somewhat overawed in the present company. His glass, in any case, was empty and so I started towards him. He seemed greatly cheered at the prospect of my arrival and held out his glass.

‘I think it’s admirable that you’re a nature-lover, Stevens,’ he said, as I served him. ‘And I dare say it’s a great advantage to Lord Darlington to have someone to keep an expert eye on the activities of the gardener.’

‘I’m sorry, sir?’

‘Nature, Stevens. We were talking the other day about the wonders of the natural world. And I quite agree with you, we are all much too complacent about the great wonders that surround us.’

‘Yes, sir.’

‘I mean, all this we’ve been talking about. Treaties and boundaries and reparations and occupations. But Mother Nature just carries on her own sweet way. Funny to think of it like that, don’t you think?’

‘Yes, indeed it is, sir.’

‘I wonder if it wouldn’t have been better if the Almighty had created us all as – well – as sort of plants. You know, firmly embedded in the soil. Then none of this rot about wars and boundaries would have come up in the first place.’

The young gentleman seemed to find this an amusing thought. He gave a laugh, then on further thought laughed some more. I joined him in his laughter. Then he nudged me and said: ‘Can you imagine it, Stevens?’ and laughed again.

‘Yes, sir,’ I said, laughing also, ‘it would have been a most curious alternative.’

‘But we could still have chaps like you taking messages back and forth, bringing tea, that sort of thing. Otherwise, how would we ever get anything done? Can you imagine it, Stevens? All of us rooted in the soil? Just imagine it!’

Just then a footman emerged behind me. ‘Miss Kenton is wishing to have a word with you, sir,’ he said.

I excused myself from Mr Cardinal and moved towards the doors. I noticed M. Dupont apparently guarding them and as I approached, he said: ‘Butler, is the doctor here?’

‘I am just going to find out, sir. I won’t be a moment.’

‘I am in some pain.’

‘I’m very sorry, sir. The doctor should not be long now.’

On this occasion, M. Dupont followed me out of the door. Miss Kenton was once more standing out in the hall.

‘Mr Stevens,’ she said, ‘Dr Meredith has arrived and gone upstairs.’

She had spoken in a low voice, but M. Dupont behind me exclaimed immediately: ‘Ah, good!’

I turned to him and said: 'If you will perhaps follow me, sir.'

I led him into the billiard room where I stoked the fire while he sat down in one of the leather chairs and began to remove his shoes.

'I'm sorry it is rather cold in here, sir. The doctor will not be long now.'

'Thank you, butler. You've done well.'

Miss Kenton was still waiting for me in the hallway and we ascended through the house in silence. Up in my father's room, Dr Meredith was making some notes and Mrs Mortimer weeping bitterly. She was still wearing her apron, which, evidently, she had been using to wipe away her tears; as a result there were grease marks all over her face, giving her the appearance of a participant in a minstrel show. I had expected the room to smell of death, but on account of Mrs Mortimer - or else her apron - the room was dominated by the smell of roasting.

Dr Meredith rose and said: 'My condolences, Stevens. He suffered a severe stroke. If it's any comfort to you, he wouldn't have suffered much pain. There was nothing in the world you could have done to save him.'

'Thank you, sir.'

'I'll be on my way now. You'll see to arrangements?'

'Yes, sir. However, if I may, there is a most distinguished gentleman downstairs in need of your attention.'

'Urgent?'

'He expressed a keen desire to see you, sir.'

I led Dr Meredith downstairs, showed him into the billiard room, then returned quickly to the smoking room where the atmosphere, if anything, had grown even more convivial.

Of course, it is not for me to suggest that I am worthy of ever being placed alongside the likes of the 'great' butlers of our generation, such as Mr Marshall or Mr Lane - though it should be said there are those who, perhaps out of misguided generosity, tend to do just this. Let me make clear that when I say the conference of 1923, and that night in particular, constituted a turning point in my professional development, I am speaking very much in terms of my own more humble standards. Even so, if you consider the pressures contingent on me that night, you may not think I delude myself unduly if I go so far as to suggest that I did perhaps display, in the face of everything, at least in some modest degree a 'dignity' worthy of someone like Mr Marshall - or come to that, my father. Indeed, why should I deny it? For all its sad associations, whenever I recall that evening today, I find I do so with a large sense of triumph.

DAY TWO – AFTERNOON

Mortimer's Pond, Dorset

It would seem there is a whole dimension to the question 'what is a "great" butler?' I have hitherto not properly considered. It is, I must say, a rather unsettling experience to realize this about a matter so close to my heart, particularly one I have given much thought to over the years. But it strikes me I may have been a little hasty before in dismissing certain aspects of the Hayes Society's criteria for membership. I have no wish, let me make clear, to retract any of my ideas on 'dignity' and its crucial link with 'greatness'. But I have been thinking a little more about that other pronouncement made by the Hayes Society – namely the admission that it was a prerequisite for membership of the Society that 'the applicant be attached to a distinguished household'. My feeling remains, no less than before, that this represents a piece of unthinking snobbery on the part of the Society. However, it occurs to me that perhaps what one takes objection to is, specifically, the outmoded understanding of what a 'distinguished household' is, rather than to the general principle being expressed. Indeed, now that I think further on the matter, I believe it may well be true to say it is a prerequisite of greatness that one 'be attached to a distinguished household' – so long as one takes 'distinguished' here to have a meaning deeper than that understood by the Hayes Society.

In fact, a comparison of how I might interpret 'a distinguished household' with what the Hayes Society understood by that term illuminates sharply, I believe, the fundamental difference between the values of our generation of butlers and those of the previous generation. When I say this, I am not merely drawing attention to the fact that our generation had a less snobbish attitude as regards which employers were landed gentry and which were 'business'. What I am trying to say - and I do not think this an unfair comment - is that we were a much more idealistic generation. Where our elders might have been concerned with whether or not an employer was titled, or otherwise from one of the 'old' families, we tended to concern ourselves much more with the moral status of an employer. I do not mean by this that we were preoccupied with our employers' private behaviour. What I mean is that we were ambitious, in a way that would have been unusual a generation before, to serve gentlemen who were, so to speak, furthering the progress of humanity. It would have been seen as a far worthier calling, for instance, to serve a gentleman such as Mr George Ketteridge, who, however humble his beginnings, has made an undeniable contribution to the future well-being of the empire, than any gentleman, however aristocratic his origin, who idled away his time in clubs or on golf courses.

In practice, of course, many gentlemen from the noblest families have tended to devote themselves to alleviating the great problems of the day, and so, at a glance, it may have appeared that the ambitions of our generation differed little from those of our predecessors. But I can vouch there was a crucial distinction in attitude, reflected not only in the sorts of things you would hear fellow professionals express to each other, but in the way many of the most able persons of our generation chose to leave one position for another. Such decisions were no longer a matter simply of wages, the size of staff at one's disposal or the splendour of a family name; for our generation, I think it fair to say, professional prestige lay most significantly in the moral worth of one's employer.

I believe I can best highlight the difference between the generations by expressing myself figuratively. Butlers of my father's generation, I would say, tended to see the world in terms of a ladder - the houses of royalty, dukes and the lords from the oldest families placed at the top, those of ‘new money’ lower down and so on, until one reached a point below which the hierarchy was determined simply by wealth - or the lack of it. Any butler with ambition simply did his best to climb as high up this ladder as possible, and by and large, the higher he went, the greater his professional prestige. Such are, of course, precisely the values embodied in the Hayes Society’s idea of a ‘distinguished household’, and the fact that it was confidently making such pronouncements as late as 1929 shows clearly why the demise of that society was inevitable, if not long overdue. For by that time, such thinking was quite out of step with that of the finest men emerging to the forefront of our profession. For our generation, I believe it is accurate to say, viewed the world not as a ladder, but more as a wheel. Perhaps I might explain this further.

It is my impression that our generation was the first to recognize something which had passed the notice of all earlier generations: namely that the great decisions of the world are not, in fact, arrived at simply in the public chambers, or else during a handful of days given over to an international conference under the full gaze of the public and the press. Rather, debates are conducted, and crucial decisions arrived at, in the privacy and calm of the great houses of this country. What occurs under the public gaze with so much pomp and ceremony is often the conclusion, or mere ratification, of what has taken place over weeks or months within the walls of such houses. To us, then, the world was a wheel, revolving with these great houses at the hub, their mighty decisions emanating out to all else, rich and poor, who revolved around them. It was the aspiration of all those of us with professional ambition to work our way as close to this hub as we were each of us capable. For we were, as I say, an idealistic generation for whom the question was not simply one of how well one practised one’s skills, but to what end one did so; each of us harboured the desire to make our own small contribution to the creation of a better world, and saw that, as professionals, the surest means of doing so would be to serve the great gentlemen of our times in whose hands civilization had been entrusted.

Of course, I am now speaking in broad generalizations and I would readily admit there were all too many persons of our generation who had no patience for such finer considerations. Conversely, I am sure there were many of my father's generation who recognized instinctively this 'moral' dimension to their work. But by and large, I believe these generalizations to be accurate, and indeed, such 'idealistic' motivations as I have described have played a large part in my own career. I myself moved quite rapidly from employer to employer during my early career - being aware that these situations were incapable of bringing me lasting satisfaction - before being rewarded at last with the opportunity to serve Lord Darlington.

It is curious that I have never until today thought of matters in these terms; indeed, that through all those many hours we spent discussing the nature of 'greatness' by the fire of our servants' hall, the likes of Mr Graham and I never considered this whole dimension to the question. And while I would not retract anything I have previously stated regarding the quality of 'dignity', I must admit there is something to the argument that whatever the degree to which a butler has attained such a quality, if he has failed to find an appropriate outlet for his accomplishments he can hardly expect his fellows to consider him 'great'. Certainly, it is observable that figures like Mr Marshall and Mr Lane have served only gentlemen of indisputable moral stature - Lord Wakeling, Lord Camberley, Sir Leonard Gray - and one cannot help get the impression that they simply would not have offered their talents to gentlemen of lesser calibre. Indeed, the more one considers it, the more obvious it seems: association with a truly distinguished household is a prerequisite of 'greatness'. A 'great' butler can only be, surely, one who can point to his years of service and say that he has applied his talents to serving a great gentleman - and through the latter, to serving humanity.

As I say, I have never in all these years thought of the matter in quite this way; but then it is perhaps in the nature of coming away on a trip such as this that one is prompted towards such surprising new perspectives on topics one imagined one had long ago thought through thoroughly. I have also, no doubt, been prompted to think along such lines by the small event that occurred an hour or so ago - which has, I admit, unsettled me somewhat.

Having enjoyed a good morning's motoring in splendid weather, and having lunched well at a country inn, I had just crossed the border into Dorset. It was then I had become aware of a heated smell emanating from the car engine. The thought that I had done some damage to my employer's Ford was, of course, most alarming and I had quickly brought the vehicle to a halt.

I found myself in a narrow lane, hemmed in on either side by foliage so that I could gain little idea of what was around me. Neither could I see far ahead, the lane winding quite sharply twenty yards or so in front. It occurred to me that I could not remain where I was for long without incurring the risk of an oncoming vehicle coming round the same bend and colliding into my employer's Ford. I thus started the engine again and was partially reassured to find that the smell seemed not as powerful as before.

My best course, I could see, was to look for a garage, or else a large house of a gentleman where there would be a good chance I might find a chauffeur who could see what the matter was. But the lane continued to wind for some distance, and the high hedges on either side of me also persisted, obscuring my vision so that though I passed several gates, some of which clearly yielded on to driveways, I was unable to glimpse the houses themselves. I continued for another half-mile or so, the disturbing smell now growing stronger by the moment, until at last I came out on to a stretch of open road. I could now see some distance before me, and indeed, ahead to my left there loomed a tall Victorian house with a substantial front lawn and what was clearly a driveway converted from an old carriage track. As I drew up to it, I was encouraged further to glimpse a Bentley through the open doors of a garage attached to the main house.

The gate too had been left open and so I steered the Ford a little way up the drive, got out and made my way to the back door of the house. This was opened by a man dressed in his shirt sleeves, wearing no tie, but who, upon my asking for the chauffeur of the house, replied cheerfully that I had 'hit the jackpot first time'. On hearing of my problem, the man without hesitation came out to the Ford, opened the bonnet and informed me after barely a few seconds' inspection: 'Water, guv. You need some water in your radiator.' He seemed to be rather amused by the whole situation, but was obliging enough; he returned inside the house and after a few moments emerged again with a jug of water and a funnel. As he filled the radiator, his head bent over the engine, he began to chat amiably, and on ascertaining that I was undertaking a motoring tour of the area, recommended I visit a local beauty spot, a certain pond not half a mile away.

I had had in the meantime more opportunity to observe the house; it was taller than it was broad, comprising four floors, with ivy covering much of the front right up to the gables. I could see from its windows, however, that at least half of it was dust-sheeted. I remarked on this to the man once he had finished with the radiator and closed the bonnet.

'A shame really,' he said. 'It's a lovely old house. Truth is, the Colonel's trying to sell the place off. He ain't got much use for a house this size now.'

I could not help inquiring then how many staff were employed there, and I suppose I was hardly surprised to be told there was only himself and a cook who came in each evening. He was, it seemed, butler, valet, chauffeur and general cleaner. He had been the Colonel's batman in the war, he explained; they had been in Belgium together when the Germans had invaded and they had been together again for the Allied landing. Then he regarded me carefully and said:

'Now I got it. I couldn't make you out for a while, but now I got it. You're one of them top-notch butlers. From one of them big posh houses.'

When I told him he was not so far off the mark, he continued:

'Now I got it. Couldn't make you out for a while, see, 'cause you talk almost like a gentleman. And what with you driving an old beauty like this' - he gestured to the Ford - 'I thought at first, here's a really posh geezer. And so you are, guv. Really posh, I mean. I never learnt any of that myself, you see. I'm just a plain old batman gone civvy.'

He then asked me where it was I was employed, and when I told him he leant his head to one side with a quizzical look.

'Darlington Hall,' he said to himself. 'Darlington Hall. Must be a really posh place, it rings a bell even to an idiot like yours truly. Darlington Hall. Hang on, you don't mean Darlington Hall, Lord Darlington's place?'

'It was Lord Darlington's residence until his death three years ago,' I informed him. 'The house is now the residence of Mr John Farraday, an American gentleman.'

'You really must be top-notch working in a place like that. Can't be many like you left, eh?' Then his voice changed noticeably as he inquired: 'You mean you actually used to work for that Lord Darlington?'

He was eyeing me carefully again. I said:

'Oh no, I am employed by Mr John Farraday, the American gentleman who bought the house from the Darlington family.'

‘Oh, so you wouldn’t have known that Lord Darlington. Just that I wondered what he was like. What sort of bloke he was.’

I told the man that I would have to be on my way and thanked him emphatically for his assistance. He was, after all, an amiable fellow, taking the trouble to guide me in reversing out through the gateway, and before I parted, he bent down and recommended again that I visit the local pond, repeating his instructions as to how I would find it.

‘It’s a beautiful little spot,’ he added. ‘You’ll kick yourself for missing it. In fact, the Colonel’s doing a bit of fishing there this minute.’

The Ford seemed to be in fine form again, and since the pond in question was but a small detour off my route, I decided to take up the batman’s suggestion. His directions had seemed clear enough, but once I had turned off the main road in an attempt to follow them, I found myself getting lost down narrow, twisting lanes much like the one in which I had first noticed the alarming smell. At times, the foliage on either side became so thick as practically to blot out the sun altogether, and one found one’s eyes struggling to cope with the sudden contrasts of bright sunlight and deep shade. Eventually, however, after some searching, I found a signpost to ‘Mortimer’s Pond’, and so it was that I arrived here at this spot a little over half an hour ago.

I now find myself much indebted to the batman, for quite aside from assisting with the Ford, he has allowed me to discover a most charming spot which it is most improbable I would ever have found otherwise. The pond is not a large one – a quarter of a mile around its perimeter perhaps – so that by stepping out to any promontory, one can command a view of its entirety. An atmosphere of great calm pervades here. Trees have been planted all around the water just closely enough to give a pleasant shade to the banks, while here and there clusters of tall reeds and bulrushes break the water's surface and its still reflection of the sky. My footwear is not such as to permit me easily to walk around the perimeter - I can see even from where I now sit the path disappearing into areas of deep mud - but I will say that such is the charm of this spot that on first arriving, I was sorely tempted to do just that. Only the thought of the possible catastrophes that might befall such an expedition, and of sustaining damage to my travelling suit, persuaded me to content myself with sitting here on this bench. And so I have done for the past half-hour, contemplating the progress of the various figures seated quietly with their fishing rods at various points around the water. At this point, I can see a dozen or so such figures, but the strong lights and shades created by the low-hanging branches prevent me from making any of them out clearly and I have had to forgo the small game I had been anticipating of guessing which of these fishermen is the Colonel at whose house I have just received such useful assistance.

It is no doubt the quiet of these surroundings that has enabled me to ponder all the more thoroughly these thoughts which have entered my mind over this past half-hour or so. Indeed, but for the tranquillity of the present setting, it is possible I would not have thought a great deal further about my behaviour during my encounter with the batman. That is to say, I may not have thought further why it was that I had given the distinct impression I had never been in the employ of Lord Darlington. For surely, there is no real doubt that is what occurred. He had asked: 'You mean you actually worked for that Lord Darlington?' and I had given an answer which could mean little other than that I had not. It could simply be that a meaningless whim had suddenly overtaken me at that moment - but that is hardly a convincing way to account for such distinctly odd behaviour. In any case, I have now come to accept that the incident with the batman is not the first of its kind; there is little doubt it has some connection - though I am not quite clear of the nature of it - with what occurred a few months ago during the visit of the Wakefields.

Mr and Mrs Wakefield are an American couple who have been settled in England - somewhere in Kent, I understand - for some twenty years. Having a number of acquaintances in common with Mr Farraday amidst Boston society, they paid a short visit one day to Darlington Hall, staying for lunch and leaving before tea. I now refer to a time only a few weeks after Mr Farraday had arrived at the house, a time when his enthusiasm for his acquisition was at a height; consequently, much of the Wakefields' visit was taken up with my employer leading them on what might have seemed to some an unnecessarily extensive tour of the premises, including all the dust-sheeted areas. Mr and Mrs Wakefield, however, appeared to be as keen on the inspection as Mr Farraday, and as I went about my business, I would often catch various American exclamations of delight coming from whichever part of the house they had arrived at. Mr Farraday had commenced the tour at the top of the house, and by the time he had brought his guests down to inspect the magnificence of the ground-floor rooms, he seemed to be on an elevated plane, pointing out details on cornicings and window frames, and describing with some flourish 'what the English lords used to do' in each room. Although of course I made no deliberate attempt to overhear, I could not help but get the gist of what was being said, and was surprised by the extent of my employer's knowledge, which, despite the occasional infelicity, betrayed a deep enthusiasm for English ways. It was noticeable, moreover, that the Wakefields - Mrs Wakefield in particular - were themselves by no means ignorant of the traditions of our country, and one gathered from the many remarks they made that they too were owners of an English house of some splendour.

It was at a certain stage during this tour of the premises - I was crossing the hall under the impression that the party had gone out to explore the grounds - when I saw that Mrs Wakefield had remained behind and was closely examining the stone arch that frames the doorway into the dining room. As I went past, muttering a quiet 'excuse me, madam,' she turned and said:

'Oh, Stevens, perhaps you're the one to tell me. This arch here looks seventeenth century, but isn't it the case that it was built quite recently? Perhaps during Lord Darlington's time?'

'It is possible, madam.'

'It's very beautiful. But it is probably a kind of mock period piece done only a few years ago. Isn't that right?'

'I'm not sure, madam, but that is certainly possible.'

Then, lowering her voice, Mrs Wakefield had said: 'But tell me, Stevens, what was this Lord Darlington like? Presumably you must have worked for him.'

'I didn't, madam, no.'

'Oh, I thought you did. I wonder why I thought that.'

Mrs Wakefield turned back to the arch and putting her hand to it, said: 'So we don't know for certain then. Still, it looks to me like it's mock. Very skilful, but mock.'

It is possible I might have quickly forgotten this exchange; however, following the Wakefields' departure, I took in afternoon tea to Mr Farraday in the drawing room and noticed he was in a rather preoccupied mood. After an initial silence, he said:

'You know, Stevens, Mrs Wakefield wasn't as impressed with this house as I believe she ought to have been.'

'Is that so, sir?'

'In fact, she seemed to think I was exaggerating the pedigree of this place. That I was making it up about all these features going back centuries.'

‘Indeed, sir?’

‘She kept asserting everything was “mock” this and “mock” that. She even thought you were “mock”, Stevens.’

‘Indeed, sir?’

‘Indeed, Stevens. I’d told her you were the real thing. A real old English butler. That you’d been in this house for over thirty years, serving a real English lord. But Mrs Wakefield contradicted me on this point. In fact, she contradicted me with great confidence.’

‘Is that so, sir?’

‘Mrs Wakefield, Stevens, was convinced you never worked here until I hired you. In fact, she seemed to be under the impression she’d had that from your own lips. Made me look pretty much a fool, as you can imagine.’

‘I mean to say, Stevens, this is a genuine grand old English house, isn’t it? That’s what I paid for. And you’re a genuine old-fashioned English butler, not just some waiter pretending to be one. You’re the real thing, aren’t you? That’s what I wanted, isn’t that what I have?’

‘I venture to say you do, sir.’

‘Then can you explain to me what Mrs Wakefield is saying? It’s a big mystery to me.’

‘It is possible I may well have given the lady a slightly misleading picture concerning my career, sir. I do apologize if this caused embarrassment.’

‘I’ll say it caused embarrassment. Those people have now got me down for a braggart and a liar. Anyway, what do you mean, you may have given her a “slightly misleading picture”?’

‘I’m very sorry, sir. I had no idea I might cause you such embarrassment.’

‘But dammit, Stevens, why did you tell her such a tale?’

I considered the situation for a moment, then said: ‘I’m very sorry, sir. But it is to do with the ways of this country.’

‘What are you talking about, man?’

‘I mean to say, sir, that it is not customary in England for an employee to discuss his past employers.’

‘OK, Stevens, so you don’t wish to divulge past confidences. But does that extend to you actually denying having worked for anyone other than me?’

‘It does seem a little extreme when you put it that way, sir. But it has often been considered desirable for employees to give such an impression. If I may put it this way, sir, it is a little akin to the custom as regards marriages. If a divorced lady were present in the company of her second husband, it is often thought desirable not to allude to the original marriage at all. There is a similar custom as regards our profession, sir.’

‘Well, I only wish I’d known about your custom before, Stevens,’ my employer said, leaning back in his chair. ‘It certainly made me look like a chump.’

I believe I realized even at the time that my explanation to Mr Farraday – though, of course, not entirely devoid of truth – was woefully inadequate. But when one has so much else to think about, it is easy not to give such matters a great deal of attention, and so I did, indeed, put the whole episode out of my mind for some time. But now, recalling it here in the calm that surrounds this pond, there seems little doubt that my conduct towards Mrs Wakefield that day has an obvious relation to what has just taken place this afternoon.

Of course, there are many people these days who have a lot of foolish things to say about Lord Darlington, and it may be that you are under the impression I am somehow embarrassed or ashamed of my association with his lordship, and it is this that lies behind such conduct. Then let me make it clear that nothing could be further from the truth. The great majority of what one hears said about his lordship today is, in any case, utter nonsense, based on an almost complete ignorance of the facts. Indeed, it seems to me that my odd conduct can be very plausibly explained in terms of my wish to avoid any possibility of hearing any further such nonsense concerning his lordship; that is to say, I have chosen to tell white lies in both instances as the simplest means of avoiding unpleasantness. This does seem a very plausible explanation the more I think about it; for it is true, nothing vexes me more these days than to hear this sort of nonsense being repeated. Let me say that Lord Darlington was a gentleman of great moral stature - a stature to dwarf most of these persons you will find talking this sort of nonsense about him - and I will readily vouch that he remained that to the last. Nothing could be less accurate than to suggest that I regret my association with such a gentleman. Indeed, you will appreciate that to have served his lordship at Darlington Hall during those years was to come as close to the hub of this world's wheel as one such as I could ever have dreamt. I gave thirty-five years' service to Lord Darlington; one would surely not be unjustified in claiming that during those years, one was, in the truest terms, 'attached to a distinguished household'. In looking back over my career thus far, my chief satisfaction derives from what I achieved during those years, and I am today nothing but proud and grateful to have been given such a privilege.

DAY THREE – MORNING

Taunton, Somerset

I lodged last night in an inn named the Coach and Horses a little way outside the town of Taunton, Somerset. This being a thatch-roofed cottage by the roadside, it had looked a conspicuously attractive prospect from the Ford as I had approached in the last of the daylight. The landlord led me up a timber stairway to a small room, rather bare, but perfectly decent. When he inquired whether I had dined, I asked him to serve me with a sandwich in my room, which proved a perfectly satisfactory option as far as supper was concerned. But then as the evening drew on, I began to feel a little restless in my room, and in the end decided to descend to the bar below to try a little of the local cider.

There were five or six customers all gathered in a group around the bar – one guessed from their appearance they were agricultural people of one sort or another – but otherwise the room was empty. Acquiring a tankard of cider from the landlord, I seated myself at a table a little way away, intending to relax a little and collect my thoughts concerning the day. It soon became clear, however, that these local people were perturbed by my presence, feeling something of a need to show hospitality. Whenever there was a break in their conversation, one or the other of them would steal a glance in my direction as though trying to find it in himself to approach me. Eventually one raised his voice and said to me:

When I told him this was so, the speaker shook his head doubtfully and remarked: ‘You won’t get much of a sleep up there, sir. Not unless you’re fond of the sound of old Bob’

- he indicated the landlord - 'banging away down here right the way into the night. And then you'll get woken by his missus shouting at him right from the crack of dawn.'

Despite the landlord's protests, this caused loud laughter all round.

'Is that indeed so?' I said. And as I spoke, I was struck by the thought - the same thought as had struck me on numerous occasions of late in Mr Farraday's presence - that some sort of witty retort was required of me. Indeed, the local people were now observing a polite silence, awaiting my next remark. I thus searched my imagination and eventually declared:

'A local variation on the cock crow, no doubt.'

At first the silence continued, as though the local persons thought I intended to elaborate further. But then noticing the mirthful expression on my face, they broke into a laugh, though in a somewhat bemused fashion. With this, they returned to their previous conversation, and I exchanged no further words with them until exchanging good nights a little while later.

I had been rather pleased with my witticism when it had first come into my head, and I must confess I was slightly disappointed it had not been better received than it was. I was particularly disappointed, I suppose, because I have been devoting some time and effort over recent months to improving my skill in this very area. That is to say, I have been endeavouring to add this skill to my professional armoury so as to fulfil with confidence all Mr Farraday's expectations with respect to bantering.

For instance, I have of late taken to listening to the wireless in my room whenever I find myself with a few spare moments - on those occasions, say, when Mr Farraday is out for the evening. One programme I listen to is called Twice a Week or More, which is in fact broadcast three times each week, and basically comprises two persons making humorous comments on a variety of topics raised by readers' letters. I have been studying this programme because the witticisms performed on it are always in the best of taste and, to my mind, of a tone not at all out of keeping with the sort of bantering Mr Farraday might expect on my part. Taking my cue from this programme, I have devised a simple exercise which I try to perform at least once a day; whenever an odd moment presents itself, I attempt to formulate three witticisms based on my immediate surroundings at that moment. Or, as a variation on this same exercise, I may attempt to think of three witticisms based on the events of the past hour.

You will perhaps appreciate then my disappointment concerning my witticism yesterday evening. At first, I had thought it possible its limited success was due to my not having spoken clearly enough. But then the possibility occurred to me, once I had retired, that I might actually have given these people offence. After all, it could easily have been understood that I was suggesting the landlord's wife resembled a cockerel - an intention that had not remotely entered my head at the time. This thought continued to torment me as I tried to sleep, and I had half a mind to make an apology to the landlord this morning. But his mood towards me as he served breakfast seemed perfectly cheerful and in the end I decided to let the matter rest.

But this small episode is as good an illustration as any of the hazards of uttering witticisms. By the very nature of a witticism, one is given very little time to assess its various possible repercussions before one is called to give voice to it, and one gravely risks uttering all manner of unsuitable things if one has not first acquired the necessary skill and experience. There is no reason to suppose this is not an area in which I will become proficient given time and practice, but, such are the dangers, I have decided it best, for the time being at least, not to attempt to discharge this duty in respect of Mr Farraday until I have practised further.

In any case, I am sorry to report that what the local people had themselves offered last night as a witticism of sorts - the prediction that I would not have a good night owing to disturbances from below - proved only too true. The landlord's wife did not actually shout, but one could hear her talking incessantly both late into the night as she and her husband went about their tasks, and again from very early this morning. I was quite prepared to forgive the couple, however, for it was clear they were of diligent hard-working habits, and the noise, I am sure, was all attributable to this fact. Besides, of course, there had been the matter of my unfortunate remark. I thus gave no indication of having had a disturbed night when I thanked the landlord and took my leave to explore the market town of Taunton.

Perhaps I might have done better to have lodged here in this establishment where I now sit enjoying a pleasant mid-morning cup of tea. For indeed, the notice outside advertises not only 'teas, snacks and cakes', but also 'clean, quiet, comfortable rooms'. It is situated on the high street of Taunton, very close to the market square, a somewhat sunken building, its exterior characterized by heavy dark timber beams. I am at present sitting in its spacious tearoom, oak-panelled, with enough tables to accommodate, I would guess, two dozen people without a feeling of crowding. Two cheery young girls serve from behind a counter displaying a good selection of cakes and pastries. All in all, this is an excellent place to partake of morning tea, but surprisingly few of the inhabitants of Taunton seem to wish to avail themselves of it. At present, my only companions are two elderly ladies, sitting abreast one another at a table along the opposite wall, and a man - perhaps a retired farmer - at a table beside one of the large bay windows. I am unable to discern him clearly because the bright morning sunlight has for the moment reduced him to a silhouette. But I can see him studying his newspaper, breaking off regularly to look up at the passers-by on the pavement outside. From the way he does this, I had thought at first that he was waiting for a companion, but it would seem he wishes merely to greet acquaintances as they pass by.

I am myself ensconced almost at the back wall, but even across the distance of this room, I can see clearly out into the sunlit street, and am able to make out on the pavement opposite a signpost pointing out several nearby destinations. One of these destinations is the village of Mursden. Perhaps 'Mursden' will ring a bell for you, as it did for me upon my first spotting it on the road atlas yesterday. In fact, I must say I was even tempted to make a slight detour from my planned route just to see the village. Mursden, Somerset, was where the firm of Giffen and Co. was once situated, and it was to Mursden one was required to dispatch one's order for a supply of Giffen's dark candles of polish, 'to be flaked, mixed into wax and applied by hand'. For some time, Giffen's was undoubtedly the finest silver polish available, and it was only the appearance of new chemical substances on the market shortly before the war that caused demand for this impressive product to decline.

As I remember, Giffen's appeared at the beginning of the twenties, and I am sure I am not alone in closely associating its emergence with that change of mood within our profession - that change which came to push the polishing of silver to the position of central importance it still by and large maintains today. This shift was, I believe, like so many other major shifts around this period, a generational matter; it was during these years that our generation of butlers 'came of age', and figures like Mr Marshall, in particular, played a crucial part in making silver-polishing so central. This is not to suggest, of course, that the polishing of silver - particularly those items that would appear at table - was not always regarded a serious duty. But it would not be unfair to suggest that many butlers of, say, my father's generation did not consider the matter such a key one, and this is evidenced by the fact that in those days, the butler of a household rarely supervised the polishing of silver directly, being content to leave it to, say, the under-butler's whims, carrying out inspections only intermittently. It was Mr Marshall, it is generally agreed, who was the first to recognize the full significance of silver - namely, that no other objects in the house were likely to come under such intimate scrutiny from outsiders as was silver during a meal, and as such, it served as a public index of a house's standards. And Mr Marshall it was who first caused stupefaction amongst ladies and gentlemen visiting Charleville House with displays of silver polished to previously unimagined standards. Very soon, naturally, butlers up and down the country, under pressure from their employers, were focusing their minds on the question of silver-polishing. There quickly sprang up, I recall, various butlers, each claiming to have discovered methods by which they could surpass Mr Marshall - methods they made a great show of keeping secret, as though they were French chefs guarding their recipes. But I am confident - as I was then - that the sorts of elaborate and mysterious processes performed by someone like Mr Jack Neighbours had little or no discernible effect on the end result. As far as I was concerned, it was a simple enough matter: one used good polish, and one supervised closely. Giffen's was the polish ordered by all discerning butlers of the time, and if this product was used correctly, one had no fear of one's silver being second best to anybody's.

I am glad to be able to recall numerous occasions when the silver at Darlington Hall had a pleasing impact upon observers. For instance, I recall Lady Astor remarking, not without a certain bitterness, that our silver 'was probably unrivalled'. I recall also watching Mr George Bernard Shaw, the renowned playwright, at dinner one evening, examining closely the dessert spoon before him, holding it up to the light and comparing its surface to that of a nearby platter, quite oblivious to the company around him. But perhaps the instance I recall with most satisfaction today concerns the night that a certain distinguished personage - a cabinet minister, shortly afterwards to become foreign secretary - paid a very 'off the record' visit to the house. In fact, now that the subsequent fruits of those visits have become well documented, there seems little reason not to reveal that I am talking of Lord Halifax.

As things turned out, that particular visit was simply the first of a whole series of such 'unofficial' meetings between Lord Halifax and the German Ambassador of that time, Herr Ribbentrop. But on that first night, Lord Halifax had arrived in a mood of great wariness; virtually his first words on being shown in were: 'Really, Darlington, I don't know what you've put me up to here. I know I shall be sorry.'

Herr Ribbentrop not being expected for a further hour or so, his lordship had suggested to his guest a tour of Darlington Hall - a strategy which had helped many a nervous visitor to relax. However, as I went about my business, all I could hear for some time was Lord Halifax, in various parts of the building, continuing to express his doubts about the evening ahead, and Lord Darlington trying in vain to reassure him. But then at one point I overheard Lord Halifax exclaiming: 'My goodness, Darlington, the silver in this house is a delight.' I was of course very pleased to hear this at the time, but what was for me the truly satisfying corollary to this episode came two or three days later, when Lord Darlington remarked to me: 'By the way, Stevens, Lord Halifax was jolly impressed with the silver the other night. Put him into a different frame of mind altogether.' These were - I recollect it clearly - his lordship's actual words and so it is not simply my fantasy that the state of the silver had made a small, but significant contribution towards the easing of relations between Lord Halifax and Herr Ribbentrop that evening.

It is probably apt at this point to say a few words concerning Herr Ribbentrop. It is, of course, generally accepted today that Herr Ribbentrop was a trickster: that it was Hitler's plan throughout those years to deceive England for as long as possible concerning his true intentions, and that Herr Ribbentrop's sole mission in our country was to orchestrate this deception. As I say, this is the commonly held view and I do not wish to differ with it here. It is, however, rather irksome to have to hear people talking today as though they were never for a moment taken in by Herr Ribbentrop - as though Lord Darlington was alone in believing Herr Ribbentrop an honourable gentleman and developing a working relationship with him. The truth is that Herr Ribbentrop was, throughout the thirties, a well-regarded figure, even a glamorous one, in the very best houses. Particularly around 1936 and 1937, I can recall all the talk in the servants' hall from visiting staff revolving around 'the German Ambassador', and it was clear from what was said that many of the most distinguished ladies and gentlemen in this country were quite enamoured of him. It is, as I say, irksome to have to hear the way these same people now talk of those times, and in particular, what some have said concerning his lordship. The great hypocrisy of these persons would be instantly obvious to you were you to see just a few of their own guest lists from those days; you would see then not only the extent to which Herr Ribbentrop dined at these same persons' tables, but that he often did so as guest of honour.

And then again, you will hear these same persons talking as though Lord Darlington did something unusual in receiving hospitality from the Nazis on the several trips he made to Germany during those years. I do not suppose they would speak quite so readily if, say, The Times were to publish even one of the guest lists of the banquets given by the Germans around the time of the Nuremberg Rally. The fact is, the most established, respected ladies and gentlemen in England were availing themselves of the hospitality of the German leaders, and I can vouch at first hand that the great majority of these persons were returning with nothing but praise and admiration for their hosts. Anyone who implies that Lord Darlington was liaising covertly with a known enemy is just conveniently forgetting the true climate of those times.

It needs to be said too what salacious nonsense it is to claim that Lord Darlington was anti-Semitic, or that he had close association with organizations like the British Union of Fascists. Such claims can only arise from complete ignorance of the sort of gentleman his lordship was. Lord Darlington came to abhor anti-Semitism; I heard him express his disgust on several separate occasions when confronted with anti-Semitic sentiments. And the allegation that his lordship never allowed Jewish people to enter the house or any Jewish staff to be employed is utterly unfounded - except, perhaps, in respect to one very minor episode in the thirties which has been blown up out of all proportion. And as for the British Union of Fascists, I can only say that any talk linking his lordship to such people is quite ridiculous. Sir Oswald Mosley, the gentleman who led the 'blackshirts', was a visitor at Darlington Hall on, I would say, three occasions at the most, and these visits all took place during the early days of that organization before it had betrayed its true nature. Once the ugliness of the blackshirts' movement became apparent - and let it be said his lordship was quicker than most in noticing it - Lord Darlington had no further association with such people.

In any case, such organizations were a complete irrelevance to the heart of political life in this country. Lord Darlington, you will understand, was the sort of gentleman who cared to occupy himself only with what was at the true centre of things, and the figures he gathered together in his efforts over those years were as far away from such unpleasant fringe groups as one could imagine. Not only were they eminently respectable, these were figures who held real influence in British life: politicians, diplomats, military men, clergy. Indeed, some of the personages were Jewish, and this fact alone should demonstrate how nonsensical is much of what was said about his lordship.

But I drift. I was in fact discussing the silver, and how Lord Halifax had been suitably impressed on the evening of his meeting with Herr Ribbentrop at Darlington Hall. Let me make clear, I was not for a moment suggesting that what had initially threatened to be a disappointing evening for my employer had turned into a triumphant one solely on account of the silver. But then, as I indicated, Lord Darlington himself suggested that the silver might have been at least a small factor in the change in his guest's mood that evening, and it is perhaps not absurd to think back to such instances with a glow of satisfaction.

There are certain members of our profession who would have it that it ultimately makes little difference what sort of employer one serves; who believe that the sort of idealism prevalent amongst our generation - namely the notion that we butlers should aspire to serve those great gentlemen who further the cause of humanity - is just high-flown talk with no grounding in reality. It is of course noticeable that the individuals who express such scepticism invariably turn out to be the most mediocre of our profession - those who know they lack the ability to progress to any position of note and who aspire only to drag as many down to their own level as possible - and one is hardly tempted to take such opinions seriously. But for all that, it is still satisfying to be able to point to instances in one's career that highlight very clearly how wrong such people are. Of course, one seeks to provide a general, sustained service to one's employer, the value of which could never be reduced to a number of specific instances - such as that concerning Lord Halifax. But what I am saying is that it is these sorts of instances which over time come to symbolize an irrefutable fact; namely that one has had the privilege of practising one's profession at the very fulcrum of great affairs. And one has a right, perhaps, to feel a satisfaction those content to serve mediocre employers will never know - the satisfaction of being able to say with some reason that one's efforts, in however modest a way, comprise a contribution to the course of history.

But perhaps one should not be looking back to the past so much. After all, I still have before me many more years of service I am required to give. And not only is Mr Farraday a most excellent employer, he is an American gentleman to whom, surely, one has a special duty to show all that is best about service in England. It is essential, then, to keep one's attention focused on the present; to guard against any complacency creeping in on account of what one may have achieved in the past. For it has to be admitted, over these last few months, things have not been all they might at Darlington Hall. A number of small errors have surfaced of late, including that incident last April relating to the silver. Most fortunately, it was not an occasion on which Mr Farraday had guests, but even so, it was a moment of genuine embarrassment to me.

It had occurred at breakfast one morning, and for his part, Mr Farraday - either through kindness, or because being an American he failed to recognize the extent of the shortcoming - did not utter one word of complaint to me throughout the whole episode. He had, upon seating himself, simply picked up a fork, examined it for a brief second, touching the prongs with a fingertip, then turned his attention to the morning headlines. The whole gesture had been carried out in an absent-minded sort of way, but of course, I had spotted the occurrence and had advanced swiftly to remove the offending item. I may in fact have done so a little too swiftly on account of my disturbance, for Mr Farraday gave a small start, muttering: 'Ah, Stevens.'

I had continued to proceed swiftly out of the room, returning without undue delay bearing a satisfactory fork. As I advanced upon the table - and a Mr Farraday now apparently absorbed in his newspaper - it occurred to me I might slip the fork on to the tablecloth quietly without disturbing my employer's reading. However, the possibility had already occurred to me that Mr Farraday was simply feigning indifference in order to minimize my embarrassment, and such a surreptitious delivery could be interpreted as complacency on my part towards my error - or worse, an attempt to cover it up. This was why, then, I decided it appropriate to put the fork down on to the table with a certain emphasis, causing my employer to start a second time, look up and mutter again: 'Ah, Stevens.'

Errors such as these which have occurred over the last few months have been, naturally enough, injurious to one's self-respect, but then there is no reason to believe them to be the signs of anything more sinister than a staff shortage. Not that a staff shortage is not significant in itself; but if Miss Kenton were indeed to return to Darlington Hall, such little slips, I am sure, would become a thing of the past. Of course, one has to remember there is nothing stated specifically in Miss Kenton's letter - which, incidentally, I reread last night up in my room before putting out the light - to indicate unambiguously her desire to return to her former position. In fact, one has to accept the distinct possibility that one may have previously - perhaps through wishful thinking of a professional kind - exaggerated what evidence there was regarding such a desire on her part. For I must say I was a little surprised last night at how difficult it was actually to point to any passage which clearly demonstrated her wish to return.

But then again, it seems hardly worthwhile to speculate greatly on such matters now when one knows one will, in all likelihood, be talking face to face with Miss Kenton within forty-eight hours. Still, I must say, I did spend some long minutes turning those passages over in my mind last night as I lay there in the darkness, listening to the sounds from below of the landlord and his wife clearing up for the night.

DAY THREE - EVENING

Moscombe, near Tavistock, Devon

I feel I should perhaps return a moment to the question of his lordship's attitude to Jewish persons, since this whole issue of anti-Semitism, I realize, has become a rather sensitive one these days. In particular, let me clear up this matter of a supposed bar against Jewish persons on the staff at Darlington Hall. Since this allegation falls very directly into my own realm, I am able to refute it with absolute authority. There were many Jewish persons on my staff throughout all my years with his lordship, and let me say furthermore that they were never treated in any way differently on account of their race. One really cannot guess the reason for these absurd allegations - unless, quite ludicrously, they originate from that brief, entirely insignificant few weeks in the early thirties when Mrs Carolyn Barnet came to wield an unusual influence over his lordship.

Mrs Barnet, the widow of Mr Charles Barnet, was at that point in her forties - a very handsome, some might say glamorous lady. She had a reputation for being formidably intelligent, and in those days one often tended to hear of how she had humiliated this or that learned gentleman at dinner over some important contemporary issue. For much of the summer of 1932, she was a regular presence at Darlington Hall, she and his lordship often spending hour after hour deep in conversation, typically of a social or political nature. And it was Mrs Barnet, as I recall, who took his lordship on those 'guided inspections' of the poorest areas of London's East End, during which his lordship visited the actual homes of many of the families suffering the desperate plight of those years. That is to say, Mrs Barnet, in all likelihood, made some sort of contribution to Lord

Darlington's developing concern for the poor of our country and as such, her influence cannot be said to have been entirely negative. But she was too, of course, a member of Sir Oswald Mosley's 'blackshirts' organization, and the very little contact his lordship ever had with Sir Oswald occurred during those few weeks of that summer. And it was during those same weeks that those entirely untypical incidents took place at Darlington Hall which must, one supposes, have provided what flimsy basis exists for these absurd allegations.

I call them 'incidents' but some of these were extremely minor. For instance, I recall overhearing at dinner one evening, when a particular newspaper had been mentioned, his lordship remarking: 'Oh, you mean that Jewish propaganda sheet.' And then on another occasion around that time, I remember his instructing me to cease giving donations to a particular local charity which regularly came to the door on the grounds that the management committee was 'more or less homogeneously Jewish'. I have remembered these remarks because they truly surprised me at the time, his lordship never previously having shown any antagonism whatsoever towards the Jewish race.

Then, of course, came that afternoon his lordship called me into his study. Initially, he made rather general conversation, inquiring if all was well around the house and so on. Then he said:

'I've been doing a great deal of thinking, Stevens. A great deal of thinking. And I've reached my conclusion. We cannot have Jews on the staff here at Darlington Hall.'

'Sir?'

'It's for the good of this house, Stevens. In the interests of the guests we have staying here. I've looked into this carefully, Stevens, and I'm letting you know my conclusion.'

‘Very well, sir.’

‘Tell me, Stevens, we have a few on the staff at the moment, don’t we? Jews, I mean.’

‘I believe two of the present staff members would fall into that category, sir.’

‘Ah.’ His lordship paused for a moment, staring out of his window. ‘Of course, you’ll have to let them go.’

‘I beg your pardon, sir?’

‘It’s regrettable, Stevens, but we have no choice. There’s the safety and well-being of my guests to consider. Let me assure you, I’ve looked into this matter and thought it through thoroughly. It’s all in our best interests.’

The two staff members concerned were, in fact, both housemaids. It would hardly have been proper, then, to have taken any action without first informing Miss Kenton of the situation, and I resolved to do just this that same evening when I met her for cocoa in her parlour. I should perhaps say a few words here concerning these meetings in her parlour at the end of each day. These were, let me say, overwhelmingly professional in tone – though naturally we might discuss some informal topics from time to time. Our reason for instituting such meetings was simple: we had found that our respective lives were often so busy, several days could go by without our having an opportunity to exchange even the most basic of information. Such a situation, we recognized, seriously jeopardized the smooth running of operations, and to spend fifteen minutes or so together at the end of the day in the privacy of Miss Kenton’s parlour was the most straightforward remedy. I must reiterate, these meetings were predominantly professional in character; that is to say, for instance, we might talk over the plans for a forthcoming event, or else discuss how a new recruit was settling in.

In any case, to return to my thread, you will appreciate I was not unperturbed at the prospect of telling Miss Kenton

I was about to dismiss two of her maids. Indeed, the maids had been perfectly satisfactory employees and - I may as well say this since the Jewish issue has become so sensitive of late - my every instinct opposed the idea of their dismissal. Nevertheless, my duty in this instance was quite clear, and as I saw it, there was nothing to be gained at all in irresponsibly displaying such personal doubts. It was a difficult task, but as such, one that demanded to be carried out with dignity. And so it was that when I finally raised the matter towards the end of our conversation that evening, I did so in as concise and businesslike a way as possible, concluding with the words:

‘I will speak to the two employees in my pantry tomorrow morning at ten thirty. I would be grateful then, Miss Kenton, if you would send them along. I leave it entirely to yourself whether or not you inform them beforehand as to the nature of what I am going to say to them.’

At this point, Miss Kenton seemed to have nothing to say in response. So I continued: ‘Well, Miss Kenton, thank you for the cocoa. It’s high time I was turning in. Another busy day tomorrow.’

It was then Miss Kenton said: ‘Mr Stevens, I cannot quite believe my ears. Ruth and Sarah have been members of my staff for over six years now. I trust them absolutely and indeed they trust me. They have served this house excellently.’

‘I am sure that is so, Miss Kenton. However, we must not allow sentiment to creep into our judgement. Now really, I must bid you good night ...’

‘Mr Stevens, I am outraged that you can sit there and utter what you have just done as though you were discussing orders for the larder. I simply cannot believe it. You are saying Ruth and Sarah are to be dismissed on the grounds that they are Jewish?’

‘Miss Kenton, I have just this moment explained the situation to you fully. His lordship has made his decision and there is nothing for you and I to debate over.’

‘Does it not occur to you, Mr Stevens, that to dismiss Ruth and Sarah on these grounds would be simply - wrong? I will not stand for such things. I will not work in a house in which such things can occur.’

‘Miss Kenton, I will ask you not to excite yourself and to conduct yourself in a manner befitting your position. This is a very straightforward matter. If his lordship wishes these particular contracts to be discontinued, then there is little more to be said.’

‘I am warning you, Mr Stevens, I will not continue to work in such a house. If my girls are dismissed, I will leave also.’

‘Miss Kenton, I am surprised to find you reacting in this manner. Surely I don’t have to remind you that our professional duty is not to our own foibles and sentiments, but to the wishes of our employer.’

‘I am telling you, Mr Stevens, if you dismiss my girls tomorrow, it will be wrong, a sin as any sin ever was one and I will not continue to work in such a house.’

‘Miss Kenton, let me suggest to you that you are hardly well placed to be passing judgements of such a high and mighty nature. The fact is, the world of today is a very complicated and treacherous place. There are many things you and I are simply not in a position to understand concerning, say, the nature of Jewry. Whereas his lordship, I might venture, is somewhat better placed to judge what is for the best. Now, Miss Kenton, I really must retire. I thank you again for the cocoa. Ten thirty tomorrow morning. Send the two employees concerned, please.’

It was evident from the moment the two maids stepped into my pantry the following morning that Miss Kenton had already spoken to them, for they both came in sobbing. I explained the situation to them as briefly as possible, underlining that their work had been satisfactory and that they would, accordingly, receive good references. As I recall, neither of them said anything of note throughout the whole interview, which lasted perhaps three or four minutes, and they left sobbing just as they had arrived.

Miss Kenton was extremely cold towards me for some days following the dismissal of the employees. Indeed, at times she was quite rude to me, even in the presence of staff. And although we continued our habit of meeting for cocoa in the evening, the sessions tended to be brief and unfriendly. When there had been no sign of her behaviour abating after a fortnight or so, I think you will understand that I started to become a little impatient. I thus said to her during one of our cocoa sessions, in an ironic tone of voice:

‘Miss Kenton, I’d rather expected you to have handed in your notice by now,’ accompanying this with a light laugh. I did, I suppose, hope that she might finally relent a little and make some conciliatory response or other, allowing us once and for all to put the whole episode behind us. Miss Kenton, however, simply looked at me sternly and said:

‘I still have every intention of handing in my notice, Mr Stevens. It is merely that I have been so busy, I have not had time to see to the matter.’

This did, I must admit, make me a little concerned for a time that she was serious about her threat. But then as week followed week, it became clear that there was no question of her leaving Darlington Hall, and as the atmosphere between us gradually thawed, I suppose I tended to tease her every now and again by reminding her of her threatened resignation. For instance, if we were discussing some future large occasion to be held at the house, I might put in: ‘That is, Miss Kenton, assuming you are still with us at that stage.’ Even months after the event, such remarks still tended to make Miss Kenton go quiet - though by this stage, I fancy, this was due more to embarrassment than anger.

Eventually, of course, the matter came to be, by and large, forgotten. But I remember it coming up one last time well over a year after the dismissal of the two maids.

It was his lordship who initially revived the matter one afternoon when I was serving his tea in the drawing room. By then, Mrs Carolyn Barnett's days of influence over his lordship were well over - indeed, the lady had ceased to be a visitor at Darlington Hall altogether. It is worth pointing out, furthermore, that his lordship had by that time severed all links with the 'blackshirts', having witnessed the true, ugly nature of that organization.

'Oh, Stevens,' he said to me. 'I've been meaning to say to you. About that business last year. About the Jewish maids. You recall the matter?'

'Indeed, sir.'

'I suppose there's no way of tracing them now, is there? It was wrong what happened and one would like to recompense them somehow.'

'I will certainly look into the matter, sir. But I am not at all certain it will be possible to ascertain their whereabouts at this stage.'

'See what you can do. It was wrong, what occurred.'

I assumed this exchange with his lordship would be of some interest to Miss Kenton, and I decided it only proper to mention it to her - even at the risk of getting her angry again. As it turned out, my doing so on that foggy afternoon I encountered her in the summerhouse produced curious results.

I recall a mist starting to set in as I crossed the lawn that afternoon. I was making my way up to the summerhouse for the purpose of clearing away the remains of his lordship's tea there with some guests a little while earlier. I can recall spotting from some distance - long before reaching the steps where my father had once fallen - Miss Kenton's figure moving about inside the summerhouse. When I entered she had seated herself on one of the wicker chairs scattered around its interior, evidently engaged in some needlework. On closer inspection, I saw she was performing repairs to a cushion. I went about gathering up the various items of crockery from amidst the plants and the cane furniture, and as I did so, I believe we exchanged a few pleasantries, perhaps discussed one or two professional matters. For the truth was, it was extremely refreshing to be out in the summerhouse after many continuous days in the main building and neither of us was inclined to hurry with our tasks. Indeed, although one could not see out far that day on account of the encroaching mist, and the daylight too was rapidly fading by this stage, obliging Miss Kenton to hold her needlework up to the last of it, I remember our often breaking off from our respective activities simply to gaze out at the views around us. In fact, I was looking out over the lawn to where the mist was thickening down around the poplar trees planted along the cart-track, when I finally introduced the topic of the previous year's dismissals. Perhaps a little predictably, I did so by saying:

‘I was just thinking earlier, Miss Kenton. It's rather funny to remember now, but you know, only this time a year ago, you were still insisting you were going to resign. It rather amused me to think of it.’ I gave a laugh, but behind me Miss Kenton remained silent. When I finally turned to look at her, she was gazing through the glass at the great expanse of fog outside.

‘You probably have no idea, Mr Stevens,’ she said eventually, ‘how seriously I really thought of leaving this house. I felt so strongly about what happened. Had I been anyone worthy of any respect at all, I dare say I would have left Darlington Hall long ago.’ She paused for a while, and

I turned my gaze back out to the poplar trees down in the distance. Then she continued in a tired voice: 'It was cowardice, Mr Stevens. Simple cowardice. Where could I have gone? I have no family. Only my aunt. I love her dearly, but I can't live with her for a day without feeling my whole life is wasting away. I did tell myself, of course, I would soon find myself some new situation. But I was so frightened, Mr Stevens. Whenever I thought of leaving, I just saw myself going out there and finding nobody who knew or cared about me. There, that's all my high principles amount to. I feel so ashamed of myself. But I just couldn't leave, Mr Stevens, I just couldn't bring myself to leave.'

Miss Kenton paused again and seemed to be deep in thought. I thus thought it opportune to relate at this point, as precisely as possible, what had taken place earlier between myself and Lord Darlington. I proceeded to do so and concluded by saying:

'What's done can hardly be undone. But it is at least a great comfort to hear his lordship declare so unequivocally that it was all a terrible misunderstanding. I just thought you'd like to know, Miss Kenton, since I recall you were as distressed by the episode as I was.'

'I'm sorry, Mr Stevens,' Miss Kenton said behind me in an entirely new voice, as though she had just been jolted from a dream, 'I don't understand you.' Then as I turned to her, she went on: 'As I recall, you thought it was only right and proper that Ruth and Sarah be sent packing. You were positively cheerful about it.'

'Now really, Miss Kenton, that is quite incorrect and unfair. The whole matter caused me great concern, great concern indeed. It is hardly the sort of thing I like to see happen in this house.'

'Then why, Mr Stevens, did you not tell me so at the time?'

I gave a laugh, but for a moment was rather at a loss for an answer. Before I could formulate one, Miss Kenton put down her sewing and said:

‘Do you realize, Mr Stevens, how much it would have meant to me if you had thought to share your feelings last year? You knew how upset I was when my girls were dismissed. Do you realize how much it would have helped me? Why, Mr Stevens, why, why, why do you always have to pretend?’

I gave another laugh at the ridiculous turn the conversation had suddenly taken. ‘Really, Miss Kenton,’ I said, ‘I’m not sure I know what you mean. Pretend? Why, really ...’

‘I suffered so much over Ruth and Sarah leaving us. And I suffered all the more because I believed I was alone.’

‘Really, Miss Kenton ...’ I picked up the tray on which I had gathered together the used crockery. ‘Naturally, one disapproved of the dismissals. One would have thought that quite self-evident.’

She did not say anything, and as I was leaving I glanced back towards her. She was again gazing out at the view, but it had by this point grown so dark inside the summerhouse, all I could see of her was her profile outlined against a pale and empty background. I excused myself and proceeded to make my exit.

Now that I have recalled this episode of the dismissing of the Jewish employees, I am reminded of what could, I suppose, be called a curious corollary to that whole affair: namely, the arrival of the housemaid called Lisa. That is to say, we were obliged to find replacements for the two dismissed Jewish maids, and this Lisa turned out to be one of them.

This young woman had applied for the vacancy with the most dubious of references, which spelt out to any experienced butler that she had left her previous situation under something of a cloud. Moreover, when Miss Kenton and I questioned her, it became clear that she had never remained in any position for longer than a few weeks. In general, her whole attitude suggested to me that she was quite unsuitable for employment at Darlington Hall. To my surprise, however, once we had finished interviewing the girl, Miss Kenton began to insist we take her on. 'I see much potential in this girl,' she continued to say in the face of my protests.

'She will be directly under my supervision and I will see to it she proves good.'

I recall we became locked in disagreement for some time, and it was perhaps only the fact that the matter of the dismissed maids was so recent in our minds that I did not hold out as strongly as I might against Miss Kenton. In any case, the result was that I finally gave way, albeit by saying:

'Miss Kenton, I hope you realize that the responsibility for taking on this girl rests squarely with yourself. There is no doubt as far as I am concerned that at this present moment she is far from adequate to be a member of our staff. I am only allowing her to join on the understanding that you will personally oversee her development.'

'The girl will turn out well, Mr Stevens. You will see.'

And to my astonishment, during the weeks that followed, the young girl did indeed make progress at a remarkable rate. Her attitude seemed to improve by the day, and even her manner of walking and going about tasks - which during the first days had been so slovenly that one had to avert one's eyes - improved dramatically.

As the weeks went on, and the girl appeared miraculously to have been transformed into a useful member of staff, Miss Kenton's triumph was obvious. She seemed to take particular pleasure in assigning Lisa some task or other that required a little extra responsibility, and if I were watching, she would be sure to try and catch my eye with her rather mocking expression. And the exchange we had that night in Miss Kenton's parlour over cocoa was fairly typical of the sort of conversation we tended to have on the topic of Lisa.

'No doubt, Mr Stevens,' she said to me, 'you will be extremely disappointed to hear Lisa has still not made any real mistake worth speaking of.'

'I'm not disappointed at all, Miss Kenton. I'm very pleased for you and for all of us. I will admit, you have had some modest success regarding the girl thus far.'

'Modest success! And look at that smile on your face, Mr Stevens. It always appears when I mention Lisa. That tells an interesting story in itself. A very interesting story indeed.'

'Oh, really, Miss Kenton. And may I ask what exactly?'

'It is very interesting, Mr Stevens. Very interesting you should have been so pessimistic about her. Because Lisa is a pretty girl, no doubt about it. And I've noticed you have a curious aversion to pretty girls being on the staff.'

'You know perfectly well you are talking nonsense, Miss Kenton.'

'Ah, but I've noticed it, Mr Stevens. You do not like pretty girls to be on the staff. Might it be that our Mr Stevens fears distraction? Can it be that our Mr Stevens is flesh and blood after all and cannot fully trust himself?'

'Really, Miss Kenton. If I thought there was one modicum of sense in what you are saying I might bother to engage with you in this discussion. As it is, I think I shall simply place my thoughts elsewhere while you chatter away.'

'Ah, but then why is that guilty smile still on your face, Mr Stevens?'

‘It is not a guilty smile at all, Miss Kenton. I am slightly amused by your astonishing capacity to talk nonsense, that is all.’

‘It is a guilty little smile you have on, Mr Stevens. And I’ve noticed how you can hardly bear to look at Lisa. Now it is beginning to become very clear why you objected so strongly to her.’

‘My objections were extremely solid, Miss Kenton, as you very well know. The girl was completely unsuitable when she first came to us.’

Now of course, you must understand we would never have carried on in such a vein within the hearing of staff members. But just around that time, our cocoa evenings, while maintaining their essentially professional character, often tended to allow room for a little harmless talk of this sort - which did much, one should say, to relieve the many tensions produced by a hard day.

Lisa had been with us for some eight or nine months - and I had largely forgotten her existence by this point - when she vanished from the house together with the second footman. Now, of course, such things are simply part and parcel of life for any butler of a large household. They are intensely irritating, but one learns to accept them. In fact, as far as these sorts of ‘moonlight’ departures were concerned, this was among the more civilized. Aside from a little food, the couple had taken nothing that belonged to the house, and furthermore, both parties had left letters. The second footman, whose name I no longer recall, left a short note addressed to me, saying something like: ‘Please do not judge us too harshly. We are in love and are going to be married.’ Lisa had written a much longer note addressed to ‘the Housekeeper’, and it was this letter Miss Kenton brought into my pantry on the morning following their disappearance. There were, as I recall, many misspelt, ill-formed sentences about how much in love the couple were, how wonderful the second footman was, and how marvellous the future was that awaited them both. One line, as I recall it, read something to the effect of: 'We don't have money but who cares we have love and who wants anything else we've got one another that's all anyone can ever want.' Despite the letter being three pages long, there was no mention of any gratitude towards Miss Kenton for the great care she had given the girl, nor was there any note of regret at letting all of us down.

Miss Kenton was noticeably upset. All the while I was running my eye over the young woman's letter, she sat there at the table before me, looking down at her hands. In fact - and this strikes one as rather curious - I cannot really recall seeing her more bereft than on that morning. When I put the letter down on the table, she said:

'So, Mr Stevens, it seems you were right and I was wrong.'

'Miss Kenton, this is nothing to upset yourself over,' I said. 'These things happen. There really is little the likes of us can ever do to prevent these things.'

'I was at fault, Mr Stevens. I accept it. You were right all along, as ever, and I was wrong.'

'Miss Kenton, I really cannot agree with you. You did wonders with that girl. What you managed with her proved many times over that it was in fact I who was in error. Really, Miss Kenton, what has happened now might have happened with any employee. You did remarkably well with her. You may have every reason to feel let down by her, but no reason at all to feel any responsibility on your own part.'

Miss Kenton continued to look very dejected. She said quietly: 'You're very kind to say so, Mr Stevens. I'm very grateful.' Then she sighed tiredly and said: 'She's so foolish. She might have had a real career in front of her.'

She had ability. So many young women like her throw away their chances, and all for what?'

We both looked at the notepaper on the table between us, and then Miss Kenton turned her gaze away with an air of annoyance.

'Indeed,' I said. 'Such a waste, as you say.'

'So foolish. And the girl is bound to be let down. And she had a good life ahead of her if only she'd persevered. In a year or two, I could have had her ready to take on a housekeeper's post in some small residence. Perhaps you think that farfetched, Mr Stevens, but then look how far I came with her in a few months. And now she's thrown it all away. All for nothing.'

'It really is most foolish of her.'

I had started to gather up the sheets of notepaper before me, thinking I might file them away for reference. But then as I was doing so, I became a little uncertain as to whether Miss Kenton had intended me to keep the letter, or if she herself wished to do so, and I placed the pages back down on the table between the two of us. Miss Kenton, in any case, seemed far away.

'She's bound to be let down,' she said again. 'So foolish.'

But I see I have become somewhat lost in these old memories. This had never been my intention, but then it is probably no bad thing if in doing so I have at least avoided becoming unduly preoccupied with the events of this evening - which I trust have now finally concluded themselves. For these last few hours, it must be said, have been rather trying ones.

I find myself now in the attic room of this small cottage belonging to Mr and Mrs Taylor. That is to say, this is a private residence; this room, made so kindly available to me tonight by the Taylors, was once occupied by their eldest son, now long grown and living in Exeter. It is a room dominated by heavy beams and rafters, and the floorboards have no carpet or rug to cover them, and yet the atmosphere is surprisingly cosy. And it is clear Mrs Taylor has not only made up the bed for me, she has also tidied and cleaned; for aside from a few cobwebs near the rafters, there is little to reveal that this room has been unoccupied for many years. As for Mr and Mrs Taylor themselves, I have ascertained that they ran the village green grocery here from the twenties until their retirement three years ago. They are kind people, and though I have on more than one occasion tonight offered remuneration for their hospitality, they will not hear of it.

The fact that I am now here, the fact I came to be to all intents and purposes at the mercy of Mr and Mrs Taylor's generosity on this night, is attributable to one foolish, infuriatingly simple oversight: namely, I allowed the Ford to run out of petrol. What with this and the trouble yesterday concerning the lack of water in the radiator, it would not be unreasonable for an observer to believe such general disorganization endemic to my nature. It may be pointed out, of course, that as far as long-distance motoring is concerned, I am something of a novice, and such simple oversights are only to be expected. And yet, when one remembers that good organization and foresight are qualities that lie at the very heart of one's profession, it is hard to avoid the feeling that one has, somehow, let oneself down again.

But it is true, I had been considerably distracted during the last hour or so of motoring prior to the petrol running out. I had planned to lodge the night in the town of Tavistock, where I arrived a little before eight o'clock. At the town's main inn, however, I was informed all the rooms were occupied on account of a local agricultural fair. Several other establishments were suggested to me, but though I called at each, I was met every time with the same apology. Finally, at a boarding house on the edge of the town, the landlady suggested I motor on several miles to a roadside inn run by a relative of hers - which, she assured me, was bound to have vacancies, being too far out of Tavistock to be affected by the fair.

She had given me thorough directions, which had seemed clear enough at the time, and it is impossible to say now whose fault it was that I subsequently failed to find any trace of this roadside establishment. Instead, after fifteen minutes or so of motoring, I found myself out on a long road curving across bleak, open moorland. On either side of me were what appeared to be fields of marsh, and a mist was rolling across my path. To my left, I could see the last glow of the sunset. The skyline was broken here and there by the shapes of barns and farmhouses some way away over the fields, but otherwise, I appeared to have left behind all signs of community.

I recall turning the Ford round at about this stage and doubling back some distance in search of a turning I had passed earlier. But when I found it, this new road proved, if anything, more desolate than the one I had left. For a time, I drove in near-darkness between high hedges, then found the road beginning to climb steeply. I had by now given up hope of finding the roadside inn and had set my mind on motoring on till I reached the next town or village and seeking shelter there. It would be easy enough, so I was reasoning to myself, to resume my planned route first thing in the morning. It was at this point, half-way up the hill road, that the engine stuttered and I noticed for the first time that my petrol was gone.

The Ford continued its climb for several more yards, then came to a halt. When I got out to assess my situation, I could see I had only a few more minutes of daylight left to me. I was standing on a steep road bound in by trees and hedgerows; much further up the hill, I could see a break in the hedges where a wide barred gate stood outlined against the sky. I began to make my way up to it, supposing that a view from this gate would give me some sense of my bearings; perhaps I had even hoped to see a farmhouse near by where I could gain prompt assistance. I was a little disconcerted then by what eventually greeted my eyes. On the other side of the gate a field sloped down very steeply so that it fell out of vision only twenty yards or so in front of me. Beyond the crest of the field, some way off in the distance - perhaps a good mile or so as the crow would fly - was a small village. I could make out through the mist a church steeple, and around about it, clusters of dark-slatted roofs; here and there, wisps of white smoke were rising from chimneys. One has to confess, at that moment, to being overcome by a certain sense of discouragement. Of course, the situation was not by any means hopeless; the Ford was not damaged, simply out of fuel. A walk down to the village could be accomplished in a half-hour or so and there I could surely find accommodation and a can of petrol. And yet it was not a happy feeling to be up there on a lonely hill, looking over a gate at the lights coming on in a distant village, the daylight all but faded, and the mist growing ever thicker.

There was little to be gained in growing despondent, however. In any case, it would have been foolish to waste the few remaining minutes of daylight. I walked back down to the Ford where I packed a briefcase with some essential items. Then, arming myself with a bicycle lamp, which cast a surprisingly good beam, I went in search of a path by which I could descend to the village. But no such path offered itself, though I went some distance up the hill, a good way past my gate. Then when I sensed that the road had ceased to climb, but was beginning to curve slowly down in a direction away from the village - the lights of which I could glimpse regularly through the foliage - I was overcome again by a sense of discouragement. In fact, for a moment I wondered if my best strategy would not be to retrace my steps to the Ford and simply sit in it until another motorist came by. By then, however, it was very close to being dark, and I could see that if one were to attempt to hail a passing vehicle in these circumstances, one might easily be taken for a highwayman or some such. Besides, not a single vehicle had passed since I had got out of the Ford; in fact, I could not really remember having seen another vehicle at all since leaving Tavistock. I resolved then to return as far as the gate, and from there, descend the field, walking in as direct a line as possible towards the lights of the village, regardless of whether or not there was a proper path.

It was not, in the end, too arduous a descent. A series of grazing fields, one after the next, led the way down to the village and by keeping close to the edge of each field as one descended, one could be ensured of reasonable walking. Only once, with the village very close, could I find no obvious way to gain access to the next field down, and I had to shine my bicycle lamp to and fro along the hedgerow obstructing me. Eventually, I discovered a small gap through which I proceeded to squeeze my person, but only at some cost to the shoulder of my jacket and the turn-ups of my trousers. The last few fields, furthermore, became increasingly muddy and I deliberately refrained from shining my lamp on to my shoes and turn-ups for fear of further discouragement.

By and by I found myself on a paved path going down into the village, and it was while descending this path that I met Mr Taylor, my kind host of this evening. He had emerged out of a turning a few yards in front of me, and had courteously waited for me to catch up, whereupon he had touched his cap and asked if he could be of any assistance to me. I had explained my position as succinctly as possible, adding that I would be most gratified to be guided towards a good inn. At this, Mr Taylor had shaken his head, saying: 'I'm afraid there's no inn as such in our village, sir. John Humphreys usually takes in travellers at the Crossed Keys, but he's having work done to the roof at the moment.' Before this distressing piece of information could have its full effect, however, Mr Taylor said: 'If you didn't mind roughing it a little, sir, we could offer you a room and a bed for the night. It's nothing special, but the wife will see to it everything's clean and comfortable enough in a basic sort of way. '

I believe I uttered some words, perhaps in a rather half-hearted way, to the effect that I could not inconvenience them to such an extent. To which Mr Taylor had said: 'I tell you, sir, it would be an honour to have you. It's not often we get the likes of yourself passing through Moscombe. And quite honestly, sir, I don't know what else you could do at this hour. The wife would never forgive me if I were to let you away into the night. '

Thus it was that I came to accept the kind hospitality of Mr and Mrs Taylor. But when I spoke earlier of this evening's events being 'trying', I was not referring simply to the frustrations of running out of petrol and of having to make such an uncouth journey down into the village. For what occurred subsequently - what unfolded once I sat down to supper with Mr and Mrs Taylor and their neighbours - proved in its own way far more taxing on one's resources than the essentially physical discomforts I had faced earlier. It was, I can assure you, a relief indeed to be able at last to come up to this room and to spend some moments turning over these memories of Darlington Hall from all those years ago.

The fact is, I have tended increasingly of late to indulge myself in such recollections. And ever since the prospect of seeing Miss Kenton again first arose some weeks ago, I suppose I have tended to spend much time pondering just why it was our relationship underwent such a change. For change it certainly did, around 1935 or 1936, after many years in which we had steadily achieved a fine professional understanding. In fact, by the end, we had even abandoned our routine of meeting over a cup of cocoa at the end of each day. But as to what really caused such changes, just what particular chain of events was really responsible, I have never quite been able to decide.

In thinking about this recently, it seems possible that that odd incident the evening Miss Kenton came into my pantry uninvited may have marked a crucial turning point. Why it was she came to my pantry I cannot remember with certainty. I have a feeling she may have come bearing a vase of flowers 'to brighten things up', but then again, I may be getting confused with the time she attempted the same thing years earlier at the start of our acquaintanceship. I know for a fact she tried to introduce flowers to my pantry on at least three occasions over the years, but perhaps I am confused in believing this to have been what brought her that particular evening. I might emphasize, in any case, that notwithstanding our years of good working relations, I had never allowed the situation to slip to one in which the housekeeper was coming and going from my pantry all day. The butler's pantry, as far as I am concerned, is a crucial office, the heart of the house's operations, not unlike a general's headquarters during a battle, and it is imperative that all things in it are ordered - and left ordered - in precisely the way I wish them to be. I have never been that sort of butler who allows all sorts of people to wander in and out with their queries and grumbles. If operations are to be conducted in a smoothly co-ordinated way, it is surely obvious that the butler's pantry must be the one place in the house where privacy and solitude are guaranteed.

As it happened, when she entered my pantry that evening, I was not in fact engaged in professional matters. That is to say, it was towards the end of the day during a quiet week and I had been enjoying a rare hour or so off duty. As I say, I am not certain if Miss Kenton entered with her vase of flowers, but I certainly do recall her saying:

'Mr Stevens, your room looks even less accommodating at night than it does in the day. The electric bulb is too dim, surely, for you to be reading by.'

'It is perfectly adequate, thank you, Miss Kenton.'

‘Really, Mr Stevens, this room resembles a prison cell. All one needs is a small bed in the corner and one could well imagine condemned men spending their last hours here.’

Perhaps I said something to this, I do not know. In any case, I did not look up from my reading, and a few moments passed during which I waited for Miss Kenton to excuse herself and leave. But then I heard her say:

‘Now I wonder what it could be you are reading there, Mr Stevens.’

‘Simply a book, Miss Kenton.’

‘I can see that, Mr Stevens. But what sort of book – that is what interests me.’

I looked up to see Miss Kenton advancing towards me. I shut the book, and clutching it to my person, rose to my feet.

‘Really, Miss Kenton,’ I said, ‘I must ask you to respect my privacy.’

‘But why are you so shy about your book, Mr Stevens? I rather suspect it may be something rather racy.’

‘It is quite out of the question, Miss Kenton, that anything “racy”, as you put it, should be found on his lordship’s shelves.’

‘I have heard it said that many learned books contain the most racy of passages, but I have never had the nerve to look. Now, Mr Stevens, do please allow me to see what it is you are reading.’

‘Miss Kenton, I must ask you to leave me alone. It is quite impossible that you should persist in pursuing me like this during the very few moments of spare time I have to myself.’

But Miss Kenton was continuing to advance and I must say it was a little difficult to assess what my best course of action would be. I was tempted to thrust the book into the drawer of my desk and lock it, but this seemed absurdly dramatic. I took a few paces back, the book still held to my chest.

‘Please show me the volume you are holding, Mr Stevens,’ Miss Kenton said, continuing her advance, ‘and I will leave you to the pleasures of your reading. What on earth can it be you are so anxious to hide?’

‘Miss Kenton, whether or not you discover the title of this volume is in itself not of the slightest importance to me. But as a matter of principle, I object to your appearing like this and invading my private moments.’

‘I wonder, is it a perfectly respectable volume, Mr Stevens, or are you in fact protecting me from its shocking influences?’

Then she was standing before me, and suddenly the atmosphere underwent a peculiar change – almost as though the two of us had been suddenly thrust on to some other plane of being altogether. I am afraid it is not easy to describe clearly what I mean here. All I can say is that everything around us suddenly became very still; it was my impression that Miss Kenton’s manner also underwent a sudden change; there was a strange seriousness in her expression, and it struck me she seemed almost frightened.

‘Please, Mr Stevens, let me see your book.’

She reached forward and began gently to release the volume from my grasp. I judged it best to look away while she did so, but with her person positioned so closely, this could only be achieved by my twisting my head away at a somewhat unnatural angle. Miss Kenton continued very gently to prise the book away, practically one finger at a time. The process seemed to take a very long time – throughout which I managed to maintain my posture – until I finally heard her say:

‘Good gracious, Mr Stevens, it isn’t anything so scandalous at all. Simply a sentimental love story.’

I believe it was around this point that I decided there was no need to tolerate any more. I cannot recall precisely what I said, but I remember showing Miss Kenton out of my pantry quite firmly and the episode was thus brought to a close.

I suppose I should add a few words here concerning the matter of the actual volume around which this small episode revolved. The book was, true enough, what might be described as a ‘sentimental romance’ - one of a number kept in the library, and also in several of the guest bedrooms, for the entertainment of lady visitors. There was a simple reason for my having taken to perusing such works; it was an extremely efficient way to maintain and develop one’s command of the English language. It is my view - I do not know if you will agree - that in so far as our generation is concerned, there has been too much stress placed on the professional desirability of good accent and command of language; that is to say, these elements have been stressed sometimes at the cost of more important professional qualities. For all that, it has never been my position that good accent and command of language are not attractive attributes, and I always considered it my duty to develop them as best I could. One straightforward means of going about this is simply to read a few pages of a well-written book during odd spare moments one may have. This had been my own policy for some years, and I often tended to choose the sort of volume Miss Kenton had found me reading that evening simply because such works tend to be written in good English, with plenty of elegant dialogue of much practical value to me. A weightier book - a scholarly study, say - while it might have been more generally improving would have tended to be couched in terms likely to be of more limited use in the course of one’s normal intercourse with ladies and gentlemen.

I rarely had the time or the desire to read any of these romances cover to cover, but so far as I could tell, their plots were invariably absurd - indeed, sentimental - and I would not have wasted one moment on them were it not for these aforementioned benefits. Having said that, however, I do not mind confessing today - and I see nothing to be ashamed of in this - that I did at times gain a sort of incidental enjoyment from these stories. I did not perhaps acknowledge this to myself at the time, but as I say, what shame is there in it? Why should one not enjoy in a light-hearted sort of way stories of ladies and gentlemen who fall in love and express their feelings for each other, often in the most elegant phrases?

But when I say this, I do not mean to imply the stance I took over the matter of the book that evening was somehow unwarranted. For you must understand, there was an important principle at issue. The fact was, I had been 'off duty' at that moment Miss Kenton had come marching into my pantry. And of course, any butler who regards his vocation with pride, any butler who aspires at all to a 'dignity in keeping with his position', as the Hayes Society once put it, should never allow himself to be 'off duty' in the presence of others. It really was immaterial whether it was Miss Kenton or a complete stranger who had walked in at that moment. A butler of any quality must be seen to inhabit his role, utterly and fully; he cannot be seen casting it aside one moment simply to don it again the next as though it were nothing more than a pantomime costume. There is one situation and one situation only in which a butler who cares about his dignity may feel free to unburden himself of his role; that is to say, when he is entirely alone. You will appreciate then that in the event of Miss Kenton bursting in at a time when I had presumed, not unreasonably, that I was to be alone, it came to be a crucial matter of principle, a matter indeed of dignity, that I did not appear in anything less than my full and proper role.

However, it had not been my intention to analyse here the various facets of this small episode from years ago. The main point about it was that it alerted me to the fact that things between Miss Kenton and myself had reached - no doubt after a gradual process of many months - an inappropriate footing. The fact that she could behave as she had done that evening was rather alarming, and after I had seen her out of my pantry, and had had a chance to gather my thoughts a little, I recall resolving to set about re-establishing our professional relationship on a more proper basis. But as to just how much that incident contributed to the large changes our relationship subsequently underwent, it is very difficult now to say. There may well have been other more fundamental developments to account for what took place. Such as, for instance, the matter of Miss Kenton's days off.

From the time she arrived at Darlington Hall right up until perhaps a month or so before that incident in my pantry, Miss Kenton's days off had followed a predictable pattern. She would, once every six weeks, take two days off to visit her aunt in Southampton; otherwise, following my own example, she would not really take days off as such unless we were going through a particularly quiet time, in which case she might spend a day strolling around the grounds and doing a little reading in her parlour. But then, as I say, the pattern changed. She began suddenly to take full advantage of her contracted time off, disappearing regularly from the house from early in the morning, leaving no information other than the hour she might be expected back that night. Of course, she never took more time than her entitlement, and thus I felt it improper to inquire further concerning these outings of hers. But I suppose this change did perturb me somewhat, for I remember mentioning it to Mr Graham, valet-butler to Sir James Chambers - a good colleague who, incidentally, I seem now to have lost touch with - as we sat talking by the fire one night during one of his regular visits to Darlington Hall.

In fact, all I had said was something to the effect that the housekeeper had been 'a little moody of late' and so had been rather surprised when Mr Graham nodded, leaned towards me and said knowingly:

'I' d been wondering how much longer it would be.'

When I asked him what he meant, Mr Graham went on: 'Your Miss Kenton. I believe she's now what? Thirty-three? Thirty-four? Missed out on the best of her mothering years, but it's not too late yet.'

'Miss Kenton', I assured him, 'is a devoted professional. I happen to know for a fact that she has no wish for a family.'

But Mr Graham had smiled and shook his head, saying: 'Never believe a housekeeper who tells you she doesn't want a family. Indeed, Mr Stevens, I should think you and I could sit here now and count up at least a dozen between us that once said as much, then got married and left the profession.'

I recall I dismissed Mr Graham's theory with some confidence that evening, but thereafter, I must admit, I found it hard to keep out of my mind the possibility that the purpose of these mysterious outings of Miss Kenton was to meet a suitor. This was indeed a disturbing notion, for it was not hard to see that Miss Kenton's departure would constitute a professional loss of some magnitude, a loss Darlington Hall would have some difficulty recovering from. Furthermore, I was obliged to recognize certain other little signs which tended to support Mr Graham's theory. For instance, the collection of mail being one of my duties, I could not help noticing that Miss Kenton had started to get letters on a fairly regular basis - once a week or so - from the same correspondent, and that these letters bore a local postmark. I should perhaps point out here that it would have been well nigh impossible for me not to have noticed such things, given that throughout all her preceding years at the house, she had received very few letters indeed.

Then there were other more nebulous signs to support Mr Graham's view. For instance, although she continued to discharge her professional duties with all her usual diligence, her general mood tended to undergo swings of a sort I had hitherto never witnessed. In fact the times when she became extremely cheerful for days on end - and for no observable reason - were almost as disturbing to me as her sudden, often prolonged sullen spells. As I say, she remained utterly professional throughout it all, but then again, it was my duty to think about the welfare of the house in the long term, and if indeed these signs tended to support Mr Graham's notion that Miss Kenton was contemplating departing for romantic purposes, I clearly had a responsibility to probe the matter further. I did then venture to ask her one evening during one of our sessions over cocoa:

'And will you be going off again on Thursday, Miss Kenton? On your day off, I mean.'

I had half expected her to be angry at this inquiry, but on the contrary, it was almost as though she had been long awaiting an opportunity to raise the very topic. For she said in something of a relieved way:

'Oh, Mr Stevens, it's just someone I knew once when I was at Granchester Lodge. As a matter of fact, he was the butler there at the time, but now he's left service altogether and is employed by a business near by. He somehow learnt of my being here and started writing to me, suggesting we renew our acquaintance. And that, Mr Stevens, is really the long and short of it.'

'I see, Miss Kenton. No doubt, it is refreshing to leave the house at times.'

'I find it so, Mr Stevens.'

There was a short silence. Then Miss Kenton appeared to make some decision and went on:

‘This acquaintance of mine. I remember when he was butler at Granchester Lodge, he was full of the most marvellous ambitions. In fact, I imagine his ultimate dream would have been to become butler of a house like this one. Oh, but when I think now of some of his methods! Really, Mr Stevens, I can just imagine your face if you were to be confronted by them now. It really is no wonder his ambitions remained unfulfilled.’

I gave a small laugh. ‘In my experience,’ I said, ‘too many people believe themselves capable of working at these higher levels without having the least idea of the exacting demands involved. It is certainly not suited to just anybody.’

‘So true. Really, Mr Stevens, what would you have said if you had observed him in those days!’

‘At these sorts of levels, Miss Kenton, the profession isn’t for everybody. It is easy enough to have lofty ambitions, but without certain qualities, a butler will simply not progress beyond a certain point.’

Miss Kenton seemed to ponder this for a moment, then said:

‘It occurs to me you must be a well-contented man, Mr Stevens. Here you are, after all, at the top of your profession, every aspect of your domain well under control. I really cannot imagine what more you might wish for in life.’

I could think of no immediate response to this. In the slightly awkward silence that ensued, Miss Kenton turned her gaze down into the depths of her cocoa cup as if she had become engrossed by something she had noticed there. In the end, after some consideration, I said:

‘As far as I am concerned, Miss Kenton, my vocation will not be fulfilled until I have done all I can to see his lordship through the great tasks he has set himself. The day his lordship’s work is complete, the day he is able to rest on his laurels, content in the knowledge that he has done all anyone could ever reasonably ask of him, only on that day, Miss Kenton, will I be able to call myself, as you put it, a well-contented man.’

She may have been a little puzzled by my words; or perhaps it was that they had for some reason displeased her. In any case, her mood seemed to change at that point, and our conversation rapidly lost the rather personal tone it had begun to adopt.

It was not so long afterwards that these meetings over cocoa in her parlour came to an end. In fact, I recall quite clearly the very last time we met like that; I was wishing to discuss with Miss Kenton a forthcoming event – a weekend gathering of distinguished persons from Scotland. It is true the event was still a month or so away, but then it had always been our habit to talk over such events from an early stage. On this particular evening, I had been discussing various aspects of it for a little while when I realized Miss Kenton was contributing very little; indeed, after a time, it became perfectly obvious her thoughts were somewhere else altogether. I did on a few occasions say things like: ‘Are you with me, Miss Kenton?’ particularly if I had been making a lengthy point, and though whenever I did so she would become a little more alert, within seconds I could see her attention drifting again. After several minutes of my talking and her contributing only statements such as, ‘Of course, Mr Stevens,’ or, ‘I quite agree, Mr Stevens,’ I finally said to her:

‘I am sorry, Miss Kenton, but I see little point in our continuing. You simply do not seem to appreciate the importance of this discussion.’

‘I’m sorry, Mr Stevens,’ she said, sitting up a little. ‘It’s simply that I’m rather tired this evening.’

‘You are increasingly tired now, Miss Kenton. It used not to be an excuse you needed to resort to.’

To my astonishment, Miss Kenton responded to this in a sudden burst:

‘Mr Stevens, I have had a very busy week. I am very tired. In fact, I have been wishing for my bed for the last three or four hours. I am very, very tired, Mr Stevens, can you not appreciate that?’

It is not as though I had expected an apology from her, but the stridency of this reply did, I must say, take me aback a little. However, I decided not to get drawn into an unseemly argument with her and made sure to pause for a telling moment or two before saying quite calmly:

‘If that is how you feel about it, Miss Kenton, there is no need at all for us to continue with these evening meetings. I am sorry that all this time I had no idea of the extent to which they were inconveniencing you.’

‘Mr Stevens, I merely said that I was tired tonight ...’

‘No, no, Miss Kenton, it’s perfectly understandable. You have a busy life, and these meetings are a quite unnecessary addition to your burden. There are many alternative options for achieving the level of professional communication necessary without our meeting on this basis.’

‘Mr Stevens, this is quite unnecessary. I merely said ...’

‘I mean it, Miss Kenton. In fact, I had been wondering for some time if we should not discontinue these meetings, given how they prolong our already very busy days. The fact that we have met here now for years is no reason in itself why we should not seek a more convenient arrangement from here on.’

‘Mr Stevens, please, I believe these meetings are very useful ...’

‘But they are inconvenient for you, Miss Kenton. They tire you out. May I suggest that from now on, we simply make a special point of communicating important information during the course of the normal working day. Should we not be able to find each other readily, I suggest we leave written messages at one another’s doors. That seems to me a perfectly fine solution. Now, Miss Kenton, I apologize for keeping you up so long. Thank you very kindly for the cocoa.’

Naturally - and why should I not admit this? - I have occasionally wondered to myself how things might have turned out in the long run had I not been so determined over the issue of our evening meetings; that is to say, had I relented on those several occasions over the weeks that followed when Miss Kenton suggested we reinstitute them. I only speculate over this now because in the light of subsequent events, it could well be argued that in making my decision to end those evening meetings once and for all, I was perhaps not entirely aware of the full implications of what I was doing. Indeed, it might even be said that this small decision of mine constituted something of a key turning point; that the decision set things on an inevitable course towards what eventually happened.

But then, I suppose, when with the benefit of hindsight one begins to search one’s past for such ‘turning points’, one is apt to start seeing them everywhere. Not only my decision in respect of our evening meetings, but also that episode in my pantry, if one felt so inclined, could be seen as such a ‘turning point’. What would have transpired, one may ask, had one responded slightly differently that evening she came in with her vase of flowers? And perhaps - occurring as it did around the same time as these events - my encounter with Miss Kenton in the dining room the afternoon she received the news of her aunt's death might be seen as yet another 'turning point' of sorts.

News of the death had arrived some hours earlier; indeed, I had myself knocked on the door of her parlour that morning to hand her the letter. I had stepped inside for a brief moment to discuss some professional matter, and I recall we were seated at her table and in mid-conversation at the moment she opened the letter. She became very still, but to her credit she remained composed, reading the letter through at least twice. Then she put the letter carefully back in its envelope and looked across the table to me.

'It is from Mrs Johnson, a companion of my aunt. She says my aunt died the day before yesterday.' She paused a moment, then said: 'The funeral is to take place tomorrow. I wonder if it might be possible for me to take the day off.'

'I am sure that could be arranged, Miss Kenton.'

'Thank you, Mr Stevens. Forgive me, but perhaps I may now have a few moments alone.'

'Of course, Miss Kenton.'

I made my exit, and it was not until after I had done so that it occurred to me I had not actually offered her my condolences. I could well imagine the blow the news would be to her, her aunt having been, to all intents and purposes, like a mother to her, and I paused out in the corridor, wondering if I should go back, knock and make good my omission. But then it occurred to me that if I were to do so, I might easily intrude upon her private grief. Indeed, it was not impossible that Miss Kenton, at that very moment, and only a few feet from me, was actually crying. The thought provoked a strange feeling to rise within me, causing me to stand there hovering in the corridor for some moments. But eventually I judged it best to await another opportunity to express my sympathy and went on my way.

As it turned out, I did not see her again until the afternoon, when, as I say, I came across her in the dining room, replacing crockery into the sideboard. By this point, I had been preoccupied for some hours with the matter of Miss Kenton's sorrow, having given particular thought to the question of what I might best do or say to ease her burden a little. And when I had heard her footsteps entering the dining room - I was busy with some task out in the hall - I had waited a minute or so, then put down what I was doing and followed her in.

'Ah, Miss Kenton,' I said. 'And how might you be this afternoon?'

'Quite well, thank you, Mr Stevens.'

'Is everything in order?'

'Everything is in order, thank you.'

'I had been meaning to ask you if you were experiencing any particular problems with the new recruits.' I gave a small laugh. 'Various small difficulties are apt to arise when so many new recruits arrive all at once. I dare say the best of us can often profit by a little professional discussion at such times.'

'Thank you, Mr Stevens, but the new girls are very satisfactory to me.'

'You don't consider any changes necessary to the present staff plans on account of the recent arrivals?'

'I don't think any such changes will be necessary, Mr Stevens. However, if I change my view on this, I will let you know immediately.'

She turned her attention back to the sideboard, and for a moment, I thought about leaving the dining room. In fact, I believe I actually took a few steps towards the doorway, but then I turned to her again and said:

‘So, Miss Kenton, the new recruits are getting on well, you say.’

‘They are both doing very well, I assure you.’

‘Ah, that is good to hear.’ I gave another short laugh.

‘I merely wondered, because we had established that neither girl had worked previously in a house of this size.’

‘Indeed, Mr Stevens.’

I watched her filling the sideboard and waited to see if she would say anything further. When after several moments it became clear she would not, I said: ‘As a matter of fact, Miss Kenton, I have to say this. I have noticed one or two things have fallen in standard just recently. I do feel you might be a little less complacent as regards new arrivals.’

‘Whatever do you mean, Mr Stevens?’

‘For my part, Miss Kenton, whenever new recruits arrive, I like to make doubly sure all is well. I check all aspects of their work and try to gauge how they are conducting themselves with other staff members. It is, after all, important to form a clear view of them both technically and in terms of their impact on general morale. I regret to say this, Miss Kenton, but I believe you have been a little remiss in these respects.’

For a second, Miss Kenton looked confused. Then she turned towards me and a certain strain was visible in her face.

‘I beg your pardon, Mr Stevens?’

‘For instance, Miss Kenton, although the crockery is being washed to as high a standard as ever, I have noticed it is being replaced on the kitchen shelves in a manner which, while not obviously dangerous, would nevertheless over time result in more breakages than necessary.’

‘Is that so, Mr Stevens?’

‘Yes, Miss Kenton. Furthermore, that little alcove outside the breakfast room has not been dusted for some time. You will excuse me, but there are one or two other small things I might mention.’

‘You needn’t press your point, Mr Stevens. I will, as you suggest, check the work of the new maids.’

‘It is not like you to have overlooked such obvious things, Miss Kenton.’

Miss Kenton looked away from me, and again an expression crossed her face as though she was trying to puzzle out something that had quite confused her. She did not look upset so much as very weary. Then she closed the sideboard, said: ‘Please excuse me, Mr Stevens,’ and left the room.

But what is the sense in forever speculating what might have happened had such and such a moment turned out differently? One could presumably drive oneself to distraction in this way. In any case, while it is all very well to talk of ‘turning points’, one can surely only recognize such moments in retrospect. Naturally, when one looks back to such instances today, they may indeed take the appearance of being crucial, precious moments in one’s life; but of course, at the time, this was not the impression one had. Rather, it was as though one had available a never-ending number of days, months, years in which to sort out the vagaries of one’s relationship with Miss Kenton; an infinite number of further opportunities in which to remedy the effect of this or that misunderstanding. There was surely nothing to indicate at the time that such evidently small incidents would render whole dreams forever irredeemable.

But I see I am becoming unduly introspective, and in a rather morose sort of way at that. No doubt, this has to do with the late hour, and the trying nature of the events I have had to endure this evening. No doubt, too, my present mood is not unconnected with the fact that tomorrow – provided I am supplied with petrol by the local garage, as the Taylors assure me I will be - I should arrive in Little Compton by lunch-time and will, presumably, see Miss Kenton again after all these years. There is, of course, no reason at all to suppose our meeting will be anything but cordial. In fact, I would expect our interview - aside from a few informal exchanges quite proper in the circumstances - to be largely professional in character. That is to say, it will be my responsibility to determine whether or not Miss Kenton has any interest, now that her marriage, sadly, appears to have broken down and she is without a home, in returning to her old post at Darlington Hall. I may as well say here that having reread her letter again tonight, I am inclined to believe I may well have read more into certain of her lines than perhaps was wise. But I would still maintain there is more than a hint of nostalgic longing in certain parts of her letter, particularly when she writes such things as: 'I was so fond of that view from the second floor bedrooms overlooking the lawn with the downs visible in the distance.'

But then again, what is the purpose in endlessly speculating as to Miss Kenton's present wishes when I will be able to ascertain these from her own person tomorrow? And in any case, I have drifted considerably from the account I was giving of this evening's events. These last few hours, let me say it, have proved unreasonably taxing ones. One would have thought that having to abandon the Ford on some lonely hill, having to walk down to this village in near-darkness by the unorthodox route one did, would be sufficient inconvenience to befall one for a single evening. And my kind hosts, Mr and Mrs Taylor, would never, I am certain, have knowingly put me through what I have just endured. But the fact is, once I had sat down to supper at their table, once a number of their neighbours had come calling, a most discomfoting set of events began to unfold around me.

The room downstairs at the front of this cottage would appear to serve Mr and Mrs Taylor as both dining room and general living quarters. It is a rather cosy room, dominated by a large, roughly hewn table of the sort one might expect to see in a farmhouse kitchen, its surface unvarnished and bearing many small marks left by choppers and breadknives. These latter I could see quite clearly despite the fact that we were sitting in a low yellow light cast by an oil lamp on a shelf in one corner.

‘It’s not as though we don’t have electricity out here, sir,’ Mr Taylor remarked to me at one point, nodding towards the lamp. ‘But something went wrong with the circuit and we’ve been without it now for almost two months. To tell you the truth, we don’t miss it so much. There’s a few houses in the village that’s never had electricity at all. Oil gives a warmer light.’

Mrs Taylor had served us with a good broth, which we had eaten with helpings of crusty bread, and at that point, there had been little to suggest the evening held for me anything more daunting than an hour or so of pleasant conversation before retiring to bed. However, just as we had finished supper and Mr Taylor was pouring for me a glass of ale brewed by a neighbour, we heard footsteps approaching on the gravel outside. To my ears, there was something a little sinister in the sound of feet coming ever closer in the darkness up to an isolated cottage, but neither my host nor hostess seemed to anticipate any menace. For it was with curiosity and nothing else in his voice that Mr Taylor said: ‘Hello, now who could this be?’

He had said this more or less to himself, but then we heard, as though in reply, a voice call outside: ‘It’s George Andrews. Just happened to be walking by.’

The next moment, Mrs Taylor was showing in a well-built man, perhaps in his fifties, who judging from his dress had spent the day engaged in agricultural work. With a familiarity which suggested he was a regular visitor, he placed himself on a small stool by the entrance and removed his Wellington boots with some effort, exchanging a few casual remarks with Mrs Taylor as he did so. Then he came towards the table and stopped, standing to attention before me as though reporting to an officer in the army.

‘The name’s Andrews, sir,’ he said. ‘A very good evening to you. I’m very sorry to hear about your mishap, but I hope you’re not too put out to be spending the night here in Moscombe.’

I was a little puzzled as to how this Mr Andrews had come to hear of my ‘mishap’, as he termed it. In any case, I replied with a smile that far from being ‘put out’, I felt extremely indebted for the hospitality I was receiving. By this I had of course been referring to Mr and Mrs Taylor’s kindness, but Mr Andrews seemed to believe himself included by my expression of gratitude, for he said immediately, holding up defensively his two large hands:

‘Oh no, sir, you’re most welcome. We’re very pleased to have you. It’s not often the likes of yourself comes through here. We’re all very pleased you could stop by.’

The way he said this seemed to suggest the whole village was aware of my ‘mishap’ and subsequent arrival at this cottage. In fact, as I was soon to discover, this was very close to being the case; I can only imagine that in the several minutes after I had first been shown up to this bedroom - while I was washing my hands and doing what I could to make good the damage inflicted upon my jacket and trouser turn-ups - Mr and Mrs Taylor had conveyed news of me to passers-by. In any case, the next few minutes saw the arrival of another visitor, a man with an appearance much like that of Mr Andrews - that is to say, somewhat broad and agricultural, and wearing muddy Wellington boots, which he proceeded to remove in much the way Mr Andrews had just done. Indeed, their similarity was such that I supposed them to be brothers, until the newcomer introduced himself to me as, ‘Morgan, sir, Trevor Morgan.’

Mr Morgan expressed regret concerning my 'misfortune', assuring me all would be well in the morning, before going on to say how welcome I was in the village. Of course, I had already heard similar sentiments a few moments earlier, but Mr Morgan actually said: 'It's a privilege to have a gentleman like yourself here in Moscombe, sir.'

Before I had had any time to think of a reply to this, there came the sound of more footsteps on the path outside. Soon, a middle-aged couple were shown in, who were introduced to me as Mr and Mrs Harry Smith. These people did not look at all agricultural; she was a large, matronly woman who rather reminded me of Mrs Mortimer, the cook at Darlington Hall through much of the twenties and thirties. In contrast, Mr Harry Smith was a small man with a rather intense expression that furrowed his brow. As they took their places around the table, he said to me: 'Your car would be the vintage Ford up there on Thornley Bush Hill, sir?'

'If that is the hill road overlooking this village,' I said. 'But I'm surprised to hear you've seen it.'

'I've not seen it myself, sir. But Dave Thornton passed it on his tractor a short while ago as he was coming home. He was so surprised to see it sitting there, he actually stopped and got out.' At this point, Mr Harry Smith turned to address the others around the table. 'Absolute beauty, it is. Said he'd never seen anything like it. Put the car Mr Lindsay used to drive completely in the shade!'

This caused laughter around the table, which Mr Taylor explained to me by saying: 'That was a gent used to live in the big house not far from here, sir. He did one or two odd things and wasn't appreciated around here.'

This brought a general murmur of assent. Then someone said: 'Your health, sir,' lifting one of the tankards of ale Mrs Taylor had just finished distributing, and the next moment I was being toasted by the whole company.

I smiled and said: 'I assure you the privilege is all mine.'

'You're very kind, sir,' Mrs Smith said. 'That's the way a real gentleman is. That Mr Lindsay was no gentleman. He may have had a lot of money, but he was never a gentleman.'

Again, there was agreement all round. Then Mrs Taylor whispered something in Mrs Smith's ear, causing the latter to reply: 'He said he'd try to be along as soon as he could.' They both turned towards me with a self-conscious air, then Mrs Smith said: 'We told Dr Carlisle you were here, sir. The doctor would be very pleased to make your acquaintance.'

'I expect he has patients to see,' Mrs Taylor added apologetically. 'I'm afraid we can't say for certain he'll be able to call in before you'd be wanting to retire, sir.'

It was then that Mr Harry Smith, the little man with the furrowed brow, leaned forward again and said: 'That Mr Lindsay, he had it all wrong, see? Acting the way he did. Thought he was so much better than us, and he took us all for fools. Well, I can tell you, sir, he soon learnt otherwise. A lot of hard thinking and talking goes on in this place. There's plenty of good strong opinion around and people here aren't shy about expressing it. That's something your Mr Lindsay learnt quickly enough.'

'He was no gentleman,' Mr Taylor said quietly. 'He was no gentleman, that Mr Lindsay.'

'That's right, sir,' Mr Harry Smith said. 'You could tell just watching him he was no gentleman. All right, he had a fine house and good suits, but somehow you just knew. And so it proved in good time.'

There was a murmur of agreement, and for a moment all present seemed to be considering whether or not it would be proper to divulge to me the tale concerning this local personage. Then Mr Taylor broke the silence by saying:

‘That’s true what Harry says. You can tell a true gentleman from a false one that’s just dressed in finery. Take yourself, sir. It’s not just the cut of your clothes, nor is it even the fine way you’ve got of speaking. There’s something else that marks you out as a gentleman. Hard to put your finger on it, but it’s plain for all to see that’s got eyes.’

This brought more sounds of agreement around the table.

‘Dr Carlisle shouldn’t be long now, sir,’ Mrs Taylor put in. ‘You’ll enjoy talking with him.’

‘Dr Carlisle’s got it too,’ Mr Taylor said. ‘He’s got it. He’s a true gent, that one.’

Mr Morgan, who had said little since his arrival, bent forward and said to me: ‘What do you suppose it is, sir? Maybe one that’s got it can better say what it is. Here we are all talking about who’s got it and who hasn’t, and we’re none the wiser about what we’re talking about. Perhaps you could enlighten us a bit, sir.’

A silence fell around the table and I could sense all the faces turn to me. I gave a small cough and said:

‘It is hardly for me to pronounce upon qualities I may or may not possess. However, as far as this particular question is concerned, one would suspect that the quality being referred to might be most usefully termed “dignity”.’

I saw little point in attempting to explain this statement further. Indeed, I had merely given voice to the thoughts running through my mind while listening to the preceding talk and it is doubtful I would have said such a thing had the situation not suddenly demanded it of me. My response, however, seemed to cause much satisfaction.

‘There’s a lot of truth in what you say there, sir,’ Mr Andrews said, nodding, and a number of other voices echoed this.

‘That Mr Lindsay could certainly have done with a little more dignity,’ Mrs Taylor said. ‘The trouble with his sort is they mistake acting high and mighty for dignity.’

‘Mind you,’ put in Mr Harry Smith, ‘with all respect for what you say, sir, it ought to be said. Dignity isn’t just something gentlemen have. Dignity’s something every man and woman in this country can strive for and get. You’ll excuse me, sir, but like I said before, we don’t stand on ceremony here when it comes to expressing opinions. And that’s my opinion for what it’s worth. Dignity’s not just something for gentlemen.’

I perceived, of course, that Mr Harry Smith and I were rather at cross purposes on this matter, and that it would be far too complicated a task for me to explain myself more clearly to these people. I thus judged it best simply to smile and say: ‘Of course, you’re quite correct.’

This had the immediate effect of dispelling the slight tension that had built in the room while Mr Harry Smith had been speaking. And Mr Harry Smith himself seemed to lose all inhibitions, for now he leaned forward and continued:

‘That’s what we fought Hitler for, after all. If Hitler had had things his way, we’d just be slaves now. The whole world would be a few masters and millions upon millions of slaves. And I don’t need to remind anyone here, there’s no dignity to be had in being a slave. That’s what we fought for and that’s what we won. We won the right to be free citizens. And it’s one of the privileges of being born English that no matter who you are, no matter if you’re rich or poor, you’re born free and you’re born so that you can express your opinion freely, and vote in your member of parliament or vote him out. That’s what dignity’s really about, if you’ll excuse me, sir.’

‘Now now, Harry,’ Mr Taylor said. ‘I can see you’re warming up to one of your political speeches.’

This brought laughter. Mr Harry Smith smiled a little shyly, but went on:

‘I’m not talking politics. I’m just saying, that’s all. You can’t have dignity if you’re a slave. But every Englishman can grasp it if only he cares to. Because we fought for that right.’

‘This may seem like a small, out of the way place we have here, sir,’ his wife said. ‘But we gave more than our share in the war. More than our share.’

A solemnness hung in the air after she said this, until eventually Mr Taylor said to me: ‘Harry here does a lot of organizing for our local member. Give him half a chance and he’ll tell you everything that’s wrong with the way the country’s run.’

‘Ah, but I was just saying what was right about the country this time.’

‘Have you had much to do with politics yourself, sir?’ Mr Andrews asked.

‘Not directly as such,’ I said, ‘And particularly not these days. More so before the war perhaps.’

‘It’s just that I seem to remember a Mr Stevens who was a member of parliament a year or two ago. Heard him on the wireless once or twice. Had some very sensible things to say about housing. But that wouldn’t be yourself, sir?’

‘Oh no,’ I said with a laugh. Now I am not at all sure what made me utter my next statement; all I can say is that it seemed somehow called for in the circumstances in which I found myself. For I then said: ‘In fact, I tended to concern myself with international affairs more than domestic ones. Foreign policy, that is to say.’

I was a little taken aback by the effect this seemed to have upon my listeners. That is to say, a sense of awe seemed to descend on them. I added quickly: 'I never held any high office, mind you. Any influence I exerted was in a strictly unofficial capacity.' But the hushed silence remained for several more seconds.

'Excuse me, sir,' Mrs Taylor said eventually, 'but have you ever met Mr Churchill?'

'Mr Churchill? He did come to the house on a number of occasions. But to be quite frank, Mrs Taylor, during the time I was most involved in great affairs, Mr Churchill was not such a key figure and was not really expected to become one. The likes of Mr Eden and Lord Halifax were more frequent visitors in those days.'

'But you have actually met Mr Churchill, sir? What an honour to be able to say that.'

'I don't agree with many things Mr Churchill says,' Mr Harry Smith said, 'but there's no doubt about it, he's a great man. It must be quite something, sir, to be discussing matters with his like.'

'Well, I must reiterate,' I said, 'I didn't have a great deal to do with Mr Churchill. But as you rightly point out it's rather gratifying to have consorted with him. In fact, all in all, I suppose I have been very fortunate, I would be the first to admit that. It has been my good fortune, after all, to have consorted not just with Mr Churchill, but with many other great leaders and men of influence - from America and from Europe. And when you think that it was my good fortune to have had their ear on many great issues of the day, yes, when I think back, I do feel a certain gratitude. It's a great privilege, after all, to have been given a part to play, however small, on the world's stage.'

‘Excuse me asking, sir,’ Mr Andrews said, ‘but what sort of man is Mr Eden? I mean, at the personal level. I’ve always had the impression he’s a jolly decent sort. The sort that can talk to anyone high or low, rich or poor. Am I right, sir?’

‘I would say that is, by and large, an accurate picture. But of course I have not seen Mr Eden in recent years, and he may have been much changed by pressures. One thing I have witnessed is that public life can change people unrecognizably in a few short years.’

‘I don’t doubt that, sir,’ said Mr Andrews. ‘Even Harry here. Got himself involved with his politics a few years back and he’s never been the same man since.’

There was laughter again, while Mr Harry Smith shrugged and allowed a smile to cross his face. Then he said:

‘It’s true I’ve put a lot into the campaigning work. It’s only at a local level, and I never meet anyone half as grand as the likes you associate with, sir, but in my own small way I believe I’m doing my part. The way I see it, England’s a democracy, and we in this village have suffered as much as anyone fighting to keep it that way. Now it’s up to us to exercise our rights, every one of us. Some fine young lads from this village gave their lives to give us that privilege, and the way I see it, each one of us here now owes it to them to play our part. We’ve all got strong opinions here, and it’s our responsibility to get them heard. We’re out of the way, all right, a small village, we’re none of us getting younger, and the village is getting smaller. But the way I see it we owe it to the lads we lost from this village. That’s why, sir, I give so much of my time now to making sure our voice gets heard in high places. And if it changes me, or sends me to an early grave, I don’t mind.’

‘I did warn you, sir,’ Mr Taylor said with a smile. ‘There was no way Harry was going to let an influential gentleman like yourself come through the village without giving you his usual earful. '

There was laughter again, but I said almost immediately:

'I think I understand your position very well, Mr Smith. I can well understand that you wish the world to be a better place and that you and your fellow residents here should have an opportunity to contribute to the making of a better world. It is a sentiment to be applauded. I dare say it was a very similar urge which led me to become involved in great affairs before the war. Then, as now, world peace seemed something we had only the most fragile grasp of, and I wished to do my part. '

'Excuse me, sir,' said Mr Harry Smith, 'but my point was a slightly different one. For the likes of yourself, it's always been easy to exert your influence. You can count the most powerful in the land as your friends. But the likes of us here, sir, we can go year in year out and never even lay eyes on a real gentleman - other than maybe Dr Carlisle. He's a first-class doctor, but with all respect, he doesn't have connections as such. It gets easy for us here to forget our responsibility as citizens. That's why I work so hard at the campaigning. Whether people agree or disagree - and I know there's not one soul in this room now who'd agree with everything I say - at least I'll get them thinking. At least I'll remind them of their duty. This is a democratic country we're living in. We fought for it. We've all got to play our part. '

'I wonder what could have happened to Dr Carlisle,' Mrs Smith said. 'I'm sure the gentleman could just about use some educated talk now. '

This provoked more laughter.

'In fact,' I said, 'although it has been extremely enjoyable to meet you all, I must confess I'm beginning to feel rather exhausted ...'

‘Of course, sir,’ Mrs Taylor said, ‘you must be very tired. Perhaps I’ll fetch another blanket for you. It’s getting much chillier at night now.’

‘No, I assure you, Mrs Taylor, I’ll be most comfortable.’

But before I could rise from the table, Mr Morgan said:

‘I just wondered, sir, there’s a fellow we like to listen to on the wireless, his name’s Leslie Mandrake. I wondered if you’d happened to have met him.’

I replied that I had not, and was about to make another attempt to retire only to find myself detained by further inquiries regarding various persons I may have met. I was, then, still seated at the table when Mrs Smith remarked:

‘Ah, there’s someone coming. I expect that’s the doctor at last.’

‘I really ought to be retiring,’ I said. ‘I feel quite exhausted.’

‘But I’m sure this is the doctor now, sir,’ said Mrs Smith. ‘Do wait a few more minutes.’

Just as she said this, there came a knock and a voice said: ‘It’s just me, Mrs Taylor.’

The gentleman who was shown in was still fairly young – perhaps around forty or so – tall and thin; tall enough, in fact, that he was obliged to stoop to enter the doorway of the cottage. No sooner had he bade us all a good evening than Mrs Taylor said to him:

‘This is our gentleman here, Doctor. His car’s stuck up there on Thornley Bush and he’s having to endure Harry’s speeches as a result.’

The doctor came up to the table and held out his hand to me.

‘Richard Carlisle,’ he said with a cheerful smile as I rose to shake it. ‘Rotten bit of luck about your car. Still, trust you’re being well looked after here. Looked after rather too well, I imagine.’

‘Thank you,’ I replied. ‘Everyone has been most kind.’

‘Well, nice to have you with us.’ Dr Carlisle seated himself almost directly across the table from me. ‘Which part of the country are you from?’

‘Oxfordshire,’ I said, and indeed, it was no easy task to suppress the instinct to add ‘sir’.

‘Fine part of the country. I have an uncle lives just outside Oxford. Fine part of the country.’

‘The gentleman was just telling us, Doctor,’ Mrs Smith said, ‘he knows Mr Churchill.’

‘Is that so? I used to know a nephew of his, but I’ve rather lost touch. Never had the privilege of meeting the great man, though.’

‘And not only Mr Churchill,’ Mrs Smith went on. ‘He knows Mr Eden. And Lord Halifax.’

‘Really?’

I could sense the doctor’s eyes examining me closely. I was about to make some appropriate remark, but before I could do so, Mr Andrews said to the doctor:

‘Gentleman was just telling us he’s had a lot to do with foreign affairs in his time.’

‘Is that so indeed?’

It seemed to me that Dr Carlisle went on looking at me for an inordinate length of time. Then he regained his cheerful manner and asked:

‘Touring around for pleasure?’

‘Principally,’ I said, and gave a small laugh.

‘Plenty of nice country around here. Oh, by the way, Mr Andrews, I’m sorry not to have returned that saw yet.’

‘No hurry at all, Doctor.’

For a little time, the focus of attention left me and I was able to remain silent. Then, seizing what seemed a suitable moment, I rose to my feet, saying: ‘Please excuse me. It has been a most enjoyable evening, but I really must now retire.’

‘Such a pity you have to retire already, sir,’ Mrs Smith said. ‘The doctor’s only just arrived.’

Mr Harry Smith leaned across his wife and said to Dr Carlisle: ‘I was hoping the gentleman would have a few words to say about your ideas on the Empire, Doctor.’ Then turning to me, he went on: ‘Our doctor here’s for all kinds of little countries going independent. I don’t have the learning to prove him wrong, though I know he is. But I’d have been interested to hear what the likes of yourself would have to say to him on the subject, sir.’

Yet again, Dr Carlisle’s gaze seemed to study me. Then he said: ‘A pity, but we must let the gentleman go off to bed. Had a tiring day, I expect.’

‘Indeed,’ I said, and with another small laugh, began to make my way round the table. To my embarrassment, everyone in the room, including Dr Carlisle, rose to their feet.

‘Thank you all very much,’ I said, smiling. ‘Mrs Taylor, I did enjoy a splendid supper. I wish you all a very good night.’

There came a chorus of, ‘Good night, sir,’ in reply. I had almost left the room when the doctor’s voice caused me to halt at the door.

‘I say, old chap,’ he said, and when I turned, I saw he had remained on his feet. ‘I have a visit to make in Stanbury first thing in the morning. I’d be happy to give you a lift up to your car. Save you the walk. And we can pick up a can of petrol from Ted Hardacre’s on the way.’

‘That is most kind,’ I said. ‘But I don’t wish to put you to any trouble.’

‘No trouble at all. Seven thirty all right for you?’

‘That would be most helpful indeed.’

‘Right then, seven thirty it is. Make sure your guest’s up and breakfasted for seven thirty, Mrs Taylor.’ Then turning back to me, he added: ‘So we can have our talk after all. Though Harry here won’t have the satisfaction of witnessing my humiliation.’

There was laughter, and another exchange of good nights before I was at last allowed to ascend to the sanctuary of this room.

I trust I need hardly underline the extent of the discomfort I suffered tonight on account of the unfortunate misunderstanding concerning my person. I can only say now that in all honesty I fail to see how I might reasonably have prevented the situation developing as it did; for by the stage I had become aware of what was occurring, things had gone so far I could not have enlightened these people without creating much embarrassment all round. In any case, regrettable as the whole business was, I do not see that any real harm has been done. I will, after all, take my leave of these people in the morning and presumably never encounter them again. There seems little point in dwelling on the matter.

However, the unfortunate misunderstanding aside, there are perhaps one or two other aspects to this evening’s events which warrant a few moments’ thought - if only because otherwise they may come to niggle one throughout the coming days. For instance, there is the matter of Mr Harry Smith's pronouncements on the nature of 'dignity'. There is surely little in his statements that merits serious consideration. Of course, one has to allow that Mr Harry Smith was employing the word 'dignity' in a quite different sense altogether from my own understanding of it. Even so, even taken on their own terms, his statements were, surely, far too idealistic, far too theoretical, to deserve respect. Up to a point, no doubt, there is some truth in what he says: in a country such as ours, people may indeed have a certain duty to think about great affairs and form their opinions. But life being what it is, how can ordinary people truly be expected to have 'strong opinions' on all manner of things - as Mr Harry Smith rather fancifully claims the villagers here do? And not only are these expectations unrealistic, I rather doubt if they are even desirable. There is, after all, a real limit to how much ordinary people can learn and know, and to demand that each and every one of them contribute 'strong opinions' to the great debates of the nation cannot, surely, be wise. It is, in any case, absurd that anyone should presume to define a person's 'dignity' in these terms.

As it happens, there is an instance that comes to mind which I believe illustrates rather well the real limits of whatever truth may be contained in Mr Harry Smith's views. It is, as it happens, an instance from my own experience, an episode that took place before the war, around 1935.

As I recall, I was rung for late one night - it was past midnight - to the drawing room where his lordship had been entertaining three gentlemen since dinner. I had, naturally, been called to the drawing room several times already that night to replenish refreshments, and had observed on these occasions the gentlemen deep in conversation over weighty issues. When I entered the drawing room on this last occasion, however, all the gentlemen stopped talking and looked at me. Then his lordship said:

‘Step this way a moment, will you, Stevens? Mr Spencer here wishes a word with you.’

The gentleman in question went on gazing at me for a moment without changing the somewhat languid posture he had adopted in his armchair. Then he said:

‘My good man, I have a question for you. We need your help on a certain matter we’ve been debating. Tell me, do you suppose the debt situation regarding America is a significant factor in the present low levels of trade? Or do you suppose this is a red herring and that the abandonment of the gold standard is at the root of the matter?’

I was naturally a little surprised by this, but then quickly saw the situation for what it was; that is to say, it was clearly expected that I be baffled by the question. Indeed, in the moment or so that it took for me to perceive this and compose a suitable response, I may even have given the outward impression of struggling with the question, for I saw the gentlemen in the room exchange mirthful smiles.

‘I’m very sorry, sir,’ I said, ‘but I am unable to be of assistance on this matter.’

I was by this point well on top of the situation, but the gentlemen went on laughing covertly. Then Mr Spencer said:

‘Then perhaps you will help us on another matter. Would you say that the currency problem in Europe would be made better or worse if there were to be an arms agreement between the French and the Bolsheviks?’

‘I’m very sorry, sir, but I am unable to be of assistance on this matter.’

‘Oh dear,’ said Mr Spencer. ‘So you can’t help us here either.’

There was more suppressed laughter before his lordship said: ‘Very well, Stevens. That will be all.’

‘Please, Darlington, I have one more question to put to our good man here,’ Mr Spencer said. ‘I very much wanted his help on the question presently vexing many of us, and which we all realize is crucial to how we should shape our foreign policy. My good fellow, please come to our assistance. What was M. Laval really intending, by his recent speech on the situation in North Africa? Are you also of the view that it was simply a ruse to scupper the nationalist fringe of his own domestic party?’

‘I’m sorry, sir, but I am unable to assist in this matter.’

‘You see, gentlemen,’ Mr Spencer said, turning to the others, ‘our man is unable to assist us in these matters.’

This brought fresh laughter, now barely suppressed.

‘And yet,’ Mr Spencer went on, ‘we still persist with the notion that this nation’s decisions be left in the hands of our good man here and to the few million others like him. Is it any wonder, saddled as we are with our present parliamentary system, that we are unable to find any solution to our many difficulties? Why, you may as well ask a committee of the mothers’ union to organize a war campaign.’

There was open, hearty laughter at this remark, during which his lordship muttered: ‘Thank you, Stevens,’ thus enabling me to take my leave.

While of course this was a slightly uncomfortable situation, it was hardly the most difficult, or even an especially unusual one to encounter in the course of one’s duties, and you will no doubt agree that any decent professional should expect to take such events in his stride. I had, then, all but forgotten the episode by the following morning, when Lord Darlington came into the billiard room while I was up on a step-ladder dusting portraits, and said:

‘Look here, Stevens, it was dreadful. The ordeal we put you through last night.’

I paused in what I was doing and said: ‘Not at all, sir. I was only too happy to be of service.’

‘It was quite dreadful. We’d all had rather too good a dinner, I fancy. Please accept my apologies.’

‘Thank you, sir. But I am happy to assure you I was not unduly inconvenienced.’

His lordship walked over rather wearily to a leather armchair, seated himself and sighed. From my vantage point up on my ladder, I could see practically the whole of his long figure caught in the winter sunshine pouring in through the french windows and streaking much of the room. It was, as I recall it, one of those moments that brought home how much the pressures of life had taken their toll on his lordship over a relatively small number of years. His frame, always slender, had become alarmingly thin and somewhat misshapen, his hair prematurely white, his face strained and haggard. For a while, he sat gazing out of the french windows towards the downs, then said again:

‘It really was quite dreadful. But you see, Stevens, Mr Spencer had a point to prove to Sir Leonard. In fact, if it’s any consolation, you did assist in demonstrating a very important point. Sir Leonard had been talking a lot of that old-fashioned nonsense. About the will of the people being the wisest arbitrator and so on. Would you believe it, Stevens?’

‘Indeed, sir.’

‘We’re really so slow in this country to recognize when a thing’s outmoded. Other great nations know full well that to meet the challenges of each new age means discarding old, sometimes well-loved methods. Not so here in Britain. There’s still so many talking like Sir Leonard last night. That’s why Mr Spencer felt the need to demonstrate his point. And I tell you, Stevens, if the likes of Sir Leonard are made to wake up and think a little, then you can take it from me your ordeal last night was not in vain. '

'Indeed, sir. '

Lord Darlington gave another sigh. 'We're always the last, Stevens. Always the last to be clinging on to outmoded systems. But sooner or later, we'll need to face up to the facts. Democracy is something for a bygone era. The world's far too complicated a place now for universal suffrage and such like. For endless members of parliament debating things to a standstill. All fine a few years ago perhaps, but in today's world? What was it Mr Spencer said last night? He put it rather well. '

'I believe, sir, he compared the present parliamentary system to a committee of the mothers' union attempting to organize a war campaign. '

'Exactly, Stevens. We are, quite frankly, behind the times in this country. And it's imperative that all forward-looking people impress this on the likes of Sir Leonard. '

'Indeed, sir. '

'I ask you, Stevens. Here we are in the midst of a continuing crisis. I've seen it with my own eyes when I went north with Mr Whittaker. People are suffering. Ordinary, decent working people are suffering terribly. Germany and Italy have set their houses in order by acting. And so have the wretched Bolsheviks in their own way, one supposes. Even President Roosevelt, look at him, he's not afraid to take a few bold steps on behalf of his people. But look at us here, Stevens. Year after year goes by, and nothing gets better. All we do is argue and debate and procrastinate. Any decent idea is amended to ineffectuality by the time it's gone half-way through the various committees it's obliged to pass through. The few people qualified to know what's what are talked to a standstill by ignorant people all around them. What do you make of it, Stevens?’

‘The nation does seem to be in a regrettable condition, sir.’

‘I’ll say. Look at Germany and Italy, Stevens. See what strong leadership can do if it’s allowed to act. None of this universal suffrage nonsense there. If your house is on fire, you don’t call the household into the drawing room and debate the various options for escape for an hour, do you? It may have been all very well once, but the world’s a complicated place now. The man in the street can’t be expected to know enough about politics, economics, world commerce and what have you. And why should he? In fact, you made a very good reply last night, Stevens. How did you put it? Something to the effect that it was not in your realm? Well, why should it be?’

It occurs to me in recalling these words that, of course, many of Lord Darlington’s ideas will seem today rather odd – even, at times, unattractive. But surely it cannot be denied that there is an important element of truth in these things he said to me that morning in the billiard room. Of course, it is quite absurd to expect any butler to be in a position to answer authoritatively questions of the sort Mr Spencer had put to me that night, and the claim of people like Mr Harry Smith that one’s ‘dignity’ is conditional on being able to do so can be seen for the nonsense it is. Let us establish this quite clearly: a butler’s duty is to provide good service. It is not to meddle in the great affairs of the nation. The fact is, such great affairs will always be beyond the understanding of those such as you and me, and those of us who wish to make our mark must realize that we best do so by concentrating on what is within our realm; that is to say, by devoting our attention to providing the best possible service to those great gentlemen in whose hands the destiny of civilization truly lies. This may seem obvious, but then one can immediately think of too many instances of butlers who, for a time anyway, thought quite differently. Indeed, Mr Harry Smith's words tonight remind me very much of the sort of misguided idealism which beset significant sections of our generation throughout the twenties and thirties. I refer to that strand of opinion in the profession which suggested that any butler with serious aspirations should make it his business to be forever reappraising his employer - scrutinizing the latter's motives, analysing the implications of his views. Only in this way, so the argument ran, could one be sure one's skills were being employed to a desirable end. Although one sympathizes to some extent with the idealism contained in such an argument, there can be little doubt that it is the result, like Mr Smith's sentiments tonight, of misguided thinking. One need only look at the butlers who attempted to put such an approach into practice, and one will see that their careers - and in some cases they were highly promising careers - came to nothing as a direct consequence. I personally knew at least two professionals, both of some ability, who went from one employer to the next, forever dissatisfied, never settling anywhere, until they drifted from view altogether. That this should happen is not in the least surprising. For it is, in practice, simply not possible to adopt such a critical attitude towards an employer and at the same time provide good service. It is not simply that one is unlikely to be able to meet the many demands of service at the higher levels while one's attention is being diverted by such matters; more fundamentally, a butler who is forever attempting to formulate his own 'strong opinions' on his employer's affairs is bound to lack one quality essential in all good professionals: namely, loyalty. Please do not misunderstand me here; I do not refer to the mindless sort of 'loyalty' that mediocre employers bemoan the lack of when they find themselves unable to retain the services of high-calibre professionals. Indeed, I would be among the last to advocate bestowing one's loyalty carelessly on any lady or gentleman who happens to employ one for a time. However, if a butler is to be of any worth to anything or anybody in life, there must surely come a time when he ceases his searching; a time when he must say to himself: 'This employer embodies all that I find noble and admirable. I will hereafter devote myself to serving him.' This is loyalty intelligently bestowed. What is there 'undignified' in this? One is simply accepting an inescapable truth: that the likes of you and I will never be in a position to comprehend the great affairs of today's world, and our best course will always be to put our trust in an employer we judge to be wise and honourable, and to devote our energies to the task of serving him to the best of our ability. Look at the likes of Mr Marshall, say, or Mr Lane - surely two of the greatest figures in our profession. Can we imagine Mr Marshall arguing with Lord Camberley over the latter's latest dispatch to the Foreign Office? Do we admire Mr Lane any the less because we learn he is not in the habit of challenging Sir Leonard Gray before each speech in the House of Commons? Of course we do not. What is there 'undignified', what is there at all culpable in such an attitude? How can one possibly be held to blame in any sense because, say, the passage of time has shown that Lord Darlington's efforts were misguided, even foolish? Throughout the years I served him, it was he and he alone who weighed up evidence and judged it best to proceed in the way he did, while I simply confined myself, quite properly, to affairs within my own professional realm. And as far as I am concerned, I carried out my duties to the best of my abilities, indeed to a standard which many may consider 'first rate'. It is hardly my fault if his lordship's life and work have turned out today to look, at best, a sad waste - and it is quite illogical that I should feel any regret or shame on my own account.

DAY FOUR – AFTERNOON

Little Compton, Cornwall

I have finally arrived at Little Compton, and at this moment, am sitting in the dining hall of the Rose Garden Hotel having recently finished lunch. Outside, the rain is falling steadily.

The Rose Garden Hotel, while hardly luxurious, is certainly homely and comfortable, and one cannot begrudge the extra expense of accommodating oneself here. It is conveniently situated on one corner of the village square, a rather charming ivy-covered manor house capable of housing, I would suppose, thirty or so guests. This ‘dining hall’ where I now sit, however, is a modern annexe built to adjoin the main building – a long, flat room characterized by rows of large windows on either side. On one side, the village square is visible; on the other, the rear garden, from which this establishment presumably takes its name. The garden, which seems well sheltered from the wind, has a number of tables arranged about it, and when the weather is fine, I imagine it is a very pleasant place to partake of meals or refreshments. In fact, I know that a little earlier, some guests had actually commenced lunch out there, only to be interrupted by the appearance of ominous storm clouds. When I was first shown in here an hour or so ago, staff were hurriedly stripping down the garden tables – while their recent occupants, including one gentleman with a napkin still tucked into his shirt, were standing about looking rather lost. Then, very soon afterwards, the rain had come down with such ferocity that for a moment all the guests seemed to stop eating just to stare out of the windows.

My own table is on the village square side of the room and I have thus spent much of the past hour watching the rain falling on the square, and upon the Ford and one or two other vehicles stationed outside. The rain has now steadied somewhat, but it is still sufficiently hard as to discourage one from going out and wandering around the village. Of course, the possibility has occurred to me that I might set off now to meet Miss Kenton; but then in my letter, I informed her I would be calling at three o'clock, and I do not think it wise to surprise her by arriving any earlier. It would seem quite likely then, if the rain does not cease very shortly, that I will remain here drinking tea until the proper time comes for me to set off. I have ascertained from the young woman who served me lunch that the address where Miss Kenton is presently residing is some fifteen minutes' walk away, which implies I have at least another forty minutes to wait.

I should say, incidentally, that I am not so foolish as to be unprepared for disappointment. I am only too aware that I never received a reply from Miss Kenton confirming she would be happy about a meeting. However, knowing Miss Kenton as I do, I am inclined to think that a lack of any letter can be taken as agreement; were a meeting for any reason inconvenient, I feel sure she would not have hesitated to inform me. Moreover, I had stated in my letter the fact that I had made a reservation at this hotel and that any last-minute message could be left for me here; that no such message was awaiting me can, I believe, be taken as further reason to suppose all is well.

This present downpour is something of a surprise, since the day started with the bright morning sunshine I have been blessed with each morning since leaving Darlington Hall. In fact, the day had generally begun well with a breakfast of fresh farm eggs and toast, provided for me by Mrs Taylor, and with Dr Carlisle calling by at seven thirty as promised, I was able to take my leave of the Taylors - who continued not to hear of remuneration - before any further embarrassing conversations had had a chance to develop.

‘I found a can of petrol for you,’ Dr Carlisle announced, as he ushered me into the passenger seat of his Rover. I thanked him for his thoughtfulness, but when I made inquiries as to payment, I found that he, too, would hear none of it.

‘Nonsense, old boy. It’s only a little bit I found at the back of my garage. But it’ll be enough for you to reach Crosby Gate and you can fill up good and proper there.’

The village centre of Moscombe, in the morning sunshine, could be seen to be a number of small shops surrounding a church, the steeple of which I had seen from the hill yesterday evening. I had little chance to study the village, however, for Dr Carlisle turned his car briskly into the driveway of a farmyard.

‘Just a little short cut,’ he said, as we made our way past barns and stationary farm vehicles. There seemed to be no persons present anywhere, and at one point, when we were confronted by a closed gate, the doctor said: ‘Sorry, old chap, but if you wouldn’t mind doing the honours.’

Getting out, I went to the gate, and as soon as I did so, a furious chorus of barking erupted in one of the barns near by, so that it was with some relief that I rejoined Dr Carlisle again in the front of his Rover.

We exchanged a few pleasantries as we climbed a narrow road between tall trees, he inquiring after how I had slept at the Taylors and so forth. Then he said quite abruptly:

‘I say, I hope you don’t think me very rude. But you aren’t a manservant of some sort, are you?’

I must confess, my overwhelming feeling on hearing this was one of relief.

‘I am indeed, sir. In fact, I am the butler of Darlington Hall, near Oxford.’

‘Thought so. All that about having met Winston Churchill and so on. I thought to myself, well, either the chap’s been lying his head off, or – then it occurred to me, there’s one simple explanation.’

Dr Carlisle turned to me with a smile as he continued to steer the car up the steep winding road. I said:

‘It wasn’t my intention to deceive anyone, sir. However ...’

‘Oh, no need to explain, old fellow. I can quite see how it happened. I mean to say, you are a pretty impressive specimen. The likes of the people here, they’re bound to take you for at least a lord or a duke.’ The doctor gave a hearty laugh. ‘It must do one good to be mistaken for a lord every now and then.’

We travelled on in silence for a few moments. Then Dr Carlisle said to me: ‘Well, I hope you enjoyed your little stay with us here.’

‘I did very much, thank you, sir.’

‘And what did you make of the citizens of Moscombe? Not such a bad bunch, are they?’

‘Very engaging, sir. Mr and Mrs Taylor were extremely kind.’

‘I wish you wouldn’t call me “sir” like that all the time, Mr Stevens. No, they’re not such a bad bunch at all around here. As far as I’m concerned, I’d happily spend the rest of my life out here.’

I thought I heard something slightly odd in the way Dr Carlisle said this. There was, too, a curiously deliberate edge to the way he went on to inquire again:

‘So you found them an engaging bunch, eh?’

‘Indeed, Doctor. Extremely congenial.’

‘So what were they all telling you about last night? Hope they didn’t bore you silly with all the village gossip.’

‘Not at all, Doctor. As a matter of fact, the conversation tended to be rather earnest in tone and some very interesting viewpoints were expressed.’

‘Oh, you mean Harry Smith,’ the doctor said with a laugh. ‘You shouldn’t mind him. He’s entertaining enough to listen to for a while, but really, he’s all in a muddle. At times you’d think he was some sort of Communist, then he comes out with something that makes him sound true blue Tory. Truth is, he’s all in a muddle.’

‘Ah, that is very interesting to hear.’

‘What did he lecture you on last night? The Empire? The National Health?’

‘Mr Smith restricted himself to more general topics.’

‘Oh? For instance?’

I gave a cough. ‘Mr Smith had some thoughts on the nature of dignity.’

‘I say. Now that sounds rather philosophical for Harry Smith. How the devil did he get on to that?’

‘I believe Mr Smith was stressing the importance of his campaigning work in the village.’

‘Ah, yes?’

‘He was impressing upon me the point that the residents of Moscombe held strong opinions on all manner of great affairs.’

‘Ah, yes. Sounds like Harry Smith. As you probably guessed, that’s all nonsense, of course. Harry’s always going around trying to work everybody up over issues. But the truth is, people are happier left alone.’

We were silent again for a moment or two. Eventually, I said:

‘Excuse me for asking, sir. But may I take it Mr Smith is considered something of a comic figure?’

‘Hmm. That’s taking it a little too far, I’d say. People do have a political conscience of sorts here. They feel they ought to have strong feelings on this and that, just as Harry urges them to. But really, they’re no different from people anywhere. They want a quiet life. Harry has a lot of ideas about changes to this and that, but really, no one in the village wants upheaval, even if it might benefit them. People here want to be left alone to lead their quiet little lives. They don’t want to be bothered with this issue and that issue.’

I was surprised by the tone of disgust that had entered the doctor’s voice. But he recovered himself quickly with a short laugh and remarked:

‘Nice view of the village on your side.’

Indeed, the village had become visible some way below us. Of course, the morning sunshine gave it a very different aspect, but otherwise it looked much the same view as the one I had first encountered in the evening gloom, and I supposed from this that we were now close to the spot where I had left the Ford.

‘Mr Smith seemed to be of the view,’ I said, ‘that a person’s dignity rested on such things. Having strong opinions and such.’

‘Ah, yes, dignity. I was forgetting. Yes, so Harry was trying to tackle philosophical definitions. My word. I take it it was a lot of rot.’

‘His conclusions were not necessarily those that compelled agreement, sir.’

Dr Carlisle nodded, but seemed to have become immersed in his own thoughts. 'You know, Mr Stevens,' he said, eventually, 'when I first came out here, I was a committed socialist. Believed in the best services for all the people and all the rest of it. First came here in ' forty-nine. Socialism would allow people to live with dignity. That's what I believed when I came out here. Sorry, you don't want to hear all this rot.' He turned to me cheerily. 'What about you, old chap?'

'I'm sorry, sir?'

'What do you think dignity's all about?'

The directness of this inquiry did, I admit, take me rather by surprise. 'It's rather a hard thing to explain in a few words, sir,' I said. 'But I suspect it comes down to not removing one's clothing in public.'

'Sorry. What does?'

'Dignity, sir.'

'Ah.' The doctor nodded, but looked a little bemused. Then he said: 'Now, this road should be familiar to you. Probably looks rather different in the daylight. Ah, is that it there? My goodness, what a handsome vehicle!'

Dr Carlisle pulled up just behind the Ford, got out and said again: 'My, what a handsome vehicle.' The next moment he had produced a funnel and a can of petrol and was most kindly assisting me in filling the tank of the Ford. Any fears I had that some deeper trouble was afflicting the Ford were laid to rest when I tried the ignition and heard the engine come to life with a healthy murmur. At this point, I thanked Dr Carlisle and we took leave of each other, though I was obliged to follow the back of his Rover along the twisting hill road for a further mile or so before our routes separated.

It was around nine o' clock that I crossed the border into Cornwall. This was at least three hours before the rain began and the clouds were still all of a brilliant white. In fact, many of the sights that greeted me this morning were among the most charming I have so far encountered. It was unfortunate, then, that I could not for much of the time give to them the attention they warranted; for one may as well declare it, one was in a condition of some preoccupation with the thought that - barring some unseen complication - one would be meeting Miss Kenton again before the day's end. So it was, then, that while speeding along between large open fields, no human being or vehicle apparent for miles, or else steering carefully through marvellous little villages, some no more than a cluster of a few stone cottages, I found myself yet again turning over certain recollections from the past. And now, as I sit here in Little Compton, here in the dining room of this pleasant hotel with a little time on my hands, watching the rain splashing on the pavements of the village square outside, I am unable to prevent my mind from continuing to wander along these same tracks.

One memory in particular has preoccupied me all morning - or rather, a fragment of a memory, a moment that has for some reason remained with me vividly through the years. It is a recollection of standing alone in the back corridor before the closed door of Miss Kenton's parlour; I was not actually facing the door, but standing with my person half turned towards it, transfixed by indecision as to whether or not I should knock; for at that moment, as I recall, I had been struck by the conviction that behind that very door, just a few yards from me, Miss Kenton was in fact crying. As I say, this moment has remained firmly embedded in my mind, as has the memory of the peculiar sensation I felt rising within me as I stood there like that. However, I am not at all certain now as to the actual circumstances which had led me to be standing thus in the back corridor. It occurs to me that elsewhere in attempting to gather such recollections, I may well have asserted that this memory derived from the minutes immediately after Miss Kenton's receiving news of her aunt's death; that is to say, the occasion when, having left her to be alone with her grief, I realized out in the corridor that I had not offered her my condolences. But now, having thought further, I believe I may have been a little confused about this matter; that in fact this fragment of memory derives from events that took place on an evening at least a few months after the death of Miss Kenton's aunt - the evening, in fact, when the young Mr Cardinal turned up at Darlington Hall rather unexpectedly.

Mr Cardinal's father, Sir David Cardinal, had been for many years his lordship's close friend and colleague, but had been tragically killed in a riding accident some three or four years prior to the evening I am now recalling. Meanwhile, the young Mr Cardinal had been building something of a name as a columnist, specializing in witty comments on international affairs. Evidently, these columns were rarely to Lord Darlington's liking, for I can recall numerous instances of his looking up from a journal and saying something like:

'Young Reggie writing such nonsense again. Just as well his father's not alive to read this.' But Mr Cardinal's columns did not prevent him being a frequent visitor at the house; indeed, his lordship never forgot that the young man was his godson and always treated him as kin. At the same time, it had never been Mr Cardinal's habit to turn up to dinner without any prior warning, and I was thus a little surprised when on answering the door that evening I found him standing there, his briefcase cradled in both arms.

'Oh, hello, Stevens, how are you?' he said. 'Just happened to be in a bit of a jam tonight and wondered if Lord Darlington would put me up for the night.'

'It's very nice to see you again, sir. I shall tell his lordship you are here.'

'I'd intended to stay at Mr Roland's place, but there seems to have been some misunderstanding and they've gone away somewhere. Hope it's not too inconvenient a time to call. I mean, nothing special on tonight, is there?'

'I believe, sir, his lordship is expecting some gentlemen to call after dinner.'

'Oh, that's bad luck. I seem to have chosen a bad night. I'd better keep my head low. I've got some pieces I have to work on tonight anyway.' Mr Cardinal indicated his briefcase.

'I shall tell his lordship you are here, sir. You are, in any case, in good time to join him for dinner.'

'Jolly good, I was hoping I might have been. But I don't expect Mrs Mortimer's going to be very pleased with me.'

I left Mr Cardinal in the drawing room and made my way to the study, where I found his lordship working through some pages with a look of deep concentration. When I told him of Mr Cardinal's arrival, a look of surprised annoyance crossed his face. Then he leaned back in his chair as though puzzling something out.

'Tell Mr Cardinal I'll be down shortly,' he said finally. 'He can amuse himself for a little while.'

When I returned downstairs, I discovered Mr Cardinal moving rather restlessly around the drawing room examining objects he must long ago have become familiar with. I conveyed his lordship's message and asked him what refreshment I might bring him.

'Oh, just some tea for now, Stevens. Who's his lordship expecting tonight?'

'I'm sorry, sir, I'm afraid I am unable to help you.'

'No idea at all?'

'I'm sorry, sir.'

'Hmm, curious. Oh, well. Better keep my head low tonight.'

It was not long after this, I recall, that I went down to Miss Kenton's parlour. She was sitting at her table, though there was nothing before her and her hands were empty; indeed, something in her demeanour suggested she had been sitting there like that for some time prior to my knocking.

'Mr Cardinal is here, Miss Kenton,' I said. 'He'll be requiring his usual room tonight.'

'Very good, Mr Stevens. I shall see to it before I leave.'

'Ah. You are going out this evening, Miss Kenton?'

'I am indeed, Mr Stevens.'

Perhaps I looked a little surprised, for she went on: 'You will recall, Mr Stevens, we discussed this a fortnight ago.'

'Yes, of course, Miss Kenton. I beg your pardon, it had just slipped my mind for the moment.'

'Is something the matter, Mr Stevens?'

'Not at all, Miss Kenton. Some visitors are expected this evening, but there is no reason why your presence will be required.'

'We did agree to my taking this evening off a fortnight ago, Mr Stevens.'

'Of course, Miss Kenton. I do beg your pardon.'

I turned to leave, but then I was halted at the door by Miss Kenton saying:

'Mr Stevens, I have something to tell you.'

'Yes, Miss Kenton?'

'It concerns my acquaintance. Who I am going to meet tonight.'

'Yes, Miss Kenton.'

‘He has asked me to marry him. I thought you had a right to know that.’

‘Indeed, Miss Kenton. That is very interesting.’

‘I am still giving the matter thought.’

‘Indeed.’

She glanced down a second at her hands, but then almost immediately her gaze returned to me. ‘My acquaintance is to start a job in the West Country as of next month.’

‘Indeed.’

‘As I say, Mr Stevens, I am still giving the matter some thought. However, I thought you should be informed of the situation.’

‘I’m very grateful, Miss Kenton. I do hope you have a pleasant evening. Now if you will excuse me.’

It must have been twenty minutes or so later that I encountered Miss Kenton again, this time while I was busy with preparations for dinner. In fact, I was half-way up the back staircase, carrying a fully laden tray, when I heard the sound of angry footsteps rattling the floorboards somewhere below me. Turning, I saw Miss Kenton glaring up at me from the foot of the stairs.

‘Mr Stevens, do I understand that you are wishing me to remain on duty this evening?’

‘Not at all, Miss Kenton. As you pointed out, you did notify me some time ago.’

‘But I can see you are very unhappy about my going out tonight.’

‘On the contrary, Miss Kenton.’

‘Do you imagine that by creating so much commotion in the kitchen and by stamping back and forth like this outside my parlour you will get me to change my mind?’

‘Miss Kenton, the slight excitement in the kitchen is solely on account of Mr Cardinal coming to dinner at the last moment. There is absolutely no reason why you should not go out this evening.’

‘I intend to go with or without your blessing, Mr Stevens, I wish to make this clear. I made arrangements weeks ago.’

‘Indeed, Miss Kenton. And once again, I would wish you a very pleasant evening.’

At dinner, an odd atmosphere seemed to hang in the air between the two gentlemen. For long moments, they ate in silence, his lordship in particular seeming very far away. At one point, Mr Cardinal said:

‘Something special tonight, sir?’

‘Eh?’

‘Your visitors this evening. Special?’

‘Afraid I can’t tell you, my boy. Strictly confidential.’

‘Oh dear. I suppose this means I shouldn’t sit in on it.’

‘Sit in on what, my boy?’

‘Whatever it is that’s going to take place tonight?’

‘Oh, it wouldn’t be of any interest to you. In any case, confidentiality is of the utmost. Can’t have someone like you around. Oh no, that wouldn’t do at all.’

‘Oh, dear. This does sound very special.’

Mr Cardinal was watching his lordship very keenly, but the latter simply went back to his food without saying anything further.

The gentlemen retired to the smoking room for port and cigars. In the course of clearing the dining room, and also in preparing the drawing room for the arrival of the evening's visitors, I was obliged to walk repeatedly past the smoking-room doors. It was inevitable, then, that I would notice how the gentlemen, in contrast to their quiet mood at dinner, had begun to exchange words with some urgency. A quarter of an hour later, angry voices were being raised. Of course, I did not stop to listen, but I could not avoid hearing his lordship shouting: 'But that's not your business, my boy! That's not your business!'

I was in the dining room when the gentlemen eventually came out. They seemed to have calmed themselves, and the only words exchanged as they walked across the hall were his lordship's: 'Now remember, my boy. I'm trusting you.' To which Mr Cardinal muttered with irritation: 'Yes, yes, you have my word.' Then their footsteps separated, his lordship's going towards his study, Mr Cardinal's towards the library.

At almost precisely eight thirty, there came the sound of motor cars pulling up in the courtyard. I opened the door to a chauffeur, and past his shoulder I could see some police constables dispersing to various points of the grounds. The next moment, I was showing in two very distinguished gentlemen, who were met by his lordship in the hall and ushered quickly into the drawing room. Ten minutes or so later came the sound of another car and I opened the door to Herr Ribbentrop, the German Ambassador, by now no stranger to Darlington Hall. His lordship emerged to meet him and the two gentlemen appeared to exchange complicit glances before disappearing together into the drawing room. When a few minutes later I was called in to provide refreshments, the four gentlemen were discussing the relative merits of different sorts of sausage, and the atmosphere seemed on the surface at least quite convivial.

Thereafter I took up my position out in the hall - the position near the entrance arch that I customarily took up during important meetings - and was not obliged to move from it again until some two hours later, when the back door bell was rung. On descending, I discovered a police constable standing there with Miss Kenton, requesting that I verify the latter's identity.

'Just security, miss, no offence meant,' the officer muttered as he wandered off again into the night.

As I was bolting the door, I noticed Miss Kenton waiting for me, and said:

'I trust you had a pleasant evening, Miss Kenton.'

She made no reply, so I said again, as we were making our way across the darkened expanse of the kitchen floor: 'I trust you had a pleasant evening, Miss Kenton.'

'I did, thank you, Mr Stevens.'

'I'm pleased to hear that.'

Behind me, Miss Kenton's footsteps came to a sudden halt, and I heard her say:

'Are you not in the least interested in what took place tonight between my acquaintance and I, Mr Stevens?'

'I do not mean to be rude, Miss Kenton, but I really must return upstairs without further delay. The fact is, events of a global significance are taking place in this house at this very moment.'

'When are they not, Mr Stevens? Very well, if you must be rushing off, I shall just tell you that I accepted my acquaintance's proposal.'

'I beg your pardon, Miss Kenton?'

'His proposal of marriage.'

'Ah, is that so, Miss Kenton? Than may I offer you my congratulations.'

'Thank you, Mr Stevens. Of course, I will be happy to serve out my notice. However, should it be that you are able to release me earlier, we would be very grateful. My acquaintance begins his new job in the West Country in two weeks' time.'

'I will do my best to secure a replacement at the earliest opportunity, Miss Kenton. Now if you will excuse me, I must return upstairs.'

I started to walk away again, but then when I had all but reached the doors out to the corridor, I heard Miss Kenton say: 'Mr Stevens,' and thus turned once more. She had not moved, and consequently she was obliged to raise her voice slightly in addressing me, so that it resonated rather oddly in the cavernous spaces of the dark and empty kitchen.

'Am I to take it,' she said, 'that after the many years of service I have given in this house, you have no more words to greet the news of my possible departure than those you have just uttered?'

'Miss Kenton, you have my warmest congratulations. But I repeat, there are matters of global significance taking place upstairs and I must return to my post.'

'Did you know, Mr Stevens, that you have been a very important figure for my acquaintance and I?'

'Really, Miss Kenton?'

'Yes, Mr Stevens. We often pass the time amusing ourselves with anecdotes about you. For instance, my acquaintance is always wanting me to show him the way you pinch your nostrils together when you put pepper on your food. That always get him laughing.'

'Indeed.'

'He's also rather fond of your staff "pep-talks". I must say, I've become quite expert in re-creating them. I only have to do a few lines to have the pair of us in stitches.'

‘Indeed, Miss Kenton. Now you will please excuse me.’

I ascended to the hall and took up my position again. However, before five minutes had passed, Mr Cardinal appeared in the doorway of the library and beckoned me over.

‘Hate to bother you, Stevens,’ he said. ‘But I couldn’t trouble you to fetch a little more brandy, could I? The bottle you brought in earlier appears to be finished.’

‘You are very welcome to whatever refreshments you care for, sir. However, in view of the fact that you have your column to complete, I wonder if it is entirely wise to partake further.’

‘My column will be fine, Stevens. Do get me a little more brandy, there’s a good fellow.’

‘Very well, sir.’

When I returned to the library a moment later, Mr Cardinal was wandering around the shelves, scrutinizing spines. I could see papers scattered untidily over one of the writing desks nearby. As I approached, Mr Cardinal made an appreciative sound and slumped down into a leather armchair. I went over to him, poured a little brandy and handed it to him.

‘You know, Stevens,’ he said, ‘we’ve been friends for some time now, haven’t we?’

‘Indeed, sir.’

‘I always look forward to a little chat with you whenever I come here.’

‘Yes, sir.’

‘Won’t you care to join me in a little drink?’

‘That’s very kind of you, sir. But no, thank you, I won’t.’

‘I say, Stevens, are you all right there?’

‘Perfectly all right, thank you, sir,’ I said with a small laugh.

‘Not feeling unwell, are you?’

‘A little tired, perhaps, but I’m perfectly fine, thank you, sir.’

‘Well, then, you should sit down. Anyway, as I was saying. We’ve been friends for some time. So I really ought to be truthful with you. As you no doubt guessed, I didn’t happen by tonight just by accident. I had a tip-off, you see. About what’s going on. Over there across the hall at this very moment.’

‘Yes, sir.’

‘I do wish you’d sit down, Stevens. I want us to talk as friends, and you’re standing there holding that blasted tray looking like you’re about to wander off any second.’

‘I’m sorry, sir.’

I put down my tray and seated myself – in an appropriate posture – on the armchair Mr Cardinal was indicating.

‘That’s better,’ Mr Cardinal said. ‘Now, Stevens, I don’t suppose the Prime Minister is presently in the drawing room, is he?’

‘The Prime Minister, sir?’

‘Oh, it’s all right, you don’t have to tell me. I understand you’re in a tricky position.’ Mr Cardinal heaved a sigh, and looked wearily towards his papers scattered over the desk. Then he said:

‘I hardly need to tell you, do I, Stevens, what I feel towards his lordship. I mean to say, he’s been like a second father to me. I hardly need to tell you, Stevens.’

‘No, sir.’

‘I care deeply for him.’

‘Yes, sir.’

‘And I know you do too. Care deeply for him. Don’t you, Stevens?’

‘I do indeed, sir.’

‘Good. So we both know where we stand. But let’s face facts. His lordship is in deep waters. I’ve watched him swimming further and further out and let me tell you, I’m getting very anxious. He’s out of his depth, you see, Stevens.’

‘Is that so, sir?’

‘Stevens, do you know what is happening at this very moment as we sit here talking? What’s happening just several yards from us? Over in that room – and I don’t need you to confirm it – there is gathered at this moment the British Prime Minister, the Foreign Secretary and the German Ambassador. His lordship has worked wonders to bring this meeting about, and he believes – faithfully believes – he’s doing something good and honourable. Do you know why his lordship has brought these gentlemen here tonight? Do you know, Stevens, what is going on here?’

‘I’m afraid not, sir.’

‘You’re afraid not. Tell me, Stevens, don’t you care at all? Aren’t you curious? Good God, man, something very crucial is going on in this house. Aren’t you at all curious?’

‘It is not my place to be curious about such matters, sir.’

‘But you care about his lordship. You care deeply, you just told me that. If you care about his lordship, shouldn’t you be concerned? At least a little curious? The British Prime Minister and the German Ambassador are brought together by your employer for secret talks in the night, and you’re not even curious?’

‘I would not say I am not curious, sir. However, it is not my position to display curiosity about such matters.’

‘It’s not your position? Ah, I suppose you believe that to be loyalty. Do you? Do you think that’s being loyal? To his lordship? Or to the Crown, come to that?’

‘I’m sorry, sir, I fail to see what it is you are proposing.’

Mr Cardinal sighed again and shook his head. ‘I’m not proposing anything, Stevens. Quite frankly, I don’t know what’s to be done. But you might at least be curious.’

He was silent for a moment, during which time he seemed to be gazing emptily at the area of carpet around my feet.

‘Sure you won’t join me in a drink, Stevens?’ he said eventually.

‘No, thank you, sir.’

‘I’ll tell you this, Stevens. His lordship is being made a fool of. I’ve done a lot of investigating, I know the situation in Germany now as well as anyone in this country, and I tell you, his lordship is being made a fool of.’

I gave no reply, and Mr Cardinal went on gazing emptily at the floor. After a while, he continued:

‘His lordship is a dear, dear man. But the fact is, he is out of his depth. He is being manoeuvred. The Nazis are manoeuvring him like a pawn. Have you noticed this, Stevens? Have you noticed this is what has been happening for the last three or four years at least?’

‘I’m sorry, sir, I have failed to notice any such development.’

‘Haven’t you ever had a suspicion? The smallest suspicion that Herr Hitler, through our dear friend Herr Ribbentrop, has been manoeuvring his lordship like a pawn, just as easily as he manoeuvres any of his other pawns back in Berlin? ’

‘I’m sorry, sir, I’m afraid I have not noticed any such development. ’

‘But I suppose you wouldn’t, Stevens, because you’re not curious. You just let all this go on before you and you never think to look at it for what it is. ’

Mr Cardinal adjusted his position in the armchair so that he was a little more upright, and for a moment he seemed to be contemplating his unfinished work on the desk near by. Then he said:

‘His lordship is a gentleman. That’s what’s at the root of it. He’s a gentleman, and he fought a war with the Germans, and it’s his instinct to offer generosity and friendship to a defeated foe. It’s his instinct. Because he’s a gentleman, a true old English gentleman. And you must have seen it, Stevens. How could you not have seen it? The way they’ve used it, manipulated it, turned something fine and noble into something else – something they can use for their own foul ends? You must have seen it, Stevens. ’

Mr Cardinal was once again staring at the floor. He remained silent for a few moments, then he said:

‘I remember coming here years ago, and there was this American chap here. We were having a big conference, my father was involved in organizing it. I remember this American chap, even drunker than I am now, he got up at the dinner table in front of the whole company. And he pointed at his lordship and called him an amateur. Called him a bungling amateur and said he was out of his depth. Well, I have to say, Stevens, that American chap was quite right. It’s a fact of life. Today’s world is too foul a place for fine and noble instincts. You’ve seen it yourself, haven’t you, Stevens? The way they’ve manipulated something fine and noble. You’ve seen it yourself, haven’t you? ’

‘I’m sorry, sir, but I can’t say I have.’

‘You can’t say you have. Well, I don’t know about you, but I’m going to do something about it. If Father were alive, he would do something to stop it.’

Mr Cardinal fell silent again and for a moment – perhaps it was to do with his having evoked memories of his late father – he looked extremely melancholy. ‘Are you content, Stevens,’ he said finally, ‘to watch his lordship go over the precipice just like that?’

‘I’m sorry, sir, I don’t fully understand what it is you’re referring to.’

‘You don’t understand, Stevens. Well, we’re friends and so I’ll put it to you frankly. Over the last few years, his lordship has probably been the single most useful pawn Herr Hitler has had in this country for his propaganda tricks. All the better because he’s sincere and honourable and doesn’t recognize the true nature of what he’s doing. During the last three years alone, his lordship has been crucially instrumental in establishing links between Berlin and over sixty of the most influential citizens of this country. It’s worked beautifully for them. Herr Ribbentrop’s been able virtually to bypass our foreign office altogether. And as if their wretched Rally and their wretched Olympic Games weren’t enough, do you know what they’ve got his lordship working on now? Do you have any idea what is being discussed now?’

‘I’m afraid not, sir.’

‘His lordship has been trying to persuade the Prime Minister himself to accept an invitation to visit Herr Hitler. He really believes there’s a terrible misunderstanding on the Prime Minister’s part concerning the present German regime.’

‘I cannot see what there is to object to in that, sir. His lordship has always striven to aid better understanding between nations.’

‘And that’s not all, Stevens. At this very moment, unless I am very much mistaken, at this very moment, his lordship is discussing the idea of His Majesty himself visiting Herr Hitler. It’s hardly a secret our new king has always been an enthusiast for the Nazis. Well, apparently he’s now keen to accept Herr Hitler’s invitation. At this very moment, Stevens, his lordship is doing what he can to remove Foreign Office objections to this appalling idea.’

‘I’m sorry, sir, but I cannot see that his lordship is doing anything other than that which is highest and noblest. He is doing what he can, after all, to ensure that peace will continue to prevail in Europe.’

‘Tell me, Stevens, aren’t you struck by even the remote possibility that I am correct? Are you not, at least, curious about what I am saying?’

‘I’m sorry, sir, but I have to say that I have every trust in his lordship’s good judgement.’

‘No one with good judgement could persist in believing anything Herr Hitler says after the Rhineland, Stevens. His lordship is out of his depth. Oh dear, now I’ve really offended you.’

‘Not at all, sir,’ I said, for I had risen on hearing the bell from the drawing room. ‘I appear to be required by the gentlemen. Please excuse me.’

In the drawing room, the air was thick with tobacco smoke. Indeed, the distinguished gentlemen continued to smoke their cigars, solemn expressions on their faces, not uttering a word, while his lordship instructed me to bring up a certain exceptionally fine bottle of port from the cellar.

At such a time of night, one’s footsteps descending the back staircase are bound to be conspicuous and no doubt they were responsible for arousing Miss Kenton. For as I was making my way along the darkness of the corridor, the door to her parlour opened and she appeared at the threshold, illuminated by the light from within.

‘I am surprised to find you still down here, Miss Kenton,’ I said as I approached.

‘Mr Stevens, I was very foolish earlier on.’

‘Excuse me, Miss Kenton, but I have not time to talk just now.’

‘Mr Stevens, you mustn’t take anything I said earlier to heart. I was simply being foolish.’

‘I have not taken anything you have said to heart, Miss Kenton. In fact, I cannot recall what it is you might be referring to. Events of great importance are unfolding upstairs and I can hardly stop to exchange pleasantries with you. I would suggest you retire for the night.’

With that I hurried on, and it was not until I had all but reached the kitchen doors that the darkness falling again in the corridor told me Miss Kenton had closed her parlour door.

It did not take me long to locate the bottle in question down in the cellar and to make the necessary preparations for its serving. It was, then, only a few minutes after my short encounter with Miss Kenton that I found myself walking down the corridor again on my return journey, this time bearing a tray. As I approached Miss Kenton’s door, I saw from the light seeping around its edges that she was still within. And that was the moment, I am now sure, that has remained so persistently lodged in my memory – that moment as I paused in the dimness of the corridor, the tray in my hands, an ever-growing conviction mounting within me that just a few yards away, on the other side of that door, Miss Kenton was at that moment crying. As I recall, there was no real evidence to account for this conviction – I had certainly not heard any sounds of crying – and yet I remember being quite certain that were I to knock and enter, I would discover her in tears. I do not know how long I remained standing there; at the time it seemed a significant period, but in reality, I suspect, it was only a matter of a few seconds. For, of course, I was required to hurry upstairs to serve some of the most distinguished gentlemen of the land and I cannot imagine I would have delayed unduly.

When I returned to the drawing room, I saw that the gentlemen were still in a rather serious mood. Beyond this, however, I had little chance to gain any impression of the atmosphere, for no sooner had I entered than his lordship was taking the tray from me, saying: 'Thank you, Stevens, I'll see to it. That'll be all.'

Crossing the hall again, I took up my usual position beneath the arch, and for the next hour or so, until, that is, the gentlemen finally departed, no event occurred which obliged me to move from my spot. Nevertheless, that hour I spent standing there has stayed very vividly in my mind throughout the years. At first, my mood was - I do not mind admitting it - somewhat downcast. But then as I continued to stand there, a curious thing began to take place; that is to say, a deep feeling of triumph started to well up within me. I cannot remember to what extent I analysed this feeling at the time, but today, looking back on it, it does not seem so difficult to account for. I had, after all, just come through an extremely trying evening, throughout which I had managed to preserve a 'dignity in keeping with my position' - and had done so, moreover, in a manner even my father might have been proud of. And there across the hall, behind the very doors upon which my gaze was then resting, within the very room where I had just executed my duties, the most powerful gentlemen of Europe were conferring over the fate of our continent. Who would doubt at that moment that I had indeed come as close to the great hub of things as any butler could wish? I would suppose, then, that as I stood there pondering the events of the evening - those that had unfolded and those still in the process of doing so - they appeared to me a sort of summary of all that I had come to achieve thus far in my life. I can see few other explanations for that sense of triumph I came to be uplifted by that night.

DAY SIX – EVENING

Weymouth

This seaside town is a place I have thought of coming to for many years. I have heard various people talk of having spent a pleasant holiday here, and Mrs Symons too, in The Wonder of England, calls it a ‘town that can keep the visitor fully entertained for many days on end’. In fact, she makes special mention of this pier, upon which I have been promenading for the past half-hour, recommending particularly that it be visited in the evening when it becomes lit up with bulbs of various colours. A moment ago, I learnt from an official that the lights would be switched on ‘fairly soon’, and so I have decided to sit down here on this bench and await the event. I have a good view from here of the sun setting over the sea, and though there is still plenty of daylight left – it has been a splendid day – I can see, here and there, lights starting to come on all along the shore. Meanwhile, the pier remains busy with people; behind me, the drumming of numerous footsteps upon these boards continues without interruption.

I arrived in this town yesterday afternoon, and have decided to remain a second night here so as to allow myself this whole day to spend in a leisurely manner. And I must say, it has been something of a relief not to be motoring; for enjoyable though the activity can be, one can also get a little weary of it after a while. In any case, I can well afford the time to remain this further day here; an early start tomorrow will ensure that I am back at Darlington Hall by teatime.

It is now fully two days since my meeting with Miss Kenton in the tea lounge of the Rose Garden Hotel in Little Compton. For indeed, that was where we met, Miss Kenton surprising me by coming to the hotel. I had been whiling away some time after finishing my lunch - I was, I believe, simply staring at the rain from the window by my table - when a member of the hotel staff had come to inform me that a lady was wishing to see me at the reception. I rose and went out into the lobby, where I could see no one I recognized. But then the receptionist had said from behind her counter: 'The lady's in the tea lounge, sir.'

Going in through the door indicated, I discovered a room filled with ill-matching armchairs and occasional tables. There was no one else present other than Miss Kenton, who rose as I entered, smiled and held out her hand to me.

'Ah, Mr Stevens. How nice to see you again.'

'Mrs Benn, how lovely.'

The light in the room was extremely gloomy on account of the rain, and so we moved two armchairs up close to the bay window. And that was how Miss Kenton and I talked for the next two hours or so, there in the pool of grey light while the rain continued to fall steadily on the square outside.

She had, naturally, aged somewhat, but to my eyes at least, she seemed to have done so very gracefully. Her figure remained slim, her posture as upright as ever. She had maintained, too, her old way of holding her head in a manner that verged on the defiant. Of course, with the bleak light falling on her face, I could hardly help but notice the lines that had appeared here and there. But by and large the Miss Kenton I saw before me looked surprisingly similar to the person who had inhabited my memory over these years. That is to say, it was, on the whole, extremely pleasing to see her again.

For the first twenty or so minutes, I would say we exchanged the sort of remarks strangers might; she inquired politely about my journey thus far, how I was enjoying my holiday, which towns and landmarks I had visited and so on. As we continued to talk, I must say I thought I began to notice further, more subtle changes which the years had wrought on her. For instance, Miss Kenton appeared, somehow, slower. It is possible this was simply the calmness that comes with age, and I did try hard for some time to see it as such. But I could not escape the feeling that what I was really seeing was a weariness with life; the spark which had once made her such a lively, and at times volatile person seemed now to have gone. In fact, every now and then, when she was not speaking, when her face was in repose, I thought I glimpsed something like sadness in her expression. But then again, I may well have been mistaken about this.

After a little while, what little awkwardness as existed during the initial minutes of our meeting had dissipated completely, and our conversation took a more personal turn. We spent some time reminiscing about various persons from the past, or else exchanging any news we had concerning them, and this was, I must say, most enjoyable. But it was not so much the content of our conversation as the little smiles she gave at the end of utterances, her small ironic inflexions here and there, certain gestures with her shoulders or her hands, which began to recall unmistakably the rhythms and habits of our conversations from all those years ago.

It was around this point, also, that I was able to establish some facts concerning her present circumstances. For instance, I learnt that her marriage was not in quite as parlous a state as might have been supposed from her letter; that although she had indeed left her home for a period of four or five days - during which time the letter I had received had been composed - she had returned home and Mr Benn had been very pleased to have her back. 'It's just as well one of us is sensible about these things,' she said with a smile.

I am aware, of course, that such matters were hardly any of my business, and I should make clear I would not have dreamt of prying into these areas were it not that I did have, you might recall, important professional reasons for doing so; that is to say, in respect of the present staffing problems at Darlington Hall. In any case, Miss Kenton did not seem to mind at all confiding in me over these matters and I took this as a pleasing testimony to the strength of the close working relationship we had once had.

For a little while after that, I recall, Miss Kenton went on talking more generally about her husband, who is to retire soon, a little early on account of poor health, and of her daughter, who is now married and expecting a child in the autumn. In fact, Miss Kenton gave me her daughter's address in Dorset, and I must say, I was rather flattered to see how keen she was that I call in on my return journey. Although I explained that it was unlikely I would pass through that part of Dorset, Miss Kenton continued to press me, saying: 'Catherine's heard all about you, Mr Stevens. She'd be so thrilled to meet you.'

For my own part, I tried to describe to her as best I could the Darlington Hall of today. I attempted to convey to her what a genial employer Mr Farraday is; and I described the changes to the house itself, the alterations and the dust-sheetings, as well as the present staffing arrangements. Miss Kenton, I thought, became visibly happier when I talked about the house and soon we were recollecting together various old memories, frequently laughing over them.

Only once do I recall our touching upon Lord Darlington. We had been enjoying some recollection or other concerning the young Mr Cardinal, so that I was then obliged to go on to inform Miss Kenton of the gentleman's being killed in Belgium during the war. And I had gone on to say: 'Of course, his lordship was very fond of Mr Cardinal and took it very badly.'

I did not wish to spoil the pleasant atmosphere with unhappy talk, so tried to leave the topic again almost immediately. But as I had feared, Miss Kenton had read of the unsuccessful libel action, and inevitably, took the opportunity to probe me a little. As I recall, I rather resisted being drawn in, though in the end I did say to her:

‘The fact is, Mrs Benn, throughout the war, some truly terrible things had been said about his lordship - and by that newspaper in particular. He bore it all while the country remained in peril, but once the war was over, and the insinuations simply continued, well, his lordship saw no reason to go on suffering in silence. It’s easy enough to see now, perhaps, all the dangers of going to court just at that time, what with the climate as it was. But there you are. His lordship sincerely believed he would get justice. Instead, of course, the newspaper simply increased its circulation. And his lordship’s good name was destroyed for ever. Really, Mrs Benn, afterwards, well, his lordship was virtually an invalid. And the house became so quiet. I would take him tea in the drawing room and, well ... It really was most tragic to see.’

‘I’m very sorry, Mr Stevens. I had no idea things had been so bad.’

‘Oh yes, Mrs Benn. But enough of this. I know you remember Darlington Hall in the days when there were great gatherings, when it was filled with distinguished visitors. Now that’s the way his lordship deserves to be remembered.’

As I say, that was the only time we mentioned Lord Darlington. Predominantly, we concerned ourselves with very happy memories, and those two hours we spent together in the tea lounge were, I would say, extremely pleasant ones. I seem to remember various other guests coming in while we were talking, sitting down for a few moments and leaving again, but they did not distract us in any way at all. Indeed, one could hardly believe two whole hours had elapsed when Miss Kenton looked up at the clock on the mantelshelf and said she would have to be returning home. On establishing that she would have to walk in the rain to the bus stop a little way out of the village, I insisted on running her there in the Ford, and so it was that after obtaining an umbrella from the reception desk, we stepped outside together.

Large puddles had formed on the ground around where I had left the Ford, obliging me to assist Miss Kenton a little to allow her to reach the passenger door. Soon, however, we were motoring down the village high street, and then the shops had gone and we found ourselves in open country. Miss Kenton, who had been sitting quietly watching the passing view, turned to me at this point, saying:

‘What are you smiling to yourself about like that, Mr Stevens?’

‘Oh ... You must excuse me, Mrs Benn, but I was just recalling certain things you wrote in your letter. I was a little worried when I read them, but I see now I had little reason to be.’

‘Oh? What things in particular do you mean, Mr Stevens?’

‘Oh, nothing in particular, Mrs Benn.’

‘Oh, Mr Stevens, you really must tell me.’

‘Well, for instance, Mrs Benn,’ I said with a laugh, ‘at one point in your letter, you write - now let me see - “the rest of my life stretches out like an emptiness before me”. Some words to that effect.’

‘Really, Mr Stevens,’ she said, also laughing a little. ‘I couldn’t have written any such thing.’

‘Oh, I assure you you did, Mrs Benn. I recall it very clearly.’

‘Oh dear. Well, perhaps there are some days when I feel like that. But they pass quickly enough. Let me assure you, Mr Stevens, my life does not stretch out emptily before me. For one thing, we are looking forward to the grandchild. The first of a few perhaps.’

‘Yes, indeed. That will be splendid for you.’

We drove on quietly for a few further moments. Then Miss Kenton said:

‘And what about you, Mr Stevens? What does the future hold for you back at Darlington Hall?’

‘Well, whatever awaits me, Mrs Benn, I know I’m not awaited by emptiness. If only I were. But oh no, there’s work, work and more work.’

We both laughed at this. Then Miss Kenton pointed out a bus shelter visible further up the road. As we approached it, she said:

‘Will you wait with me, Mr Stevens? The bus will only be a few minutes.’

The rain was still falling steadily as we got out of the car and hurried towards the shelter. This latter - a stone construct complete with a tiled roof - looked very sturdy, as indeed it needed to be, standing as it did in a highly exposed position against a background of empty fields. Inside, the paint was peeling everywhere, but the place was clean enough. Miss Kenton seated herself on the bench provided, while I remained on my feet where I could command a view of the approaching bus. On the other side of the road, all I could see were more farm fields; a line of telegraph poles led my eye over them into the far distance.

After we had been waiting in silence for a few minutes, I finally brought myself to say:

‘Excuse me, Mrs Benn. But the fact is we may not meet again for a long time. I wonder if you would perhaps permit me to ask you something of a rather personal order. It is something that has been troubling me for some time.’

‘Certainly, Mr Stevens. We are old friends after all.’

‘Indeed, as you say, we are old friends. I simply wished to ask you, Mrs Benn. Please do not reply if you feel you shouldn’t. But the fact is, the letters I have had from you over the years, and in particular the last letter, have tended to suggest that you are - how might one put it? - rather unhappy. I simply wondered if you were being ill-treated in some way. Forgive me, but as I say, it is something that has worried me for some time. I would feel foolish had I come all this way and seen you and not at least asked you.’

‘Mr Stevens, there’s no need to be so embarrassed. We’re old friends, after all, are we not? In fact, I’m very touched you should be so concerned. And I can put your mind at rest on this matter absolutely. My husband does not mistreat me at all in any way. He is not in the least a cruel or ill-tempered man.’

‘I must say, Mrs Benn, that does take a load from my mind.’

I leaned forward into the rain, looking for signs of the bus.

‘I can see you are not very satisfied, Mr Stevens,’ Miss Kenton said. ‘Do you not believe me?’

‘Oh, it’s not that, Mrs Benn, not that at all. It’s just that the fact remains, you do not seem to have been happy over the years. That is to say - forgive me - you have taken it on yourself to leave your husband on a number of occasions. If he does not mistreat you, then, well ... one is rather mystified as to the cause of your unhappiness.’

I looked out into the drizzle again. Eventually, I heard Miss Kenton say behind me: ‘Mr Stevens, how can I explain? I hardly know myself why I do such things. But it’s true, I’ve left three times now.’ She paused a moment, during which time I continued to gaze out towards the fields on the other side of the road. Then she said: 'I suppose, Mr Stevens, you're asking whether or not I love my husband.'

'Really, Mrs Benn, I would hardly presume ...'

'I feel I should answer you, Mr Stevens. As you say, we may not meet again for many years. Yes, I do love my husband. I didn't at first. I didn't at first for a long time. When I left Darlington Hall all those years ago, I never realized I was really, truly leaving. I believe I thought of it as simply another ruse, Mr Stevens, to annoy you. It was a shock to come out here and find myself married. For a long time, I was very unhappy, very unhappy indeed. But then year after year went by, there was the war, Catherine grew up, and one day I realized I loved my husband. You spend so much time with someone, you find you get used to him. He's a kind, steady man, and yes, Mr Stevens, I've grown to love him.'

Miss Kenton fell silent again for a moment. Then she went on:

'But that doesn't mean to say, of course, there aren't occasions now and then - extremely desolate occasions - when you think to yourself: "What a terrible mistake I've made with my life." And you get to thinking about a different life, a better life you might have had. For instance, I get to thinking about a life I might have had with you, Mr Stevens. And I suppose that's when I get angry over some trivial little thing and leave. But each time I do so, I realize before long - my rightful place is with my husband. After all, there's no turning back the clock now. One can't be forever dwelling on what might have been. One should realize one has as good as most, perhaps better, and be grateful.'

I do not think I responded immediately, for it took me a moment or two to fully digest these words of Miss Kenton. Moreover, as you might appreciate, their implications were such as to provoke a certain degree of sorrow within me. Indeed - why should I not admit it? - at that moment, my heart was breaking. Before long, however, I turned to her and said with a smile:

‘You’re very correct, Mrs Benn. As you say, it is too late to turn back the clock. Indeed, I would not be able to rest if I thought such ideas were the cause of unhappiness for you and your husband. We must each of us, as you point out, be grateful for what we do have. And from what you tell me, Mrs Benn, you have reason to be contented. In fact I would venture, what with Mr Benn retiring, and with grandchildren on the way, that you and Mr Benn have some extremely happy years before you. You really mustn’t let any more foolish ideas come between yourself and the happiness you deserve.’

‘Of course, you’re right, Mr Stevens. You’re so kind.’

‘Ah, Mrs Benn, that appears to be the bus coming now.’

I stepped outside and signalled, while Miss Kenton rose and came to the edge of the shelter. Only as the bus pulled up did I glance at Miss Kenton and perceived that her eyes had filled with tears. I smiled and said:

‘Now, Mrs Benn, you must take good care of yourself. Many say retirement is the best part of life for a married couple. You must do all you can to make these years happy ones for yourself and your husband. We may never meet again, Mrs Benn, so I would ask you to take good heed of what I am saying.’

‘I will, Mr Stevens, thank you. And thank you for the lift. It was so very kind of you. It was so nice to see you again.’

‘It was a great pleasure to see you again, Mrs Benn.’

The pier lights have been switched on and behind me a crowd of people have just given a loud cheer to greet this event. There is still plenty of daylight left – the sky over the sea has turned a pale red – but it would seem that all these people who have been gathering on this pier for the past half-hour are now willing night to fall. This confirms very aptly, I suppose, the point made by the man who until a little while ago was sitting here beside me on this bench, and with whom I had my curious discussion. His claim was that for a great many people, the evening was the best part of the day, the part they most looked forward to. And as I say, there would appear to be some truth in this assertion, for why else would all these people give a spontaneous cheer simply because the pier lights have come on?

Of course, the man had been speaking figuratively, but it is rather interesting to see his words borne out so immediately at the literal level. I would suppose he had been sitting here next to me for some minutes without my noticing him, so absorbed had I become with my recollections of meeting Miss Kenton two days ago. In fact, I do not think I registered his presence on the bench at all until he declared out loud:

‘Sea air does you a lot of good.’

I looked up and saw a heavily built man, probably in his late sixties, wearing a rather tired tweed jacket, his shirt open at the neck. He was gazing out over the water, perhaps at some seagulls in the far distance, and so it was not at all clear that he had been talking to me. But since no one else responded, and since I could see no other obvious persons close by who might do so, I eventually said:

‘Yes, I’m sure it does.’

‘The doctor says it does you good. So I come up here as much as the weather will let me.’

The man went on to tell me about his various ailments, only very occasionally turning his eyes away from the sunset in order to give me a nod or a grin. I really only started to pay any attention at all when he happened to mention that until his retirement three years ago, he had been a butler of a nearby house. On inquiring further, I ascertained that the house had been a very small one in which he had been the only full-time employee. When I asked him if he had ever worked with a proper staff under him, perhaps before the war, he replied:

‘Oh, in those days, I was just a footman. I wouldn’t have had the know-how to be a butler in those days. You’d be surprised what it involved when you had those big houses you had then.’

At this point, I thought it appropriate to reveal my identity, and although I am not sure ‘Darlington Hall’ meant anything to him, my companion seemed suitably impressed.

‘And here I was trying to explain it all to you,’ he said with a laugh. ‘Good job you told me when you did before I made a right fool of myself. Just shows you never know who you’re addressing when you start talking to a stranger. So you had a big staff, I suppose. Before the war, I mean.’

He was a cheerful fellow and seemed genuinely interested, so I confess I did spend a little time telling him about Darlington Hall in former days. In the main, I tried to convey to him some of the ‘know-how’, as he put it, involved in overseeing large events of the sort we used often to have. Indeed, I believe I even revealed to him several of my professional ‘secrets’ designed to bring that extra bit out of staff, as well as the various ‘sleights-of-hand’ – the equivalent of a conjuror’s – by which a butler could cause a thing to occur at just the right time and place without guests even glimpsing the often large and complicated manoeuvre behind the operation. As I say, my companion seemed genuinely interested, but after a time I felt I had revealed enough and so concluded by saying:

‘Of course, things are quite different today under my present employer. An American gentleman.’

‘American, eh? Well, they’re the only ones can afford it now. So you stayed on with the house. Part of the package.’ He turned and gave me a grin.

‘Yes,’ I said, laughing a little. ‘As you say, part of the package.’

The man turned his gaze back to the sea again, took a deep breath and sighed contentedly. We then proceeded to sit there together quietly for several moments.

‘The fact is, of course,’ I said after a while, ‘I gave my best to Lord Darlington. I gave him the very best I had to give, and now – well – I find I do not have a great deal more left to give.’

The man said nothing, but nodded, so I went on:

‘Since my new employer Mr Farraday arrived, I’ve tried very hard, very hard indeed, to provide the sort of service I would like him to have. I’ve tried and tried, but whatever I do I find I am far from reaching the standards I once set myself. More and more errors are appearing in my work. Quite trivial in themselves – at least so far. But they’re of the sort I would never have made before, and I know what they signify. Goodness knows, I’ve tried and tried, but it’s no use. I’ve given what I had to give. I gave it all to Lord Darlington.’

‘Oh dear, mate. Here, you want a hankie? I’ve got one somewhere. Here we are. It’s fairly clean. Just blew my nose once this morning, that’s all. Have a go, mate.’

‘Oh dear, no, thank you, it’s quite all right. I’m very sorry, I’m afraid the travelling has tired me. I’m very sorry.’

‘You must have been very attached to this Lord whatever. And it’s three years since he passed away, you say? I can see you were very attached to him, mate.’

‘Lord Darlington wasn’t a bad man. He wasn’t a bad man at all. And at least he had the privilege of being able to say at the end of his life that he made his own mistakes. His lordship was a courageous man. He chose a certain path in life, it proved to be a misguided one, but there, he chose it, he can say that at least. As for myself, I cannot even claim that. You see, I trusted. I trusted in his lordship’s wisdom. All those years I served him, I trusted I was doing something worthwhile. I can’t even say I made my own mistakes. Really - one has to ask oneself - what dignity is there in that?’

‘Now, look, mate, I’m not sure I follow everything you’re saying. But if you ask me, your attitude’s all wrong, see? Don’t keep looking back all the time, you’re bound to get depressed. And all right, you can’t do your job as well as you used to. But it’s the same for all of us, see? We’ve all got to put our feet up at some point. Look at me. Been happy as a lark since the day I retired. All right, so neither of us are exactly in our first flush of youth, but you’ve got to keep looking forward.’ And I believe it was then that he said: ‘You’ve got to enjoy yourself. The evening’s the best part of the day. You’ve done your day’s work. Now you can put your feet up and enjoy it. That’s how I look at it. Ask anybody, they’ll all tell you. The evening’s the best part of the day.’

‘I’m sure you’re quite correct,’ I said. ‘I’m so sorry, this is so unseemly. I suspect I’m over-tired. I’ve been travelling rather a lot, you see.’

It is now some twenty minutes since the man left, but I have remained here on this bench to await the event that has just taken place - namely, the switching on of the pier lights. As I say, the happiness with which the pleasure-seekers gathering on this pier greeted this small event would tend to vouch for the correctness of my companion’s words; for a great many people, the evening is the most enjoyable part of the day. Perhaps, then, there is something to his advice that I should cease looking back so much, that I should adopt a more positive outlook and try to make the best of what remains of my day. After all, what can we ever gain in forever looking back and blaming ourselves if our lives have not turned out quite as we might have wished? The hard reality is, surely, that for the likes of you and me, there is little choice other than to leave our fate, ultimately, in the hands of those great gentlemen at the hub of this world who employ our services. What is the point in worrying oneself too much about what one could or could not have done to control the course one's life took? Surely it is enough that the likes of you and me at least try to make a small contribution count for something true and worthy. And if some of us are prepared to sacrifice much in life in order to pursue such aspirations, surely that is in itself, whatever the outcome, cause for pride and contentment.

A few minutes ago, incidentally, shortly after the lights came on, I did turn on my bench a moment to study more closely these throngs of people laughing and chatting behind me. There are people of all ages strolling around this pier: families with children; couples, young and elderly, walking arm in arm. There is a group of six or seven people gathered just a little way behind me who have aroused my curiosity a little. I naturally assumed at first that they were a group of friends out together for the evening. But as I listened to their exchanges, it became apparent they were strangers who had just happened upon one another here on this spot behind me. Evidently, they had all paused a moment for the lights coming on, and then proceeded to fall into conversation with one another. As I watch them now, they are laughing together merrily. It is curious how people can build such warmth among themselves so swiftly. It is possible these particular persons are simply united by the anticipation of the evening ahead. But, then, I rather fancy it has more to do with this skill of bantering. Listening to them now, I can hear them exchanging one bantering remark after another. It is, I would suppose, the way many people like to proceed. In fact, it is possible my bench companion of a while ago expected me to banter with him - in which case, I suppose I was something of a sorry disappointment. Perhaps it is indeed time I began to look at this whole matter of bantering more enthusiastically. After all, when one thinks about it, it is not such a foolish thing to indulge in - particularly if it is the case that in bantering lies the key to human warmth.

It occurs to me, furthermore, that bantering is hardly an unreasonable duty for an employer to expect a professional to perform. I have of course already devoted much time to developing my bantering skills, but it is possible I have never previously approached the task with the commitment I might have done. Perhaps, then, when I return to Darlington Hall tomorrow - Mr Farraday will not himself be back for a further week - I will begin practising with renewed effort. I should hope, then, that by the time of my employer's return, I shall be in a position to pleasantly surprise him.

第一章

我的名字叫凯西·H，三十一岁，我做护理员已经有十一年了。听起来这时间很长，我知道，但实际上，他们还想让我再干八个月，直到今年年底。到那时我就总共干了差不多正好十二年了。我知道，我做护理员这么久倒不一定是因为他们觉得我做这工作做得太好。有些非常好的护理员，才干了两三年就奉命停止了。我也知道至少有一个护理员，根本就是白占地方，可是足足干满了十四年。因此我不是自我吹嘘。可我知道，事实上他们对我的工作很满意，总的来说，我自己也很满意。我的捐献者总是能比预计要好很多。他们恢复时间相当不错，即便是第四次捐献之前，他们中也极少有人被归到“不安”类别中。好吧，也许我的确是在自我吹嘘。但这对我很重要，能够做好分内的工作，尤其是涉及我的捐献者“平静”这一点。跟捐献者在一起的时候，我已经形成了一种本能反应。我知道何时应该待在他们身边，安抚他们，何时应该退后，让他们自己待着；何时倾听他们所有的心里话，何时仅是耸肩让他们闭嘴。

总之，我不是为自己邀功请赏。我认识一些护理员，现在正在工作的，他们干得跟我一样好，可是没有得到哪怕一半的功劳。如果你就是其中之一，我能理解你为什么会有心怀怨恨——对我的起居室，我的汽车，尤其是我能够挑选和指定护理对象这件事。何况我是黑尔舍姆的学生——有时候仅这一点，就足以让人看不顺眼了。他们说凯西·H可以挑挑拣拣，说她总是挑选跟她一样的人：黑尔舍姆的人，或者别的那些特权机构的人。难怪她的记录特别好。这种话我听得够多了，也许其中不无道理。但我不是第一个获准挑选指定护理对象的人，我怀疑也不会是最后一个。不管怎么说，我照顾过各种地方长大的捐献者，做得够多了。须知道等我完结的时候，我将已经做这件事做满十二年了，只是到了后面六年他们才允许我挑选。

何况他们为什么不让他们呢？护理员又不是机器。你尽力对每个捐献者做到最好，但到头来，这会让你筋疲力尽。你没有无穷无尽的耐心和精力。所以当你有机会挑选的时候，当然你会挑跟自己一样的人。这是自然而然的。如果我不是步步都替我的捐献者着想，我也不可能一直做这么久。总而言之，如果我一直没开始挑选，过了这么多年，我怎么还会有机会再跟露丝和汤米走得这么近呢？

当然，现如今我记得的捐献者越来越少了，因此实际操作中，我也没有太挑挑拣拣。正如我说过的，如果不是你跟捐献者之间有深层的联系，这份工作会难做很多，而且，虽然我会想念做护理员的生活，但到年底就结束这一切，感觉也挺对。

碰巧露丝就是我得以挑选的第三或者第四名捐献者。当时已经有个护理员分配给她了，我记得自己需要鼓起勇气才要到她的。但最终我成功了，我再次看到她的时候，在多佛的康复中心，突然间我们所有的分歧——尽管并没有完全消失——跟另外那些事相比起来，仿佛都变得无关紧要：比如我们一起在黑尔舍姆长大，我们知道并且记得一些没有别人知道的事。我猜我就是从那个时候开始，有意寻找过去跟我有关系的捐献者，只要有可能，首选黑尔舍姆的人。

这些年里曾有过许多次，我对自己说，不应该总是盯着过去，我曾试着将黑尔舍姆抛到脑后。后来我终于放弃了抗拒。这跟我做护理员第三年的时候碰到的一个捐献者有关。当我说到我是黑尔舍姆来的时候，他的反应让我很受触动。他刚刚经过了第三次捐献，情况不太好，他一定知道自己撑不下去了。他几乎无法呼吸，但他望着我说：“黑尔舍姆。我猜那地方一定很美。”后来第二天早上，我有意找些话题将他的念头转开，于是问他是哪里长大的，他提到多塞特的一个什么地方，这时他那长满疹斑的脸上出现了一种从来没流露出的古怪神情。这时我才明白，他是无论如何都不愿意想起那地方。他宁愿想听听黑尔舍姆。

于是接下来的五六天里，他想知道什么我都告诉他了，他就躺在那里，身上接着各种仪器，面上却是温柔的笑容。他事无巨细都问到我。关于我们的导师，我们每个人都有收藏自己物品的箱子，放在床下面，足球，棒球，主楼外面那条环绕一圈的小径，绕过所有那些躲藏的小去处、小缝隙，有鸭子的池塘，那里的食物，有雾的早晨从艺术室向外望，看到田野的景色。有时候他会让我把同样的事说了一遍又一遍；我前一天刚刚跟他讲过的事，他又会像从没听我说起一样，又来问我。“你们有运动馆么？”“哪位导师你最喜欢？”开始的时候我以为这只是药物的作用，但后来我发现，其实他的意识很明白。他想要的不仅仅是听到黑尔舍姆的故事，而是要记住黑尔舍姆，当作他自己的童年一样。他知道自己接近完结，因此这就是他要做的：让我将一切为他描绘出来，让这些沉入他的记忆，也许在那些无眠的夜里，在药物、病痛和疲惫的共同作用之下，我的和他自己的记忆之间，界限会变得模糊。这时我才理解，真正地认识到，我们曾是多么幸运——汤米、露丝、我，所有我们这些人。

现在当我开着车子穿行在乡间时，仍会看到一些情景，令我想起黑尔舍姆。我可能途经一片雾蒙蒙的田野，从边角路过，或是沿着山谷下坡，依稀看到远处一所大房子，甚至当我看到山坡上一片白杨树排列的方式与众不同时，我都会想：“也许就是这里！我找到了！这真的就是黑尔舍姆！”然后我却发现这不可能是，于是我继续驾车前行，思绪又飘散到了别的地方。尤其是那些运动馆。我在全国哪里都能看得到它们，总是建在操场边上比较偏僻的一侧，预制板构造的小白建筑，一排排窗户设计得特别高，几乎就塞在屋檐底下。我猜在五六十年来他们大概盖了很多这样的房子，我们那幢可能就是那时候建的。如果我开车路过一幢，我总是尽量久地凝望，总有一天我会为此遭遇撞车事故，可我还是不能自己。不久之前，我开车路过伍斯特郡一片延绵的空地，发现一侧有个板球场，跟我们在黑尔舍姆的非常相像，我真的就调转车头开了回去，重新再看一遍。

我们喜爱我们的运动馆，也许是因为它让我们想起小时候总在图画书里看到的那些人们居住的农舍小屋。我还记得我们读小学的时候，曾跟导师央求，下一堂课要去运动馆上，而不要在一般的教室。后来，等到我们读中学二年级的时候——十二岁，十三岁不到——运动馆已经变成了你想要避开黑尔舍姆的一切时、跟好朋友一起躲起来的地方。

运动馆很大，足以容纳两个不同的群体，互不干扰——夏天里，还可以有第三群人在阳台上活动。但最理想的情况是，你跟三五好友可以独占运动馆，因此时常会有耍手腕、斗嘴的事情发生。导师总是教我们要文明有雅量，但实际情况是，你所在的团队中必须有人性格强悍，才有机会在休息或者空当时间得到运动馆。我本人虽不算是个孺头，但我想，其实是因为有了露丝，我们才能够经常占据运动馆。

通常我们只是散坐在长椅或座位上——我们一共五个人，如果珍妮·B也来就是六个——痛痛快快讲八卦。有种对话，只有在你们躲起来，在运动馆里的时候才会发生。我们可能讨论一些自己担心的事，可能会以尖声大笑告终，或是愤怒吵闹。总之就是找到一个方式，跟最亲密的朋友一起，释放压力，舒缓片刻。

那个特别的下午，我现在想到，我们都站在凳子上、长椅上，围着高窗挤在一起。那样我们可以清楚地看到北操场上，我们年级和中学三年级共十二个左右的男孩子，正在一起踢球。阳光明亮，但当天早些时候想必下过雨，因为我还记得阳光照在草地泥水上闪闪发亮的样子。

有人说我们不应该这么明目张胆地偷看，可几乎没人往后挪。然后露丝说：“他根本毫无察觉。看看他。真的，他毫无察觉。”

她说这话的时候，我望着她，想找找看对于那些男孩要对汤米做的事，她有没有任何不赞同的表示。但是下一秒露丝就轻轻笑了，她说：“那傻瓜！”

这时我意识到，无论那些男孩子选择做些什么，对于露丝和其他人来说，都是跟我们遥不可及的事；我们是否赞成完全不相干。我们在这个时刻聚集在一个个窗口，并不是因为很期待看到汤米再次受辱，而只是因为我们听说了最新的计划，隐约感到好奇，想亲眼看到这事发生。那些日子里，对于男孩子们彼此之间的事，我的想法也深不到哪里去。对于露丝和其他人来说，事情与己无关，很可能对于我来说也是一样。

再不然，也许我记错了。也许即便在当时，我看到汤米绕场奔跑，毫不掩饰地满脸欣喜，因为终于再次被群体接纳，得以回归，可以玩他非常擅长的游戏，也许我当时就感到一丝心痛。我清楚记得的是，我留意到汤米当时穿着上个月拍卖会上买的一件浅蓝色POLO衫——那件衣服他可得意了。我记得曾心想：“他真傻，居然穿这衣服踢球。衣服肯定要毁了，那时他会是什么感觉？”我说出声来，却没有冲着任何特定对象：“汤米穿着衬衫呢。他最喜欢的POLO衫。”

我觉得谁都没听见我的话，因为他们都在笑话劳拉——我们群体里的搞笑明星——正在模仿汤米一边跑动、挥手、叫喊和铲球时，脸上一边不停变换的表情。其他的男孩子在场内故意懒洋洋地跑动，就像热身活动那样，但汤米很兴奋，仿佛已经准备好全力出击。我开口了，这次比较大声：“如果他弄脏了衬衫一定会大发脾气。”这次露丝听到了我的话，但她一定以为我是在开玩笑，因为她漫不经心地笑了笑，接着又说了句嘲弄的话。

后来男孩子们就不再将球到处踢了，而是大家一起在泥巴地里站着，胸膛轻轻地起伏着，等着开始选队员分组。出来的两个队长都是三年级的，虽然大家都知道汤米比他们年级任何人踢得都要好。他们抽签决定谁先挑人，随后赢的那个朝大家望去。

“看看他呀，”我身后有人说道，“他真以为第一个就会选中他呢。看看他那样子！”

那一刻，汤米的确有点滑稽，有点什么让你觉得，唉，是啊，如果他真这么蠢，那接下来怎么都是他活该。别的男孩子都假装无视挑

人程序，假装他们不介意谁先被选中。有的在轻轻交头接耳，有的在重新系鞋带，其他人只是低头看着自己踩在泥巴里的双脚。但是汤米急切地望着那个三年级的男孩，仿佛已经听到喊他的名字一般。

分组挑人的全程，劳拉都在坚持表演，把汤米脸上展现的表情挨个表现一遍：开始时明媚急切的样子；四轮过后仍然没有人选他时困惑又担忧的样子；等他终于开始明白怎么回事时，受伤和惊恐的样子。可我并没有随时去看劳拉的表演，因为我在看着汤米；我只是听到其他人的笑声和怂恿她继续的声音。后来当其他男孩都开始窃笑，只剩汤米一个人站着的时候，我听到露丝说：

“来了。预备。七秒。七、六、五……”

没等她数完，汤米就爆发出雷鸣般的怒吼，那些男孩子们肆无忌惮地大笑起来，开始朝南操场跑去。汤米跟在他们后面跑了几步——很难说他是凭本能愤怒地追上去，还是因为单独落下而惊恐不安。不管怎么说，他很快就停下了脚步，站在那里，怒火中烧地盯着他们的背影，脸憋得通红。然后他开始尖叫、大喊、吐出一连串没有意义的脏话和辱骂。

这时候我们都已经看够了汤米发脾气样子，于是我们从凳子上下来，在房间里四散开来。我们试图开始讲点别的，说个新话题，但汤米大吵大闹不肯罢休的声音依然在背景中继续，尽管一开始我们只是翻个白眼，尽量无视这声音，但到了后来——可能从我们刚离开算起，足足十分钟之后——我们又爬上了窗口。

其他的男孩子都完全不见了踪影，汤米的怒骂已经没有具体的朝向。他只是在发火，甩着四肢，朝天空、朝风里、朝着最近的篱笆桩子。劳拉说他可能在“排练莎士比亚”。另外一个人说每当他喊出句什么的时候，就会将一只脚抬起来，朝外伸出去，“就像狗狗撒尿一样”。事实上，我也留意到了同样的脚部动作，但我感受最深的却是每次当他重新将脚踩到泥巴上的时候，泥点溅起，都撒在他小腿上。我再次想到他那件宝贝衬衫，但他离得太远，我看不清他是不是粘了很多泥在上面。

“我觉得这有点太狠了，”露丝说，“他们总是这样捉弄他。可这都是他自己的错。如果他学着沉住气，他们就不会抓住他不放了。”

“他们还是会作弄他的，”汉娜说，“格雷厄姆·K的脾气也一样坏，可是他们只是更加小心对待。他们这么针对汤米是因为他太

懒。”

这时所有人都开始七嘴八舌讲了起来，说汤米一点创意都没有，根本不动脑筋，春季交换活动的时候，他什么东西都拿不出来。我猜实际上到了这个时候，我们每个人都悄悄希望能有个导师从屋里出来将他带走。尽管我们没有亲自参与过最近这次激怒汤米的计划，但却兴致勃勃地坐到前排观看，我们开始感到愧疚了。可是一直没有导师出现，于是我们就只能你一言我一语，指出各种理由，解释为什么汤米遭受这一切都是活该。后来，露丝看了一眼她的手表说虽然还有时间，但我们还是应该回到主楼去，没有人反对。

我们从运动馆出来的时候，汤米还在气头上。主楼在我们左侧远处，因为汤米就站在我们正前方的草坪上，我们完全不需要靠近他。更何况他正面朝相反的方向，根本没有意识到我们的存在。尽管如此，当我的朋友们沿着草地边缘出发的时候，我开始慢慢朝他身边靠近。我知道这样做会让其他人觉得奇怪，可我还是继续前行——哪怕我听到露丝急切地悄声喊我快回来。

我猜汤米大概不习惯在发脾气的时候被人打断，因为当我走到他面前的时候，他的第一个反应是瞪着我看了一秒钟，然后又继续发作。他的确很像在排演莎士比亚，而我却在他表演当中走上了舞台。即便我说“汤米，你的漂亮衬衫。你会把衣服弄脏”的时候，也完全没有迹象表明他听到了我的话。

于是我向前去，伸出一只手去摸他的手臂。后来，其他人认为他是故意的，但我很肯定他不是有意的。他的双臂依然在四处乱打，他并不知道我要伸出手去。总之当他挥动手臂的时候，将我的手打到了一边，然后打到了我的侧脸。完全没有打痛我，但我惊叫了一声，我身后大多数的女孩子也都惊得叫出了声。

直到这时，汤米似乎才终于留意到我、其他人、还有他自己，留意到他原来在这里，在这片草坪上，有这样的举止行为，他有点呆傻地望着我。

“汤米，”我颇严厉地说，“你衣服上到处都是泥巴。”

“那又怎样？”他嘟囔道。可是即便他在说这话的时候，还是低头留意到了那些褐色的泥点，惊得差点没忍住喊出声。这时我看到他脸上流露出惊讶的表情，奇怪我居然会知道他对这件POLO衫的感受。

“这没什么好担心的，”趁沉默还没有让他太难堪，我赶紧说，“会洗掉的。如果你自己洗不掉，就拿去交给朱迪小姐。”

他继续检视自己的一身，然后使性子说：“反正跟你没关系。”

最后这句话仿佛刚一出口他就后悔了，他怯生生地看着我，好像期望我回答他一句安慰的话。但这时候我已经受够了他，加上还有好多女孩子看着——据我所知，主楼的窗口还不知有多少人看着呢。于是我耸耸肩调头走开，回到我的朋友们中间去了。

我们走开的时候，露丝伸出手臂揽住了我的肩膀。“至少你让他平静下来了，”她说，“你还好吗？这发疯的畜生。”

第二章

这一切都是很久以前的事了，因此我可能记错某些事；但我对此的记忆就是这样，我主动去接近汤米的那个下午，当时我正处于这样一种心路历程，不断强迫自己应对各种挑战——几天之后，汤米拦住我的时候，我已经多多少少把这事忘掉了。

汤米就在下楼的人流中，冷不丁在楼梯上停下了脚步，咧开大嘴笑得特别开心，我一看就来气。也许几年以前，如果我们碰到个很高兴遇见的人，可能会流露出这样的表情。但当时我们已经十三岁了，况且这是个男孩子，在很公开的场合碰上一个姑娘。我很想说：“汤米，你怎么就不能成熟点呢？”可我忍住了，说道：“汤米，你挡住大家的路了。我也是。”

他朝上看了一眼，果然上面的楼梯上人群已经被迫停下了脚步。有那么一秒钟他看起来很慌，随后他挤到我身边，贴着墙站住了脚，勉强刚够其他人擦肩而过。然后他说：

“凯丝，我到处找你。我想跟你道歉。我真的非常非常抱歉。那天我真的不是有意打你的。我做梦都不会想去打女孩子，况且即便我想打，也绝对不会打你。我真的非常非常抱歉。”

“没事。是意外而已啦。”我朝他点点头，就想走开。可是汤米开心地说：

“衬衫已经没事了。都洗掉了。”

“那敢情好。”

“没打疼你吧？疼不疼，我打的？”

“疼着呢。头部骨折，脑震荡，诸如此类。连乌鸦脸都可能会发现的，要是我还能走到顶楼看到她的话。”

“可是说实在的，凯丝。别生我气，好吗？我太对不起了。真的，真心的。”

最终我对他笑了笑，不带讽刺地说：“你瞧，汤米，那是个意外，现在已经百分百忘掉了。我一点都不记恨你。”

他还是看起来很没把握，可是现在有些高年级的学生在身后推他，喊他快点走。他匆匆对我一笑，拍了拍我肩膀，就像对年纪较小的男孩子那样，然后就挤回了人流中。随后，我开始爬楼梯的时候，听到他从下方朝我大喊：“再见，凯丝！”

我觉得整件事稍微有点难为情，可是这事并没有引来其他人的取笑，也没人八卦；可我必须得承认，要不是那次楼梯上的偶遇，接下来的几个星期，我也不会对汤米的问题产生那么大的兴趣。

有一次我试着自己挑起话头，在宿舍里，熄灯之后。到中学之后，我们每间宿舍的人数减少到了六人，因此只剩下我们这个小群体。我们常常在入睡之前，躺在黑暗中，说一些最最亲密的话题。可能会说起一些做梦都想不到要在其他任何地方讲的事，哪怕在运动馆里也不行。于是有天晚上，我提起了汤米。我没有多说，只是概括讲

了他的这些遭遇，说这其实很不公平。我讲完之后，黑暗中出现了一阵古怪的沉默，我意识到大家都在等着露丝的反应——通常任何有点为难的情况出现时，大家总是这样。我等待着，然后听到房间里露丝那个方向传来一声叹息，她说：

“你说的有道理，凯西。这样不好。可是如果他想要这种事停止，就得改变自己的态度。春季交换活动他什么都没带。下个月的活动他有准备东西么？我觉得肯定也没有。”

这里我应该稍微解释一下我们在黑尔舍姆的交换活动。每年四次——春、夏、秋、冬——我们都会举办一个大型展销会，卖过去的三个月中我们创作的东西。油画、素描、陶器以及随便当天喜欢什么素材，就拿来做的雕塑——可能是砸坏的铁盒，插进硬纸板的酒瓶把儿什么的。你每放一件东西进去，可以得到交换币——由导师判定你的某件杰作价值几何——然后到了交换日当天，你就拿着你的交换币，去“买”自己喜欢的东西。规则是你只能买跟自己同年的学生作品，可是这样我们还是有很多选择，因为我们大多数人三个月内会很高产的。

现在回望从前，我能明白为什么交换活动对我们那么重要。首先，这是我们除了拍卖会之外——拍卖会是另外一桩事，后面我再讲——唯一能够建立个人收藏的机会。比如说你想装饰自己睡床周围的墙壁，或者想要件物品放在包里，不论走到哪个房间，都可以摆出来放在书桌上，那么你就可以在交换活动中找到这些东西。现在我也终于明白，这种交换活动是如何对我们所有人产生了微妙的影响。仔细想想看，你需要依赖彼此，来制造各种有可能成为属于你的宝贝——这注定会对我们相互之间的关系有一定影响。汤米的事就很典型。很多时候，你在黑尔舍姆的名声、得到的尊重和爱戴，都取决于你多么擅长“创作”。

几年前，我在多佛的康复中心照顾露丝的时候，我们俩常常会不由自主地一起回忆起这些事情来。

“就是这样的事，才让黑尔舍姆显得那么特别，”有一次她说，“我们受到鼓励，要珍惜彼此的作品。”

“的确，”我说，“可是有时候，我现在回想起交换活动的话，时常会觉得有些地方很奇怪。比如诗歌。我记得我们是允许交诗歌的，用来代替素描或者油画。奇怪的是我们都觉得这样很好，我们觉得这很合理。”

“为什么不呢？诗歌是很重要的。”

“可我们那都是些九岁小孩的玩意儿，可笑的几行小诗，拼写错误百出，写在练习册上。我们都愿意把宝贵的交换币拿出来，去交换一本写满这种东西的练习册，而不要别的真正好看的东西，可以贴在床边的。如果我们真的很喜欢一个人的诗作，我们干吗不直接去借来，花上随便哪个下午的工夫自己抄写一遍呢？可你记得当时的情形。到了交换活动的时候，我们就呆呆地站在那里，在苏西·K的诗和杰克做的那些长颈鹿之间犹豫不决，拿不定主意。”

“杰克的长颈鹿，”露丝说完不禁大笑，“做得好美。我有过一个的。”

我们这番对话发生在一个夏日傍晚的美好时分，坐在她康复室的小阳台上。那是她第一次捐献之后的几个月，当时最糟糕的阶段已经过去，我总是精心安排傍晚去看望她的时间，就是为了能跟她一起，在外面度过那半个小时，望着层层屋顶之外，夕阳慢慢落下。你可以看到许多天线以及卫星接收器，有时候正前方很远的地方，还能看到闪亮的一条，那是大海。我会带去矿泉水和饼干，我们就坐在那里，想到什么聊什么。当时露丝住的那家中心是我最喜欢的之一，如果我最后要在那里完结，我一点都不会介意。康复室很小，但设计很好，很舒适。一切——墙壁和地板——都铺着亮晶晶的白瓷砖，中心把这里打扫得很干净，因此你刚进去的时候，几乎像是进了一间装满镜子的大厅。当然很多时候你并不能真的看到自己的倒影，但你几乎总是感觉能够看到。当你抬起胳膊，或是床上有人坐起的时候，你就能感到这样苍白的、影子似的动作反射在周围的瓷砖上。在那家康复中心里，露丝的房间还有些巨大的玻璃拉门，因此她躺在床上就很容易能够看到外面。哪怕她头倒在枕头上，仍然可以看到一大片天空，而且如果天气够暖，她就可以走出去到阳台上，尽情享受新鲜空气，想要多少有多少。我很喜欢去那里看她，喜欢我们之间那些漫无方向的闲聊，从夏天到初秋，一起坐在那个阳台上，说起黑尔舍姆，后来住过的农舍，以及各种浮上脑海的记忆。

“我想说的是，”我又继续说道，“在我们那个年纪，我们十一岁的时候，其实我们并不是真的对彼此的诗歌有兴趣。可你记得么，像克里斯蒂那样的？克里斯蒂写诗的声望可高了，为此我们都特别敬仰她。甚至是你，露丝，你都不敢随便支派克里斯蒂。就是因为我们都认为她写诗写得很棒。可我们对于诗歌一无所知。我们不懂诗歌。这很奇怪。”

可是露丝没明白我的意思——不然就是她故意逃避。也许她是决心要把我们记成比实际更为成熟的样子。再不然也许她能感觉到我想把谈话带到什么方向，却又不希望我们朝那边聊。总之她长叹一声，又说：

“我们都认为克里斯蒂的诗写得特别好。可我不知道若是拿到现在，我们会觉得如何。真希望现在我还留着一点，我很想知道我们现在会怎么看。”随后她笑了，说：“我倒是还保存着彼得·B的几首诗。但那是后来的事了，我们上中学四年级的时候。我一定是喜欢过他。除此之外我想不出还有什么理由我会买他的诗。那些诗写得愚不可及，太自以为是了。但是克里斯蒂是真好，我记得她的诗很好。有趣的是，她一开始画画就完全放弃了诗歌。可她画画绝对没有写诗那么好。”

可是让我回到汤米的话题。当时在我们的宿舍里，熄灯之后露丝所说的那些，汤米如何自己招来麻烦的话，大概也是当时黑尔舍姆大多数人的想法。但是当她说起自己那些往事的时候，我躺在那里，才想到他这样有意不努力的态度，早在小学时就已经开始不断产生影响了。这时我才带着一丝寒意想明白，汤米遭受着他所遭受的这种待遇，已经不是几周或几个月的事，而是几年来一直如此。

我和汤米不久之前还谈过此事，他讲起自己这些麻烦的开始，也验证了我那天晚上的想法。据他说，事情开始是一个下午，在杰拉尔丁小姐的美术课上。汤米告诉我说，那天之前他还一直很喜欢画画。但那天在杰拉尔丁小姐的课堂上，汤米画了一张水彩画——是一只大象站在很高的草丛里——所有的事都是从这幅画开始的。他声称这幅画是个玩笑。那时候我问了他很多问题，我疑心真相跟那个时代的许多事一样：你没有任何明确的理由，就只是这么做了。你这么做是因为你觉得可能会赢得笑声，或者你想看看能否引起一点骚动。而过后当别人要你解释的时候，事情似乎毫无道理可言。我们都做过这样的事。汤米并没有像这样说，但我敢肯定事情就是这样。

总之，他画了幅大象，这正是一个比我们小三岁的孩子可能会画出来的那种作品。他统共前后只用了二十分钟，当然博得大家一笑，但却不完全是他所期望的那种回应。即便如此，这本来可能不会产生任何影响——这是个大大的讽刺，我觉得——如果当天上课的老师不是杰拉尔丁小姐的话。

在我们那个年纪，杰拉尔丁小姐是所有人都最喜欢的导师。她很温柔，讲话和软，你需要安慰的时候她总能安慰你，哪怕你做了坏

事，或者被其他导师批评了。如果她本人不得不批评你，那么接下来的几天里，她都会对你多加注意，仿佛她欠了你什么。汤米运气不好，那天是杰拉尔丁小姐上艺术课，而不是比如罗伯特先生，或者艾米丽小姐亲自来——她是校长，经常上艺术课。如果上课的老师是这两人中的任何一位，汤米可能会受到一点批评，他可能会报之以鬼脸假笑，其他人最坏也只会把这事当成是个没意思的笑话。甚至可能会有些学生觉得他挺滑稽，像个小丑。可是杰拉尔丁小姐就是杰拉尔丁小姐，事情没有这样发展。相反，她尽可能地怀着善意和理解去观看这幅画。也许她猜测汤米可能会遭到其他同学的责备，她就尽量找补，做得有些过分了，甚至找理由来称赞他，还指给全班看。敌意就是这样开始的。

“我们离开教室之后，”汤米记得，“那时我第一次听到他们讲怪话。他们根本不在乎我听得到。”

我猜想，早在他画那幅大象之前，就已经觉得自己有些跟不上——尤其其他画的画，就像是比他低好几年级的孩子的水平——于是他尽可能地遮掩，故意画一些幼稚的作品。但是在那幅大象画之后，一切都摆到桌面上来了，如今大家都看着他，下一步会怎么做。有一段时间他似乎的确是很努力，但是每当他开始做点什么，周围就会充满讥笑和嘲讽。实际上，他越是努力，做出的成果就越好笑。因此过了不久汤米就退回了最初的抵御策略，画一些故意显得幼稚的画作，这些作品明摆着说他完全不在乎。从那开始，情形越陷越深。

一度他只是在艺术课上需要忍受——可这也够受的，因为我们小学时代艺术课很多。但后来越搞越大。玩游戏的时候他落单，吃晚餐的时候男孩子们拒绝挨着他坐，或者在宿舍里，熄灯之后他讲话的时候，别人假装没听到。开始还没有那么残酷。可能会有几个月都平安无事，他都以为整件事已经完全过去了，然后他做了什么——不然就是他的对头之一，比如亚瑟·H做了什么——又会让一切重新开始。

我不确定他的脾气大发作是从何时开始的。在我自己的记忆中，汤米一直就是出了名的脾气大，从婴幼儿时代就是，但他告诉我说，只是在那些作弄变得很糟糕的时候，他的脾气才开始发作。总之，恰恰是他这种脾气大发作，才真的让人们变本加厉使劲整他，到了我说的这段时间——就是我们中学二年级的夏天，我们十三岁的时候——这种迫害达到了顶峰。

然后一切就停止了，虽不是一夜之间，但也是很快的变换。就像我所说的，这时候我一直认真观察着整个局面，因此我在大多数人发

现之前就看到了迹象。开始是有个阶段的——可能有一个月，也许更久——这些恶作剧仍在持续稳定发生，但汤米没有发脾气。有时候我看得出他马上要发火了，但他还是设法控制住了自己；还有些时候，他只是心平气和地耸耸肩，或是做出一副完全没注意到的样子。一开始他的这些反应让人失望，也许人们甚至心怀怨恨，因为他没让这些人得逞。后来渐渐地人们自己也厌倦了，这些恶作剧都不用心了，直到有一天我突然发现，已经一个多星期没有任何作弄他的活动了。

这事本身可能也没有那么重要，但我还发现了其他的变化。一些小事，比如亚历山大·J和彼得·N跟他一起穿过院子朝操场走去，三个人很自然地聊着天；还有人们提到他名字的时候，声音里那种微妙却又明确的改变。后来有一次，下午的休息时间快结束时，我们一群人坐在离南操场很近的草坪上，男孩子们跟往常一样在踢球。我跟着大家在聊天，但目光一直留意着汤米，我发现他正是赛场上的核心人物。有一次他被别倒了，于是站起身，将球放到地面，他来踢任意球。男孩们散开来准备接球，这时我看到亚瑟·H——是折磨汤米最起劲的人之一——就站在汤米背后几码远，开始模仿他，故意摆出个蠢样子，学汤米脚踩着球，双手扶胯的样子。我认真观察，但其他人完全没有接亚瑟的茬儿。他们一定都看到了，因为所有人的眼睛都望着汤米，等着他开球，而亚瑟就在他正后方——可是没人感兴趣。汤米一脚将球飞过草坪，比赛继续，亚瑟·H也没有再兴风作浪。

这种发展变化让我感到高兴，同时也感到奇妙。汤米的水平并没有真正的变化——他的“创作”声誉一如既往的低。我看得出，他不再发脾气这点确实起了很大作用，但造成这种变化的关键因素到底是什么，似乎很难摸清。跟汤米本人有关系——他行为举止的样子，讲话时望着别人的眼睛，坦然大方、友好善意——都跟从前不一样，这也反过来影响了周围人们对待他的方式。然而所有这些改变是什么造成的，却模糊不清。

我很好奇，决定下次我们有机会私下交谈的时候，要跟他深入了解一下。不久机会就来了，我在排队打午饭的时候，发现他就站在同一个队列中往前几位站着。

我猜这听起来大概有点古怪，但是在黑尔舍姆，午餐排队恰恰是私下聊天的好时机。这跟大厅的声音效果有关系；周围的各种嘈杂和高高的天花板就意味着只要你压低声音，靠近站立，确保旁边的人也全心投入自己的聊天，你就有很高的机会不被别人偷听。不管怎么说，我们其实没有太多选择。“安静的”地方通常最糟糕，因为总是

可能会有人路过，距离近得刚好能听到。何况，一旦当你看起来像是要溜出去讲悄悄话，几分钟之内全屋的人似乎都能感觉得到，你就没机会了。

因此当我看到汤米在我前面隔着几位的时候，我就挥手招呼他过来——规矩是不能往前插队，主动退后几位则没问题。他面带愉快的笑容过来了，我们在一起站了一会儿，没说什么——倒不是出于尴尬，而是因为我们要等一等，让汤米退后所引起的兴趣消退再说。然后我对他说：

“这些天你好像心情好多了，汤米。你好像情况好多了。”

“你什么都看在眼里，是不是，凯丝？”他说这话完全没有讽刺的意味，“没错，一切都很好。我过得还不错。”

“到底发生了什么事？你是找到上帝了还是怎么了？”

“上帝？”汤米似乎呆了一秒钟。随后他笑道：“噢，我明白了。你是说我没有……那么生气了。”

“不光是这个，汤米。你为自己扭转了局面。我一直在观察。所以我才这样问你。”

汤米耸耸肩。“我长大了一点吧，我猜。也许其他人也是。不能总是搞老一套，会厌烦的。”

我没说什么，只是径直不转眼地望着他，直到他再次轻笑起来，说道：“凯丝，你真是穷追不舍。好吧，我猜的确有点缘故。确实发生了一件事。如果你想知道，我就告诉你。”

“好啊，那你接着说。”

“我会告诉你的，凯丝，但你一定不能说出去，可不可以？几个月之前，我跟露西小姐谈过一次话。那之后我感觉好了很多。这很难解释。但她说了些什么，让我感觉好多了。”

“她到底说了什么？”

“这个……其实说来可能有点怪。开始我觉得有点怪。她当时说，如果我不想去创作，如果我真的不喜欢，那也完全可以。一点问题都没有，她说。”

“她就这样告诉你的？”

汤米点头，但我已经要转身离开了。

“这是胡说，汤米。如果你要跟我玩这种傻花样，我恕不奉陪。”

我真心感到愤怒，因为我觉得他是在跟我撒谎，而我本该值得他信任。我看到身后隔几位有个我认识的姑娘，于是走到她旁边去了，把汤米一个人落在当地。我看得出他很困惑，垂头丧气，可是我为他担心了好几个月之后，这时的感觉是遭到了背叛，我才不管他什么感受呢。我跟朋友聊了一会儿——我想那是玛蒂尔达——尽量表现得兴高采烈，站队等待的剩余时间里，我几乎不再朝他的方向看了。

但是，当我拿着餐盘朝桌旁走去的时候，汤米来到我身后，很快地说：

“凯丝，我不是逗你玩的，如果你是这样想的话。事情就是这样。如果你给我哪怕半点机会，我都会告诉你的。”

“不要胡说，汤米。”

“凯丝，我讲给你听。午餐之后我要去池塘边。如果你来我就告诉你。”

我有些嫌弃地看了他一眼，没有答话就走开了，但我猜几乎立刻我就开始设想，关于露西小姐的那些话也许并不是他瞎编的。等到我跟朋友们一起坐下来的时候，我已经在努力设法，看之后如何能够趁大家不注意，溜到池塘边去。

第三章

池塘在主楼的南面。要去那边得先从后门出去，然后沿着蜿蜒小径，从蕨类丛生的灌木丛中穿过，此时虽已是初秋时节，这些植物还是阻挡着道路。或者，如果没有导师在场的话，你还可以抄近道，从种着大黄的菜地里穿过去。总之，一旦你出来到了池塘边，就会发现面前的气氛变得非常宁静，周遭围绕着水鸭、芦苇还有各种水边杂草。可这里不是一个讲私房话的好地方——跟午餐排队的时候根本没法比。首先，从主楼里能清楚看到你。还有声音在水上传播的方式难以预料；倘或有人想要偷听也是最容易不过，只需要从外面小径走过来，蹲在池塘另一边的灌木丛里即可。但是既然在午餐排队的时候是我中止了对话，我想我得尽量弥补。当时已经是十月份，但那天有太阳，于是我决定就假装自己在这里漫无目的地散步，偶遇汤米。

也许是因为我太专心要营造这种形象——虽然我根本不知道是否真有人在盯着我们——当我终于找到他，见他坐在水边不远处一块大平石头上时，我完全没想要坐下来。当时想必是星期五或者周末，因为我记得我们穿的是自己的衣服。我记不清楚汤米当时穿着什么——很可能是件变形了的足球衫，哪怕天冷了他还是总穿这种汗衫——可我一定穿着那件绛红的运动服上衣，拉链一直拉上来的那件，我是中学一年级的时在拍卖会上买的。我绕到他身前，背朝池水站着，面朝着主楼，这样的话一旦大家开始在窗口聚集，我就能看到。随后的几分钟里，我们没有讲什么特别的，仿佛午餐排队时的事情根本没有发生过。我不知是出于为汤米考虑，还是担心旁观者的看法，但特意警惕地保持着不经意路过的样子，一度还作势要继续往前溜达呢。这时我看到汤米脸上浮现出一种恐慌，立刻就感到很抱歉，虽然我不是有心，却也作弄了他。于是我记得自己当时说道：

“这个，你之前怎么说的来着？露西小姐跟你说什么了？”

“哦……”汤米的视线越过我落到池塘里，也在假装这个话题他已经忘到九霄云外了。“露西小姐。哦，那个啊。”

在黑尔舍姆，露西小姐是导师中最擅长运动的一个，可你从她外表不大容易猜到这点。她体型矮胖，几乎像头斗牛犬，一头黑发很古怪，长的方向朝上，因此永远无法覆盖她的耳朵，还有短脖子。但其实她很结实，很健康，即便是我们长大些以后，我们中大多数人——

连男生在内——在操场跑步的时候都跟不上她的速度。她曲棍球打得特别棒，足球场上能跟中学的男生抗衡。我记得有一次看到她带球过人，詹姆斯·B试图铲倒她，可是倒地飞出的却是他本人。我们读小学的时候，她从来不属于杰拉尔丁小姐那种、你情绪低落的时候会去找她的人。实际上，我们小一点的时候，她不大跟我们讲话。真的，只有进了中学之后，我们才开始欣赏她那种轻灵的风格。

“你当时说了什么，”我对汤米说，“关于露西小姐跟你讲，不擅长创作也没关系。”

“她的确是说过这样的话。她说我不用担心，不用介意其他人怎么说。那是大概两个月之前的事了，也许更久。”

在远处的主楼里，几个小学生在楼上的窗边停下了脚步，望着我们。但我这时在汤米前方蹲了下来，完全不再假装什么了。

“汤米，她这么说很滑稽。你确定她真是这样说的？”

“当然我确定。”他的声音突然沉了下去，“她并不是只说了那一次。我们在她的房间里，关于这一点，她跟我说了好多。”

当艺术欣赏课后，她第一次请他去她书房的时候，汤米解释说，他以为又要挨一顿训，教他要更加努力——这种话他应该从不同的导师那里听过多次，包括艾米丽小姐本人。但是当他们从主楼朝导师居住区所在的橘园走去时，汤米开始感到这次聊天会不一样。后来，当他刚刚在露西小姐的安乐椅上坐下——她仍是靠床边站着——她就请汤米将事情的来龙去脉都说出来，实事求是地说，他都经受了些什么事。于是汤米开始从头讲起。但还没等 he 说到一半时，她突然打断他，自己开始说了起来。她认识很多的学生，她说，很长时间里，他们都很难有创作能力：画画、素描、诗歌，好几年里哪一样都不灵。然后某一天他们翻过一个坎儿，就盛放了。很可能汤米也是这群人中的一个。

所有这些汤米之前就曾听过，但是露西小姐的姿态方式让他继续专心往下听。

“我能看出，”他对我说，“她要讲到些什么，不一样的东西。”

当然，很快她就开始说一些汤米无法理解的话。但她不断重复，直到他终于开始明白。如果汤米真诚地努力过，她当时说，可就是没办法创作出什么，那就完全没问题，他不需要为此担心。无论导师还

是学生，任何人要是为此惩罚他，或是以其他方式向他施加压力，那都是错误的。这根本不是他的错。然后，汤米反驳说露西小姐说的容易，可是其他人都认为是他的错，这时她叹了口气，朝窗外望去。然后她说：

“可能这对你也没有太大帮助。但你只要记住，在黑尔舍姆这里，至少有一个人想法跟他们不同。至少有一个人相信你是个很好的学生，跟她以往碰到的学生一样好，甭管你有没有创意。”

“她不是在钓你上钩吧？”我问汤米，“这是不是要变着法子批评你呢？”

“绝对不是那种意思。总之……”他似乎头一次感到担心有人会偷听，回头朝主楼的方向看了看。窗口的小学生已经失了兴致走开了；我们年级的几个女生正在朝运动馆走来，但她们距离这边还很远。汤米朝我转回身，几乎耳语道：

“反正，她说这些的时候，浑身都在发抖。”

“你什么意思，发抖？”

“是发抖。愤怒的颤抖。我看得见她。她怒火中烧，但是那种埋得很深的怒火。”

“气谁呢？”

“我说不准。总之不是对我，这点最重要！”他笑了起来，随即又严肃起来，“我不知道她生谁的气。但她真的是在生气。”

我再次站起身，因为我小腿肚都酸了。“这很奇怪啊，汤米。”

“有趣的是，这次跟她的谈话确实有帮助。帮助很大。早先你说过的，我现在状态好像好些了。其实都是因为那件事。因为从那以后，想到她所说的那些话，我明白了她说得对，事情的确不是我的错。好吧，我处理得不好。但是归根到底这不是我的错。这点带来了大不同。每当我感到困难的时候，我会看到她走来走去，或者我上她的课，她并不会说起那天的谈话，但我会望着她，有时候她会看到我，朝我轻轻点头。这就是我所需要的一切。你前面问有没有发生过什么。喏，这就是发生的一切。可是凯丝，你听我说，不要跟任何人讲起这件事，好吗？”

我点头，但是问道：“她要你保证不讲吗？”

“不，没有，她没让我做任何保证。但你不许外传。你真的得保证。”

“好吧。”几个朝运动馆走来的女生已经看到了我，正在挥手、喊我。我挥手作答，然后对汤米说：“我得走了。我们迟些再继续聊这件事。”

可是汤米不理睬我的话。“还有别的，”他继续说道，“她还说了别的话，我听不大明白。我想问问你来的。她说我们学得很不够，诸如此类的。”

“学得不够？你是说她认为我们应该更努力学习吗？”

“不，我觉得她不是那个意思。她说的是，你知道的，关于我们。将来我们会怎么样。捐献啊什么的。”

“可是所有这一切我们已经学过了，”我说，“奇怪，她到底什么意思。她是不是认为还有些事情我们不知道？”

汤米想了一会儿，随后摇头。“我想她不是这个意思。她只是认为关于这些，教给我们的很不够。因为她说她很想亲自跟我们讲讲这个。”

“到底讲什么呢？”

“我说不准。也许我完全是会错了意，凯丝，我不知道。也许她说的根本是另外的意思，别的意思，关于我没有创意的事。我真的不明白。”

汤米望着我，仿佛期待我给他一个答案。我认真想了几秒钟，然后说：

“汤米，好好回想一下。你说她生气……”

“对，看上去就是这样。她很安静，但她在发抖。”

“好吧，管他呢。我们就当她是生气。她是生气了才开始说这些另外的事么？说关于捐献等等，我们知道得还不够什么的？”

“我猜是吧……”

“哎，汤米，好好想想。她为什么提起这个？本来是说你，还有你不肯创作。然后突然她就开始说这些另外的事。其中的关联是什么？为什么她会说起捐献？这跟你的创意有什么关系？”

“我不知道。我猜其中一定有缘故。也许一桩事联想到另一桩。凯丝你现在对这事也太起劲了吧。”

我笑了，因为他说得对：我眉头紧皱，陷入沉思。事实上，我的大脑同时在朝好几个不同的方向开动。汤米讲的他跟露西小姐的谈话让我想起了一些事情，可能有一系列的事情，跟露西小姐有关的、过去的事，当时就曾让我感到迷惑。

“只不过是……”我停下来，叹了口气，“我说不好，自己都不明白。但是所有这些，你说的这一切，好像跟别的一些令人迷惑的事接上茬了。我一直在想所有这些事。比如为什么夫人要来拿走我们最好的画。到底是为了什么？”

“是为了艺廊。”

“可她那艺廊到底是干什么的？她总是到这里来，把我们最好的作品拿走。到现在她一定已经攒了一大堆了。我曾经问过杰拉尔丁小姐一次，夫人到这里来有多久了，她说自从有了黑尔舍姆她就来了。这艺廊到底是干什么的？她为什么要搞个艺廊，收我们的作品？”

“也许她拿去卖。外面，就外面，他们什么都卖。”

我摇摇头。“不可能。这和露西小姐跟你说的话有关系。关于我们，总有一天我们要开始捐献。我不知道为什么，但一段时间以来，我都有这种感觉，一切都是相关联的，可我想不清楚是如何关联的。我得走了，汤米。关于我们说的这些，先不要告诉任何人。”

“好的。还有你不要跟任何人讲露西小姐的事。”

“可是如果她再跟你说起任何像这样的话，你都告诉我好吗？”

汤米点点头，随后再次环顾四周。“你说的对，你得走了，凯丝。很快就有人听到我们讲话了。”

我和汤米讨论到的这个艺廊，在我们所有人的成长过程中都一直存在。人人说起来都好像真的有这么个艺廊一样，然而实际上，我们谁也拿不准这艺廊是否真的存在。我无法记清第一次听说艺廊是什么时候、什么情况，但我敢肯定，我这样是很典型的。显然不可能是从导师们那里，因为有个不成文的规矩，我们决不能当着他们的面说起这个话题。

现在我猜想，这可能是黑尔舍姆的学生们一代又一代传下来的。我记得在我才只有五六岁的时候，有一次，我跟阿曼达·C一起坐在矮

桌旁，两人手上都沾满了雕塑黏土。我不记得当时有没有其他小孩跟我们一起，也不记得有没有导师负责。我只记得阿曼达·C——她比我大一岁——看着我在做的东西，惊叫道：“真的很棒，很棒呀，凯西！做得太棒了！我敢说一定会进艺廊！”

那时候我一定已经知道了艺廊的存在，因为我记得她说那话的时候，那种兴奋和自豪感——还有接下来的一刻，我自己心里的念头：“这太荒唐了。我们谁都还没有到能够进艺廊的水平。”

随着我们长大，大家仍然在谈论着艺廊。如果你想要称赞某人的作品，就会说：“都够得上进艺廊了。”等到我们发现了反讽这种修辞手段之后，每当我们看到差劲到好笑的作品，就会说：“对，没错！这件可以直达艺廊了！”

可是我们是不是真的相信艺廊的存在呢？如今我不确定了。正如我前面所说，我们从来不对导师提起艺廊，回顾往事，这不成文的规矩可能是我们自己强加给自己的，同样也可能是导师的决定。我还记得在我们十一岁左右的时候有件事。那是一个冬日上午，阳光明媚，我们在七号教室里。我们刚刚上完了罗杰先生的课，我们少数几个人留下来跟他闲聊。我们都坐在课桌上，我记不清楚当时说了些什么，但罗杰先生跟往常一样，逗得我们笑了又笑。这时卡罗尔·H趁着咯咯笑的间隙说了一句：“可能还能选中你进艺廊呢！”说完她立刻抬手捂住嘴，“哎哟”了一声，气氛依然轻松愉快；但连罗杰先生在内，我们都知道她犯了个错误。倒不是什么弥天大错；程度差不多相当于我们中有谁不小心骂了个脏字儿，或者当着导师的面说到了他的绰号。罗杰先生宠溺地面带笑容，仿佛是说：“说过就算了，我们假装你没说过这话，”随后我们又嬉笑如常。

如果对我们来说，艺廊始终是个含混不清的存在，那么清楚明了的事实是，夫人通常每年两次——有时三到四次，来挑选我们最好的作品。我们称呼她“夫人”因为她是法国人，或者比利时人——具体是哪国有些争议——还有导师们一直都这么称呼她。她是个高个子、身材瘦削的女子，头发很短，也许还很年轻，可当时我们谁也不会往那个方面去想她。她总是穿着一身硬朗的灰色套装，跟园丁和送供给物资来的司机——跟其他所有从外面来的人——都不一样，她不跟我们讲话，冷着一张面孔让我们敬而远之。很多年里，我们都认为她“目中无人”，但后来，在我们大约八岁的时候一天晚上，露丝想出了一个另外的理论。

“她怕我们，”她声称。

我们躺在宿舍里，黑着灯。小学的时候，我们一间宿舍睡十五个人，因此那时候不大有后来我们在中学宿舍里这种漫长亲密的谈话。但后来那些成为我们小“团体”的人，那时候就睡床挨得很近了，我们已经逐渐形成了深夜长谈的习惯。

“你什么意思，怕我们？”有人问，“她怎么可能害怕我们？我们能怎么着她？”

“我不知道，”露丝说，“我不知道，但我肯定她是怕。我原来以为她就是目中无人，但不对，有别的缘故。我现在确信了。夫人是害怕我们。”

我们断断续续就此争论了几天。大多数人都不同意露丝的意见，但这样一来，她更是下定了决心要证明自己正确。于是到最后，我们决定要做个计划，等下次夫人来黑尔舍姆的时候，我们要检验一下她的理论。

虽然说夫人的来访从来不会公开宣布，但到她该来的时候，迹象总是非常明显。为了她到来的准备工作提前几个星期就开始了，导师们把我们的作品筛选一遍——我们的油画、素描、陶塑，所有的作文和诗歌。这项工作要持续至少两个星期，到最后小学和中学部每个年级都会有四五件作品被选进台球室。这期间台球室是关闭的，但是如果你站在外面露台的矮墙上，就能透过窗户看到选中的作品越堆越多。一旦导师们开始将作品整齐地摆开，摆到桌上、画架上，就像一场小型的我们那种交换活动，这时你就知道夫人一两天内就到。

在我所讲的那个秋天，我们不仅要知道夫人来的日子，还要知道她出现的准确时间，因为她通常只会待一两个钟头。因此当我们一看到作品在台球室展示出来，就决定轮番守望。

这个任务因为我们这里地形的关系，变得非常容易。黑尔舍姆建在一个平滑的山谷中，周围都是坡地。这就意味着从主楼的几乎任何一间教室的窗口里——甚至从运动馆里——都可以清楚看到那条蜿蜒细长的小路从田地间穿过，直到大门口。大门到校区还有相当一段距离，所有的车辆都得从碎石铺的车道上驶过，穿过灌木和花圃，最终才能达到主楼前面的院子。有时候好几天我们都看不到任何一辆车从那条窄路上开进来，而来的车辆多半是货车或者运输车，送来物资、园丁或者工人。小汽车很罕见，有时候远远看到一辆就足以在课堂上引起一阵骚动。

看到夫人的小车沿着小路穿过田野开来的那天下午，风很大，阳光很好，有几块雨云正在开始聚集。我们在九号教室——就在主楼前方的二层——当我们交头接耳传递消息的时候，可怜的弗兰克先生正在教我们拼写，他搞不懂为什么我们突然之间会变得这么躁动不安。

我们想出的验证露丝理论的计划很简单：我们——一共有六个人——要悄悄埋伏在某处等着夫人，然后“拥出来”一下子围在她身边。我们会举止合度，然后继续往前走，但是如果我们时间掌握得恰好，堵她个猝不及防，我们就能看出——露丝坚持道——她真的是害怕我们。

我们主要的担心在于可能没办法在她待在黑尔舍姆的短暂时间内抓到机会。但是，当弗兰克先生的课程结束之后，我们分明看到夫人就在下面的院子里，正在停车。我们在楼梯间匆忙开了个小会，然后就跟班上其他同学一起走下楼梯，然后在主楼的门廊上晃荡。我们朝外能看到明亮的院子，夫人依然坐在车里，翻她的公文包。终于她从车中出来，朝我们走来，穿着平时那身灰色套装，双手紧紧抱着公文包。露丝发出讯号，我们就慢慢溜达着，径直朝她走去，但就像梦游一样。只是等到她僵直地站住了之后，我们才各自轻声说：“抱歉，小姐。”然后分开了。

我永远无法忘记接下来的刹那我们身上发生的那种奇怪的变化。直到那一刻，关于夫人的这件事虽然算不上笑话，也只是我们私下说说，小圈子解决而已。我们从未想过夫人本人，或是其他人会受到何种影响。我的意思是说，直到那时，这还是件轻松的事儿，包含着一点大冒险游戏的因素在里面。倒不是说夫人做出了什么我们意料之外的反应：她只是定定地站住，等着我们经过。她没有尖叫，甚至没有出声。但我们都在集中精神观察她的反应，也许正因为如此，这事才会对我们有这么大的影响。当她突然停下脚步的时候，我快速扫视她的脸——其他人也一样，我敢肯定。我至今都能栩栩如生地看到，她似乎在拼命压抑住周身的颤抖，那种真正的恐惧，怕我们中的哪一个会不小心碰到她。虽然说我们继续往前走，但我们都感受到了；仿佛我们从阳光中一下子迈进了寒冷的阴处。露丝说得对：夫人确实怕我们。但她害怕我们就像是有的人害怕蜘蛛一样。对此我们毫无准备。我们从来没有想到，我们要怎么想这件事，我们自己会是什么感受，被人那样看待，当成蜘蛛。

等到我们穿过院子，到了草坪上的时候，已经变成了完全不同的一群人，跟当初兴奋地站在那里等待夫人从车里出来的时候换了个

人。甚至露丝都显得大受打击。这时我们中的一个——我想是劳拉——说道：

“如果她不喜欢我们，那为什么要我们的作品？干吗要干涉我们？再说了，有谁请她来这里了？”

没有人答话，我们继续走到了运动馆，一路都再没有讲起刚刚发生的事。

如今回想起来，我看得出在当时那个年纪，我们对自己有所了解——我们是谁，我们跟导师、和外面的人有何不同——但还没有真正理解所有这些的意义。我敢说，在你的童年时代，也曾有过像我们这样的经历；哪怕具体细节未必相似，但究其内里和感受一定有过类似的体会。但是无论你的导师多么认真地帮你做好准备：所有那些谈话、录像、讨论、警告，所有的一切都无法解释到位。当你只有八岁的时候，大家一起在黑尔舍姆这样一个地方，如果你有像我们那样的导师，园丁和送货员跟你们说笑，喊你“甜心”，你就不可能理解。

然而，终究有些事必须得接受进来。必须得进来，因为等到这样一个时刻终于到来的时候，有一部分的你早就在等待了。也许早在你才五六岁的时候，脑袋后面有个轻轻的声音在絮语：“总有一天，也许要不了多久，你就得知道这是个什么滋味。”于是你就等着，哪怕你仍是懵懵懂懂，却已在等待着那一刻的到来，你终于明白自己跟他们真的不同；明白外面有些人就像夫人那样，他们不恨你也不想伤害你，但是一想到你还是会打冷战——想到你是如何、为了什么，才被带到这个世界上——想到你的手可能会跟他们触碰，他们就感到惧怕。当你第一次透过这样一个人的眼睛看到自己的时候，这一刻寒意刺骨。就好像经过一面你这辈子每天都路过的镜子，突然间里面映出了完全不同的东西，古怪，令人不安的东西。

第四章

到今年底我就不再做护理员了，虽然这中间我收获良多，可是也得承认，我会很高兴有机会能够休息——停下来想想心事，回忆往事。我觉得至少部分与此有关，为了准备改变节奏，所以我一直有冲动，想要将过去的回忆整理妥当。我猜我真正想做的，是将我们长大并且离开黑尔舍姆之后，我和汤米、露丝之间所发生的事想想清楚。但是我现在明白了，后来发生的诸种种都源自我们在黑尔舍姆的时光，因此我才想首先要认真整理这些早期的记忆。比如说对于夫人的这些好奇。某种层面上，这只是我们小孩闹着玩。但另一方面，你也看得出这是一个开始，接下来的许多年里这件事变得越来越大，直到最终占据了我们的生活。

那天之后，夫人虽然没有变成我们中间禁止提及的话题，却也很少说起。这现象很快从我们这个小群体开始，渐渐弥散到了我们整个年级的学生。就像我说的，我们对她依然充满好奇，但都感觉到，如果继续深入探查下去——关于她如何处理我们的作品，是否真的有艺廊——将会把我们引入尚未准备好进入的领域。

可是关于艺廊这个话题，还是会时不时有人提起，因此几年之后，当汤米在池塘边开始告诉我他跟露西小姐之间的古怪谈话时，我想到了脑海中埋藏已久的往事。我将他一个人扔下坐在岩石上，自己朝草坪匆匆跑去跟朋友们汇合，那之后，往事才浮上心头。

那是一次上课的时候，露西小姐对我们说过的话。我之所以一直记得，是因为当时感到迷惑不解，也是因为那是仅有的少数几次当着导师的面，特地提到艺廊这回事。

我们当时遭遇了后来起名为“交换币之争”的问题。几年前我跟汤米讨论过交换币之争，开始我们无法就事情何时发生这一点取得一致意见。我说我们当时十岁；他认为是十岁之后，但最终转过弯来，同意了我的说法。我很有把握没记错：我们当时小学四年级——夫人那件事发生之后又过了一段时间，但过了三年之后，才有了我们在池塘边的那次谈话。

我认为，交换币之争实际上是跟我们渐渐长大，变得越来越贪心有关系。几年以来——我想我前面说过——我们都认为自己的作品入选进入台球室就是个巨大的胜利，更不要说被夫人挑走了。但等我们

十岁的时候，对此事我们的态度有了两面性。交换活动以交换币作为代币的模式，让我们培养了犀利的眼光，一眼就能看出怎样的作品可以换出高价。我们都热衷于换取T恤衫，装饰床边墙，还有个性化书桌。当然，我们还要考虑自己的“收藏”。

我不知道你们那里有没有“收藏”这回事。你要是碰到黑尔舍姆出来的学生，迟早会发现他们会对自己的收藏念念不忘。而在当时，我们把一切都视为理所当然。我们每个人有个木箱子，放在自己床下面，装满了属于自己的东西——你在拍卖会或者交换活动上得到的东西。我记得有一两个学生对自己的收藏品不大用心，但我们大多数人都非常在意，会挑选物品拿出来展示，将其他东西小心收好。

问题在于等到我们十岁左右的时候，“作品被夫人选中是个巨大的荣誉”这种观念跟我们会失去自己最有市场价值的作品的感受发生了冲突。最终这矛盾发展成了交换币之争。

开始是几个学生，主要是男孩，抱怨说对于夫人拿走的作品，我们应该得到交换币作为补偿。许多学生同意这种观点，但另外一些人却对此感到愤慨。争论在我们之间持续了一段时间，直到有一天，罗伊·J——他比我们高一年，已经有多件作品被夫人选走了——决定要去找艾米丽小姐当面说这件事。

艾米丽小姐是我们的校长，比其他导师都年长。她不是特别高，但举止动作器宇不凡，总是头抬得高高的，让人觉得她很高。她满头银发都朝后梳，但是碎头发总是挣脱出来，围着她飘飞不停。换我的话肯定烦得要命，但艾米丽小姐总是无视这点问题，仿佛这点麻烦不值一晒。到傍晚时分，她看起来多半很古怪，因为懒得理会满脸碎发飘舞，伴随着跟人讲话的时候那种平静而刻意的语调。我们都挺怕她的，对她的态度跟其他导师也很不一样。但我们认为她很公道，也尊重她的决定；早在小学阶段，我们就认识到，尽管她的存在令人生畏，却正是我们在黑尔舍姆感到安全的原因所在。

不经传唤主动去见她是需要些勇气的；像罗伊那样带着要求去找她，在我们看来简直跟自杀无二。但罗伊并没有像我们预料的那样惨遭批评，接下来的几天里，还听说导师们在讨论——甚至争论——交换币的问题。最终公布的结果是我们会得到交换币，但不多，因为有作品被夫人选中是“至高无上的荣誉”。这个结果让双边阵营都不太满意，于是争论的声音持续不断。

就是在这样的背景之下，一天上午波丽·T问了露西小姐一个问题。当时我们在图书馆里，围绕着那张大橡木桌子坐了一圈。我记得当时壁炉里有木柴在燃烧，我们当时在读剧本。突然剧本里碰到一句台词引得劳拉说了句俏皮话，讲到了交换币的事，我们都笑了起来，露西小姐也笑了。然后露西小姐说既然在黑尔舍姆大家除了这事什么都不谈了，那么我们不如忘了读剧本的事，把课堂剩下的时间用来讨论下大家对交换币的各种观点。就是在我们讨论的过程中，波丽冷不丁问了一句：“小姐，为什么夫人要把我们的东西拿走呢？”

我们都沉默不语。露西小姐不经常发脾气，但是如果她生气了，你肯定能看得出来，有一刹那，我们都觉得波丽惹露西小姐生气了。但随后我们发现露西小姐没有生气，只是陷入了沉思。我记得自己当时特别生波丽的气，觉得她真蠢，居然违反了大家心照不宣的约定，但同时又很兴奋，想看看露西小姐如何作答。显然并不是只有我一个人怀着这些矛盾念头：几乎每个人都是先恶狠狠地瞪波丽一眼，然后急切地转向露西小姐——这样其实对可怜的波丽挺不公道的，我想。似乎过了很长时间之后，露西小姐才开口：

“今天我可以告诉你们她的目的是好的，我只能说到这里。是为了一个非常重要的目的。但是如果我现在跟你们解释，我觉得你们理解不了。我希望有一天可以向你们解释清楚。”

我们没有追问她。围绕着桌边的气氛变得非常令人尴尬，虽然我们很好奇，想了解更多，但更希望赶紧离开这个烫手的话题。于是下一刻我们就很放松地重新围绕着交换币——也许有点虚张声势地——继续争论下去。但露西小姐的话令我迷惑不解，接下来的几天里，我时不时想起她的说法。正因为有过这件事，所以那天下午在池塘边，当汤米跟我讲到他跟露西小姐的谈话，她如何告诉他关于某些方面给我们“教得不够”时，那天在图书馆的记忆才会浮上心头——连同一两件与之相类的小事一起。

既然我们说到了交换币的事，我还想略微讲讲我们的拍卖活动，虽然前面我已经提过几次了。拍卖活动之所以对我们那么重要，是因为只有在这里，我们才能获得外来的东西。比如汤米的POLO衫，就是拍卖会上得来的。我们的衣服、玩具，所有那些并非其他学生手作的特别的玩意儿，都是从这里来的。

每个月一次，一辆白色大货车会沿着长路而来，整座楼里、所有的活动场上，你都能感受到那种兴奋。等车子终于在院子里停下来的

时候，那里已经围了一群人在等——主要是小学生，因为一旦你过了十二三岁的年纪，那样肆无忌惮的兴奋就不大合适了。但其实我们都一样。

现在回想起来，一场拍卖能让我们那样激动，其实挺可笑，因为通常拍卖会都会让人大失所望。稍微特别一点的东西都没有，我们只是花交换币去换掉那些用旧或者用坏的东西，总是大同小异。但我猜关键在于我们每个人都曾在过去的拍卖会上找到过什么，这东西变得很特别：一件外套、一只手表、一把做手工的剪刀，虽然从来不用，却把它骄傲地摆在床头。曾几何时我们都找到过像这样的东西，因此无论我们如何假装不在乎，还是无法摆脱过去那种满怀希望和欢欣雀跃的感觉。

实际上，在货车卸货的时候，在附近转转还是有意义的。你要做的是——如果你是那群小学生之一的話——跟着那两个穿工作服扛着纸箱子在储藏室和车辆之间来回往返的人，问他们里面有什么。通常他们会回答说“很多好东西，甜心”。如果你咬住接着问，“算大丰收吗？”他们迟早会面露微笑，回答说：“嗯，我觉得算，甜心。真正的大丰收。”这会激起一片兴奋的欢呼声。

箱子通常是从上面敞开的，因此你可以瞥见各种东西，有时候，虽然不应该，但工人会纵容你拨开几件东西翻看。正因为如此，等到一周左右过去，真正的拍卖会要开始的时候，会有各种各样的流言，也许有一件特别的运动服，或者音乐磁带，如果发生矛盾，那么多半是有几个学生同时看上了一件东西。

拍卖会跟交换活动上那种严肃的气氛对比鲜明。举办地点是在餐厅，熙熙攘攘很是闹腾。实际上，挤来挤去、大声嚷嚷正是乐趣之一，绝大部分时候都还是友好愉快的。除非正如我说过的，偶尔情况有点失控，学生们开始争抢拉扯，有时候还会打起来。这时班长们就站出来威胁说要把活动全部停掉，然后我们所有人在第二天一早的集会上都要被艾米丽小姐批评一顿。

在黑尔舍姆，一天的开始总是集会，通常很短——宣布公告，也许由一个学生朗读一首诗。艾米丽小姐通常不多说；她常常只是在主席台上坐得笔直，无论说到什么，她都点头认可，偶尔人群中有交头接耳的，立刻会被她冷峻的目光一眼扫过。但是一场喧闹的拍卖会过后的第二天，一切都不同了。她会命令我们都在地板上坐下——通常集会时我们是站着的——这时既没有公告，也没有表演，只有艾米丽小姐对我们讲话，持续二三十分钟，有时甚至更久。她极少抬高声

音，但在这种场合她会流露出强硬的一面，我们所有人，哪怕是中学五年级的那些学生，也不敢出声。

大家共同的感受是，如果让艾米丽小姐失望，我们会真切地感到难过，可是虽然很努力，我们却也不能真正理解她的教诲。部分是因为她的用词。“不配享受优待”还有“虚掷大好机会”：这两套说辞反复出现，这是我和露丝在多佛的康复中心她的房间里，我们回忆往事的时候想起来的。她总体的讲话主旨很清楚：我们黑尔舍姆的学生每一个都很特别，因此当我们行为失当的时候，就更加令人失望。可是此外的一切就成了一团迷雾。有时候她会讲得很激烈，然后说完一句话突然停下来，比如：“是什么？是什么？到底是什么阻碍了我们？”然后她就站在原地，闭上眼睛，皱起眉头，仿佛在努力破解这个问题的答案。虽然我们感到迷惑不解又尴尬莫名，却依然坐在原地，期待着她继续思考，直到寻找到头脑中她要找的那个不知道什么新发现。也许她会轻叹一声然后重新开始——这意味着她要宽恕我们了——再不然，她同样可能会从沉默中爆发：“但我决不妥协！不，绝不！黑尔舍姆也不会！”

当我们回忆起这些长篇讲话的时候，露丝提到艾米丽小姐讲得这样云山雾罩很古怪，因为在课堂上她讲得可清楚了。当我说到我曾偶尔见到校长像梦游一样在黑尔舍姆四处漫步，一边自言自语时，露丝生气了，她说：

“她从来没有那样！如果负责人这么不中用，黑尔舍姆怎么会是这样？艾米丽小姐的头脑锋利得可以用来切木头。”

我没有反驳。当然，艾米丽小姐有时候的确是目光如炬。如果，比如说你出现在了主楼或者操场某个不该出现的地方，如果听到有导师走近，总可以找地方躲一躲。黑尔舍姆到处都有藏身之处：橱柜里、墙洞里、树丛里、篱笆下。但是如果你看到艾米丽小姐过来，心就会咯噔一下，因为她总能知道你躲着呢。就好像她感觉更多、更敏锐。你可以躲进柜子，紧紧关上门，周身每一块肌肉都静止不动，依然清楚地知道艾米丽小姐的脚步会在外面停下来，她的话音响起：“好了。你出来吧。”

有一次在三楼的楼梯上，希尔薇·C就遭遇了这样的事，那一次艾米丽小姐难得的大发雷霆。你惹她生气的时候，她从来不会像露西小姐等导师那样大喊大叫，可是艾米丽小姐发火只有更可怕。她会眯起眼睛，愤怒地轻声自言自语，仿佛跟一位看不见的同事讨论怎样惩罚你才够严厉。她那种样子让你一方面迫不及待想听到结果，另一方面

又完全不想面对。但是艾米丽小姐通常不会对我们太严厉。她很少让学生课后留下，布置杂务或者免除学生优待。可是你依然会感到特别难受，哪怕是仅仅因为知道她对你的评价有所降低，于是你立刻就想去做点什么，尽力为自己挽回。

可问题是艾米丽小姐是不可预料的。希尔薇那次可能遭到了足量的惩戒，但是当劳拉在大黄田里乱跑被捉到的时候，艾米丽小姐只是说了句：“姑娘，你不该在这里。快走开。”然后就继续往前走了。

后来有一次，我以为我惹毛了艾米丽小姐，要倒霉了。主楼背后的一条小步道是我真心最喜欢的地方。沿路会经过所有的墙洞和附属建筑，你得从灌木丛中挤过，从两个长满常青藤的拱门下经过，还会穿过一扇生锈的大门。整个路途中你都可以从窗口瞥见室内，一间接一间地路过。我猜我那么喜欢这条小路有一部分原因在于我一直拿不准这里到底是不是禁区。当然，有课的时候你不应该从外面经过。但周末还有傍晚的时候——这里一直没有明确是否禁入。大多数学生总归是绕开这里走，也许这种躲开所有人的感觉也是这地方的吸引力之一。

总之，一个斜阳朗照的傍晚，我就走在这条小路上。我想那是中学三年级的事。我跟往常一样，路过的时候目光瞥进一个又一个空房间，突然我看到艾米丽小姐在一间教室里。她一个人正在慢慢地踱步，一面喃喃自语，动作姿态仿佛是对着房间里一位看不见的听众。我猜想她大概是在备课，或者排演她在集会上的讲话内容，我刚想要赶紧过去，可她已经看到了我，但就在这时她却转过身来，目光直视着我。我呆立着，心想我这下撞到枪口上了，可是随后我注意到，她仪态如常，只不过现在讲话的对象成了我。随后，她又无比自然地转身，将视线转移到了房间其他位置另外某个想象中的学生身上。我沿着小路悄悄溜走了，接下来的几天里都特别怕艾米丽小姐看到我会有话说。可她根本没有提起过。

但这其实不是我刚才想说的事。现在我想做的，是记下几件关于露丝的事，我们如何相遇，交上了朋友，关于我们早年共同度过的那些岁月。因为这些天来，当我在漫长的午后时光里驱车穿过田野，或是在某个公路休息站的大窗户前啜饮咖啡的时候，我发现自己越来越经常地想起她。

她并不是一开始就跟我是朋友。我记得，大约五六岁的时候，我跟汉娜和劳拉在搞什么，但没有露丝。那段我们早期的生活记忆里，

我对露丝只有一点模糊的印象。

我在一个沙坑里玩。里面还有另外三个人跟我在一起，坑里太挤了，我们彼此都有些火气。我们在户外，阳光很温暖，因此很可能那是在幼儿游戏区的沙坑，也有可能是在北操场尽头跳远赛道头上的那堆沙。总之天很热，我觉得口渴，我不高兴沙坑里有那么多人。这时露丝出现了，站在那里，她没有在沙坑里跟我们一起，而是隔着几英尺远。她不知为什么很生我身后两个女孩的气，一定是为了早先发生的什么事。她就站在那里死盯着她们。我猜当时我跟露丝不怎么熟。但她想必已经在我心上留下了某种印象，因为我记得自己当时在沙子里忙着继续自己之前的游戏，非常害怕她会调转目光盯上我。我什么也没说，但我非常想让她明白，我跟背后那两个女孩不是一起的，不管她们怎么得罪了她，我都完全没有参与。

我早年对露丝的记忆就只有这么一点。我们同年，因此我们一定曾碰到过彼此，但除了那次在沙坑里的遭遇，我完全不记得任何跟她有关的事，直到几年之后我们读小学的时候，那时我们七岁，不到八岁。

南操场是小学生用得最多的，就是在那里，在杨树下的角落，有天午饭时间露丝朝我走来，上下打量了我一番，然后说道：

“你想要骑我的马吗？”

我当时正在跟另外两三个孩子玩，但显然露丝只是对我一个人说话。这让我非常开心，但我故意显得思忖了一下她的话之后才作答。

“好呀，你的马叫什么名字？”

露丝上前一步。“我最好的马，”她说，“叫雷电。我不能让你骑他。他太危险了。但你可以骑布蓝堡，只要你不用鞭子打他。再不然你要是喜欢，别的随便哪匹你都可以骑。”她又说了另外几个名字，我现在已经记不起来了。然后她问道：“你自己有马吗？”

我看了看她，认真想了想才回答：“不，我没有马。”

“一匹马都没有么？”

“没有。”

“那好。你可以骑布蓝堡，如果你喜欢，就送给你好了。但你不能用鞭子抽他。你现在就得来。”

反正我那几个朋友已经转身离开，继续他们之前在做的事了。于是我耸耸肩，跟着露丝走了。

操场上满是玩耍的小孩，有些比我们大很多，但露丝理直气壮地从中间穿过，总是领先我一两步。当我们马上要走到跟花园相连的铁丝网边界上时，她转过身说：

“好吧，我们就在这里骑马。你来牵布蓝堡。”

我接过了她手里握着的一根看不见的缰绳，于是我们就开始沿着篱笆来回骑行，有时漫步，有时跳跃。我告诉露丝我没有马这个决定很正确，因为我骑了一会儿布蓝堡之后，她让我一匹接一匹试骑她其他的马，还喊出各种指示，教我如何应对每只动物的小弱点。

“我不是告诉你了嘛！你骑水仙得靠后坐直！再靠后！除非你靠后坐，不然她不喜欢！”

我想必是做得不错，因为最后她让我骑一下雷电，她最喜欢的一匹马。我不知道那天我们玩她的马玩了多久；感觉时间相当长，我想当时我们俩都完全地沉浸在游戏之中。可是突然，我完全看不出什么缘故，露丝就结束了整个游戏，她指责我是故意跑累她的马，我得把每一匹马都带回马厩去。她指着篱笆的某一片，于是我开始将马牵过去，与此同时，露丝越看我越不爽，说我每件事都做得不对。然后她问：

“你喜欢杰拉尔丁小姐吗？”

很可能这是第一次我想这个问题，我喜不喜欢某位导师。最终我说：“当然，我喜欢她。”

“但你是真心喜欢她吗？感觉她很特别？你最喜欢的？”

“是，没错。她是我最喜欢的导师。”

露丝继续盯着我看了好一会儿。最后她终于说道：“那好。既然如此，我就让你成为她秘密警卫的一员。”

这时我们开始朝主楼走去，我等着她解释这是什么意思，可她没有。在接下来的几天里，我才弄明白。

第五章

我不确定“秘密警卫”这件事总共持续了多久。当我在多佛照顾她的时候，我跟露丝讨论过这事，她号称前后不过才两三周时间——但这几乎一定是错的。很可能她感到不好意思，因此整件事在她的记忆中就缩减了。我的猜测是持续了大概九个月，甚至有一年之久，当时我们大约七岁，八岁不到。

我始终拿不准到底是不是露丝本人发明了这个秘密警卫团，但无疑她是其中的领导人物。我们有六到十人，当露丝放新人进来，或是驱逐某人的时候，人数就会有变化。我们相信杰拉尔丁小姐是黑尔舍姆最好的导师，我们要一起准备送她的礼物——我想到的是一张大纸，上面粘着干花标本。但当然，我们存在的主要原因是为了保护她。

到我加入到警卫团中的时候，露丝和其他成员老早就已经知道了要绑架杰拉尔丁小姐的阴谋。我们始终不确定背后主使是谁。有时候我们怀疑是某几个中学的男生，有时是我们同年的几个。有一个导师我们都不大喜欢——有位艾琳小姐——我们一度认为她可能是幕后黑手。我们不知道绑架何时会发生，但有一点我们都确信，那就是树林一定会与此有关。

那片树林远在黑尔舍姆建筑后方的山顶上。我们所能看到的其实只是一片深色的树木的剪影，但在我那个年纪，绝对不止我一个人日夜都在感受着它们的存在。糟糕的时候，仿佛它们将整个黑尔舍姆都笼罩在阴影之中；你只需转过头或是朝窗口靠近，它们就在那里，若隐若现在远处。主楼的前面是最安全的，因为从任何一个窗口都看不到它们。即便如此，实际上你始终无法真正摆脱它们。

关于树林有各种可怕的故事。一次，就在我们这些人进到黑尔舍姆之前不久，一个男孩子跟朋友们大吵一架之后，就跑出了黑尔舍姆的边界。两天之后有人发现他的尸体在树林里被绑在了树上，手脚都被砍掉了。另外还有传言说有个女孩子的鬼魂始终在树林中徘徊。她曾是黑尔舍姆的学生，后来有一天她翻过一道围墙，只是为了看看外面什么样。这是在我们之前很久的事了，那时候导师们远比现在要严厉，甚至残忍，当她想要回来的时候，他们不允许。她就一直在围墙附近游荡，哀求着放她进来，但是没有人应允。最终她在外逃到了

什么地方，出了什么事，然后她就死掉了。但她的鬼魂一直在树林间徘徊，注视着黑尔舍姆，渴望着被接纳进来。

导师们总是坚称这些故事都是无稽之谈。可是那些年长的学生会跟我们说，当初他们小的时候，导师们正是这样告诉他们的，很快我们就会得知可怕的真相，正如他们所经历的一样。

树林激发我们想象最多的，是入夜以后，在我们宿舍里大家试图入睡的时候。这时候你仿佛感到能听到风穿过枝叶的沙沙声，而讲出来只会让情况更糟糕。我记得有一天夜里，我们都非常生气玛琪·K的气，白天她做了件什么事，让我们深感尴尬——我们选择的惩罚方式就是将她从床上拖下来，把她的脸贴在窗玻璃上，命令她抬头看着树林。开始她死命闭着眼睛，但我们拧住她的胳膊，硬将她眼睑扒开，逼她看着远处月光照亮的夜空里树林的剪影，这就足以保证让她整夜在恐惧中啜泣。

我倒不是说在那个年龄，我们所有的时间都用于对树林担惊受怕。比如我自己，就可能有好几个星期完全不去想到它，甚至有时候一阵叛逆的勇气袭上心头，我会心想：“我们怎么会相信这种胡说八道？”然而只需要一点小事——有人复述某一个故事，某本书里一个吓人的章节，甚至只是偶然的一句话，让你想到树林——就意味着又有一段时间要笼罩在阴影之中。因此，我们认为树林在绑架杰拉尔丁小姐的阴谋中占据核心位置，一点都不奇怪。

可是具体到这事本身，我却记不起太多保卫杰拉尔丁小姐的实际措施；我们的活动总是围绕着收集越来越多的跟阴谋相关的证据。不知为何，我们都满意地认为这样可以阻止任何迫在眉睫的危险发生。

我们的“证据”大多来自见证密谋者的工作。比如有天上午，我们从一间三楼的教室窗口看到，艾琳小姐和罗杰先生在下面的院子里跟杰拉尔丁小姐讲话。过了一会儿杰拉尔丁小姐道别朝橘园走去，但我们继续观察，发现艾琳小姐和罗杰先生头靠得很近，鬼鬼祟祟地讨论着什么，同时目光凝视着杰拉尔丁小姐逐渐远去的背影。

“罗杰先生，”这时候露丝叹息着，摇着头，“谁能猜得到他也是其中之一？”

就这样，我们建立了一个我们认定的阴谋者名单——有导师，也有学生，我们宣誓这些人跟我们势不两立，是我们的死敌。然而整个过程中，我猜，这个幻想的故事之基础如此不堪一击，这一点我们其实是有概念的，因为我们总是避免对质冲突。在激烈的讨论之后，我

们可以认定某一个学生是阴谋者之一，但这时，我们总是能找到理由，暂时不去当面质问他——要等到“我们拿到全部证据”。同样，我们一致认为我们查出来的情况，杰拉尔丁小姐本人一句也不该听到，因为那只会让她担惊受怕，没有益处。

在我们的成长自然超越了这个阶段之后，要说是露丝凭一己之力将秘密警卫的故事延续了很久，也不那么容易。当然，警卫故事对她而言很重要。她知道那个阴谋远远早于我们其他人，这给了她巨大的权威；只需暗示说真正的证据都来自我这样的人加入之前——有些情况哪怕是对我们她也还没有透露——她就可以为所有那些代表我们群体所做的决定辩解。比如说，如果她决定要开除某个人，又感到有反对意见，她只需要拐弯抹角地隐约透露一点她“从前”知道的情况。毫无疑问露丝很努力要让整件事一直持续下去，但实际上，我们几个跟她也变得越来越密切，每个人都尽了自己一份力，保护着这个幻想游戏，尽量长久地让它继续下去。那次国际象棋所引发的争吵之后发生的事，充分证明了我的观点。

我一直认为露丝是个国际象棋的高手，她可以教我下棋。这也不是什么荒唐的念头：在靠窗的座位上，或是草坡上，我们曾偶遇高年级的学生埋头对弈，露丝经常会停下来，研究一会儿棋局。当我们重新开步走掉之后，她会告诉我一些她发现对弈双方都没看出来的走法。“笨得不可思议，”她总是摇着头絮语道。这些都让我很着迷，很快我就渴望着自己也能沉浸在这些漂亮的棋子游戏中。于是，当我在拍卖会上发现了一套国际象棋的时候，就决定买下来——虽然这花了我很多的交换币——我拿得准露丝会帮我。

可是接下来的几天里，我一说到这个话题她就叹气，要么就假装自己有很急的事必须得马上做。有个下雨的午后，我终于逮到她，我们在台球室摆开了棋盘，她开始给我摆一局棋，她摆的是国际跳棋的一个模糊的变形玩法。据她说国际象棋的特征在于每个棋子都走L形——我猜她是通过观察马的走步得出这个论点的——而不是像国际跳棋那样蛙跳式走棋。我根本不相信，我真的感到非常失望，但我忍住什么也没说，就这样跟她玩了一会儿。我们花了几分钟时间将彼此的棋子撞倒出局，每次都要走L形攻击路线。这样持续了一阵，直到我要吃她的棋子，可她声称这一步不算数，因为我的棋子要走到她那儿，路线太直了。

这时，我站起身收起棋盘走开了。我从未开口指出说她根本不会下棋——虽然我很失望，却也清楚不能做得太过分——但我想，这样

愤而离开对她来说就已经是种表态了。

大概是第二天，我到了顶楼的二十号教室，乔治先生在上诗歌课。我不记得是课前还是课后了，也不记得教室有多少人。我记得手上有书，当我朝露丝和其他人在讲话的地方走去的时候，他们坐的那片课桌盖笼罩在一片很强的日光里。

从他们脑袋凑在一起的那种样子我就看得出，他们是在讨论秘密警卫的事，虽然正如我说的，我跟露丝吵架才过去一天，可是不知为什么，我就心无旁骛地径直朝他们走去。就在我真的马上走到他们面前的时候——也许他们交换了一个眼神——我突然明白了会发生什么事。就像是你一脚踏进水坑里的那前一秒钟，你发现那儿有个坑了，然而却已经来不及。甚至还不等他们都闭嘴瞪着我，甚至不等露丝开口说“哎，凯西，你好吗？希望你不要介意，我们刚刚有点事要讨论。我们还有一分钟就结束了，抱歉”，我就已经感到很受伤了。

不等她讲完这句话，我就转身夺门而出，我为自己居然迎头走上去而生气，超过了对露丝和其他人的愤怒。我很恼火，毫无疑问，可我不知道自己到底哭没哭。接下来的几天里，每当我看到秘密警卫们在角落里或者田野上一边散步一边商议的时候，都会感到两颊激动得涨红。

二十号教室的冷遇过去了两天之后，我从主楼的楼梯上走下来，发现莫伊拉·B碰巧在我身后。我们聊了起来——没说什么特别的——而后再一起漫步到了楼外。这大概是午休时间，因为当我们步入院子的时候，那边已经有二十多名学生，三三两两在闲逛聊天。我的目光立刻就转向了院子最远的那边，露丝和三个秘密警卫成员站在一起背对着我们，紧紧盯着南操场的方向。我正要设法弄清楚他们到底在盯着什么，这时我突然意识到身旁的莫伊拉也在看着他们。这时我突然想到，仅仅在一个月之前她也曾是秘密警卫中的一员，后来就被开除了。接下来的几秒钟里，我仿佛感到非常狼狈，因为最近遭受了同样的屈辱，我们俩现在竟然这样肩并肩站在了一起，跟过去一样直面拒绝我们的那张脸。也许莫伊拉也有类似的感受，总之是她打破了沉默，说道：

“这太蠢了，什么秘密警卫这一套。他们怎么会还相信这种玩意？好像还是幼儿班的一样。”

当我听到莫伊拉说这话时周身被如此强烈的情感所占据，哪怕今天想起来我也觉得这令人不解。我转身朝着她，简直出离愤怒：

“关于这你知道些什么呢？你根本什么都不知道，因为你现在已经离开太久了！如果你知道了我们发现的所有事，谅你绝对不敢说出这种蠢话！”

“别胡说八道，”莫伊拉从来不是个很容易让步的人，“这只不过是又一个露丝假造出来的把戏，仅此而已。”

“那我怎么会亲耳听到他们说过呢？听到他们讲要怎么用送奶车把杰拉尔丁小姐带到树林里去？我怎么会亲耳听到他们策划这事呢，这跟露丝或者其他任何人都毫无关系？”

莫伊拉看着我，现在她没那么确信了。“你亲耳听到的？怎么回事？在哪里？”

“我听到他们讲的，清清楚楚，每个字都听到了，他们不知道我在那里。就在池塘边，他们不知道我能听见。这下你明白自己知道多少了吧！”

我推开她走了，穿过人群拥挤的庭院时，我回头瞥了一眼露丝和其他人的身影，他们依然朝南操场的方向盯着看呢，对于我跟莫伊拉之间刚刚发生的事一无所知。这时我留意到我对他们一点都不生气了，只是很生莫伊拉的气。

即便如今，当我行驶在漫长灰沉沉的路上，思绪飘忽，无处着落的时候，有时我发觉自己又在从头开始想这件事。为什么那天我会对本该是我天然盟友的莫伊拉·B那么充满敌意？我想当时莫伊拉是希望我跟她一起跨越某个界限，可我还没准备好。我想我当时大概已经感觉到，一旦越过这条线，等待我们的就会有更艰难、更黑暗的东西，而我不想要面对。我不想，也不想我们任何一个人去面对那些东西。

但还有一些时候，我会觉得那是不对的——这单纯只是我跟露丝之间的事儿，那些日子里，她的确激起了我那样强烈的忠诚度。也许正因为如此，有几次虽然我很想说，却一直没有提起过那天我跟莫伊拉之间的事——就在多佛的康复中心我照顾露丝的那些日子里。

所有这些关于杰拉尔丁小姐的往事让我想起大约三年之后发生的一件事，在秘密警卫的游戏淡去很久之后。

我们在主楼后部底楼的五号教室里等着上课。五号教室是最小的一间，尤其在这样一个冬日的早晨，大暖气开起来，所有的窗户都蒙

上一层雾气，教室里真的挺闷。也许我夸张了，但在我的记忆中，要想把全班人都塞进这间教室里，学生真得挤到堆叠起来才可以。

那天早上，露丝坐在一张课桌后的椅子上，我就坐在课桌盖上，身旁还有两三个我们一起的学生或靠或坐。事实上，我想就是在我挤出空间放别人进来坐在我旁边的时候，我才第一次注意到了那个铅笔盒。

我现在还能看到那件文具，仿佛它近在眼前。笔盒亮闪闪的，像一只擦亮的皮鞋；深褐底色上缀满了圆形的红点点。顶上的拉链有个毛毛球拉手。我挪位的时候差一点坐到这个笔盒上，于是露丝马上将它拿走离开我的视线。可我已经看到了，这正是她想要我看的，于是我说：

“哎呀！你从哪里得的？是拍卖会上吗？”

教室里很吵，但几乎所有的女生都听到了，因此立刻就有四五个人羡慕地望着这个铅笔盒。露丝等了几秒钟没说话，仔细地留意着周围的那些脸庞。最后她很刻意地说：

“就这么说好了。咱们都认为我是拍卖会上得的。”说完她对我们所有人露出了一个“你懂得”笑容。

这样的回答可能听起来无伤大雅，但实际上她仿佛是突然起身打了我一巴掌，接下来的一会儿，我同时感到浑身冰冷又滚烫。我清楚地知道她的回答和她的笑容到底是什么意思：她在声称这铅笔盒是来自杰拉尔丁小姐的礼物。

这里绝没有任何误会，因为她已经酝酿积蓄了几个礼拜了。露丝会用一个特定的微笑，一种特别的语调——有时还会伴之以一根手指压在唇上，或是抬起一只手，做出舞台表演式的耳语姿势——来暗示杰拉尔丁小姐对她示好的种种小迹象：杰拉尔丁小姐在非周末的四点之前就允许露丝在台球室播放音乐磁带；杰拉尔丁小姐在田间行走时要求大家安静，但是当露丝走到身边的时候，她却开始跟她讲话了，然后就容许其他人讲话了。都是些诸如此类的小事，从来也不会明白地说出来，她只是用笑容暗示，还有那种“大家心照不宣”的表情。

当然，按照要求导师是不应该对个别学生区别对待的，但在某些范围之内，总是能发现各种微小的偏心表现；露丝所暗示的大部分情况都很符合这些表现。可露丝这种虚张声势还是让我恨得要命。当然，我始终拿不准她到底有没有说实话，但因为她没有实在地“说”

出来，而只是暗示，你就永远不可能直接质问她。因此每当发生这样的事，我都只能由她去，咬住嘴唇希望这一刻快点过去。

有时候根据谈话的走向，我能看得出这一刻就要来临了，于是我就强打精神挺住。即便当时，这种事总是会给我很大的冲击，接下来的几分钟内我都无法对周边发生的任何事集中精神。但那个冬日的早晨，在五号教室，这一击凭空而来，打得我毫无防备。哪怕我看到了铅笔盒，想到一个导师竟然送像这样的一件礼物，这件事绝对是远远过界、毫无道理、完全出乎我的意料。因此，当露丝说完她要说的话之后，我跟往常一样，一时不能平复我狂乱的思绪。我只是瞪着她，一点也没想要掩饰我的愤怒。露丝或许感到了危险，立刻用旁人听得到的音量，作势悄悄对我说：“不许说！”然后再次露出了微笑。可我做不到报之以微笑，而是继续怒视她。这时幸好导师进来，开始上课了。

我从来都不是那种连续好几个钟头没完没了想事情的小孩。如今我有点变成这样了，但那是因为我工作的缘故，还因为我要驱车穿过许多空旷的田野，静静行驶很长的时间。比如说，我跟劳拉就很不一样，她一方面搞笑滑稽，另一方面却会为了某人对她说的一点点小事就担心上好几天，甚至几个星期。但那天五号教室的事过后，我却有段时间都精神恍惚。谈话当中我会走神；有时候上完整整一节课我却不知道课上讲的什么。我认定这次绝不能放过露丝，但很长时间里，我并没有对此采取任何建设性举措，就只是在脑海中放映我的幻景：我要揭露她，逼她承认自己瞎编乱造，我甚至有一个模糊的幻想场景是杰拉尔丁小姐本人听说了这件事，当着所有人的面，狠狠地把露丝批评了一顿。

这样过了几天之后，我开始认真考虑实际行动了。如果铅笔盒不是杰拉尔丁小姐送的，那是从哪来的呢？她有可能是从另一个学生那儿得来的，但这很不可能。如果笔盒先是属于别人的，哪怕是比我们高好几年级的学生，一件像这样漂亮的玩意不可能没人注意。若是知道这笔盒已经在黑尔舍姆出现过，露丝绝不会冒险编出这样的故事。几乎能确定她就是在拍卖会上找到的。然而在这里，露丝同样要冒风险，在她买到手之前，其他人可能已经见过。但是如果——虽然这种情况不允许，却也偶尔发生——她提前听说了有这样一个铅笔盒要进来，在拍卖开放之前，提前跟某一个班长预订下来，那样她就可以有相当大的信心，其他人没有见到过这东西。

然而对于露丝来说不幸的是，拍卖会上所有买到的东西都有登记，同时购入者是谁也有记录。虽然说这些记录不太好找——每次拍卖会一结束，班长们就会将登记册交回艾米丽小姐的办公室——但也绝对算不上绝密材料。只要下一次拍卖会上，我在某个班长身边晃荡一会儿，要想翻翻登记册应该毫无难度。

于是我有了一个大致的计划，我想，我又继续琢磨几天完善细节什么的，这时我突然想到其实我根本没必要实施所有步骤。只要我想的没错，铅笔盒的确是出自于拍卖会，那么我只需要吓唬她一下就够了。

这就是我和露丝那次屋檐下谈话的来由。那天雾气蒙蒙，下着微雨。我们两人正从宿舍楼往大概是运动馆走，我记不清了。总之，当我们穿过院子的时候，雨突然下大了，因为我们不着急，所以就躲到主楼的屋檐下避雨，就在前门旁边一点的地方。

我们避了一会儿，时不时看到有学生从雾中跑出来，奔进主楼的大门，但雨并没有停歇。我们站在那边的时间越久，我就变得越紧张，因为我觉得，这就是我等待已久的机会。我敢肯定露丝也感觉到了有事要发生。最终，我决定径直讲出来。

“上礼拜二的拍卖会上，”我说，“我碰巧在翻册子。你知道的，就是那本登记的簿子。”

“你干吗要翻登记册？”露丝很快地问道，“你为什么要这样做呢？”

“哦，没什么缘故。克里斯托弗·C是班长之一，我只是碰巧跟他聊了起来。他是中学男生里面人最好的，毫无疑问。我只是随便翻翻登记册的页码，只是想找点事做。”

我能看得出，露丝的头脑在飞速运转，她清楚知道这话是什么意思。可她还是很镇静地说：“这种东西看起来很没意思的。”

“才不呢，其实很有趣的。你能看到别人买的每一样东西。”

我说这话的时候，眼睛望着外面的雨。随后我瞥了一眼露丝，结果大受震惊。我不知道自己希望看到什么反应；上个月来我虽然一直在幻想，但却从未认真考虑过像眼下正在发生的真实场景会是什么样子。如今我亲眼看到露丝有多难过；终于有一次她完全无话可说，差一点就要哭出来，只得转开脸。突然我觉得自己的所作所为完全不可理喻。我计划了这么多，努力了这么久，就只是为了让我亲爱的朋友

难过。关于这个铅笔盒的来历她编了几句瞎话，那又能怎样？我们所有人难道不是都曾经常会梦想着某个导师为我们做点特别的事，或者因为我们开特例，放宽规定？我们谁不曾期待一个突然的拥抱，一封秘密的来信，一件礼物？露丝所做的无非就是将这些无伤大雅的白日梦向前推进了一步；她甚至都没有提过杰拉尔丁小姐的名字。

如今我感觉很糟糕，我也很困惑。可是，我们站在那里，望着雨雾的时候，我想不出什么办法可以弥补自己造成的伤害。我想我大概说了些很没劲的话，好比是“没事，我也没看到什么”，直到今日这傻话简直言犹在耳。又沉默了几秒钟，露丝走进雨中离开了。

第六章

我想，如果露丝明显跟我过不去，可能我对那天发生的事还会感觉好些。但这一次她似乎就认输了。似乎这件事让她很羞愧——大受打击——甚至发不起火，也无力反击我。那次屋檐下的谈话之后，我头几次见到她的时候，是做好准备她要冲我发脾气的，可是没有，她客客气气，甚至有点泄气。我突然想到她可能是怕我揭露她——当然，那只铅笔盒就此消失不见了——于是我想告诉她不必怕我会说出去。问题在于，因为所有这些事都没有公开地谈论过，所以我也没办法跟她提起。

同时我尽力抓住所有机会，向露丝暗示说，她在杰拉尔丁小姐心目中地位不凡。比如有一次，我们一帮人都很想在课间休息时间出去练习打棒球，因为有帮比我们高一年级的人向我们挑衅。问题是天在下雨，看起来导师们不大可能允许我们外出活动。可我留意到值班的导师之一是杰拉尔丁小姐，于是我说：

“如果露丝去问杰拉尔丁小姐，那我们还有点机会。”

就我记得，这个建议没有得到采纳；也许几乎没人听到，因为我们许多人同时都在讲话。但关键是，我说话的时候就站在露丝身后，我能够看得出她挺高兴。

还有一次，我们几个人跟杰拉尔丁小姐一起离开一间教室，我发现自己凑巧就在杰拉尔丁小姐身后出门，于是我就特地慢了几步，让身后的露丝跟在杰拉尔丁小姐身后出了门。我做得悄无声息，仿佛这样做很自然，很正确，符合杰拉尔丁小姐的愿望——如果我凑巧站到了两个好朋友中间，我就会这么做。那一次我记得有一个刹那露丝看起来有点迷惑，也很意外，随后朝我很快点了点头，然后就过去了。

像这样的小事可能会让露丝高兴，但还是远远无法弥补那个雾天里屋檐下我们俩发生的事，渐渐地我越来越强烈地感觉自己再也无法处理好这事儿了。我尤其记得有一天晚上，我在运动馆外的一张长椅上坐着，一遍又一遍地想找个出路，同时心中充满了悔恨和挫败感，几乎要落下泪来。如果情况一直这样下去，我不确定会发生什么。也许一切最终会被忘记；再不然，也许我和露丝会逐渐疏远。可这时，突然有机会从天而降，让我得以挽回这件事。

我们当时是在罗杰先生的艺术课上，课上到一半不记得什么原因他出去了。于是我们就在画架之间游荡，聊聊天，欣赏下彼此的作品。这时有个叫米芝·A的女孩子走到我们这边，毫无恶意地问道：

“你的铅笔盒哪去了？多漂亮啊。”

露丝紧张起来，快速巡视四周，看看都有谁在场。当时就是我们平常那帮人，还有两三个外人在附近晃。我跟任何人都没提过拍卖会登记册的事，可我猜露丝大概不知道这点。她用比往常更柔和的声音回答米芝道：

“没在我这里。我放在收藏箱里了。”

“太漂亮了。你哪里得的？”

米芝问得心无芥蒂，现在看来这很明显。但露丝在五号教室第一次拿出那个铅笔盒时在场的我们此时也几乎全都在这里，在观望着。我看到露丝犹豫了。后来，当我在脑海中重演当时的情景时，才真正领会对我而言当时是一个多么完美的机会。而当时我根本想都没想。我只是趁米芝或是其他任何人有机会注意到露丝古怪地面露难色之前，站了出来。

“我们不能说笔盒是哪里来的。”

露丝、米芝、其余的人，他们都望着我，也许略微还有点意外。可我面不改色地继续说，只对着米芝一个人说。

“有很特别的原因，我们不能告诉你笔盒是哪里来的。”

米芝耸耸肩。“所以就是说保密咯。”

“是个大秘密，”我说完，对她微笑，以表明我不是故意对她使坏。

其他人都在点头认可我的说法，可是露丝本人的表情却很含混，仿佛她突然心思转到了完全不相关的事上。米芝又耸耸肩，就我记得事情就这样结束了。要么她走开了，要么她开始聊别的话题。

你瞧，我没办法跟露丝开诚布公地谈拍卖会登记册那件我对不住她的事，出于同样理由，当然她也没办法因为米芝那事我及时站出来向我致谢。但从她对我的态度，不但接下来的几天里，甚至几个礼拜都明显看得出，她很喜欢我。因为近期我也曾处在同样的境地，所以很容易根据各种迹象看出，她在到处找机会，想为我做点事，做点特别贴心的好事。这感觉很好，我记得甚至有一两次曾心想，要是她多

年都找不到机会才好呢，这样我们之间美好的感情就可以一直延续下去。然而米芝那件事过了大约一个月之后，她的机会终于来了，那次，我丢失了最喜欢的一盘磁带。

直到最近我还有一盘这个磁带，微雨的天气里，当我开着车行驶在开阔的乡间时，偶尔还是会听听。但如今我车里放卡带的设备太不好用，我都不敢用它播放那盘磁带了。而当我回到睡觉的地方时，却仿佛总也没有时间去放音乐。即便如此，这依然是我最珍贵的财产之一。也许到今年年底，我不做护理员了之后，就可以更经常听听这盒磁带了。

这张专辑叫做《夜曲》，是朱迪·布里奇沃特唱的。我如今手上的这盘磁带并不是当年那盘，我在黑尔舍姆时候的那盘被我弄丢了。这盘是几年之后我和汤米在诺福克找到的一一但那是另一个故事了，我稍后再讲。我想讲的是第一盘磁带，就是消失不见的那个。

在继续讲下去之前，我应该先解释一下我们当初对诺福克的那些想象。我们一直维持着这种想象，过了好多年——到最后，我觉得这都成了我们之间的一个笑话——一切的开始只是我们很小的时候上过的某一节课。

关于英国各郡的地理是艾米丽小姐亲自教授。她会将一张很大的地图钉在黑板上，在旁边支起画架。如果她今天讲的是牛津郡，她就在画架上摆一张当地风光的挂历图片。她有很多这种风景画挂历图，大多数郡县我们都是这样认识的。她会用教鞭指到地图上的某个点，然后转向画架，再展开下一幅画面。上面有溪流经过的小村庄，山坡上的白色纪念碑，田野边的老教堂；如果她讲的是一个海边的地方，那画面就是挤满人的海滩，或是海鸥飞起的峭壁。我想她是希望我们了解外面的环境是怎样的，神奇的是，即便是今天，我作为护理员行遍全国各地，脑海中对各个郡县的印象还是来自艾米丽小姐画板上看到的图片。比如当我开车路过德比郡，就会发现自己在刻意寻找某片村中绿野，那里有间仿都铎式的小酒馆，还有座战争纪念碑——这时我才意识到那就是我第一次听说德比郡时，艾米丽小姐展示给我们的图片。

总之关键问题是艾米丽小姐的挂历收藏有个缺口：所有的图册中竟没有一张诺福克的图片。这些课我们重复上了几次，我始终在想，不知道这次她有没有找到诺福克的画面，可是每次都一样。她总是将

教鞭挥到地图上的某个地点，仿佛过后才想起来找补一句似的说：“这里就是诺福克，很不错的地方。”

于是有那么一次，我记得她停下来陷入了沉思，也许是因为她没有计划好，没了图片下一步应该怎么办。最后，她如梦方醒，又一次敲打着地图。

“你们看，因为此地向东延伸，位于深入大海的一个拱角，所以去哪里都不会路过这边。不论走南闯北，”——她将教鞭上下挥动——“人们都会绕开这里。因此，这是英格兰一个安静的角落，非常不错。但同时这也是失落的一角。”

失落的一角。她是这样说的，故事就是这样开始的。因为在黑尔舍姆，在四楼我们有个自己的“失物角”，所有丢失的物品都会存放在这里；如果你丢了什么，或者捡到什么，都会到这里来。有人——我不记得到底是谁——在课后宣称，艾米丽小姐说诺福克是英格兰“失落的一角”，意思是全国的遗失物品都会送到这里。不知为何这说法流传开来，很快就在我们整个年级被当成了广泛接受的事实。

不久之前，我和汤米曾回忆起这一切，他认为我们从来没有认真相信过这种说法，这从一开始就只是个笑话。可我很确定他说的不对。当然，等到我们十二三岁的时候，关于诺福克的这种说法就成了个大笑话。但我记得——露丝跟我记忆是一样的——开始的时候，我们都相信诺福克真的就是这样，就像卡车会定期开到黑尔舍姆，给我们送来食物和拍卖的物品，也有一个类似的工作机制，只不过要大得多，将所有人们落在田野里、丢在火车上的东西都送到这个叫诺福克的地方。我们从来没有见过这地方的画面，倒是徒增其神秘感。

这可能听起来挺傻，但你得记住对我们而言，在人生的这个阶段，黑尔舍姆之外的任何地方都像是幻境一般；对于外面的世界什么样，什么可能什么不可能，我们都只有极为模糊的认识。再说我们从来也没有费心去分析这个诺福克理论的细节问题。正如当初我们在多佛那个铺满瓷砖的房间里，有天傍晚望着外面的夕阳时，露丝说的那样，对我们而言重要的是“当我们弄丢了一样宝贝东西，到处找啊找，可还是找不到，那也用不着太过伤心。我们还有最后一点安慰，想着有一天等我们长大以后，就可以在全国自由旅行，总可以去诺福克把它找回来”。

我确信露丝说的对。诺福克的存在对我们来说是一种安慰，安慰的程度之高，可能远远超过我们当时愿意承认的水平。所以等到我们

长得蛮大以后，依然还在谈起诺福克——哪怕只是当作笑话来说。这也是为什么，许多许多年过去以后，那天我和汤米在诺福克的海边小镇上又找到了一盘我丢失的那盒磁带时，我们感觉不只是好笑而已；我们都感到心底深处依然有所触动，那是古早时候的愿望在觉醒，想要再次相信那些曾经贴近我们内心的东西。

可我想说的是那盒磁带，朱迪·布里奇沃特的《夜曲》。我猜最早应该是出的黑胶唱片——录制时间是一九五六年——可我拿到的是卡带，封面图片想必是初版唱片封套的缩小版。朱迪·布里奇沃特身穿一件紫色缎子礼服，是当时流行的露肩款，你可以看到她腰部以上的画面，因为她坐在一个吧台高凳上。我觉得设计的场景应该是南美，因为她身后有棕榈树，还有皮肤黝黑的服务生，穿着白色燕尾服。你看朱迪的角度，恰恰跟酒保为她倒酒时望着她的角度完全一样。她带着一种友好、不会太过性感的神情回望身后，仿佛只是些微有意调笑，三分含情，而你是她很早就认识的老朋友。关于这幅封面图还有一点就是朱迪两个手肘撑在吧台上，手上有根点燃的香烟。就是因为这根香烟，所以让我对磁带小心翼翼，从拍卖会上找到它的那一刻开始，就特别留意保密。

我不知道你们那里是怎么样的，但在黑尔舍姆，导师们对于吸烟非常严厉。我敢肯定，如果能保证我们根本不知道吸烟这种事的存在，他们肯定更高兴；但是既然这不可能，他们就确保每次提及香烟的时候，都要教育我们一遍。哪怕是我们看到一幅著名作家或者世界领袖的人像时，只要此人碰巧手上有根香烟，那整节课就不得不停下来。甚至有流言说有些经典作品——比如福尔摩斯探案——我们的图书馆里都找不到，就是因为其中的主要角色吸烟太多，有时你会碰到某本书或者杂志的插图有缺页，是被撕掉的，那也是因为原来的画面上有人抽烟。还有我们实际上过的那些课程，展示给我们吸烟对人体内部造成的可怕后果。因此那次玛琪·K问露西小姐问题的时候，我们才会那么震惊。

当时我们刚刚结束了一场小型棒球赛，大家坐在草地上，露西小姐刚刚又给我们讲了一遍关于吸烟的教训，这时玛琪突然问露西小姐她本人有没有抽过烟。露西小姐沉默了几秒钟，然后才说：

“我希望自己可以说没有。但坦白讲，我是抽过一段时间的。大约两年，我年纪比较轻的时候。”

你可以想象得出，这让我们多震惊。在露西小姐答话之前，我们都瞪着玛琪，发自内心地感到愤慨，她竟然会问出这样无礼的问题——在我们看来，她这样的发问，不啻于问露西小姐有没有用斧头攻击过他人。我记得在此后的几天里，我们把玛琪折磨得生不如死；事实上，我之前提过的那件事，那天晚上我们将玛琪的脸贴在宿舍窗户上，逼她看树林，那都是之后发生的事。但在当时，露西小姐一说出她曾做过的事，我们所有人都感到很困惑，根本想不到玛琪了。我猜我们大家就只是怀着无限的惊恐盯着露西小姐，等着看她还会说什么。

等她终于再开口的时候，露西小姐似乎每个字都仔细斟酌过。“我抽过烟，这不是件好事。这对我不好，所以我戒掉了。但你们必须得明白，对于你们每个人来说，吸烟的害处要远远大于对我的害处。”

然后她就停住，再也不说什么了。后来有人说她是白日做梦，神游天外了，但我很确信，露西小姐也认为，她是在努力想接下来怎么说。最终她说：

“已经有人教过你们这些。你们是学生。你们……很特别。所以你们得保持健康，确保内脏都完全健康，对于你们每个人，这都比对我要更为重要。”

她再次停下，用一种奇怪的眼光看着我们。后来我们讨论此事的时候，我们中有人很确定地说，她当时非常希望有人能问：“为什么？为什么对我们来说更糟糕？”可是没有人开口。我常常想起那天，经过了后来的许多事，再回头看时，现在我想清楚了，当时但凡我们开口问，露西小姐一定会知无不言言无不尽。当时所需要的只是再有一个关于吸烟的问题。

那么为什么当天我们都保持了沉默？我猜是因为即便是在当时的年纪——我们九岁，或者十岁——我们已经知道得够多，对这个领域的一切非常敏感。现在很难记清楚我们当时到底知道多少。我们显然知道——尽管并非从深层意义上了解——我们跟导师们是不一样的，跟外面那些正常人也不一样；甚至我们可能知道在遥远的未来，有捐献在等待着我们。可我们并不真正理解这意味着什么。如果我们有意避开某些话题，更有可能是因为我们觉得不好意思。我们特别讨厌的是，一向掌控自如的导师们，每当靠近这个领域时，总会变得非常笨拙，词不达意。我们看到他们这种变化会感到不安。我想这就是为什

么我们没有继续追问的缘故，也是为什么我们会那样严厉地惩戒玛琪·K，因为她在那天棒球比赛之后，挑起了这个话题。

总之，这就是为什么我对那盒磁带如此小心保密。我甚至把封面里朝外反过来，这样只有打开外面的塑料盒子才能看到朱迪和那根香烟。但这盒磁带对我来说意义重大，其缘故却跟香烟毫无关系，甚至跟朱迪·布里奇沃特唱歌的方法没有关系——她是属于她那个时代的歌手，鸡尾酒会什么的，跟我们黑尔舍姆的人喜欢的东西格格不入。我之所以觉得这盒磁带具有特殊意义，只是因为其中一首歌：专辑第三首歌，《莫失莫忘》。

这歌很慢，充满深夜的韵味，很美国，有一小段反复出现，朱迪唱道：“莫失莫忘……哦，宝贝，宝贝……莫失莫忘……”我当时十一岁，没有听过多少音乐，但这一首歌真的打动了我。我总是尽量让磁带转到这首歌，一旦有机会我就可以播放。

别忘了我没有太多机会，过了若干年随身听才开始出现在我们的拍卖会上，台球室里有一台大机器，但我很少在那里播放这盘磁带，因为里面总是人很多。艺术教室里也有一台放音机，但里面同样也总是很吵闹。我唯一可以听音乐的地方很可能就只有在宿舍里。

这时候我们已经搬到了另外的房子里，有六张床的小房间，在我们的房间里，暖气片上面的架子上摆着一台手提式卡带播放机。所以白天一般没有人在的时候，我就会去那里，一遍又一遍地播放我这首歌。

这首歌到底有什么特别之处？其实是这样的，我当时没有好好听明白歌词；我只是等着听那一小段：“宝贝，宝贝，莫失莫忘……”在我的想象中，这是一个女人，别人告诉她她不能生孩子，可她一生都真的非常非常想要孩子。后来发生了某种奇迹，她有了一个小宝宝，于是她把宝宝紧紧抱在身边，一边漫步一边唱道：“宝贝，莫失莫忘……”一方面是因为她非常喜悦，但另一方面，她又很害怕会发生什么事，宝宝会生病，或者被人带走。即便在当时我也明白这不合理，这种解读跟其余部分的歌词对不上。但我觉得这都不是问题。这歌唱的就是我说的故事，我一个人的时候只要有机会，就会一遍又一遍地听。

大约就是这段时间里，发生了一件奇怪的事，我这就来讲给你听。这事真的令我很不安，虽然直到多年之后我才明白它真正的意义，可即便是在当时，我也能感到事情背后另有深意。

那是一个阳光很好的午后，我回寝室去拿东西。我记得光线非常充足，因为我们房间的窗帘没有拉整齐，可以看到大束的阳光倾泻进来，尘土在空气中飘飞。我本不想放音乐，但因为只有我一个人在，一时冲动之下，我就从收藏品箱子里取出了磁带，放进了播放机。

我不知道最后一个使用放音机的是谁，但可能就是他把音量调高了。播放的声音比我通常用的要响很多，也许这正是我没有及时听到她声音的缘故。再不然也许我当时只是太沉迷。总之，我当时正随着歌声轻摇慢摆，怀中还抱着一个想象中的婴儿。事实更令人尴尬，我当时抱着一个枕头，来代替小宝宝，那也不是我第一次这样做，当时我舞步缓慢，闭着眼睛，每当这几句歌词出现的时候，都会跟着轻声唱：

“哦，宝贝，宝贝，莫失莫忘……”

歌曲快完结的时候，我不知怎的突然发现当时并非只有我一个人，我睁开眼睛，发现夫人就在面前，她的身影正好框在门洞里。

我惊得呆在原地。接下来的一两秒钟，我开始感到一种新的惊恐，因为我看得出，情况有古怪。房门几乎是半开着——我们有这样的规则，除非睡觉，否则宿舍房门不可以关闭——可是夫人并没有走到门口。她在外面走廊上，非常安静地站在那里，头侧到一边，为了看到我在里面的动作。奇怪的是她在哭泣。甚至有可能是她抽泣的声音盖过了歌声，才将我从白日梦中惊醒。

现在当我回想起来，虽然说她不是我们的导师，却也是个成年人，她应该做点什么、说点什么，哪怕是批评我几句呢。那样我就会知道该怎么做了。可她只是呆立在原地，哭个不停，穿过门洞望着我，眼睛里的表情跟平常看我们的时候一样，好像看到什么让她害怕的东西似的。只不过这一次有所不同，她眼神里还有别的东西，我看不懂。

我不知道该怎么做，该说什么，或者接下来会发生什么事。也许她会进到房间里，对我大喊大叫，甚至打我。我毫无概念。可她只是转过身，接下来我只听到她离开宿舍楼的脚步声。我这才发现磁带已经转到了下一首歌，于是我去关掉了播放机，在离我最近的床边坐了下来。这时，透过我眼前的窗户，我看到她的身影匆匆朝主楼走去。她并没有回头，但从她弓着背的样子我能看得出，她还在哭。

几分钟之后我回到朋友们身边，对于刚刚发生的事一个字也没说。有人留意到我不对劲，说了句什么，可我只是耸耸肩，没说什

么。我并非感到羞耻：但这次的感受跟之前有所相似，就是夫人从汽车里出来，遭到我们集体伏击的那一次。我最希望的无非是这整件事都没有发生过，我觉得，不再提起这件事，就等于是帮了我自己和其他人一个忙。

可是几年之后，我却跟汤米讲过这件事。那次在池塘边，他第一次跟我吐露心事，讲到露西小姐的那次谈话之后的一段时间里，那段时间——现在在我看来——是我们开始思考，提出各种关于自身的问题的时候。我们在这样的状态中度过了几年。当我告诉了汤米在宿舍里跟夫人遭遇的那件事之后，他提出了一个非常简单的解释。当然，到那时我们都知道了一些当时不知道的事，即我们这些人都不可能生小孩。有可能在我年纪还小的时候，虽然没有完全明白，却不知怎么有了这个印象，所以听这首歌的时候才会对歌词有这样的认识。但当时我完全不可能懂得这些。正如我说的，等到我跟汤米讨论此事的时候，我们都已经了解得相当清楚了。其实我们没有一个人对此特别耿耿于怀，事实上，我还记得有人很高兴，因为我们在性生活中完全不需要担心这些事——虽然在那个阶段，真正意义上的性爱对于我们大多数人还是遥不可及。总之，当我把发生的事告诉汤米之后，他说：

“夫人很可能不是坏人，虽然她神经兮兮的。所以当看到她那样跳舞的时候，抱着小宝宝的样子，她觉得很难过，因为你不能生小孩。所以她就哭了。”

“可是，汤米，”我指出来，“她怎么会知道这首歌跟生小孩有关系的？她怎么可能知道我抱着的枕头是代表小宝宝？这只是我脑子里的念头啊。”

汤米想了又想，然后半开玩笑地说：“也许夫人会读心术。她很古怪的。也许她能一眼看透你的内心。我觉得那也不奇怪。”

这让我们俩都觉得有点怕，虽然一笑置之，却再也没有多说。

跟夫人遭遇的事过了两个月之后，磁带不见了。当时我完全没有将这两件事联系起来，现在也没有任何理由关联这两件事。一天晚上我在宿舍，就在熄灯之前，我在翻自己收藏品的箱子，来消磨等其他人从浴室出来的那段时间。奇怪的是，当我刚刚意识到磁带没在里面的时候，我主要的念头是一定不能让自己内心的惊恐暴露出来。我还记得自己一边继续找，一边故作镇静地哼着歌，装得心不在焉。我想了又想，直到今天依然无法解释这件事：房间里都是我最亲密的好朋友，可我还是不想让她们知道，磁带不见了让我多难过。

我猜有可能是因为这是个秘密，这盘磁带对我来说意义重大。也许黑尔舍姆的每一个人都有这样的小秘密——一些凭空想象出来的小空间，容我们带着自己的恐惧和渴望，一个人躲藏其中。但当时，我们有这种需求本身，我们就认为是不对的——好像我们辜负了自己的朋友。

总之，一旦我确定磁带是不见了，就挨个问宿舍里的每一个人，很随便地问她们有没有看到过。我当时还没有完全慌神，因为还有可能我把它落在台球室了；不然的话，我还希望是有人借走，早上就会还回来。

可是第二天磁带也没有出现，我至今也不知道它的下落。我猜，事实上，黑尔舍姆的盗窃案比我们——或者导师——愿意承认的要多得多。但我现在之所以要说这些，是为了解释露丝和她的反应。你要记得，我丢失磁带是在米芝在艺术课上问起露丝铅笔盒、我挺身相救那件事过了一个月之后。正如我前面说过的，打那之后露丝就一直想方设法要还我的情分，我的磁带消失不见，对她而言简直是机不可失。你甚至可以这么说，直到我的磁带消失不见，我们两人的关系才恢复正常——也许自从那个下雨的早上，在主楼的屋檐下，我向她提及拍卖会登记表以来，这才是第一次我们正常交流。

我第一次留意到磁带不见了的那个晚上，我确保每个人都问到了，当然也包括露丝。回顾往事，我才看出她当时就已经意识到，丢失这盘磁带对我意味着什么，还有低调处理对我而言同样重要。因此那天晚上，她漫不经心地耸肩作答，然后就继续忙自己的事了。但是第二天早上，当我从浴室回来的时候，我听到她——用很随便地口吻，仿佛这不是什么大事——在问汉娜，是不是确定没有见过我的磁带。

然后过了大约两周，我早已接受了现实，知道自己真的弄丢了磁带，她午餐之后休息时间来找我。那是春天里最舒服的好天气刚开始出现的一天，我正坐在草坪上，跟两个年龄较大的女孩子聊天。当露丝走过来问我是否愿意去散个步的时候，很明显她有特别的事要讲。于是我离开了那两个大点的女生，跟着她到了北操场，然后又上了北山，直到我们站在了木栅栏边，俯瞰着下面点缀着三五成群学生的绿地。山顶上风很大，我记得自己很吃惊，因为在下面草地上我没有留意到有风。我们站在那里，看了一会儿下面的操场，随后她拿出一个小包给我。我接过来，能看得出里面是盘磁带，我的心都跳起来了。可是露丝立刻说：

“凯西，不是你那盘。你丢的那盘。我想给你找回来，但真的不见了。”

“是啊，”我说，“去了诺福克。”

我们都笑了。随后我怀着失望的心情把磁带从包里取了出来。我拿不准自己在查看磁带的时候，那失望之情是否还挂在脸上。

我手上是一盘叫做《经典舞曲二十首》的磁带。后来当我播放的时候，发现那是用于舞厅的器乐演奏。当然，她递给我的那个刹那，我并不知道上面是哪种音乐，但我知道绝对无法跟朱迪·布里奇沃特相提并论。可是这时，几乎马上，我就看出来露丝不明白——露丝对音乐一无所知，在她看来这盘磁带很可能足以取代我丢掉的那盘。突然我感到失望之情消退了，取代其位的是一种发自内心的幸福。在黑尔舍姆，我们不作兴搂搂抱抱。可我用双手握住她的手，向她道谢。她说：“我上次拍卖会上找到的。我觉得这种东西你会喜欢。”我说没错，我喜欢的就是这种。

这盘磁带仍然在我身边。我不太播放，因为其中的乐曲无关紧要。这是个物件，好比一个胸针或是戒指，尤其是如今露丝已经不在，这成了我最宝贵的东西之一。

第七章

现在我想往前赶赶，讲讲我们在黑尔舍姆最后一年的事。我说的是我们从十三岁到十六岁离开的这个阶段。在我的记忆中，我在黑尔舍姆的生活分成很明确的两块：后面这个阶段，以及此前所有的一切。早先的那些年——就是我已经跟你讲过的那些——常常会混在一起，共同构成某种黄金时代，当我想到那些年的时候，即便是那些不太美好的记忆，我也不禁感到其光彩和暖意。但最后那几年就不同了。准确说并非是不快——其中我也收获了许多弥足珍贵的记忆——但这段时间更严肃，某些方面而言，也更黑暗。也许是我在头脑中夸大了事实，但我有个印象，在这个阶段事情变化很快，就像白日沉入黑夜。

那次跟汤米在池塘边的谈话：现在我回想起来会将此作为两个阶段的分界点。倒不是说在那之后立刻就开始发生一些重要的事情，但至少对于我来说，那次谈话是个转折点。绝对是从那次开始，我看待一切的方式都不同了。从前那些我认为尴尬要躲开的问题，现在我越来越倾向于提问，哪怕不是问出声，至少自己问自己。

特别是那次的谈话使我换了种眼光来看待露西小姐。只要有机会我就认真观察她，并不是出于好奇，而是我现在将她作为重要线索的最大来源。正因为如此，在接下来的一两年里，我开始留意到她说过或者做过的一些古怪小事，而我的朋友们却都没有注意到。

比如有一次，也许是在池塘边谈话过了几周之后，露西小姐带我们上英语课，我们在学习诗歌，但不知怎么话题走偏了，谈到了二战期间战俘营里的士兵。一个男生问战俘营周围的防护栏是不是通电的，有人接着说生活在这样的地方多奇怪啊，你什么时候要是想自杀，只需碰一下防护栏即可。也许他本来是想认真讨论问题的，可是我们其他人都觉得这很滑稽。大家同时爆发出大笑，开始讲话，这时劳拉——她总是这样——从座位上站了起来，动作夸张地表演了一段伸出手去触电身亡的场景。刹那间大家喧闹无比，所有人都在大喊大叫，模仿着摸电网的样子。

期间我一直在观察露西小姐，我能看出有一秒钟她在望着面前的一班人时，脸上浮现出幽灵般的表情。随后——我继续认真观察——

她整理心情，微笑道：“幸亏黑尔舍姆的护栏没有通电。有时候会发生很可怕的意外事故。”

她讲得很平静，因为大家还在大喊大叫，她的话音几乎是淹没在其中。可我清清楚楚听到了她的话。“有时候会发生很可怕的意外事故。”什么事故？在哪里？可是没有人接她的话，我们又回头去讨论诗歌了。

类似的小事还有其他，不久我就开始感到露西小姐跟其他导师的种种不同。有可能早在那个时候起，对于她的担忧和难过的根本缘故，我就有所了解。但也许还不至于，很可能在那个时候，我留意到了这一切，却还不知道应该怎么理解。如果说现在看来这些小事都很重要，连缀起来看有共通的意义，那也许是因为我如今看待往事，已经有了后来经验的启示——尤其是那天我们在运动馆躲避那场瓢泼大雨的时候发生的事。

那时我们十五岁，已经是在黑尔舍姆的最后一年。我们在运动馆为一场小型棒球比赛做准备。这个阶段男生们很“享受”棒球赛，因为可以跟我们调情，所以那天下午我们总共有三十多人在场。我们换衣服的时候大雨开始下起来，我们慢慢都聚在门廊上——在运动馆的屋顶遮蔽之下——等着雨停。可是雨一直下，大家都齐聚在这里的时候，门廊上显得有些拥挤，人人都有点不耐烦地走来走去。我记得劳拉当时向我展示了一种特别恶心的擤鼻涕办法，用于真心想推掉哪个男生的时候。

露西小姐是唯一在场的导师。她在前面，靠在栏杆上，仿佛想要穿透雨幕看到操场尽头一样，朝外望去。那些日子我都是尽量认真地观察她，虽然说我在跟劳拉哈哈大笑，却时不时偷偷瞄一眼露西小姐的背影。我记得自己心想，她这姿势是否有些古怪，脑袋垂得太低，看起来就像一只蹲伏的野兽，等待着发起攻击。而且她那样伏身趴在栏杆上，头顶上的排水管滴下来的水差一点就淋到她了一一可她仿佛全不在意。我记得曾在心里说服自己这没什么不正常——她只是着急希望雨快点停——然后将注意力重新转回去听劳拉讲话。后来，几分钟之后，当我已经将露西小姐抛在脑后，为了不知道什么笑得前仰后合时，突然发现周遭变得安静下来，露西小姐开始讲话了。

她还站在同样的地方，但现在转过身来朝向我们，所以她是后背对着栏杆，身后是下着雨的天空。

“不，不对，很对不起，我必须得打断你们，”她说道，我看到她是在对正前方一张长椅上坐着的两个男生讲话。她的语音倒也没什么奇怪，但她讲得很响亮，就像有事情要对我们大家宣布的那种音量，正因为如此我们才安静了下来。“不行，彼得，我不得不打断你的话。我不能继续保持沉默，听着你讲下去。”

随后她抬起目光，望向我们大家，然后深吸了一口气。“好吧，大家都可以听，我是说给你们所有人的。是时候有人把真相说出来了。”

我们等待着，她仍然望着我们。后来有人说他们以为露西小姐要狠批我们一顿；还有人以为她要宣布一套新的小型棒球规则。但是还没等她再说一个字，我就知道是其他更重要的事。

“小伙子们，请务必原谅我偷听。但是你们就在我后面，所以我没办法听不到。彼得，你何不跟大家讲讲，你刚才跟戈登说的话呢？”

彼得·J看起来很困惑，我看得出他脸上渐渐浮现出无辜受伤的表情。但这时露西小姐又说了一遍，这次温柔了许多：

“彼得，你说呀。请你跟大家讲讲你刚才所说的话。”

彼得耸耸肩。“我们刚刚在说，如果我们当上演员会是什么感受。那种生活是怎么回事。”

“对，”露西小姐说，“你还跟戈登讲，说得去美国，才最有机会。”

彼得·J又耸了耸肩，低声嘟囔道：“是的，露西小姐。”

可是现在露西小姐将目光转向了我们大家。“我知道你没有坏心。但是这种空话说得太多了。我常常听到，没有人阻止，这样是不对的。”我看到更多的雨水从排水管滴下来，落在她肩上，但她根本没有留意。“如果其他人不跟你们讲，”她继续说道，“那我来讲。老师告诉过你们，但你们没有人真正理解，我敢说，有些人还很愿意听之任之。但我不。如果你们想要过上体面正当的生活，那就得知道，什么都得知道。你们谁也去不了美国，谁也成不了电影明星。那天我还听到你们有人打算去超市工作，你们谁也去不了。你们的生活都已经安排好了。你们会长大成人，然后不等你们衰老，甚至不到中年，就将开始捐献身体的各个器官。你们每一个人被创造出来就是为了这个目的。你们跟录像里看到的那些演员都不一样，甚至跟我都不

一样。你们是为了特定目的才被带到这个世界上来的，你们的将来，所有的一切，都已经安排好了。因此你们不要再这样说了。你们不久就将离开黑尔舍姆，过不了多久，这天就会到来，你们要准备第一次捐献了。你们需要记住这一点。如果你们想过上正派体面的生活，就得知道自己是誰，未来会怎样，你们每个人都是。”

然后她就不再说话了，但在我的印象里，她脑子里大概还是继续在自言自语，因为有很长一段时间里，她的目光从我们身上飘过，一张一张脸望过去，仿佛她还在继续跟我们讲话。当她终于转身重新朝着操场方向望去的时候，我们都感到如释重负。

“现在雨没那么大了，”她说，其实雨还是跟先前一样匀匀下落，没有变小。“我们出去吧。可能太阳也就出来了。”

我想，她所说的就只有这些了。几年之前在多佛的康复中心，我跟露丝讨论起来的时候，她坚持说露西小姐跟我们讲得比这多很多；她解释说在捐献之前，我们首先会有一段时间担任护理员，还讲了捐献的一般流程；康复中心等等——可我很确信她没有说这么多。好吧，也许她开始讲话的时候，的确曾打算讲到这些。但我猜她一旦开始之后，看到面前那些困惑不解、浑身不自在的面容时，她就认识到，根本不可能做完自己挑起的这件事。

很难讲清楚露西小姐在运动馆的这次情绪爆发到底造成了什么深远影响。话传得很快，但流言大多围绕着露西小姐本人，而不是她试图告诉我们的那些事。有的学生觉得她一时失去了理智；其他人则认为是艾米丽小姐和其他的导师请她告诉我们那些事的；甚至有人当时在现场，却认为露西小姐只是嫌我们在门廊上太喧闹，批评了我们一顿而已。但正如我所说的，极少有人讨论她说的内容。如果有人提起这话题，那么人们也多半会说：“那又怎样呢？我们早就已经知道了呀。”

但这恰恰正是露西小姐讲的核心意义。就像她说的，我们“又知道，又不知道”。几年之前，我和汤米再次回顾这一切的时候，我跟他讲到露西小姐这种“又知道，又不知道”的说法时，他提出了一套理论。

汤米认为有可能在我们居住在黑尔舍姆的许多年里，导师们小心翼翼地设计好何时该告诉我们什么；这样的话，我们总是还小，最新得到的信息不能完全理解。但当然某种程度上我们会接受进来，这样

一来不久之后一切就都装进我们脑子里了，尽管我们都没有仔细检视过这些信息。

对我而言，这太像是一种阴谋论——我觉得我们那些导师没有这么阴险狡猾——但是很可能其中有些道理。当然，好像我一直都模糊知道捐献这回事，甚至早在六七岁的时候。等到我们长大了一点，导师们跟我们讲起这些事的时候，说到什么都不会让我们大出意料之外，这点很奇怪。就好像我们早在什么时候已经听过这些事了。

这会儿我突然想到一件事，那是导师们刚刚开始给我们正式讲性教育的话题时，他们总是把这些事跟捐献混在一起来说。在那个年纪——再说一遍，我现在说的是大约十三岁的时候——对于性我们大家都很担忧，同时也很兴奋，自然也就会将其他的信息推到背景中，不大上心。换句话说，有可能导师们往我们脑子里夹带私货，讲了关于我们未来的一些基本事实。

然而说句公道话，可能将这两个话题放到一起来讲是很自然的事。比如说，他们教我们在性行为中要非常小心避免染病，这对于我们比外面的普通人而言，要重要得多，如果不提及这点，就会很古怪。当然，说到此处，自然就会讲到捐献的事。

此外还有所有那些关于不能生小孩的说辞。艾米丽小姐曾经亲自给我们上过许多性方面的课，我记得有一次她从生物教室搬了一套真人规格的骨架来演示性行为过程。我们目瞪口呆惊诧无比地望着她将骨架扭成许多姿态，毫不尴尬地用教鞭指指点点。她一板一眼地将整个过程讲出来，什么器官进到什么地方，有怎样的变化，就像讲地理课一样。这时，当骨架依然以猥亵姿态趴在课桌上的时候，她突然转换话题，开始给我们讲要非常小心，跟谁性交。倒不仅仅是因为各种疾病的关系，而是因为，她说：“性会以各种你无法预料的方式影响人的情绪。”在外面的世界里，我们对于性行为必须得非常小心，尤其当对象不是其他学生的时候，因为在外面的世界，性包涵各种各样的意义。在外面人们甚至会因为谁跟谁性交而打架，甚至杀人。之所以有这么多的意义——比跳舞、打乒乓要多得多的意义——那是因为外面的人跟我们这些学生不同：他们性交会生出孩子来。所以说谁跟谁性交，这个问题对他们非常重要。尽管说我们都知道，我们中所有人都完全没有可能生小孩，但是在外面的我们得像他们那样行事。我们得尊重他们的规则，将性看做是一件很特别的事。

艾米丽小姐那天讲的课很典型，就是我前面说的那种情况。我们都把焦点集中在性爱上，突然就会有其他的内容混进来。我想这都属

于那些“又知道，又不知道”的内容之一。

我认为到头来我们想必还是吸收进了许多的信息，因为我记得就在大约那个年纪，我们对于涉及捐献的一切，态度都有了很大的转变。就像我前面所说的，在那之前，我们曾千方百计绕开这个话题；一旦有迹象表明要进入这个领域，我们就立刻后退，那些不当心的傻瓜——比如玛琪那次——还会遭到严厉的惩罚。但就像我说的，自从我们十三岁的时候，情况开始发生改变。我们仍然不去讨论捐献以及相关的一切；我们仍然觉得这方面的一切都令人尴尬。但我们开始拿这事开玩笑，就像我们也会拿性来开玩笑一样。现在回顾往事，我得承认，那条不能公开讨论捐献的规则依然存在，跟从前一样严格。但是现在，时不时用玩笑的方式，暗示我们的未来，这不仅仅没关系，几乎成了一种需要。

一个典型例子是那次汤米划伤了胳膊肘之后发生的事。那大概恰好是在我跟他在池塘边散步的事之前；我猜那时汤米还在努力挣脱被人捉弄取笑的阶段。

他的伤不严重，但还是被送到乌鸦脸那边去处置，然后给他胳膊肘上贴了一块方形橡皮膏，差不多立刻就放他回来了。谁也没多想这事，直到过了两天之后，汤米取下橡皮膏，暴露出的伤口还处于将愈未愈的状态。你看得出皮肤刚刚要开始愈合，下面柔软的红色组织略微有点外露。我们当时在吃午饭，因此大家都围了过来，发出惊叹，或表示恶心。这时比我们高一级的克里斯托弗·H板着脸说：“很遗憾伤在胳膊肘这里。本来伤在别的随便什么地方都没关系。”

汤米看起来很担忧——那时候，克里斯托弗是他敬仰的人物呢——赶紧问他是什么意思。克里斯托弗一边继续吃饭，一边若无其事地说：

“你不知道么？如果像这样正好伤在胳膊肘，就会脱线。你只要弯胳膊肘的动作快点就会。不是只有这一点，而是整个肘部，都会像包裹一样完全打开。我还以为你知道呢。”

我听到汤米抱怨，说乌鸦脸怎么没有警告过他这些事，但克里斯托弗耸耸肩说：“她以为你早就知道了呢，当然了。大家都知道。”

近旁的几个人喏喏表示赞同。“你得把手臂保持绝对伸直，”另外一个人说，“弯一弯其实就有危险。”

第二天我看到汤米将胳膊笔直地伸着走来走去，面带愁容。大家都在笑他，这让我很生气，但我得承认，这确实有可笑的一面。后来下午快结束的时候，我们正要离开艺术教室，他在走廊里拦住我说：“凯丝，能跟你说句话吗？”

这时，距离在操场我走上去提醒他POLO衫要弄脏的那次大概刚刚过了两星期，所以大家都觉得我们俩交情不一般。尽管如此，他这样走上前来要跟我单独谈话，却还是有点尴尬，让我刹那有点不知所措。也许这算是我没有更帮他忙的部分解释吧。

“倒不是我瞎担心什么的，”他一把我拉到旁边就开口说道，“可我想安全第一，仅此而已。对于健康我们绝对不能心存侥幸。我需要帮忙，凯丝。”他解释说，他担心自己睡着时乱动。夜间随便就会弯手臂。“我总是做这种梦，在梦里跟很多罗马士兵作战。”

我稍微问了他几句，很显然各种各样的人——那天午餐时不在场的人——都曾到他面前，重复了克里斯托弗·H的警告。事实上，其中几个人还把笑话向前推进了：有人告诉汤米，曾有个学生，跟他一样手肘受伤，睡了一觉醒来时发现自己的整个上臂和手部骨骼都暴露在外，皮肤翻出来就在旁边，“就像《窈窕淑女》里面那些长手套一样”。

现在汤米要求我帮他在胳膊上绑个夹板，好让他夜间手臂保持伸直。

“其他人我都信不过，”他说着，举起了一根想用做夹板的宽尺子，“他们可能会故意搞坏，夜里让它掉下来。”

他望着我，满脸的无辜，我一时不知该说什么才好。一方面我很想告诉他到底发生了什么，我想我知道，如果我不这么做，那么无论我怎么做，都是背叛了自从我提醒他POLO衫的那一刻起我们之间建立的信任感。如果我真的把他的手臂绑在夹板上，那就意味着我就变成了这个笑话的主谋之一了。我至今感到惭愧当时没有告诉他。但你得记住，我当时年纪还小，而且当时只有几秒钟可以做决定。再说，当别人这样恳切求你帮忙做事的时候，无论如何不能拒绝人家。

我想最主要的原因是不想让他生气。因为我看得出，他之所以对手肘的伤这么担心，是因为对于所有那些来自周围的说辞，他都信以为真，放在心上。当然我知道他迟早会发现真相，但在那个时刻，我真的没法说出口。我最多只能问一句：

“乌鸦脸让你这么做吗？”

“没有，可你想象下，如果我胳膊肘真的脱出来了，她得多生气。”

我至今仍然觉得不好受，但我当时保证要帮他把手臂绑好——夜间打铃前半小时，到十四号教室去——然后望着他心怀感激如释重负地离开了。

结果我并不需要经历这一切，因为汤米先发现了真相。那是晚上八点左右，我从主楼梯下楼来，听到底楼的楼梯间爆发出大笑，笑声一直传到楼上。我心里一沉，马上就知道一定跟汤米有关。我在二楼楼梯口停了一下，探头从扶手往下看，正看到汤米从台球室跌跌撞撞冲出来。我记得自己心想：“至少他没喊。”他确实没有，他只是跑去衣帽间，拿了自己的东西，然后离开了主楼。在此期间开着的台球室门口一直都有爆笑声传来，有人在大叫，喊的是诸如：“你要是发脾气，胳膊肘肯定会爆出来！”

我想了想要不要跟上他，走进夜色中，趁他没到宿舍之前跟他说句话，可随后我想起了自己许诺要帮他手臂绑上夹板过夜的事，就没有动。我只是自己心想：“至少他没发火。至少他控制住了火气。”

可我有点跑题了。我之所以提起所有这些是因为这个从汤米的手肘引发出来的身体会“脱线”的梗流传开来，成了我们大家提及捐献时的一个常用段子。说法是这样的，等时机一到，你身体的一小部分就会脱线，比如一个肾脏就会溜出来，你就把它交出去。倒不是我们觉得这事儿本身有多好笑，更多的是用这个段子来败坏对方吃饭的胃口。比如说，你把肝解下来，丢到别人吃饭的盘子里，诸如此类。我记得有个不可思议大胃王同学加里·B，连吃了三份布丁，后来几乎整张桌旁所有人都“解下”了一点自己的器官，统统堆到加里的碗里，可他不为所动，坚持继续吃到饱。

后来这“脱线”梗流传开来之后，汤米一直不大喜欢，可这时候他老被人捉弄的阶段已经过去，大家也不再把这段子跟他联系到一起了。这只是为了博彼此一笑，败坏别人吃东西的兴致——以及我觉得，是对我们将要面对的未来做出一种认可。这才是我的本意。我们的人生到了这个阶段，大家不再像一两年前的那样，对捐献这个话题讳莫如深；可我们也没有对此有过非常严肃认真的考量或者讨论。所有这些关于“脱线”的闹剧，都很典型地反映出，在我们十三岁的时候，这个话题对我们造成了怎样的冲击。

因此我觉得两年之后露西小姐说我们“又知道，又不知道”，这话讲得很对。更重要的是，现在思考起来，我觉得那天下午露西小姐对我们说的一番话，让我们的态度发生了真正的转变。就在那天之后，关于捐献的笑话渐渐消散了，我们开始认真考虑这些事。表面的变化就是，捐献重新又变成了一个讳莫如深的话题，但跟我们小时候的避讳不一样。这次不再是因为尴尬或是不好意思，而是因为太严肃，太沉重。

“挺有趣的是，”几年之前我和汤米再次回忆往事的时候，他说，“我们谁都没有停下来想一想她是什么感受，露西小姐她本人。我们从来不担心她因为跟我们说了那些事，会不会碰到麻烦。我们那时候真自私啊。”

“可你不能怪我们，”我说，“我们得到的教育就是要互相为同学考虑，但从来没有替导师考虑。至于导师他们彼此之间也会有不同意见，这点我们从来没想过。”

“可我们已经很大了，”汤米说，“到了那个年龄，我们应该想得到。可我们没有。我们根本没有为可怜的露西小姐着想。即便是那次之后也没有，你知道，就是你看到她的那次。”

我立刻就明白了他的意思。他说的是我们在黑尔舍姆最后那一年的初夏，有天上午，我在二十二号教室撞上她的那次。现在回想起来，我得承认汤米说的有理。经过了那次之后，即便是我们，也应该看得出露西小姐有多烦恼。但是诚如他所说的，我们从来没有从她的角度去考虑，从来也没有想过要做什么，或者说些什么，来帮帮她。

第八章

那时我们中的许多人已经满了十六周岁。那是一个阳光明媚的上午，我们刚刚在主楼里上完一堂课出来，正往院子里走，这时我突然想起有东西忘在了教室里。于是我重新回到四楼上，就这样才发生了跟露西小姐的那件事。

那时候，我有个秘密的小游戏。当我发现自己一个人待着的时候，就会停下脚步，找找视角——比如说，朝窗外看，或是穿过一段走廊，望向某个教室——任何一个视角，只要视线范围内没有人就行。我这么做是因为至少在几秒钟的时间里，我可以创造出一种幻觉，仿佛这里并不是到处都是学生，相反，黑尔舍姆是一幢幽静安宁的宅院，只有我和五六个好友住在这里。要想让幻景逼真，你只需将自己沉入某种梦境，将无关的声音和噪音都屏蔽在外。通常还需要格外耐心：比如说，如果你正从某个窗口，凝神望着操场上的某一片地方，可能需要等很久很久，才能让你的取景框中没有人，你才可以等到那样几秒钟的幻象。总之，那天上午我拿回了落在教室的那件东西之后，回到四楼的楼梯平台上时，就在玩这个幻想游戏。

我保持静止不动，站在窗边，望着院子里的某一片区域，就是几分钟之前我刚刚在那边站立过的地方。我的朋友们已经走掉了，院子里人越来越少，因此我就静静等着我的幻想发挥魔力，这时我听到身后传来一种像是蒸汽或者煤气泄漏的紧迫声响。

那是一种嘶嘶声，会一连持续十秒钟左右，暂停一下，然后继续。我倒没有惊慌，只是既然附近只有我一个人，那么我觉得最好去查看一下。

我穿过楼梯间，朝着声音的方向走去，沿着走廊经过了我刚刚进去过的教室，来到了二十二号教室，那是走廊尽头倒数第二间。房门半开着，就在我走上前去的时候，那嘶嘶声又响了起来，比先前更为急迫。当我小心翼翼推开门的时候，我不知道会发现些什么，可是一看到露西小姐在里面，我还是大吃一惊。

二十二号教室很少用来上课，因为那个房间太小，即便是像那样的天气，也难得有光线照进来。导师们有时候会去那里批改我们的作业，或是读会儿书。那天上午房间里比往常更暗，因为百叶窗几乎全都拉了下来。里面有两张桌子拖到一起，好让同学们围坐一圈，可是

只有露西小姐一个人坐在紧后面的位置。我看到她面前的桌子上散落着几页纸，页面上很暗，闪着幽光。她本人斜着身体，神情专注，前额压得非常低，双臂铺开在纸面上，正用铅笔往纸页上狂怒地画线。我看到那些浓黑的线条下面，写有整洁的蓝色字迹。就在我的注视之下，她继续用铅笔的笔尖在纸页上反复地画，仿佛完全不在乎会不会将纸穿透。这时，我同时想明白了，这就是那古怪声响的来源，我刚刚看到的桌面上那些幽黑发亮的纸，不久前还是些书写整齐的纸页。

她正全神贯注于自己的事，过了一会儿才发现我在那里。当她受到惊扰抬头望时，我看到她脸红了，但并没有泪水的痕迹。她瞪着我，随即放下了手中的铅笔。

“你好，年轻的女士，”她说，深吸了一口气，“需要我帮忙吗？”

我想我立刻就转身走开了，那样就不必望着她，或是看着桌上那些纸。我不记得自己有没有说什么——是否解释过那声响的出现，以及我担心那是煤气泄漏。不管怎么说，事情无可弥补：她不希望我在场，我也不想在场。我想我只是道了个歉就出去了，还多少有些期待她会喊我回去。可她没有，现在我只记得自己走下楼梯的时候，心中充满了羞愤。当时我最希望的莫过于没有看到刚才发生的一切，然而倘或你要我实在说到底为什么生气，我也无法解释。正如我所说的，可能跟羞耻感有很大的关系，还有愤怒，可这怒火所针对的倒不完全是露西小姐本人。我感到非常迷惑，也许正因为如此，一直到过去了很久以后，我才对朋友们提起此事。

那个上午之后，我开始觉得，不知道露西小姐有什么糟糕的事要发生，于是我擦亮眼睛竖起耳朵留意着。但是过了几天，我什么也没听到，也没看到。然而当时我所不知道的却是，就在我在二十二号教室碰到她的那次之前几天，的确有件相当重要的事发生——事关露西小姐和汤米，此事过后汤米变得沮丧而不知所措。就在不久之前，倘或发生了这样的事，我和汤米还会立刻向对方报告；但就在那个夏天，发生了许多事，结果就是我们不能再像从前那么自在地谈天了。

所以我才很长时间里都没有听到过此事。过后我简直想踢自己几脚，竟然没有去猜猜看，也没有去找汤米问个明白。但是正如我前面所说的，当时发生了很多事，汤米和露西的事，还有许许多多其他的事，因此我就把自己留意到他身上发生的那些变化，全都归因于这些了。

如果说那年夏天汤米整个人都方寸大乱，可能有点言过其实，但有几次我是真的有些担心，怕他再次变成几年前那个笨拙尴尬，被人作弄的样子。比如有一次，我们几个人正走在运动馆回宿舍楼的路上，却发现汤米和其他几个男生在我们前方。他们跟我们仅有几步的距离，大家——连汤米在内——看起来都挺开心，有说有笑，推推搡搡闹着玩。事实上，我觉得走在我身边的劳拉，就是被男生们嬉嬉闹闹的劲儿给带起了兴头。其实呢，汤米大概原本坐在地上来着，因为他的橄榄球衫的下背部有块明显的灰泥。显然他完全不知道背后有这块污渍，我想他那几个朋友肯定也没看到，不然他们肯定会拿来打趣。不管怎么说，劳拉就是劳拉，她喊了一声：“汤米，你背上有粑粑！你干什么去了？”

她完全是出于善意开玩笑，如果说我们其他人也闹出点动静，也绝不会超出学生们平日开玩笑的尺度。因此，当汤米骤然僵住，猛地转身，目光如炬地盯着劳拉时，我们都很吃惊。我们全都停了下来——男生们看上去跟我们一样，显得迷惑不解——在那几秒钟内，我都以为汤米就要像几年前那样，脾气大发作。可他只是愤而离场，剩下我们面面相觑，无奈耸肩。

我给他看帕特里夏·C的月历那一次，情况也差不多。帕特里夏比我们低两级，但大家都很佩服她画画的本事，在艺术交换活动上，她的作品总是很抢手。我特别喜欢她画的月历，在最后一次交换活动上，我总算抢到了，因为早在几个礼拜之前，就有流言说会有这件作品上拍。她的月历与众不同，跟艾米丽小姐那些轻飘飘的描绘英国各郡县风光的彩色挂历不同，帕特里夏的月历很小巧厚实，每个月都配了一幅令人赞叹的小型铅笔素描，描绘黑尔舍姆的生活场景。真希望这月历现在还在我身边，尤其是因为其中有几幅画——比如六月和九月的两幅——上面的人物能清楚认得出是哪几个同学和导师。我离开农舍的时候丢失了些东西，这是其中之一，当时我心不在焉，并没有太留意自己带走了什么——等我讲到这段时，再另做细谈。我提起这事是想说明帕特里夏的月历真的很受欢迎，我很自豪能拥有，因此就拿给汤米显摆。

我看到他在南操场近旁一棵美国梧桐树边上，站在下午的日光里，那本月历碰巧在我包里——前一节音乐课上，我拿出来显摆过——于是我朝他走了过去。

他正专心看着旁边的球场上的一帮低年级的男生的足球比赛，这时他看起来情绪尚可，甚至算得上颇为宁静。见我上前，他露出了微

笑，我们先是随意闲聊了几句。然后我说：“汤米你瞧我弄到了什么。”我并没有试图掩饰自己话音里面的得意，把月历拿出来递给他时，甚至可能还曾口呼“哒哒——”以表炫耀。当他接过月历的时候，脸上还带着一丝笑意，可是当他翻看每一幅画面的时候，我看得出，他内心的某个部分，渐渐关闭了起来。

“那个帕特里夏哦，”我开口说着，仿佛也感到自己的话音都变了，“她真是聪明……”

可是汤米已经将月历递回给我了。随后他一言不发，径直离开我身边，朝主楼走去。

最后这件事应该让我有所警醒。哪怕我用上半边脑子想一想，也该猜到汤米近期的情绪问题，跟露西小姐和他当初“没有创意”的老问题有关。但那时发生了很多事，就像我说的，我始终没有往这方面想。我猜，我一定认为那些从前的老问题都如同我们青春早期的那些人一样，被抛到身后去了。如今只有那些严重的大事才有可能让我们这些人真正上心。

那么到底发生了什么？首先，露丝和汤米关系严重破裂。那时他们已经出双入对有半年了，至少两人公开交往有这么久——出入总是手挽着手，诸如此类。他们俩一对儿能够得到大家的尊重，是因为他们没有招摇。别的人，比如西尔维娅·B和罗杰·D，会搞得人倒胃口，须得大伙儿齐声做呕吐状，才能让他们老实规矩。可是露丝和汤米从来不会当着人做出恶心举动。如果说有时候他们会亲热什么的，旁人也会觉得他们是发自内心，为了彼此，而不是为了引人关注，哗众取宠。

如今回看，我能明白当时对于跟性相关的一切，大家都很困惑。我猜这没什么出人意料，毕竟我们才刚刚十六岁。可是导师他们本身也很困惑——如今我看得比较清楚——这点更加重了我们的困扰。一方面我们接收到像艾米丽小姐那样一套说辞，跟我们讲如何不要为自己的身体感到羞耻，要“尊重我们的身体需求”，说只要双方都是真正想要，那么性爱就是“一件美丽的礼物”。可实际上，导师们做了许多设计和规定，我们很难做爱而不违规。九点之后我们不能去男生宿舍探望，他们不能来我们这边。晚间教室按规定都是禁入区，棚屋后和运动馆也是一样。而且，即便是天气足够温暖，你也不会愿意在野外做爱，因为过后你一定会发现有观众在主楼里传着望远镜看你们。换句话说，虽然他们嘴上说性如何美好，我们却有明确印象，认定如果真被导师抓到我们在做爱，那我们就有麻烦了。

我话虽这样说，但我个人所了解的真实事例只有一件，珍妮·C和罗伯·D在十四号教室被人撞破了。他们午饭之后做的，就在那里一张课桌上，杰克先生碰巧进来取东西。据珍妮说，杰克先生脸红了，立刻就退了出去，但他们还是受到妨碍停了下来。等他们差不多穿好衣服，杰克先生又进来了，似乎他才刚刚进来，假装被他们吓了一跳，吃了一惊。

“我很清楚你们在做什么，这种行为很不恰当，”他说完就让他们俩去见艾米丽小姐。但是等他们到了艾米丽小姐的办公室，她却跟他们说自己要赶去参加一个重要会议，没有时间跟他们谈话。

“但你们要明白，无论你们做了什么，都是不该做的。我希望你们不要再犯了，”她说完便拿着文件夹匆匆出门去了。

而同性性行为就更加让我们困惑不解了。不知道为什么我们称之为“伞性”，如果你喜欢同性，你就是“一把伞”。我不知道你们那里是怎样的，但在黑尔舍姆，我们对任何同性恋的迹象可是一点都不客气。尤其是男生，他们会干出各种残酷的事来。据露丝说，那是因为他们年龄较小，还不懂事的时候，有的同学彼此曾做过些什么。所以现在他们对这事就不可理喻得紧张。我不知道她说的是不是对，但的确，如果说某人“完全是一把伞”，那结果很可能就会打起来。

当我们讨论这一切的时候——那时候我们没完没了地说这些——我们无法认定，到底导师想不想我们有性生活。有的人认为他们同意，只不过我们总是想在错误的时间做爱。汉娜有个理论，说导师有责任让我们进行性行为，因为要不然的话，我们过后就无法成为好的捐献者。据她说，除非你一直做爱，否则肾和胰腺之类的器官就无法正常使用。还有人说，我们得记住，导师都是“正常人”。所以他们对性爱才这样态度古怪；对他们而言，是为了要生小孩才做爱的，即便他们理性地了解我们是不能生育的，可情感上，对于我们的性行为仍然感到不安，因为他们从内心深处很难相信我们不会搞出宝宝来。

安妮特·B有个不同的理论：我们彼此之间的性爱让导师感到不自在那是因为他们想跟我们做爱。她说，尤其是克里斯先生，他看女生的样子，就是包含了那个意思。劳拉说安妮特的本意是她想要跟克里斯先生做爱。一听到这里我们都笑喷了，因为跟克里斯先生做爱这样的想法实在是太荒唐，而且令人倒胃口。

我认为最靠谱的理论是露丝提出来的。“他们跟我们讲的这些关于性爱的内容，是为了我们离开黑尔舍姆之后，”她说，“他们希望

我们能够正确享受性爱，跟自己喜欢的对象，不要染上疾病。但他们真正的意思是要我们离开之后再做爱。他们不想让我们在这里做，因为对他们来说，那样会惹来太多麻烦。”

总之我猜，实际上我们周围发生的性行为没有大家想象的那么多。也许有许多亲热、爱抚；很多情侣暗示他们有正常的性生活。但回望从前，我疑心到底真实的性行为有多少。如果每个号称做过的人都真的有在做，那么你在黑尔舍姆漫步的时候一定会看到——前后左右都有情侣在做爱。

我记得大家都曾心照不宣，互相之间不会详细追问我们所号称做过的事。比如，当你们在谈论其他女生的时候，汉娜翻个白眼，嘟囔一句：“处女吧”一言下之意是：“当然我们都不是了，可她还是个雏儿，你能指望她怎样呢？”——这种时候你绝对不应该问她：“你跟谁做的？什么时候？在哪里？”不，你只能心领神会地点点头。就好像还有一个平行宇宙，我们可以消失在其中，在那里尽情做爱。

那时候我就已经看出来，周围人们号称的那些性生活根本做不得数。尽管如此，随着那年的夏天逐渐靠近，我开始越来越感到格格不入。从某种意义上说，性爱已经跟几年前的“创造性”不无相似。如果你还没有过性经验，那你应该去做，并且尽快。因为有两个跟我最亲近的女生绝对是曾经做过，所以就我而言，整件事更为复杂。劳拉和罗伯·D做过，虽然他们从来不是正式的一对儿。还有露丝和汤米。

所以，我拖延此事已经很久，一直对自己重复艾米丽小姐的教诲——“如果不能找到一个你真心愿意与之分享这一经历的伴侣，那就不要做！”但是到了我现在所讲到那年春天的时候，我开始觉得，我不介意跟男生做爱了。倒不单单是为了明白这到底是怎么回事，也是因为我突然想到，自己需要熟知性爱，最好能够跟一个不太喜欢的男生先练习一下。这样等到后来，如果我跟某个特别的人在一起，就更有可能把每个步骤都做对。我的意思是，如果艾米丽小姐说得对，性爱对人们之间的联系有这么重大的意义，那么等到性爱的成败至关重要的时刻到来之时，我可不希望自己那是第一次做。

因此我看上了哈利·C。我选中他有几个理由。首先，我知道他肯定已经有过性经验，是跟莎朗·D做的。其次，我没有太喜欢他，但也绝对不觉得他倒胃口。还有，他安静而且正派，所以如果这事一败涂地，他也不会到处乱讲。而且他曾暗示过几次，表示想跟我做爱。OK，那时候很多男生都在尽力挑逗，但到了那个时候，男生们惯常的那套把戏跟真正的求爱已经有所分别。

因此我选中了哈利，我之所以拖延了几个月是因为我想确认自己身体状况适合。艾米丽小姐曾经教我们说，如果你还不够湿润，那么性爱可能会很痛，会失败，这是我真正担忧的事之一。并不是下面被撕裂开来，虽然我们经常开这样的玩笑，好多女生私下里也害怕会这样。我一直想，只要我能很快湿润，就不会有问题，因此我一个人做了很多次，以确保无虞。

我明白这样说来可能显得我很偏执，可我记得自己曾花了很多时间反复读书里提到人们做爱的章节，一遍又一遍地反复看那些段落，试着找到窍门。问题是，我们在黑尔舍姆的那些书都没什么用。我们有很多十九世纪的书，比如托马斯·哈代之类的作品，基本上毫无帮助。有些现代的书，比如埃德娜·奥布赖恩和玛格丽特·德拉布尔的著作，里面倒是有些性描写，但具体到实际发生的时候就不太清楚了，因为作者总是认为读者早就有过丰富的性经验，没有必要描写细节。因此我那段时间看书觉得很困扰，而录像也好不到哪里去。几年前我们台球室里有个录像放映机，到那年春天为止，已经攒了一个相当不错的影片库。许多片子里面都有性爱场面，但大多数镜头是性爱才刚刚开始就结束了，再不然就是只让你看到他们的脸和后背。如果真有一段有用的镜头，多半也只能一闪而过，因为通常房间里还有二十个人跟你一起看。我们形成了一种制度，用以重放某些深受欢迎的桥段——比如《大逃亡》里那个美国人骑着自行车跃过铁丝网的那一幕。大家会齐声大喊：“倒带！倒带！”直到有人拿过遥控器，然后我们就重新再看一遍那个片段，有时候会连看三四遍。但只是为了重新回头去看性爱场景的话，我很难亲自站出来开始喊话。

所以我推迟了一周又一周，同时自己继续准备，一直到夏天来了，我才下定决心，认为我已经准备得很充分了。到那时，我甚至对这事有了相当程度的自信，开始对哈利发出暗示和信号。一切都很顺利，按部就班，可这时露丝和汤米分手了，一切都乱了套。

第九章

事情是这样的，他们分手过了几天之后，我跟另外几个女生一起在画室里画静物。我记得那天很闷，虽然风扇在身后吹着，依然无济于事。我们是用炭笔画的，因为有人把所有的画架都占了，所以我们只好把画板架在大腿上画。我旁边坐的是辛西娅·E，我们刚刚聊了几句，抱怨天气太热。这时有人把话题转到了男生，然后她头也没抬地说：

“还有汤米。我就知道他跟露丝长不了。哎，我猜下一个自然就是你咯。”

她说得好像漫不经心。但辛西娅是个感觉很敏锐的人，因为她不是我们小圈子的一员，所以她的话尤其显得有分量。我不禁想，是否她代表了所有与此事有一定距离的人都会有的看法。毕竟我跟汤米做朋友也有好多年了，谁跟谁一对儿这种事是后来才出现的。完全有可能，在局外人看来，我就像是露丝“自然的继任者”。可我没说什么，反正辛西娅只是随口一说，也没有继续再多说。

后来又过了一两天之后，我跟汉娜一起从运动馆出来，她突然碰碰我，朝北操场上一群男生点了点头。

“看，”她悄声说，“汤米，他一个人坐着。”

我耸耸肩，仿佛说：“那又怎样？”于是事情就过去了。但后来我发现自己翻来覆去地在想这件事。也许汉娜只是想指出汤米跟露丝分手之后，看起来有点形单影只。但我觉得这有点说不通；我太了解汉娜了。她碰我的那种方式，还有压低了声音讲话，都很明显地表示出，她也是在表达某种臆测，可能还要到处征询别人的看法，问我是不是“自然而然的继任者”。

正如我所说，所有这些将我带入了一个有些困惑的境地，因为在此之前，我都是一门心思放在跟哈利的计划上。事实上，现在回顾起来，我确信，若是没有这所谓“自然继任”的事儿，我一定会跟哈利做爱的。我都想清楚了，准备工作也进行顺利。现在我仍然认为在我当时的人生阶段，哈利是个好的对象选择。我觉得他一定会体贴温柔，能够理解我从他那里希望得到什么。

几年前，在威尔特郡的一座康复中心，我曾跟哈利有过一面之缘。他是捐献之后被送进来的。我当时情绪不佳，因为我负责的捐献者前一天夜里刚刚完结了。没有人为此指责我什么——手术进行地非常不利索——可我仍然感觉很糟糕。夜里我一直没睡，理清思绪，思考整个过程，当我到前台去准备离开的时候，看到哈利进来。他坐在轮椅上——后来我才知道，那是因为他太虚弱，而不是他不能行走——我上前去跟他打招呼，也搞不清他到底有没有认出我是谁。我猜我没道理在他的记忆中占据一席之地。除了那一次的事之外，我们两人再也没有什么联系。如果他还记得我，那么对他而言，我只是一个神经病女生，来找过他一次，问他要不要做爱，然后又撤回了。他大概属于同龄人里比较成熟的，因为他既没有恼火，也没有到处跟人讲我如何撩拨完了就跑之类的。因此那天当我看到他被人送进来的时候，我依然对他心怀感激，希望自己能做他的护理员。我看了一圈，但不论他的护理员是哪位，反正当时根本不在场。护工们很不耐烦，要尽快送他进房间，因此我没跟他多谈。我只是问声好，祝他尽快好转，他报以疲倦的笑容。当我提到黑尔舍姆的时候，他做了个举双手拇指的动作，可我知道他并没有认出我。也许过后，等他没有那么疲倦的时候，或者药效的强力作用消散了之后，他也许会想想看我是谁，也许会记起。

总之，我说的从前那些事：露丝和汤米分手之后，我所有的计划都乱了套。现在回顾起来，我仍然对哈利感到歉意。前面一周我向他传达了那么多暗示，现在却突然跑来跟他耳语表示拒绝。我猜我大概是认定他迫不及待想做爱，所以我才会特地停下手中在做的事，就为了拖延他的行动。因为不论我什么时候看到他，总是会匆忙说上一句，然后不等他有机会答话，就快快走掉。过了很久之后我再回想此事，才想到他可能根本并不是满脑子想的都是性爱。谁知道呢，他可能乐于将整件事都忘掉不提才好呢，然而每次他看到我，无论在走廊还是操场上，我总要走上前去，低声讲出个什么借口，解释为什么我不能立刻跟他做爱。从他的角度来看，这肯定显得跟神经病一样，要不是他为人这么正派，我老早就成了大家的笑柄。总之，拖延哈利的这段时期大概持续了两个礼拜，接着就是露丝的请求。

那年夏天，直到温暖的天气都过完之前，我们形成了一种在户外听音乐的奇怪方式。自从前一年开始，随身听出现在黑尔舍姆的拍卖会上，到那年夏天为止，至少有六个随身听流传在校园里。当时热门的方式是几个人在草坪上，围绕着一个随身听坐一圈，耳机挨个传递。好吧，听起来这种欣赏音乐的方式很傻，但却创造了一种非常好

的感受。你听上大概二十秒，然后摘下耳机，递给下一个人。过上一会儿，只要你们反复播放同一盘磁带，你会惊讶地发现几乎跟自己一个人听完全部曲目一样。正如我说的，那年夏天这种方式非常盛行，午休的时候，你就会看到学生们一群一群地围绕着随身听，躺在草地上。导师们对此不太喜欢，怕我们会传染耳疾，可他们也没有阻止我们。每当回忆起最后的那年夏天，我总是会想起围着随身听的那些午后时光。总会有人晃过来，问一句：“听的什么？”如果听到的答案他也喜欢，那么他就也在草地上坐下来，等到耳机传过来。这种活动气氛总是很好，我记忆中从来没有人被拒绝，不把耳机递给他的。

总之，就在我跟另外几个女生正在这样听音乐的时候，露丝走上前来，问能否跟我谈谈。我看得出是挺重要的事，于是我就离开那几个朋友，跟露丝两个人一路漫步，直走到宿舍楼。等到了我们的房间，我坐在窗边露丝的床上——太阳烘得毯子暖暖的——而她就在靠墙边我的床上坐了下来。房间里有只绿头苍蝇嗡嗡在飞，我们俩花了一分钟工夫轮番拍着玩“苍蝇网球”，将这只傻飞虫在两人之间传来传去。后来苍蝇找到了窗口飞走了，露丝说道：

“我想跟汤米重归于好。凯西，你能帮我么？”然后她又问：“怎么了？”

“没事，我只是有点吃惊，毕竟发生了那么多事。当然我会帮忙的。”

“我还没跟任何人提过想跟汤米和好的事。跟汉娜也没有。我只信任你一个。”

“你希望我做什么？”

“跟他谈谈。你对付他总是很有办法。他会听你的。他会知道你不是乱说，我是当真的。”

有一会儿我们就那么坐着，双脚在床下晃荡。

“你肯跟我说这些，真的非常好，”最终我说，“很可能我是最佳人选。去跟汤米谈话什么的。”

“我希望我们俩能从头开始。现在我们俩差不多扯平了，两人都曾办过蠢事，只是为了互相伤害，但我们都受够了。玛莎·他妈的H，我跟你讲！也许他这么干纯粹是为了给我找乐子。好吧，你跟他说他成功了，现在两人完全扯平了。是时候长大成人，从头开始了。我知

道你能跟他讲得通道理，凯西。你能用最佳方案处理这件事。如果他还是不准备讲道理，那我就知道没必要再跟他继续下去了。”

我耸耸肩。“就像你说的，我跟汤米，我们确实一直能谈得来。”

“对，他真心很敬重你。我知道，是因为他常常说起你，说你有胆有识，说到做到。他有次跟我说，如果陷入困境，他宁肯指望你，而不是任何一个男生来帮他。”她匆匆一笑。“这下你得承认，这是真心诚意的恭维。所以你瞧，只有靠你来救我们。我和汤米注定是一对，他会听你的。你会为我们做这事的，对不对，凯西？”

有一会儿我什么也没说。后来我问道：“露丝，你对汤米是认真的吗？我是说，如果我劝说成了，你们俩复合了，你不会再次伤害他吧？”

露丝不耐烦地叹口气。“当然我是认真的。我们现在都是成年人了。很快我们就要离开黑尔舍姆。不再是儿戏了。”

“OK，我去跟他谈。就像你说的，我们很快要离开这里了。我们来不及浪费时间。”

那之后，我记得我们坐在床边上，又聊了一会儿。露丝想要把每件事说上一遍又一遍：他是有多傻，为什么说他们俩是天生一对，他们从头来过要如何改正错误，如何要更加保护隐私，要在更好的地方，更好的时间做爱。我们谈了所有这些，她样样都要听我的意见。后来，当我正望着窗外，瞭望远处群山的时候，突然被露丝惊了一下，她不知何时到了我身边，捏住了我的肩膀。

“凯西，我就知道我们得靠你，”她说，“汤米说得对。要是落入困境就得靠你帮忙。”

事情一桩接一桩，结果接下来的几天里我都没有机会去跟汤米谈话。后来，一天午休的时候，我发现他正在南操场边上练足球。先前他跟另外两个男生在练传球，如今只剩了他一个人，在练颠球。我走过去，坐到他身后的草地上，将后背靠在一根护栏的柱子上。当时距我给他看帕特里夏·C的月历画，他愤而跑掉的那次应该没过多久，因为我记得两人都还有点无所适从。他仍是继续颠球，专注地皱着眉头——膝，脚，头，脚——而我只是坐在当地，随手摘掉地上长出的苜蓿，眼睛望着远方当初曾经怕得要命的那片树林。最终，我决定打破僵局，我说：

“汤米，我们谈谈吧。有件事我想跟你说说。”

我这话一出口，他就任由球落到一边，走过来在我身边坐了下来。汤米总是这样，每当他知道我愿意跟他聊聊，立刻他所有那些小脾气不开心就踪迹全无；只是满怀感激，一脸恳切，让我想起小学时候，当刚刚批评过我们的导师重又回到正常状态的时候，我们的反应。他略微有点喘息，尽管我知道是因为他刚刚在踢球的缘故，可这又增添了几分他的恳切之态。换句话说，还不等我开口，他已经让我莫名烦躁了。而当我对他说：“汤米，我看得出来。你最近不大开心。”他却说：“你什么意思？我高兴着呢。真的。”说完他粲然一笑，随后索性开怀大笑起来。这下我真着恼了。几年之后，当往事的一星半点时不时浮上脑海，我总归是面露微笑。可在当时，他这样我真的很恼火。如果汤米碰巧对你说“这事真的让我很难过”，他会特地拉长了脸，当场做出垂头丧气的表情，来证明自己的话。我不是说他有意嘲讽。他是真心认为自己这样更有说服力。因此现在，为了证明他很高兴，他又来了，使尽浑身解数证明他心情美好。正如我所说的，将来我回顾往事，会觉得他这样很可爱；但那年夏天，我只看到这证明他还是很幼稚，很容易被人利用。当时，对于黑尔舍姆之外，等待着我们的大千世界，我所知寥寥，但我猜想我们将需要步步留心，所有聪明才智都用上，当汤米像这样行事的时候，我几乎感到恐慌。直到那天下午之前，我总是由他去——好像总是太难跟他解释——但这次我发作了，我说：

“汤米，你看起来很傻，笑成这副样子！如果你要假装开心，那也不要这样！跟我学学好不好，不是像你这样做的！绝对不是！你瞧，你该长大了。你得回到正路上来。最近你表现很失常，我们都知道这是为什么。”

汤米满脸迷惑。当他确信我已经说完之后，才开口说：“你说得对。我确实是很失常。可我不明白你什么意思。凯丝。你说我们都知道，这是什么意思？我不懂，你是怎么知道的。我跟谁都没讲过。”

“显然我并不掌握细节。但我们都知道你跟露丝分手了。”

汤米还是看起来满脸困惑。最终他又稍微一笑，但这次是真的。“我明白你意思了，”他嘟囔了一句，随后停了一会儿，想清楚某件事。“坦白讲，凯丝，”他终于说，“这真的不是我烦恼的原因。其实是因为完全不同的事。我时时刻刻都在想。关于露西小姐。”

我这才听说这件事，关于那年初夏，露西小姐和汤米之间发生的事。后来，当我终于有时间去想清楚的时候，我分析认为，事情发生的时间大概距离我在二十二号教室看到露西小姐在纸上乱画的那天上午过了没几天。正如我所说，我恨不能踢自己一脚，竟然没有早点去找他问清楚。

那是下午，靠近“死钟点”的时候——所有课程都已结束，但还要再过一会儿才会开始晚饭。汤米看到露西小姐从主楼里出来，她手里满满地抱着挂图和文件盒，好像随时可能会掉东西的样子，于是汤米就跑上前去帮忙。

“于是她让我帮忙拿几样东西，说我们要把东西都拿回她的书房。虽然我们两人拿，东西还是太多，我路上就掉了两样。后来，当我们走到橘园的时候，她突然停下了脚步，我还以为她也掉了东西。可她却望着我，就像这样，直愣愣地盯着我的脸，非常严肃。随后她说，我们得谈谈，好好谈谈。我说好吧，于是我们走进橘园，到了她的书房，把所有东西都放下。这时她让我坐下，于是我就在上次的地方坐了下来，你知道的，就是三年前那次。我看得出，她也记起了几年前的事，因为她一开口就说那件事，仿佛事情只是发生在昨天。没有解释，什么都没有，她只是没头没尾地说：‘汤米，我犯了个错误，上次我跟你谈话的时候。我早就该找你纠正过来的。’随后她又说，我应该把她从前跟我讲的那些话全部忘掉。说她告诉我，无需担忧缺乏创造力这种事，其实是帮了我很大一个倒忙。说终归还是其他导师说得对，我的艺术创作这么垃圾，无论如何说不过去……”

“等一下，汤米。她真的是说你的艺术创作很垃圾吗？”

“即便不是‘垃圾’这个词儿，也是差不多意思。不值一提。可能是这么说的。再不就是能力不足。倒还不如直接说垃圾的为好。她说她很抱歉上次跟我说了那样的话，因为如果不是她，我可能到现在早就把问题都解决了。”

“这期间你都说了些什么？”

“我不知道说什么好。最终她开口问我了。她说：‘汤米，你在想什么呢？’于是我就说，我也说不准，但不管怎么说她无需为我担心，因为我现在就挺好。她就说，不，我这样不好。我的艺术创作是垃圾，部分原因就是因为她跟我讲的那些话。我对她说，可那又有什么关系呢？我现在挺好，也没有人继续为这事取笑我了。可她还是大摇其头，还说：‘有关系的。我不该跟你说那些话。’这时我才想

到，她说的是以后，你知道，就是我们离开这里之后的事。于是我说：‘可我不会有事的，老师。我真的做好了准备，我知道怎么照顾自己。等到了捐献的时候，我肯定能做好的。’我说这些话的时候，她开始猛地摇头，她摇得太厉害，我都担心她会头晕。然后她说，‘听我说，汤米，你的创作，这很重要。不仅仅因为这都是证据，更是为了你们自身的缘故。你们会从中获益很多，你们自己获益。’”

“等一下。她是什么意思，‘证据’？”

“我不知道。但她绝对是这么说的。她说我们的创作很重要，说‘不仅仅因为这都是证据’。天知道她是什么意思。我真的还问过她，就在她说那句话的时候。我说我不明白她跟我说的这些话是什么意思，这跟夫人和夫人的艺廊有关系吗？她长叹一口气，然后说：‘夫人的艺廊，是啊，那很重要。比我从前认为的远远更为重要。我现在算是明白了。’然后她又说：‘你瞧，你不懂的事还有很多很多。汤米，我也不能讲给你听。关于黑尔舍姆，关于广大世界中你们所处的位置，各种各样的事。但是也许有一天，你会去努力搞清楚一切。他们不会让你很容易成功的，但如果你真想要，你可能明白。’她说完，又开始摇头，可没有刚才那么猛烈了。她还说：‘可是凭什么你要有所不同呢？那些从这里离开的学生，他们从来也没弄懂太多。为什么你就不同呢？’我不明白她在说些什么，因此我只是重复说：‘我不会有事的，老师。’她安静了一会儿，然后她突然站起身，弯身靠近我，拥抱了我。不是性感的那种拥抱。更像是我们小的时候他们抱我们的感觉。我只是尽可能地静止不动。然后她退了几步，又说了一遍，很抱歉从前跟我说过那些话。还说现在也不晚，我应该立刻就开始，要弥补从前失去的时光。我想我大概什么都没说，她望着我，我还以为她要再次拥抱我呢，可是没有，她只是说：‘就为了我去努力试试吧，汤米。’我对她说我会尽力，因为在那个时候，我一心只想要离开。我很可能已经涨得满脸通红了，又是被她抱，什么的。我是说，一切都不一样了，现在我们毕竟长大了。”

直到此刻我都深陷在汤米的讲述之中，完全忘记了我要找他谈话的理由。但他一说到我们都“长大了”的话，立刻就提醒我回到了最初的使命。

“你瞧，汤米，”我说，“我们很快再回头好好谈谈这事儿。这很有趣，我能明白为什么这会让你痛苦。但不管怎么说，你还是需要努力把力打起精神来。我们今年夏天就要离开这里了。你得重新提振精

神，理清思绪，有一件事你立刻就能够理顺。露丝跟我说她想停止争吵，要你回到她身边。我认为这对你是个好机会。不要搞砸了。”

他沉默了几秒钟，然后说：“我不知道，凯丝。太多其他的事我需要想明白。”

“汤米，你只管听我说。你真的很幸运。这里这么多人，露丝却单单喜欢你。等我们离开之后，如果你跟她在一起，我们就无需担心。她是最棒的，你只要跟她在一起就没问题。她说她希望能重新开始。机不可失啊。”

我等待着，但汤米并没有做出反应，又一次，类似惊恐的感觉笼上心头。我倾身向前，说道：“瞧，你这个傻瓜，你不可能有更多机会了。你难道不明白，我们在这里，在一起的时光没剩多少了？”

让我意外的是，当汤米终于有反应的时候，他的回答既冷静，又深思熟虑——在未来的那些年里，汤米的这一面将会越来越多地显现出来。

“这点我知道，凯丝。正因为如此，我才不愿意匆忙跟露丝复合。我们真的必须得认真考虑下一步了。”说完他叹了口气，直视我说，“诚如你所说的，凯丝。我们很快就要离开这里。一切不会继续犹如儿戏。我们得认真考虑。”

突然之间我无言以对，就只是坐在当地，一根接一根地拔地上长的苜蓿草。我能感到他的目光落在我身上，可我没有抬头回望他。我俩像这样本来可能还要持续更久，但被旁人打断了。我猜是先前跟他踢球的几个男生回来，再不然就是有闲逛的学生跟我们坐在了一起。总之，我俩这推心置腹的片刻时光就只得结束，离开的时候我感到自己并没有完成想达到的目的，仿佛我让露丝失望了。

我始终没机会去评估下我跟汤米的谈话到底发生了怎样的作用，因为第二天就爆出了新闻事件。当时是上午活动过半，我们重新回到课堂，再上一节文化简报课。在这些课堂上，我们要扮演外面会遇到的各色人等——咖啡馆里的服务生，警察，诸如此类。这门课总是让我们很兴奋，同时又充满担忧，所以不管怎么说，大家总是很亢奋。就在课程结束，我们鱼贯而出的时候，夏洛特·F冲进了教室，于是露西小姐离开黑尔舍姆的消息立刻就在我们中间流传开来。这堂课的任课老师克里斯先生想必早已知情，还不等我们来得及问他，就满脸愧色匆忙逃跑了。开始我们拿不准，夏洛特是否只是汇报坊间传言，但

她越说越多，我们越发明白此事是真的了。上午早些时候，另外一个中学部班级曾经进了十二号教室，等着露西小姐来上音乐欣赏课。可上课的却是艾米丽小姐，她说露西小姐暂时不能来，因此由她来代课。接下来的二十分钟里，情况都很正常。突然——一句话说到半截——艾米丽小姐从贝多芬的话题骤然转离，宣布说露西小姐已经离开黑尔舍姆，不会回来了。那堂课提前几分钟下课——艾米丽小姐若有所思地皱着眉匆匆离去——学生们一出教室，这话就传开了。

我立刻出去找汤米，因为我迫切希望他能第一个从我这里听到这件事。但当我走到院里的时候，我发现已经太晚了。汤米在离我较远的一侧，一帮男生围了一圈，他就在边上，不知他听到旁人说什么，只是频频点头。其余的那群男生都很激动，甚至有点兴奋，但汤米的目光看起来很空洞。就在那天晚上，汤米和露丝复合了，我记得几天之后露丝找到我，特地表示感谢，说我“处理得非常好”。我告诉她很可能我没帮上什么忙，但她根本听不进。这下我算是上了她的贵人榜。情况就像这样持续着，度过了我们在黑尔舍姆的剩余日子。

第二部

第十章

有时我会驱车驶过漫长曲折的公路，经过沼泽地带，或是一畦一畦犁过的田地，天空灰暗而浩大，一英里又一英里过去，丝毫没有变化，我发觉自己在想我的论文，当初住在农舍的时候，我本该写的那篇论文。最后那年的夏天，导师们时不时跟我们谈论文的事，尽力帮我们每个人挑选一个题目，让我们在长达两年的时间内，可以有正事可做。可是不知怎么——也许从导师的仪态中我们能看出些端倪——完全没有人相信论文有任何重要作用，而我们自己也极少讨论这事儿。我记得当我去她办公室，告诉艾米丽小姐我选中的课题是维多利亚时代的小说，可当时关于这方面我并没有太多想法，我也看得出她知道。可她只是像平常那样投给我一个犀利的眼神，并没有再说什么。

可是一旦我们到了农舍，论文就突然被赋予了新的重要意义。我们刚到那边的日子里，对我们中的有些人而言，这段时间持续得还要更久一些，那时我们都紧抱住写论文这件事不放，这是黑尔舍姆布置给我们的最后一份作业，就像是导师送给我们的临别礼物一样。随着时间过去，论文这件事会渐渐淡出我们的脑海，但一段时间内，写论文的工作帮助我们在新的环境里直到适应下来。

今天当我想到自己的论文时，我会从细节着手，回顾一遍：我可能会想出一种全新的切入角度，或者选择完全不同的作家和作品来集中论述。当我在服务站喝着咖啡，透过大窗口看着外面的车道，这时我的论文就会毫无因由地浮上心头。然后我就很享受地坐在那里，再把论文从头过一遍。就最近，我甚至还想过要不要从头再来，重拾论文写作，只要等我不再担任护理员的工作，一有时间我就做。但是最终，我猜其实自己并不是当真想写论文。只是有点怀旧，借此消磨时日。我想到论文的时候，跟想念自己在黑尔舍姆打得特别趁手的一场棒球赛，心情并无二异，或者很久前的一场辩论，我现在倒是想出各种聪明话来反驳了，可惜当时没做到。都是这种白日梦一样的念头。但是正如我前面所说，我们刚刚到农舍的时候，情况完全不同。

那年夏天离开黑尔舍姆之后，我们一共八个人到了农舍。其他人去了威尔士山区的大白楼，或者多塞特的白杨农场。我们当时不知道，所有这些地方跟黑尔舍姆都只有一星半点的关联而已。我们刚刚到农舍的时候，满以为这种地方跟黑尔舍姆差不多，只不过学生的年

龄更大一些，我想，一段时间里，我们还是这样认为的。我们极少去想农舍之外的世界跟我们有什么关系，或这地方是谁管理，农舍跟外面更大的世界又是怎样的关系。那时候，我们都不想这些事。

农舍是几年前破产的一个农场遗留下来的。有座旧庄院，周围有谷仓、牲畜棚、外围屋舍，等等，都被改造成了我们住的地方。还有一些建筑，通常位置偏远的，都快要倒塌了，我们也用不上，可是却感到仿佛负有一定责任——主要是为了凯佛斯的缘故。凯佛斯是个牢骚满腹的老头儿，他每星期开着一辆沾满泥巴的小货车，来两到三趟，查看查看。他不大喜欢跟我们讲话，他到处溜达，一边叹气摇头很倒胃口的样子，仿佛表示我们做得远远不够，没把这地方搞好。可他从来也没说清楚，到底要我们怎么做。我们刚刚到的时候，他曾经给我们列过一张表，注明了我们要做的杂事，而那些早已在这里的学生——汉娜管他们叫“老生”——已经早就形成了一套值日体系，我们一丝不苟地继续执行值日。其余真的没什么我们可以做的，只是报告下水道漏水，再就是水泛上来要拖干净。

那座旧庄院——就是农舍的核心部位——有几个壁炉，我们可以从外面的谷仓里搬劈好的木柴进来烧了取暖。除此之外，我们就得将就着用那种巨大笨重的取暖器。取暖器的问题是需要烧煤气罐，但除非天气实在太冷，要不然凯佛斯不会多送煤气来。我们一再请求他多给我们留些煤气，但他总是阴郁地摇头，仿佛我们一定会滥用，或者会引发爆炸。因此我记得很多时候都感觉很冷，只有夏季那几个月例外。我们得身穿两件甚至三件套衫才能待得住，牛仔裤冰凉僵硬。有时候我们整天都穿着雨靴，所经之处在房间里留下一道道泥泞和潮湿的足迹。凯佛斯看到这些又会大摇其头，但当我们问他还有什么要我们做的没有，虽然地板脏成那副样子，他却也不说。

我现在说起来仿佛情况挺糟糕，但我们大家都一点也不介意这些不便——这都属于农舍生活的乐趣之一。可是如果我们实话实说，我们中的大多数人，尤其是在刚开始的时候，心底里都得承认曾经很想念那些导师。我们中有几位，甚至有段时间曾经想把凯佛斯当成是某种导师，可他根本不吃我们这一套。当他开着小货车来的时候，你上前去跟他问好，他却像看神经病一样瞪着你。但关于这种事，导师们曾经一遍又一遍跟我们讲过：说一出黑尔舍姆，就再也没有导师了，我们得互相照顾。总的来说，我得承认黑尔舍姆在这方面让我们做好了充分的准备。

我在黑尔舍姆交往密切的大多数学生那年夏天都到了农舍。辛西娅·E——就是当初在艺术课教室里说我是露丝“自然而然的继任”的那个——我跟她不好也不坏，但她跟要好的一群人一起去了多塞特。还有哈利，我差点跟他做爱的那个男生，我听说他去了威尔士。但我们这帮人都待在一道。一旦我们想念谁，大可以告诉自己，没有什么阻止我们去看望他们。我们跟艾米丽小姐上了那么多地图课，然而直到如今我们对于某地距离多远、去那里到底易还是难，根本没有真正的概念。我们说要请老生出门旅行的时候让我们顺路搭车，再不然我们就得赶紧学会开车，那样的话，我们什么时候高兴就可以什么时候去看他们了。

当然，实际上，尤其在最初那几个月里，我们甚至极少跨出农舍的范围。我们甚至不会去周边的乡间散步，也不到附近的村庄去溜达。我认为准确地说我们并不是害怕。我们都知道，如果我们溜走，也没人会阻止，只要我们当天能返回，在凯佛斯的管理簿上登记一下就成了。我们到达的那年夏天，时常看到老生整理背包行囊，出门一待就是两三天，在我们看来他们那种无所谓的样子简直吓人。我们满怀震惊地观察他们，心里暗想不知到了明年夏天，我们会不会也变成这样。当然，我们也是一样，但在最初的那些日子里，这看起来几乎不可能。你得记得，到这时为止我们根本都没有迈出过黑尔舍姆地界范围之外过，我们纯粹是不知所措。如果你跟我说一年之后，我将养成一个人长久漫步的习惯，甚至还要开始学开车，我肯定会觉得你是疯了。

那个阳光很好的日子，小客车将我们放在庄院门前，然后绕过池塘，消失在上坡路上的时候，连露丝都显得怯生生的。我们看到远处的山影，会想起黑尔舍姆远处那些延绵的小山，但我们觉得这些山有古怪，不对劲，就好像你给朋友画像，画得颇像样，但又不大像，纸上那张脸让你觉得有点毛骨悚然。但不管怎么说，那时是夏天，还不是几个月后农舍的那副样子，到处是结冰的水洼，坎坷的地面冻得生硬。当时这里看起来美丽舒适，到处都是疯长的荒草——我们没见过这种样子。我们挤在一起站着，一共八个人，看着凯佛斯在庄院里进进出出，时时等待着他来对我们说话。可他并没有，我们只能听到他心烦意乱地嘟囔，抱怨早已住进来的学生。有一次，当他去车里拿东西的时候，眼神阴郁地瞥了我们一眼，然后就回到庄院里去了，并且关上了房门。

可是没过多久，那些看着我们无助的样子暗中取乐的老生——第二年我们也会表现得跟他们一样——就走了出来，将我们领了进去。事实上，回顾往事，我发现他们真的竭尽所能帮我们安顿下来。即便如此，最初的几个星期还是很陌生，我们很高兴能有彼此做伴。我们总是同进退，似乎大部分时间都尴尬地站在庄院屋外，不知所措。

现在回顾起刚开始的那种样子，显得很滑稽，因为当我想到在农舍住的那两年时，开始的那些困惑和惊恐似乎跟其余的生活记忆格格不入。如果今天有人提起农舍，我会想起那些悠闲自在互相串门的日子，午后慢慢转到傍晚，然后入夜的慵懒步伐。我会想起我的那堆旧简装书，书页都皱趴趴的，仿佛曾经在海上漂荡过。我会想起自己读这些书的样子，在温暖的午后，我趴在草地上，头发——这时我把头发留长了——总是会滑落挡住视线。我会想起早上在自己位于黑谷仓顶上的房间里醒来，听见外面田野里学生们的话音，在争辩诗歌或是哲学问题；或是漫长的冬季，在热气腾腾的厨房里吃早饭，围着餐桌漫谈漫议，关于卡夫卡或是毕加索。早餐的时候我们聊的总是这类话题；从来不谈前一天晚上你跟谁做爱了或者拉里和海伦为什么不说话了之类。

可是话说回来，当我想起我们刚到的第一天，在庄院门口挤在一起的那幅画面，并没有那么格格不入，这其中自有深意。因为也许从某种意义上来说，我们并没有像自己曾经以为的那样，将心底的芥蒂抛到脑后，我们有一部分依然如故：害怕周围的世界，而且——无论这让我们多么自惭形秽——无法完全放下对彼此的牵念。

老生们对汤米和露丝恋情的历史一无所知，自然就将他们当作一对相处已久的伴侣，这简直让露丝高兴得没边儿了。我们刚刚到的那几个礼拜，她尤其特意表现，随时要伸手去抱汤米，有其他人在的时候，还会在角落里跟他亲热一番。其实她这样做如果在黑尔舍姆可能还没什么问题，但在农舍，就看起来很不成熟。老生情侣们绝对不会当众有任何亲昵的表现，总是摆出很理性平常的姿态，就像正常家庭里父亲母亲的样子。

这只是我偶然在农舍中老生们中间留意到的——露丝那么认真研究他们的一举一动，竟然没有注意到这点——我还发现他们许多的做派都是跟电视上学来的。我在观察一对老生，苏西和格雷格——他俩可能是农舍里年纪最大的学生了，通常大家认为这里他们“说了算”。每当格雷格开始一番议论，关于普鲁斯特或者别的什么人，她就会朝我们大家微笑，翻个白眼，用很轻微但是又很强调的声音说：

“上帝救命啊。”在黑尔舍姆看电视是有严格限定的，在农舍也是一样——可实际上如果想要整天看，也没什么能够阻止我们——因为没人对此特别有兴趣。但是庄院里有一台旧电视，黑谷仓里还有一台，我时不时会看点电视。所以我才发现，原来这套“上帝救命”的把戏是从一部美国连续剧里学来的，就是那种无论里面的人说什么，或者做了什么，现场观众都会发出笑声的剧。里面有个角色——一个大个子女人，住在主角的隔壁——她的做法跟苏西一模一样，每当她丈夫开始长篇大套地讲话时，观众们就期待着她翻白眼，说“上帝救命”，这时他们就爆发出一阵大笑。一旦我发现了这一点，就开始发现年长的学生从电视节目里学来的许多东西：他们彼此做的手势动作，一起坐在沙发上的姿态，甚至吵架然后冲出房门的样子。

总之，我想说的是，不久之后露丝就发现她跟汤米交往的方式，在农舍的环境里完全是错的，于是她要特地改变在人前行事的方式。露丝从老生那里学来了一个小手势。在黑尔舍姆的时候，如果一对情侣要分开，哪怕只有几分钟时间，也会被当作借口，当众拥抱亲吻。但是在农舍，当一对情侣道别的时候，他们几乎不用说话，更不用说拥抱亲吻了。相反，你只需在情人的手臂靠近肘部的地方拍一下，用手指关节外侧轻轻碰一碰，有点像要引起别人注意的样子。通常都是女孩子对男生做这个动作，就在两人要分开的时候。这个习惯到冬天就渐渐消失了，但是在我们刚刚到的时候，这动作正流行，露丝很快就开始对汤米使用这个手势。首先我得提醒你，汤米是一头雾水，什么都不明白，他会骤然转向露丝，问道：“干吗？”然后她就会怒气冲冲地瞪着汤米，仿佛两人在演戏，可他却忘了台词。我猜她最终还是跟汤米谈过了，因为过了一个星期左右，他俩总算是做对了，几乎完全模仿了老生情侣的做法。

我倒没有在电视上实际看到过这个拍拍胳膊肘的动作，但我很确定这个点子想必是那里来的，同样我也拿得准露丝没有发现这回事。因此那天下午，我在草地上读《丹尼尔·德龙达》\(1\)的时候，露丝很烦人，于是我决定是时候要帮她指出这一点。

天近初秋，开始有些凉意。老生们更多时间都留在室内，回归了夏季开始之前他们的惯常日程。但我们几个刚从黑尔舍姆来的学生还是坐在外面没割过的草地上——只想尽可能地延续我们唯一熟悉的日程作息。即便如此，具体到那天的下午，除我之外，也只剩了三四个人还待在草地上。因为我特地选了个僻静角落自己待着，所以很确信我跟露丝之间的事不会被旁人听到。

我躺在一块旧油毡布上看书，正如我前面提过，读的是《丹尼尔·德龙达》，这时露丝漫步而来坐到了我身边。她仔细看了看我书的封面，然后自说自话地点了点头。又过了大约一分钟，不出我所料，她果然开始跟我讲《丹尼尔·德龙达》的故事大概。直到这一刻之前我还处在诸事顺遂的好心情里，见到露丝还挺高兴，但现在我烦了。这样的事她以前曾经对我干过两三次，我也曾见到过她这样对待其他人。一方面是她那副腔调：好像无关紧要，又诚心实意的，仿佛期望人们真心感激她的帮助。其实即便是当时，我也能隐约觉察出她背后的意图。在最初的那几个月里，我们不知为什么形成了这样一种观点，你在农舍能够多么好地安顿下来——过得怎么样——多少反映在你读了多少书上。这听起来古怪，可我们就是这样，是我们这群黑尔舍姆来的人中间自然形成的观念。这套看法我们刻意搞得含混不清——事实上，这跟我们在黑尔舍姆时代对待性的方式不无相似。你可以到处暗示，好像曾读过各种书籍，每当有人提及某本书的时候，比如《战争与和平》，你就做心知肚明状深深点头，反正也没有人会认真去查验你的说辞。你得记得，因为打从一到农舍，我们就一直相依相伴，所以我们中任凭是谁都不可能在其他人没有发现的情况下，读完《战争与和平》。但是，正如黑尔舍姆对性的说辞一样，大家心照不宣，仿佛真有这样神秘的空间，我们都会躲进去读书。

正如我所说，这是一个我们有几分沉溺的小游戏。即便如此，露丝也比别人玩得更加过分。她总是假装已经读过别人碰巧正在读的那本书；只有她一个人认为，要显示自己过人的阅读量，就应该到处给别人讲他们读到半截的书里面的情节故事。正因为如此，当她开始讲《丹尼尔·德龙达》的时候，尽管我很喜欢，还是合上了书本，坐直身子，冷不丁地对她说：

“露丝，我一直想问问你。你为什么总是要在道别的时候打一下汤米的胳膊呢？你知道我是什么意思。”

当然她号称自己并没有，于是我耐心地解释了自己的说法。露丝听完我的说辞，然后耸耸肩。

“我没意识到。我肯定是跟哪儿学来的。”

若是几个月之前，我可能会就此放过她——也可能根本不会提起此事。但那天下午，我又继续施压，向她解释说这是电视剧里的动作。“这种东西不值得学，”我对她说，“外面的人正常生活中并不真的这样行事，如果你是这样以为的话。”

我看得出露丝生气了，但又不知道应该怎样反击。她转开目光，又耸耸肩。“那又如何？”她说，“没什么大不了。我们很多人都这么做。”

“你的意思是克里茜和罗德尼这么做。”

我这话一出口就明白自己犯了个错误，在提到这两人之前，我本来已经将露丝逼到了死角，但现在她脱身了。这就像是下棋的时候，你走了一步，就在你手指离开棋子的那一刹那，就发现了自己的错误，立刻感到非常惊恐，因为还不知道这错误会给自己带来多大的灾难。无疑，我发现露丝目光亮了起来，当她重新开口讲话的时候，声音都完全不同了。

“原来如此，原来这就是可怜的小凯西难过的原因啊。露丝没有给她足够的关注。露丝有了新的大朋友，没那么多时间陪小妹妹玩了……”

“住嘴。反正真实的家庭里不是这样的。你根本什么都不知道。”

“哎呀凯西，你可是真实家庭的伟大专家呢。太抱歉了。其实就是这么一回事，对不对？你还是抱着这样的念头。我们黑尔舍姆的人，我们得团结在一起抱成团，永远不能结交新朋友。”

“我从没说过这种话。我只是说克里茜和罗德尼。这样很傻，他们干什么你都照葫芦画瓢有样学样。”

“可我说的没错，对不对？”露丝继续说，“你不高兴是因为我已经向前翻篇了，交上新朋友了。有些老生几乎都记不住你叫什么名字，谁又能责怪他们呢？除了黑尔舍姆的人之外你跟谁都不讲话。可你不能指望我一天到晚牵着你的手。我们到这里都快俩月了。”

我没有咬钩，而是说道：“别管我，别管什么黑尔舍姆。可你总是晾着汤米。我一直观察着你，就这一星期你已经这么干了好几回。你把他晾在一边，就像多余的人一样。这不公平。你跟汤米应该是一对。这就是说你得照应他。”

“太对了，凯西，就像你说的，我们是一对。如果你非得插一脚，那我告诉你。我们谈过这事，我们意见一致。如果他有时候不愿意跟克里茜和罗德尼一起活动，他可以选择不去。我不会勉强他做任何他不愿意的事。但是我们都同意，他不应该阻拦我。谢谢你关

心。”随后，她又换了另一种音调，说道：“话说回来，我看你也没有那么慢热，至少跟某些老生交上朋友了。”

她认真地盯着我看，然后笑了起来，仿佛是说：“我们还是朋友，对不对？”可我觉得她最后这句话没什么可笑。我只是拿起书本，一言不发地走开了。

\(1\) 《丹尼尔·德龙达》是英国女作家乔治·艾略特最后一部完成的长篇小说，发表于一八七六年，是一部讽刺现实，寻求道德提升的作品，其中对于犹太复国主义和神秘主义观点带有同情色彩的描写，曾引发争议。

第十一章

我应该解释一下，为什么露丝的话让我那么恼火。在我们交好的那些年里，初到农舍的几个月是一段很奇怪的时间。我们为了各种小事争吵不休，但同时我们又比以往任何时候都更向彼此袒露心迹。具体来说，我们俩经常会谈心，通常总是在临睡前，黑谷仓顶上我的房间里。你可以认为这是我们当年宿舍熄灯后长谈所遗留的影响。不管怎么说，关键在于不论白天我们有过怎样的争执，一到了上床睡觉时间，我和露丝就会发现两人肩并肩坐在我的床垫上，啜着热饮，推心置腹地交流我们对新生活的感受，仿佛什么都不曾发生过一样。而这种坦诚相见之所以能够发生——甚至可以说，这段时间我们的友谊之所以能够存续——都是因为彼此都相信，这时我们相互倾诉的任何事都会得到尊重、小心对待：我们会珍重双方的信任，不论吵得多凶，都不会利用这时候的谈话内容来攻击对方。当然，这倒不是什么明确制定的规则，但是正如我所说的，是彼此心照不宣的信任，直到《丹尼尔·德龙达》这桩事发生的那天午后，我们两人都没做过越线逾矩的事。因此，当露丝提到我跟某些老生交朋友倒是不慢的时候，我不仅仅是恼火。对我而言，这就是一种背叛。因为她的话毫无疑问指的就是我某天晚上向她倾诉的事，关于我的性冲动。

你大概想得到，性爱问题在农舍跟在黑尔舍姆很不一样。这里一切都更加直截了当——更“成人”。你不会到处跟别人咬耳朵吃吃傻笑，传谁又跟谁做了。如果你知道两个学生做过爱了，也不会立刻开始猜测他们会不会正式成为情侣。如果哪天真有一对新情侣出现，你也不会当成了不起的大事，到处去讲。你只是静静地接受这件事，从此之后，当你提到其中一个人的时候，也会讲到另外一个，就像是“克里茜和罗德尼”，或是“露丝和汤米”。如果有人想跟你做爱，也会更加直截了当。男孩子会走到你面前，问你愿意不愿意到他房间去过夜，“换个环境”，或类似的说辞，这没什么大不了的。有时候他是想跟你做情侣，其余的时候，就只是为了一夜的相伴。

正如我所说的，现在的气氛更像是成年人。但是当我回顾往事，却发现农舍时期的性爱更多是出于实际需要。也许恰恰是因为那些流言和秘密都没有了，再不然就是因为冷的缘故。

当我记起农舍时代的性爱时，会想起在冰冷的房间里，漆黑一片中亲热，通常身上总是压着成吨重的毛毯。所谓毯子甚至不是真正的

毛毯，而是各种古怪物事——旧窗帘，甚至地毯。有时候天气实在太冷，你只能找到什么都往身上盖，在这堆东西下面做爱，感觉好像山一样的被子在撞击着你，一半的时间你都拿不准到底是跟男生在做呢，还是跟那堆东西。

总之，我想说的是，我到了农舍之后不久，有了几次一夜情的经历。我原本计划不是这样的。我本来想要慢慢来，也许可以跟某个精心挑选的对象结成情侣。我从没有过情侣关系，特别是观察露丝和汤米两人一段时间之后，我很好奇，想自己也试试。正如我说，这是我原本计划的，所以当一夜情多次发生的时候，我感到有些困扰。所以我决定那天晚上跟露丝倾诉心事。

从许多方面而言，那都是我俩一次典型的夜会。我们捧着各自的茶杯，在我的房间里，肩并肩坐在床垫上，因为椽子碍事的关系，两人的脑袋都要稍微侧一下。我们谈起农舍里不同的男生，是否有谁跟我适合。露丝展露出了她最好的一面：支持你、有趣、老练、有智慧。因此我才决定告诉她那些一夜情的事。我跟她讲，尽管我打心底里不想这样，但事情还是发生了；还有，虽然说我们不会因此而造出孩子，但性爱还是对我的情感产生了奇怪的影响，正如艾米丽小姐当初警告的那样。然后我对她说：

“露丝，我想问问你。你有没有感觉不得不做的时候？甚至跟谁都可以？”

露丝耸耸肩，然后说：“我有伴儿。所以如果我想做，只要跟汤米做就好了。”

“我想是这么回事。也许只是我的问题。可能我下面有点什么地方不大正常。因为有时候我真的非常非常需要做爱。”

“这很奇怪呢，凯西。”她关切地望着我，这让我更加担心了。

“所以你就从来没有像这样过。”

她又耸耸肩。“没有到跟谁都可以的程度。听你说的好像是有点奇怪呢，凯西。不过也许过段时间就会平静下来的。”

“有的时候很久都没什么。然后突然一下子就上来了。第一次就是像这样发生的。他开始亲我，我只想让他走开。可是突然那股劲儿就上来了，毫无来由的。我感觉非做不可。”

露丝摇摇头。“确实听起来有点怪。但是很可能会过去的。很可能是我们在这里吃的食物造成的。”

她并没有帮多大的忙，但她表示了同情，过后我感觉好了一些。因此那天下午在草地上我们争吵的中间，露丝突然提起此事，让我大受打击。好吧，也许没有其他人会偷听我们讲话，但即便如此，她这样做也有不对的地方。在农舍的最初几个月里，我们的友谊之所以能够完好无恙是因为，至少在我这边，我有种观念，认为存在着两个不同的露丝。有一个露丝总在费力讨好老生们，会毫不犹豫地无视我、汤米，或是其他任何人，只要她觉得我们妨碍了她拿姿作态。这个露丝我不喜欢，我每天看到她装腔作势、摆谱儿——就是这个露丝，会用拍下胳膊肘的手势动作。但一天结束的时候，在我狭小的阁楼房间里，跟我并肩坐在一起，双腿伸出来，荡到我床垫外面的那个露丝，双手捧着热气腾腾的茶杯，那是来自黑尔舍姆的露丝，无论当天白日里发生了什么，我跟她，我们都可以像这样，上次坐在一起的时候谈到哪里，立刻拾起来接着聊。直到那天下午草地上那件事之前，我都一直深信不疑，这两个露丝绝不会混为一谈；我临睡前向她倾吐心声的那个露丝，我可以绝对信任。所以当她说出那句话，说我“至少跟某些老生交朋友没那么慢”的时候，我特别生气。所以我拿起书走掉了。

但是现在当我回想往事，会更多地从露丝的角度去看问题。比如我看得出，她可能会感觉我才是首先违背约定的那个人，而她这句揭短的话只是一种反击。当时我从没想到这一点，但现在我觉得有这样的可能，这样解释所发生的事能说得通。毕竟在她说这句话之前，我都在讲什么拍打胳膊肘的事。现在说来有点难以解释，但是对于露丝在老生面前的表现，我们两人之间绝对有种心照不宣的共识。诚然，她经常会吹牛，暗指各种我确知根本没有的事。正如我所说，有的时候她会出卖我们去讨好那些老生。但在我看来，露丝似乎认为，她做这些事，都是为了我们大家。而我作为她的好朋友，担任的角色就应该默默地给她支持，就好像她在舞台上表演，我就坐在观众席的第一排。她奋力表现，想做一个不同的自己，也许她比我们其他人感到更大的压力，因为正如我所说，她好像担负起了我们大家的责任。在这种前提下，我说她拍拍胳膊肘什么的这事儿，就可能被看作是一种背叛，也许她当时感到自己这样的反击行为是正当的。正如我所说，这种解释是我最近才想到的。当时我并没有放眼全局，或是认真审视自己在其中的角色。总的来说那段时间，我猜我大概从来没有关注到露丝单纯为了长大，为了将黑尔舍姆抛在脑后、迈向新生活所做的努

力。现在回想起这些，我想起了她曾跟我说过的一些话，那是在多佛的康复中心我陪护她的时候。我们曾坐在她的房间里，看着夕阳，我们总是这样，一起享用我带来的矿泉水和饼干，我当时跟她讲，说我还留着当初在黑尔舍姆我的旧收藏盒子里面的大多数宝贝，都好好地放在我的松木箱子里，在我的住处。这时——我倒不是特意想引导话题，或带出自己的观点——只是碰巧对她说道：

“离开黑尔舍姆之后，你就再没有收藏过东西，对不对？”

露丝当时坐在床上，她沉默了许久，阳光照在她身后的瓷砖墙面上。后来她说：

“记得我们走之前，导师们反复提醒我们说，可以将自己的收藏带走。因此我就把盒子里所有的东西拿出来，放进了旅行袋。我计划一到农舍就找个很好的木箱子放这些东西。但是当我们到了那里以后，我发现那些老生都没有自己的藏品。只有我们这些人才有，这不正常。想必我们大家都意识到了这一点，不是只有我一个人，可我们从来没有认真谈过这事，对不对？于是我就没有去找木箱。我的那些东西就在旅行袋里放了好几个月，最后，我就都扔掉了。”

我瞪着她。“你把自己的藏品当作垃圾丢掉了？”

露丝摇摇头，接下来的一段时间，她仿佛在脑海中将每件藏品都细细回忆了一遍。最终她说：

“我把它们都放进了垃圾袋，但我实在不忍心把它们当垃圾丢出去。于是有一次老凯佛斯正准备要开车离开的时候，我就拜托他，把这袋东西送到个商店里去。我知道慈善商店的存在，我都查清楚了。凯佛斯略翻了翻袋里的东西，因为他不知道里面有什么——他怎么会知道呢？——然后他哈哈笑了，说据他所知没有一家商店会要这样的东西。我就说，可是这都是好东西，真正的好东西。他看得出我有点动情，于是就转变了态度。他说了类似这样的话：‘好吧，小姐。我带去给乐施会的人。’然后他又很努力地安慰了我一番，说：‘现在我看清楚了，你说得对，里面都是好东西！’可他并不怎么令人信服。我猜他只是把东西拿走，丢到了什么地方的垃圾箱里。但是至少我不需要了解那些。”然后她微笑着说：“可你不同。我记得。你从来不会因为自己的藏品而不好意思，你都留着。现在我希望当初也跟你一样就好了。”

我想说的是，当时我们所有人都在尽力适应新的生活，我猜大家都做过后来后悔的事。当时露丝的话让我很难过，但现在为了当初刚

到农舍的最初时间她或其他人的所作所为，要去评判她或者任何人，都毫无意义。

随着秋色渐浓，我对于大家的周遭环境越来越熟悉，开始留意到一些早先忽视的情况。比如说，学生们对于最近离开的人那种奇怪的态度。老生们在去大白楼或是白杨农场的旅途中遇到的人物，他们会毫不迟疑地分享他们的趣事；可他们几乎从来不会提及那些直到我们到来之前还跟他们很密切的朋友。

我还注意到一件事——我看得出两者之间有关联——当某个老生出门去“做任务”的时候，大家对此都小心翼翼，三缄其口——即便是我们，也能明白他们是做护理员去了。他们可能一去四五天，但在此期间极少被提及；而他们回来的时候，也没人真的去问他们些什么。我猜他们大概跟最亲密的朋友会私下交谈。但大家心照不宣，都不在公开场合谈论这些外出旅行的事。我记得有天上午，通过厨房雾气腾腾的窗户，看到两个老生离开去“做任务”，心里不禁想，到明年春天或者夏天，他们会不会就彻底消失了，轮到我们小心翼翼，避免提到他们。

但是如果说离开的学生是完全禁止谈论的，那又有点夸张。要提到也就提到了。最常见的是，你会听到别人间接提到他们，通常是说到什么活计或是物件相关的时候。比如，如果落水管需要修理，大家就会七嘴八舌地讨论，说“当初麦克是怎么修的”。黑谷仓外面有个树墩子，大家都称之为“戴夫的树桩”，因为足足三年，直到我们来的几个星期之前，他总是坐在上面读书写作，有时下雨或者天冷都不改其行。也许最令人记忆深刻的是史蒂夫。我们始终也没弄明白史蒂夫到底是怎样一个人——只除了一点，他喜欢色情杂志。

时不时你会在农舍里发现一本色情杂志，或是丢在沙发后，或是埋在一堆旧报纸中。这是那种所谓的“软性色情”，可我们当时不懂得如何区分。我们以前没碰到过这种事，也不知该作何感想。当有杂志冒出来的时候，老生们通常会一笑置之，飞快翻阅，仿佛熟视无睹，然后就丢到一边，于是我们也照此办理。几年之前，当我和露丝一起回忆这些往事的时候，她坚持说当时在农舍里有几十本这种杂志在流传。“没有人承认自己喜欢，”她说，“可是到底怎么回事你是记得的。如果某个房间里冒出一本，大家都假装见怪不怪，没什么好看。可是你过半小时再回来，准会发现杂志不见了。”

总之，我想说的是，每当有这种杂志出现，大家就号称这是“史蒂夫的藏品”中剩下来的。换句话说，任何时候有色情杂志冒出来，史蒂夫都要对此负责。正如我所说，我们始终也没有明白史蒂夫到底是个怎样的人。可即便在当时我们也能看出此事的滑稽之处，当有人指指点点，说“看哪，又一本史蒂夫的杂志”时，听出话中些许的讥讽之意。

然而这些杂志让老凯佛斯不胜恼火。有传言说他信教，不仅仅坚决反对色情内容，根本跟性爱都势不两立。有时候他会大发脾气——你能看到他那花白的胡须之下，面皮因为暴怒而鼓胀起一块块红斑——他会满屋子乒乒乓乓地搜查，不敲门就冲进人家房间里，决心要把每一本“史蒂夫的杂志”都翻出来。这时，我们总是尽力去感受他滑稽可笑的一面，但他这样发脾气的时候，其实真的有很吓人的一面。比如，他通常的咕咕哝哝不停抱怨的话突然都没有了，这种沉默赋予他一种令人警惕的气场。

我记得有那么一次，凯佛斯收了六七本所谓“史蒂夫的杂志”，一起拿着冲出门去，到自己车上。我和劳拉碰巧一起待在我的房间里，劳拉的话刚刚逗得我哈哈大笑。这时我看到凯佛斯打开车门，也许是因为他需要用双手来搬别的东西，因此将杂志放在了锅炉房外堆叠的一些砖块上——几个月前有几个老生曾试图搭炉子烤肉。凯佛斯身体前倾，头肩都藏进了车内，在里面翻找了老半天，不知为什么我觉得，虽然说他一会儿之前还那么火冒三丈，他这会儿已经忘记了那堆杂志。果不其然，几分钟后我看到他站直了身子，爬进驾驶座，砰一声关上车门开走了。

我跟劳拉指出，说凯佛斯把杂志落下了，她说：“反正杂志放那边也待不了多久。他又得再敛一遍，下次决定大清洗的时候。”

但是大约半小时之后，当我不知不觉散步经过锅炉房的时候，发现杂志并没有人动过。我想了一下，要不要拿回自己房间去，但又想到，如果杂志在我房间里被人发现，那我就要承受没完没了的嘲弄；而且人们绝不可能理解我为什么要做这样的事。所以我就拿起杂志，带进了锅炉房。

这锅炉房其实就是另外一间谷仓而已，建在庄院的尽头，里面堆满了旧割草机、草叉子之类——都是凯佛斯认为不太容易着火的东西，万一哪天锅炉突然爆炸也不致酿成大祸。凯佛斯还在里面放了一张干活用的工作台，于是我将杂志放在了这上面，将一些旧地毯推到

一边，自己使劲撑起，坐到了桌面上。光线并不太好，但我身后某处有面脏兮兮的窗户，当我翻开第一本杂志时，我发现能看得清楚。

里面有很多女孩子高举双腿张开，或是翘起屁股的照片。我得承认，曾几何时我也曾看到这样的画面会感到兴奋，虽然我从来没有幻想过跟女生做爱。但那天下午，这不是我要找的内容。我快速地翻页，不想被书页中的性爱分心。事实上，我几乎没有看到那些扭曲的肉体，因为我专心看的是脸部。即便是录像带广告页，或是那些折页中，我也要仔细检查模特的面容，然后才往下翻。

直到我快将所有杂志翻完，才确信有人站在谷仓外面，就在门口旁边。我将门开着，因为平常门就开着，还因为我需要光线；已经有两次我不由自主抬眼望，觉得听到了微小的声音。但那里没有人，于是我就继续做自己的事了。可是现在我确信有人，于是放下杂志，发出一声沉重的叹息，足以让人听得清楚。

我以为会听到咯咯傻笑的声音，也许会有两三个学生冲进谷仓，好容易抓到我抱着一堆色情杂志研究，可不能轻易放过。但是什么也没有发生。于是我叫了一声，我尽力让话音显得很警惕：

“很高兴你跟我一起。干吗这么不好意思？”

外面传来一声轻笑，然后汤米出现在门口。“嗨，凯丝，”他怯生生地说。

“来嘛，汤米。一起来找乐子。”

他有几分警惕地朝我走来，在几步之外又停了下来。随后他望着后面的锅炉，说道：“我不知道你喜欢这种东西。”

“女生也有权看的，不是么？”

我继续翻看书页，接下来的几秒钟里，他默不作声。然后我听到他说：

“我不是特意跟踪你。可是我从自己房间里看到你了。我看到你出来到这里，拿走了凯佛斯留下的杂志。”

“很欢迎你都拿走，等我看完之后哦。”

他有些尴尬地笑了起来。“只不过是些性爱内容。我想我都已经看过了。”他又笑了一声，但当我抬眼望的时候，发现他表情很严肃地望着我。然后他说：

“你在找什么东西，凯丝？”

“你什么意思？我只是在看下流图片。”

“只是图刺激吗？”

“大概可以这么说。”我放下一本杂志，开始翻另一本。

这时我听到汤米的脚步越来越近，直到在我跟前站住。当我再次抬头时，见他双手焦躁地悬在空中，仿佛我在干什么复杂的手工活儿，他特别想帮忙。

“凯丝，你不是……反正，如果是图刺激，你就不能这么看。你得更仔细地观察画面才可以。像你看这么快是没用的。”

“你怎么知道女生怎么用？哦，也许你跟露丝一起看过这些。对不起，我没想到。”

“凯丝，你在找什么？”

我无视他的问话。我已经快把一沓杂志都翻到底了，正急于看完。这时他又说：

“我以前看到你这样过的。”

这次我停了下来，看着他。“怎么了，汤米？凯佛斯招募你当色情巡视员了吗？”

“我不是要跟踪你。但我的确看到过你，上周那次，我们都到查理房间去之后。那里有一本这种杂志，你以为我们都离开了，不在场。可我回去拿衣服，克莱尔的房门都开着，所以我一眼就能看到查理的房间。所以我才看到你在里面，在翻那本杂志。”

“那又怎样？我们都得用各自的方式爽到啊。”

“你根本不是为了刺激。我看得出，我现在也能看出来。是你的脸，凯丝。上次在查理的房间里，你脸上表情就很奇怪。好像你很难过，也许还有点害怕。”

我从台面上跳了下来，收拢所有杂志，丢到他手上。“给你，拿去给露丝。看看对她有没有作用。”

我走过他身旁，出了谷仓。我知道他会感到失望，因为我什么也没跟他讲。可当时我自己也没有想清楚，没准备好告诉任何人。但我并不介意他跟在我后面到锅炉房去。我一点也不介意。相反我感到很

安慰，几乎是得到了保护。后来我还是告诉他了，但那是几个月之后了，在我们去诺福克的那次旅行中。

第十二章

我想谈谈那次去诺福克的旅行，以及那天发生的所有事件，但首先让我把时间后退一点，交代下背景，以及我们为什么去那里。

那时候，我们的第一个冬天已经快过去了，我们也感到比较习惯了。虽然我跟露丝有些小争执，可我们还是将老习惯保持了下来，一起在我的房间里享受一天最后的几个钟头，伴着热饮谈天说地，就是在这样的谈天时刻，当我们在闲扯的时候，她突然说道：

“我猜你大概听到克里茜和罗德尼说的话了吧。”

当我回答说没有的时候，她笑了，继续说：“他们可能只是吊我胃口。他们当笑话捉弄我的。就当我没说好了。”

可我看得出，她希望我打破砂锅问到底，于是我就穷追不舍，最后她压低了声音说：

“你记不记得上礼拜克里茜和罗德尼出门去了？他们去了一个叫克罗莫的小镇，在诺福克海滩北边。”

“他们去那里干吗？”

“哦，我想他们是有个朋友在那边，曾经住在这里的一个人。这不是关键。问题是，他们声称说看到了这么一个……人。在一个大开间办公室上班。还有，哎你知道的。他们号称这人是个可能的原型。我的原型。”

虽然说我们大多数人早在黑尔舍姆就曾对“可能的原型”这个概念有所了解，但我们感到好像不应该，所以就没有讨论这个问题——然而当然了，这问题让我们既好奇，又深受困扰。即便是在农舍，这也不是一个随便提起的话题。涉及原型可能人选问题，比聊到任何其他话题——比如性爱——都更加尴尬。然而同时，你能看出大家都很热衷——有些人甚至对此很着迷——通常总是在谈起那些距离我们的世界非常遥远的话题，比如詹姆斯·乔伊斯这样严肃的争论中间，这件事会不断被提起。

可能的原型理论背后的基本思路很简单，对此没有什么异议。大致是这样的。因为我们每一个人都是从一个正常人复制而来，因此我们每一个人，都会有一个原型生活在外面的世界里。这就意味着，至

少在理论上，你可以找到自己的原型人物。所以当你亲自来到外面的时候——在镇子上、购物中心、车站咖啡馆里——你总是留意着寻找“可能的原型”——那些你和你朋友的原版真身。

但除了这些基本理论之外，大家就很难有一致意见了。当我们在外面找寻可能的原型时，到底要找什么样的人，这点都没有人看法相同。有些学生认为你应该去找比自己年长大约二三十岁的人——就是正常父母的年龄。但其他人声称这样纯粹是感情用事。为什么我们跟我们的原型之间，要有“自然的”代际关系呢？他们可能用婴儿、老人做复制，又有什么不同呢？其他人反驳说他们会选择健康状况处于巅峰阶段的人，所以他们和你可能是“正常父母”的年龄关系。但到了这里，我们就都感觉到逼近了一个我们不想进入的边界，争论就会渐渐停息。

还有一些问题是围绕着我们为什么想要寻找原型。寻找自己原型的背后一个主要的观点是认为，如果找到了，你就得以窥见自己的未来。可我的意思并不是说比如有人发现他的原型是个在火车站工作的人，那么他将来也会去做同样的事。我们都认识到事情绝非这样单纯。然而我们所有人，或多或少都相信如果你见到了自己的原型，就会获得某些洞见，关于自己的深层真相，你就能看到生活未来的一点可能。

我们中有些人，认为考虑可能的原型是种愚蠢的选择。我们的原型跟我们毫无关系，只是我们来到人世的技术需求，此外无他。我们每个人要尽自己所能去实现自己的人生。露丝一直声称是持这样的立场，很可能我也一样。然而一旦我们听到有关于可能原型的消息——不论是谁的原型——我们还是禁不住会好奇。

据我的记忆，见到可能的原型这种事，经常是批量出现。很可能好几个星期里没有人提到这个话题，然后若有一个可能的原型浮现，就会引发接二连三的新发现。显然其中绝大多数都不值得深究：驶过的车里看到的人影，诸如此类。但偶尔会有些可能的原型似乎有凭有据——就像那天晚上露丝跟我说起的那例。

据露丝说，克里茜和罗德尼正忙着探索他们去到的这个海边小镇，两人分开走了一会儿。当他们再次碰头的时候，罗德尼很激动地跟克里茜说起他从大街岔到小路上，路过了一间开放式大办公室，临街面是大块的玻璃。里面有许多人，有的在办公桌前，有的走来走去在聊天。他就在这里看到了可能是露丝的原型。

“他们一回来，克里茜就跑来告诉了我。她让罗德尼把一切都描述给我听，他也尽力而为，但其实没可能什么都说清楚。现在他们总说要开车带我去那里，可我不知道。我不知道是否应该对此做些什么。”

我不记得那天晚上我具体跟她说了些什么，但是当时我很怀疑。事实上，坦白讲，我猜想整件事都是克里茜和罗德尼编出来的。其实我并不想让人以为克里茜和罗德尼是坏人——那样讲不公平。在很多方面，我真挺喜欢他们的。可事实上，他们对待我们这些新人，尤其是露丝，可一点都不坦白直率。

克里茜是个高个子姑娘，她站直了身子的话其实很美，但她似乎意识不到这一点，总是驼着背，跟我们保持在一样的高度。正因为如此，她看起来更像是个坏女巫，而不是电影明星——她要跟你说话的时候，未曾开口先伸出手指戳你一下，这恼人的习惯更令人加深了这种印象。她总是穿着长裙子，而不是牛仔裤，一副小眼镜戴得几乎要贴到面上去。夏天我们刚到的时候，她是热情欢迎我们的老生之一，我一开始深深被她吸引，曾特地向她寻求指点。但时间一周一周过去，我开始有所保留。她总是要特地说到，我们是来自黑尔舍姆，仿佛这点足以解释我们的一切，这让人觉得奇怪。而且她总是问我们关于黑尔舍姆的问题——关于那些小细节，现在我照顾的捐献者也常常这么问——而且，虽然她故意假装只是随便问问，我却看得出她的兴趣背后另有缘故。还有一件事让我心怀芥蒂，就是她似乎一直想分化我们：我们一起在做什么事的时候，把其中一个人叫到一边去，再不然就是邀请我们中的两人去加入个什么活动，把另外两个人晾在边上——诸如此类的事。

你极少会看到克里茜没跟她男朋友罗德尼在一起。他整天将头发扎成马尾束在脑后，就像七十年代的摇滚乐手，总是谈论些转世投胎之类的事。我其实挺喜欢他，但他深受克里茜的影响。不论是讨论什么，你都知道他一定会站在克里茜的那一边，如果克里茜说了哪怕稍微有点可笑的话，他都会哈哈大笑，仿佛滑稽得不可置信似的摇头晃脑。

好吧，也许我对这两个人有点太苛刻了。不久之前，我和汤米一起回忆起这两个人时候，他认为他们挺正派的。可我现在跟你讲这些是为了解释为什么他们声称看到露丝可能的原型这事让我觉得特别可疑。正如我说的，我最初的本能反应是不相信，并且猜想克里茜另有目的。

我对于这事儿持怀疑态度还跟克里茜和罗德尼具体的描述有关系：他们描绘的画面是一个女人在玻璃外墙的高档办公室工作。在我看来，这跟我们大家都了解的，露丝的“梦想未来”太相像了。

我想那年冬天主要是我们这些新来的人在谈论什么“梦想未来”，当然有些老生也参与进来。每当这种话题开始讨论，有些更年长的——尤其是那些已经开始培训的——都会默默叹息，离开房间，很长时间里我们甚至意识不到他们的反应。我也说不准在这些讨论中我们脑子里都在想些什么。很可能我们知道这不能当真，然而反过来讲，我敢肯定大家也不全把这当成是幻想。也许，当我们一旦将黑尔舍姆抛在身后，在那半年左右的时间里，在所有那些关于成为护理员的谈话开始之前，在驾驶课，以及其他许多事情发生之前，在相当长的一段时间里，我们得以忘记了自己的真实身份；忘记了导师教给我们的一切，忘记了那个下雨的午后露西小姐的情感爆发，以及多年以来我们自己形成的各种理论。当然，这无法持续，可是正如我所说，仅仅在那几个月里，我们竟得以生活在一种舒适的悬浮状态中，可以思考人生，而无须担忧那些平常高度警惕的界限。现在回首往事，就好像我们在那个雾气腾腾的厨房里，度过了很多很多早餐后的时光，或是后半夜里，我们围坐在半熄的炉火旁，忘情地谈论着大家对未来的计划。

可我要提醒的是，我们谁也没有异想天开。我记得没有谁曾说要当个电影明星之类的。那时我们谈的，多半像是当个邮差，或是到农场上干活。有好几个学生想当这种或是那种驾驶员，很多时候，当谈话开始转向这方面的时候，有些老生就开始比较他们曾去过的旅游线路之异同，他们喜欢的路边咖啡馆，很难走的交叉路，诸如此类。当然现如今要是比赛讲这些，我能把他们很多人都说到桌子底下去。然而在那时候，我都是静静倾听，什么也不说，将他们的话全都吸收进来。有时候，如果很晚了，我就闭上眼睛，倒在沙发扶手上——或是某个男生的臂弯里，如果碰巧当时我处于“正式”跟谁交往的短暂期间——睡一阵，醒一阵，任由那些道路的形象在脑海里流动。

总之回到我的观点，当这种谈话发生的时候，露丝总是会比别人更投入——尤其是当有老生在场的时候。她从那年一入冬就开始讲办公室，但这想象何时获得了生命，何时变成了她的“梦想未来”，是在我和她走进村子的那天早上之后的事了。

那是一场特别冷的寒潮期间，我们的大煤气供暖设备一直不好用。我们花了很多时间想点起暖炉，但一键之遥，却就是打不着火，

我们只得放弃了一个又一个暖炉——随之也只得放弃暖不起来的房间。凯佛斯拒绝处理问题，声称这是我们的责任，但最终实在是太冷了，他就给了我们个信封，里面装着钱，还有我们需要买的点火燃料名称。于是我和露丝自告奋勇走到村里去买燃料，所以在那个有霜的早晨，才会经过那条小巷。我们经过了一个地方，两边的篱笆都很高，地面上满是冻牛粪堆，这时露丝突然在我身后几步停下了脚步。

我过了一会儿才意识到，因此当我退回到她身边时，正看到她举手捂住嘴巴在呵气，眼睛朝下望着，注意力完全被脚边的东西所吸引。我以为也许是只可怜的动物在霜冻中冻死的尸体，但当我走上前，却看到一本彩色杂志——不是“史蒂夫的杂志”那种，而是那种明艳诱人、跟着报纸免费派发的杂志。落在地上的杂志碰巧打开在对开的广告页面，尽管纸页已经浸湿，一角上还有泥，你仍能够看得很清楚。书页上有个漂亮高档的开放式办公室，里面有三四个工作人员好像在谈天说笑。这地方看起来明媚无比，里面的人也一样。露丝盯着这幅画面，当她发现我在身边时，说道：“这才算是个像样的上班的地方。”

这时她又变得不好意思起来——也许因为我看到她这样，还有点生我的气——于是重新启程，比先前走得更快了。

但是几天后的晚上，当我们几个在庄院大屋里，围坐在炉火旁的时候，露丝开始跟我们讲她理想中的办公室，我立刻就听出来了。她讲到了所有的细节——绿植，亮闪闪的设备，带脚轮的转椅——说得栩栩如生，大家谁也不忍心打断，听她说了很久。我仔细观察她，但她仿佛始终没想到我可能会联想起前几天的事——也许她自己都忘了，这些意象是从何而来。她甚至还曾说到办公室里的同事都是那种“充满活力、勇往直前的类型”，我清楚记得这就是那张广告图上方大字体印出来的内容：“你是不是属于充满活力、勇往直前的类型？”或者类似的用词。当然我什么也没说。事实上，我听着她的话，不禁心想，也许这都是可行的：是否有一天我们大家都可以搬到一个像这样的地方，继续生活下去。

当然，克里茜和罗德尼那天晚上都在，每个字都听进去了。接下来的几天里，克里茜一直怂恿露丝多讲一点。我曾经偶尔经过，碰到他们一起坐在房间的角落里，克里茜问：“你确信大家一起在一个像这样的地方工作，不会打扰对方吗？”就这样，让露丝再次开始讲这件事。

克里茜这个人的问题在于——很多的老生也是一样——虽然我们刚刚到的时候，她对我们的态度略微有点屈尊俯就的意思，但实际上她对我们来自黑尔舍姆这件事，内心深感敬畏。我过了很久才认识到这一点。以露丝的办公室为例：克里茜本人在任何情况下，都绝对不会谈论在任何一个办公室工作，更不要提像这样的办公环境了。但因为露丝来自黑尔舍姆，不知为何这整套想法就变成了可能的范畴。克里茜就是这样看问题的，我猜露丝时不时也确实会说点什么，来鼓励这样的想法：好像我们这些黑尔舍姆的学生，理所当然适用于另外一套规则标准。我从没听到露丝实际对老生们撒谎；她只是没有否认一些说法，又暗示其他的可能。有几次我本可以当众反驳她，戳穿她的说法。但有时露丝故事讲到一半，偶尔目光跟我的碰上，如果说她有点心虚的话，也似乎很有信心认为我不会出卖她。当然我没有。

因此这就是克里茜和罗德尼号称曾见到露丝“可能的原型”事件的背景，也许你现在能明白为什么我对这件事这么警惕。我不大赞同露丝跟他们去诺福克，可也说不出到底为什么。一旦她明确表示拿定了主意要去，我就跟她说我也要。起初她似乎不大开心，甚至还曾表示，也不希望汤米陪她同去。可是最终我们都去了，我们五个人：克里茜，罗德尼，露丝，汤米，还有我。

第十三章

罗德尼有驾照，他跟沿路下去几英里之外的麦琪利的农场工人说好，当天借一部车给我们用。以前他总是用这方法找车用，但这一回，就在我们计划出发的前一天，约定有变，那辆车不能借了。尽管说事情解决得还算轻松——罗德尼亲自去了那个农场，人家承诺再给他另一部车用——在那悬而未决、整个行程可能被取消的几个钟头里，露丝的反应很有趣。

直到那之前，她始终表现得仿佛整件事无非是个笑话，她要参与的唯一原因只是为了让克里茜高兴。她总是说我们离开黑尔舍姆以来，完全没有充分利用自由探索的机会；说她反正也一直想去诺福克，“找回我们丢掉的一切”。换句话说，她是不遗余力要让我们相信，对于找到她的“可能的原型”这件事，她不是很认真。

就在我们出发的前一天，我和露丝曾出门散步，进了庄院的大厨房，菲奥娜和几个老生正在里面做一大锅炖菜。事情是菲奥娜本人告诉我们的，她正在干活，头都没抬告诉我们说，农场的小男孩刚刚来过，说了这事儿。露丝就站在我前方，因此我看不到她的脸，但她整个姿态都僵掉了。然后她没说话，只是转身推开我，跑出了庄院。那时我瞥到一眼她的脸，才意识到她有多难过。菲奥娜开始说“唉，我不知道……”之类，但我马上说：“露丝难过不是因为这个。是因为别的事，早先的事儿。”这遮掩很无力，但情急之下，我只能做到这样了。

最终，正如我说的，车辆的危机得以解决，第二天一大早，天还一片漆黑我们五个就钻进了这辆有撞痕却依然很不错的罗孚汽车上。上车以后，克里茜和罗德尼并排坐在前面，我们三个坐后排。这样感觉很自然，我们想也没想就这样坐了进去。但几分钟之后，当罗德尼开车带着我们开出黑暗的小路，上了大路之后，坐在中间的露丝就俯身朝前，双手放在前面座椅上，开始跟两个老生讲话。这样一来坐在她两边的我跟汤米就听不到他们讲话的内容，而且因为她坐在我俩中间，我们也没办法互相聊天，甚至看不到对方。很偶然的时候，她会靠到后面，于是我就试着找点话题三个人聊，可露丝根本不接茬，要不了多久她就会再次倾身朝着前面，把脸扎在两个前座中间了。

大约一小时后，天色开始放亮，我们停车下来伸伸腿，让罗德尼去撒尿。停车的地方在一大块空地旁边，于是我们跃过壕沟，花了几分钟时间搓搓手，眼看着口中呼出的热气升上去。一度我留意到露丝跟我们其他人散开了，朝着空地的方向望着日出。于是我走上前，提议说反正她只想跟老生们聊天，那不如跟我换换位置。那样她至少可以继续跟克里茜聊天，我和汤米也可以说说话，解解路途乏闷。还没等我说完，露丝就低声说：

“你怎么这么难弄？尤其是现在！我就不懂了。你为什么要惹事呢？”说完她拉了我一把，这样我们俩都背对着其他人，别人看不出我们在争吵。她这个动作，而不是她所说的话，突然让我看到了她的视角；我明白露丝花这么大的气力不仅仅是为了在克里茜和罗德尼面前表现自己，而是为了我们大家；而我却在这里，威胁要给她搞破坏，出洋相让她难堪。我看明白了这些，因此就摸了摸她的肩膀，又回到了其他人身边。当我们回到车上的时候，我特意确保我们三人还跟之前一样的次序就座。可是接下来的行程里，露丝或多或少显得有些沉默，靠后挺直坐着，即便克里茜和罗德尼从前座朝我们后面大声喊叫，她也只是闷闷不乐地以单字作答。

可是当我们一来到这座海边小镇，气氛就提振了不少。我们大约是午饭时间到达，然后将罗孚汽车停在了一个满是小旗飘舞的小型高尔夫球场边上的停车场。天气阳光明媚，响晴的天。在我的记忆中，刚开始的那个钟头大家都因为出门在外而感到非常兴奋，并没有多想我们来这里是为了什么。一度罗德尼还曾经大喊了几声，挥着双臂带领大家沿路平稳爬坡，经过一排排的房屋和零星店铺。天空一片无垠，毫无遮掩，于是你能感觉出这是在朝大海边走。

实际上等我们真的来到海边时，发现自己所在的这条公路似乎径直伸到悬崖边。乍一看仿佛从公路边陡峭下降就是沙滩，但一旦翻过了路边的围栏，就发现有些曲折的脚印，带领你从陡峭的悬崖壁一直走到海边。

这时我们已经饥肠辘辘，于是进了一间小咖啡馆，小店坐落在悬崖边，就在那脚印踩出来的小路起始的地方。我们进去的时候，里面只有两个戴围裙的胖女人，是店里的员工。她们在一张桌边抽烟，但很快就起身，消失在了厨房里，因此整间店堂里就只剩下我们。

我们选了最后面的一张桌子落座——这就意味着我们坐在最靠近悬崖边缘的探出部分——我们坐下来，感觉真的好像悬在大海上方一样。当时我没有什么比较，但现在我知道，那家店非常小，只有三四

张小桌子。他们开着窗——可能是为了避免店里炸东西的油烟味太重——因此时常有阵风穿过房间，吹得各种优惠活动广告四处乱飘。账台上有个别针固定的纸板招牌，是用签字笔写的广告词，顶端有个“看”字，“look”的两个O里面，分别画了一只瞪大的眼睛。现在这样的东西我看得多了，甚至都不留意了，但当时，我从没见过这种花样。因此我很赞赏地看个不停，正好撞上了露丝的目光，发现她也对此赞叹不已，我们齐声哈哈大笑。那是个温暖的时刻，感觉在车里时两人之间的不愉快仿佛已经抛在身后了。可是后来的事表明，那次出门的其余时间里，那是我跟露丝之间最后的亲密时刻了。

自从到了小镇以来，我们都没提过“可能的原型”，我猜想等大家坐下来就终于可以认真谈谈这件事了。可是，当我们刚开始吃三明治的时候，罗德尼就开始讲他们的老朋友马丁，他是前年离开农舍的，现就住在镇上某处。克里茜忙不迭地接上他的话题，很快两个老生就开始一个接一个地讲马丁做过的那些搞笑的事。大多数段子我们都听得不甚了了，但克里茜和罗德尼真的是乐在其中。他们不停地交换目光，相视而笑，虽然他们假装是为我们讲的，其实很明显他们是在为了彼此回忆故人。现在想起来，我才意识到，在农舍里大家几乎完全不提起已经离开的人，这样的禁忌可能也让他们甚至彼此之间都无法谈论共同的朋友，只有当我们出来之后，他们才感到可以这样纵容自己。

他们笑的时候，我出于礼貌也会跟着笑笑。但汤米似乎比我还搞不清状况，时常慢半拍，犹疑该不该笑。可是露丝却笑了又笑，不论人家说到马丁什么事，她都跟着使劲点头，仿佛她也记得这些事。有一次，克里茜特别含混地说起一件事——大概是这样说的：“啊，没错，就是他拿牛仔裤出去的那次！”——露丝爆发出大笑，并且朝我们示意，仿佛是对克里茜说：“继续啊，快给他们解释下，让他们也乐乐。”我装作没看见，但克里茜和罗德尼就开始讨论，大家是否应该去马丁的公寓。这时我才开口，也许有点太冷漠地说：

“他到底在这里做什么？他为什么会有套公寓呢？”

回答我的只有一片沉默，然后我听到露丝不耐烦地叹了口气。克里茜隔着桌子朝我靠近，小声地说话，仿佛是解释给小孩听：“他在当护理员。不然你以为他在这里做什么？他现在是正式的护理员了。”

经过一会儿调整，我说：“我正是这个意思。我们不能去找他、去看他。”

克里茜长叹一声说：“好吧。我们不应该去拜访护理员。严格来说是这样。当然不鼓励这种做法。”

罗德尼轻笑着补充道：“绝对不鼓励。去看他是很淘气、不像话的行为。”

“太淘气了，”克里茜说完，嘴里发出不耐烦的啧啧声。

这时露丝加入进来，说道：“凯西讨厌淘气。那我们最好还是不要去拜访他了。”

汤米一直望着露丝，显然感到很困惑，不明白她是支持哪一方，其实我也拿不准。在我看来，她不希望这次出行改变路线，因此虽然不情愿，却还是站我这边，因此我朝她微笑，但她并没有回应我的目光。这时汤米突然问道：

“你到底在哪里看到露丝可能的原型的，罗德尼？”

“噢……”如今我们已经到了镇上，罗德尼仿佛对找原型这件事完全丧失了兴趣，我看到露丝脸上浮现出焦急的神色。最终罗德尼说：“就在主街拐角的地方，那头再往前一段。当然，今天她可能休息。”没有人插话，他又接着说：“他们有休息日的，你知道。他们不总是待在办公室里。”

当他讲话的时候，我一度以为我们错误地判断了形势；就我们所知，老生们经常谈论可能的原型只是为了找理由出门旅行，并没有真心想深究这些原型。很可能露丝也是持同样的想法，因为她现在看起来忧心忡忡，但最后她还是挤出一丝笑容，仿佛罗德尼刚刚说了个笑话。

这时克里茜换了副不同的腔调说：“你知道的，露丝，过几年我们就可能到这里来拜访你。在一间漂亮办公室里工作。到那时我倒不信谁能拦住我们不让来看你。”

“没错，”露丝立刻回答说，“你们都能来看我。”

“我看行，”罗德尼说，“没有规矩说不能去拜访在办公室上班的人。”他突然大笑起来。“我们不知道。我们从前都没经历过这种事。”

“没事的，”露丝说，“他们允许的。你们都能来看我。就只除了汤米之外。”

汤米满脸震惊。“为什么我不能来？”

“因为你已经跟我在一起了，傻蛋，”露丝说，“我要留住你。”

我们都笑了，汤米似乎还是落在别人后面，有点反应不过来。

“我听说威尔士有个姑娘，”克里茜说，“她是黑尔舍姆的，可能比你们高几级。据说她现在在一家服装店工作。她真的很聪明。”

有人嘟囔着表示赞同，片刻间，大家都如坠梦中一般抬头望着天上的云彩。

“你们黑尔舍姆就是这样啊，”最后，罗德尼开口道，说着，不可置信一般摇了摇头。

“还有另外一个人，”克里茜转头朝着露丝——“你那天跟我们讲过的那个男生。那个比你高两年，现在当公园管理员的。”

露丝若有所思地点头。这时我想到应该给汤米递个眼色，警告他一下，但不等我转过身去，他已经开口讲话了。

“那是谁啊？”他迷惑不解地问道。

“汤米，你知道的呀，”我马上说。我想踢他一脚，但那样做风险太大了，甚至可能让我的话音不稳，克里茜能立刻觉出不对来。因此我就径直反驳，带着点厌烦的腔调，仿佛我们都受够了汤米总是忘事情。但这就意味着汤米还是没搞清状况。

“我们认识的人吗？”

“汤米，我们不要再来这一套了好不好，”我说，“你得去查查大脑。”

终于汤米似乎转过弯来，乖乖闭上了嘴。

克里茜说：“我知道自己很幸运，能够到农舍来。但你们黑尔舍姆的，你们才真叫幸运。要知道……”她压低了声音，又朝前倾斜过身体。“有件事我一直想跟你们讲。可是在农舍那边根本不可能。总会有人听得到。”

她环视桌边众人，最后将目光凝聚在露丝脸上。罗德尼突然紧张起来，也将身体朝前倾。我感觉，克里茜和罗德尼终于要暴露他们此行的核心目的了。

“我和罗德尼当初在威尔士的时候，”她说，“就是我们听说那个在服装店工作女生的时候。我们还听说了别的事，是关于黑尔舍姆学生的。据他们说，过去曾有些黑尔舍姆的学生，在特殊情况下曾得到过延期。如果你是黑尔舍姆的学生，就可以做到。你可以申请将捐献时间推迟三年，甚至四年。这不容易做到，但有时候他们会许可。只要你能够说服他们。只要你满足条件。”

克里茜稍作停顿，抬眼看看我们每一个人，也许是为了强调戏剧效果，也许是查看我们是否露出了解的表情。我和汤米很可能露出了迷惑的表情，但露丝的脸上看不出任何心理活动。

“他们的说法是这样的，”克里茜继续说，“如果男生女生是一对情侣，两个人相爱，真心正式地相爱，如果能证明这一点，那么黑尔舍姆的负责人就会帮你搞定。他们帮忙安排好，让这两个人可以共同生活几年，然后才开始捐献。”

这时桌边萦绕着一种陌生的气氛，仿佛周围有轻微的波动。

“我们在威尔士的时候，”克里茜接着说，“是大白楼的学生，他们听说黑尔舍姆有这么一对，男的只剩最后几周的时间，就要去做护理员了。然后他们去找了人，把安排延后了三年。他们获准继续共同生活在那里，就在大白楼里，整整三年不需要继续训练，或者做别的事。三年完全属于他们自己，因为他们证明自己是真心相爱。”

就在这时，我留意到露丝很有权威地点头表示认可。克里茜和罗德尼也留意到了，几秒钟内他们呆呆地望着她，就像被催眠了一样。我仿佛看到克里茜和罗德尼两人，早在这之前几个月里，在农舍里，两人就悄悄在调查和刺探这个问题。我仿佛看到他们两人刚开始小心翼翼地提到这件事，耸耸肩，放到一边去，然后再次提起，完全无法做到把这事抛下不管。我仿佛看到他们设想着要如何跟我们谈这件事，看到他们认真策划要怎么做，到底要怎么说。我再次看到面前盯着露丝的克里茜和罗德尼，试图读懂他们脸上的表情。克里茜看起来既害怕，又满怀希望。罗德尼看起来紧张不安，仿佛信不过自己，怕自己会不小心说不该说的话来。

这并非我第一次听到有关延期安排的流言。在过去的几周内，我在农舍越来越多地听到人谈起。总是老生们自己在聊这话题，如果有

我们中的人出现，他们就会显得有些尴尬，并且闭嘴。我听了太多，足以理清要点；也知道这事跟我们这些黑尔舍姆的学生尤其关系密切。可是尽管如此，只是在那天，在那个海边的咖啡馆里，我才终于明白，原来对于某些老生而言，这整套理论究竟有多重要。

“我猜想，”克里茜继续说，她声音有点颤动，“你们几个知道这事，知道规则什么的。”

她和罗德尼挨个看着我们，然后目光又锁定在露丝身上。

露丝叹了口气，说道：“很显然，他们跟我们讲过一点。但是，”——她耸了耸肩——“关于这事我们知道的有限。其实我们从不谈论这事。话说我们得赶紧走了。”

“应该去找谁？”罗德尼突然发问，“如果你想要，你懂的，想申请的话，他们说你该去找谁？”

露丝再次耸肩。“唉，我跟你说过了。我们从来不多谈这件事的。”她几乎是本能地望着我和汤米，寻求支持，这很可能是个错误，因为汤米说：

“坦白讲，我不知道你们在说些什么。这些是什么规则？”

露丝狠狠瞪了他几眼。我赶紧说：“你知道的，汤米。当初在黑尔舍姆流传的那些说法。”

汤米摇了摇头。“我不记得，”他毫无表情地说。这次我看出来了——露丝也看出来——他并不是反应慢。“我完全不记得黑尔舍姆有这样的事。”

露丝转过脸去不看他。“你得明白，”她对克里茜说，“虽然汤米人在黑尔舍姆，他其实不像是真正的黑尔舍姆学生。凡事他都不参加，人家总是笑话他。所以这种事情问他是没有意义的。现在，我想去找找罗德尼看到的那个人了。”

汤米眼睛里浮现出一种神色，让我屏住了呼吸。这种神情我已经很久没见过，它属于当初那个踢倒课桌、被阻挡在教室里面的汤米。然后那神色消失了，他转头望着外面的天空，沉重地叹息。

老生们并没有留意到这一切，因为露丝这时已经站起身，在拿外套了。随后我们大家起身，同时将椅子推离小桌边，带来了片刻的混乱。我是负责管账的，于是我站起来去付钱。其他人跟在我后面鱼贯

而出，我在等找零的时候，从一个雾蒙蒙的大窗户里，看到他们在阳光下来回踱步，都不讲话，望着下方的大海。

第十四章

出来之后，我留意到大家初到达时的兴奋之情显然已经消散一空。我们默默朝前走，罗德尼走在最前面，穿过几条阳光难得晒进来的偏僻小街，人行道太过狭窄，经常只能容我们单人成列，笨拙前行。一走到主街上，大家都松了口气，各种噪音将我们的坏情绪遮掩下去，变得没那么明显。我们走手控红绿灯的斑马线过了马路，到了阳光更充足的一边，这时我看到罗德尼和克里茜在商谈什么事情，我不禁疑心，这糟糕的气氛到底几分是因为他们认定我们隐瞒了黑尔舍姆的大秘密，又有几分是因为露丝冲汤米发火的缘故。

然后当我们一穿过主街，克里茜就宣布，说她和罗德尼要去买生日卡片。露丝听到这话震惊不已，可克里茜自管自说道：

“我们喜欢一下子买一大批卡片。长远来看这样总是更省钱。碰到有人过生日你随手就能拿出来。”她指着一家沃尔沃斯商场，“这里有些好看的卡片价钱真的很便宜。”

罗德尼点头称是，我觉得他含笑的嘴角仿佛透露出些许讥讽之意。“当然了，”他说，“难免会买好多一样的卡片，但你可以自己在上面加插图。你懂的，增添些个人色彩。”

两名老生都挡在人行道正中，害得推购物车的人只能绕过，他们就这样站着，等我们表示反对。我看得出露丝很生气，但如果罗德尼不肯合作的话，反正我们也没什么可做。

于是我们就进了沃尔沃斯，一进去我就感觉很开心。即便现在，我还是很喜欢像这样的地方：一家大商场，里面有很多货架，陈列着色彩鲜艳的塑料玩具、贺卡、各种化妆品，甚至还有照相亭。如今如果我来到一座城镇，偶有闲暇，总会溜达到这样的地方消磨时光。在这里你可以随便逛，自得其乐，什么也不买店员也毫不在意。

总之，我们进了门，不久就四散开来，各自去看不同的货架了。罗德尼留在门口附近，站在一个放卡片的大架子边上，再往里，我看到汤米站在一个巨大的流行乐队海报下面，正在翻拣录音磁带。过了十分钟左右，当我逛到接近超市后方的时候，好像听到了露丝的声音，于是循声走了过去。我都走到那条过道上了一——两边货架上摆满了毛绒玩具和大盒拼图——这才发现露丝和克里茜站在另一头，正在

讲悄悄话。我拿不准该怎么做：我不想打断她们，但时间不早我们该走了，我也不想调头走掉。于是我就站在原地假装细看一盒拼图，等待着她们留意到我。

就在这时，我发现她们又回到了传言的话题。克里茜压低了声音说话，意思大概是：

“可是你一直都在啊。你竟然都没想过这种事要怎么做，要去找谁申请之类的，我觉得很奇怪。”

“你不会明白的，”露丝说道，“如果你是黑尔舍姆出来的，就能理解。这对我们来说没什么大不了的。我猜想大家一直都知道，如果想要弄清楚，只需带话回黑尔舍姆即可……”

露丝看到我，立刻住了嘴。当我放下那盒拼图，朝她们转过身去的时候，两人同时都怒气冲冲地望着我。那感觉就像我捉到她们在做什么不该做的事一样，于是她们很不自在地分开了。

“我们该走了，”我说着，假装什么也没听到。

可是露丝才不上当。她们从我身边走过的时候，露丝特别恶狠狠地看了我一眼。

我们再次出发，跟着罗德尼去寻找他上个月曾看到露丝可能的原型所在的那间办公室，此时我们之间的气氛比先前更糟了。罗德尼一次又一次地帶我们走错路，搞得气氛越发不快。至少有四次，他信心十足地带领我们从主街上转出来，却发现商业办公楼都逐渐减少乃至没有了，我们只得转身走回去。不久罗德尼就很被动，几乎要放弃了。但就在这时，我们找到了。

又一次我们转身朝主街的方向走回头路，这时罗德尼突然停下了脚步。然后他默默地指着街对面的一间办公室。

果然，就在那里。并不完全像我们那天在地上捡的杂志广告，但也差不多。临街这层是巨大的玻璃幕墙，任何人都可以一览无余看到里面：这是一间开放式的大办公室，里面有十二张左右的办公桌，大致以L形排列。里面有盆栽的棕榈树，闪亮的办公设备，每个办公桌上还有弯头的台灯。人们在桌子周围来来去去，或斜靠在隔板上，聊天讲笑话，还有人把转椅拖到彼此靠近，一起喝咖啡，吃三明治。

“看哪，”汤米说，“这是他们的午休时间，可他们都不出去。换做是我也舍不得出去。”

我们不转眼地盯着，里面看起来就像一个聪明、舒适、自足的小世界。我看了露丝一眼，留意到她的目光正急切地扫过玻璃后面一张又一张的面容。

“好吧，罗德，”克里茜说，“到底可能的是哪个？”

她几乎是语出讥诮，仿佛她认定整件事最终会以罗德尼闹了个大乌龙为结局。可他却强压兴奋的颤抖，悄声说道：

“那里。就在那个角落。穿蓝衣服那个。就是她，正在跟那个胖胖的红衣女人讲话的。”

乍看并不明显，但我们盯得越久，就越觉得他有道理。那女人大约五十岁，体型保持得很不错。她发色比露丝要深些——但人家可能是染的——她将头发往后梳成简单的马尾——露丝通常就是这样的发型。她穿红衣服的朋友不知道说了什么，逗得她哈哈大笑，尤其是她笑完一甩头的样子，跟露丝相像的程度，绝不止一星半点。

我们都盯着她看，谁也不说话。后来才发现，办公室的另外一边，另外两个女人注意到了我们。其中一个扬起手朝我们的方向挥了一挥。这才终于打破了魔咒，我们受到惊吓，咯咯笑着逃跑了。

我们沿街跑了一段，再次停下，激动地同时开始讲话。只除了露丝，在一片兴奋中保持着安静。一下子很难读懂她脸上的表情：那当然不能说失望，可也说不上兴高采烈。她脸上似笑非笑，就像普通人家的母亲，当孩子们围在身边又跳又叫，恳求她许可去做什么的时候，认真考虑的样子。于是我们就这样各抒己见，我很高兴自己可以开诚布公地同意大家的看法，认为我们刚刚看到的这个女人毫无疑问的确就是。事实上我们都如释重负，虽然大家不肯承认，但心里都认为会遭遇失望。但是现如今我们就可以回到农舍，看到的一切会让露丝得到鼓舞，我们其他人可以提供佐证支持。看起来那个女人的办公室生活环境跟露丝为自己所描绘的梦想生活相差无多。不论那天我们之间发生过什么事，从内心深处来看，大家谁都不希望露丝失望而归，那一刻我们感觉已经安全了。我很有把握认为，如果事情到这里结束，我们本可以心满意足，平安回去。

可是露丝却说：“我们到那边去坐坐，那边的矮墙上，就待几分钟。等他们一旦忘掉我们，咱们可以再去看一眼。”

大家同意了，但是当我们朝露丝所指的小停车场周围的矮墙那边走去的时候，克里茜略微有点过分急切地说：

“可是哪怕我们不再回去看，大家也都认为她的确很可能是。办公室也很漂亮。真的。”

“我们再等几分钟吧，”露丝说，“然后就回去。”

我没有在那边坐下，因为墙面潮湿，还有碎石子，还因为我觉得随时可能有人出现，喊我们，不让我们坐在这里。但露丝却坐了下来，膝盖分在墙两边，仿佛骑在马上一般。我们在那里等待的十到十五分钟的场景，今天我还历历在目，犹在眼前。谁也没有再继续讨论原型的问题。大家都假装这是一次无忧无虑的出游，在某个景点多余了几分钟时间要消耗。罗德尼做了几个舞蹈动作，以表示他感觉多么好。他站到矮墙上，找到平衡，然后故意跌落下来。汤米拿路过的人开玩笑，虽然并不好笑，大家还是乐得很开心。在这其中，只有露丝跨坐在墙上，一言不发。她脸上保持着微笑，但却几乎一动不动。微风轻轻拂乱了她的头发，明亮的冬日暖阳晒得她眯缝起眼睛，因此你说不准她到底是笑我们嬉闹，还是被太阳晒得表情古怪。我们在停车场旁边等待的那段时间，这些就是我记忆中留下的画面。我猜大家是在等露丝来决定，什么时候回去再看一次。可她始终没有机会做出决定，因为发生了后面的事。

汤米本来跟罗德尼一起在墙上闲逛，突然跳下来，静止不动了。然后他说：“那就是她。同一个人。”

我们都停下了各自的事，望着那个身影从办公室方向走过来。她现在身穿一件乳白色外套，边走边费力地将公文包关起来。包的搭扣有点难弄，她只得一次次慢下脚步重新来过。我们犹如着迷一般，不转眼地盯着她，直看着她穿过街道。当她转角走上主街的时候，露丝突然跳起身来说道：“我们看看她去哪儿。”

我们大梦初醒一般，起身跟着她走。事实上，克里茜不得不提醒大家放慢脚步，不然别人会以为我们是一群劫匪，这女人是我们要攻击的目标。我们保持合理距离跟着她走在主街上，一边咯咯笑着让开擦肩而过的人，时而分散，时而重聚。当时大约是午后两点钟，人行道上满是购物的人们。一度我们差点跟丢了，可我们还是赶了上去，眼看她进了一家店铺，我们就在橱窗外面闲逛，一看她出来，又慌忙推开婴儿车和老人，紧跟上去。

这时那女人转角离开了主街，进入了海滩附近一条小路。克里茜很担心离开人群之后她会留意到我们，但露丝只管跟上去，于是我们就跟在她后面。

终于我们走上了一条狭窄的小胡同，沿途只是零星有些店铺，主要都是些普通房屋。我们再次只能单列前进，一度有辆小货车迎面开过来，我们只得贴近房屋让车先过去。没走多久整条小路上就只剩下那女人和我们几个人。但凡她一回头，就绝不可能注意不到我们。可她只是往前走，距离我们十来步的距离，直到进了一间房门——进了“波特韦艺廊”。

自此之后，我又回过几次波特韦艺廊。几年前这里换了主人，现在卖的是各种创意产品：锅子、盘子、陶塑动物。但当时那里只有两个大白房间，只卖画——布展很美，画与画之间有充足的间距。现在门上方挂的木头招牌倒是没变。总之，我们决定走进去，因为罗德尼说我们站在这安静的小路上显得非常可疑。至少在店里，我们可以假装在看画。

我们进去之后，发现之前跟踪的那个女人在跟一个年纪大很多的银发女子交谈，后者好像是这里的主管。她们两人分别坐在靠近门口的一张桌子两边，除了她俩之外，艺廊里再无别人。我们鱼贯而入，然后分散在店内，尽力做出被画作深深吸引的样子，两个女人都没有太在意。

事实上，虽然说我一直在关注着露丝那位可能的原型，却也开始享受那些画作，以及这里澄澈宁静的气氛，感觉仿佛我们离开主街已经有百里之遥。墙壁和房顶是薄荷绿的颜色，檐口这里那里偶有渔网或是旧船只上拆下来的腐木部件插挂起来作为装饰。还有那些画作——多半是深蓝绿色调为主的油画——都是海洋主题。也许是突如其来的疲惫袭上心头——毕竟我们天不亮就出门旅行了——反正不止我一个人在那里陷入了短暂的梦境。我们各自游荡到了不同的角落，一幅接一幅画地盯着看，间或压低了嗓门发出一声惊叹，像这样：“快来看啊！”在此期间我们都听到可能是露丝原型的那个女人和银发女子一直在讲话。她们交谈的声音并不大，但在那里，她们的话音仿佛填满了所有的空间。她们在讨论两人共同认识的一个男人，说他对照管孩子毫无头绪。我们始终听着她们的对话，偶尔偷偷朝她们的方向瞥一眼，渐渐地，情况发生了变化。我感觉到了，也看出来其他人有同样的感受。如果我们隔着她办公室的玻璃看到那个女人，然后就放手离开，甚至哪怕我们跟着穿过小城的时候跟丢了她，也还可以欢欣鼓舞，怀着凯旋的心情回到农舍。然而现在，在这间艺廊里，这女人离我们太近，比我们任何时候想的都要更近。我们越多看到她、听到她，就越发现她一点都不像露丝。这种感觉在我们之间越来越强烈，几乎伸手可触，露丝虽然在房间的另一头专心看画，我却看得出她跟

其他人有同样强烈的感受。也许正因为如此，我们才在艺廊里游荡了那么久；我们在延迟不得不讨论这件事的那一刻到来。

突然那女人离开了，我们还是分散着站在艺廊里，避免相互间眼神遭遇。但谁也没有想要跟上那女人，随着时间分分秒秒过去，我们仿佛无需言语，就已经对眼下的情况得出了一致的看法。

终于那位银发的女士从办公桌后面走了出来，对离她最近的汤米开口说道：“这幅作品特别美，是我最喜欢的之一。”

汤米朝她转过身去，出声地笑了。这时我赶紧走过去救场，那女士问道：“你们是学艺术的吗？”

“其实不算，”我不等汤米答话就说道，“我们只是，呃，很感兴趣。”

银发女士面露微笑，然后开始解说我们看的这些画的作者跟她有怎样的亲戚关系，还跟我们讲了艺术家的创作生平。她的话至少起到了一个作用，让我们从入迷一般的状态中醒了过来，大家围在她身边听讲，就像我们在黑尔舍姆的时候，导师们开始讲话的时候我们的反应一样。这让银发女士讲得更起劲了，她一边讲这些画的创作地点，艺术家喜欢什么时间工作，以及哪些作品没有素描就直接画了出来，她一边讲，我们一边不住地点头赞叹。后来她的讲解自然而然到了终点，我们不约而同地叹息，向她道谢，然后走了出来。

外面的街道那么狭窄，我们一段时间内无法好好谈话，我觉得大家都非常庆幸。我们一个接一个地从那家艺廊走远，我看到罗德尼走在前面，很夸张地张开双臂，仿佛他就像我们刚刚到达这座小城的时候那样感到很兴奋。可他的表现并不足信，一旦大家到了更宽敞的街道，我们就停下了脚步。

我们又一次来到了悬崖边上。跟之前一样，如果朝护栏外望去，可以看到曲折小路通往海滩，只是这次你可以看到底部的长廊，两边有木板分隔的货摊。

我们花了一点时间四处张望，任由冷风吹到身上。罗德尼还是努力打起精神，仿佛他下定决心不要让这件事破坏了一次美好的出行。他指着海上的一点，远在地平线上的地方，让克里茜看。但克里茜转身不理睬，她说：

“好吧，我想大家意见一致，对不对？那人不是露丝。”她轻轻一笑，将一只手搭在露丝肩上。“我很难过。大家都很难过。可我们

真的不能责怪罗德尼。本来确实有几分相似。你们得承认，我们透过窗户看到她的时候，看上去确实……”她声音渐弱，直至消失，然后再次碰了碰露丝的肩膀。

露丝什么也没说，只是耸耸肩，仿佛要拂去她的触碰。她眯着眼望着远方，望着天空而不是海水。我知道她很难过，但不了解她的人大概会以为她只是陷入了沉思。

“对不起，露丝，”罗德尼说着，也去拍露丝的肩膀。但他脸上带着微笑，仿佛一刻也不曾认为自己应该受到任何指责。当别人试图帮你一个忙，但没有成功的时候，他们才会这样表示歉意。

我记得当时望着克里茜和罗德尼，心想没错，他们人还行。他们按自己的路数来，心不坏，而且还尽量想让露丝高兴起来。可是同时，我还记得另一种感觉——尽管当时只有他们在说话，我和汤米都沉默没出声——我替露丝感到讨厌他们俩。因为不论他们多么富于同情，我看得出他们从心底里感到如释重负。事情变成这样让他们感到安心，高兴自己可以去安慰露丝，而反之，如果结果她满怀希望，目眩神迷，他们会受到冷落。他们感到释然，因为无需比往常任何时候更加残酷地面对那种他们着迷又苦恼，且感到恐惧的想法：他们认为有各种各样的可能性为我们这些黑尔舍姆的学生开放，而他们却没份。我记得当时想，他们两个人，克里茜和罗德尼，跟我们三个是多么不同。

这时汤米说：“我觉得这没什么分别。这只不过是我们寻开心罢了。”

“也许在你是寻开心，汤米，”露丝冷冷地说，目光依然直直望着前方，“如果我们在找的这个人是你可能的原型，你就不会这样想了。”

“我觉得我想法不会变的，”汤米说，“我觉得这没什么要紧。哪怕你找到了自己的原型，制造你的那个实际模板。即便如此，我也不明白会有任何不同。”

“多谢你深刻的论见，汤米，”露丝说。

“可我认为汤米说得对，”我说，“以为自己会像原型一样生活，这种想法挺傻的。我同意汤米的观点。这只是寻开心。我们不应该搞得太严肃。”

我也伸出手去，碰触露丝的肩膀。我希望她能感受到跟罗德尼和克里茜碰触的不同，因此特地选择了同样的部位。我期待她有所反应，给我某种信号，表示她知道那些老生所不能理解的，我和汤米能理解她。可她什么反应也没有，甚至连她给克里茜的耸肩也没给我。

我看到罗德尼在身后不远处踱步，一边发出怪声，表示风太大，他很冷。“我们现在去看马丁如何？”他说，“他的公寓就在这边，那排房子后面。”

露丝突然叹了口气，朝我们转过身来。“坦白讲，”她说，“我一直就知道这样很蠢。”

“对，”汤米急切地说，“只是寻开心。”

露丝很不耐烦地看了他一眼。“汤米，求你闭嘴别再提什么‘寻开心’了。没人想听。”说完她转向罗德尼和克里茜，接着说：“你们第一次跟我说的時候，我不愿意讲。但是你瞧，根本不是那么回事。他们从来都不会，绝对不会用那个女人那样的人。你想想。她为什么会愿意做这种事？我们都知道，所以为什么我们不能面对现实。我们不是从这种人复制……”

“露丝，”我坚决地打断了她，“露丝，别说了。”

可她还是坚持说下去：“我们都知道。我们是从废柴复制来的。吸毒的、卖淫的、酗酒的、流浪汉、也许还有罪犯，只要不是变态就行。这才是我们的来源。我们都知道，为什么不明说出来？像这样的女人？得了吧，对，没错，汤米。寻开心。大家不妨寻开心来假装一番。里面另外那个女的，她的朋友，艺廊里那个年纪大的。学艺术的，她以为我们是艺术生。她如果知道我们的真实身份，你认为她还会愿意跟我们讲话吗？如果我们去问她，你猜猜看她会怎么说？‘对不起，可是你认为你的朋友有没有做过克隆人的模板？’她肯定会把我们赶出去。我们心知肚明，不如直接说出来。如果你想去找原型，如果你认真想去找，就得去那些龌龊地方找。你得去垃圾堆里翻。去阴沟里找，那才是我们这些人的出身之地。”

“露丝，”罗德尼语音平稳，带着一丝警告——“我们忘了这件事吧，去看看马丁。他今天下午休息。你会喜欢他的，他很搞笑。”

克里茜伸出手臂抱住露丝。“来吧，露丝。我们照罗德尼说的做。”

露丝站起身来，罗德尼开步走了起来。

“你们一起去好了，”我平静地说，“我不去了。”

露丝转过头，认真望着我。“哟，这谁料得到？瞧瞧现在是谁不开心了？”

“我没有不开心。不过你有时候净说蠢话，露丝。”

“哎哟，瞧瞧现在是谁不开心。可怜的凯西。她就不喜欢听大实话。”

“跟这没关系。我不想去拜访护理员。我们不应该去，我也不认识这个人。”

露丝耸耸肩，跟克里茜交换了个眼神。“那好，”她说，“也没道理说我们所有时间都得一起行动。如果这位大小姐不想跟我们一起，她不必非得去。让她自己去好了。”说完她朝克里茜倾身，故意压低了声音说：“凯西发脾气的时候，最好这样处理。让她一个人待会儿，火气慢慢就消散了。”

“四点钟之前回到车子这里来，”罗德尼对我说，“否则你就得搭便车回去了。”说完他笑了一声。“好了，凯西，不要不开心。跟我们去吧。”

“不了，你们去吧。我不想去。”

罗德尼耸耸肩，再次开步走。露丝和克里茜跟在后面，但是汤米没有动。露丝瞪着他，只有到了这时候，他才开口说：

“我跟凯丝一起。如果我们分开行动，那我就跟凯丝一起。”

露丝满含怒意地瞪着他，然后转身大步走开了。克里茜和罗德尼尴尬地看了看汤米，随后他们也再次出发了。

第十五章

我和汤米倚着围栏看风景，直到其他几个人走出了视线范围。

“都是些气话罢了，”他最终开口道。然后稍微一顿，又说：“人心里难过的时候就会口不择言。只是些气话罢了。导师们从来没跟我们这样讲过。”

我迈开步子走起来——朝着其他人去的相反方向——汤米随后也跟了上来，走在我旁边。

“为这个难过不值得，”汤米继续说道，“露丝现在总是这样，她用这种方式把火气撒出来。反正，就像咱们才刚跟她说的这样，即便真是如此，哪怕有一点点真实，我还是认为不会有任何不同。我们的原型不论是什么人，都跟我们毫无关系，凯丝。为这事难过实在是不值得。”

“好吧，”我说着，故意用肩膀去撞他的肩膀，“好吧，好吧。”

我仿佛有印象两人走的方向是往城区中心走，可又拿不准。我正要想办法换个话题呢，这时汤米先开口了：

“你记得我们之前去过的那家沃尔沃斯商场吧，当时你在后面跟其他人一起？我在里面找东西。想要送给你。”

“是礼物咯？”我惊讶地望着他，“我想露丝肯定不会同意的。除非你送她一件更大的礼物。”

“算是礼物吧。可我找不到。我本来没打算告诉你，可是现在，我又得到一次机会去找找看。但是你得帮我才行。我买东西不在行。”

“汤米，你说什么呢？你想给我买礼物，但你想让我帮你选……”

“不是这样。我知道要送什么。只不过……”他笑了，耸耸肩，“算了，我还是告诉你吧。之前我们去的那家商场里，有个架子上放着好多唱片和卡带。所以我就在里面找你当初丢的那盘。你记得吗，凯丝？可是我记不起那是盒什么磁带了。”

“我的磁带吗？我都不知道你知道这件事呢，汤米。”

“知道。露丝让大家帮着找，说你丢了磁带很难过。所以我到处找。那时候我一直没跟你讲过，但我真的是到处都找过。我想总有些地方我能去，你们去不了。比如男生宿舍之类。我记得找了很久，可还是找不到。”

我望了他一眼，感到坏心情烟消云散。“我从来都不知道呢，汤米。你真是太贴心了。”

“可是没帮上什么忙。但是我真的很想帮你找回来。到后来看情况那盒磁带无论如何不会再出现了，我当时心想，总有一天我要去诺福克，到那里去给她找回来。”

“英格兰失落的一角，”我说完，四处张望了一圈，“我们就在这里！”

汤米也四处张望一番，我们停下了脚步。我们此时站在另一条小街道上，比艺廊所在的那条街略宽些。片刻间我俩就这样夸张地东张西望，随后相对而笑。

“所以说这主意还不算傻，”汤米说，“早先去的那家沃尔沃斯商场，里面有各种各样的磁带，所以我当时认为里面一定有你那盒。可现在我觉得应该没有。”

“你觉得没有？哎呀，汤米，所以你根本没有好好找？”

“我找了，凯丝。可是，唉，这真烦人，可我实在是记不起磁带叫什么了。在黑尔舍姆的时候，我开了那么多男生的藏品箱什么的，可现在却记不起了。是朱莉·布里奇斯或者别的……”

“朱迪·布里奇沃特。《夜曲》。”

汤米认真地摇头。“他们绝对没有这盘磁带。”

我哈哈大笑，捶他的胳膊。他看起来很困惑，于是我说：“汤米，沃尔沃斯商场里不卖这种。他们卖的都是最新的流行金曲。朱迪·布里奇沃特，她是很久以前的人物。她的磁带只是偶然出现在我们的拍卖会上。现在沃尔沃斯里面不会有的，你个傻瓜！”

“总之，我早说过，这方面我不在行。可是他们有很多磁带……”

“他们是有一些，汤米。哦，没关系。这想法很贴心。我很感动。这主意棒极了。毕竟这是在诺福克嘛。”

我们再次走动起来，汤米迟疑地说：“所以我才不得不跟你讲。我想给你个惊喜，可是没有用。即便我知道了磁带的名字，也不知道该去哪儿找。现在我跟你讲了，你就可以帮我。我们可以一起找。”

“汤米，你说什么呢？”我想做出责备的样子，却忍不住笑。

“我们有一个多小时的时间。真的机会难得。”

“汤米你这个傻瓜。你真信这个，是不是？失落的一角这套说辞？”

“我倒不是全信。但是既然已经来了，那我们就找找呗。我说，你还是希望能再找到它的，对不对？我们没什么好损失的。”

“好吧，你真是个大傻瓜，但是那就去吧。”

他无助地张开了双臂。“那么，凯丝，我们去哪里啊。我说过的，我买东西很不在行。”

“我们得去二手商店找，”我想了一会儿之后，说道，“卖旧衣服、旧书的那种地方。有时候店里会摆个盒子，里面放满了磁带和唱片。”

“好吧，可是这种店在哪里呢？”

现在当我回想起跟汤米一起站在那条小街上，就要开始搜寻的那一刻，还会感到一股暖意涌上全身。突然间一切都变得完美无比：一个小时的时间摆在我们面前，简直没有更好的方式度过。我尽量控制才能制止自己咯咯傻笑，或是像小孩一样在人行道上跳来跳去。不久之前，我在照看汤米的时候，跟他提起了我们一起去诺福克的那次旅行，他告诉我说他的感受跟我一模一样。我们决定要去找我丢失的那盘磁带那一刻，突然间仿佛所有的乌云都瞬间消散，我们面前就只有欢笑和快乐。

一开始，我们总是走到错误的地方去：要么是二手书店，要么全是卖老旧吸尘器的，可是完全没有音乐。过了一会儿汤米认为我也不比他更懂行，于是他宣布要由他来带路。可巧，真的是幸运，他立刻就发现了一条街，街上一连排着四家我们要找的这种店。店前橱窗里都是衣裙、手袋、小孩的年度纪念册之类，走进去能闻到一种甜丝丝的陈旧气息。店里有大堆大堆皱巴巴的简装书，落满灰尘的盒子里装

满了明信片或是小饰品。有家店专营嬉皮风格的东西，还有一家卖战争纪念章，还有沙漠中士兵的照片。可每家店都有一两个大纸箱子，里面摆满了黑胶唱片或是卡带。我们在这些店里翻看，坦白讲，除了最初的几分钟，其余时间里我觉得两人都没想到朱迪·布里奇沃特。我们单纯只是享受两人一起翻看这些东西的过程，一会儿分开，一会儿重又肩并肩站到了一起，一缕阳光照耀下，灰尘飞扬的角落里，也许两人还暗暗比赛，看谁能抢占那盒旧玩意。

后来当然，我找到了。我正在翻拣一排卡带，脑子里想着别的事，突然间它就出现了，就在我手指下方，跟许多年前一模一样：朱迪，她的香烟，望向酒保的挑逗眼神，还有背景中那些含混的棕榈树。

我没有像平常碰到略微令我激动的东西那样叫出声，只是默默站在原地，望着那个塑料盒子，说不准自己是高兴还是不高兴。刹那间我甚至觉得这是个错误。磁带只是这片刻欢愉的一个最好的借口，可如今磁带找到了，我们就得停下来。也许就因为如此，连我自己都感到吃惊的是，一开始我竟然沉默无语，竟然还想要不要假装没有发现。现在这盒磁带就在我面前，莫名有些令人尴尬，仿佛我早过了应该喜欢它的年纪。我甚而让这盒磁带歪倒，让旁边的盒子压了过来。可卡带脊部赫然在目，径直与我对望，最终我还是喊汤米过来了。

“是这个吗？”他好像真心感到难以置信，也许是因为我并没有显得很激动。我将磁带拿了出来，双手捧起来。这时，突然间我感到巨大的快乐——还有别的东西，更复杂的情感，让我几乎要迸出眼泪来。但我克制住情绪，只是扯了一下汤米的胳膊。

“没错，就是它，”我说完，第一次激动地笑了，“你能相信吗？竟然真被我们找到了。”

“你想这会不会是那同一盒？我是说，原来那盒。你丢的那盒？”

我将磁带放在指间摩挲，发现背面的设计细节我也记得很清楚，每一首歌的名字，一切的一切。

“在我看来，真有可能，”我说，“可我得告诉你，汤米，可能市面上这磁带有几千盒呢。”

这次轮到我发现汤米没有意料中那么激动了。

“汤米，你好像并没有很为我感到高兴啊，”我话虽这样讲，语气却明显是调侃。

“我真的替你高兴，凯丝。只不过，唉，真希望是我找到的，”说完他轻轻一笑，又接着说，“那时候，你丢了磁带之后，我曾经认真想过的，在脑子里想象，如果我找到了拿给你，会是什么场景。你会怎么说，你脸上的表情，所有这一切。”

他的语音比平常要轻柔，目光停留在我手中的塑料盒上。我一下子感觉到店里只有我俩，除此之外就只有前面柜台后专心处理书面工作的老伙计。我们在店后方一块高于地面的平台上，这里更为幽暗僻静，仿佛那老伙计不想理会我们这边的货品，有意识地将信息屏蔽了。几秒钟的时间里，汤米好像入迷一般，据我所知他是在脑海中回顾从前的幻想，要把我丢失的磁带还给我。突然他从我手上将盒子抢了过去。

“至少我可以买给你，”他笑道，说完不等我阻止他，就开始下楼梯朝前面走去。

我仍旧留在店堂后部随意翻看，等着老店员把盒子封面相配的磁带找出来。我还能感到胸中有遗憾在涌动，遗憾我们这么快就找到了，只有过了一段时间之后，等我们回到农舍，我一个人待在房间里的时候，才真心为重新得到这盒磁带——那首歌——而感激不已。即便在当时，那也主要是一件怀旧的东西，而今天，如果碰巧磁带拿出来被我看到，就会一下子将我带回在诺福克的那个下午，同样我们当初在黑尔舍姆的时光也历历在目。

我们从店里出来之后，我一心想要找回两人先前那种无忧无虑，甚至有点傻乎乎的情绪状态。可是当我说了几个小段子之后，却见汤米沉浸在自己的思想中，没有做出反应。

我们开始爬一段很陡的坡路，可以看得到——前方也许一百码开外——有一块紧挨着悬崖的观景台，有长凳朝着大海的方向摆放着。夏天的时候这里会是一个普通家庭坐下来野餐的好地方。现在尽管是冷风吹面，我们依然朝着这边走去，可是还没等走到的时候，汤米磨磨蹭蹭慢下了脚步，他对我说：

“克里茜和罗德尼他们，真的很相信这种说法。你知道的，就是说如果有人真心相爱，就可以将捐献时间延后。他们认为我们知道内情，可是在黑尔舍姆的时候，从来没有人说过这种话。至少我从来没

听到过这样的说法。你有吗，凯丝？没有，这只是最近老生们中间流传开的一些说法。还有露丝这样的。他们添油加醋。”

我认真地看着他，但很难判断他到底是恶作剧地说笑，还是对此深恶痛绝。但不管怎样，我看得出他心里还有别的事，跟露丝毫无关系，因此我什么也没说，只是等待着。最终，他完全停住了脚步，开始用脚乱踢地上一个被踩扁的纸杯。

“其实呢，凯丝，”他说，“我考虑这件事已经有段时间了。我相信我们是对的，当初我们在黑尔舍姆的时候，并没有这样的说法。但那时候很多事都没什么道理。我一直在想，如果这传言是真的，那倒可以解释很多事。很多我们从前不明白的事。”

“你什么意思？什么不明白的事？”

“比如说艺廊的事，”汤米压低了声音，我也上前一步，仿佛我们还在黑尔舍姆，在餐厅的队列或是池塘边交谈，“我们从来没有追问到底，艺廊到底是为了什么。为什么夫人要把最好的作品都拿走。可是现在我想我知道了，凯丝。你记不记得有一次大家在争吵交换币的事？到底被夫人拿走作品的那些人，是否应该得到交换币？罗伊·J还特地去找艾米丽小姐谈过这件事？当时艾米丽小姐有个说法，但又放下不提了，现在我才开始细想。”

两个遛狗的女人从旁路过，虽然这样做很傻，但我们还是不约而同停下了讲话，直到她们走远上了坡听不到我们讲话。这时我说：

“怎么个说法，汤米？艾米丽小姐放下不提什么？”

“罗伊·J问夫人为什么要拿走我们的作品时，你记不记得她说过些什么？”

“我记得她说这是种荣誉，我们应该为此自豪……”

“可是不止这些。”这时汤米的话音微弱，如同耳语，“她告诉罗伊，她随口说出的，也许她本不该说出来的，你还记得吗，凯丝？她对罗伊说，像画作、诗歌等等这些东西，她说它们会展示你的内心。她说它们会揭示你的灵魂。”

他说到这里，我突然记起劳拉有次画了一幅自己的内脏图，还为之大笑。但我开始记起一些事了。

“没错，”我说，“我记得。你是想说什么呢？”

“我的想法，”汤米慢慢地说道，“是这样的。假设他们说的对，那些老生的说法。假设黑尔舍姆的学生的确有特别的安排。假设如果两个人说他们真心相爱，想要更多时间厮守。那样的话，凯丝，就要有方法来评判他们说的是不是真话。他们说相爱是否只是为了延迟捐献。你能明白这有多难评判吧？再或者一对情侣认为自己真心相爱，但其实只是情欲作祟，不然只是一时的冲动。你明白我意思吧，凯丝？这真的很难判断，而且几乎不可能做到每次都准确。问题关键是由谁来评判。不论是夫人，或者其他什么人，他们需要某种凭据。”

我慢慢点头。“所以他们才拿走我们的艺术作品……”

“有可能。夫人在某处有间艺廊，里面全都是学生从很小时候开始创作的东西。假如有两个人跑来说他们相爱。她就可以找出他们许许多多年前创作的作品。她就可以判断这两人是否值得。他们般配不般配。别忘了，凯丝，她那些东西会揭示我们的灵魂。她自己就可以评判谁跟谁天生一对，谁跟谁只是犯傻一时冲动。”

我再次开动脚步，慢慢走动起来，却几乎没有看前面的路。汤米落在了后面，等待我的回应。

“我说不准，”最后，我说，“你说的这些当然可以解释艾米丽小姐对罗伊说的那些话。我想，同样也可以解释我们的导师为什么一直认为能够画画或者搞其他创作，对我们而言如此重要。”

“正是。所以……”汤米叹了口气，带着几分挣扎说，“所以露西小姐不得不承认，她当初告诉我说这其实不重要，是她错了。她那样说是因为当时为我感到难过。但从内心深处她知道，这其实很重要。来自黑尔舍姆的特别之处就在于你有这样一个独特的机会。如果你没有作品入选夫人的艺廊，那你简直就是白白放弃了这个机会。”

只有他说完这话之后，我才如冷水浇头一般，真正明白他要说的意思。我停下来向他转过身去，可是不等我开口，汤米却笑了。

“如果我理解的都对，那么，唉，看来我是把机会都搞砸了。”

“汤米，你有没有任何东西入选过艺廊？也许你很小的时候呢？”

他已经开始大摇其头了。“你知道我这个人多没用。再说还有露西小姐什么的那些事。我知道她是好意。她为我感到难过，想帮我。我肯定她是这样想的。但是如果我的理论正确，那么……”

“这只是理论而已，汤米，”我说，“你知道你的理论是怎么回事。”

我本想调节下气氛，但语气没有控制好，我还在使劲想着他刚刚说过的话，这点想必显而易见。“也许他们有各种各样的方式去评判，”过了一会儿我说，“也许那些作品只是许多不同方式中的一个。”

汤米再次摇了摇头。“比如什么方式？夫人从来也不了解我们。她绝对不会记得我们每一个人。再说，很可能不止夫人一个人做决定。很可能上面有比她职位更高的人，那些人从来没到过黑尔舍姆。我想这些想了很久，凯丝。一切都对得上。所以艺廊才这样重要，所以导师们才这样强烈要求我们一定要努力创作艺术和诗歌作品。凯丝，你怎么想？”

无疑我是走神了一会儿。事实上，我想到了独自一人在宿舍房间里，播放我们刚刚找到的那盘磁带的事；想起我是如何摆动身体，将枕头抱在胸前，夫人如何从过道里看着我，双眼含泪。甚至连这个我一直没能找出一个合理解释的场景，似乎也符合汤米的理论。在我的脑海中，我想象的是自己抱着一个婴儿，但当然，夫人无从知道这些。她很可能会认为我是幻想与爱人相拥。如果汤米的理论没错，如果夫人跟我们的联系唯一的目的是为了此后当我们相爱的时候，来决定我们是否可以延迟捐献，那么这就合理了——虽然她通常对我们都极尽冷漠——但当她碰上这样一个场景的时候，还会真心为之感动。这一切从我脑海中闪过，我差点就要冲口对汤米讲述这一切。但我抑制住了这种冲动，因为我现在想压一压他的理论。

“我刚刚在想你说过的话，仅此而已，”我说，“我们得开始往回走了。我们得花点工夫才能找到停车场。”

我们开始调转步伐下坡，但我们都知道时间还够，无需着急。

“汤米，”我们走了一段之后，我问道，“这些事你跟露丝讲过没有？”

他摇摇头，继续往前走。最后他说：“问题在于露丝相信这一切，老生们所说的一切她都相信。没错，她喜欢不懂装懂，故作高明。但是她真心相信这些话。或迟或早，她一定会想采取下一步行动。”

“你是说，她会想……”

“没错，她会想申请。可她还没有想清楚。不像我们刚刚谈的这样。”

“你从没讲过你关于艺廊的理论？”

他再次摇头，却什么也没说。

“如果你告诉她你的理论，”我说，“而她相信的话……那就，哎，她肯定要气坏了。”

汤米若有所思的样子，但却什么也没说。直到我们重新走向那些狭窄小街上之后，他才再次开口，这时，他的话音突然变得有些局促不安。

“事实上，凯丝，”他说，“我一直在做些东西。只怕万一嘛。我跟谁都没讲过，露丝也没有。只是刚刚开始。”

这是我第一次听他提起那些想象中的动物。当他开始描述他正在做的东西的时候——直到几个星期之后我才看到那些画——我发现很难表现得兴趣浓厚。事实上我得承认，这让我想起了黑尔舍姆时代，汤米所有问题的起始点，最初那幅草地上大象的画。他解释说，灵感来自一本封底缺失、老旧的儿童绘本，是他在农舍的沙发后面找到的。后来他就说服凯佛斯给了他一本黑色小本子，他就开始在上面画动物，自那以后，汤米已经画完了至少十二幅他想象中的动物。

“关键是，我把它画得非常小。很小很小。在黑尔舍姆的时候我从没想过这样做。我想也许当初我就是在这上面出了岔子。如果你把它们画得很小，因为你画画的纸总共也就这么小，那么一切就都变了。就好像它们自己就活了。这时你就得给它们画上各种细节。得考虑它们如何保护自己，如何够到东西。坦白讲，凯丝，这跟我在黑尔舍姆画过的东西完全不一样。”

他开始描述最喜欢的动物，但我很难集中注意力；他越是起劲地给我讲他的那些动物，我就越不自在。“汤米，”我想对他说，“你会再次让自己成为别人取笑的对象。幻想动物？你怎么回事啊？”可我没有。我只是警惕地望着他，不停地说：“听起来真不错，汤米。”

讲到某处，他说道：“正如我所说的，凯丝，露丝不知道我在画动物。”他说这话的时候，仿佛记起了其他所有的事，为什么我们会开始聊他创作的动物，这时激情从他脸上渐渐消逝了。于是我们再一次沉默前行，当我们走出小道，来到主街上的时候，我说：

“汤米，哪怕你的理论确有几分道理，我们还是有很多事要搞明白。比如，一对情侣应该怎么申请？他们应该怎么做？又不是说随处有表格可以拿来填写。”

“我也一直在想这些，”他的话音重新变得平静而严肃，“据我看来，只有一条路可以走。那就是找到夫人。”

我想了一下，然后说道：“这可能不容易。我们其实对她一无所知。我们连她姓甚名谁都不知道。况且你记得她的举止吗？她甚至不喜欢我们靠近她。即便是我们真的找到了她的下落，我觉得她也不会太帮忙。”

汤米叹了口气。“我知道，”他说，“反正，我猜我们有的是时间。谁也没有忙着要去做什么。”

等到我们回到停车场的时候，下午的天气已经转阴，气温变得很低。其他人还没有出现的迹象，于是我和汤米就靠在我们的车上，望着那个迷你高尔夫球场。没有人在打球，只有小旗在风中飘飞。我不想再继续讲夫人、艺廊等等这些事，于是就将包装好的朱迪·布里奇沃特的磁带拿了出来，仔细欣赏。

“谢谢你买给我，”我说。

汤米微微一笑。“如果我先看到那堆磁带，你先看唱片的话，就该由我先发现了。可怜的老汤米运气不佳呀。”

“这没什么区别。我们能找到它纯粹是因为你说要去找。我早就忘记什么遗失的角落这些说法了。露丝说了那些话之后，我情绪那么差。朱迪·布里奇沃特。我的老朋友。就好像她从来没有离开过一样。不知道当初是谁偷走的？”

有一会儿，我们转身朝向街道，搜寻其他人的身影。

“你知道，”汤米说，“刚才露丝说那些话的时候，我看到你有多难过……”

“别说了，汤米。我现在没事了。等她回来我也不想再提这些话。”

“不，我不是想说这事。”他转身从车旁站直，又将一只脚撑在前轮胎上，仿佛测试压力。“我意思是，那时候我才明白，当露丝说出那番话的时候，我才明白你为什么总在翻色情杂志。不过其实我还

是没明白。只是一种理论。又是我的理论。可是当露丝说她前面那番话的时候，好像事情就对上了。”

我知道他正在看着我，但我目光直视前方，没有做出反应。

“可我其实还是不明白，凯丝，”他最后说，“即便露丝说的对，虽然我认为不是这么回事，可你为什么会在旧色情杂志里面找自己的原型呢？为什么你的原型会是这些女孩之一呢？”

我耸耸肩，依然不看她。“我没说过这么做有道理。只是我自己的做法而已。”这时我眼中已经满是泪水，可我还想不让汤米看到。但我说话的声音还是有些哽咽：“如果你觉得烦，我以后不这么做了就是。”

我不知道汤米是否看到了我的眼泪。不管怎么说，等到他走近我，用力按按我肩膀的时候，我总算是止住了泪水。之前的时候，他时不时会这样做，这没什么特别，也没什么新鲜。可是不知怎的，我的确感觉好了一些，轻轻笑了笑。这时他才放开我，可我们还是距离很近，重又回到背靠着车子肩并肩的位置，几乎触到彼此。

“的确，这没什么道理可言，”我说道，“可是我们都会这么做，不是吗？我们都好奇自己的原型。毕竟我们今天就是为了这个才来到了这里。我们都这么做。”

“凯丝，你知道，对不对，我跟谁都没说过。关于那次在锅炉房的事。跟露丝没有，其他人也没有。可我就是不明白。我不明白那是为什么。”

“好吧，汤米。我告诉你。你听了可能也觉得毫无道理，但告诉你也没什么。只是有的时候，我时不时会有特别强烈的欲望，想要做爱。有时候这种冲动上来会持续一两个小时，很可怕。据我所知，就算跟老凯佛斯做我也在所不辞，就有这么糟糕。所以……我之所以跟休伊做，也只是因为这一个理由，还有奥利弗。没有任何深层的意义。我甚至不怎么喜欢他们。我不知道这是怎么回事，而且过后，事后感觉很可怕。所以我才开始想，也许，这总得有个出处，想必跟我的出身有关系。”我停了下来，可汤米什么都没说，于是我继续说：“所以我就想，如果我能找到她的照片，在这些杂志里面，那么至少可以对此有个解释。我倒不是想去找她什么的。我只是，你明白的，想搞清楚为什么我会是这个样子。”

“我有时候也这样，”汤米说道，“有时候我真的很想做。我敢说人人都会这样，如果他们肯坦白的話。我认为你并没有任何不同之处，凯丝。事实上，我经常这样……”他停了下来，笑起来，可我并没有跟着一起笑。

“我说的事不一样，”我说，“我观察过其他人。他们会有这种冲动，但不足以让他们做出实际的行为。他们绝对不会去做我做过的那些事，去跟休伊那种人……”

我可能又开始哭起来了，因为我感觉到汤米的手臂再次揽住我的肩膀。虽然我很难过，但仍然清楚意识到我们所处的环境，心中自省如果露丝和其他人沿着街道走来，如果此刻看到我俩，也不能让他们产生任何的误会。我们仍是肩并肩站着，背靠着车子，他们会看出我很难过，而汤米只是在安慰我。这时我听到他说：

“我认为这倒未见得是件坏事。一旦你找到那个人，凯丝，那个你真的很想跟他在一起的人，那会非常美好。你还记得导师们跟我们讲过的话吗？如果是跟正确的人，那感觉真的会很美好。”

我肩膀稍动了一下，把汤米的胳膊挪开，然后深深吸了一口气。“忘了这事吧。反正现在冲动上来我也学会了控制情绪。所以我们就把这事忘掉吧。”

“反正，凯丝，在那些杂志里翻找，这挺傻的。”

“是挺傻的，好吧，汤米。咱别提这茬了。我没事了。”

我不记得其他人回来之前，我们两人又说了些什么。我们没有继续讨论这种严肃话题，如果其他人感觉到气氛中有些什么，也没有讲出来。他们情绪很高，尤其是露丝，似乎下定决心要弥补早先的坏脾气。她走上前摸摸我的脸，说了个笑话什么的，等我们回到车上，她仍然努力确保让欢欣的气氛继续保持。她和克里茜觉得马丁样样都很好笑，机会难得要尽情享受，一离开他的公寓房子就使劲笑他。罗德尼好像很不赞成，我发现露丝和克里茜为此还编了一段歌舞，主要是笑话他。一切都友好无伤。可我还是留意到，他们说的那些笑话和典故，之前露丝会特地不理睬我和汤米，而回去的路上，她却时常转身过来，认真给我解释他们谈的每一件事。然而实际上，没多一会儿这就有点累人了，因为搞来搞去就好像他们在车上讲的一切都是为了照顾我们——至少是我个人——的感受。可我很高兴露丝对此这样在意。我理解——汤米也一样——她认识到自己之前行为的错误，用这种方式来认错。我们坐在后座，分别在她两边，跟我们出发时一样，

但现在，她全部时间都在跟我讲话，偶尔转身去摸一下汤米，或给他轻轻一吻。气氛很好，没有人再提起露丝可能的原型或是诸如此类的话题。我也没有提起汤米帮我买到的朱迪·布里奇沃特的磁带。我知道露丝迟早会发现的，但我现在还不想让她知道。那段回家的路程中，暮色渐笼，漫长而空荡的大路越来越暗，感觉我们三个人仿佛再次亲密无间，我希望不要有任何事出现，来破坏这种气氛。

第十六章

关于那次诺福克之行有点古怪的是，我们一回来就对此缄口不言。这样持续了一段时间，开始有各种各样的传言讲我们是去干吗的。即便如此我们还是缄默不语，直到大家失去了兴趣。

我至今也不确定到底发生了什么事。也许我们认为应该由露丝来决定，到底该说多少，我们都在等她的提示。而露丝呢，出于种种原因——也许她的原型事件最后的结局让她觉得难堪，也许她享受这种神秘感——对这件事是只字不提。即便是我们彼此之间，也避免谈起这次旅行。

这种保密气氛让我更方便，可以不必将汤米为我买了朱迪·布里奇沃特磁带的事告诉露丝。我倒没有特地隐瞒。磁带始终都在，放在我的藏品之中，放在墙角线边上，我的一小堆东西中间。可我总是小心不让磁带放在这堆东西最上面。有几次我很想告诉她，很想跟她一起，在这盘磁带播放的背景音乐中回顾黑尔舍姆的生活。但随着诺福克之行过去得越来越久，我始终也没有告诉她，这事感觉越来越像一件令人愧疚的秘密。当然，她最终还是发现了那盒磁带，那是很久以后了，而且也许发现的时机更是大为不当，可有时候人就是这么不走运。

春意渐浓，越来越多的老生离开了，开始接受培训，虽然他们像往常一样走得悄无声息，但人数越来越多，令人无法视而不见。我现在依然说不准，当时亲眼见证了那么多的分别，到底是种怎样的感受。我猜，一定程度上我们对那些离开的人有些妒忌。的确感觉他们是去了一个更广阔、更有趣的世界。但是当然，毫无疑问他们的离去让我们的不安又增加了几分。

后来，我想大约是四月份的时候，爱丽丝·F成了我们黑尔舍姆这帮人里第一个离开的，之后不久戈登·C也走了。他们都得到邀约，立刻开始培训，带着欢欣鼓舞的笑容离开了，但是在那之后，至少对我们这群人来说，农舍的氛围彻底改变了。

许多老生同样也似乎受到了这一连串告别的影响，也许直接的影响就是，克里茜和罗德尼在诺福克时谈到的那番流言又起来了。传言说国内其他地方有学生获得了延期，因为他们证明彼此很相爱——而这次，有的时候，流言所说的学生跟黑尔舍姆完全没有关系。又一

次，我们同去诺福克的五个人对这些话题避而不谈：甚至克里茜和罗德尼也如此，当初他们是这种流言的核心人物，现在听到这些说辞却只是尴尬地转开眼神。

这种“诺福克效应”甚至也影响了我和汤米。我以为，等我们一回来，就会利用各种微小的机会，趁两人单独见面的时候，多交流他对于艺廊的那些理论。可是不知为什么——有他的原因，也有我的原因——我们始终没有这样做过。唯一一次例外，我想，就是鹅棚里那次，他给我看他那些想象中的动物的那天早上。

那间谷仓我们叫做鹅棚，位于农舍外侧边上，因为屋顶漏雨严重，门也彻底跟铰链断开，所以一直派不上用场，只有情侣们趁天气暖和的几个月份会躲到里面去。到那时，我养成了一个人散步的习惯，我想那次我也是在散步，正好路过鹅棚的时候，听到汤米喊我。我转身看到他光着脚，姿势笨拙地蹲在一个大水洼中间小块干燥的地面上，一只手扶着屋墙保持平衡。

“你的雨靴呢，汤米？”我问道。除了赤着脚之外，他身上穿的是平常的厚外衣和牛仔裤。

“我在，你知道，画画呢……”他笑着，举起了一个小小的黑色笔记本，就像凯佛斯整天带着走来走去的那种本子。距离那次诺福克之行已经过去了两个多月，可我一看到那个本子，就明白怎么回事了。可我还是等着他先开口：

“如果你愿意，凯丝，我就给你看看。”

他带我走进了鹅棚，跳过坑洼不平的地面。我原以为里面会很暗，然而阳光却从天窗直撒进来。墙边上堆着各种旧家具，都是过去一年左右扔出来的——破桌子，坏冰箱，诸如此类。汤米好像将一张两人位旧沙发拖到了地板正中，破沙发的填料迸出了黑塑表面，我猜我刚才路过的时候，他就坐在这里画画。他的长筒雨靴就倒在旁边，足球袜从靴口露出来。

汤米一屁股坐回到沙发上，抚摸着自已的大脚趾。“对不起，我的脚有点臭。我不知不觉就把鞋袜都脱掉了。我好像还划伤了。凯丝，你想看么？上周露丝看了，所以打那时候起我就一直想给你看看。除了露丝还没有人看过呢。看一眼吧，凯丝。”

这是我第一次见到他画的动物。在诺福克他跟我说起的时候，我脑海中浮现的是我们小时候画的那些画的缩小版。因此看到他画的那

些密集的细节，我不禁吃了一惊。实际上，要过一会儿才能看得出它们是些动物。乍看之下，他的画好像你打开收音机的后盖之后暴露出的景象：微小的凹槽，交织的肌腱，微缩的螺丝齿轮等，都凭着一种偏执，画得无比精准，只有当你把纸张拿远一点的时候，还能看出画的是某种狃狃，或是一只鸟。

“这是我画的第二本，”汤米说，“第一本绝对不能让任何人看到！我花了好长时间才摸到门道。”

现在他靠在沙发上，往一只脚上套袜子，尽量显得很随意，可我知道他在期待我的反应。尽管如此，我还是沉吟半晌，没有对他的画全力赞扬。也许部分是因为我担心，不论他画什么都会再次招来麻烦。然而我看到的这些画跟在黑尔舍姆任何一位导师教过的都截然不同，我不知道如何评判。最后我大致是这样说的：

“天哪，汤米，这得多耗神啊。在这种光线下你能看得这么清楚，画得这么细致，我太吃惊了。”然后，当我一页又一页地翻看时，也许是因为我还在思想斗争，到底怎么说才对，结果说出口的却是这样一句：“我很好奇如果夫人看到这些画会怎么说。”

我是带着玩笑的口吻说的，汤米窃笑以对，可这时气氛中有点悬而未决的意味凭空出现。我继续一页接一页地往下翻——笔记本画满了四分之一左右——我并没有抬头看他，心里想要是我没提起夫人就好了。终于，我听到他说：

“我想我得比这画得好很多她才能看得上。”

我拿不准这话是不是暗示我应该开口表扬他画得有多好，可是这次我是真心被眼前这些神奇动物的画面所深深地吸引了。它们金属质感，布满细节，然而每一只却同时具有某种甜美甚至脆弱的意味。我记得在诺福克他曾对我说，甚至在创作过程中，他就担心这些动物该如何自卫，或是怎么够到东西，如今看到它们，我也萌发了同样的担忧。即便如此，出于某种我自己都无法破解的缘故，我依然如鲠在喉，无法开口表达赞美。这时汤米说：

“总之，我画这些动物不光是因为这个。我就是喜欢画它们。我在想，凯丝，我到底该不该继续保密。我想，也许让别人知道我在这里干什么，并不会有什么坏处。汉娜现在还画水彩，很多老生也还在搞创作。我倒不是说要到处拿给人家看我的画。可是我想，也没道理说我就得一直保密。”

我终于鼓起勇气抬头望着他，真心诚意地说道：“汤米，的确没理由，完全没理由保密。画得很好。真的真的很好。事实上，如果你就是因为这才藏在这里，那还挺傻的。”

他什么也没答话，但脸上慢慢浮现出某种狡黠的笑容，仿佛在回味只有自己知道的笑话，于是我知道自己的话让他多么高兴。我想，那之后我们就没有再多说什么。不久之后他就穿上了雨靴，我们俩离开了鹅棚。正如我所说，那就是那年春天我和汤米唯一一次直接谈及他的理论。

然后就到了夏天，距离我们刚到这里已经过了一年。一批新的学生乘着小巴车到来，跟我们当时很像，然而没有一个人是来自黑尔舍姆。从某方面来说，这令人欣慰：我想大家都有点担心，新来一批黑尔舍姆的学生会让问题更复杂。但至少对我而言，没有黑尔舍姆的学生这一现象只是增添了我的感受，觉得黑尔舍姆已经成了远远的过往，那些从前将我们这些老朋友紧紧系在一起的纽带也变得松散。不仅仅是因为汉娜等人都在谈论要学习爱丽丝的榜样开始培训；其他人，比如劳拉，交了个不是黑尔舍姆的男朋友，现在我们都快忘了他们跟我们有什么关系。

还有就是露丝总是假装忘记黑尔舍姆的往事。诚然，基本上都是些鸡毛蒜皮的小事，但还是让我越来越恼火她。比如有一次，我、露丝和几个老生一起围坐在厨房的大桌子旁，吃了一顿漫长的早餐，然后一个老生开始说起深夜吃奶酪总是会害得人睡不好，我转头对露丝说了句什么，大意是：“你记不记得杰拉尔丁小姐也总是这么跟我们说的？”我只是随口打个岔，露丝需要的回应无非是笑一笑，或是点个头即可。然而她却满脸茫然地盯着我，好像她完全不知道我说的是什么样。我只好对老生们解释说：“是我们的一个导师，”这时露丝才皱着眉头点点头，仿佛她这一刻才记起来。

那次我放过了她。但还有一次我就没有，就是那天傍晚，我俩一起坐在废弃的公交站亭里。那时我生气了，因为当着老生装模作样是一回事，只有我们俩的时候，在严肃谈话的中间再来这套，那就是另外一回事了。我一时偏开了话题，说起在黑尔舍姆，去池塘要抄近路穿过种大黄的那块田，其实是禁止入内的。当她摆出一副困惑脸的时候，我放弃了自己本来要说的观点，冲口说道：“露丝，你不可能忘记的。别跟我来这套。”

也许如果我没有这样直接斥责她——也许如果我编个段子嘲她一句然后继续讲——她就会发现这事有多荒唐，一笑置之。但是因为我冲她发了火，露丝怒视着我说：

“这到底有什么重要？那片大黄田跟这一切有什么关系？你说到哪儿继续就是了。”

天色渐晚，夏日夕照正在消退，那老旧的汽车站经过了最近的暴风雨，透着潮湿和霉气。因此我没有兴致深究这到底有何重要。虽然我放下这话题，继续讨论我们之前的内容，但气氛已经变得冰冷，无法帮助我们解决手头的难题。

然而要想解释我们那天傍晚所谈的内容，我还需要再往前回溯一点。实际上，我得回溯好几个礼拜，回到那年夏天早一些的时候。我跟其中一个老生有了一段情，那男孩名叫莱尼，坦白讲，那主要是性的吸引。但是后来，他突然选择开始培训，然后就离开了。这让我有点不安，露丝处理得非常好，她小心照看着我，又当心不显得大惊小怪，如果我看起来不高兴，她总会帮我打起精神。她还总是帮我些小忙，比如给我做三明治，或是替我做卫生值日等。

后来，大约在莱尼离开两个星期之后的一天午夜，我们两人一起坐在我的阁楼房间里，捧着热茶聊天，露丝说的关于莱尼的段子逗得我哈哈大笑。他人其实不坏，但是我一旦开始跟露丝讲那些关于他的私密小事，就好像跟他有关的一切都滑稽可笑起来，于是我们就哈哈大笑不已。后来不知怎的露丝就伸出一个手指，挨个捋我沿着护壁板排开的一小排磁带。她一边笑着一边漫不经心地一盒盒捋过来，但是后来我突然心生怀疑，认为这可能并非偶然；也许她几天之前就发现了那盒磁带，可能还仔细检查以确定无误，而后耐心等待恰当的时机“发现”它。几年之后，我委婉试探着问露丝，可她似乎不明白我说的是什麼，因此可能是我错了。总之当时就是那样，每当我说出关于可怜的莱尼一丁点的小事，我们两人就哈哈大笑，笑个不停，突然之间就像有个插头被冷不丁拔下来一样。露丝侧躺在我的地毯上，在幽暗的灯光里侧眼观看那些磁带的盒脊，不知怎的朱迪·布里奇沃特的那盒就到了她的手里。过了不知道多久之后，她才说：

“你重新拿到这个有多久了？”

我告诉了她，尽量不动声色地说，那天她跟其他人一起走开了之后，我和汤米如何偶然找到的。她又继续翻看，然后说：

“所以是汤米替你找到的咯。”

“不，是我找到的。我先看到的。”

“你们俩谁都没跟我说。”她耸耸肩，“反正，就算你说过，我也没听到。”

“关于诺福克的传说是真的，”我说，“你知道，这是英格兰失落的一角。”

我脑海中确曾闪过一个念头，不知露丝会不会假装不记得这个典故，但她若有所思地点了点头。

“那次我该记得的，”她说，“可能那时候我的红围巾能找回来。”

我们都笑了起来，那个不安的瞬间似乎就这样过去了。但露丝再无多言，将磁带放回去的样子，让我觉得这事儿还没完。

我不知道接下来的谈话是否是露丝根据刚才的发现有意引导的，还是说我们无论如何会聊到这里，露丝只是后来才意识到可以这样利用我们的谈话内容。我们又回过头去继续谈论莱尼，尤其说了很多他的性行为，我们又一次笑得乐不可支。一度我觉得自己如释重负，她终于发现了那盒磁带，并没有大惊小怪，因此我并没有步步小心，其实我本可以更细心的。因为没过多久，我们就从笑话莱尼，转到了笑话汤米，刚开始一切都没什么恶意，好像我们都很宠爱他的样子。但后来，我们就开始笑话他的那些动物了。

正如我所说，我始终没能确定，到底露丝是否故意将话题扭转到了这里。说句公道话，我甚至不确定是不是她先提起那些动物的。可是一旦开了头，我就跟她一样乐不可支——某只动物看上去像穿着内裤，另外一只灵感肯定来自被压扁的刺猬。我想过程中我本该提一句说这些动物画得很好，他能把动物画到这种程度，水平真的很高。可我没有这么说。一部分是因为那盒磁带；另外，如果我坦白的话，也是因为我发现露丝没有严肃对待这些动物以及背后的一切含义，这让我感到很开心。那天晚上我们结束的时候，我觉得我们依然像以往那样亲密无间。她出门时摸了摸我的脸，说：“你总是兴致很高，这样真好，凯西。”

因此几天之后，在教堂墓地发生的事让我毫无防备。那年夏天露丝在距离农舍大约半英里的地方发现了一个很可爱的老教堂，教堂杂乱无章的庭院后面，有些古老的墓碑在草丛中倾斜倒伏。一切都被杂草覆盖，但那里真的很幽静，露丝总是到这里来看书，就在后墙栏杆

附近，一棵大柳树下的长椅上。刚开始我对她的阅读热情有点不以为然，去年夏天大家都在农舍外面围坐在草地上看书的样子还历历在目。尽管如此，如果我散步时朝那个方向走，就料定露丝很可能在那里，我会不知不觉穿过那座低矮的木门，沿着杂草丛生的小路穿过那些墓碑。那天下午，天气暖和，周围很静，我犹如梦游一般走上了这条小路，看着墓碑上一个一个名字，突然发现不只是露丝，汤米也在柳树下的长椅上。

露丝是坐在长椅上，而汤米却是一只脚踩在生锈的椅子扶手上站着，两人一边说话，他一边在做某种伸展运动。看起来他们没有在谈什么要紧事，于是我毫不犹豫地走上前去。也许从他们打招呼的态度上，我应该可以有所察觉，但我可以肯定并没有任何显著迹象。有个八卦我迫不及待想告诉他们——是关于新来的人之一——因此一开始只是我一个人巴拉巴拉说个不停，他们时而点头，时而冒出个古怪的问题。过了一阵我才觉察出气氛不对劲。即便这时，我停下来问他们：“我是不是打断了你们的正事？”我也还是有几分玩笑的口气。

可是这时，露丝却说：“汤米正在跟我讲他的宏大理论。他说他已经跟你讲过了。很久以前。可是现在，蒙他好心，也愿意分享给我知道呢。”

汤米叹了口气，刚想要说什么，露丝却语带讥讽地轻声说：“汤米宏大的艺廊理论！”

这时他们俩都望着我，仿佛现在由我主持局面，我得为接下来的事负责。

“这理论也不坏，”我说，“有可能是对的。我不知道。你觉得呢，露丝？”

“我可是费了番功夫才把这位甜蜜小哥的嘴巴撬开。人家可一点都不想让我知道呢，是不是，小甜甜？我不断追问他，搞这么多艺术创作的背后，到底有什么深意，这才套出来的。”

“我创作不光是为了这个，”汤米很不开心地说。他一只脚仍然踩在扶手上，继续做伸展运动。“我只是说，如果我对于艺廊的理论没错，那我总可以试试看，把这些动物交过去……”

“汤米，亲爱的，别当着好朋友的面犯傻。跟我说是一回事，但是当着我们亲爱的凯西，那就另当别论了。”

“我就不明白这有什么可笑，”汤米说，“这理论并不比其他人的差到哪里去。”

“别人不是认为你的理论傻，小甜甜。他们甚至可能觉得你说得很对，有几分道理。但是你想拿自己这些小动物去找夫人，靠这个翻盘……”露丝面带微笑，摇了摇头。

汤米没说话，继续做他的伸展。我很想替他申辩，很想说点什么能让他感觉好些，又不想让露丝火气更大。但就在这时，露丝发出了致命一击。那话当时就让人很难受，但我完全没想到，那天教堂的事会引起那么久远的反响。她是这样说的：

“不只是我，亲爱的，我们凯西也认为你画的动物完全是瞎胡闹。”

我的第一本能是要否认，然后一笑置之。然而露丝这话说得真的很有分量，我们三个人都太了解彼此，知道她话里有话。因此最终我选择了沉默，然而脑海中却在奋力搜索，回忆往事，终于怀着寒意和惊恐，想起了那天深夜，在我房间里我们的杯茶恳谈。这时露丝说：

“只要别人认为你画这些小动物是当做玩笑，那没问题。但是千万别让人发现你是认真的。求你了。”

汤米停下了伸展的动作，眼带疑问地望着我。突然之间他再次变得像孩童时那样，完全没了头绪，我能看出，他眼神背后某种黑暗危险的东西正在凝聚。

“你瞧，汤米，你得理解，”露丝继续说，“我和凯西再怎么笑话你都没有问题。因为我们是自己人。但是拜托你，千万别把其他人再搅和进来了。”

后来，我一次又一次地回想那个场景。我真该想出些话来说。我本可以否认她的说法，尽管汤米很可能会不相信我。要想如实地将事情解释清楚又会太过复杂。但我本可以做些什么。我可以质疑露丝的说法，说她扭曲了我们的谈话，说虽然我笑话过汤米，但却不是她所暗示的那种意思。我甚至可以走到汤米跟前，去拥抱他，就当露丝的面。这是我过了几年之后才想到的做法，也许当时并不真的存在这样的选择，因为我这样的个性，再加上我们三个人之间的那种关系。可是那样做也许就能解决问题了，而言语只会让我们在困境中越陷越深。

可我什么也没说，什么也没做。我猜部分原因是我完全没料到露丝会耍这样的诡计，当即被她一击倒地。我记得当时浑身疲惫不堪，面对眼前这纠缠不清的混乱充满无力之感。就好像你大脑已经很疲倦的时候还要你做数学题一样，你隐约知道答案，却连试一试的力气都没有。我打内心里已经放弃了。有个声音劝我：“随便吧。任由他往最坏处去想吧。由他去，由他去想吧。”我想，自己大概就是怀着这样投降的心情望着他。我的表情仿佛说：“没错，是这么回事，不然你想怎样？”我依然能够记起，汤米的面容犹在眼前，愤怒瞬时消散，换成了一种几乎是惊讶的表情，仿佛我是一只他无意中看到的罕见蝴蝶，停在篱笆上。

我倒不是担心自己会突然掉下眼泪、发脾气，或者做出类似的举动。我只是决定转身离开。就在当天晚些时候，我就意识到这是个错误的决定。我只能说，当时我最最怕他们两人中有一个会先跑掉，剩下我跟另外一个面面相觑。我不知道为什么，但当时我感觉，不可能有一个以上的人愤而离场，我想要确定走的那个人是我。于是我就转身大步流星地沿着来路走了回去，穿过那些墓碑，走向那扇木门，有几分钟我感觉仿佛自己获得了胜利；现在他们只剩下彼此互为陪伴，他们所遭受的一切完全是自己活该。

第十七章

正如我所说，只有在过了很久之后——我离开农舍很长时间之后——我才认识到我们在教堂墓地的这次小遭遇有多重要。我当时很沮丧，没错。但我当时无法相信，此事跟我们之前的那些争吵有任何不同。到那时为止，我们的生活都密切交织在一起，我从未想过，我们的关系会因为这样一件事而分崩离析。

但实际上，我想，将我们分开的态势已经十分强大，只需像这样的一件小事来完成任务。如果我们那时候能够理解这点——谁知道呢？——也许我们会更加用力地抓住彼此。

一方面，越来越多的学生离开了，去当护理员，我们这群黑尔舍姆的老人越来越强烈地感觉到要遵循这自然的进程。我们还有论文要完成，但大家都知道，如果我们选择开始培训，其实就无需完成论文。在我们刚刚到农舍的那段日子里，完不成论文这种想法，于我们简直是不可想象的。但是，随着黑尔舍姆渐退渐远，论文也就越来越显得不那么重要了。当时我有个想法——很可能我的想法没错——如果我们认为论文重要的念头可以渐渐消退，那么将我们黑尔舍姆的学生绑在一起的那种纽带，也同样会慢慢消失。因此有一段时间里，我尽力让大家保持阅读和做笔记的热情。但大家没有任何理由相信还能见到我们的导师，况且那么多学生都已经进入了新的生活，很快这些努力就显得毫无意义了。

总之，教堂墓地的那场谈话之后的那些天，我尽力将这事抛到脑后。我对露丝和汤米两人都依然如故，仿佛并没有发生过什么特别的事，他们也大致同样以对。但是现在总感觉有隔阂，而且不仅仅是我和他俩之间。虽然他们表面上还是一对情侣——两人分开的时候，还是会打一下手臂什么的——但我对他们太了解，看得出他们已经逐渐疏远了。

当然这一切让我感到难过，尤其是汤米画的动物。但事情没那么简单，我不能像从前那样径直走到他面前说对不起，然后把事情的真相解释给他听。早几年的话，甚至就在半年前，这样做可能还行得通。我和汤米可以好好谈谈，把话说透。然而不知怎的，到了那第二年的夏天，情况就不同了。也许是因为我跟莱尼的关系，我不知道。总之，跟汤米谈话变得不再像从前那样容易了。至少从表面看来，一

切跟从前没什么不同，但我们再也没有提起那些动物，以及教堂墓园里发生的事。

所以，这就是我和露丝在旧公交站台的谈话之前，所发生的一切。那次我因为她假装忘记了黑尔舍姆那块大黄田而大为光火。正如我所说的，如果不是发生在那样严肃的一场对话中间，很可能我不会那么生气。诚然，到那时我们已经聊过了很多实质内容，可是即便如此，哪怕我们当时只是在缓和气氛，闲聊几句，那也还是我们尽力解决分歧的过程，其中容不得一星半点的伪饰虚假之类。

事情是这样的。虽然我和汤米之间的交流有了一些问题，我和露丝之间没这样的问题——至少我是那样想的——我决定现在是时候跟她谈谈教堂墓地发生的事了。我们刚刚度过了夏天常见的雷电交加的一天，虽然很潮湿，还是被迫待在房间里。因此到傍晚天气放晴，出现粉色落日的时候，我跟露丝提议，两人出去呼吸点新鲜空气。我发现了一条陡峭的小路，沿着山谷的边缘一直上坡，就在连接大路的地方有个废弃的公交车站。公交车好多年前就停了，公交站牌早就被撤走了，车棚背后的墙上只剩下一个空框子，原先镶在玻璃框里的行车时刻表早已无处可寻。但是候车亭本身——那是个用心建造的木亭子，外侧敞开，朝着一片下坡的田野——依然树立着，连里面的长椅都安然无恙。于是我和露丝就在那里坐了下来，喘口气，望着椽子上的蜘蛛网，还有外面的夏日夕阳。然后我开口说，大意如此：

“你知道的，露丝，咱们得试试看解决问题，关于那天的事。”

我特意说得很和缓，而露丝也做出了回应。她立刻说这太傻了，我们三个人总是为了这种愚不可及的原因闹矛盾。她说起我们之间其他的争执，我们就此说笑了一番。可我真心不希望露丝就此将这件事按下再也不提，于是我用最不具有挑衅性的语气，继续说道：

“露丝，你知道，我认为，有时候你在恋爱中，有些事不如置身事外的人看得清楚。当然只是有时候。”

她点头。“很可能是这样。”

“我不想多事。但是有时候，只是最近，我发现汤米很不开心。你知道。因为你的某些说法或者做法。”

我担心露丝会生气，可她点了点头，叹了口气。“我觉得你说得对，”最终她说，“我也想了很多。”

“那么也许我不该提起这茬儿。我该知道你明白发生了什么。其实这不关我事。”

“但是这跟你有关联的，凯西。其实你是我们的一分子，所以始终跟你有关。你说得对。最近确实不太好。我明白你意思。那天的事，关于他画的动物。那样不好。我跟他道歉，说过对不起了。”

“我很高兴你们谈过了。我不知道你们有没有。”

露丝在椅子上她那一侧把一些发霉的木片剥下来，有那么一会儿她仿佛全心全意在忙这个活儿。过了一会儿她说：

“你瞧，凯西，很高兴我们谈到了汤米。我有事想告诉你，但我一直不知道应该怎么开口，或者什么时候说，真的，凯西，你保证不要太生我气。”

我望着她说：“只要不是还跟那些T恤衫有关就好。”

“不是，说真的。你保证不要太生气。因为我必须得告诉你。要是我再坚持不说，我就没办法原谅自己。”

“好吧。到底是什么？”

“凯西，这件事我想了很久。你又不笨，你看得出，也许我跟汤米，我们不可能永远在一起。那不是悲剧。我们曾经很般配。至于会不会未来也一直这样般配，那就谁也说不准了。现在说法很多，说情侣如果能证明，你知道的，证明他们真的般配，他们就可以获准推迟。得，你瞧，我想说的，凯西，是这样的。如果你猜想，比如说，如果我和汤米决定不在一起了，那是很自然的事。我们没打算分手，你别误会。可我觉得，至少你有这样的想法是很正常的。其实呢，凯西，你应该明白，汤米不是那样看你的。他真的真的很喜欢你，他觉得你很棒。可我知道他对待你不是那样，你知道，可以当女朋友那种。再说……”露丝停顿了一下，然后叹了口气，“再说，你知道汤米这个人。他有时候很挑剔。”

我瞪着她。“你什么意思？”

“你一定知道我的意思。汤米不喜欢那种女生……哎，你知道，跟这个人，又跟那个人的。他就是这样计较。对不起，凯西，但是瞒着你是不对的。”

我想了一想，然后说：“知道这些事总是好的。”

我感到露丝碰了碰我胳膊。“我就知道你不会想偏了。可是你得明白，他非常看重你。他真是这样。”

我想换个话题，但一时间我脑子一片空白。我猜露丝一定察觉出了这一点，因为她张开双臂，打了个哈欠，说道：

“要是我学会了开车，一定会带大家去荒野。比如达特摩尔荒原。我们三个，也许还有劳拉和汉娜。我很想看看沼泽什么的。”

接下来的几分钟里，我们说的都是些如果假设这样的旅行真的实现了，我们会做些什么。我问大家要住在哪里，露丝说我们可以借一个大帐篷。我指出像那样的地方风会很大，我们的帐篷夜里很容易就会被吹走了。都没有什么要紧话，但就是说到这里的时候，我记起了在黑尔舍姆的事。那时候我们还在小学部，大家跟杰拉尔丁小姐一起，在池塘边野餐。詹姆士·B被派去主楼取早先大家一起烤好的蛋糕，但是当他拿着蛋糕回来的时候，一阵狂风吹过，最上面的一层海绵蛋糕整个被吹走了，全落到了大黄田里的叶子上。露丝说这件事她只是隐约有点印象，为了挖掘她更多的记忆，我又说：

“问题是他惹了麻烦，因为这就证明他是从大黄田里走过来的。”

就在这时露丝望着我说：“为什么？那有什么问题？”

突然之间，她讲这话的方式显得如此虚伪，如果有旁观者的话，也会一眼看得穿她。我不耐烦地叹了口气，说道：

“露丝，少跟我来这套。你不可能忘掉。你知道大黄田是不许进入的。”

也许我说得有点太冲了。总之露丝没有让步。她仍然假装什么都不记得，于是我越发恼火。就在这时她说：

“这又有什么重要？那片大黄田跟这一切有什么关系？你说到哪儿继续就是了。”

我想，那之后我们或多或少又回到了原先的友好谈话之中，不久之后我们就沿着小路，在明暗交接的暮色中走回了农舍。但那种气氛始终没有变好，我们在黑谷仓前道别的时候，分手时并没有像往常一样，碰触彼此的手臂和肩膀。

那之后不久，我做了决定，一旦我做出了决定，就再也没有犹豫。一天早上我起床之后，就告诉凯佛斯，说我想开始培训，做护理

员。事情出于意料得容易。他正从院子里走过，雨靴上沾满泥巴，一边自言自语，手里拿着一根管子。我走上前去对他说，他只是看着我，好像我又是来麻烦他要木柴似的。然后他嘟囔了一句，说让我下午再去找他填表格。就这么简单。

当然，在那之后又等了一些时候，但事情已经开始运行了，突然我看待一切——农舍，里面的所有人——都换了不同的眼光。现在我成了要离开的人之一，很快大家都知道了。也许露丝以为我们会很多的时间一起谈论我的未来，也许她以为自己能有很大影响，决定我是否改变主意。但我可以跟她保持距离，同样也跟汤米保持距离。我们在农舍再也没有详细交谈过，没等明白过来，我已经在跟大家说再见了。

第三部

第十八章

总的来说，护理人员的工作很适合我。你甚至可以说，它带出了我最好的一面。但有些人天生不是这块料，对他们来说，整件事完全就是煎熬。可能他们开始的时候也很积极，但随之而来却是长时间与痛苦和忧虑相伴的生活。或迟或早，总会有捐献者撑不过来，哪怕是，比如说这只是第二次捐献，没人料到会有并发症。当捐献者就像这样毫无征兆地完结时，无论事后护士怎么说，或是收到一封写得多么好的信，说他们确信你已经能做的都做了，要继续好好工作云云，都不会让你感觉任何不同。至少一段时间里，你会意志消沉。我们中有些人很快能学会如何应对。但其他人——比如就像劳拉——他们始终学不会。

还有孤独。你成长的过程中，身边始终有人群围绕，你只懂得这样生活，突然之间你成了护理人员。一个钟头又一个钟头，你一个人开车驶过全国，一个又一个康复中心，一家又一家医院，匆匆在旅途中找地方过夜，没有人可以向他诉说你的担忧，也没有人跟你一同欢笑。偶尔你会碰上熟识的学生——一个护理员或是捐献者，你认出是从前的旧相识——可是永远都没时间。你总是来去匆匆，再不然就是筋疲力尽，没办法好好谈话。要不了多久，这些漫长的工作时间、旅行、断断续续的睡眠，都会侵入你的身心，变成你的一部分，从你的体态、你的眼神、你的言谈举止，人们都能看得出。

我并不是声称自己对这一切完全免疫，但是我已经学会了应对这些情况。可是有些护理员，他们全部的仪态都显得自暴自弃。你看得出其中很多人只是机械地应付，等待着某一天，有人告诉他们可以停下，去当捐献者吧。同样，很多人一步入医院就会明显地瑟缩，这也让我很受不了。他们不知道该如何对白大褂说话，他们没办法鼓起勇气替他们的捐献者说话。这就难怪出问题的时候他们会感觉受挫，充满自责。我尽量不让自己讨人嫌，但我也想出办法，在需要的时候让人能听得进我说的意思。情况不好的时候，当然我会难过，但至少我可以感觉自己已经尽了全力，往长远考虑。

就连那份孤独，我其实也已经渐渐开始喜欢上了。这倒不是说不期待到年底我做完这一切之后，能够多得到一些陪伴。可我真的很喜欢那种感觉，钻进我的小汽车，知道在接下来的几个钟头，我就只有长路、灰色的天空和自己的白日梦为伴。如果我在某个小镇上，有

几分钟空余时间，我很喜欢四处闲逛，看看商店的橱窗。在这里我的起居室里，我有四盏台灯，每个颜色都不相同，但款式一样——都有棱纹灯臂，可以任意折弯。所以我可以找间商店，看看橱窗里还有没有像这样的灯——倒未必买，只是跟我自家的比较一番。

有时候我太过沉浸在自己的世界里，如果意外碰到我认识的人，反而会吃一惊，需要一点时间调整。那天早上就是这样，我在服务区走过风口里的停车场看到劳拉在一辆停着的车里，坐驾驶位，眼神空洞地望着前面的车道。我离她还有一点距离，尽管我们自从农舍分开以来，已经七年没见，但刹那间我有种冲动想无视她，继续朝前走。我知道这反应很奇怪，因为她曾是我最近的朋友之一。正如我所说，可能部分原因在于我不喜欢被人撞破我的白日梦。但同时我猜想，当我看到劳拉像那样瘫倒在车里的时候，我立刻就看出，她已经变成了我刚刚描述过的那种护理员，一部分的我只是不想知道更多烦恼。

但是当然，我还是朝她走了过去。一阵冷风迎面吹过来，我朝她走去，她把车停得距离其他车辆很远。劳拉穿着一件没形没状的蓝色风雨衣，她的头发——比从前短了很多——都粘在额头上。我敲了敲她的车窗，她并没有惊诧，过了这么多年又见到我，她甚至没有一点意外的神色。就好像她一直坐在那里等待着，如果等的具体不是我，那么也是一个多少与我相似的旧日相识。现在我出现了，她第一个念头仿佛是说：“终于来了！”因为我看到她的肩膀动了一下，仿佛叹了口气，随后她毫不犹豫地立即探身为我打开了车门。

我们谈了大约二十分钟：直到不得不走了我才离开。谈的多半是她的事，她多么疲惫，某一个捐献者多难搞，她多么讨厌哪个护士或是医生。我期待着那个总是带着恶作剧的笑容，机灵话忍不住往外迸的旧日劳拉能够偶尔闪现，但却一点也没有。她讲话比从前更快了，虽然她好像见到我很高兴，但我有时候觉得，如果碰到的不是我，而是别的人，也没什么不同，只要她能够说说话就成。

也许我们俩都觉得提起旧日会带来一些危险，因为很长时间我们都避免提到从前。可是最终，我们却不由自主地谈起了露丝，几年前劳拉在一间诊所碰到过她，那时候露丝还在做护理员。我开始问她关于露丝的情况，但她总是不肯讲，最后我对她说：

“你瞧，你们肯定谈过几句什么吧。”

劳拉长叹一声。“你明白的，”她说，“我们俩都赶时间。”然后她又说：“反正，我们在农舍最后分手的时候已经算不得好朋友了。所以说也许我们并没有很高兴见到对方。”

“我不知道原来你也跟她闹翻了，”我说。

她耸耸肩。“没什么大不了。你记得当时她那副样子。你走了之后，要说她有变化，就只是更过分了。你知道的，对谁都颐指气使。所以我一直躲着她，仅此而已。我们从来没有吵过架什么的。这么说来你从那以后再没见过她？”

“没有。真奇怪。我一眼都没有瞥到过她。”

“没错，真奇怪。都以为我们这些人肯定经常能碰到呢。我看到过汉娜几次。还有迈克尔·H。”然后她又说：“我听到有传言，说露丝第一次捐献很不好。只是传言而已，但我听过不止一次。”

“我也听说过，”我说。

“可怜的露丝。”

有一会儿两人都没讲话。然后劳拉问：“这是真的吗，凯西？他们现在让你自己选捐献者了？”

她问的时候并没有像其他人有时候那样，带有指责的语气，所以我点头说道：“不是每次都行。但有几个捐献者我照顾得很好，所以没错，我时不时可以自己挑选护理对象。”

“如果你能自己选的话，”劳拉说，“那你干吗不给露丝当护理员呢？”

我耸了耸肩。“我想过的。但我说不准这是不是个好主意。”

劳拉看起来有点迷惑。“可你跟露丝，你们俩当初多好呀。”

“是呀，我想是的。但是跟你一样，劳拉。我和她到最后也算不上好朋友。”

“噢，可那是当初的事了。她过得可不好了。我听说她跟护理员也总是处不好。他们不得不给她换了好几个护理员。”

“一点不奇怪，真的，”我说，“你想得出吗？给露丝做护理员？”

劳拉笑了，有一秒钟她眼神中浮现出一丝生气，我以为她终于要开口讲俏皮话了。可是随后那闪光就熄灭了，她仍是坐在原地，满脸疲惫。

我们又谈了一小会儿，关于露丝的问题——具体就是某个女护士好像总是跟她过不去。后来到了我该走的时候，我伸手去开门，一面对她说下次再碰到我们要多聊聊。但这时两人谁都不曾提起的一件事却如鲠在喉，我想，两人都觉得这样就分手很不对劲。事实上，现在我很确信，在当时，两人脑海中想到的词句都几乎是完全一样的。然后她说：

“太奇怪了。想想看，一切都不在了。”

我从座位上转身，重新回头面对着她。“是啊，真的太奇怪了，”我说，“真不敢相信就再也没有了。”

“多奇怪啊，”劳拉说，“我以为现在我不会觉得有什么不同。然而并不是这么回事。”

“我明白你的意思。”

就是这番对话，终于谈到了黑尔舍姆关闭的事，才突然让我们重新贴近了彼此，我们自然地拥抱，与其说是相互安慰，不如说是用这个动作印证黑尔舍姆，证明它依然存在于我们两人的记忆中。然后我就只得匆匆跑到自己的车上去了。

我最初听到流言说黑尔舍姆关闭，是跟劳拉在停车场相遇的一年前。我跟捐献者或是护理员讲话的时候，他们总会无意中提起，仿佛认为我什么都应该知道。“你是黑尔舍姆出来的，对吧？那是不是真的？”诸如此类。后来有一天，我刚刚从萨福克的一家诊所出来，碰上了罗杰·C，他比我低一个年级，他有十足把握地告诉我说确实如此。黑尔舍姆随时可能关闭，还有计划将房屋和地产卖给一家连锁酒店。我记得他跟我说完之后我最初的反应。我说：“可是学生怎么办？”罗杰显然是以为我指的是还在校的学生，那些需要依靠导师的小不点儿，他面露难色，开始猜测学生将如何被转到全国各地的其他校舍，哪怕有些跟黑尔舍姆简直天差地别。可当然，我不是那个意思。我指的是我们，所有那些跟我一起长大，现在分散在全国各地的学生，那些护理员和捐献者，现在虽然风行雨散，却依然被我们共同的出处联结在一起。

就是当天夜里，我在小旅馆辗转难眠，几天前发生的一件事不停地浮上脑海。那时我在北威尔士一个海边小镇上。当天上午都在下大雨，但午饭之后雨停了，出了一会儿太阳。我正沿着海边漫长延伸的笔直小路，朝自己停车的地方走去。周围没有什么人，因此我可以看到面前潮湿的石板路毫无阻断地直线向前展开。后来过了一会一辆面包车开了过来，在我面前大约三十码开外停了下来，一个打扮成小丑的男人走了下来。他打开了车厢后盖，取出了一把充满氦气的气球，大约有一打。他花了一小会儿工夫弯着腰，一手拿着气球，另一手在车里翻找什么东西。我走近了之后，发现气球上绘有面容，还有耳朵的形状，看起来就像一个小族群，在主人上方的半空中蹦蹦跳跳，等待着他。

后来小丑直起身体，关上车厢，开始行走，他跟我方向一致，就在我前方几步远，一手拿着文件包，另一手牵着气球。海边的路一直延伸，又长又直，我在他身后走了仿佛有很久很久。有时候我觉得挺尴尬，甚至想小丑会不会回过头来对我说什么。但是我只能走这条路，也没别的办法。于是我们就这样继续往前走，我和小丑一前一后走在这条没人的小路上，上午下过雨，地上潮湿依旧。与此同时气球就一直碰碰撞撞，低头朝我展开笑容。我时不时可以看到那人的拳头，所有的气球线绳都在这里聚拢。我看得到它们牢牢绑在一起，系成紧紧一握。可是即便如此，我还是时常担心，会有一根线绳松脱，就会有一个气球飞起来，消失到阴云密布的天空中。

罗杰跟我说了那些话之后，那天晚上我躺在床上睡不着，那些气球不断浮现在我脑海中。我想到黑尔舍姆关闭了，这就好比有人走上前来，拿出一把剪子，就从那男人拳头上面气球的线绳刚刚开始打结的地方，一剪子剪下去。一旦如此，这些气球曾经同属一个族群的这种关联就完全不复存在了。当罗杰跟我讲黑尔舍姆的新闻时，他说了这么一句话，他说他以为黑尔舍姆关闭与否，对于我们这些人，应该没什么不同。从某些角度来看，也许他说得对。可是一想到那里不再一切如常，比如说，再没有杰拉尔丁小姐那样的人，带着小学部的小朋友在北操场活动，就令人很不放心。

在跟罗杰交谈之后的几个月里，我总是会想起这件事，关于黑尔舍姆的关闭，以及背后的含义。我猜，就是这时候我才渐渐想清楚，我一直以为有的是时间，很多事早晚可以做，可是现在我最好尽快行动，不然不如永远放弃算了。确切地说，我倒不是开始惊恐。但黑尔舍姆关闭的确让我们周围的一切发生了偏移。所以那天劳拉跟我说，不如我给露丝当护理员的时候，尽管我当时没答应，但她的话对我还

是有很深的影响。仿佛有一部分的我早已做出了决定，而劳拉的话只是揭开了一直覆盖在上面的一层面纱。

我第一次出现在多佛露丝的康复中心时——那是一座现代建筑，墙上铺着白瓷砖——我跟劳拉的对话才过去没几个星期。露丝的第一次捐献已经过了两个月——正如劳拉所说，情况很不好。当我走进她房间的时候，她正穿着睡裙坐在床边，对我报以大大的笑容。她站起来拥抱我，但几乎立刻就又坐了回去。她对我说我看上去比从前精神，说我的发型真的很适合我。我也说了些好话夸她，接下来的大约半小时里，我觉得我们都发自内心地为能够聚首感到高兴。我们谈到了各种事——黑尔舍姆、农舍、那以后我们都做了什么——感觉好像我们一直有讲不完的话。换句话说，这是个令人鼓舞的开端，比我斗胆预料的要好。

即便如此，那第一次重会，我们都没有谈到分手时的情形。也许，如果我们一开始就谈到这些话，事情会有不一样的发展，谁知道呢？实际上，我们只是避而不提此事，两人聊了一会儿之后，仿佛取得了共识，就假装这一切都没有发生过。

仅就第一次的会面而言，一切可能完全没有问题。但是，一旦我正式做了她的护理员，开始定期看望她之后，这种有什么不对劲的感觉变得越来越强烈。我形成了一种规律，每周去三四次，总是傍晚时分，带着矿泉水和一包她喜欢的饼干。这本该是件很开心的事，但刚开始的时候却完全不是这样。我们开始交谈，聊些无关的闲话，不知为了什么缘故，聊天就会骤然停下。不然就是两人虽然尽力将谈话继续下去，但谈得越久，就变得越不自然，彼此越戒备。

有一天下午，我沿着她住处的走廊走去看她，听到她的房门对面淋浴房里有人。我猜是露丝在里面，于是就自己进了她的房间，站在里面等她，一边透过她的窗户，俯瞰下方的屋顶。大约五分钟之后，她围着浴巾走了进来。说句公道话，她以为我要一个小时之后才会到，我猜任何人刚刚冲过澡，身上只裹着一条浴巾的时候，都会感觉有点脆弱缺乏保护。即便如此，她脸上闪过的那种警惕神情还是让我大为震惊。这里我得稍作解释。当然，她有点受惊我是预料到的。但问题是等她回过神来，认出是我之后，有一秒钟，也许更久的时间里，她仍然带着一种即便不是恐惧，也是真正警觉的眼神望着我。就好像她一直在等啊等，等待我把她怎么样，她以为终于是时候我要动手了。

刹那之后那种表情消失了，我们谈笑如常，但那个片刻让我们俩都深感受挫。这让我明白露丝并不信任我，就我所知，可能她自己直到那一刻也才真正意识到这一点。不管怎么说，那天之后，气氛愈发糟糕了。就好像我们将什么东西暴露了出来，但这样做并没有消除误会，却让我们比任何时候更加清楚地意识到两人之间发生过的一切。情况到了这样的地步，我进去看望她之前，先要在自己的车里坐一会儿，才能鼓起勇气去经受这番考验。某次探望的时候，我们在冰冷的沉默中为她做完了所有的检查，然后就坐在那里，继续沉默，我差点就要跟他们报告，说这样的安排不成功，我不应当继续给露丝当护理人员了。但是后来一切又变了，是因为那条船的缘故。

天晓得这些都是怎么回事。有时候是一个段子，有时候是某种谣言，从一家康复中心传到另一家，几天之内就传遍全国，突然之间，所有的捐献者都在说这件事儿。这次是关于一条船。我先是北威尔士两个我护理的捐献者那儿听说的。然后过了几天，露丝也开始跟我讲。仅仅为了我们终于找到话题可以聊，我就感到如释重负了，于是就鼓励她继续讲。

“隔壁楼层有个男孩儿，”她说，“他的护理人员真的去看过。他说就在离大路不远的地方，随便什么人，不用太费劲都可以去看。这条船就蹲在那里，搁浅在沼泽里。”

“船怎么到那儿去的？”我问。

“我怎么知道？不管船是谁的，也许他们想扔掉它。再不然就是什么时候发过大水，船漂过来，然后搁浅了。谁知道呢？据说是条旧渔船。有个小船舱，雷雨天的话两三个渔民可以挤在里面。”

那之后几次我去探望她的时候，她总是会再次提起那条船。于是有天下午，她开始告诉我说这家中心有一个捐献者被她的护理人员带去看了这条船，这时我对她说：

“你瞧，这地方也不是很近，你知道的。可能开车要一个小时，甚至一个半小时才能到。”

“我没有别的意思。我知道你还有别的捐献者要担心呢。”

“可你是想去看的。你是去看这条船的，对不对，露丝？”

“我想是的。我是想去。一天又一天地待在这个地方。没错，能去看看这样的东西挺好。”

“你是不是认为，”——我温柔地说，避免任何讥讽的意味——“如果我们开车大老远过去，是不是可以顺便看看汤米？反正他的康复中心就在停船的那条路下去不远的地方？”

开始露丝的脸上没有透露出任何表情。“我觉得可以考虑，”她说。随后她笑了，又说：“坦白讲，凯西，我一直讲这条船的事，不单是为了这个缘故。我是真的想去看看，看这条船。这段时间总在医院进进出出。然后又关在这里。对这种事比以往更在意了。但是没错。我的确是知道。我知道汤米就在金斯费尔德中心。”

“你确定想去见他吗？”

“对，”她毫不迟疑地说，眼神直视着我，“没错，我想。”然后她又平静地说：“我很久没见过这男孩儿了。自从农舍之后就没见过。”

这时，我们终于谈起了汤米。我们并没有聊得很深很多，我也没有获悉多少从前不知道的事。但我想两人都觉得还好，我们终于说到了他。露丝告诉我说，那年秋天她在我之后离开农舍的时候，她与汤米两个人已经相当疏远了。

“因为反正我们要去不同的地方开始培训，”她说，“正式分手很不值的。所以我们就还是待在一起，直到我离开。”

到这里为止，我们再没有对此多说些什么了。

至于出去看那条船的行程，我们第一次讨论的时候，我既没有同意也没有反对。但接下来的几周里，露丝反复提起，渐渐我们的计划变得越来越切实可行，直到最后，我通过一个熟人给汤米的护理员发了消息，说除非收到汤米的消息，叫我们不要去，不然我们就在下周某天下午出现在金斯费尔德。

第十九章

那时候我极少去金斯费尔德，所以我和露丝一路上只得多次查阅地图，最终还是迟到了几分钟。这家康复中心没有很清楚的标注，要不是因为后来我跟这地方有了千丝万缕的关系，这里也不是一个我会期望造访的地方。它地处偏僻，不便到达，可是当你到了之后，这里又不具备真正意义上的平静安详。你总能听到围墙外大路上的车声，总体上感觉他们好像始终没有全部完成这地方的改造工程。许多捐献者的房间轮椅无法出入，不然就是不通风，或者太漏风。浴室总是不够，仅有的几间很难保持清洁，冬天冷得要命，还总是距离捐献者的房间太远。换句话说，金斯费尔德跟露丝在多佛的康复中心简直有天壤之别，那边瓷砖耀目，双层玻璃，只需轻轻一拧窗户把手，就可以关得严丝合缝。

后来，当金斯费尔德变成了那个我熟悉而宝贵的地方之后，我在其中一座办公楼里看到了一张这地方改造之前的黑白照片，镶在镜框里。那时候这里还是一座普通家庭的度假营地。照片拍摄的时间可能是五十年代后期，或者六十年代早期，上面有个很大的长方形游泳池，许多快乐的人们——孩子和父母亲——在四处泼水，尽情玩乐。池边都是水泥，但人们架起了折叠椅和日光浴躺椅，还有很大的遮阳伞，将他们罩在阴凉里。我刚看到这画面的时候，花了一点时间才弄明白，我看到的就是现在捐献者们称为“广场”的地方——你开车到这座中心的时候，先要开到这里来。当然，现在游泳池已经填起来了，但轮廓依然在，而且在泳池一端还依然树立着——改造未完成的例证之一——跳水高台的金属架。直到我看到照片才明白那框架是什么，为什么会在那里，而今天，每次我看到它的时候，都会不由自主地想象出游泳者从顶部一跃而下，却只能撞在水泥地面上的画面。

要不是画面上背景中分布在游泳池周围三面的那些碉堡似的白色两层建筑，我本来没那么容易能辨认出照片里广场的位置。这些想必就是当年那些家庭的度假公寓，虽然我猜想房屋内部一定改变很大，但外立面基本保持原样。我想，就某些方面而言，今天的广场跟当初的游泳池也没有那么大的不同。这里是当地的社交中心，捐献者们从房间里出来透透气、聊聊天的地方。广场周围有几个木制野餐长椅，但——尤其是阳光太热，或者下雨的时候——捐献者们还是喜欢到远处那头老旧跳水台架子后面，在娱乐室向外延伸的平屋顶下面聚会。

坐在我身边的露丝似乎开始慌了神。“我们怎么办？”她说，“我们下车吗？不，不。我们不要下车。别动，别动。”

我不知道自己本来打算怎么做，但当露丝这样说的时候，不知为何，我想也没想就下了车。露丝仍是坐在原地，所以当汤米朝我们走来的时候，他的目光就落在了我身上，也因为如此，他首先拥抱的是我。我能闻到他身上隐约有某种医药的气息，但我不确定是什么。随后，尽管我们彼此什么都没有说，却都感到露丝在车里看着我们，于是分开了。

车窗玻璃上映出很大一片天空的倒影，所以我无法看清她的模样，但在我印象中，露丝的表情很严肃，几乎凝固一般，仿佛我和汤米是她在看的剧中人物。她的表情有些古怪，让我感到不自在。然后汤米绕过我，到了车旁。他打开后门，坐到了后排座椅上，这时轮到我来观察他们在车里交谈，礼貌地轻吻脸颊。

广场那边，屋檐下的捐献者们也在观看，虽然我觉得他们并没有恶意，突然间却很想尽快离开这里。但我尽量让自己放慢脚步走回车上，好让汤米和露丝多一点时间单独相处。

我们先是开车经过了几条狭窄曲折的小路，然后豁然开朗，进入了千篇一律的乡间大道，行驶在几乎没有车辆的路上。关于我们去看搁浅渔船的那次旅行，我所记得的就是，很长时间的阴霾之后，终于有了一点微弱的阳光穿透了灰暗的天色，每次当我转眼去看坐在旁边的露丝时，她脸上总是浮现出淡淡的平静的微笑。至于我们都谈了什么，反正我记得我们都表现得仿佛大家都常常见面一般，好像没必要聊别的，只是眼前这点事儿就够我们说的。我问汤米他是不是已经去看过那条船了，他说没有。他曾经有几次机会，但都没去成。

“倒不是我不想去，”他说着，从后座朝前倾身，“我懒得费那个心。有一次我打算去的，跟另外两个人，还有他们的护理员，但后来我有点出血，就没办法再去。那是很久以前的事了。现在我早没有这种问题了。”

又过了一会儿，我们继续穿行在空旷的乡间，露丝从座位上向右转身，直到她面朝汤米，就那样一直看着他。她脸上依然带着淡淡的微笑，但什么也没说，我从后视镜中看到汤米本能地看起来很不自在。他不断地朝旁边的窗户往外看，然后转眼看看她，然后再转眼看看窗外。过了一会儿，露丝还是没有将视线从他身上转开，她开始聊别人的八卦轶事，她那个康复中心的某个捐献者，一个我们从未听说过的人，期间她始终都在望着汤米，淡淡的笑容也始终没有离开过脸庞。也许因为她的这些八卦让我觉得无聊，也许因为我想帮汤米解围，大约一分钟之后，我打断了她，我说：

“好啦，好啦，我们用不着知道关于她的所有事。”

我说这话完全没有恶意，说真的也没有任何其他意思。但是还没等露丝住嘴，甚至我话音还没落的时候，就听汤米突然爆发出一阵大笑，爆炸般的笑声，我以前从未听到他发出这样的声音。然后他说：

“我正想说同样的话。我刚刚有点走神了。”

我的眼睛望着路面，因此拿不准他是冲我说的还是露丝。无论如何，露丝不再说了，她慢慢地转回身体，直到重新面朝前方。她看起来并没有特别沮丧，但那笑容不见了，她眼神飘得很远，看着我们前方某处的天空。可我得坦白讲：那一刻我根本没想到露丝。我的心轻轻跳了一拍，因为这一来，这微不足道的表示赞同的一笑，感觉仿佛这么多年之后，我和汤米再次走到了一起。

从金斯费尔德出来之后过了大约二十分钟，我找到了需要拐弯的路口。我们沿着一条被树篱遮蔽的蜿蜒窄路朝前开，然后在一丛西克莫槭树旁停了下来。我在前面带路，走到树林边，但这时，我们面前有三条小路朝着林间不同方向，我只好停下来研究随身带的指路说明。当我站在那里，努力辨认那人手写的字迹时，突然意识到露丝和汤米站在我身边，两人都没说话，只是像孩子一样，等着我来告诉他们该往哪边走。

我们走进了树林，虽然路还算好走，但我注意到露丝呼吸越来越沉重了。相比之下，汤米却看不出任何难受的迹象，只是脚步隐约有点跛。后来我们走到了一面铁丝网栅栏前，栅栏倾斜生锈，网子被掀开，东倒西歪。露丝一看到，立刻就停下了脚步。

“哎呀，不行，”她焦虑地说。随后又朝我转过身。“你没说过会有这个。你没说过我们得过铁丝网呀！”

“不难走的，”我说，“我们可以从下面过。只要互相帮忙撑一下铁丝就行。”

可是露丝看起来真的很难过，她动也没动。就在这时，当她站在那里，肩膀随着呼吸上下起伏的时候，汤米仿佛才第一次发现她原来这么虚弱。也许他之前也留意过，但不愿意接受这一点。可是现在他瞪着露丝认真看了几秒钟。接下来发生的——当然我无法确知就是如此——就是我们俩，我和汤米，两人都想起了刚刚车里发生的事，我们多少算是合伙对抗她了。两人几乎是本能地同时向她走去。我搀住她一只胳膊，汤米从另一侧扶住她的肘部，我们开始慢慢地引着她朝栅栏走去。

只有当我需要自己先过栅栏那边的时候，才放开了露丝。然后我就尽力将铁丝网举高，我和汤米共同帮她走了过来。最终这对她也没有那么难：这更多是个信心的问题，因为我们有我们扶助，她似乎抛下了对栅栏的恐惧。到了另一侧，她还出了把力，跟我一起把铁丝网举高，让汤米过来。他过得很轻松，露丝对他说：

“原来只要这样弯下身就可以。这种事我有时候真是不在行。”

汤米看起来有点怯意，我疑心他是不是因为刚才的事不好意思，还是又想起了我们俩在车上合伙对付露丝的事。他朝我们面前的树点了点头，说道：

“我猜是往这个方向。对不对，凯丝？”

我瞥了一眼那张纸，再次开始头前带路。越往树林深处走越是幽暗，地面也越来越潮湿。

“希望我们不要迷路，”我听到露丝笑着对汤米说，但我看到前面不远处就有一片空地。经过片刻回味，我终于明白，为什么刚才车里发生的事让我这么耿耿于怀。不单单是因为我们合伙对付露丝：关键在于她的反应。从前的时候，根本无法想象她会听凭这样的事发生，而不予以反击。想明白这点之后，我在小径上停下了脚步，等着露丝和汤米跟上来，然后伸出胳膊环住了露丝的肩膀。

这并不会显得太煽情；这只是护理员的日常工作，因为现在她的脚步真的有些不稳，我疑心是不是我先前对她虚弱的程度严重缺乏预料。她的呼吸越来越沉重，我们走在一起的时候，她脚步趑趄，时不时靠到我身上。但随后我们就走出了树林，到了空地上，我们看得到那条船了。

实际上，我们并不是真的走到了一片空地：而是我们刚刚穿过的那片树木稀疏的林地在这里到了尽头，我们面前触目所及都是一片沼泽地。天空苍白辽阔，一片一片倒映在沼泽中嵌着的水洼里。不久之前，树木想必还曾经延伸得更远，因为时不时还可以看到泥土中冒出来幽灵一般的枯树干，大多数都在离地几英尺高的地方断掉了。这些枯死的树干再远处，大约六十码开外，就见那条船，映着微弱的阳光，陷在沼泽里。

“哎呀，跟我朋友说的一样，”露丝说，“真的很美。”

我们周遭一片寂静，当我们朝那条船走近的时候，能听到脚下鞋子在吱嘎作响。没过多久我就留意到踩在草丛上的脚开始下陷，于是喊道：“好了，我们只能走到这里了。”

另外两个人在我身后，都没有表示反对，当我回头朝后看时，见汤米再次挽着露丝的胳膊。但显然这只是为了扶住她。我迈着大步走到距离最近的枯树干旁，这里的泥土比较结实，然后靠着树干平衡身体。汤米和露丝也学我的样子走到另一棵树旁，那棵树都空了，比我这棵更枯瘦，在我后方左边。他们分别靠在树的两边，似乎安顿下来。然后我们望着搁浅的船只。现在我看得到船上漆都剥落了，小船舱的木板框架都开裂了。船舱原来是漆成天蓝色的，但现在映着天空看起来几乎是白色的。

“不知道船是怎么到这里来的，”我说。我提高了声音，想让其他人听到我说的话，我以为还会有回音。可是发出的声音非常切近，令人意外，仿佛我是在一个铺着地毯的房间里。

这时我听到汤米在我身后说：“也许现在黑尔舍姆就是这样。你们觉得呢？”

“为什么黑尔舍姆会是这样？”露丝听起来是真心感到不解，“就因为关门了也不会变成沼泽地啊。”

“我想不会。我没动脑子。但我现在总是觉得黑尔舍姆变成了这样。完全没逻辑。实际上，这跟我脑子里的画面很相像。只不过那里没有船，当然了。那倒不是太坏，如果变成现在这样的话。”

“这倒滑稽，”露丝说，“因为有一天早上我做了个梦。我梦见我在楼上十四号教室。我知道整个校园都被关闭了，可我就在十四号教室，我朝窗外看，看到外面发大水了。就像一大片湖水一样。我能看到各种垃圾从我窗户下面漂过去，空的饮料盒什么的。但我完全没

有惊恐什么的感觉。一切静好，就像现在这样。我知道我没有任何危险，变成那样只是因为学校关门了。”

“你知道，”汤米说，“梅格·B在我们中心待过一段时间。她现在走了，去北方什么地方做第三次捐献。我再没听说过她的消息。你们俩有听过吗？”

我摇了摇头，因为没有听到露丝说话，于是回头去看她。开始我还以为她仍然在望着那条船，但后来我发现，她是凝望着远处空中一架慢慢爬升的飞机留下的尾迹云。然后她说：

“告诉你们一件我听说的吧。我听说了克里茜的消息。我听说她在第二次捐献中就完了。”

“我也听到过，”汤米说，“想必这是真的。我听到的跟你一模一样。太遗憾了。才第二次而已。很幸运我没发生这样的事。”

“我觉得这种事发生得肯定很多，只是他们不告诉我们，”露丝说，“我那边的护理员。她可能知道真相。但她不肯说。”

“这里头没有什么大阴谋，”我说着，转回身朝向那条船，“有时会发生这种事。克里茜的事很令人难过。但这种事并不常见。现在他们真的都很小心。”

“我敢肯定这种事发生的远远多于他们透露给我们的数量，”露丝再次说道，“每次捐献之间他们总是把我们搬来搬去，原因之一就是于此。”

“我碰到过罗德尼一次，”我说，“就在克里茜完结之后没多久。我在北威尔士的一家诊所里碰到他的。他还不错。”

“但我敢肯定克里茜的事让他伤透了心。”露丝说完，又对汤米说：“他们半点都不会告诉你的，明白吗？”

“实际上，”我说，“他没有太难过。很明显他很伤心。但他应付得还算可以。再说他们已经两三年没见面了。他说他认为克里茜不会太在意。我认为他说的应该有道理。”

“凭什么他说的就有道理？”露丝说，“他怎么可能知道克里茜的感受？知道她想要什么？躺在台子上，拼命挣扎着活下去的又不是他。他怎么会知道？”

这迸发的怒火更像是旧日的露丝，闻言我不禁再次朝她转过身去。也许只是她眼中满含怒火，但她回望我的目光带有一种严厉苛责

的表情。

“这不可能好受，”汤米说，“第二次捐献人就完了。不可能好受。”

“我就不相信罗德尼对此感觉还可以，”露丝说，“你只是跟他聊了几分钟而已。几分钟你能知道什么？”

“没错，”汤米说，“但是正如凯丝说的，他们已经分手了……”

“那也不会有任何不同，”露丝打断了他的话，“一定程度上来看，那样反而更难受。”

“我见过许多人处在罗德尼这种情况，”我说，“他们的确能够接受现实。”

“你怎么会知道？”露丝说，“你怎么可能知道？你才是个护理员。”

“我作为护理员见过很多人。真的很多。”

“她不会懂的，对不对，汤米？她不知道到底是怎么回事。”

有一会儿我们俩都望着汤米，可他仍是凝视着那条船。后来他说：

“我所在的中心有个人。他总是担心自己撑不过第二次捐献。总是说他骨子里都能感觉到。但后来证明根本没事。他刚刚做完第三次捐献，现在一点事都没有了。”他抬起一只手遮住眼睛，“我做护理员不大行。连开车都没学会。我认为正因为如此我的通知才来得这么快。我知道按道理不是这么操作，但我相信其实就是这么回事。不过其实我也不在乎。我作为捐献者很不错，但我是个很差劲的护理员。”

大家沉默了一会儿。然后露丝开口讲话了，她的语气这次平静了许多：

“我觉得我做护理员还算称职。但五年我觉得也足够了。我跟你一样，汤米。我成为捐献者的时候已经基本上做好了准备。觉得挺好。毕竟我们就是应该干这个的，对不对？”

我拿不准她是否期望我对这话做出回应。她讲的没有任何明显的导向意思，很有可能这只是习惯成自然随口一说——你总是听到捐献

者们互相之间说这种话。我再次转身去看他们，见汤米依然举着手遮住眼睛。

“可惜我们不能离船再近一点，”他说，“等到再干燥点的天气，也许我们可以再回来。”

“来看过这条船我已经很高兴了，”露丝轻柔地说，“真的很好。可是我觉得我想回去了。风还挺冷的。”

“至少我们现在看过了，”汤米说。

走回车子的路上，我们比来时更加随意地聊了起来。露丝和汤米在比较他们的康复中心——食物如何，毛巾，诸如此类——我总是参与进来，因为他们不断地问我其他康复中心条件如何，或者这种那种现象是否正常。露丝现在脚步稳得多了，等我们走到栅栏那边的时候，我举着铁丝网，她几乎没犹豫就过去了。

我们上了车，还是汤米坐后面，有一会儿我们感觉都很好。回想起来，也许有点欲言又止有口难言的气氛，但有可能我现在这么想只是因为后来发生的事。

开始的时候，有点像先前情形的重复。我们重又回到了空旷的长路上，露丝说起了我们先前路过的一幅大海报。现在我都不记得那张海报什么样了，只不过是路边树立的那种大广告画。她几乎是自言自语地说：“我的天呐，看那个。你以为他们至少得试图搞点新花样吧。”

但是汤米在后面说：“其实我还蛮喜欢那张画的。报纸上也登过。我觉得有点意思。”

也许我想再次得到那种感受，我和汤米再次团结在一起的感觉。因为虽然说走去看船的那段路本身没什么，可我开始觉得，除了一开始我们俩的拥抱，以及早先在车里的那一刻，此外我和汤米没有任何真正的交流。总之，我不由得开口道：

“其实我也蛮喜欢的。制作这种海报要比你想象得更费劲。”

“没错，”汤米说，“有人跟我说要花很多个礼拜才能把这样一幅画面弄好。甚至好几个月。人们甚至要彻夜开工搞这个，一遍又一遍，直到满意为止。”

“开车路过的时候随口批评一下，”我说，“倒是很容易。”

“世界上最容易的事，”汤米说。

露丝没说话，眼睛盯着我们前方空旷的路面。然后我说：

“既然说到海报。出来的时候我看到过一幅。很快又要出现了。这次是在我们这一侧。现在随时可能会出现。”

“关于什么的？”汤米问。

“你会看到的。很快就会出现。”

我瞥了一眼身旁的露丝。她的眼神里没有愤怒，只是有些戒备。我想甚至有几分希望，希望海报出现的时候，会是幅无伤大雅的画面——让我们联想到黑尔舍姆。我从她脸上读出了所有这些念头，她脸上表情飘忽不定，莫衷一是。期间目光始终直视前方。

我减慢了车速，靠边，然后一脚油门开上了长着杂草很不平整的路边。

“我们为什么停下了，凯丝？”汤米问。

“因为从这里看得最清楚。要是再近我们就得使劲抬头才能看清楚了。”

我听到汤米在后面挪动身体试图看得更清楚。露丝没有动，我甚至拿不准她到底有没有在看海报。

“好吧，并不是完全一样，”过了一会，我说，“但是这幅海报让我想起从前。开放式办公室，优雅、面带微笑的人们。”

露丝一声不吭，但汤米从后面说道：“我明白了。你是说，就像我们那次去过的地方。”

“不止如此，”我说，“跟那张广告很像。我们在地上发现的。你记得吗，露丝？”

“我记不太清楚了，”她平静地说。

“哎，得了吧。你肯定记得。我们在一条小路上发现的，一本杂志上。一个水洼旁边。你深受吸引。别假装你不记得了。”

“我想我记得，”现在露丝话音十分微弱，如同耳语。一辆大货车经过，震得我们的小车摇晃一阵，几秒钟里遮挡了我们看海报的视线。露丝低垂了头，仿佛希望货车将这幅画面永远带走，当我们再次清楚看到画面的时候，她也没有抬起目光。

“很好笑呢，”我说，“现在想起来哦。记不记得你总是怎么说的？说有一天你也要在像这样的办公室里上班？”

“哦，对了，所以那天我们才会去的，”汤米说，仿佛他这一秒才记起来，“我们去诺福克的那次。我们是去找你可能的原型人物。她在一间办公室工作。”

“你有时会不会想，”我对露丝说，“应该继续查下去的？说来你可能是第一个。我们所有人听说过的第一个做这种事的人。但你本来可能做得到的。你会不会有时候也想，要是努力尝试过，会怎么样？”

“我怎么去尝试？”露丝的声音低得几乎听不到了，“这只是我曾经的梦想。仅此而已。”

“但是如果你至少做过调查的话。你怎么知道就不行？也许他们会批准呢。”

“没错，露丝，”汤米说，“也许你至少应该去试试。你絮絮叨叨说过那么多。我觉得凯丝说得有道理。”

“我没有说很多，汤米。至少我不记得絮絮叨叨过。”

“可是汤米说的没错。你至少应该去试试。那样的话，什么时候你看到像那样的海报，就会记起那是你曾经想要的生活，至少你曾经尝试调查过……”

“我怎么可能去调查？”露丝的话音第一次变得强硬，但随后她却叹了口气，又垂下了眼帘。后来汤米说：

“你总是说得好像自己应该享受特殊待遇似的。反正在你看来，你可能能做到。你至少应该去申请一下。”

“那好，”露丝说，“你们说我应该去调查一下是不是可行。怎么查？我去哪里查？根本没有渠道可以去查这事。”

“可是汤米说得对，”我说，“如果你真的相信自己不一般，你至少应该去申请。你应该去找夫人申请。”

我这话一出口——一提到夫人——我就意识到自己犯了错。露丝抬头看着我，我看到她脸上有类似胜利的表情闪过。有时你在电影里会看到这种镜头，一个人举枪对着另外一个，拿枪的人逼着另外那个人做各种各样的事。突然之间出现了一个错误，或是扭打起来，枪就到了第二个人手里。于是这第二个人就朝第一个人得意地笑，露出一

种“我竟会运气这么好，简直难以置信”的表情，预示着他的各种报复行动。露丝就是这样突然地望着我，虽然我没有提到延期的事，但我的确提到了夫人，我知道这下我们一起跌进了某个新的领域。

露丝看出我的惊恐，在座位上转了个身面朝着我。因此我做好准备承受她的打击；同时忙不迭地心想不论她说出什么话来对付我，现在情况不同了，她不能像从前那样为所欲为。我正在心里想着这些，所以她说出来的话让我毫无准备。

“凯西，”她说，“我真的永远不能指望你会原谅我。我甚至觉得你凭什么会原谅我。但我还是要请求你原谅。”

她说得我震惊不已，不知如何作答，最后很无力地反问道：“原谅你什么？”

“原谅我什么？好吧，首先第一件，关于你的性冲动，我一直都在撒谎。那时候你跟我说有时候冲动太强烈，你随便跟谁都可以做。”

坐后排的汤米再次动了动身体，可现在露丝身体前倾，直视着我，仿佛这一刻汤米根本没有在车上跟我们一起。

“我知道这事让你很担心，”她说，“我本该如实告诉你的。我本该跟你说我也是一样，跟你描述的一模一样。我知道，这些你现在都明白了。我本该告诉你，虽然当时我跟汤米在一起，但还是控制不住有时候要跟其他人做。我们在农舍的时候我至少还跟另外三个人做过。”

她说这些的时候，仍然没有朝汤米的方向看。但她并非故意无视汤米的存在，而是强烈地专注于把她的意思表达给我，对其他的一切都视而不见。

“有几次我差点就告诉你了，”她接着说，“可我没有。即便是当时，我也知道总有一天你会明白过来，为此责怪我。可我还是什么都没对你说。这件事你没有理由原谅我，但我现在想求你，因为……”她突然停了下来。

“因为什么？”我问道。

她笑了，说道：“不为什么。我希望你能原谅我，但我不指望你会。总之，这才连一半都没有，实际上，连一丁点都算不上。最主要

的是，我把你跟汤米分开了。”她的话音再次降低，几乎成了耳语。
“那是我干过最坏的事。”

她稍微转身，第一次将汤米纳入了视线之中。但随即，她立刻重新将视线集中在我一个人身上，但感觉她现在是对我们两个人说话了。

“那是我干过最坏的事。”她又说了一遍，“这件事我根本不能求你原谅我。上帝啊，这些话我自己在心里说过太多遍了。真不敢相信我真的说出来了。应该是你们俩在一起。我不是假装过去始终没看清楚这点。我当然知道，打从记事开始我就看得清清楚楚。可我逼你们分开。我不是求你们两个原谅我这件事。现在我不是为了这个。我想要你们改正这个错误。改正我对你们做错的事。”

“你什么意思，露丝？”汤米问道，“你什么意思，怎么改正？”他的话音温和，充满了孩子似的好奇心，我想就是这话弄得我哭泣起来。

“凯西，你听我说，”露丝说，“你和汤米。你们得去试着申请延期。如果是你们俩，一定会有机会的。真的有胜算。”

她伸出一只手，放在我肩膀上，但我粗暴地甩开了她，透过泪水怒视着她。

“现在说这些太迟了。真的太迟了。”

“还不晚，凯西。你听着。还没有太迟。就算是汤米已经做了两次捐献，可是谁规定这样就不可以了？”

“现在说这些太迟了。”我又开始哭泣，“有这种想法就很蠢。跟想在上面这种办公室里上班一样蠢。这些都离我们太远太远了。”

露丝大摇其头。“还不晚。汤米，你跟她说。”

我靠在方向盘上，根本看不到汤米。他发出了一种迷惑的哼哼声，却什么话也没说出来。

“听着，”露丝说，“你们俩都听我说。我想要咱们一起出这趟门，就是因为我想说我刚才说的这些话。但我想做这件事还因为我想给你们件东西。”她伸手在外衣口袋里翻找，很快拿出了一张皱巴巴的纸条。“汤米，你最好收好。拿好。等凯西改主意的时候，你就拿出来。”

汤米向前探身，蹭到我们两个座位中间，接过了那张纸。“谢谢你，露丝，”他说，仿佛她递过来的是块巧克力。过了几秒钟之后，他说：“这是什么？我看不懂。”

“这是夫人的地址。就像你们刚刚对我说的这样。你们至少得去尝试一下。”

“你怎么弄到的？”汤米问。

“不容易的。我花了很长时间，也冒了些风险。但我最终弄到了手，我是为你们俩弄来的。现在该你们去找她了，试试看。”

这时我已经停止了哭泣，发动了引擎。“够了，”我说，“我们得送汤米回去了。然后我们自己还得回去。”

“但你们要考虑这件事，你们俩都要，好不好？”

“我现在只想回去，”我说。

“汤米，你来保管好这个地址，可以吗？万一凯西回心转意。”

“我来收好，”汤米说。然后他比前次更为郑重地又说了一次，“谢谢你，露丝。”

“我们看过那条船了，”我说，“但现在我们得回去了。可能要两个钟头才能回到多佛。”

我再次开车上路，在我的记忆中，在回金斯费尔德的行程中，我们没有再多说什么。我们来到广场的时候，那边屋檐下依然聚集着一小群捐献者。我先将车调头，然后才放汤米下车。我们俩谁都没有拥抱或亲吻他，但当他朝那些捐献者同伴走过去的时候，停了一下，朝我们粲然一笑，挥了挥手。

这可能有点奇怪，但在回露丝康复中心的路途中，我们也没有认真讨论过刚刚发生的事。部分可能是因为露丝筋疲力尽——刚才在路边的那段对话似乎耗尽了她的气力。但同时，我想两人都觉得一天里严肃谈话已经够多了，若还要多说，可能话题就要走偏了。我不知道开车回家的路上，露丝感觉如何，至于我，一旦所有那些剧烈的情感平复下去之后，随着夜幕渐渐笼上来，沿途两边的路灯一一点亮，我就感觉没事了。就好像某种悬在我头顶很久的东西终于消失不见了，虽然事情远未理清，但现在的感觉就好像至少是开了一扇门，通往更美好的地方。我倒不是说自己情绪高昂或者怎么样。任何涉及我们三

个人关系的事都很微妙，我觉得很紧张，但总的来说这种紧张并不坏。

我们甚至没有多谈汤米，只是说他看起来不错，不知道他体重增加了多少。随后大段的行程中我们都默默地看着前方的路面。

只有到了几天之后，我才明白这次旅行带来了怎样的变化。我和露丝之间所有那些防备、怀疑都烟消云散了，我们似乎记起了对彼此都是怎样重要的存在。这就是新的开始，那个新的阶段，随着夏天到来，露丝的健康至少是平稳恢复，我总是傍晚时分带着饼干和矿泉水来看她，我们并肩坐在她的窗边，看着夕阳从所有屋顶上落下去，两人谈起黑尔舍姆、农舍，想到什么聊什么。现在当我想起露丝的时候，当然我很难过她不在了；但能有最后那段时光，我真的很感恩。

即便如此，有一个话题我们始终也没有好好讨论过，就是关于那天在路边她对我说的这些话。只不过偶尔露丝会将话题隐约带到这里。她会这样说：

“你有没有再想过去给汤米当护理员的事？你知道的，只要你想，就能办成这件事。”

很快，这个说法——我去给汤米做护理员——就变成了整件事的代表。我就跟她说我在考虑，说这事没那么简单，哪怕是我，也没那么容易办得成。然后我们通常就把这话题搁下了。可我能看得出，露丝从来没有真正放弃过这个念头，正因为如此，我最后一次见到她的时候，虽然她没办法讲话，我还是明白这就是她想对我说的话。

那是她第二次捐献之后的第三天凌晨时分，他们终于放我进去看她。她一个人在房间里，看起来他们能做的都已经为她做了。事到如今，我根据医生、协调员和护士的举止，明显看出他们都认为她撑不下去了。这时，我看了一眼昏暗的灯光下躺在医院治疗床上的她，立刻就辨认出她脸上的那种表情，这表情我在捐献者脸上看到太多次了。就好像她命令自己的眼睛去看透自己，才可以更好地巡视和引导身体各个部位的疼痛——就像是一个焦虑的护理员跑遍全国，来回穿梭照顾着三四个病痛中的捐献者那样。严格来说，她还有意识，但我站在她躺的金属床边时，已经没办法让她明白我的存在了。可我还是拉过一把椅子坐了下来，双手握住她的一只手，每当阵痛袭来，她扭动身体的时候，我就轻轻握一下她的手。

只要他们允许，我就一直像这样守在她身边，待了三个小时，也许更久。正如我说的，大多数时间里，她都深深沉浸在自己的世界

里。但只有一次，她痉挛得厉害，身体扭曲到了很不自然的可怕姿态，我即刻就要叫护士给她增加镇痛药了，这时，仅有不多的几秒钟时间，她直直地望着我，确切地认出了我。在捐献者们骇人的挣扎过程中，偶尔会达到这样汪洋大海中小岛一样的短暂清醒，她看着我，就在那一刻，虽然她讲不出话，我却明白她眼神里的含义。因此我对她说：“好的，我会去的，露丝，我会尽快去当汤米的护理员。”我压低了声音轻轻说了这话，因为我知道，哪怕我大声喊出来，她也听不到实际的话音。但我希望在我们目光交汇锁定的几秒钟内，她能准确读懂我的表情，正如我读懂她一样。随后那个时刻就过去了，她的意识再次飘远。当然我永远无法确知，但我认为她知道了。即便她没有明白我的话，我现在才想到，可能她始终就知道，先我之前就知道，我会成为汤米的护理员，我们会“去尝试一下”，正如那天在车里她对我们说的一样。

第二十章

去看船的那次旅行过了不到一年之后，我成了汤米的护理员。那时汤米第三次捐献才过去不久，虽然他恢复得不错，但仍然需要大量时间休息，结果证明这未尝不是种很好的方式开始我们在一起的新阶段。不久之后，我就习惯了金斯费尔德，甚至越来越喜欢这里了。

金斯费尔德的大多数捐献者在第三次捐献之后，都会住单人房，汤米得到了整个中心最大的一个房间。后来有人猜是我帮他要到的，但其实不是这样；只是幸运而已，再说那房间也没什么了不起。我觉得早先这里还是度假营地的时候这可能是间浴室，因为唯一的窗户上镶的是毛玻璃，而且窗户位置真的很高，都快到天花板了，你得站到椅子上，掀开窗户，才能看到外面，而且只能朝下看到浓密的灌木。房间是L形状，这就意味着他们除了通常的床、椅子和衣柜之外，还可以放进一张小小的书桌，就是学校用的那种掀盖课桌——这件家具后来证明真的是个意外之喜，后面我会解释。

关于我们在金斯费尔德的这段时间我不想给人留下错误的印象。许多时候非常放松，几乎像田园诗一般。我通常是午饭之后到达，上来之后常常发现汤米瘫倒在窄窄的床上——衣服总是穿得很齐整，因为他不想“像个病人”。我就坐在椅子上，给他读我带来的各种平装书，比如《奥德赛》、《天方夜谭》之类。再不然我们就聊天，有时候聊过去的日子，有时候聊别的事。傍晚的时候他常常会打瞌睡，这时我就在他那张课桌上赶我的报告。这真的很美妙，好像多少年的光阴都消散无踪，我们相处地非常自在。

当然很明显并不是一切都跟从前一样。首先就是我和汤米开始做爱了。我不知道在我们开始之前，关于我们两人做爱，汤米想过多少。毕竟他还在康复阶段，也许这不是他脑海中的头等大事。我并不想勉强他做爱，但另一方面，我又想到，如果两个人刚开始在一起的时候，我们耽搁太久没有做，那么性爱就越来越难成为我们关系中自然而然的一部分。我还有个考虑，我想，就是如果我们计划按照露丝的想法去操作，真的去申请延期的话，倘或我们从未有过性爱，那真的将会是一个很不利的条件。我的意思不是说我认爲他们一定会问起这件事。但我担心的是，这事总会暴露出来，因为一定程度上，那样的话，两人会缺乏亲密感。

于是有一天下午，在那个房间里，我决定先主动开始，然后让他选择进退行动。他跟往常一样躺在床上，瞪着天花板，我在给他读书。读完之后，我走过去，坐到床边，将一只手伸到了他的T恤衫里面。很快我就摸到下面他的那个家伙了，虽然他过了好一会儿才硬起来，但我立刻就看出他很喜欢。那第一次的时候，我们还要担心他伤口的缝线，再说我们认识了那么多年没有做过爱，感觉好像我们需要一个过渡阶段才能够全线放开去做。因此过了一会儿，我就只是用手帮他做，而他就躺在原地，没有试图抚摸我给我回应，甚至没有发出任何声音，只是一派平静如水。

但即便在那第一次，与“这是一个开始，我们就此跨进一个新阶段”的体会同步出现的还有一种东西，一种感觉。很长一段时间我不愿意承认，即便最后我承认了它的存在，还试图说服自己这感觉会随着他各种各样的病痛一起消失。我的意思是说，从第一次开始，汤米举止间就透露出一丝伤感，仿佛是说：“没错，我们现在在做爱，我很高兴我们现在在做。但多么遗憾，我们竟虚掷光阴，等到这么晚。”

在接下来的几天里，当我们可以正常做爱，并且真的享受其中的时候，即便这时，这种令人烦恼的感觉依然还在。我想尽办法驱散它。我让两人全线开火，全身心都沉浸在狂欢的迷醉之中，不留任何空间给其他。如果他在上，我就将双膝举高，到他适宜的位置；不论我们用别的什么姿势，只要能让感觉更好，更热情，我什么都会讲，什么都会做，但这感觉依然没有完全消失。

也许跟这个房间有关系，阳光从毛玻璃的窗口照进来，即便是初夏，感觉也像是秋天的光线。再不然就是我们躺在那里的时候偶尔传来的零星杂音，都是捐献者们来回乱转，忙各自事情的声音，而不是学生们坐在草地上，讨论小说与诗歌的话音。再不然，就是因为有的时候我们非常痛快地做完之后，倒在彼此臂弯里，刚刚的鱼水之欢还在点滴回味之中，这时汤米会说这样的话：“我从前很轻易就能一连做两次。可现在我做不到了。”这时那种感觉立刻就会浮现出来，我只能每次听到他说这种话，就伸手捂住他的嘴，只为了两人可以平平静静地躺在一起。我确定汤米也有同样的感觉，因为经过这样的时刻，我们总会紧紧搂抱在一起，仿佛这样就能将这种感觉赶走似的。

我到了之后的最初几个星期里，我们极少谈及夫人或是那天在车里跟露丝的谈话。但我成为他的护理员这一事实本身就时时在提醒我们，不能原地踏步，拖延时间。当然，还有汤米的动物画作。

多年以来，我常常想起汤米画的那些动物，甚至我们去看搁浅船只的那天，我也很想跟他问起它们。他还在画动物吗？他在农舍画的那些还留着吗？但围绕这些动物的种种往事让我很难开口。

后来有一天下午，也许是我开始护理汤米之后大约一个月左右，我上到他的房间，发现他正埋头在课桌前专心画画，脸几乎都要挨到纸页上了。我敲门的时候他喊我进来的，但一眼望去我就看出他是在画那些想象中的动物。我在门口停下来，拿不准是否应该进去，可最终他抬起了头，合上了笔记本——我留意到本子跟多年前他跟凯佛斯要来的那些一模一样。我走了进去，我们开始谈论与此完全不相干的事，过了一会儿他将笔记本收了起来，我们谁也没说什么。但那次之后，我经常来了之后发现本子留在书桌上，或是丢在他枕头旁边。

后来有一天我们在他的房间里，有几分钟闲余时间要消磨掉，然后我们要出门给他做检查，这时我留意到他举止有点古怪：有些刻意，又有几分羞涩，让我以为他想做爱。但这时他说：

“凯丝，我想让你告诉我。坦白跟我讲。”

随即那本黑色的笔记本从课桌里拿了出来，他给我看了三幅不同的素描，描绘的是同一种蛙类——只是这蛙长着一长尾巴，仿佛蝌蚪部分没有演变过来。至少，当你将本子举得比较远的时候，画面看起来是这样的。近看每幅素描都充满了微小的细节，跟我多年前见过的那些动物很像。

“这两只我画的时候觉得是金属做的，”他说，“你瞧，所有部位的表面都亮闪闪的。但这边这只，我觉得我想把它画成橡胶的。你看得出来么？几乎是黏稠状的。我现在想画个正式的版本，认真地好好画，但我拿不定主意。凯丝，你实话实说，到底觉得怎么样？”

我不记得自己怎么回答他了。我只记得那一刻百感交集各种浓烈的情感涌上心头将我吞噬。我立刻就明白汤米是用这样的方式，将当初在农舍围绕他的画所发生的一切抛诸身后，我感到如释重负，满心感激，纯粹的欣喜。但同时我也意识到为什么这些动物会再次出现，汤米这看似随便的询问背后蕴藏着各种可能，有各种层次的含义。至少我看得出，他是让我知道，尽管我们从未开诚布公地讨论过这件事，但他没有忘记；他让我知道他没有妥协，而是忙于进行他那方面的准备工作。

但那天看到那些古怪的青蛙画作时我的感受还不仅止于这些。因为有个念头反复出现，刚开始只是模糊地远远出现在背景中，但越来

越强烈，后来我不停地想到这一点。当我望着那些画面时，尽管我竭力想抓住它，丢开它，但那想法还是不可抑制地出现在我脑海中。我想汤米的画作现在已经没有那么生动了。虽然从很多方面来看，这些蛙跟我当年在农舍所见的画作很相似，但有些东西绝对已经消失不见了。现在的画面看起来煞费心力，简直像是临摹的。因此那种感觉再次袭上心头，拂之不去：我们现在才做这一切太晚了；曾经有时间让我们去做这些，但我们错过了，而我们现在这样精心考虑，充分准备，未免有些荒唐，甚至应该受到谴责。

现在让我再回顾一遍，我想到我们俩之所以过了那么久之后才开诚布公地谈我们的计划，可能还有一个原因。很确定的一点是金斯费尔德的捐献者里面，根本没人听说过延期之类的说法，我们也许隐约觉得尴尬，仿佛两人共守着一个不光彩的秘密。我们甚至可能害怕，万一这话传到其他人那里，会发生什么事。

但正如我说的，我不想将金斯费尔德那段时期描绘得过于灰暗。大多数时间，尤其是他向我问起他画的动物那天之后，仿佛过去的阴影终于全都不复存在，我们的关系终于稳固下来。虽然他再也没有问过我对于他画作的建议，但他会乐于当着我的面画画，于是我们经常这样共度下午的时光：我躺在床上，也许在读书，汤米则伏在书桌旁画画。

也许，如果情况像这样持续更久一些，我们会更幸福，如果我们用更多的午后时光来聊天、做爱、读书、画画的话。但是随着夏天渐渐过去，汤米越来越壮实，通知他去做第四次捐献的可能性越来越迫近，我们知道不能再无限期地拖延下去了。

那段时间我超乎寻常得忙，几乎有一个星期没有去金斯费尔德。那天我是早上到的，我记得当时下着瓢泼大雨。汤米的房间几乎一片漆黑，窗户附近有条下水管道传来哗哗的流水声。他跟其他捐献者一起下楼去大厅吃好早饭，重新回到楼上，这会儿正坐在床上，目光空洞，什么也没做。我一进门就筋疲力尽——我已经很多天没有睡过一个整觉了——直接瘫倒在他的窄床上，将他推到墙边。我就那样躺了一阵，要不是汤米老伸出大脚趾戳我膝盖，我可能一下子就睡着了。最后我终于起身跟他并排坐，我说：

“我昨天看到夫人了，汤米。我没跟她说话，什么也没做。可我见到她了。”

他望着我，缄默不语。

“我看到她顺着街走过来，进了家门。露丝没搞错。地址是对的，门牌号，什么都准确无误。”

随后我向他讲述了前一天发生的事。我因为有事去到南部海边，于是下午顺路去了利特尔汉普顿，跟前两次去一样，我依旧沿着海边的长街漫步，沿途经过了一排排有露台的房子，大多还标有“波峰”、“海景”之类的名号。后来我走到了一个电话亭旁的公共长椅这里。我坐下来等候——仍然像我前两次所做的一样——眼睛紧紧盯着马路对面的房子。

“就像侦探故事一样。前两次我都是每次一待就是半小时以上，却一无所获，什么都没有。但这次有种感觉，我觉得要走运了。”

我实在太疲倦，坐在长椅上几乎要打瞌睡。但这时我抬头却看到她就在那里，正沿着街道迎面朝我这边走来。

“真的很吓人，”我说，“因为她看上去一点都没变。也许脸稍微老了一点点。但除此之外真的没有任何不同。连衣服都一模一样。还是那身漂亮的灰色套装。”

“不可能真的是当初那身套装吧。”

“我不知道。看起来就是那套。”

“所以你并没有主动上去跟她讲话是吗？”

“当然没有。我又不傻。要循序渐进。她对我们从来也算不上和善，你记得吧。”

我告诉他夫人怎么从马路对面径直走过我面前，却完全没有看到我；有那么一秒钟我还以为她要从我盯着的那个门口走过去——以为露丝弄错了她的地址。但夫人在大门口骤然转身，三步并作两步走过门口小径，然后就消失在门内。

我讲完之后，汤米沉默了一会儿，然后他说：

“你确定这样不会惹上麻烦吗？多次开车去你不该去的地方？”

“要不然你以为我怎么会这么累？我为了搞定这些事，没日没夜地加班工作。不过至少我们现在算是找到她了。”

外面还是大雨如注。汤米侧过身来，将头靠在我肩膀上。

“露丝帮我们做了件好事，”他柔声说，“她找的地址没错。”

“是，她做得很好。但现在要靠我们自己了。”

“那咱们计划怎么做，凯丝？你有打算吗？”

“我们直接上门。我们就直接去问她。就下星期，我带你去做检查的时候。我帮你搞到一整天的外出许可。这样我们就可以在回来的路上去利特尔汉普顿。”

汤米叹了口气，将头更深地埋到我肩上。如果旁人看到，可能会以为他不大起劲，但我知道他的感受。很久以来，我们一直在设想延迟捐献，关于艺廊的理论，等等这一切，而现在，突然之间，我们取得了重大进展。这绝对是有点吓人。

“如果我们申请到了，”最终他说，“假设我们申请到了。假设她准许我们三年，比如说，完全属于我们的时间。我们到底要怎么做呢？明白我意思吗，凯丝？我们去哪儿？我们不能待在这里，这里是康复中心。”

“我不知道，汤米。也许她会让我们回到农舍去。但最好是去别的什么地方。也许大白楼。再不然也许他们还有其他地方。单独的一个地方，给我们这种人的。我们得听听她怎么说。”

我们静静地躺在床上听雨，又过了几分钟。不知怎的，我开始用脚戳他，就像他早先戳我那样。最终他开始反击，干脆将我两只脚推到床外面去了。

“如果我们真的要去，”他说，“我们得选定那些动物。你懂的，得挑选一下带哪些去。也许选六七幅。我们得认真点，好好选。”

“那好吧，”我说。随后我站起来，伸展开双臂。“也许我们可以多带几幅。十五甚至二十幅。好的，我们就去找她。她能把我们怎么样呢？我们就去找她谈谈。”

第二十一章

我们出发前几天，我的脑海中就浮现出这样的画面，我和汤米站在那扇门前，鼓起勇气去按门铃，然后两颗心狂跳着等在原地。可事到临头我们很幸运，免于遭受这番折磨。

到这时，我们也该当有点好运，因为这天过得实在是不顺。我们出门的路上车子出了点问题，我们给汤米做检查迟到了一个小时。然后在诊所又出了岔子，搞错了试验样本，结果汤米需要重做其中的三项检查。这弄得他有点虚弱，因此当我们下午的事结束之后，终于出发前往利特尔汉普顿的时候，他开始晕车，我们只好多次停车，让他走一会消散一下舒服些。

最终我们差一点点六点钟到了那里。我们将车停在宾果游戏厅后面，从车子后备厢里取出了装有汤米笔记本的运动包，然后就朝镇中心走去。那天天气很好，虽然商店都已经关门，但还是有很多人在酒吧门外流连，谈天饮酒。我们越走，汤米感觉越发好些了，终于他才想起来，自己因为要做检查，中午饭都没吃，于是宣布他要吃点东西才能应对接下来的事。于是我们开始找能买外带三明治的小店，这时他突然抓住了我的胳膊，他抓得很紧，我还以为他身体出问题了。但随即，他轻轻在我耳边说：

“就是她，凯丝。刚从理发店门口过去。”

没错就是她，走在对面的人行道上，身穿漂亮的灰套装，跟从前穿的一模一样。

我们跟在夫人身后，隔着一段合理的距离，先走了一段步行街，然后走到了几乎没什么人的主街。我想，两人都大概都想到了当初我们在另外一个市镇，跟踪露丝可能的原型的那天。但这一次，事情简单得多了，因为很快她就带着我们走到了那条海边的长街。

因为路完全是直的，夕阳斜照，将整条路从头至尾映在日光里，于是我们可以放心让夫人走在我们前面很远的地方——直到她几乎缩成了一个小小的点——我们依然无需担心会跟丢她。事实上，我们连她鞋跟的回音都始终听得到，而汤米的包有节奏地敲打着他的腿，听起来几乎是种回应。

我们一直这样走了很久，路过了一排又一排完全一样的房子。到后来对面人行道上再没有了房屋，代之以大片的草坪，你可以看到草坪之外更远处，海滩棚屋的房顶点缀在海岸线上。虽然看不见海水，但仅凭开阔的天空和海鸥的叫声，也知道海就在那里。

但在我们这边，一栋栋房屋依然毫无二致地延伸下去，过了一会儿我对汤米说：

“现在不远了。看到那边的长椅没有？我就是坐在这上面。她家就在前面一点点。”

到我说这话之前，汤米都还保持着镇静。但现在他似乎有所触动，开始加快了脚步，仿佛想赶上夫人似的。但现在我们和夫人之间没有任何人遮挡，随着汤米越来越靠近她，我不得不抓住他的胳膊，拖住让他慢一点。我始终害怕她会回头发现我们，但她没有，随后她就到了进门的地方。她在门口稍作停留，在手袋里找钥匙，我们就在那里，站在她家门口，望着她。她仍然没有转身，我有种感觉，她其实一直意识到我们在跟随，但却故意无视我们。我还觉得汤米要冲她大喊大叫，那就会犯下大错。所以我在门口就飞快地，毫不犹豫地喊了她一声。

那只是一句礼貌的“对不起”，但她却骤然转身，仿佛我朝她扔了什么东西一样。随着她的目光落到我们身上，我感到周身一阵寒意，很像多年之前，在主楼里我们伏击她的那次。她的眼神依然冰冷，脸色可能比我记忆中还要严厉。我不知道她是否当下就认出了我们；但毫无疑问的是，她看了一眼，立刻就认定我们是什么人，因为我们看得出她一下子变得僵硬起来——仿佛两只很大的蜘蛛就要朝她爬过来。

随后她表情里什么东西变了。倒不是说变得和缓，但那种厌恶之感被压了下去，收敛起来，落日余晖之中，她眯起了眼睛，认真看着我俩。

“夫人，”我说着，靠到了门上，“我们不想吓您一跳，也没有别的目的。但我们是黑尔舍姆的学生。我是凯西·H，也许您还记得。这是汤米·D。我们不是来给您找麻烦的。”

她后退几步，朝我们靠近了一些。“黑尔舍姆来的，”她说，脸上竟然浮现出一丝笑意，“哎，这可是个意外。如果你们来不是给我找麻烦，那你们是为谁来的呢？”

汤米突然开口：“我们得跟您谈谈。我带了点东西，”——他举了一下那个包——“也许您的艺廊愿意收下这几件东西。我们来找您谈谈的。”

夫人仍然站在原地，落日余晖之中，她几乎一动不动，头歪着，仿佛努力想听清海滩上传来的某种声音。随后她又露出了微笑，但这笑容似乎不是为了我们，而只是给她自己的。

“那好吧。请进来。然后我们看看你们想谈些什么。”

我们走了进去，我留意到前门镶着彩色玻璃，所以当汤米回身关上门之后，一切就显得很暗。我们站在一个很窄的过道里，感觉仿佛只需张开手肘，就能碰到两边的墙。夫人在我们前方停了下来，一动不动地站着，背对着我们，仿佛在倾听。我从她身旁瞥一眼看过去，发现过道虽然很窄，前面还分成了两条：左边是上楼的楼梯，右边一条更窄的过道通往房屋里更深的地方。

我学着夫人的样子，也侧耳倾听，但房里只有一片寂静。随后也许是从楼上，传来一声隐约的撞击声。这微弱的声音仿佛让她明白了什么，于是她转向我们，指着过道深处幽暗的方向，说：

“到里面去等我。我很快就下来。”

她开始爬楼梯，随后看到我们犹疑不决的样子，又从楼梯扶手边倾身，再次指着黑暗的深处。

“里面，”她说，上楼不见了。

我和汤米慢慢朝前走，发现自己到了想必是这套房子前厅的一个空间。看起来好像有仆役之类布置过房间，供主人晚间使用，然后自己离开了：窗帘都关起来，台灯拧亮，发着微光。我能闻到旧家具的气息，很可能是维多利亚时代的古董。壁炉被一块板封闭起来，本该点火的部位有一幅画，是像挂毯一样织出来的，画面上有只古怪的猫头鹰似的鸟儿向外盯着你看。汤米碰了碰我的胳膊，然后指了指一小张圆茶几上方角落里挂的相框中的一幅画。

“那是黑尔舍姆，”他轻声说。

我们走到跟前，但细看我却说不准了。我看得出那是一幅很好的水彩画作，但下方的台灯上灯罩有些歪，上面还隐约有蛛网，因此灯光并没有将画作照亮，只是将模糊的玻璃罩映得发亮，因此很难看得清画面。

“这是鸭塘后面那块小地方，”汤米说道。

“你什么意思？”我也轻声回答他，“没有什么池塘。这只是一幅乡间风景。”

“不，池塘在你身后。”我没料到这会让汤米那么恼火，“你肯定能想起来。你绕到后面，站到池塘前面，看着北操场的方向……”

我们再次沉默不讲话了，因为听到房里某处传来话音。听起来像个男人的声音，也许是楼上传来的。随后我们又听到无疑是夫人的声音沿着楼梯下来，她说：“没错。你说的很对，很对。”

我们等待着夫人进来，但她的脚步声从门口经过，又往房子后部走去了。我脑海中闪过一个念头，莫不是她要去准备茶点烤饼，然后用小推车一起送进来，但随即我就认定这是胡思乱想，她可能只是忘记了我们的存在，现在她可能突然想起来，马上就进来赶我们走。随后楼上传来一个粗野的男声，喊了一句什么，但话音太模糊，很可能隔着两个楼层。夫人的脚步声重又回到了过道上，随后她朝着楼上喊道：“我告诉过你怎么做。就照我说的做。”

我和汤米又等了几分钟，随后房间深处的墙面开始移动。我几乎立刻就明白这其实不是一面真正的墙，而是一对拉门，可以从中间隔断这个本来很长的房间。夫人将门拉开了一点，就站在那边瞪着我们。我试图看看她的身后，但那里只有一片黑暗。我想也许她在等待我们开口解释为什么来这里，但最终，她开口道：

“你跟我说你俩是凯西·H和汤米·D。对不对？你们是什么时候在黑尔舍姆的？”

我告诉了她，但完全看不出她是否记得我们。她只是仍旧站在门口，仿佛在犹豫是否要进来。但这时汤米又开口了：

“我们不想耽误您太久。但有件事我们必须得跟您谈谈。”

“那你说。好吧。你们最好放松一点。”

她朝前伸出双手，放到了面前两张相对称的扶手椅背上。她举止有些古怪，仿佛并非真心要请我们坐下。我感觉，倘或我们真的像她所示意的那样，真的在这两张椅子上坐下来的话，她还会继续站在我们身后，甚至手都不会从椅背上挪开。但当我们朝她走近一点的时候，她也朝前进了一点，而且——也许这只是我的想象——她从我俩中间穿过的时候，还用力缩起双肩。当我们转身坐下的时候，她走到

了窗边，站在沉重的紫色窗帘前面，正面盯着我们看，仿佛我们是在课堂上，而她是老师一样。至少当时我是那么看的。后来汤米说他以为夫人要开口唱歌，她身后的帘幕会打开，但浮现出的景象不是街道以及一直延伸到海边的平坦草地，而是一个巨大的舞台场景，就像我们当初在黑尔舍姆那种，甚至还会有一排合唱歌手给她配唱。滑稽的是，后来他说起这些的时候，我眼前再次浮现出夫人的样子，她双手交握，手肘外撑，真的很像是准备唱歌。但我疑心汤米当时想到的不会真是这些。我记得曾留意到他当时非常紧张，很担心他会说出什么傻话。所以当她还并无恶意地问我们想要什么的时候，我立刻开始插话。

开始可能意思混乱，说得很不明白，但过了一会儿，我越来越有信心我的话她能听得进去，于是我镇静下来，讲得清楚多了。许多星期以来，我不断在脑海里设想，要怎么对她说。在那些漫长的行车路上，在服务站的咖啡馆里，安静地坐在桌旁时，我也都曾反复温习。当时事情显得无比艰难，我最终想到了这么个办法：我打算一字一句地背牢几句关键的话，然后在脑子里画个路线图，怎么从一个要点进行到下一个。但现在她就站在我面前，我所准备的内容大多毫无必要，再不然就完全不对。奇怪的是——后来我们讨论的时候，我和汤米一致认为——虽然在黑尔舍姆的时候她看起来完全像是一个外面来的心怀恶意的陌生人，现在当我们再次面对她的时候，虽然她并没有说什么，或者做过任何事，来表达哪怕一丁点对我们友好和善，但此刻在我看来，夫人却十分可亲，比我们近年来遇到的任何人都要亲近得多。正因为如此，我脑子里准备好的那些话突然都不见了，我就简单如实地对她讲，就像多年前，我对导师说事情那样。我告诉了她我们听说的一切，关于黑尔舍姆学生有特权的流言，和延期捐献的事；说我们如何明白流言未必准确，我们并没有一定指望些什么。

“况且即便真有这回事，”我说，“我们也明白，您想必对这些事不胜其烦，这么多情侣来找您，声称他们真心相爱。我和汤米，我们俩若不是对这份感情确信无疑，决不会到这里来打扰您。”

“确信无疑？”很长一段时间里，这是她第一次开口，我们都深感诧异，吓了一跳。“你说你们确信无疑？确信你俩真心相爱？你们怎么知道？你们以为爱情就这么简单吗？所以说你们很相爱。深深相爱。你是这样跟我说的吗？”

她几乎是冷嘲热讽的语气，但这时我却有点震惊地发现，当她目光从我俩中的一个转到另一个人的时候，眼中有小颗的泪水在闪。

“你们相信这个？相信你们深深相爱？所以你们就来找我申请这个……延缓？为什么？为什么你们来找我？”

如果她问话的方式流露出仿佛这念头压根就是荒诞不经的意思，那么我肯定会感到伤心失望。然而她不是那样说的。她问话的方式几乎像是测验提问一样，而问题答案她是知道的；甚至她还曾多次引领其他情侣经历过完全一样的这套程序。正因为如此，我才一直没有失去希望。可是汤米想必有些急躁，因为他突然插进话来说道：

“我们来见您是因为您的艺廊。我们认为我们知道艺廊是为什么存在的。”

“我的艺廊？”她朝后倾身，靠在窗台上，弄得身后的窗帘有些摆动，随后她慢慢舒了口气。“我的艺廊。你一定是说我的收藏。所有那些画作，诗歌，我多年以来收集的你们的那些东西。做这工作在我很不容易，可我有信念，那时候我们都很坚定。所以你认为你知道是为了什么，我们为什么做收藏。这倒是很有趣，值得一听。因为我必须得说，我自己也时常扪心自问同样的问题呢。”她突然将目光从汤米转到了我身上。“我扯太远了么？”她问道。

我不知道该如何回答，只得答道：“不，不。”

“我扯得太远了，”她说，“很抱歉。一说到这个话题我就收不住。忘了我刚刚说的话吧。年轻人，你是要跟我讲讲我的艺廊。请继续，说来我听。”

“是为了让你辨别，”汤米说，“让你有所凭据。不然的话，如果有学生来找你，声称他们相爱，那你怎么知道是不是真的？”

夫人的目光再次滑到我身上，但我有种感觉，仿佛她在盯着我胳膊上的什么东西。我甚至低头去看是不是袖子上落了鸟粪或者别的什么。随后我听到她说：

“你认为我收藏了你们那么多东西就是为了这个原因。你们一直管这叫做我的艺廊。我第一次听你们这么叫它时，我笑了。可是渐渐地，我也开始觉得就是这么回事。我的艺廊。现在，年轻人，你来跟我解释解释，为什么我的艺廊能够帮助判断你们中有谁是真心相爱的？”

“因为它能帮助你看清楚我们真正的本色，”汤米说，“因为……”

“当然，因为，”——夫人突然打断了他的话——“你的作品会暴露你内在的自我！是这个缘故，对不对？因为你的作品会揭示你的灵魂！”突然她再次转向我，说道：“我扯太远了么？”

她之前也曾说过这话，我又一次产生了这样的感觉，仿佛她在盯着我袖子上某一点。从她第一次问“我扯太远了么”，我就隐约有点怀疑，现在这种感觉越发明显了。我仔细盯着夫人，但她似乎察觉到了我的审视，重新转脸朝着汤米。

“那好，”她说，“我们继续。你们想跟我说什么？”

“问题在于，”汤米说，“那时候我有点糊涂。”

“你刚刚说到你们的艺术创作。说创作会暴露出艺术家的灵魂。”

“没错，我想说的就是这个，”汤米继续坚持往下说，“那时候我有些糊涂。我没有认真创作。我什么都没做出来。我现在知道应该好好创作的，但我当时脑子不清楚。因此您的艺廊里没有一件我的作品。我知道这是我自己的错，也知道现在很可能已经太晚了，但我还是带来了几幅作品。”他举起背包，开始解包的拉链。“有些是最近画的，但有一些是相当长时间以前的。凯丝的东西您应该已经有了。她有很多作品入选艺廊的。对不对，凯丝？”

刹那间他们都朝我看过来。这时夫人开口，话音轻得几乎听不到：

“可怜的小东西。我们对你们都干了些什么啊？用我们那些谋划和策略？”她任由这话悬在半空，不加解释，我觉得仿佛再次从她眼中看到了泪水。这时她转向我问道：“我们还要继续谈下去么？你希望我们继续么？”

当她说到这里的时候，我先前模糊的念头终于落到了实处。我有几分心寒地意识到，“我扯太远了么”以及现在这句“我们还要继续么”并不是说给我或者汤米听的，听者另有其人——有人一直在我们身后，黑暗的那一半房间里听着。

我慢慢转过身，朝黑暗深处望去。我什么也看不见，但我听到一个声音，一种机械的声音，远得令人惊讶——这房子比我所猜测的要深很多，黑暗延伸得远很多。然后我看到一个身影朝我们移动，然后一个女人的声音说道：“好，玛丽——克劳德。让我来继续吧。”

我仍是朝着黑暗中凝望，这时听到夫人发出一声讥诮的哼声，随即她大踏步从我们旁边经过，走进了黑暗之中。然后传来更多的机械声音，夫人推着一个坐轮椅的人出来了。她再次从我们旁边经过，有一瞬间，因为夫人的后背挡住了视线，我没法看清轮椅上坐的是谁。但这时，夫人将轮椅转过来朝着我们，说道：

“你跟他们讲。他们是来找你的。”

“我想是这样。”

轮椅中的身体孱弱并且扭曲，是那个声音，比其他的一切都更清楚地让我认出了她。

“艾米丽小姐，”汤米轻轻地说。

“你跟他们讲，”夫人说，仿佛就此甩手，什么都不管了。可她仍是站在轮椅后面，眼睛紧紧盯着我们。

第二十二章

“玛丽—克劳德说的没错，”艾米丽小姐说，“我才是你们应该找的人。玛丽—克劳德为了我们的计划辛苦工作。最后落得这样一个结果让她感到很失望。至于我本人，无论遭遇什么打击，我都不会感觉太难过。我认为我们还是取得了一些值得尊重的成就。看看你们两个。你们都出落得很不错。我能肯定你们有很多事可以讲给我听，值得我为你们自豪。刚才你们说都叫什么名字来着？不，不，等等。我想我能记起来。你是那个坏脾气的男孩子。坏脾气，但心却宽厚。汤米，对不对？还有你，当然了，你是凯西·H。你做护理员做得很不错。我们都听过很多关于你的事。我记得的，你瞧。我敢说我能记得你们所有人。”

“这对你或者对他们又有什么好处呢？”夫人问道，随后大步离开了轮椅旁边，经过我们俩，步入黑暗之中，我只知道她占据了先前艾米丽小姐所在的空间。

“艾米丽小姐，”我说，“真高兴再次见到您。”

“听到你这么说真好。我认出了你，但你却未必认出我。事实上，凯西·H，不久之前，我还碰到你坐在外面的长椅上，你那时候显然并没有认出我。你看了一眼乔治，那个大个子尼日利亚人推着我。噢，没错，你可是看了他好一会儿，他也把你看了个够。我什么都没说，你也不知道那就是我。但今天晚上，有前面的谈话，我们就能相认了。你们两个看到我都很震惊。我最近身体不太好，但我希望不用长久靠这玩意才能行动。但是很不巧，亲爱的，虽然我很想多陪你们待一会，但没办法，因为过一会儿就会有人来取我的床头柜。那是件好东西。乔治给周遭都加上了保护垫，但我还是坚持要亲自监督。这些人永远靠不住。他们粗暴搬运，把东西随便往车上乱摔乱扔，然后他们的老板还宣称东西最开始就是这样。以前我们碰到过这种事，所以这次我坚持要全程陪同。这件家具很漂亮，我在黑尔舍姆的时候就有了，所以我决心要卖个好价钱。因此等他们来的时候，我恐怕就得离开你们了。可我看得出，亲爱的，你们是诚心诚意带着使命来的。我必须得说，看到你们真的让我很高兴。玛丽—克劳德也很高兴，虽然你们看她，一点都显不出来。对不对，亲爱的？哎，她假装不在意，但其实不是那么回事。你们来找到我们，她其实很感动。噢，她生气呢，别理她，同学们，别理她。现在我来尽量试着回答你们的问

题。这种传言我听到过无数次。当初我们黑尔舍姆还在的时候，每年都会有两对情侣，试着找我们来谈这事。甚至有一对还曾写过信给我们。我猜如果你真想违反规定的話，这么大一座宅院总是不难找到的。所以你瞧，这种传言一直都有，你们之前很早就有了。”

她停了下来，因此我说：“我们现在想知道的是，艾米丽小姐，这种传言到底是不是真的。”

她继续盯着我们看了一会儿，随后深吸一口气。“在黑尔舍姆范围内，每当这种传言开始散播，我都会立刻确保及时彻底地扑灭它。然而至于学生在离开我们之后的说法，我们是无能为力的。最终，我开始相信——玛丽—克劳德也相信是这样，对不对，亲爱的？——我开始相信这种流言，它不仅仅是一个单一的谣言。我的意思是说，我认为流言是反复生长出来的。你找到源头，扑灭它，但你无法阻止它从其他地方再次开始生长。我得出了这个结论，就不再担心这件事了。玛丽—克劳德从来也没为此感到担忧过。她的看法是：‘如果他们这么傻，那就让他们相信好了。’噢，得了，别跟我摆出这样一副苦瓜脸。你打从一开始就持这样的观点。这事闹了很多年之后，我虽然没有得出跟她完全一样的结论，却也开始认为，也许我无须担心。说到底这不是我的问题。再说少数几对情侣来碰了钉子之后，反正其他人也就不会再继续尝试了。这就当作是他们梦想的东西，一个小幻想。又有什么害处呢？但对你们两个，我看得出，不属于我说的这种情况。你们是认真的。你们已经仔细考虑过。你们认真地希望过。对于像你们这样的学生，我真心感到遗憾。让你们失望我一点都不会感到高兴。但情况就是这样。”

我不想去看汤米。我意外地保持着镇静，虽然艾米丽小姐的话本该将我俩彻底打垮，但某方面来看，她似乎话中有话，还有所隐瞒，仿佛我们还没有打破砂锅问到底。甚至有可能她讲的话并不是真的。因此我问道：

“这么说来，那延迟捐献的事就根本不存在？你怎么都不能帮到我们，是吗？”

她慢慢将头从一边摇到另一边。“这种谣言毫无依据。我很抱歉。我真的很抱歉。”

汤米突然问道：“那曾经有过吗？黑尔舍姆没关门之前的时候？”

艾米丽小姐继续摇着头。“从来都不是真的。甚至在茂宁代尔丑闻爆发之前，哪怕在黑尔舍姆还被当成是指路明灯的时代，那时我们被看做是朝着更人道、更美好的方向前进的范例，即便在那时候，这说法也不是真的。这一点最好讲清楚。这只是一种美好愿望的谣言。仅此而已。噢，亲爱的，是不是取柜子的人来了？”

门铃响了，楼上有脚步声下来去应门。外面狭长的过道里传来男人的谈话声，夫人从我们身后的黑影中走了出来，穿过房间出去了。艾米丽小姐坐在轮椅上，身体前倾，认真地听着。然后她说：

“不是他们。还是那个装修公司的讨厌的人。玛丽—克劳德会应付的。所以，亲爱的们，我们还有多几分钟。还有什么你们想跟我谈的吗？当然这是完全不符合规矩的，玛丽—克劳德本就不该放你们进来。自然，我一知道你们是谁，就应该把你们赶出去。但现如今玛丽—克劳德不大理会他们那套规矩了，我必须得承认，我也是一样。所以如果你们还想多待一会儿，我很欢迎。”

“如果这传言从来都不是真的，”汤米说，“那么为什么你要拿走我们的艺术作品？还有艺廊到底存在吗？”

“艺廊？嗯，这传言确有几分真实。的确曾有过一个艺廊。虽然换了一种形式，艺廊依然存在。现如今艺廊就在这里，在这幢房子里。我不得不精减藏品，这让我很遗憾。但这里的空间不够。然而我们为什么要拿走你们的作品？这才是你的问题，对不对？”

“不仅如此，”我平静地说，“首先为什么我们要做那么多作品？为什么要教育我们，鼓励我们，要求我们创作那些东西？如果我们反正只是为了捐献，然后死去，那么上那些课是为什么？读那么多书，做那些讨论，又有什么意义？”

“为什么要有黑尔舍姆呢？”过道里传来夫人的话音。她再次经过我们旁边，回到了房间里黑暗的那一半。“你这个问题问得好。”

艾米丽小姐的眼光追随着她的身影，有片刻时间她凝视着我们身后。我很想回头去看看，她俩交换着怎样的眼神，但我感觉就好像当初在黑尔舍姆那样，我们必须得面朝前方，保持专注。这时艾米丽小姐说：

“是啊，为什么要有黑尔舍姆呢？现如今玛丽—克劳德总是这样问。但不久之前，就在茂宁代尔丑闻爆发之前，她做梦也不会想到要提出这样的问题。这种念头根本进不去她的脑子。你知道的，就是这

么回事，别这副样子看我！那时候只有一个人会问这样的问题，那就是我。在茂宁代尔之前很久，从一开始我就在问。这样一来，其他人的日子比较容易过，玛丽—克劳德，所有他们那些人，都可以不假思索地继续工作。还有你们所有这些学生。我替你们所有人承担了那些担忧和疑问。只要我坚定不移，那么你们心头就不会有片刻的怀疑，你们所有的人。但既然你有了疑问，亲爱的孩子。那我们就回答其中最简单的一个，然后希望其余的问题也能因此得解。我们为什么要收集你们的艺术作品？为什么我们要做这件事？汤米，你前面说过一句很有趣的话。刚才你跟玛丽—克劳德讨论这个话题的时候说的。你说是因为创作会透露作者的本色。你真实的内在。你是这么说的，对不对？是啊，你这话说得没错。我们收走你们的创作是因为我们认为它能揭示你们的灵魂。或者更准确地说，我们这么做是为了证明你们有灵魂。”

她停了一下，我和汤米这么长时间以来，终于交换了一下眼神。然后我问：

“为什么你需要证明这种事呢，艾米丽小姐？莫非有人认为我们没有灵魂吗？”

她脸上浮现出淡淡的笑容。“看到你这样吃惊，凯西，我很受触动。从某方面来看，这显示出我们的工作做得很好。正如你所说，为什么会有人怀疑你们没有灵魂呢？可是我得告诉你，亲爱的，许多年以前，在我们刚刚开始的时候，这种认识还不为大众所接受。虽然从那时到现在，我们已经走了很远，但即便是今天，仍然不是所有人都相信这回事。你们这些黑尔舍姆的学生，哪怕是离校之后，到了这样一个世界里，仍然对此半点认识都没有。就在此刻，全国各地都有学生在非常悲惨的环境中长大，那种生活条件你们这些黑尔舍姆的学生简直无法想象。现在我们不在了，情况只会更糟糕。”

她再次停了下来，有一会儿她仿佛眯起眼睛仔细观察我们。后来，她继续讲：

“无论如何，我们至少确保我们负责照顾的你们所有人，都能在美好的环境中成长。我们还确保你们离开我们之后，仍然可以避免那些最恐怖的遭遇。至少我们有能力帮你们做到这些。然而你的这种梦想，能够延迟的这种梦想，像这种事，就始终不是我们所能决定的了，哪怕是我们影响力最高的时候也不行。我很抱歉，我看得出，我说的这些话，你们不大愿意接受。但你们一定不能灰心。我希望你们能够理解我们为你们争取到的一切。看看你们俩！你们出息得多

好！你们都受过教育，有文化。我很抱歉没能帮你们做到更多，但你们必须得明白，过去的情况曾有多糟糕。当初我和玛丽—克劳德刚开始的时候，像黑尔舍姆这样的地方根本不存在。我们和格伦摩根之家是最先办起来的。几年之后，又有了桑德斯托管中心。我们几家机构一起掀起了一场规模不大但却很有影响力的运动，我们对当时通行的整个捐献程序提出了挑战。最重要的是，我们向全世界表明，如果学生们在人道、文明的环境中长大，他们就有可能像任何普通人类成员一样，长成会体贴、有智慧的人。在那之前，所有的克隆人——或者称之为学生，我们喜欢这样称呼你们——存在仅仅是为了供应医学所需。早期的时候，战后那些年，大多数人对你们的了解就仅止于此，是试管中样貌模糊的物质。难道你不同意吗，玛丽—克劳德？她这会儿很安静。我亲爱的学生们，你们在场，似乎她舌头就打结了。那好吧。我这就回答你的问题，汤米。这就是我们为什么要收集你们的作品。我们挑选其中最好的作品举办特展。七十年代末期，我们影响力最强大的时候，我们曾在全国举办大型活动。内阁大臣、主教，各种名人都来参加。有演讲，征集到大笔的资金。‘看这里！’我们说，‘看看这件艺术作品！你怎么敢声称这些孩子不完全是人类呢？’噢，没错，那时候我们的运动得到了很多的支持，潮流是向着我们的。”

接下来的几分钟里，艾米丽小姐继续回顾那时候的各种活动，提到了许多人，可他们的名字我们听都没听说过。事实上，有一会儿感觉像是我们又在听她晨会上的讲话，她常常说着说着就离题扯远了，我们谁都听不懂她说的话。可她似乎乐在其中，眼睛周围洋溢着温柔的笑意。然后她突然跳脱出来，换了一种新的口吻说道：

“可我们从未失去跟现实的接触，对不对，玛丽—克劳德？这跟我们桑德斯托管中心的同仁不一样。即便是在最好的时代，我们也始终明白，我们是在打一场多么艰难的战役。果不其然，茂宁代尔事件爆发，紧接着又有一两桩别的事，随后还不等我们明白过来，所有那些辛勤工作的成果就都付诸流水，化为乌有了。”

“可我不明白的是，”我说，“最开始人们为什么想让学生们遭受这么坏的待遇。”

“凯西，以你今天的观点来看，这种想法是完全合理的。但你必须得尝试着历史地看待问题。战争之后，五十年代初科学界很快取得了一个接一个的重大突破，人们没有时间去判断、评估，理性地提出问题。突然之间各种可能性摆到了我们面前，有各种方法能治好许多

从前认为无法医治的绝症。这就是世人最关注的问题，最想要的东西。于是很长时间里，人们宁可相信这些器官是凭空出现的，或者最多是在某种真空中种植出来的。没错，曾有过争论。但到了人们终于开始关心……关心这些学生的时候，等到人们开始考虑你们是怎么培育出来的，你们是否应该被带来，存在于这个世界上，到那时已经太迟了。根本无法回头。世人已经开始相信癌症可以治愈，你怎能期望这样一个世界，去收回这种治疗方法，重回黑暗时代？已经没有回头路了。无论人们对于你们的生存状况感到多么不安，他们主要关心的仍是自己的孩子、自己的配偶、自己的父母、自己的朋友不要死于癌症、运动神经元疾病、心脏病。因此很长一段时间里，你们都被隐藏在阴影中，人们尽量不去想到你们。如果他们想到了，也会尽量说服自己，你们其实跟我们不一样。说你们算不上真正的人类，因此怎么都没关系。这种情况一直持续着，直到我们开始掀起这场小小的运动。然而你是否看到我们所对抗的是什么？我们犹如蚍蜉撼树。现实就是这样，要求学生做捐献。在这个前提下，拒绝将你们看作是普通人类的这种阻碍永远都会存在。可我们坚持战斗了很多年，至少我们为你们赢得了许多的改进，可是当然，你们只是幸运的极少数。然而这时发生了茂宁代尔丑闻，以及其他的事，然后不等我们反应过来，气候已经完全变了。没有人愿意再被人看到支持我们的事业，我们这场小小的运动，黑尔舍姆，格伦摩根，还有桑德斯托管中心，我们全都被一扫而空。”

“您反复说起的这个茂宁代尔丑闻到底是怎么回事啊，艾米丽小姐？”我问道，“您得告诉我们，因为我们不知道这事。”

“唉，想来你们也没理由知道。对于外面的大世界而言，这始终也不是件了不起的大事。事情起因是一个科学家，名叫詹姆斯·茂宁代尔，这人某些方面天分颇高。他在苏格兰某个偏僻地区开展工作，我想他大概认为那里比较不招人注意。他想要带给人们一种新的可能，让他们生出具有某些加强特质的小孩。超强智慧，超强体能，诸如此类。当然，其他人也曾有过类似的雄心企图，但这位茂宁代尔，他的研究将前辈远远甩在了身后，也甩开了法律的约束。总之，他被人发现之后，研究工作就此终止，事情就此结束了。只不过，当然对我们而言，这还没完。正如我所说，这事从来没有引起轩然大波，但的确引发了某种气氛，你明白的。这事提醒了人们，让他们关注到了一直抱有的一种恐惧。为了捐献工程，制造像你们这样的学生是一回事。但整整一代人，被设计创造出来的孩子，将取代他们在社会上的

位置？更何况这些孩子将显著超过我们其他人？噢，那可不行。人们都吓坏了。他们就此退缩了。”

“可是艾米丽小姐，”我说，“所有这些跟我们有什么关系呢？为什么因为这种事黑尔舍姆就得关门呢？”

“我们也找不出任何显著联系啊，凯西。最初没有。现在我常常想，我们没能发现问题，所以该当受到惩罚。如果我们当初更警惕一些，而不是只顾闷头做自己的事，如果在茂宁代尔的新闻刚刚爆发的时候，在那个阶段我们就尽力做工作，也许事态还有挽回的余地。哎，玛丽—克劳德不同意了。她认为不论我们怎么做，该来的还是会来，也许她的想法有道理。毕竟不只是茂宁代尔这一件事。当时还有其他的事。比如那套糟糕的电视系列片。这些事都起到了推波助澜的作用，合力改变了潮流方向。但我想，说到底，核心的问题是这样的。我们的运动太微小，我们一直都非常脆弱，一直过分依赖赞助人兴之所至的念头。只要大气候对我们是好的，只要某个大公司或者某位政客认为支持我们对他们有利，那么我们就能维持下去。但我们始终都是举步维艰，茂宁代尔之后，气候变了以后，我们就彻底没戏了。世人不想看到捐献工程到底是怎么进行的。他们不想去考虑你们这些学生，或者你们生长所处的环境。换句话说，我亲爱的，他们想要你们回到阴影之中，回到我和玛丽—克劳德这样的人出现之前，你们那种模糊阴暗的存在。所有那些有权有势的人物，那些曾经那么热衷于帮助我们的人，当然，他们都消失不见了。仅仅一年多的时间里，我们失去了一个又一个赞助人。我们竭尽全力继续维持，比格伦摩根还多撑了两年。但最终，正如你所知道的，我们不得不关门，今天我们当初的工作已经几乎毫无踪迹可寻。现在全国哪里都找不到像黑尔舍姆这样的地方了。你所能找到的，跟从前一样，就只有那些巨大的政府‘家园’，如果说这些地方比从前有所好转，我告诉你们吧，亲爱的，如果你们看到这些地方现在仍在发生的一些情况，你们会连续几天都睡不好觉。至于说我和玛丽—克劳德，就这样，我们退到了这幢房子里，在楼上，我们有堆成山的你们的作品。我们只有这些，来证明我们曾经做过的事。还有堆成山的债务，当然债务没有艺术那么讨喜。还有就是记忆，对于你们所有人的记忆。以及知道我们曾经给了你们比原先更好的生活。”

“别想让他们感激你，”夫人的话音从我们身后传来，“凭什么他们要感恩戴德？他们来这里，是有更多更高的要求。这么多年以来，我们所给与他们的，所有我们为他们所做的那些斗争，他们知道些什么？他们认为一切都是上帝的赐予。直到他们来这里之前，他们

对一切都一无所知。现在他们只会感到失望，因为我们没有给与他们可能的一切。”

有一会儿谁也没有说话。后来外面传来噪声，门铃再次响了起来。夫人从黑暗中走过来，出去到了大厅。

“这回一定是那些人了，”艾米丽小姐说，“我得做好准备了。但你们可以再多待一会儿。那些人得把东西搬下两段楼梯。玛丽—克劳德会监督他们，不能损坏家具。”

我和汤米都很难相信这就结束了。我们俩谁都没有起身，也没有任何人出现，要帮艾米丽小姐离开轮椅。有一刹那我疑心她会不会尝试着自己站起来，可她完全没动，仍像从前一样朝前倾身，仔细倾听。这时汤米说：

“所以根本什么都没有。没有延迟，没有这种事。”

“汤米，”我悄声喊道，一边盯着他。但是艾米丽小姐柔声答道：

“没有，汤米。完全没有这种事。你们的生活必须得按照既定的轨道走下去。”

“所以照您所说的，小姐，”汤米说，“我们所做的一切，所有那些课程，一切的一切，都只是为了您刚刚跟我们说的这些？除此之外没有任何意义？”

“我能理解，”艾米丽小姐说，“你们一定会认为自己只是棋盘上的棋子。当然你可以这样来看待。但想想看，你们是些幸运的棋子。曾有过某种气候，但现在没了。你们得接受，有时候世界上的事就是这样。人们的看法，他们的感受，一会儿朝这边，一会儿又改那边。只是你们碰巧在这个过程中的某一点长大了。”

“可能这只是一时的潮流，来来去去，”我说，“但是对于我们，这就是一辈子。”

“是，这话没错。但是想想看。你们比之前的很多人都过得好很多。谁知道你们之后的人要面对什么样的情况。我很抱歉，学生们，但我必须得离开你们了。乔治！乔治！”

外面过道里声音很嘈杂，也许乔治没有听到，因为没有人答应。汤米突然问道：

“露西小姐就是因为这才离开的么？”

有一瞬间我以为艾米丽小姐没听到他的问话，因为她的注意力都在关注着过道那边。她背靠回轮椅上，开始慢慢朝门口挪动轮椅。房间里有太多小茶几和椅子，似乎轮椅无从通过。我刚刚想站起身帮她开辟通道，突然她停了下来。

“露西·沃恩莱特！”她说，“啊，没错。我们跟她是曾有过一点小分歧。”她顿了一顿，调整了轮椅，重新朝向汤米。“没错。我们是跟她有一点小分歧。看法不同。但我要这样回答你的问题，汤米。跟露西·沃恩莱特的不同意见跟我刚刚告诉你的这些事没有关系。至少没有直接关联。不，应该说那更是一种内部矛盾。”

我以为她说到这里就算了，于是问道：“艾米丽小姐，如果可以的话，我们想了解情况，知道露西小姐出了什么事。”

艾米丽小姐扬起了眉毛。“露西·沃恩莱特？她对你们这么重要吗？原谅我，亲爱的同学们，我又忘事了。露西跟我们工作的时间不久，因此对我们而言，她只是我们的黑尔舍姆回忆中一个无关紧要的角色。而且总的来说也不是一个快乐的人物。但我能理解，毕竟你们正好那几年时间在校……”她自说自话地笑了起来，仿佛记起了什么事。大厅里，夫人正在大声训斥那些人，但现在艾米丽小姐仿佛对他们失去了兴趣。她满脸聚精会神的表情，在回忆往事。最后她说：

“她是个挺好心的姑娘，露西·沃恩莱特。但是她跟我们共事了一段时间之后，就开始有了一些想法。她认为应该让你们学生更了解情况。对你们的未来有更清醒的认识，知道自己是谁，你们为什么存在。她认为应该尽量充分地让你们了解情况。除非能做到这一切，否则一定程度上就是欺骗你们。我们考虑过她的观点，最后认定她是错误的。”

“为什么？”汤米问，“你们为什么会那样认为？”

“为什么？她用意是好的。这点我可以肯定。我看得出你很喜欢她。她有成为一个出色导师的天赋。但是她所做的事，太理想化了。我们已经运营黑尔舍姆很多年了，对于怎样有效，在他们离开黑尔舍姆之后，长远看来怎样才是对学生最好，这些我们都有数。露西·沃恩莱特太理想主义，这没什么错。但她对于现实问题毫无概念。你瞧，我们的确给与了你们一些东西，一些即便现在也没人能够夺走的东西，我们就是凭借着为你们提供庇护，来做到了这点。如果我们没有这么做，黑尔舍姆也就不成其为黑尔舍姆了。当然，有时候这就意味着有些事我们得瞒着你们，对你们撒谎。没错，很多方面而言，我们愚弄了你们。我想，你甚至可以这么说。但那些年里，我们庇护

了你们。我们给了你们一个童年。露西当然是出于善意。但如果她的想法得到实施，那你们在黑尔舍姆的幸福就会荡然无存了。看看你们俩！我看到你们真是感到非常的自豪。你们凭借着我们教给你们的東西，构建了自己的人生。如果我们没有保护你们，你们就不会成为今天这样的自己。你们当初不会埋头上课，不会迷醉于艺术和写作。你们干吗要做这些事呢，如果知道未来每个人面对的是什麼？你们一定会告诉我们这毫无意义，我们又拿什麼话来反驳你们呢？所以她必须得走。”

现在我们听得到夫人在朝那些人大喊大叫。准确说她倒不是发脾气，但她的声音非常严厉，令人生畏，先前还有一些男人的话音传来，跟她争论几句，现在都一声不吭了。

“也许我跟你们一起待在这里反而更好，”艾米丽小姐说，“玛丽—克劳德处理这种事效率要高得多。”

我不知道自己为什么要这样说。也许是因为我知道这次拜访很快要结束了；也许是我很好奇，到底艾米丽小姐和夫人对彼此是什麼感情。总之我压低了声音，朝门廊过道点了点头，说道：

“夫人从来都不喜欢我们。她一直都很怕我们。就像有人害怕蜘蛛什麼的那样。”

我等着想看艾米丽小姐会不会发火，反正现在她发火我也不会介意。果然，她猛地朝我转过脸，仿佛我朝她扔了一个纸团，她目光灼灼，让我想起她在黑尔舍姆的日子。但当她开口答话的时候，话音却平和温柔：

“玛丽—克劳德把一切都给了你们。她拼了命地工作、工作、工作。别搞错，我的孩子，玛丽—克劳德是站在你们一边的，并且将永远站在你们一边。她害怕你们吗？我们都怕你们。我本人就不得不每天跟自己对你们的恐惧做斗争，我在黑尔舍姆的每一天几乎都是如此。有时候我从办公室窗口望着你们，我会感到那么强烈的厌恶……”她停了下来，这时她眼睛里重又开始闪光，“可我下决心不让这种情绪阻止我去做正确的事。我跟这些情绪作战，并且战胜了。现在，如果你们肯好心帮我离开这里，乔治应该拿着我的拐杖等着呢。”

我俩一人扶着她一边的胳膊肘，她就这样小心翼翼地走到了大厅里，一个穿护士制服的大个子男人看到我们吓了一跳，很快拿出了一副拐杖。

对着街道的正门开着，我很吃惊地看到天色还没有变暗。夫人的声音从外面传来，对那些人讲话的音调比先前平静。这时我跟汤米好像应该悄悄溜走，但这会儿那个乔治在帮艾米丽小姐穿外套，她就稳稳地扶着拐杖站在那里，挡住我们的去路。我们没办法，因此就等在那里。我猜想，我们也是等着要跟艾米丽小姐道别，也许经过这么多事之后，我们想对她说声谢谢。我说不准。但现在她全部心思都在她那个床头柜上了。她忙不迭地给外面那几个男人下指令，然后就跟乔治一起离开了，并没有回头看我们。

我和汤米又在大厅里待了一会儿，拿不准该怎么办才好。等到我们终于溜达到外面的时候，我留意到虽然天色还没有完全暗下来，但长街上路灯都已经亮了起来。一辆白色货车正在发动引擎。后面紧跟着一辆大型的老款式沃尔沃轿车，艾米丽小姐就坐在副驾驶位上。夫人正趴在车窗上，不知艾米丽小姐说了什么，夫人听了直点头，这时乔治关上了后备厢，转到驾驶座的门口。随后那辆白车发动起来，艾米丽小姐的车跟了上去。

夫人望着离去的车辆，看了好一会儿。后来她转过身，仿佛要回屋子里去，见到我们站在人行道上，突然停了下来，仿佛朝后退缩了一点。

“我们要走了，”我说，“谢谢你跟我们讲话。请代我们跟艾米丽小姐道别。”

我看到她在渐渐暗去的光线里仔细观察我。然后她说：

“凯西·H，我记得你。对，我记得。”她说完就不作声了，但仍是盯着我看。

“我想我知道你在想什么，”最后，我说，“我想我能猜得出。”

“那很好。”她的声音犹如梦呓，眼神仿佛有些失焦，“很好。你能看透别人的心思。那你来告诉我吧。”

“曾经有一次你见到过我，一天下午，在宿舍里。旁边没有别人，我在放磁带，放音乐。我闭着眼睛好像在跳舞，你看到了我。”

“说得很好。你真的懂读心术。你应该站到舞台上表演。我这才刚刚认出是你。可是没错，我记得那一次。我现在还时不时想起来。”

“真有趣。我也是。”

“是嘛。”

我们本可以就此结束谈话。我们本可以说声再见，然后离开。可她朝前一步靠近我们，同时紧紧盯着我的脸。

“你那时候年纪要小得多，”她说，“但是没错，就是你。”

“如果你不愿意可以不回答，”我说，“可这总是让我很困惑。我可以问你个问题吗？”

“你能读懂我的心思。可我看不透你的。”

“这个，你那天……很难过。你在看我，然后我感觉到了，睁开了眼睛，看到你在看着我，我想你当时哭了。事实上，我确信你是在哭。你看着我，在哭泣。那是为什么？”

夫人的表情毫无变化，她仍是盯着我的脸。“我在哭泣，”最终她非常低声地开口说道，仿佛怕邻居会听到似的，“因为当我进来的时候听到了你的音乐。我以为是哪个笨蛋学生忘记把音乐关掉了。但当我来到你的宿舍，我看到你一个人，孤单单一个小女孩在跳舞。正如你所说，眼睛闭着，心怀向往，神游远方。你舞得充满悲悯之情。还有音乐，那首歌。歌词里面有些什么。充满了伤感。”

“那首歌，”我说，“名叫《莫失莫忘》。”随后我轻轻压低了声音唱了几句给她听。“莫失莫忘。噢，宝贝，宝贝。莫失莫忘……”

她仿佛表示赞同一般，点了点头。“没错，就是这首歌。打那之后，我又听到过一两次。电台里、电视上。这歌总会将我带回那个小女孩孤单单一个人跳舞的画面。”

“你说你不懂读心术，”我说，“但是也许那天你读懂了我的心思。也许因此你看到我才会哭了起来。也许不论那首歌到底唱的是什么，当我跳舞的时候，我脑子里有我自己理解的意思。你知道吗，我想象这歌唱的是一个女人，她知道自己不能有小孩。但后来她有了一个宝宝，她非常高兴，把宝宝紧紧抱在胸口，很怕有什么会把他们分开，于是她就轻轻地唱，宝贝，宝贝，莫失莫忘。这根本不是歌词原来的意思，但那时候，我心里想的就是这幅画面。也许你读懂了我的心思，所以你才觉得这歌令人伤心。我当时并没觉得这歌有那么让人难过，但现在回想起来，确实让人有点伤感。”

我是对着夫人讲这些话的，但我感觉到汤米在我身边动来动去，意识到他衣服的质地，以及他的一切。后来夫人说：

“这很有趣。可我当初也不比现在更懂得看透别人的想法。我流眼泪是因为完全不同的原因。那天当我看你跳舞的时候，我有不同的感受。我看到一个新世界迅速地到来。更加科学，更有效率，没错。多年的顽疾有救了。很好。但这是一个更冷酷、更无情的世界。我看到一个小姑娘，她双眼紧闭，将旧的世界紧紧搂在胸口，她打心底里知道，这个旧世界将不复存在，于是将它抱紧，哀求着，莫失莫忘。那就是我所看到的画面。我知道，真的并不是因为你或者你在做的事。但我看到了你，这场景令我心碎。我从此永志不忘。”

这时她朝前走了两步，直到距离我俩只有一两步远才停下。“今天傍晚你说的故事，也很打动我。”她转眼看看汤米，又转回来看看我。“可怜的小家伙。真希望我能帮你们。但现在你们得靠自己了。”

她伸出一只手，始终盯着我的脸，同时将手摸到了我的脸颊上。我感到她全身一阵颤抖，可她并没将手拿开，我又一次看到她眼中涌出了泪水。

“你们这些可怜的小家伙，”她又说了一遍，声音轻得如同耳语。然后她就转过身，回到了自己家。

回程中我们几乎没有讨论跟艾米丽小姐和夫人的会面。即便是说到，我们也只是聊聊那些不重要的事，比如我们都觉得她们看上去老了很多，或是关于她们家里的东西。

我一直尽量让两人乘坐的车子行驶在偏僻的小路上，沿途只有我们的车灯打破黑暗。我们偶尔会跟其他车灯遭遇，这时我会感觉，车上坐的也是护理员，也许他一个人开车回家，再不然就像我一样，身旁坐着他负责的捐献者。当然我明白其他的人也会开车走在路上；但那天晚上，我仿佛感觉全国所有这些小路的存在，都是为了我们这样的人，而那些亮堂堂的、有巨大指示牌和大型咖啡厅的大路是给其他人用的。我不知道汤米是不是有类似的想法。也许他也跟我一样，因为有一次他说：

“凯丝，你真的认识很多奇怪的小路呢。”

他说这话的时候轻轻笑了一声，但随后他仿佛陷入了沉思。后来，当我们在不知什么地方的偏僻后街，沿着一条特别黑的小路行驶

的时候，他突然说：

“我觉得露西小姐是对的，艾米丽小姐错了。”

我不记得自己有没有回答他。如果我说了什么，也绝不是有什么有深度的答案。但这时我才第一次留意到，他的声音，或者是仪态，隐约流露出值得警惕的讯息。我记得自己将眼光离开曲折的路面转去看他，可他就只是默默地坐在原地，双眼直视着前方的夜幕。

几分钟之后，他突然说：“凯丝，我们停一下好吗？很抱歉，我得下车。”

我以为他又不舒服了，几乎立刻就将车开到路边，紧贴着树篱停了下来。那地方完全没有灯光，即便车灯亮着，我还是担心会有其他车转弯过来撞上我们。因此当汤米下了车，消失在黑暗中的时候，我并没有跟上去。况且，他下车的样子显得目的明确，哪怕他的确是不舒服了，看他的意思也是想一个人应付。总之，我因此就留在了车上，心里想着不知是否应该再把车往上坡再开一段，这时我听到了第一声尖叫。

开始我根本没想到那会是他，我以为有个疯子躲在灌木丛里。等我下了车，第二声、第三声尖叫传来的时候，我这时才知道那是汤米，但知道了之后我更加着急了。实际上，有一个片刻，我完全不知道他在哪里，惊恐之下几乎乱了方寸。我什么都看不见，当我试图朝尖叫的声音走去时，却遭遇了一片拦路的灌木丛。后来终于找到一个缺口，然后迈过一条沟，我才踏到了软绵绵的泥巴地上。

这时我终于可以更明白地看清楚周围的环境。我站在一片田里，我面前不远处，地面就是一片陡峭的下坡，我能看到下面山谷里某个村庄里亮起的灯火。风真的很大，一阵风打到我身上，人几乎要倒下，我只得去扶篱笆柱。月亮还不太圆，但却很亮，我能分辨出汤米的身影出现在前面不太远，就在田地开始下坡的地方，他愤怒、嘶吼、甩着拳头，到处乱踢。

我想朝他跑过去，但泥巴粘住了我的脚。泥巴同样也阻碍着他，因为一次，他一脚踢出去人就滑倒，摔倒在黑暗中消失不见了。可他那含混的咒骂声没被打断，仍在继续。他刚一重新站起来，我终于来到了他身边。月光中我看到了他的脸，沾满了厚厚的泥巴，愤怒得扭曲变形，然后我拉住他甩动的胳膊，紧紧搂住不放。他试图甩开我，但我坚持不放手，一直到他停止喊叫，我感觉他身体不再抗争。这时我意识到，他的双臂也在拥抱着我。于是我们就像这样站在一起，在

那片田野的最高处，待了仿佛很久很久，什么话都没有说，就只是彼此紧紧抱在一起，狂风一直往我们身上刮过来，扯动我们的衣服，有一会儿感觉就好像只有我们抱在一起，才可以避免被吹到茫茫黑夜中去。

最终当我们分开来的时候，他嗫嚅道：“真对不起，凯丝。”随后他勉强地笑了一下，又说：“幸亏地里没有牛。要是牲口肯定要被吓坏了。”

我看得出他是在竭力安慰我，现在一切都没事了，但他的胸口仍在剧烈起伏，双腿也在发抖。我们一起走回到车旁，小心着不要滑倒。

“你一身的牛粪味儿，”最后我说。

“哎呀，天哪，凯丝，这我回去怎么解释？我们得想办法从后门溜进去。”

“可你还得签到呢。”

“哎呀，天哪，”他说完，又笑了起来。

我在车上找到几块抹布，两人尽量把最明显的泥渍擦掉了。但我在后备厢找抹布的时候，也把装有他那些动物画作的运动包取了出来，当我们再次开车的时候，我留意到汤米把包拿了进去，放在自己身边。

我们开了一段，没说什么，那包就放在他腿上。我等待着他开口说几句关于那些画儿的事；一度我甚至怕他会情绪再次失控，将所有的画扔到车窗外去。可他小心用双手护着包，眼睛怔怔地望着我们面前不断延展的黑暗长路。沉默许久之后，他说：

“刚才的事我很抱歉，凯丝。真的，我真是白痴。”然后他又补了一句：“你在想什么呢，凯丝？”

“我在想，”我说，“那时候在黑尔舍姆，有时候你会像刚才这样大发脾气，当初我们不能理解。我们不能理解你怎么会变成那样。我刚才突然想到，其实只是这样一转念。我想也许你当初之所以会变成那样是因为在某种程度上，你始终都知道。”

汤米想了一会儿，然后摇摇头。“我觉得不是这样，凯丝。不，我这个人就是这样。我犯浑。仅此而已。”然后又过了一会儿，他轻

笑一声，说道：“但这想法很有趣啊。也许我真的知道，深深的潜意识里。知道一些你们其他人不懂的事。”

第二十三章

那次出行之后过了一个多礼拜，一切似乎都没什么变化。可我知道情况不会这样持续下去，果不其然，一进十月，我就开始注意到一些微小的变化。比如，虽然汤米仍然在画那些动物，却对我看到他画画表现出一些警惕。两人并没有回到我刚刚给他做护理员时的那种状态，而农舍时代的旧事阴影仍然笼罩在我们之间。但他仿佛已经考虑清楚，并且做出了决定：他会随兴而作，继续画他的动物，如果我进来，他就停下来，把画收起来。我并没有因此感到受伤。事实上，从我的角度来看，这倒让我松了口气：两个人在一起的时候，那些动物盯着我们的脸，只会让情况更尴尬。

但还有一些变化我就无法感觉那么轻松了。倒不是说我们从此再没有在楼上他的房间里享受过好时光。我们甚至仍然时不时会做爱。可现在我总是忍不住留意到，汤米越来越多地跟康复中心其他捐献者获得认同。比如，倘或我们俩一起在聊起黑尔舍姆的故人，或迟或早，他总会将话题转到他现在的捐献者朋友，也许说过或者做过什么跟我们回忆相似的事。具体有一次，我开了很长时间的車，终于到了金斯费尔德，从车上下來。广场看起来跟我陪露丝去看船的那天，來到这家康复中心的样子很像。那是一个阴云密布的秋日午后，周围没什么人，只有娱乐室的屋檐底下聚集着一群捐献者。我看到汤米就在他们之中——他站在那边，一边肩膀靠在柱子上——在听一个蹲坐在门口台阶上的捐献者说话。我朝他们走了几步，然后停下来站在露天里，那片灰暗的天空下等着。可是尽管汤米已经看到了我，却仍是在听他朋友讲话，终于他和其他人一起哈哈大笑起来。即便这时，他还是继续在倾听，面带微笑。后来他自己说曾经示意我过去找他，但如果他表示过，那也完全不明显。我只看到他含混地朝我所在方向露出微笑，然后就转头去听他朋友讲段子了。好吧，就算是他当时听到一半，好在过了一分钟左右，他总算走了过来，于是我们俩一起上去，到了他的房间。但如果是从前，情况会完全不同。不仅仅是他让我在广场上白白等了他一阵。单是如此的话我不会太往心里去。更重要的是，那天我第一次感觉到他因为要跟我一起走开，表现出一种类似怨恨的情绪。当我们上楼到了他的房间之后，两人之间的气氛也不太融洽。

说句公道话，很大程度上这可能既是他的问题，我这方面也有责任。因为当我站在那里，看着他们说说笑笑的时候，我意料之外地感到一种小小的触动；因为那些捐献者自然而然围成一个大致的半圆形，他们几乎刻意地摆出放松的姿态，或立或坐，仿佛向世界宣布他们每一个都是多么享受彼此的陪伴，这让我想起来我们一群小伙伴从前的样子，总是在运动馆几个人围坐一起。正如我所说，这种类比触发了我内心的一些感受，因此也许，等我们上楼到了他的房间之后，我心里同样也有怨恨之意，与他对我的感觉并无二致。

同样，每次他对我说因为我还不是捐献者，所以某些事我理解不了的时候，我也会感到丝丝的刺痛和怨恨。但是只有一次例外，具体事件我马上讲到，除此之外问题就只是这样丝丝的刺痛而已。通常他会半开玩笑，几乎是带着爱意地对我说起这些事。即便有的时候事情更严重一点，比如有一次他对我说，不让我再把他的脏衣服拿去洗衣房了，因为他自己能去，但这些小口角也没有变成争吵。那次我问他：

“这有什么区别呢，我们俩谁把毛巾拿下楼去？我反正要下去的嘛。”

对此他摇头回答道：“你瞧，凯丝，我自己的事自己能处理。如果你是捐献者，你就明白了。”

的确，这确实感觉有点烦人，但这种事我可以轻易忘掉。但正如我所说，有一次他说起这样的话，我不是捐献者云云，就真的惹火了我。

那是在他第四次捐献的通知送达大约一周之后。我们都知道这通知要来，关于这个已经深入地谈了不少。事实上，自从那次去利特尔汉普顿回来，我们谈了很多心底至深至密的话。我早已了解捐献者对于他们第四次捐献的反应各有不同。有些人会随时想谈这件事，无休无止，毫无方向地谈。有人只会玩笑中提及，还有人根本拒绝谈论此事。再者捐献者中间有这样一种古怪的风尚，会将第四次捐献当成是一件值得庆祝的成就。有捐献者要“四进宫”了，那么即便他迄今为止都不大受人待见，如今也会受到特别尊重的对待。连医生护士都会来这套：当第四次捐献的人进来做检查的时候，白大褂们会微笑相迎，上前握手。而我和汤米曾谈起过所有这些事，有时是玩笑，有时是严肃认真地交流。我们讨论过大家处理这件事所尝试的各种方式，到底哪种方式最为合理。有一次，我们并排躺在床上，等待暮色降临，他说：

“你知道为什么吗，凯丝，为什么每个人都那么担心第四次？那是因为谁都不准这是不是真正的完结。如果你确信这次就完了，那就会比较容易。但他们从来不会明确给我们讲。”

有段时间我已经在考虑，我们会不会聊到这件事。我也曾考虑过应该如何应答。可是事到临头，我却找不到什么话可说。于是我只说：“这都是些废话，汤米。都是空谈，胡说八道而已。不值得认真考虑。”

但汤米应该会知道，我没有任何东西来证实我的这些话。他也应该知道，他提出的问题，就连医生也没有确切的答案。你也会听到同样的谈话。也许在第四次捐献之后，哪怕从技术上讲，你已经完结了，但某种程度上你依然保有意识；这时你会发现还有更多的捐献，很多很多捐献，在这条分界线的另一边；再也没有康复中心，没有护理人员，没有朋友；你只能眼睁睁看着自己捐出剩余的一切，什么也做不了，直到他们将你关掉。这是恐怖电影里才有的东西，大多数时候人们不愿意去想这些。白大褂们不愿意，护理人员不愿意——通常捐献者们也不愿意。但时不时会有捐献者提起这些，就像汤米那天晚上一样，现在我真希望我们曾谈过这些。可是实际上，当我斥之为胡说八道之后，我们俩都退缩了，对这个领域完全避而不谈。至少，我知道在那之后，汤米依然想着这些，我很高兴至少他曾跟我谈到这样深藏的心事。我想说的是，总的来说在我的印象中，我们共同面对第四次捐献的到来，处理得还不错，因此那天我们俩在田野里散步的时候，他说的话让我大吃一惊，不知所措。

金斯费尔德没有太多空地面积。很明显广场就是个集合点，还有就是大楼后面有一点零星地面，看起来犹如废墟。其中最大的一块，捐献者们称之为“田野”，是一片用铁丝网围起来的长方形空地，上面长满了杂草和刺蓟。一直有说法，要把这块地方改造成草坪，供捐献者使用，但直到今天，他们也还没实施。然而即便他们真的改造了，这块地方也不会太安静，因为附近就是大路。可是当捐献者心神不宁，需要散心的时候，他们常常会到这里来，从那些荨麻和野蔷薇中间穿过。我提到的那一天早上，雾很大，我知道田野里肯定湿透了，但汤米坚持要我们去那里散步。不出预料，那里就只有我们两个人——这可能正好合了汤米的心意。两人披荆斩棘在灌木丛中走了几分钟之后，他在防护栏旁边停了下来，盯着另外一边茫茫的大雾。然后他说：

“凯丝，我希望你不要误会。但我想了很久。凯丝，我想我应该换一个护理员。”

他说完这句话的几秒钟内，我就发现自己完全不感到意外；好像不知不觉中我已经在等着这一刻的到来。但我依然感到很生气，于是什么也没说。

“不光是因为第四次捐献就要到了，”他接着说，“不光是因为这个。而是因为像上星期那样的事。我们碰到肾出问题的那些麻烦。接下来这样的事会越来越多。”

“所以我才来找到你，”我说，“我正是因此才来帮助你的。为了现在即将开始的一切。这也是露丝所希望的。”

“露丝希望我们一起是为了别的事，”汤米说，“她倒未必想要你给我做护理员一直到最后。”

“汤米，”我说，我觉得到这时我已经怒火中烧了，但还是尽量压低声音，控制自己，“我就是来帮你的。我就是为此才来，再次找到你的。”

“露丝希望我们一起是为了别的事，”汤米重复道，“不是现在这些。凯丝我不想在你面前那样。”

他低头望着地面，一只手掌压在铁丝网栅栏上，有一会儿他看起来仿佛在留心听大雾中某处传来的车声。就在这时他一边轻轻摇着头，一边说出了那句话：

“露丝会明白的。她是个捐献者，所以她应该能明白。我倒不是说她一定会希望自己也这样。如果她有选择，也许她会想要你给我做护理员直到最后。但她能够明白，理解我想要不同的做法。凯丝，有时候你就是不明白。你不明白因为你不是个捐献者。”

就在他说出这话之后，我掉头就走了。正如我所说的，对于他不想再让我给他做护理员这件事，我几乎已经有了准备。先前的众多小事不足论，比如在广场上他让我站着等的那次，但那时他说的话真正刺痛了我。他就这样再一次将我排除在外，不仅仅是其他捐献者之外，更是他和露丝之外。

但这从未演变成一场大的冲突。我走掉之后，也没别的事可以做，只好重新上楼回到他的房间，后来过了几分钟他也上来了。那时我已经冷静下来，他也一样，我们终于可以更好地谈谈这件事。场面

有点僵，但我们保持了平和，甚至谈到了一些换护理员的实际问题。然后，我们坐在昏暗的灯光里，肩并肩坐在他的床边，他对我说：

“我不希望我们再争吵了，凯丝。但我一直想问你这个问题。我说，一直当护理员难道你没有厌倦吗？我们其余所有人，我们很久以前就成了捐献者。你做这个已经很多年了。难道有时候你不会希望么，凯丝，让他们快点给你送通知？”

我耸耸肩。“我无所谓。再说，有好的护理员很重要。我是个很好的护理员。”

“可是真的有那么重要吗？没错，有个好护理员的确很不错。但最终，这真的有那么重要吗？捐献者总要去捐献，都一样，然后就完结了。”

“当然很重要。一个好护理员能给捐献者的实际生活带来很大不同。”

“可是你整天来回奔波。总是疲惫不堪，孤身一人。我一直观察着你。你已经筋疲力尽。你一定想的，凯丝，有时候你一定会希望他们来对你说你可以停下来了。我不知道你为什么不去找他们说说，问问他们为什么耽搁这么久。”我依然沉默不语，他接着说：“我姑且一说，仅此而已。我们不要再争吵了。”

我将头靠在他肩上，说道：“是啊，那好。也许反正要不了多久了。但眼下我还得继续。哪怕你不希望我在身边，还会有其他人需要。”

“我猜你说得对，凯丝。你真的是个很好的护理员。如果你不是你，那么对于我你就是个完美的护理员。”他笑了一声，伸出胳膊搂住我，可我们仍是那样并排坐着。后来他说：“我总是想到，不知哪里有这么条河，水流很快很急。水里有两个人，试图抓住彼此，他们尽量紧紧地抱在一起，但最终还是承受不住。水流真的太湍急。他们不得不松开手，就此分散。我觉得我们就像这样。太可惜了，凯丝，因为我们一辈子都爱着彼此。但最终我们却不能永远在一起。”

他说这些话的时候，我记起了那天夜里，从利特尔汉普顿回来的路上，在狂风大作的田野里，我跟他紧紧相拥的样子。我不知道他是否也想到了同样的事，抑或他仍在想象着河流和湍急的水流。总之我们就那样继续坐在床边过了很久，沉浸在各自的思绪中。最终我对他说：

“我很抱歉先前对你发火了。我去跟他们讲。我会尽量确保让你有个真正好的护理员。”

“太可惜了，凯丝，”他又说了一遍。然后我想那天上午我们就没有再谈过这事。

我记得那之后的几个礼拜——新护理员来交接之前的最后几周——风平浪静得令人吃惊。也许我和汤米都格外努力，要好好相待，但时间仿佛不知不觉就这样无忧无虑地滑走了。你也许以为我们这样在一起的状态，会有种不现实的气氛，但当时一点也不觉得奇怪。我忙于照顾北威尔士两个捐献者，没办法如愿在金斯费尔德待较长时间，可我依然做到了每周来三到四次。天气变冷了，但仍然干燥，常常阳光明媚，我们在他的房间里消磨时光，有时候做爱，更多的时候就只是谈天，或是汤米听我读书。有一两次我在床上读书，汤米甚至取出了他的笔记本，开始涂鸦构思新的动物。

后来有一天我进来，那是最后的一次。我是十二月一个晴爽天气的午后，一点钟刚过的时候到的。我上楼到了他的房间，隐约期望看到某种变化——我也不知道会是什么。也许我认为他会在房间里挂起饰品之类。但是当然一切如常，总的来说，我松了一口气。汤米看起来也没有什么不同，但是当我们开始谈话之后，就很难假装这只是又一次探望而已。然而先前的几周里我们已经翻来覆去谈了那么多，没有什么特别的事，此刻我们必须得讲清楚的。我觉得两人都不想开始新的谈话，开始那种无法好好谈完，过后留下遗憾的谈话。因此我们那天的交谈显得有些空洞。

只有一件事，当我漫无目的地在他房间里走了一阵之后，我问他：

“汤米，露丝没等到弄清楚我们后来知道的那些事就完结了，你觉得这样好吗？”

他躺在床上，仍是盯着天花板，过了一会儿才说：“有意思，因为那天我也在想这件事。关于露丝你得记住，说到这些事情的时候，她总是跟咱们不一样。你和我从一开始，甚至我们还小的时候，就一直试图搞清楚各种事情的真相。凯丝，你记不记得我们那些秘密的谈话？可露丝不是这样。她总是想要相信什么。露丝就是那样。所以没错，某方面来看，我觉得这样的安排最好。”然后他又接了一句：

“当然我们所发现的那些事，艾米丽小姐，等等所有一切，对露丝都毫无影响。最终她是希望我们过得好。她真的希望我们好。”

到这个阶段，我不想再大张旗鼓地讨论露丝的是非，因此只是表示了赞同。但现在我有更多的时间去考虑这些，却拿不准自己到底是什么感受。一部分的我始终希望我俩能够把发现的一切跟露丝分享。诚然，她可能会感到难过；让她明白她对我们造成的伤害不能够像她所期待的那么容易弥补。也许容我坦白的话，我希望她在完结之前知道这一切，小部分原因就在于此。但最终我认为不是这样，真正的原因绝不止于我的报复心和恶意。因为正如汤米说的，最终她希望我们过得好，虽然那天在车里她说我永远都不会原谅她，但这点她说错了。我现在对她已经不抱有丝毫的怒意。当我说我希望她能够了解全部真相的时候，更多是因为我想到她的结局跟我和汤米不同，这让我觉得难过。像现在这样，仿佛有一条线，我们在这边，而露丝在另一边，等到话都说完，一切了结之后，这让我感到难过，我想如果她看得到，也会有同样的感受。

我和汤米那天并没有做特别大的告别的表示。时候到了，他就跟我一起下楼，平常他不这样，这次我们一起穿过广场，走到车旁。因为冬天日头短，这时太阳已经落到了楼房后面。跟平常一样，延伸出的屋顶下影影绰绰有几个人，但广场上空落落的。一路走到车边汤米都默不作声。后来他轻轻一笑，说道：

“你知道吗，凯丝，当初在黑尔舍姆，我踢球的时候有个小秘密。我进球之后，就会像这样转过来”——他高高举起双臂，庆祝胜利——“然后我就跑回队友身边。我从来不会发狂或是怎样，就只是像这样，举起双臂跑回去。”他顿了一下，双臂依然举在空中。然后他放下胳膊，微笑起来。“在我的脑海里，凯丝，跑回去的时候我总是想象着我是踩在水里，水花四溅。水不深，最多只到脚踝。这就是我那时的想象，每次都是。水花四溅，到处泼洒，到处都是。”他再次举起双臂。“感觉真的很棒。你刚刚进了球，转身，然后就水花四溅，到处泼洒，到处泼洒。”他望着我，又轻轻笑了一声。“这么长时间以来，我跟一个人都没讲过。”

我笑了，说道：“你这个疯小孩，汤米。”

然后，我们亲吻——只是轻轻一吻——随后我上了车。汤米仍是站在原地，看我将车调头。随后当我开车离开的时候，他微笑，挥手。我在后视镜中望着他，他一直站在那里，几乎到最后。最后我看到他含混地抬了下手，就转头朝那片延伸的屋顶下方走去。然后广场就从镜中消失不见了。

几天之前，我跟一个捐献者谈天，他抱怨说记忆这东西，哪怕是你最珍贵的回忆，也会飞快地淡忘，出人意外。但我不同意这种看法。我最珍贵的回忆，我发现我从未淡忘。我失去了露丝，然后我又失去了汤米，但我决不会失去关于他们的记忆。

我想我大约也失去了黑尔舍姆。你还能听到这样的故事，某个前黑尔舍姆的学生试图去找它，或者不如说是去找他当初所在的地方。有时还会有零星的流言，说如今黑尔舍姆变成了什么——一家酒店，一所学校，一片废墟。而我，虽然总是开着车到处走，却从未试图去找它。我真的没什么兴趣去看它，不论它现在变成了什么样子。

可我要说的是，虽然我说我从未去找寻黑尔舍姆，但却发现有的时候，当我开车到处走在路上，我会突然觉得发现了黑尔舍姆的零星点滴。我远远地看到一座运动馆，就确信那是我们那幢。或是天边出现一排白杨树，紧挨着一棵大橡树，瞬间我就会认为自己是从小到了我们的南操场。有一次，一个灰蒙蒙的早上，我行驶在格洛斯特郡一条漫漫长路上，路过了停车带上一辆抛锚的汽车，我很有把握地认为，站在车前的那个目光空洞望着来往车辆的女孩子，就是苏珊娜·C，她高我们几个年级，是拍卖会的值班班长之一。这些片刻的发现总会在我猝不及防的时候击中我，往往我开车行驶在路上，脑子里想着完全不相干的事。因此也许在某种层面上，我的确也在寻找黑尔舍姆。

然而正如我所说的，我并没有特地去找它，再说，到了年底我就不需要继续像这样开车跑来跑去了。因此很可能我将来也没有机会路过，再三考虑之后，我觉得这样很好。就像是我对汤米和露丝的回忆。一旦我能够过上比较平静的生活，不论他们把我送到哪间康复中心，黑尔舍姆都会始终跟我在一起，安全地保留在我脑海中，这是任何人都无法拿走的。

我只做过一件任性的事，只有一次，那是在我听说汤米完结的两个礼拜之后，虽然没有实际需要，可我还是开车到了诺福克。我并没有特地去寻找什么，也没有走那么远到海边去。也许我只是想看看那些平整空旷、一望无际的田野，还有灰蒙蒙的辽阔天空。一度我发觉自己开在一条从未走过的路上，大约半小时的工夫，我不知道自己身处何地，也不理会。我路过了一片又一片平整而毫无特色的田野，风景几乎完全没有变化，除了偶尔有鸟群被我车子引擎的声音惊起，从犁沟里跳出来，飞上天去。最后我终于看到远处有几棵树，离路边不太远，于是我开到跟前，停车走了出去。

我发现好几英亩被犁过的土地在我面前铺展开来。面前有两条铁丝网构成的围栏阻挡，我无法进入那片田地，我看到绵延几英里的范围内，只有这条围栏和我头顶三四棵挨在一起的树阻挡着浩荡山风。围栏一路上，尤其是下面那条铁丝上，有各种各样的垃圾挂住，纠缠在上面，就像是海滩上看到的那些废弃物：其中像许多东西想必被风刮了好远，飞了不知多少英里，终于到了这些树和围栏这里才停下。高处的树枝上也是一样，我看到胡乱翻飞的破塑料包装，还有旧的袋子。就只有那一次，我站在那里，望着那些莫名其妙的垃圾，感到来自那片旷野的风吹在我身上，我开始幻想一个小小的梦境，毕竟这里是诺福克，我失去他才只有两星期而已。我想着那些垃圾，树枝上翻飞的塑料袋，围栏沿线如同海岸线一样挂住的各种东西，于是我半闭上眼睛，想象着就是在这个地方，我从童年时代起所有失去的一切都会被海水冲刷上岸，现在我就迎面站在这里，如果我等待得足够久，一个小小的身影就会出现在田野对面的天边，渐渐地越来越大，直到我认得出那是汤米，他会朝我挥手，也许甚至会喊我。这幻想仅止于此——我不允许——尽管泪水从我脸上滚落，但我没有哭泣，也没有失控。我只是等了一会儿，然后就转身回到车上，驱车朝我该去的地方驶去。

译后记

相信亲爱的读者看到这篇译后记的时候，已经读完了这本小说。这样我们可以不必担心剧透的麻烦，贴心贴肉地谈谈作品带给彼此的感受。

故事在凯西的回忆中一点点展开。石黑笔下辽阔的英格兰一片青绿，长路漫漫，主人公隔着十几年的光阴回望黑尔舍姆，仿佛为叙述加了一层柔光或者雾气。这种蕴藉冲淡的调子让我们自诩同是东方血统的中国读者感到亲切。他对于黑尔舍姆这样一所封闭式寄宿学校的描述、学生对于集体生活的感受，我们也会感到非常熟悉。他从容地描写学生群体和校园生态，每个人的成长和个性发展：露丝的霸道和自以为是，凯西的自省和汤米不合时宜的坏脾气……看起来一切都像田园牧歌一样，美好恬淡，健康而普通。

作者在二〇〇六年这本小说甫一问世不久，曾在接受日本《文学界》杂志采访中表示，他想让笔下的黑尔舍姆成为一个气泡一样的封闭、安全而小心翼翼的培育环境，“我想让这个世界成为人类的孩童时代的隐喻”。

他花那么多笔墨去描写那些日常的校园生活，孩子对导师的迷恋和信赖，拍卖会的骚动，学生之间有点疑似霸凌行为的矛盾冲突。这些描述因为来自孩子的视角，一方面显得普通、日常，另一方面又很受局限，因为一切信息都是经过严格过滤之后，经过成年管理者的授权才能透露进来。作者在《文学界》的采访中说，他希望呈现的是我们的童年时代所共有的体会：对于基本生活空间之外的大世界，我们只是听到一些言语的呈现，对于其实际的意义，其实并没有真正的理解。

而这部小说的真正意图，也并不在于揭露“为高度发达的医疗需要提供人体器官的克隆人群体的悲惨命运”，这一超现实的黑暗背景和恐怖现实像怪兽一样被掩埋在讲述中，偶尔雾气消散，才会显露一二。初次阅读的过程中，这种随着孩童的认知渐渐揭露的现实设置，成为了一种揪心的悬念，但这种悬疑气氛并不是作者所特意制造的，他所更在意的是随着孩子的成长，世界的真相一点点展开的这个过程，而这也是我们所有人长大的过程中都曾亲身经历过，足以感同身受的。

小说中汤米所画的那些怪异的动物，那些他想象中的神奇生物，有着金属或者橡胶质感的超现实外形，他为它们精心绘制各种细节，想象它们如何取物、进食、自我防御。汤米讲述自己创作的时候，我不禁想这里暴露了作家本人的创作思路。他就像汤米画他的动物一样，在构思和创作《莫失莫忘》这个充满真实情感、人物血肉丰盈、气息俨然的超现实世界。

二〇一七年石黑获得诺贝尔文学奖，用他本人的话说，这几乎是“荒诞”的至高荣誉为他带来了更多好奇的读者。我们这些悄悄喜欢、追随他多年的老读者，习惯了他慢节奏的写作，题材跨度之大，以及无论写什么，都力透纸背的“丧”气。《莫失莫忘》这本小说问世于二〇〇五年，二〇〇七年我第一次读到，阅读的美感和痛感一样强烈，久久萦绕。近十年之后，当译文社的编辑冯涛先生提出让我来重译这本小说的时候，最先袭上心头的记忆是作品中无可慰藉的苦痛，苦到我曾想推掉这差事。幸亏编辑先生坚持认为我是合适的译者人选，于是我才有幸逐字逐句地细读，并且通过自己的译笔跟读者分享这部落笔细碎，却具有强大情感冲击力的小说作品。

曾经我以为这种深刻的悲哀和宿命之感是因为石黑的东方背景——我曾肤浅地以为，中国与日本这些儒家为主导的文化中，有这样一种逆势思潮时不时会卷上来，认为一切都是徒劳，就像西藏僧侣们做的沙画：所有精心的设计，终生的经营，最终风过无踪，了无痕迹。

作家用以对抗这种徒劳、宿命和消亡的，是看似微弱渺小而不可靠的普通人的记忆和讲述。无论是最近新作《被掩埋的巨人》中在记忆的迷雾中艰难跋涉的那对远古时代的老夫妇，《莫失莫忘》中刚成年就会被当成器官收割的克隆人族群，以及《长日将尽》中巨族豪宅的老管家，都是人群中的异类，时代的弃儿。与千禧一代天生特权的认知正相反，他笔下的人物，都身处边缘，地位卑微。《莫失莫忘》最为极端，你甚至无法确定这些人物算不算是真正意义上的人类，更谈不上天赋人权。然而克隆人也罢，像小说中夫人所称的“可怜的小东西”也罢，凯西、汤米和露丝长久纠缠的情感之深厚和真切，却写满了人之为人、文明之所以延续的核心意义。

二〇一〇年，《莫失莫忘》被美国导演马克·罗曼尼克拍成电影，要在九十分钟内全方位呈现一个十几万字的故事，就要有许多删减，而视觉的讲述跟文字自然会有不同取舍。小说中我印象非常深刻的一段，影片的处理方式让我感觉有些潦草和失望。这也是小说中我

认为的高潮部分，即凯西和汤米带着画作，按照露丝留下的地址，去找夫人申请延期捐献——甚至不是免于捐献，他们反复计划，斗胆谋求的无非是真爱的两人能有两三年的时间共处，专心相爱而已。

小说中透过凯西的视角，我们看到这座海滨住宅幽暗神秘，人们仿佛话里有话，每个动作都意义指向不明。这就是凯西和汤米认识中的人类生活：神秘莫测，难以理解。当艾米丽小姐坐着轮椅从阴影中出来的时候，读者不禁期望她会有更多的情感流露。她为之奋斗终生的黑尔舍姆事业已经告终，但这两个孩子是她事业的成果，他们的成就值得她自豪。然而她一心都放在要卖掉的柜子上，甚至基本的待客礼仪都欠奉，终究“我们”和“他们”的壁垒如此森严，毕竟她要从轮椅上站起来、恢复健康，多半还要指望从“他们”身上收获的器官。

影片把“捐献”实在地呈现在你面前时，让捐献者鱼肉在案一般倒在手术台上任人宰割的时候，那种残酷的视觉冲击让观众不得不逼问：“他们为什么不反抗，为什么不逃跑，逃离这种悲惨的宿命？”因此影片增加了一个手腕打卡的设施，为克隆人管控机制做了相应的设定。

石黑先生并不是科幻作家，他不去解释“培育克隆人用于器官移植，首先要解决抗拒现象，抹除一切攻击性气质”。但读书的时候你还是会发现，凯西是一个出色的护理员，汤米很为自己是一个不错的捐献者感到自豪，即便是最不服输的露丝，也尽职尽责地完成了捐献者的宿命，虽然曾梦想在干净明亮的办公室里工作，到头来也只是承认自己年少无知，犯傻而已。他们不质疑被剥夺的人生，不反抗生来的宿命。

作者曾在采访中表示：“从我的世界观来看，我认为人们无论承受怎样的痛苦，无论遭遇怎样的悲惨经历，无论如何不自由，都会在命运的夹缝中求生，接受命运给予的一切。人们不懈奋斗，努力在如此狭小的生存空间内寻找梦想和希望。这类人始终比那些破坏体制、实施叛乱的人更令我感兴趣。”

这种东方式——或者说英国式——的隐忍和“认命”，也在石黑一雄作品里贯穿始终，反复讲述。而当我们跟着凯西的步伐走过三十一岁的年纪，也会觉得够了，一生已经够长。当你跟随凯西站在田野里，面对着缀满垃圾塑料袋的铁丝网，想象着人生中失去的一切都随着海水冲刷上来，涌过来。无论三十岁也罢，八十岁也罢，人生注定

要经历的那些失落，一盒磁带或是一辈子的挚爱，终究一样会像这样一去不回，又在记忆中辗转翻滚，直到生命终结。

石黑一雄一九五四年出生于日本长崎，父亲是位研究海洋的学者。一雄五岁的时候，因为父亲受邀到萨里郡的英国国家海洋学研究院工作的机缘，全家搬到了英国。他在英国读书、长大，读大学之前还去美国和加拿大度过了一个“间隔年”，他曾有志于从事音乐行业，曾将自己录制的样带寄往唱片公司，后来他也曾认真写过几首爵士乐歌曲，多半是为美国女歌手史黛西·肯特所作。不知本书的点题歌曲《莫失莫忘》是不是来自作者本人实际的音乐创作。

石黑从肯特郡大学读完英文和哲学专业本科，当他决定从事文学创作之后，又去东英吉利大学继续读创意写作。这所大学地处诺福克郡（英格兰失落的一角）的诺威奇市，虽然校史较短，尚不足六十年，却出了许多重要学者。在石黑一雄获得诺奖之前，该校创意写作专业最著名的毕业生当属布克奖得主伊恩·麦克尤恩。

石黑一雄直到一九八九年才重新回到日本。他说自己的日文水平犹如五岁孩童，而倘或一直在日本长大的话，他多半不会成为作家：

“我能成为作家，和我是一个来自日本的‘逃亡者’有着密切的关系。另一个原因是，我一般通过日本人父母的双眼观察英国，这导致我在长大的过程中与周围的社会之间始终隔着一定距离。一些我所有朋友都单纯地从是非曲直的角度考虑的事情，我会认为那是英国社会里存在的负面的、怪异的风俗习惯。这是隔着一段距离看待英国造成的，也成为了我当上作家的推动力。”

这种隔膜感常常是出色作家的有力武器，而石黑一雄这部小说的厉害之处在于，细密的笔触背后，现实的人类社会只是阴影一般的存在，而作者凭空构建出来的克隆人族群，却血肉真切，一动牵情。农舍里读书的凯西被清风拂动头发，她跟汤米依偎在一起，叹息那些错过的时光；躺在手术台上痛苦等待终结，却牵挂着伙伴的露丝；这长夜驱车、取小路经过人世的一生，这样短暂而微不足道的存在，一盒磁带的得失……亲爱的读者，希望我能把阅读中深刻的震动感传达给你，分享给你。

Never Let Me Go

PART ONE

CHAPTER ONE

My name is Kathy H. I'm thirty-one years old, and I've been a carer now for over eleven years. That sounds long enough, I know, but actually they want me to go on for another eight months, until the end of this year. That'll make it almost exactly twelve years. Now I know my being a carer so long isn't necessarily because they think I'm fantastic at what I do. There are some really good carers who've been told to stop after just two or three years. And I can think of one carer at least who went on for all of fourteen years despite being a complete waste of space. So I'm not trying to boast. But then I do know for a fact they've been pleased with my work, and by and large, I have too. My donors have always tended to do much better than expected. Their recovery times have been impressive, and hardly any of them have been classified as 'agitated', even before fourth donation. Okay, maybe I am boasting now. But it means a lot to me, being able to do my work well, especially that bit about my donors staying 'calm'. I've developed a kind of instinct around donors. I know when to hang around and comfort them, when to leave them to themselves; when to listen to everything they have to say, and when just to shrug and tell them to snap out of it.

Anyway, I'm not making any big claims for myself. I know carers, working now, who are just as good and don't get half the credit. If you're one of them, I can understand how you might get resentful - about my bedsit, my car, above all, the way I get to pick and choose who I look after. And I'm a Hailsham student - which is enough by itself sometimes to get people's backs up. Kathy H., they say, she gets to pick and choose, and she always chooses her own kind: people from Hailsham, or one of the other privileged estates. No wonder she has a great record. I've heard it said enough, so I'm sure you've heard it plenty more, and maybe there's something in it. But I'm not the first to be allowed to pick and choose, and I doubt if I'll be the last. And anyway, I've done my share of looking after donors brought up in every kind of place. By the time I finish, remember, I'll have done twelve years of this, and it's only for the last six they've let me choose.

And why shouldn't they? Carers aren't machines. You try and do your best for every donor, but in the end, it wears you down. You don't have unlimited patience and energy. So when you get a chance to choose, of course, you choose your own kind. That's natural. There's no way I could have gone on for as long as I have if I'd stopped feeling for my donors every step of the way. And anyway, if I'd never started choosing, how would I ever have got close again to Ruth and Tommy after all those years?

But these days, of course, there are fewer and fewer donors left who I remember, and so in practice, I haven't been choosing that much. As I say, the work gets a lot harder when you don't have that deeper link with the donor, and though I'll miss being a carer, it feels just about right to be finishing at last come the end of the year.

Ruth, incidentally, was only the third or fourth donor I got to choose. She already had a carer assigned to her at the time, and I remember it taking a bit of nerve on my part. But in the end I managed it, and the instant I saw her again, at that recovery centre in Dover, all our differences - while they didn't exactly vanish - seemed not nearly as important as all the other things: like the fact that we'd grown up together at Hailsham, the fact that we knew and remembered things no one else did. It's ever since then, I suppose, I started seeking out for my donors people from the past, and whenever I could, people from Hailsham.

There have been times over the years when I've tried to leave Hailsham behind, when I've told myself I shouldn't look back so much. But then there came a point when I just stopped resisting. It had to do with this particular donor I had once, in my third year as a carer; it was his reaction when I mentioned I was from Hailsham. He'd just come through his third donation, it hadn't gone well, and he must have known he wasn't going to make it. He could hardly breathe, but he looked towards me and said: 'Hailsham. I bet that was a beautiful place.' Then the next morning, when I was making conversation to keep his mind off it all, and I asked where he'd grown up, he mentioned some place in Dorset and his face beneath the blotches went into a completely new kind of grimace. And I realised then how desperately he didn't want to be reminded. Instead, he wanted to hear about Hailsham.

So over the next five or six days, I told him whatever he wanted to know, and he'd lie there, all hooked up, a gentle smile breaking through. He'd ask me about the big things and the little things. About our guardians, about how we each had our own collection chests under our beds, the football, the rounders, the little path that took you all round the outside of the main house, round all its nooks and crannies, the duck pond, the food, the view from the Art Room over the fields on a foggy morning. Sometimes he'd make me say things over and over; things I'd told him only the day before, he'd ask about like I'd never told him. 'Did you have a sports pavilion?'

'Which guardian was your special favourite?' At first I thought this was just the drugs, but then I realised his mind was clear enough. What he wanted was not just to hear about Hailsham, but to remember Hailsham, just like it had been his own childhood. He knew he was close to completing and so that's what he was doing: getting me to describe things to him, so they'd really sink in, so that maybe during those sleepless nights, with the drugs and the pain and the exhaustion, the line would blur between what were my memories and what were his. That was when I first understood, really understood, just how lucky we'd been - Tommy, Ruth, me, all the rest of us.

Driving around the country now, I still see things that will remind me of Hailsham. I might pass the corner of a misty field, or see part of a large house in the distance as I come down the side of a valley, even a particular arrangement of poplar trees up on a hillside, and I'll think: 'Maybe that's it! I've found it! This actually is Hailsham!' Then I see it's impossible and I go on driving, my thoughts drifting on elsewhere. In particular, there are those pavilions. I spot them all over the country, standing on the far side of playing fields, little white prefab buildings with a row of windows unnaturally high up, tucked almost under the eaves. I think they built a whole lot like that in the fifties and sixties, which is probably when ours was put up. If I drive past one I keep looking over to it for as long as possible, and one day I'll crash the car like that, but I keep doing it. Not long ago I was driving through an empty stretch of Worcestershire and saw one beside a cricket ground so like ours at Hailsham I actually turned the car and went back for a second look.

We loved our sports pavilion, maybe because it reminded us of those sweet little cottages people always had in picture books when we were young. I can remember us back in the Juniors, pleading with guardians to hold the next lesson in the pavilion instead of the usual room. Then by the time we were in Senior 2 - when we were twelve, going on thirteen - the pavilion had become the place to hide out with your best friends when you wanted to get away from the rest of Hailsham.

The pavilion was big enough to take two separate groups without them bothering each other - in the summer, a third group could hang about out on the veranda. But ideally you and your friends wanted the place just to yourselves, so there was often jockeying and arguing. The guardians were always telling us to be civilised about it, but in practice, you needed to have some strong personalities in your group to stand a chance of getting the pavilion during a break or free period. I wasn't exactly the wilting type myself, but I suppose it was really because of Ruth we got in there as often as we did.

Usually we just spread ourselves around the chairs and benches – there'd be five of us, six if Jenny B. came along – and had a good gossip. There was a kind of conversation that could only happen when you were hidden away in the pavilion; we might discuss something that was worrying us, or we might end up screaming with laughter, or in a furious row. Mostly, it was a way to unwind for a while with your closest friends.

On the particular afternoon I'm now thinking of, we were standing up on stools and benches, crowding around the high windows. That gave us a clear view of the North Playing Field where about a dozen boys from our year and Senior 3 had gathered to play football. There was bright sunshine, but it must have been raining earlier that day because I can remember how the sun was glinting on the muddy surface of the grass.

Someone said we shouldn't be so obvious about watching, but we hardly moved back at all. Then Ruth said: 'He doesn't suspect a thing. Look at him. He really doesn't suspect a thing.'

When she said this, I looked at her and searched for signs of disapproval about what the boys were going to do to Tommy. But the next second Ruth gave a little laugh and said: 'The idiot!'

And I realised that for Ruth and the others, whatever the boys chose to do was pretty remote from us; whether we approved or not didn't come into it. We were gathered around the windows at that moment not because we relished the prospect of seeing Tommy get humiliated yet again, but just because we'd heard about this latest plot and were vaguely curious to watch it unfold. In those days, I don't think what the boys did amongst themselves went much deeper than that.

For Ruth, for the others, it was that detached, and the chances are that's how it was for me too.

Or maybe I'm remembering it wrong. Maybe even then, when I saw Tommy rushing about that field, undisguised delight on his face to be accepted back in the fold again, about to play the game at which he so excelled, maybe I did feel a little stab of pain. What I do remember is that I noticed Tommy was wearing the light blue polo shirt he'd got in the Sales the previous month - the one he was so proud of. I remember thinking: 'He's really stupid, playing football in that. It'll get ruined, then how's he going to feel?' Out loud, I said, to no one in particular: 'Tommy's got his shirt on. His favourite polo shirt.'

I don't think anyone heard me, because they were all laughing at Laura - the big clown in our group - mimicking one after the other the expressions that appeared on Tommy's face as he ran, waved, called, tackled. The other boys were all moving around the field in that deliberately languorous way they have when they're warming up, but Tommy, in his excitement, seemed already to be going full pelt. I said, louder this time: 'He's going to be so sick if he ruins that shirt.' This time Ruth heard me, but she must have thought I'd meant it as some kind of joke, because she laughed half-heartedly, then made some quip of her own.

Then the boys had stopped kicking the ball about, and were standing in a pack in the mud, their chests gently rising and falling as they waited for the team picking to start. The two captains who emerged were from Senior 3, though everyone knew Tommy was a better player than any of that year. They tossed for first pick, then the one who'd won stared at the group.

'Look at him,' someone behind me said. 'He's completely convinced he's going to be first pick. Just look at him!'

There was something comical about Tommy at that moment, something that made you think, well, yes, if he's going to be that daft, he deserves what's coming. The other boys were all pretending to ignore the picking process, pretending they didn't care where they came in the order. Some were talking quietly to each other, some re-tying their laces, others just staring down at their feet as they trammelled the mud. But Tommy was looking eagerly at the Senior 3 boy, as though his name had already been called.

Laura kept up her performance all through the teampicking, doing all the different expressions that went across Tommy's face: the bright eager one at the start; the puzzled concern when four picks had gone by and he still hadn't been chosen; the hurt and panic as it began to dawn on him what was really going on. I didn't keep glancing round at Laura, though, because I was watching Tommy; I only knew what she was doing because the others kept laughing and egging her on. Then when Tommy was left standing alone, and the boys all began sniggering, I heard Ruth say:

'It's coming. Hold it. Seven seconds. Seven, six, five ...'

She never got there. Tommy burst into thunderous bellowing, and the boys, now laughing openly, started to run off towards the South Playing Field. Tommy took a few strides after them - it was hard to say whether his instinct was to give angry chase or if he was panicked at being left behind. In any case he soon stopped and stood there, glaring after them, his face scarlet. Then he began to scream and shout, a nonsensical jumble of swear words and insults.

We'd all seen plenty of Tommy's tantrums by then, so we came down off our stools and spread ourselves around the room. We tried to start up a conversation about something else, but there was Tommy going on and on in the background, and although at first we just rolled our eyes and tried to ignore it, in the end - probably a full ten minutes after we'd first moved away - we were back up at the windows again.

The other boys were now completely out of view, and Tommy was no longer trying to direct his comments in any particular direction. He was just raving, flinging his limbs about, at the sky, at the wind, at the nearest fence post. Laura said he was maybe 'rehearsing his Shakespeare'. Someone else pointed out how each time he screamed something he'd raise one foot off the ground, pointing it outwards, 'like a dog doing a pee'. Actually, I'd noticed the same foot movement myself, but what had struck me was that each time he stamped the foot back down again, flecks of mud flew up around his shins. I thought again about his precious shirt, but he was too far away for me to see if he'd got much mud on it.

'I suppose it is a bit cruel,' Ruth said, 'the way they always work him up like that. But it's his own fault. If he learnt to keep his cool, they'd leave him alone.'

'They'd still keep on at him,' Hannah said. 'Graham K.'s temper's just as bad, but that only makes them all the more careful with him. The reason they go for Tommy's because he's a layabout.'

Then everyone was talking at once, about how Tommy never even tried to be creative, about how he hadn't even put anything in for the Spring Exchange. I suppose the truth was, by that stage, each of us was secretly wishing a guardian would come from the house and take him away. And although we hadn't had any part in this latest plan to rile Tommy, we had taken out ringside seats, and we were starting to feel guilty. But there was no sign of a guardian, so we just kept swapping reasons why Tommy deserved everything he got. Then when Ruth looked at her watch and said even though we still had time, we should get back to the main house, nobody argued.

Tommy was still going strong as we came out of the pavilion. The house was over to our left, and since Tommy was standing in the field straight ahead of us, there was no need to go anywhere near him. In any case, he was facing the other way and didn't seem to register us at all. All the same, as my friends set off along the edge of the field, I started to drift over towards him. I knew this would puzzle the others, but I kept going – even when I heard Ruth's urgent whisper to me to come back.

I suppose Tommy wasn't used to being disturbed during his rages, because his first response when I came up to him was to stare at me for a second, then carry on as before. It was like he was doing Shakespeare and I'd come up onto the stage in the middle of his performance. Even when I said: 'Tommy, your nice shirt. You'll get it all messed up,' there was no sign of him having heard me.

So I reached forward and put a hand on his arm. Afterwards, the others thought he'd meant to do it, but I was pretty sure it was unintentional. His arms were still flailing about, and he wasn't to know I was about to put out my hand. Anyway, as he threw up his arm, he knocked my hand aside and hit the side of my face. It didn't hurt at all, but I let out a gasp, and so did most of the girls behind me.

That's when at last Tommy seemed to become aware of me, of the others, of himself, of the fact that he was there in that field, behaving the way he had been, and stared at me a bit stupidly.

'Tommy,' I said, quite sternly. 'There's mud all over your shirt.'

'So what?' he mumbled. But even as he said this, he looked down and noticed the brown specks, and only just stopped himself crying out in alarm. Then I saw the surprise register on his face that I should know about his feelings for the polo shirt.

'It's nothing to worry about,' I said, before the silence got humiliating for him. 'It'll come off. If you can't get it off yourself, just take it to Miss Jody. '

He went on examining his shirt, then said grumpily:
'It's nothing to do with you anyway. '

He seemed to regret immediately this last remark and looked at me sheepishly, as though expecting me to say something comforting back to him. But I'd had enough of him by now, particularly with the girls watching - and for all I knew, any number of others from the windows of the main house. So I turned away with a shrug and rejoined my friends.

Ruth put an arm around my shoulders as we walked away.
'At least you got him to pipe down,' she said. 'Are you okay? Mad animal. '

CHAPTER TWO

This was all a long time ago so I might have some of it wrong; but my memory of it is that my approaching Tommy that afternoon was part of a phase I was going through around that time - something to do with compulsively setting myself challenges - and I'd more or less forgotten all about it when Tommy stopped me a few days later.

I don't know how it was where you were, but at Hailsham we had to have some form of medical almost every week - usually up in Room 18 at the very top of the house - with stern Nurse Trisha, or Crow Face, as we called her. That sunny morning a crowd of us was going up the central staircase to be examined by her, while another lot she'd just finished with was on its way down. So the stairwell was filled with echoing noise, and I was climbing the steps head down, just following the heels of the person in front, when a voice near me went: 'Kath!'

Tommy, who was in the stream coming down, had stopped dead on the stairs with a big open smile that immediately irritated me. A few years earlier maybe, if we ran into someone we were pleased to see, we'd put on that sort of look. But we were thirteen by then, and this was a boy running into a girl in a really public situation. I felt like saying: 'Tommy, why don't you grow up?' But I stopped myself, and said instead: 'Tommy, you're holding everyone up. And so am I.'

He glanced upwards and sure enough the flight above was already grinding to a halt. For a second he looked panicked, then he squeezed himself right into the wall next to me, so it was just about possible for people to push past. Then he said:

‘Kath, I’ve been looking all over for you. I meant to say sorry. I mean, I’m really, really sorry. I honestly didn’t mean to hit you the other day. I wouldn’t dream of hitting a girl, and even if I did, I’d never want to hit you. I’m really, really sorry.’

‘It’s okay. An accident, that’s all.’ I gave him a nod and made to move away. But Tommy said brightly:

‘The shirt’s all right now. It all washed out.’

‘That’s good.’

‘It didn’t hurt, did it? When I hit you?’

‘Sure. Fractured skull. Concussion, the lot. Even Crow Face might notice it. That’s if I ever get up there.’

‘But seriously, Kath. No hard feelings, right? I’m awfully sorry. I am, honestly.’

At last I gave him a smile and said with no irony: ‘Look, Tommy, it was an accident and it’s now one hundred per cent forgotten. I don’t hold it against you one tiny bit.’

He still looked unsure, but now some older students were pushing behind him, telling him to move. He gave me a quick smile and patted my shoulder, like he might do to a younger boy, and pushed his way into the flow. Then, as I began to climb, I heard him shout from below: ‘See you, Kath!’

I’d found the whole thing mildly embarrassing, but it didn’t lead to any teasing or gossip; and I must admit, if it hadn’t been for that encounter on the stairs, I probably wouldn’t have taken the interest I did in Tommy’s problems over the next several weeks.

I saw a few of the incidents myself. But mostly I heard about them, and when I did, I quizzed people until I’d got a more or less full account. There were more temper tantrums, like the time Tommy was supposed to have heaved over two desks in Room 14, spilling all the contents on the floor, while the rest of the class, having escaped on to the landing, barricaded the door to stop him coming out. There was the time Mr Christopher had had to pin back his arms to stop him attacking Reggie D. during football practice. Everyone could see, too, when the Senior 2 boys went on their fields run, Tommy was the only one without a running partner. He was a good runner, and would quickly open up ten, fifteen yards between him and the rest, maybe thinking this would disguise the fact that no one wanted to run with him. Then there were rumours almost every day of pranks that had been played on him. A lot of these were the usual stuff - weird things in his bed, a worm in his cereal - but some of it sounded pointlessly nasty: like the time someone cleaned a toilet with his toothbrush so it was waiting for him with shit all over the bristles. His size and strength - and I suppose that temper - meant no one tried actual physical bullying, but from what I remember, for a couple of months at least, these incidents kept coming. I thought sooner or later someone would start saying it had gone too far, but it just kept on, and no one said anything.

I tried to bring it up once myself, in the dorm after lights-out. In the Seniors, we were down to six per dorm, so it was just our little group, and we often had our most intimate conversations lying in the dark before we fell asleep. You could talk about things there you wouldn't dream of talking about any other place, not even in the pavilion. So one night I brought up Tommy. I didn't say much; I just summed up what had been happening to him and said it wasn't really very fair. When I'd finished, there was a funny sort of silence hanging in the dark, and I realised everyone was waiting for Ruth's response - which was usually what happened whenever something a bit awkward came up. I kept waiting, then I heard a sigh from Ruth's side of the room, and she said:

‘You’ve got a point, Kathy. It’s not nice. But if he wants it to stop, he’s got to change his own attitude. He didn’t have a thing for the Spring Exchange. And has he got anything for next month? I bet he hasn’t.’

I should explain a bit here about the Exchanges we had at Hailsham. Four times a year – spring, summer, autumn, winter – we had a kind of big exhibition-cum-sale of all the things we’d been creating in the three months since the last Exchange. Paintings, drawings, pottery; all sorts of ‘sculptures’ made from whatever was the craze of the day – bashed-up cans, maybe, or bottle tops stuck onto cardboard. For each thing you put in, you were paid in Exchange Tokens – the guardians decided how many your particular masterpiece merited – and then on the day of the Exchange you went along with your tokens and ‘bought’ the stuff you liked. The rule was you could only buy work done by students in your own year, but that still gave us plenty to choose from, since most of us could get pretty prolific over a three-month period.

Looking back now, I can see why the Exchanges became so important to us. For a start, they were our only means, aside from the Sales – the Sales were something else, which I’ll come to later – of building up a collection of personal possessions. If, say, you wanted to decorate the walls around your bed, or wanted something to carry around in your bag and place on your desk from room to room, then you could find it at the Exchange. I can see now, too, how the Exchanges had a more subtle effect on us all. If you think about it, being dependent on each other to produce the stuff that might become your private treasures – that’s bound to do things to your relationships. The Tommy business was typical. A lot of the time, how you were regarded at Hailsham, how much you were liked and respected, had to do with how good you were at ‘creating’.

Ruth and I often found ourselves remembering these things a few years ago, when I was caring for her down at the recovery centre in Dover.

‘It’s all part of what made Hailsham so special,’ she said once. ‘The way we were encouraged to value each other’s work.’

‘True,’ I said. ‘But sometimes, when I think about the Exchanges now, a lot of it seems a bit odd. The poetry, for instance. I remember we were allowed to hand in poems, instead of a drawing or a painting. And the strange thing was, we all thought that was fine, we thought that made sense.’

‘Why shouldn’t it? Poetry’s important.’

‘But we’re talking about nine-year-old stuff, funny little lines, all misspelt, in exercise books. We’d spend our precious tokens on an exercise book full of that stuff rather than on something really nice for around our beds. If we were so keen on a person’s poetry, why didn’t we just borrow it and copy it down ourselves any old afternoon? But you remember how it was. An Exchange would come along and we’d be standing there torn between Susie K.’s poems and those giraffes Jackie used to make.’

‘Jackie’s giraffes,’ Ruth said with a laugh. ‘They were so beautiful. I used to have one.’

We were having this conversation on a fine summer evening, sitting out on the little balcony of her recovery room. It was a few months after her first donation, and now she was over the worst of it, I’d always time my evening visits so that we’d be able to spend a half hour or so out there, watching the sun go down over the rooftops. You could see lots of aerals and satellite dishes, and sometimes, right over in the distance, a glistening line that was the sea. I’d bring mineral water and biscuits, and we’d sit there talking about anything that came into our heads. The centre Ruth was in that time, it’s one of my favourites, and I wouldn’t mind at all if that’s where I ended up. The recovery rooms are small, but they're well-designed and comfortable. Everything - the walls, the floor - has been done in gleaming white tiles, which the centre keeps so clean when you first go in it's almost like entering a hall of mirrors. Of course, you don't exactly see yourself reflected back loads of times, but you almost think you do. When you lift an arm, or when someone sits up in bed, you can feel this pale, shadowy movement all around you in the tiles. Anyway, Ruth's room at that centre, it also had these big glass sliding panels, so she could easily see the outside from her bed. Even with her head on the pillow she'd see a big lot of sky, and if it was warm enough, she could get all the fresh air she wanted by stepping out onto the balcony. I loved visiting her there, loved those meandering talks we had, through the summer to the early autumn, sitting on that balcony together, talking about Hailsham, the Cottages, whatever else drifted into our thoughts.

'What I'm saying,' I went on, 'is that when we were that age, when we were eleven, say, we really weren't interested in each other's poems at all. But remember, someone like Christy? Christy had this great reputation for poetry, and we all looked up to her for it. Even you, Ruth, you didn't dare boss Christy around. All because we thought she was great at poetry. But we didn't know a thing about poetry. We didn't care about it. It's strange.'

But Ruth didn't get my point - or maybe she was deliberately avoiding it. Maybe she was determined to remember us all as more sophisticated than we were. Or maybe she could sense where my talk was leading, and didn't want us to go that way. Anyway, she let out a long sigh and said:

'We all thought Christy's poems were so good. But I wonder how they'd look to us now. I wish we had some here, I'd love to see what we'd think.' Then she laughed and said:

'I have still got some poems by Peter B. But that was much later, when we were in Senior 4. I must have fancied him. I can't think why else I'd have bought his poems. They're just hysterically daft. Takes himself so seriously. But Christy, she was good, I remember she was. It's funny, she went right off poems when she started her painting. And she was nowhere near as good at that.'

But let me get back to Tommy. What Ruth said that time in our dorm after lights-out, about how Tommy had brought all his problems on himself, probably summed up what most people at Hailsham thought at that time. But it was when she said what she did that it occurred to me, as I lay there, that this whole notion of his deliberately not trying was one that had been doing the rounds from as far back as the Juniors. And it came home to me, with a kind of chill, that Tommy had been going through what he'd been going through not just for weeks or months, but for years.

Tommy and I talked about all this not so long ago, and his own account of how his troubles began confirmed what I was thinking that night. According to him, it had all started one afternoon in one of Miss Geraldine's art classes. Until that day, Tommy told me, he'd always quite enjoyed painting. But then that day in Miss Geraldine's class, Tommy had done this particular watercolour - of an elephant standing in some tall grass - and that was what started it all off. He'd done it, he claimed, as a kind of joke. I quizzed him a lot on this point and I suspect the truth was that it was like a lot of things at that age: you don't have any clear reason, you just do it. You do it because you think it might get a laugh, or because you want to see if it'll cause a stir. And when you're asked to explain it afterwards, it doesn't seem to make any sense. We've all done things like that. Tommy didn't quite put it this way, but I'm sure that's how it happened.

Anyway, he did his elephant, which was exactly the sort of picture a kid three years younger might have done. It took him no more than twenty minutes and it got a laugh, sure enough, though not quite the sort he'd expected. Even so, it might not have led to anything - and this is a big irony, I suppose - if Miss Geraldine hadn't been taking the class that day.

Miss Geraldine was everyone's favourite guardian when we were that age. She was gentle, soft-spoken, and always comforted you when you needed it, even when you'd done something bad, or been told off by another guardian. If she ever had to tell you off herself, then for days afterwards she'd give you lots of extra attention, like she owed you something. It was unlucky for Tommy that it was Miss Geraldine taking art that day and not, say, Mr Robert or Miss Emily herself - the head guardian - who often took art. Had it been either of those two, Tommy would have got a bit of a telling off, he could have done his smirk, and the worst the others would have thought was that it was a feeble joke. He might even have had some students think him a right clown. But Miss Geraldine being Miss Geraldine, it didn't go that way. Instead, she did her best to look at the picture with kindness and understanding. And probably guessing Tommy was in danger of getting stick from the others, she went too far the other way, actually finding things to praise, pointing them out to the class. That was how the resentment started.

'After we left the room,' Tommy remembered, 'that's when I first heard them talking. And they didn't care I could hear.'

My guess is that from some time before he did that elephant, Tommy had had the feeling he wasn't keeping up - that his painting in particular was like that of students much younger than him - and he'd been covering up the best he could by doing deliberately childish pictures. But after the elephant painting, the whole thing had been brought into the open, and now everyone was watching to see what he did next. It seems he did make an effort for a while, but he'd no sooner have started on something, there'd be sneers and giggles all around him. In fact, the harder he tried, the more laughable his efforts turned out. So before long Tommy had gone back to his original defence, producing work that seemed deliberately childish, work that said he couldn't care less. From there, the thing had got deeper and deeper.

For a while he'd only had to suffer during art lessons - though that was often enough, because we did a lot of art in the Juniors. But then it grew bigger. He got left out of games, boys refused to sit next to him at dinner, or pretended not to hear if he said anything in his dorm after lights-out. At first it wasn't so relentless. Months could go by without incident, he'd think the whole thing was behind him, then something he did - or one of his enemies, like Arthur H. - would get it all going again.

I'm not sure when the big temper tantrums started. My own memory of it is that Tommy was always known for his temper, even in the Infants, but he claimed to me they only began after the teasing got bad. Anyway, it was those temper tantrums that really got people going, escalating everything, and around the time I'm talking about - the summer of our Senior 2, when we were thirteen - that was when the persecution reached its peak.

Then it all stopped, not overnight, but rapidly enough. I was, as I say, watching the situation closely around then, so I saw the signs before most of the others. It started with a period - it might have been a month, maybe longer - when the pranks went on pretty steadily, but Tommy failed to lose his temper. Sometimes I could see he was close to it, but he somehow controlled himself; other times, he'd quietly shrug, or react like he hadn't noticed a thing. At first these responses caused disappointment; maybe people were resentful, even, like he'd let them down. Then gradually, people got bored and the pranks became more half-hearted, until one day it struck me there hadn't been any for over a week.

This wouldn't necessarily have been so significant by itself, but I'd spotted other changes. Little things, like Alexander J. and Peter N. walking across the courtyard with him towards the fields, the three of them chatting quite naturally; a subtle but clear difference in people's voices when his name got mentioned. Then once, towards the end of an afternoon break, a group of us were sitting on the grass quite close to the South Playing Field where the boys, as usual, were playing their football. I was joining in our conversation, but keeping an eye on Tommy, who I noticed was right at the heart of the game. At one point he got tripped, and picking himself up, placed the ball on the ground to take the free kick himself. As the boys spread out in anticipation, I saw Arthur H. - one of his biggest tormentors - a few yards behind Tommy's back, begin mimicking him, doing a daft version of the way Tommy was standing over the ball, hands on hips. I watched carefully, but none of the others took up Arthur's cue. They must all have seen, because all eyes were looking towards Tommy, waiting for his kick, and Arthur was right behind him - but no one was interested. Tommy floated the ball across the grass, the game went on, and Arthur H. didn't try anything else.

I was pleased about all these developments, but also mystified. There'd been no real change in Tommy's work - his reputation for 'creativity' was as low as ever. I could see that an end to the tantrums was a big help, but what seemed to be the key factor was harder to put your finger on. There was something about Tommy himself - the way he carried himself, the way he looked people in the face and talked in his open, good-natured way - that was different from before, and which had in turn changed the attitudes of those around him. But what had brought all this on wasn't clear.

I was mystified, and decided to probe him a bit the next time we could talk in private. The chance came along before long, when I was lining up for lunch and spotted him a few places ahead in the queue.

I suppose this might sound odd, but at Hailsham, the lunch queue was one of the better places to have a private talk. It was something to do with the acoustics in the Great Hall; all the hubbub and the high ceilings meant that so long as you lowered your voices, stood quite close, and made sure your neighbours were deep in their own chat, you had a fair chance of not being overheard. In any case, we weren't exactly spoilt for choice. 'Quiet' places were often the worst, because there was always someone likely to be passing within earshot. And as soon as you looked like you were trying to sneak off for a secret talk, the whole place seemed to sense it within minutes, and you'd have no chance.

So when I saw Tommy a few places ahead of me, I waved him over - the rule being that though you couldn't jump the queue going forwards it was fine to go back. He came over with a delighted smile, and we stood together for a moment without saying much - not out of awkwardness, but because we were waiting for any interest aroused by Tommy's moving back to fade. Then I said to him:

'You seem much happier these days, Tommy. Things seem to be going much better for you.'

'You notice everything, don't you, Kath?' He said this completely without sarcasm. 'Yeah, everything's all right. I'm getting on all right.'

'So what's happened? Did you find God or something?'

'God?' Tommy was lost for a second. Then he laughed and said: 'Oh, I see. You're talking about me not ... getting so angry.'

'Not just that, Tommy. You've turned things around for yourself. I've been watching. So that's why I was asking.'

Tommy shrugged. 'I've grown up a bit, I suppose. And maybe everyone else has too. Can't keep on with the same stuff all the time. Gets boring.'

I said nothing, but just kept looking right at him, until he gave another little laugh and said: 'Kath, you're so nosy. Okay, I suppose there is something. Something that happened. If you want, I'll tell you.'

‘Well, go on then.’

‘I’ll tell you, Kath, but you mustn’t spread it, all right? A couple of months back, I had this talk with Miss Lucy. And I felt much better afterwards. It’s hard to explain. But she said something, and it all felt much better.’

‘So what did she say?’

‘Well ... The thing is, it might sound strange. It did to me at first. What she said was that if I didn’t want to be creative, if I really didn’t feel like it, that was perfectly all right. Nothing wrong with it, she said.’

‘That’s what she told you?’

Tommy nodded, but I was already turning away.

‘That’s just rubbish, Tommy. If you’re going to play stupid games, I can’t be bothered.’

I was genuinely angry, because I thought he was lying to me, just when I deserved to be taken into his confidence. Spotting a girl I knew a few places back, I went over to her, leaving Tommy standing. I could see he was bewildered and crestfallen, but after the months I’d spent worrying about him, I felt betrayed, and didn’t care how he felt. I chatted with my friend – I think it was Matilda – as cheerfully as possible, and hardly looked his way for the rest of the time we were in the queue.

But as I was carrying my plate to the tables, Tommy came up behind me and said quickly:

‘Kath, I wasn’t trying to pull your leg, if that’s what you think. It’s what happened. I’ll tell you about it if you give me half a chance.’

‘Don’t talk rubbish, Tommy.’

‘Kath, I’ll tell you about it. I’ll be down at the pond after lunch. If you come down there, I’ll tell you.’

I gave him a reproachful look and walked off without responding, but already, I suppose, I'd begun to entertain the possibility that he wasn't, after all, making it up about Miss Lucy. And by the time I sat down with my friends, I was trying to figure out how I could sneak off afterwards down to the pond without getting everyone curious.

CHAPTER THREE

The pond lay to the south of the house. To get there you went out the back entrance, and down the narrow twisting path, pushing past the overgrown bracken that, in the early autumn, would still be blocking your way. Or if there were no guardians around, you could take a short cut through the rhubarb patch. Anyway, once you came out to the pond, you'd find a tranquil atmosphere waiting, with ducks and bulrushes and pond-weed. It wasn't, though, a good place for a discreet conversation – not nearly as good as the lunch queue. For a start you could be clearly seen from the house. And the way the sound travelled across the water was hard to predict; if people wanted to eavesdrop, it was the easiest thing to walk down the outer path and crouch in the bushes on the other side of the pond. But since it had been me that had cut him off in the lunch queue, I supposed I had to make the best of it. It was well into October by then, but the sun was out that day and I decided I could just about make out I'd gone strolling aimlessly down there and happened to come across Tommy.

Maybe because I was keen to keep up this impression – though I'd no idea if anyone was actually watching – I didn't try and sit down when I eventually found him seated on a large flat rock not far from the water's edge. It must have been a Friday or a weekend, because I remember we had on our own clothes. I don't remember exactly what Tommy was wearing – probably one of the raggy football shirts he wore even when the weather was chilly – but I definitely had on the maroon track suit top that zipped up the front, which I'd got at a Sale in Senior 1. I walked round him and stood with my back to the water, facing the house, so that I'd see if people started gathering at the windows. Then for a few minutes we talked about nothing in particular, just like the lunch-queue business hadn't happened. I'm not sure if it was for Tommy's benefit, or for any onlookers', but I'd kept my posture looking very provisional, and at one point made a move to carry on with my stroll. I saw a kind of panic cross Tommy's face then, and I immediately felt sorry to have teased him, even though I hadn't meant to. So I said, like I'd just remembered:

'By the way, what was that you were saying earlier on? About Miss Lucy telling you something?'

'Oh ...' Tommy gazed past me to the pond, pretending too this was a topic he'd forgotten all about. 'Miss Lucy. Oh that.'

Miss Lucy was the most sporting of the guardians at Hailsham, though you might not have guessed it from her appearance. She had a squat, almost bulldoggy figure, and her odd black hair, when it grew, grew upwards so it never covered her ears or chunky neck. But she was really strong and fit, and even when we were older, most of us - even the boys - couldn't keep up with her on a fields run. She was superb at hockey, and could even hold her own with the Senior boys on the football pitch. I remember watching once when James B. tried to trip her as she went past him with the ball, and he was the one sent flying instead. When we'd been in the Juniors, she'd never been someone like Miss Geraldine who you turned to when you were upset. In fact, she didn't tend to speak much to us when we were younger. It was only in the Seniors, really, we'd started to appreciate her brisk style.

'You were saying something,' I said to Tommy. 'Something about Miss Lucy telling you it was all right not to be creative.'

'She did say something like that. She said I shouldn't worry. Not mind what other people were saying. A couple of months ago now. Maybe longer.'

Over at the house, a few Juniors had stopped at one of the upstairs windows and were watching us. But I now crouched down in front of Tommy, no longer pretending anything.

‘Tommy, that’s a funny thing for her to say. Are you sure you got it right?’

‘Of course I got it right.’ His voice lowered suddenly.

‘She didn’t just say it once. We were in her room and she gave me a whole talk about it.’

When she’d first asked him to come to her study after Art Appreciation, Tommy explained, he’d expected yet another lecture about how he should try harder – the sort of thing he’d had already from various guardians, including Miss Emily herself. But as they were walking from the house towards the Orangery – where the guardians had their living quarters – Tommy began to get an inkling this was something different. Then, once he was seated in Miss Lucy’s easy chair – she’d remained standing by the window – she asked him to tell her the whole story, as he saw it, of what had been happening to him. So Tommy had begun going through it all. But before he was even half way she’d suddenly broken in and started to talk herself. She’d known a lot of students, she’d said, who’d for a long time found it very difficult to be creative: painting, drawing, poetry, none of it going right for years. Then one day they’d turned a corner and blossomed. It was quite possible Tommy was one of these.

Tommy had heard all of this before, but there was something about Miss Lucy’s manner that made him keep listening hard.

‘I could tell,’ he told me, ‘she was leading up to something. Something different.’

Sure enough, she was soon saying things Tommy found difficult to follow. But she kept repeating it until eventually he began to understand. If Tommy had genuinely tried, she was saying, but he just couldn’t be very creative, then that was quite all right, he wasn't to worry about it. It was wrong for anyone, whether they were students or guardians, to punish him for it, or put pressure on him in any way. It simply wasn't his fault. And when Tommy had protested it was all very well Miss Lucy saying this, but everyone did think it was his fault, she'd given a sigh and looked out of her window. Then she'd said:

'It may not help you much. But just you remember this. There's at least one person here at Hailsham who believes otherwise. At least one person who believes you're a very good student, as good as any she's ever come across, never mind how creative you are.'

'She wasn't having you on, was she?' I asked Tommy. 'It wasn't some clever way of telling you off?'

'It definitely wasn't anything like that. Anyway ...' For the first time he seemed worried about being overheard and glanced over his shoulder towards the house. The Juniors at the window had lost interest and gone; some girls from our year were walking towards the pavilion, but they were still a good way off. Tommy turned back to me and said almost in a whisper:

'Anyway, when she said all this, she was shaking.'

'What do you mean, shaking?'

'Shaking. With rage. I could see her. She was furious. But furious deep inside.'

'Who at?'

'I wasn't sure. Not at me anyway, that was the most important thing!' He gave a laugh, then became serious again. 'I don't know who she was angry with. But she was angry all right.'

I stood up again because my calves were aching. 'It's pretty weird, Tommy.'

‘Funny thing is, this talk with her, it did help. Helped a lot. When you were saying earlier on, about how things seemed better for me now. Well, it’s because of that. Because afterwards, thinking about what she’d said, I realised she was right, that it wasn’t my fault. Okay, I hadn’t handled it well. But deep down, it wasn’t my fault. That’s what made the difference. And whenever I felt rocky about it, I’d catch sight of her walking about, or I’d be in one of her lessons, and she wouldn’t say anything about our talk, but I’d look at her, and she’d sometimes see me and give me a little nod. And that’s all I needed. You were asking earlier if something had happened. Well, that’s what happened. But Kath, listen, don’t breathe a word to anyone about this, right?’

I nodded, but asked: ‘Did she make you promise that?’

‘No, no, she didn’t make me promise anything. But you’re not to breathe a word. You’ve got to really promise.’

‘All right.’ The girls heading for the pavilion had spotted me and were waving and calling. I waved back and said to Tommy: ‘I’d better go. We can talk more about it soon.’

But Tommy ignored this. ‘There’s something else,’ he went on. ‘Something else she said I can’t quite figure out. I was going to ask you about it. She said we weren’t being taught enough, something like that.’

‘Taught enough? You mean she thinks we should be studying even harder than we are?’

‘No, I don’t think she meant that. What she was talking about was, you know, about us. What’s going to happen to us one day. Donations and all that.’

‘But we have been taught about all that,’ I said. ‘I wonder what she meant. Does she think there are things we haven’t been told yet?’

Tommy thought for a moment, then shook his head. ‘I don’t think she meant it like that. She just thinks we aren’t taught about it enough. Because she said she'd a good mind to talk to us about it herself.'

'About what exactly?'

'I'm not sure. Maybe I got it all wrong, Kath, I don't know. Maybe she was meaning something else completely, something else to do with me not being creative. I don't really understand it.'

Tommy was looking at me as though he expected me to come up with an answer. I went on thinking for a few seconds, then said:

'Tommy, think back carefully. You said she got angry ...'

'Well, that's what it looked like. She was quiet, but she was shaking.'

'All right, whatever. Let's say she got angry. Was it when she got angry she started to say this other stuff? About how we weren't taught enough about donations and the rest of it?'

'I suppose so ...'

'Now, Tommy, think. Why did she bring it up? She's talking about you and you not creating. Then suddenly she starts up about this other stuff. What's the link? Why did she bring up donations? What's that got to do with you being creative?'

'I don't know. There must have been some reason, I suppose. Maybe one thing reminded her of the other. Kath, you're getting really worked up about this yourself now.'

I laughed, because he was right: I'd been frowning, completely lost in my thoughts. The fact was, my mind was going in various directions at once. And Tommy's account of his talk with Miss Lucy had reminded me of something, perhaps a whole series of things, little incidents from the past to do with Miss Lucy that had puzzled me at the time.

‘It’s just that ...’ I stopped and sighed. ‘I can’t quite put it right, not even to myself. But all this, what you’re saying, it sort of fits with a lot of other things that are puzzling. I keep thinking about all these things. Like why Madame comes and takes away our best pictures. What’s that for exactly?’

‘It’s for the Gallery.’

‘But what is her gallery? She keeps coming here and taking away our best work. She must have stacks of it by now. I asked Miss Geraldine once how long Madame’s been coming here, and she said for as long as Hailsham’s been here. What is this gallery? Why should she have a gallery of things done by us?’

‘Maybe she sells them. Outside, out there, they sell everything.’

I shook my head. ‘That can’t be it. It’s got something to do with what Miss Lucy said to you. About us, about how one day we’ll start giving donations. I don’t know why, but I’ve had this feeling for some time now, that it’s all linked in, though I can’t figure out how. I’ll have to go now, Tommy. Let’s not tell anyone yet, about what we’ve been saying.’

‘No. And don’t tell anyone about Miss Lucy.’

‘But will you tell me if she says anything else to you like that?’

Tommy nodded, then glanced around him again. ‘Like you say, you’d better go, Kath. Someone’s going to hear us soon.’

The gallery Tommy and I were discussing was something we’d all of us grown up with. Everyone talked about it as though it existed, though in truth none of us knew for sure that it did. I'm sure I was pretty typical in not being able to remember how or when I'd first heard about it. Certainly, it hadn't been from the guardians: they never mentioned the Gallery, and there was an unspoken rule that we should never even raise the subject in their presence.

I'd suppose now it was something passed down through the different generations of Hailsham students. I remember a time when I could only have been five or six, sitting at a low table beside Amanda C., our hands clammy with modelling clay. I can't remember if there were other children with us, or which guardian was in charge. All I remember is Amanda C. - who was a year older than me - looking at what I was making and exclaiming: 'That's really, really good, Kathy! That's so good! I bet that'll get in the Gallery!'

I must by then have already known about the Gallery, because I remember the excitement and pride when she said that - and then the next moment, thinking to myself: 'That's ridiculous. None of us are good enough for the Gallery yet.'

As we got older, we went on talking about the Gallery. If you wanted to praise someone's work, you'd say: 'That's good enough for the Gallery.' And after we discovered irony, when-ever we came across any laughably bad work, we'd go: 'Oh yes! Straight to the Gallery with that one!'

But did we really believe in the Gallery? Today, I'm not sure. As I've said, we never mentioned it to the guardians and looking back, it seems to me this was a rule we imposed on ourselves, as much as anything the guardians had decided. There's an instance I can remember from when we were about eleven. We were in Room 7 on a sunny winter's morning. We'd just finished Mr Roger's class, and a few of us had stayed on to chat with him. We were sitting up on our desks, and I can't remember exactly what we were talking about, but Mr Roger, as usual, was making us laugh and laugh. Then Carole H. had said, through her giggles: 'You might even get it picked for the Gallery!' She immediately put her hand over her mouth with an 'oops!' and the atmosphere remained light-hearted; but we all knew, Mr Roger included, that she'd made a mistake. Not a disaster, exactly: it would have been much the same had one of us let slip a rude word, or used a guardian's nickname to his or her face. Mr Roger smiled indulgently, as though to say: 'Let it pass, we'll pretend you never said that,' and we carried on as before.

If for us the Gallery remained in a hazy realm, what was solid enough fact was Madame's turning up usually twice - sometimes three or four times - each year to select from our best work. We called her 'Madame' because she was French or Belgian - there was a dispute as to which - and that was what the guardians always called her. She was a tall, narrow woman with short hair, probably quite young still, though at the time we wouldn't have thought of her as such. She always wore a sharp grey suit, and unlike the gardeners, unlike the drivers who brought in our supplies - unlike virtually anyone else who came in from outside - she wouldn't talk to us and kept us at a distance with her chilly look. For years we thought of her as 'snooty', but then one night, around when we were eight, Ruth came up with another theory.

'She's scared of us,' she declared.

We were lying in the dark in our dorm. In the Juniors, we were fifteen to a dorm, so didn't tend to have the sort of long intimate conversations we did once we got to the Senior dorms. But most of what became our 'group' had beds close together by then, and we were already getting the habit of talking into the night.

'What do you mean, scared of us?' someone asked. 'How can she be scared of us? What could we do to her?'

'I don't know,' Ruth said. 'I don't know, but I'm sure she is. I used to think she was just snooty, but it's something else, I'm sure of it now. Madame's scared of us.'

We argued about this on and off for the next few days. Most of us didn't agree with Ruth, but then that just made her all the more determined to prove she was right. So in the end we settled on a plan to put her theory to the test the next time Madame came to Hailsham.

Although Madame's visits were never announced, it was always pretty obvious when she was due. The lead-up to her arrival began weeks before, with the guardians sifting through all our work - our paintings, sketches, pottery, all our essays and poems. This usually went on for at least a fortnight, by the end of which four or five items from each Junior and Senior year would have ended up in the billiards room. The billiards room would get closed during this period, but if you stood on the low wall of the terrace outside, you'd be able to see through the windows the haul of stuff getting larger and larger. Once the guardians started laying it out neatly, on tables and easels, like a miniature version of one of our Exchanges, then you knew Madame would be coming within a day or two.

That autumn I'm now talking about, we needed to know not just the day, but the precise moment Madame turned up, since she often stayed no longer than an hour or two. So as soon as we saw the stuff getting displayed in the billiards room, we decided to take turns keeping look-out.

This was a task made much easier by the way the grounds were laid out. Hailsham stood in a smooth hollow with fields rising on all sides. That meant that from almost any of the classroom windows in the main house - and even from the pavilion - you had a good view of the long narrow road that came down across the fields and arrived at the main gate. The gate itself was still a fair distance off, and any vehicle would then have to take the gravelled drive, going past shrubs and flowerbeds, before at last reaching the courtyard in front of the main house. Days could sometimes go by without us seeing a vehicle coming down that narrow road, and the ones that did were usually vans or lorries bringing supplies, gardeners or workmen. A car was a rarity, and the sight of one in the distance was sometimes enough to cause bedlam during a class.

The afternoon Madame's car was spotted coming across the fields, it was windy and sunny, with a few storm clouds starting to gather. We were in Room 9 - on the first floor at the front of the house - and when the whisper went around, poor Mr Frank, who was trying to teach us spelling, couldn't understand why we'd suddenly got so restless.

The plan we'd come up with to test Ruth's theory was very simple: we - the six of us in on it - would lie in wait for Madame somewhere, then 'swarm out' all around her, all at once. We'd all remain perfectly civilised and just go on our way, but if we timed it right, and she was taken off-guard, we'd see - Ruth insisted - that she really was afraid of us.

Our main worry was that we just wouldn't get an opportunity during the short time she was at Hailsham. But as Mr Frank's class drew to an end, we could see Madame, directly below in the courtyard, parking her car. We had a hurried conference out on the landing, then followed the rest of the class down the stairs and loitered just inside the main doorway. We could see out into the bright courtyard, where Madame was still sitting behind the wheel, rummaging in her briefcase. Eventually she emerged from the car and came towards us, dressed in her usual grey suit, her briefcase held tightly to herself in both arms. At a signal from Ruth we all sauntered out, moving straight for her, but like we were all in a dream. Only when she came to a stiff halt did we each murmur: 'Excuse me, Miss,' and separate.

I'll never forget the strange change that came over us the next instant. Until that point, this whole thing about Madame had been, if not a joke exactly, very much a private thing we'd wanted to settle among ourselves. We hadn't thought much about how Madame herself, or anyone else, would come into it. What I mean is, until then, it had been a pretty light-hearted matter, with a bit of a dare element to it. And it wasn't even as though Madame did anything other than what we predicted she'd do: she just froze and waited for us to pass by. She didn't shriek, or even let out a gasp. But we were all so keenly tuned in to picking up her response, and that's probably why it had such an effect on us. As she came to a halt, I glanced quickly at her face – as did the others, I'm sure. And I can still see it now, the shudder she seemed to be suppressing, the real dread that one of us would accidentally brush against her. And though we just kept on walking, we all felt it; it was like we'd walked from the sun right into chilly shade. Ruth had been right: Madame was afraid of us. But she was afraid of us in the same way someone might be afraid of spiders. We hadn't been ready for that. It had never occurred to us to wonder how we would feel, being seen like that, being the spiders.

By the time we'd crossed the courtyard and reached the grass, we were a very different group from the one that had stood about excitedly waiting for Madame to get out of her car. Hannah looked ready to burst into tears. Even Ruth looked really shaken. Then one of us – I think it was Laura – said:

'If she doesn't like us, why does she want our work? Why doesn't she just leave us alone? Who asks her to come here anyway?'

No one answered, and we carried on over to the pavilion, not saying anything more about what had happened.

Thinking back now, I can see we were just at that age when we knew a few things about ourselves – about who we were, how we were different from our guardians, from the people outside – but hadn't yet understood what any of it meant. I'm sure somewhere in your childhood, you too had an experience like ours that day; similar if not in the actual details, then inside, in the feelings. Because it doesn't really matter how well your guardians try to prepare you: all the talks, videos, discussions, warnings, none of that can really bring it home. Not when you're eight years old, and you're all together in a place like Hailsham; when you've got guardians like the ones we had; when the gardeners and the delivery men joke and laugh with you and call you 'sweetheart' .

All the same, some of it must go in somewhere. It must go in, because by the time a moment like that comes along, there's a part of you that's been waiting. Maybe from as early as when you're five or six, there's been a whisper going at the back of your head, saying: 'One day, maybe not so long from now, you'll get to know how it feels.' So you're waiting, even if you don't quite know it, waiting for the moment when you realise that you really are different to them; that there are people out there, like Madame, who don't hate you or wish you any harm, but who nevertheless shudder at the very thought of you - of how you were brought into this world and why - and who dread the idea of your hand brushing against theirs. The first time you glimpse yourself through the eyes of a person like that, it's a cold moment. It's like walking past a mirror you've walked past every day of your life, and suddenly it shows you something else, something troubling and strange.

CHAPTER FOUR

I won't be a carer any more come the end of the year, and though I've got a lot out of it, I have to admit I'll welcome the chance to rest – to stop and think and remember. I'm sure it's at least partly to do with that, to do with preparing for the change of pace, that I've been getting this urge to order all these old memories. What I really wanted, I suppose, was to get straight all the things that happened between me and Tommy and Ruth after we grew up and left Hailsham. But I realise now just how much of what occurred later came out of our time at Hailsham, and that's why I want first to go over these earlier memories quite carefully. Take all this curiosity about Madame, for instance. At one level, it was just us kids larking about. But at another, as you'll see, it was the start of a process that kept growing and growing over the years until it came to dominate our lives.

After that day, mention of Madame became, while not taboo exactly, pretty rare among us. And this was something that soon spread beyond our little group to just about all the students in our year. We were, I'd say, as curious as ever about her, but we all sensed that to probe any further – about what she did with our work, whether there really was a gallery – would get us into territory we weren't ready for yet.

The topic of the Gallery, though, still cropped up every once in a while, so that when a few years later Tommy started telling me beside the pond about his odd talk with Miss Lucy, I found something tugging away at my memory. It was only afterwards, when I'd left him sitting on his rock and was hurrying towards the fields to catch up with my friends, that it came back to me.

It was something Miss Lucy had once said to us during a class. I'd remembered it because it had puzzled me at the time, and also because it was one of the few occasions when the Gallery had been mentioned so deliberately in front of a guardian.

We'd been in the middle of what we later came to call the 'tokens controversy'. Tommy and I discussed the tokens controversy a few years ago, and we couldn't at first agree when it had happened. I said we'd been ten at the time; he thought it was later, but in the end came round to agreeing with me. I'm pretty sure I got it right: we were in Junior 4 - a while after that incident with Madame, but still three years before our talk by the pond.

The tokens controversy was, I suppose, all part of our getting more acquisitive as we grew older. For years - I think I've said already - we'd thought that having work chosen for the billiards room, never mind taken away by Madame, was a huge triumph. But by the time we were ten, we'd grown more ambivalent about it. The Exchanges, with their system of tokens as currency, had given us a keen eye for pricing up anything we produced. We'd become preoccupied with T-shirts, with decorating around our beds, with personalising our desks. And of course, we had our 'collections' to think of.

I don't know if you had 'collections' where you were. When you come across old students from Hailsham, you always find them, sooner or later, getting nostalgic about their collections. At the time, of course, we took it all for granted. You each had a wooden chest with your name on it, which you kept under your bed and filled with your possessions - the stuff you acquired from the Sales or the Exchanges. I can remember one or two students not bothering much with their collections, but most of us took enormous care, bringing things out to display, putting other things away carefully.

The point is, by the time we were ten, this whole notion that it was a great honour to have something taken by Madame collided with a feeling that we were losing our most marketable stuff. This all came to a head in the tokens controversy.

It began with a number of students, mainly boys, muttering that we should get tokens to compensate when Madame took something away. A lot of students agreed with this, but others were outraged by the idea. Arguments went on between us for some time, and then one day Roy J. - who was a year above us, and had had a number of things taken by Madame - decided to go and see Miss Emily about it.

Miss Emily, our head guardian, was older than the others. She wasn't especially tall, but something about the way she carried herself, always very straight with her head right up, made you think she was. She wore her silvery hair tied back, but strands were always coming loose and floating around her. They would have driven me mad, but Miss Emily always ignored them, like they were beneath her contempt. By the evening, she was a pretty strange sight, with bits of loose hair everywhere which she wouldn't bother to push away off her face when she talked to you in her quiet, deliberate voice. We were all pretty scared of her and didn't think of her in the way we did the other guardians. But we considered her to be fair and respected her decisions; and even in the Juniors, we probably recognised that it was her presence, intimidating though it was, that made us all feel so safe at Hailsham.

It took some nerve to go and see her without being summoned; to go with the sort of demands Roy was making seemed suicidal. But Roy didn't get the terrible telling-off we were expecting, and in the days that followed, there were reports of guardians talking - even arguing - about the tokens question. In the end, it was announced that we would get tokens, but not many because it was a 'most distinguished honour' to have work selected by Madame. This didn't really go down well with either camp, and the arguments rumbled on.

It was against this background that Polly T. asked Miss Lucy her question that morning. We were in the library, sitting around the big oak table. I remember there was a log burning in the fireplace, and that we were doing a playreading. At some point, a line in the play had led to Laura making some wisecrack about the tokens business, and we'd all laughed, Miss Lucy included. Then Miss Lucy had said that since everyone at Hailsham was talking about little else, we should forget the play-reading and spend the rest of the lesson exchanging our views about the tokens. And that's what we were doing when Polly asked, completely out of the blue: 'Miss, why does Madame take our things anyway?'

We all went silent. Miss Lucy didn't often get cross, but when she did, you certainly knew about it, and we thought for a second Polly was for it. But then we saw Miss Lucy wasn't angry, just deep in thought. I remember feeling furious at Polly for so stupidly breaking the unwritten rule, but at the same time, being terribly excited about what answer Miss Lucy might give. And clearly I wasn't the only one with these mixed emotions: virtually everybody shot daggers at Polly, before turning eagerly to Miss Lucy - which was, I suppose, pretty unfair on poor Polly. After what seemed a very long while, Miss Lucy said:

'All I can tell you today is that it's for a good reason. A very important reason. But if I tried to explain it to you now, I don't think you'd understand. One day, I hope, it'll be explained to you.'

We didn't press her. The atmosphere around the table had become one of deep embarrassment, and curious as we were to hear more, we wanted most for the talk to get away from this dodgy territory. The next moment, then, we were all relieved to be arguing again - a bit artificially perhaps - about the tokens. But Miss Lucy's words had puzzled me and I kept thinking about them on and off for the next few days. That's why that afternoon by the pond, when Tommy was telling me about his talk with Miss Lucy, about how she'd said to him we weren't being 'taught enough' about some things, the memory of that time in the library - along with maybe one or two other little episodes like that - started tugging at my mind.

While we're on the subject of the tokens, I want just to say a bit about our Sales, which I've mentioned a few times already. The Sales were important to us because that was how we got hold of things from outside. Tommy's polo-shirt, for instance, came from a Sale. That's where we got our clothes, our toys, the special things that hadn't been made by another student.

Once every month, a big white van would come down that long road and you'd feel the excitement all through the house and grounds. By the time it pulled up in the courtyard there'd be a crowd waiting - mainly Juniors, because once you were past twelve or thirteen it wasn't the thing to be getting so obviously excited. But the truth was we all were.

Looking back now, it's funny to think we got so worked up, because usually the Sales were a big disappointment. There'd be nothing remotely special and we'd spend our tokens just renewing stuff that was wearing out or broken with more of the same. But the point was, I suppose, we'd all of us in the past found something at a Sale, something that had become special: a jacket, a watch, a pair of craft scissors never used but kept proudly next to a bed. We'd all found something like that at one time, and so however much we tried to pretend otherwise, we couldn't ever shake off the old feelings of hope and excitement.

Actually there was some point in hanging about the van as it was being unloaded. What you did - if you were one of these Juniors - was to follow back and forth from the storeroom the two men in overalls carrying the big cardboard boxes, asking them what was inside. 'A lot of goodies, sweetheart,' was the usual reply. Then if you kept asking: 'But is it a bumper crop?' they'd sooner or later smile and say: 'Oh, I'd say so, sweetheart. A real bumper crop,' bringing a thrilled cheer.

The boxes were often open at the top, so you'd catch glimpses of all kinds of things, and sometimes, though they weren't really supposed to, the men would let you move a few items about for a better look. And that was why, by the time of the actual Sale a week or so later, all sorts of rumours would be going around, maybe about a particular track-suit or a music cassette, and if there was trouble, it was almost always because a few students had set their hearts on the same item.

The Sales were a complete contrast to the hushed atmosphere of the Exchanges. They were held in the Dining Hall, and were crowded and noisy. In fact the pushing and shouting was all part of the fun, and they stayed for the most part pretty good-humoured. Except, as I say, every now and then, things would get out of hand, with students grabbing and tugging, sometimes fighting. Then the monitors would threaten to close the whole thing down, and we'd all of us have to face a talking to from Miss Emily at assembly the next morning.

Our day at Hailsham always began with an assembly, which was usually pretty brief - a few announcements, maybe a poem read out by a student. Miss Emily didn't often say much; she'd just sit very straight on the stage, nodding at whatever was being said, occasionally turning a frosty eye towards any whispering in the crowd. But on a morning after a rowdy Sale, everything was different. She'd order us to sit down on the floor - we usually stood at assemblies - and there'd be no announcements or performances, just Miss Emily talking to us for twenty, thirty minutes, sometimes even longer. She'd rarely raise her voice, but there was something steely about her on these occasions and none of us, not even the Senior 5s, dared make a sound.

There was a real sense of feeling bad that we had, in some collective way, let down Miss Emily, but try as we might, we couldn't really follow these lectures. It was partly her language. 'Unworthy of privilege' and 'misuse of opportunity': these were two regular phrases Ruth and I came up with when we were reminiscing in her room at the centre in Dover. Her general drift was clear enough: we were all very special, being Hailsham students, and so it was all the more disappointing when we behaved badly. Beyond that, though, things became a fog. Sometimes she'd be going on very intensely then come to a sudden stop with something like:

'What is it? What is it? What can it be that thwarts us?' Then she'd stand there, eyes closed, a frown on her face like she was trying to puzzle out the answer. And although we felt bewildered and awkward, we'd sit there willing her on to make whatever discovery was needed in her head. She might then resume with a gentle sigh - a signal that we were going to be forgiven - or just as easily explode out of her silence with:

'But I will not be coerced! Oh no! And neither will Hailsham!'

When we were remembering these long speeches, Ruth remarked how odd it was they should have been so unfathomable, since Miss Emily, in a classroom, could be as clear as anything. When I mentioned how I'd sometimes seen the head wandering around Hailsham in a dream, talking to herself, Ruth took offence, saying:

'She was never like that! How could Hailsham have been the way it was if the person in charge had been potty? Miss Emily had an intellect you could slice logs with.'

I didn't argue. Certainly, Miss Emily could be uncannily sharp. If, say, you were somewhere you shouldn't be in the main house or the grounds, and you heard a guardian coming, you could often hide somewhere. Hailsham was full of hiding places, indoors and out: cupboards, nooks, bushes, hedges. But if you saw Miss Emily coming, your heart sank because she'd always know you were there hiding. It was like she had some extra sense. You could go into a cupboard, close the door tight and not move a muscle, you just knew Miss Emily's footsteps would stop outside and her voice would say: 'All right. Out you come.'

That was what had happened to Sylvie C. once on the second-floor landing, and on that occasion Miss Emily had gone into one of her rages. She never shouted like, say, Miss Lucy did when she got mad at you, but if anything Miss Emily getting angry was scarier. Her eyes narrowed and she'd whisper furiously to herself, like she was discussing with an invisible colleague what punishment was awful enough for you. The way she did it meant half of you was dying to hear and the other half completely not wanting to. But usually with Miss Emily nothing too awful would come out of it. She hardly ever put you in detention, made you do chores or withdrew privileges. All the same, you felt dreadful, just knowing you'd fallen in her estimation, and you wanted to do something straight away to redeem yourself.

But the thing was, there was no predicting with Miss Emily. Sylvie may have got a full portion that time, but when Laura got caught running through the rhubarb patch, Miss Emily just snapped: 'Shouldn't be here, girl. Off you go,' and walked on.

And then there was the time I thought I was in hot water with her. The little footpath that went all round the back of the main house was a real favourite of mine. It followed all the nooks, all the extensions; you had to squeeze past shrubs, you went under two ivy-covered arches and through a rusted gate. And all the time you could peer in through the windows, one after the other. I suppose part of the reason I liked the path so much was because I was never sure if it was out of bounds. Certainly, when classes were going on, you weren't supposed to walk past. But at the weekends or in the evenings - that was never clear. Most students avoided it anyway, and maybe the feeling of getting away from everyone else was another part of the appeal.

In any case, I was doing this little walk one sunny evening. I think I was in Senior 3. As usual I was glancing into the empty rooms as I went past, and then suddenly I was looking into a classroom with Miss Emily in it. She was alone, pacing slowly, talking under her breath, pointing and directing remarks to an invisible audience in the room. I assumed she was rehearsing a lesson or maybe one of her assembly talks, and I was about to hurry past before she spotted me, but just then she turned and looked straight at me. I froze, thinking I was for it, but then noticed she was carrying on as before, except now she was mouthing her address at me. Then, natural as you like, she turned away to fix her gaze on some other imaginary student in another part of the room. I crept away along the path, and for the next day or so kept dreading what Miss Emily would say when she saw me. But she never mentioned it at all.

But that's not really what I want to talk about just now. What I want to do now is get a few things down about Ruth, about how we met and became friends, about our early days together. Because more and more these days, I'll be driving past fields on a long afternoon, or maybe drinking my coffee in front of a huge window in a motorway service station, and I'll catch myself thinking about her again.

She wasn't someone I was friends with from the start. I can remember, at five or six, doing things with Hannah and with Laura, but not with Ruth. I only have the one vague memory of Ruth from that early part of our lives.

I'm playing in a sandpit. There are a number of others in the sand with me, it's too crowded and we're getting irritated with each other. We're in the open, under a warm sun, so it's probably the sandpit in the Infants' play area, just possibly it's the sand at the end of the long jump in the North Playing Field. Anyway it's hot and I'm feeling thirsty and I'm not pleased there are so many of us in the sandpit. Then Ruth is standing there, not in the sand with the rest of us, but a few feet away. She's very angry with two of the girls somewhere behind me, about something that must have happened before, and she's standing there glaring at them. My guess is that I knew Ruth only very slightly at that point. But she must already have made some impression on me, because I remember carrying on busily with whatever I was doing in the sand, absolutely dreading the idea of her turning her gaze on me. I didn't say a word, but I was desperate for her to realise I wasn't with the girls behind me, and had had no part in whatever it was that had made her cross.

And that's all I remember of Ruth from that early time. We were the same year so we must have run into each other enough, but aside from the sandpit incident, I don't remember having anything to do with her until the Juniors a couple of years later, when we were seven, going on eight.

The South Playing Field was the one used most by the Juniors and it was there, in the corner by the poplars, that Ruth came up to me one lunchtime, looked me up and down, then asked:

'Do you want to ride my horse?'

I was in the midst of playing with two or three others at that point, but it was clear Ruth was addressing only me. This absolutely delighted me, but I made a show of weighing her up before giving a reply.

'Well, what's your horse's name?'

Ruth came a step closer. 'My best horse,' she said, 'is Thunder. I can't let you ride on him. He's much too dangerous. But you can ride Bramble, as long as you don't use your crop on him. Or if you like, you could have any of the others.' She reeled off several more names I don't now remember. Then she asked: 'Have you got any horses of your own?'

I looked at her and thought carefully before replying:
'No. I don't have any horses.'

'Not even one?'

'No.'

'All right. You can ride Bramble, and if you like him, you can have him to keep. But you're not to use your crop on him. And you've got to come now.'

My friends had, in any case, turned away and were carrying on with what they'd been doing. So I gave a shrug and went off with Ruth.

The field was filled with playing children, some a lot bigger than us, but Ruth led the way through them very purposefully, always a pace or two in front. When we were almost at the wire mesh boundary with the garden, she turned and said:

'Okay, we'll ride them here. You take Bramble.'

I accepted the invisible rein she was holding out, and then we were off, riding up and down the fence, sometimes cantering, sometimes at a gallop. I'd been correct in my decision to tell Ruth I didn't have any horses of my own, because after a while with Bramble, she let me try her various other horses one by one, shouting all sorts of instructions about how to handle each animal's foibles.

'I told you! You've got to really lean back on Daffodil! Much more than that! She doesn't like it unless you're right back!'

I must have done well enough, because eventually she let me have a go on Thunder, her favourite. I don't know how long we spent with her horses that day: it felt a substantial time, and I think we both lost ourselves completely in our game. But then suddenly, for no reason I could see, Ruth brought it all to an end, claiming I was deliberately tiring out her horses, and that I'd have to put each of them back in its stable. She pointed to a section of the fence, and I began leading the horses to it, while Ruth seemed to get crosser and crosser with me, saying I was doing everything wrong. Then she asked:

‘Do you like Miss Geraldine?’

It might have been the first time I’d actually thought about whether I liked a guardian. In the end I said: ‘Of course I like her.’

‘But do you really like her? Like she’s special? Like she’s your favourite?’

‘Yes, I do. She’s my favourite.’

Ruth went on looking at me for a long time. Then finally she said: ‘All right. In that case, I’ll let you be one of her secret guards.’

We started to walk back towards the main house then and I waited for her to explain what she meant, but she didn’t. I found out though over the next several days.

CHAPTER FIVE

I'm not sure for how long the 'secret guard' business carried on. When Ruth and I discussed it while I was caring for her down in Dover, she claimed it had been just a matter of two or three weeks - but that was almost certainly wrong. She was probably embarrassed about it and so the whole thing had shrunk in her memory. My guess is that it went on for about nine months, a year even, around when we were seven, going on eight.

I was never sure if Ruth had actually invented the secret guard herself, but there was no doubt she was the leader. There were between six and ten of us, the figure changing whenever Ruth allowed in a new member or expelled someone. We believed Miss Geraldine was the best guardian in Hailsham, and we worked on presents to give her - a large sheet with pressed flowers glued over it comes to mind. But our main reason for existing, of course, was to protect her.

By the time I joined the guard, Ruth and the others had already known for ages about the plot to kidnap Miss Geraldine. We were never quite sure who was behind it. We sometimes suspected certain of the Senior boys, sometimes boys in our own year. There was a guardian we didn't like much - a Miss Eileen - who we thought for a while might be the brains behind it. We didn't know when the abduction would take place, but one thing we felt convinced about was that the woods would come into it.

The woods were at the top of the hill that rose behind Hailsham House. All we could see really was a dark fringe of trees, but I certainly wasn't the only one of my age to feel their presence day and night. When it got bad, it was like they cast a shadow over the whole of Hailsham; all you had to do was turn your head or move towards a window and there they'd be, looming in the distance. Safest was the front of the main house, because you couldn't see them from any of the windows. Even so, you never really got away from them.

There were all kinds of horrible stories about the woods. Once, not so long before we all got to Hailsham, a boy had had a big row with his friends and run off beyond the Hailsham boundaries. His body had been found two days later, up in those woods, tied to a tree with the hands and feet chopped off. Another rumour had it that a girl's ghost wandered through those trees. She'd been a Hailsham student until one day she'd climbed over a fence just to see what it was like outside. This was a long time before us, when the guardians were much stricter, cruel even, and when she tried to get back in, she wasn't allowed. She kept hanging around outside the fences, pleading to be let back in, but no one let her. Eventually, she'd gone off somewhere out there, something had happened and she'd died. But her ghost was always wandering about the woods, gazing over Hailsham, pining to be let back in.

The guardians always insisted these stories were nonsense. But then the older students would tell us that was exactly what the guardians had told them when they were younger, and that we'd be told the ghastly truth soon enough, just as they were.

The woods played on our imaginations the most after dark, in our dorms as we were trying to fall asleep. You almost thought then you could hear the wind rustling the branches, and talking about it seemed to only make things worse. I remember one night, when we were furious with Marge K. - she'd done something really embarrassing to us during the day - we chose to punish her by hauling her out of bed, holding her face against the window pane and ordering her to look up at the woods. At first she kept her eyes screwed shut, but we twisted her arms and forced open her eyelids until she saw the distant outline against the moonlit sky, and that was enough to ensure for her a sobbing night of terror.

I'm not saying we necessarily went around the whole time at that age worrying about the woods. I for one could go weeks hardly thinking about them, and there were even days when a defiant surge of courage would make me think: 'How could we believe rubbish like that?' But then all it took would be one little thing - someone retelling one of those stories, a scary passage in a book, even just a chance remark reminding you of the woods - and that would mean another period of being under that shadow. It was hardly surprising then that we assumed the woods would be central in the plot to abduct Miss Geraldine.

When it came down to it, though, I don't recall our taking many practical steps towards defending Miss Geraldine; our activities always revolved around gathering more and more evidence concerning the plot itself. For some reason, we were satisfied this would keep any immediate danger at bay.

Most of our 'evidence' came from witnessing the conspirators at work. One morning, for instance, we watched from a second-floor classroom Miss Eileen and Mr Roger talking to Miss Geraldine down in the courtyard. After a while Miss Geraldine said goodbye and went off towards the Orangery, but we kept on watching, and saw Miss Eileen and Mr Roger put their heads closer together to confer furtively, their gazes fixed on Miss Geraldine's receding figure.

'Mr Roger,' Ruth sighed on that occasion, shaking her head. 'Who'd have guessed he was in it too?'

In this way we built up a list of people we knew to be in on the plot - guardians and students whom we declared our sworn enemies. And yet, all the time, I think we must have had an idea of how precarious the foundations of our fantasy were, because we always avoided any confrontation. We could decide, after intense discussions, that a particular student was a plotter, but then we'd always find a reason not to challenge him just yet - to wait until 'we had in all the evidence'. Similarly, we always agreed Miss Geraldine herself shouldn't hear a word of what we'd found out, since she'd get alarmed to no good purpose.

It would be too easy to claim it was just Ruth who kept the secret guard going long after we'd naturally outgrown it. Sure enough, the guard was important to her. She'd known about the plot for much longer than the rest of us, and this gave her enormous authority; by hinting that the real evidence came from a time before people like me had joined – that there were things she'd yet to reveal even to us – she could justify almost any decision she made on behalf of the group. If she decided someone should be expelled, for example, and she sensed opposition, she'd just allude darkly to stuff she knew 'from before'. There's no question Ruth was keen to keep the whole thing going. But the truth was, those of us who'd grown close to her, we each played our part in preserving the fantasy and making it last for as long as possible. What happened after that row over the chess illustrates pretty well the point I'm making.

I'd assumed Ruth was something of a chess expert and that she'd be able to teach me the game. This wasn't so crazy: we'd pass older students bent over chess sets, in window seats or on the grassy slopes, and Ruth would often pause to study a game. And as we walked off again, she'd tell me about some move she'd spotted that neither player had seen.

'Amazingly dim,' she'd murmur, shaking her head. This had all helped get me fascinated, and I was soon longing to become engrossed myself in those ornate pieces. So when I'd found a chess set at a Sale and decided to buy it – despite it costing an awful lot of tokens – I was counting on Ruth's help.

For the next several days, though, she sighed whenever I brought the subject up, or pretended she had something else really urgent to do. When I finally cornered her one rainy afternoon, and we set out the board in the billiards room, she proceeded to show me a game that was a vague variant on draughts. The distinguishing feature of chess, according to her, was that each piece moved in an L-shape - I suppose she'd got this from watching the knight - rather than in the leap-frogging way of draughts. I didn't believe this, and I was really disappointed, but I made sure to say nothing and went along with her for a while. We spent several minutes knocking each other's pieces off the board, always sliding the attacking piece in an 'L'. This continued until the time I tried to take her and she claimed it wouldn't count because I'd slid my piece up to hers in too straight a line.

At this, I stood up, packed up the set and walked off. I never said out loud that she didn't know how to play - disappointed as I was, I knew not to go that far - but my storming off was, I suppose, statement enough for her.

It was maybe a day later, I came into Room 20 at the top of the house, where Mr George had his poetry class. I don't remember if it was before or after the class, or how full the room was. I remember having books in my hands, and that as I moved towards where Ruth and the others were talking, there was a strong patch of sun across the desk-lids they were sitting on.

I could see from the way they had their heads together they were discussing secret guard stuff, and although, as I say, the row with Ruth had been only the day before, for some reason I went up to them without a second thought. It was only when I was virtually right up to them - maybe there was a look exchanged between them - that it suddenly hit me what was about to happen. It was like the split second before you step into a puddle, you realise it's there, but there's nothing you can do about it. I felt the hurt even before they went silent and stared at me, even before Ruth said: 'Oh, Kathy, how are you? If you don't mind, we've got something to discuss just now. We'll be finished in just a minute. Sorry.'

She'd hardly finished her sentence before I'd turned and was on my way out, angry more at myself for having walked into it than at Ruth and the others. I was upset, no doubt about it, though I don't know if I actually cried. And for the next few days, whenever I saw the secret guard conferring in a corner or as they walked across a field, I'd feel a flush rising to my cheeks.

Then about two days after this snub in Room 20, I was coming down the stairs of the main house when I found Moira B. just behind me. We started talking – about nothing special – and wandered out of the house together. It must have been the lunch break because as we stepped into the courtyard there were about twenty students loitering around chatting in little groups. My eyes went immediately to the far side of the courtyard, where Ruth and three of the secret guard were standing together, their backs to us, gazing intently towards the South Playing Field. I was trying to see what it was they were so interested in, when I became aware of Moira beside me also watching them. And then it occurred to me that only a month before she too had been a member of the secret guard, and had been expelled. For the next few seconds I felt something like acute embarrassment that the two of us should now be standing side by side, linked by our recent humiliations, actually staring our rejection in the face, as it were. Maybe Moira was experiencing something similar; anyway, she was the one who broke the silence, saying:

‘It's so stupid, this whole secret guard thing. How can they still believe in something like that? It's like they're still in the Infants.’

Even today, I'm puzzled by the sheer force of the emotion that overtook me when I heard Moira say this. I turned to her, completely furious:

‘What do you know about it? You just don't know anything, because you've been out of it for ages now! If you knew everything we'd found out, you wouldn't dare say anything so daft! '

'Don't talk rubbish.' Moira was never one to back down easily. 'It's just another of Ruth's made-up things, that's all.'

'Then how come I've personally heard them talking about it? Talking about how they're going to take Miss Geraldine to the woods in the milk van? How come I heard them planning it myself, nothing to do with Ruth or anyone else?'

Moira looked at me, unsure now. 'You heard it yourself? How? Where?'

'I heard them talking, clear as anything, heard every word, they didn't know I was there. Down by the pond, they didn't know I could hear. So that just shows how much you know!'

I pushed past her and as I made my way across the crowded courtyard, I glanced back to the figures of Ruth and the others, still gazing out towards the South Playing Field, unaware of what had just happened between me and Moira. And I noticed I didn't feel angry at all with them any more; just hugely irritated with Moira.

Even now, if I'm driving on a long grey road and my thoughts have nowhere special to go, I might find myself turning all of this over. Why was I so hostile to Moira B. that day when she was, really, a natural ally? What it was, I suppose, is that Moira was suggesting she and I cross some line together, and I wasn't prepared for that yet. I think I sensed how beyond that line, there was something harder and darker and I didn't want that. Not for me, not for any of us.

But at other times, I think that's wrong - that it was just to do with me and Ruth, and the sort of loyalty she inspired in me in those days. And maybe that's why, even though I really wanted to on several occasions, I never brought it up - about what had happened that day with Moira - the whole time I was caring for Ruth down at the centre in Dover.

All of this about Miss Geraldine reminds me of something that happened about three years later, long after the secret guard idea had faded away.

We were in Room 5 on the ground floor at the back of the house, waiting for a class to start. Room 5 was the smallest room, and especially on a winter morning like that one, when the big radiators came on and steamed up the windows, it would get really stuffy. Maybe I'm exaggerating it, but my memory is that for a whole class to fit into that room, students literally had to pile on top of each other.

That morning Ruth had got a chair behind a desk, and I was sitting up on its lid, with two or three others of our group perched or leaning in nearby. In fact, I think it was when I was squeezing up to let someone else in beside me that I first noticed the pencil case.

I can see the thing now like it's here in front of me. It was shiny, like a polished shoe; a deep tan colour with circled red dots drifting all over it. The zip across the top edge had a furry pom-pom to pull it. I'd almost sat on the pencil case when I'd shifted and Ruth quickly moved it out of my way. But I'd seen it, as she'd intended me to, and I said:

'Oh! Where did you get that? Was it in the Sale?'

It was noisy in the room, but the girls nearby had heard, so there were soon four or five of us staring admiringly at the pencil case. Ruth said nothing for a few seconds while she checked carefully the faces around her. Finally she said very deliberately:

'Let's just agree. Let's agree I got it in the Sale.' Then she gave us all a knowing smile.

This might sound a pretty innocuous sort of response, but actually it was like she'd suddenly got up and hit me, and for the next few moments I felt hot and chilly at the same time. I knew exactly what she'd meant by her answer and smile: she was claiming the pencil case was a gift from Miss Geraldine.

There could be no mistake about this because it had been building up for weeks. There was a certain smile, a certain voice Ruth would use - sometimes accompanied by a finger to the lips or a hand raised stage-whisper style - whenever she wanted to hint about some little mark of favour Miss Geraldine had shown her: Miss Geraldine had allowed Ruth to play a music tape in the billiards room before four o'clock on a weekday; Miss Geraldine had ordered silence on a fields walk, but when Ruth had drawn up beside her, she'd started to talk to her, then let the rest of the group talk. It was always stuff like that, and never explicitly claimed, just implied by her smile and 'let's say no more' expression.

Of course, officially, guardians weren't supposed to show favouritism, but there were little displays of affection all the time within certain parameters; and most of what Ruth suggested fell easily within them. Still, I hated it when Ruth hinted in this way. I was never sure, of course, if she was telling the truth, but since she wasn't actually 'telling' it, only hinting, it was never possible to challenge her. So each time it happened, I'd have to let it go, biting my lip and hoping the moment would pass quickly.

Sometimes I'd see from the way a conversation was moving that one of these moments was coming, and I'd brace myself. Even then, it would always hit me with some force, so that for several minutes I wouldn't be able to concentrate on anything going on around me. But on that winter morning in Room 5, it had come at me straight out of the blue. Even after I'd seen the pencil case, the idea of a guardian giving a present like that was so beyond the bounds, I hadn't seen it coming at all. So once Ruth had said what she'd said, I wasn't able, in my usual way, to let the emotional flurry just pass. I just stared at her, making no attempt to disguise my anger. Ruth, perhaps seeing danger, said to me quickly in a stage whisper: 'Not a word!' and smiled again. But I couldn't return the smile and went on glaring at her. Then luckily the guardian arrived and the class started.

I was never the sort of kid who brooded over things for hours on end. I've got that way a bit these days, but that's the work I do and the long hours of quiet when I'm driving across these empty fields. I wasn't like, say, Laura, who for all her clowning around could worry for days, weeks even, about some little thing someone said to her. But after that morning in Room 5, I did go around in a bit of a trance. I'd drift off in the middle of conversations; whole lessons went by with me not knowing what was going on. I was determined Ruth shouldn't get away with it this time, but for a long while I wasn't doing anything constructive about it; just playing fantastic scenes in my head where I'd expose her and force her to admit she'd made it up. I even had one hazy fantasy where Miss Geraldine herself heard about it and gave Ruth a complete dressing-down in front of everyone.

After days of this I started to think more solidly. If the pencil case hadn't come from Miss Geraldine, where had it come from? She might have got it from another student, but that was unlikely. If it had belonged to anyone else first, even someone years above us, a gorgeous item like that wouldn't have gone unnoticed. Ruth would never risk a story like hers knowing the pencil case had already knocked around Hailsham. Almost certainly she'd found it at a Sale. Here, too, Ruth ran the risk of others having seen it before she'd bought it. But if - as sometimes happened, though it wasn't really allowed - she'd heard about the pencil case coming in and reserved it with one of the monitors before the Sale opened, she could then be reasonably confident hardly anyone had seen it.

Unfortunately for Ruth, though, there were registers kept of everything bought at the Sales, along with a record of who'd done the buying. While these registers weren't easily obtainable - the monitors took them back to Miss Emily's office after each Sale - they weren't top secret either. If I hung around a monitor at the next Sale, it wouldn't be difficult to browse through the pages.

So I had the outlines of a plan, and I think I went on refining it for several days before it occurred to me it wasn't actually necessary to carry out all the steps. Provided I was right about the pencil case coming from a Sale, all I had to do was bluff.

That was how Ruth and I came to have our conversation under the eaves. There was fog and drizzle that day. The two of us were walking from the dorm huts perhaps towards the pavilion, I'm not sure. Anyway, as we were crossing the courtyard, the rain suddenly got heavier and since we were in no hurry, we tucked ourselves in under the eaves of the main house, a little to one side of the front entrance.

We sheltered there for a while, and every so often a student would come running out of the fog and in through the doors of the house, but the rain didn't ease. And the longer we continued to stand there, the more tense I grew because I could see this was the opportunity I'd been waiting for. Ruth too, I'm sure, sensed something was coming up. In the end, I decided to come straight out with it.

'At the Sale last Tuesday,' I said. 'I was just looking through the book. You know, the register thing.'

'Why were you looking at the register?' Ruth asked quickly. 'Why were you doing something like that?'

'Oh, no reason. Christopher C. was one of the monitors, so I was just talking to him. He's the best Senior boy, definitely. And I was just turning over the pages of the register, just for something to do.'

Ruth's mind, I could tell, had raced on, and she now knew exactly what this was about. But she said calmly: 'Boring sort of thing to look at.'

‘No, it was quite interesting really. You can see all the things people have bought.’

I’d said this staring out at the rain. Then I glanced at Ruth and got a real shock. I don’t know what I’d expected; for all my fantasies of the past month, I’d never really considered what it would be like in a real situation like the one unfolding at that moment. Now I saw how upset Ruth was; how for once she was at a complete loss for words, and had turned away on the verge of tears. And suddenly my behaviour seemed to me utterly baffling. All this effort, all this planning, just to upset my dearest friend. So what if she’d fibbed a little about her pencil case? Didn’t we all dream from time to time about one guardian or other bending the rules and doing something special for us? A spontaneous hug, a secret letter, a gift? All Ruth had done was to take one of these harmless daydreams a step further; she hadn’t even mentioned Miss Geraldine by name.

I now felt awful, and I was confused. But as we stood there together staring at the fog and rain, I could think of no way now to repair the damage I’d done. I think I said something pathetic like: ‘It’s all right, I didn’t see anything much,’ which hung stupidly in the air. Then after a few further seconds of silence, Ruth walked off into the rain.

CHAPTER SIX

I think I'd have felt better about what had happened if Ruth had held it against me in some obvious way. But this was one instance when she seemed just to cave in. It was like she was too ashamed of the matter - too crushed by it - even to be angry or to want to get me back. The first few times I saw her after the conversation under the eaves, I was ready for at least a bit of huffiness, but no, she was completely civil, if a little flat. It occurred to me she was scared I'd expose her - the pencil case, sure enough, vanished from view - and I wanted to tell her she'd nothing to fear from me. The trouble was, because none of this had actually been talked about in the open, I couldn't find a way of bringing it all up with her.

I did my best, meanwhile, to take any opportunity to imply to Ruth she had a special place in Miss Geraldine's heart. There was the time, for example, when a bunch of us were desperate to go out and practise rounders during break, because we'd been challenged by a group from the year above. Our problem was that it was raining, and it looked unlikely we'd be allowed outside. I noticed though that Miss Geraldine was one of the guardians on duty, and so I said:

'If Ruth goes and asks Miss Geraldine, then we'd stand a chance.'

As far as I remember, this suggestion wasn't taken up; maybe hardly anyone heard it, because a lot of us were talking all at once. But the point is, I said it standing right behind Ruth, and I could see she was pleased.

Then another time a few of us were leaving a classroom with Miss Geraldine, and I happened to find myself about to go out the door right after Miss Geraldine herself. What I did was to slow right down so that Ruth, coming behind me, could instead pass through the door beside Miss Geraldine. I did this without any fuss, as though this were the natural and proper thing and what Miss Geraldine would like - just the way I'd have done if, say, I'd accidentally got myself between two best friends. On that occasion, as far as I remember, Ruth looked puzzled and surprised for a split second, then gave me a quick nod and went past.

Little things like these might well have pleased Ruth, but they were still far removed from what had actually happened between us under the eaves that foggy day, and the sense that I'd never be able to sort things just continued to grow. There's a particular memory I have of sitting by myself one evening on one of the benches outside the pavilion, trying over and over to think of some way out, while a heavy mix of remorse and frustration brought me virtually to tears. If things had stayed that way, I'm not sure what would have happened. Maybe it would all have got forgotten eventually; or maybe Ruth and I would have drifted apart. As it was, right out of the blue, a chance came along for me to put things right.

We were in the middle of one of Mr Roger's art lessons, except for some reason he'd gone out half way. So we were all just drifting about among the easels, chatting and looking at each other's work. Then at one point a girl called Midge A. came over to where we were and said to Ruth, in a perfectly friendly way:

'Where's your pencil case? It's so luscious.'

Ruth tensed and glanced quickly about to see who was present. It was our usual gang with perhaps a couple of outsiders loitering nearby. I hadn't mentioned to a soul anything about the Sales Register business, but I suppose Ruth wasn't to know that. Her voice was softer than usual when she replied to Midge:

'I haven't got it here. I keep it in my collection chest.'

Midge was quizzing her completely innocently, that was now obvious. But almost all of us who’d been in Room 5 the time Ruth had first brought out the pencil case were here now, looking on, and I saw Ruth hesitate. It was only later, when I replayed it all, that I appreciated how perfectly shaped a chance it was for me. At the time I didn’t really think. I just came in before Midge or anyone else had the chance to notice Ruth was in a curious quandary.

‘We can’t say where it came from.’

Ruth, Midge, the rest of them, they all looked at me, maybe a little surprised. But I kept my cool and went on, addressing only Midge.

‘There are some very good reasons why we can’t tell you where it came from.’

Midge shrugged. ‘So it’s a mystery.’

‘A big mystery,’ I said, then gave her a smile to show her I wasn’t trying to be nasty to her.

The others were nodding to back me up, though Ruth herself had on a vague expression, like she’d suddenly become preoccupied with something else entirely. Midge shrugged again, and as far as I remember that was the end of it. Either she walked off, or else she started talking about something different.

Now, for much the same reasons I’d not been able to talk openly to Ruth about what I’d done to her over the Sales Register business, she of course wasn’t able to thank me for the way I’d intervened with Midge. But it was obvious from her manner towards me, not just over the next few days, but over the weeks that followed, how pleased she was with me. And having recently been in much the same position, it was easy to recognise the signs of her looking around for some opportunity to do something nice, something really special for me. It was a good feeling, and I remember even thinking once or twice how it would be better if she didn't get a chance for ages, just so the good feeling between us could go on and on. As it was, an opportunity did come along for her, about a month after the Midge episode, the time I lost my favourite tape.

I still have a copy of that tape and until recently I'd listen to it occasionally driving out in the open country on a drizzly day. But now the tape machine in my car's got so dodgy, I don't dare play it in that. And there never seems enough time to play it when I'm back in my bedsit. Even so, it's one of my most precious possessions. Maybe come the end of the year, when I'm no longer a carer, I'll be able to listen to it more often.

The album's called Songs After Dark and it's by Judy Bridgewater. What I've got today isn't the actual cassette, the one I had back then at Hailsham, the one I lost. It's the one Tommy and I found in Norfolk years afterwards - but that's another story I'll come to later. What I want to talk about is the first tape, the one that disappeared.

I should explain before I go any further this whole thing we had in those days about Norfolk. We kept it going for years and years - it became a sort of in-joke, I suppose - and it all started from one particular lesson we had when we were pretty young.

It was Miss Emily herself who taught us about the different counties of England. She'd pin up a big map over the blackboard, and next to it, set up an easel. And if she was talking about, say, Oxfordshire, she'd place on the easel a large calendar with photos of the county. She had quite a collection of these picture calendars, and we got through most of the counties this way. She'd tap a spot on the map with her pointer, turn to the easel and reveal another picture. There'd be little villages with streams going through them, white monuments on hillsides, old churches beside fields; if she was telling us about a coastal place, there'd be beaches crowded with people, cliffs with seagulls. I suppose she wanted us to have a grasp of what was out there surrounding us, and it's amazing, even now, after all these miles I've covered as a carer, the extent to which my idea of the various counties is still set by these pictures Miss Emily put up on her easel. I'd be driving through Derbyshire, say, and catch myself looking for a particular village green with a mock-Tudor pub and a war memorial - and realise it's the image Miss Emily showed us the first time I ever heard of Derbyshire.

Anyway, the point is, there was a gap in Miss Emily's calendar collection: none of them had a single picture of Norfolk. We had these same lectures repeated a number of times, and I'd always wonder if this time she'd found a picture of Norfolk, but it was always the same. She'd wave her pointer over the map and say, as a sort of afterthought:

'And over here, we've got Norfolk. Very nice there.'

Then, that particular time, I remember how she paused and drifted off into thought, maybe because she hadn't planned what should happen next instead of a picture. Eventually she came out of her dream and tapped the map again.

'You see, because it's stuck out here on the east, on this hump jutting into the sea, it's not on the way to anywhere. People going north and south' - she moved the pointer up and down - 'they bypass it altogether. For that reason, it's a peaceful corner of England, rather nice. But it's also something of a lost corner.'

A lost corner. That's what she called it, and that was what started it. Because at Hailsham, we had our own 'Lost Corner' up on the third floor, where the lost property was kept; if you lost or found anything, that's where you went. Someone - I can't remember who it was - claimed after the lesson that what Miss Emily had said was that Norfolk was England's 'lost corner', where all the lost property found in the country ended up. Somehow this idea caught on and soon had become accepted fact virtually throughout our entire year.

Not long ago, when Tommy and I were reminiscing about all of this, he thought we'd never really believed in the notion, that it was a joke right from the start. But I'm pretty certain he was wrong there. Sure enough, by the time we were twelve or thirteen, the Norfolk thing had become a big joke. But my memory of it - and Ruth remembered it the same way - is that at the beginning, we believed in Norfolk in the most literal way; that just as lorries came to Hailsham with our food and stuff for our Sales, there was some similar operation going on, except on a grander scale, with vehicles moving all over England, delivering anything left behind in fields and trains to this place called Norfolk. The fact that we'd never seen a picture of the place only added to its mystique.

This might all sound daft, but you have to remember that to us, at that stage in our lives, any place beyond Hailsham was like a fantasy land; we had only the haziest notions of the world outside and about what was and wasn't possible there. Besides, we never bothered to examine our Norfolk theory in any detail. What was important to us, as Ruth said one evening when we were sitting in that tiled room in Dover, looking out at the sunset, was that 'when we lost something precious, and we'd looked and looked and still couldn't find it, then we didn't have to be completely heartbroken. We still had that last bit of comfort, thinking one day, when we were grown up, and we were free to travel around the country, we could always go and find it again in Norfolk.'

I'm sure Ruth was right about that. Norfolk came to be a real source of comfort for us, probably much more than we admitted at the time, and that was why we were still talking about it - albeit as a sort of joke - when we were much older. And that's why, years and years later, that day Tommy and I found another copy of that lost tape of mine in a town on the Norfolk coast, we didn't just think it pretty funny; we both felt deep down some tug, some old wish to believe again in something that was once close to our hearts.

But I wanted to talk about my tape, Songs After Dark by Judy Bridgewater. I suppose it was originally an LP - the recording date's 1956 - but what I had was the cassette, and the cover picture was what must have been a scaled-down version of the record sleeve. Judy Bridgewater is wearing a purple satin dress, one of those off-the-shoulder ones popular in those days, and you can see her from just above the waist because she's sitting on a bar-stool. I think it's supposed to be South America, because there are palms behind her and swarthy waiters in white tuxedos. You're looking at Judy from exactly where the barman would be when he's serving her drinks. She's looking back in a friendly, not too sexy way, like she might be flirting just a tiny bit, but you're someone she knows from way back. Now the other thing about this cover is that Judy's got her elbows up on the bar and there's a cigarette burning in her hand. And it was because of this cigarette that I got so secretive about the tape, right from the moment I found it at the Sale.

I don't know how it was where you were, but at Hailsham the guardians were really strict about smoking. I'm sure they'd have preferred it if we never found out smoking even existed; but since this wasn't possible, they made sure to give us some sort of lecture each time any reference to cigarettes came along. Even if we were being shown a picture of a famous writer or world leader, and they happened to have a cigarette in their hand, then the whole lesson would grind to a halt. There was even a rumour that some classic books - like the Sherlock Holmes ones - weren't in our library because the main characters smoked too much, and when you came across a page torn out of an illustrated book or magazine, this was because there'd been a picture on it of someone smoking. And then there were the actual lessons where they showed us horrible pictures of what smoking did to the insides of your body. That's why it was such a shock that time Marge K. asked Miss Lucy her question.

We were sitting on the grass after a rounders match and Miss Lucy had been giving us a typical talk on smoking when Marge suddenly asked if Miss Lucy had herself ever had a cigarette. Miss Lucy went quiet for a few seconds. Then she said:

'I'd like to be able to say no. But to be honest, I did smoke for a little while. For about two years, when I was younger.'

You can imagine what a shock this was. Before Miss Lucy's reply, we'd all been glaring at Marge, really furious she'd asked such a rude question - to us, she might as well have asked if Miss Lucy had ever attacked anyone with an axe. And for days afterwards I remember how we made Marge's life an utter misery; in fact, that incident I mentioned before, the night we held Marge's face to the dorm window to make her look at the woods, that was all part of what came afterwards. But at the time, the moment Miss Lucy said what she did, we were too confused to think any more about Marge. I think we all just stared at Miss Lucy in horror, waiting for what she'd say next.

When she did speak, Miss Lucy seemed to be weighing up each word carefully. 'It's not good that I smoked. It wasn't good for me so I stopped it. But what you must understand is that for you, all of you, it's much, much worse to smoke than it ever was for me.'

Then she paused and went quiet. Someone said later she'd gone off into a daydream, but I was pretty sure, as was Ruth, that she was thinking hard about what to say next. Finally she said:

'You've been told about it. You're students. You're ... special. So keeping yourselves well, keeping yourselves very healthy inside, that's much more important for each of you than it is for me.'

She stopped again and looked at us in a strange way. Afterwards, when we discussed it, some of us were sure she was dying for someone to ask: 'Why? Why is it so much worse for us?' But no one did. I've often thought about that day, and I'm sure now, in the light of what happened later, that we only needed to ask and Miss Lucy would have told us all kinds of things. All it would have taken was just one more question about smoking.

So why had we stayed silent that day? I suppose it was because even at that age - we were nine or ten - we knew just enough to make us wary of that whole territory. It's hard now to remember just how much we knew by then. We certainly knew - though not in any deep sense - that we were different from our guardians, and also from the normal people outside; we perhaps even knew that a long way down the line there were donations waiting for us. But we didn't really know what that meant. If we were keen to avoid certain topics, it was probably more because it embarrassed us. We hated the way our guardians, usually so on top of everything, became so awkward whenever we came near this territory. It unnerved us to see them change like that. I think that's why we never asked that one further question, and why we punished Marge K. so cruelly for bringing it all up that day after the rounders match.

Anyway, that's why I was so secretive about my tape. I even turned the cover inside out so you'd only see Judy and her cigarette if you opened up the plastic case. But the reason the tape meant so much to me had nothing to do with the cigarette, or even with the way Judy Bridgewater sang - she's one of those singers from her time, cocktail-bar stuff, not the sort of thing any of us at Hailsham liked. What made the tape so special for me was this one particular song: track number three, 'Never Let Me Go'.

It's slow and late night and American, and there's a bit that keeps coming round when Judy sings: 'Never let me go ... Oh baby, baby ... Never let me go ...' I was eleven then, and hadn't listened to much music, but this one song, it really got to me. I always tried to keep the tape wound to just that spot so I could play the song whenever a chance came by.

I didn't have so many opportunities, mind you, this being a few years before Walkmans started appearing at the Sales. There was a big machine in the billiards room, but I hardly ever played the tape in there because it was always full of people. The Art Room also had a player, but that was usually just as noisy. The only place I could listen properly was in our dorm.

By then we'd gone into the small six-bed dorms over in the separate huts, and in ours we had a portable cassette player up on the shelf above the radiator. So that's where I used to go, in the day when no one else was likely to be about, to play my song over and over.

What was so special about this song? Well, the thing was, I didn't used to listen properly to the words; I just waited for that bit that went: 'Baby, baby, never let me go ...' And what I'd imagine was a woman who'd been told she couldn't have babies, who'd really, really wanted them all her life. Then there's a sort of miracle and she has a baby, and she holds this baby very close to her and walks around singing: 'Baby, never let me go ...' partly because she's so happy, but also because she's so afraid something will happen, that the baby will get ill or be taken away from her. Even at the time, I realised this couldn't be right, that this interpretation didn't fit with the rest of the lyrics. But that wasn't an issue with me. The song was about what I said, and I used to listen to it again and again, on my own, whenever I got the chance.

There was one strange incident around this time I should tell you about here. It really unsettled me, and although I wasn't to find out its real meaning until years later, I think I sensed, even then, some deeper significance to it.

It was a sunny afternoon and I'd gone to our dorm to get something. I remember how bright it was because the curtains in our room hadn't been pulled back properly, and you could see the sun coming in in big shafts and see all the dust in the air. I hadn't meant to play the tape, but since I was there all by myself, an impulse made me get the cassette out of my collection box and put it into the player.

Maybe the volume had been turned right up by whoever had been using it last, I don't know. But it was much louder than I usually had it and that was probably why I didn't hear her before I did. Or maybe I'd just got complacent by then. Anyway, what I was doing was swaying about slowly in time to the song, holding an imaginary baby to my breast. In fact, to make it all the more embarrassing, it was one of those times I'd grabbed a pillow to stand in for the baby, and I was doing this slow dance, my eyes closed, singing along softly each time those lines came around again:

'Oh baby, baby, never let me go ...'

The song was almost over when something made me realise I wasn't alone, and I opened my eyes to find myself staring at Madame framed in the doorway.

I froze in shock. Then within a second or two, I began to feel a new kind of alarm, because I could see there was something strange about the situation. The door was almost half open - it was a sort of rule we couldn't close dorm doors completely except for when we were sleeping - but Madame hadn't nearly come up to the threshold. She was out in the corridor, standing very still, her head angled to one side to give her a view of what I was doing inside. And the odd thing was she was crying. It might even have been one of her sobs that had come through the song to jerk me out of my dream.

When I think about this now, it seems to me, even if she wasn't a guardian, she was the adult, and she should have said or done something, even if it was just to tell me off. Then I'd have known how to behave. But she just went on standing out there, sobbing and sobbing, staring at me through the doorway with that same look in her eyes she always had when she looked at us, like she was seeing something that gave her the creeps. Except this time there was something else, something extra in that look I couldn't fathom.

I didn't know what to do or say, or what to expect next. Perhaps she would come into the room, shout at me, hit me even, I didn't have a clue. As it was, she turned and the next moment I could hear her footsteps leaving the hut. I realised the tape had gone onto the next track, and I turned it off and sat down on the nearest bed. And as I did so, I saw through the window in front of me her figure hurrying off towards the main house. She didn't glance back, but I could tell from the way her back was hunched up she was still sobbing.

When I got back to my friends a few minutes later, I didn't tell them anything about what had happened. Someone noticed I wasn't right and said something, but I just shrugged and kept quiet. I wasn't ashamed exactly: but it was a bit like that earlier time, when we'd all waylaid Madame in the courtyard as she got out of her car. What I wished more than anything was that the thing hadn't happened at all, and I thought that by not mentioning it I'd be doing myself and everyone else a favour.

I did, though, talk to Tommy about it a couple of years later. This was in those days following our conversation by the pond when he'd first confided in me about Miss Lucy; the days during which - as I see it - we started off our whole thing of wondering and asking questions about ourselves that we kept going between us through the years. When I told Tommy about what had happened with Madame in the dorm, he came up with a fairly simple explanation. By then, of course, we all knew something I hadn't known back then, which was that none of us could have babies. It's just possible I'd somehow picked up the idea when I was younger without fully registering it, and that's why I heard what I did when I listened to that song. But there was no way I'd known properly back then. As I say, by the time Tommy and I were discussing it, we'd all been told clearly enough. None of us, incidentally, was particularly bothered about it; in fact, I remember some people being pleased we could have sex without worrying about all of that - though proper sex was still some way off for most of us at that stage. Anyway, when I told Tommy about what had happened, he said:

'Madame's probably not a bad person, even though she's creepy. So when she saw you dancing like that, holding your baby, she thought it was really tragic, how you couldn't have babies. That's why she started crying.'

'But Tommy,' I pointed out, 'how could she have known the song had anything to do with people having babies? How could she have known the pillow I was holding was supposed to be a baby? That was only in my head.'

Tommy thought about this, then said only half jokingly: 'Maybe Madame can read minds. She's strange. Maybe she can see right inside you. It wouldn't surprise me.'

This gave us both a little chill, and though we giggled, we didn't say any more about it.

The tape disappeared a couple of months after the incident with Madame. I never linked the two events at the time and I've no reason to link them now. I was in the dorm one night, just before lights-out, and was rummaging through my collection chest to pass the time until the others came back from the bathroom. It's odd but when it first dawned on me the tape wasn't there any more, my main thought was that I mustn't give away how panicked I was. I can remember actually making a point of humming absent-mindedly while I went on searching. I've thought about it a lot and I still don't know how to explain it: these were my closest friends in that room with me and yet I didn't want them to know how upset I was about my tape going missing.

I suppose it had something to do with it being a secret, just how much it had meant to me. Maybe all of us at Hailsham had little secrets like that - little private nooks created out of thin air where we could go off alone with our fears and longings. But the very fact that we had such needs would have felt wrong to us at the time - like somehow we were letting the side down.

Anyway, once I was quite sure the tape was gone, I asked each of the others in the dorm, very casually, if they'd seen it. I wasn't yet completely distraught because there was just the chance I'd left it in the billiards room; otherwise my hope was that someone had borrowed it and would give it back in the morning.

Well, the tape didn't turn up the next day and I've still no idea what happened to it. The truth is, I suppose, there was far more thieving going on at Hailsham than we - or the guardians - ever wanted to admit. But the reason I'm going into all this now is to explain about Ruth and how she reacted. What you have to remember is that I lost my tape less than a month after that time Midge had quizzed Ruth in the Art Room about her pencil case and I'd come to the rescue. Ever since, as I told you, Ruth had been looking out for something nice to do for me in return, and the tape disappearing gave her a real opportunity. You could even say it wasn't until after my tape vanished that things got back to normal with us - maybe for the first time since that rainy morning I'd mentioned the Sales Register to her under the eaves of the main house.

The night I first noticed the tape had gone, I'd made sure to ask everyone about it, and that of course had included Ruth. Looking back, I can see how she must have realised, then and there, exactly what losing the tape meant to me, and at the same time, how important it was for me there was no fuss. So she'd replied that night with a distracted shrug and gone on with what she was doing. But the next morning, when I was coming back from the bathroom, I could hear her - in a casual voice like it wasn't anything much - asking Hannah if she was sure she hadn't seen my tape.

Then maybe a fortnight later, when I'd long reconciled myself to having truly lost my tape, she came and found me during the lunch break. It was one of the first really good days of spring that year, and I'd been sitting on the grass talking with a couple of the older girls. When Ruth came up and asked if I wanted to go for a little stroll, it was obvious she had something particular on her mind. So I left the older girls and followed her to the edge of the North Playing Field, then up the north hill, until we were standing there by the wooden fence looking down on the sweep of green dotted with clusters of students. There was a strong breeze at the top of the hill, and I remember being surprised by it because I hadn't noticed it down on the grass. We stood there looking over the grounds for a while, then she held out a little bag to me. When I took it, I could tell there was a cassette tape inside and my heart leapt. But Ruth said immediately:

'Kathy, it's not your one. The one you lost. I tried to find it for you, but it's really gone.'

'Yeah,' I said. 'Gone to Norfolk.'

We both laughed. Then I took the tape out of the bag with a disappointed air, and I'm not sure the disappointment wasn't still there on my face while I examined it.

I was holding something called Twenty Classic Dance Tunes. When I played it later, I discovered it was orchestra stuff for ballroom dancing. Of course, the moment she was giving it to me, I didn't know what sort of music it was, but I did know it wasn't anything like Judy Bridgewater. Then again, almost immediately, I saw how Ruth wasn't to know that – how to Ruth, who didn't know the first thing about music, this tape might easily make up for the one I'd lost. And suddenly I felt the disappointment ebbing away and being replaced by a real happiness. We didn't do things like hug each other much at Hailsham. But I squeezed one of her hands in both mine when I thanked her. She said: 'I found it at the last Sale. I just thought it's the sort of thing you'd like.' And I said that, yes, it was exactly the sort of thing.

I still have it now. I don't play it much because the music has nothing to do with anything. It's an object, like a brooch or a ring, and especially now Ruth has gone, it's become one of my most precious possessions.

CHAPTER SEVEN

I want to move on now to our last years at Hailsham. I'm talking about the period from when we were thirteen to when we left at sixteen. In my memory my life at Hailsham falls into two distinct chunks: this last era, and everything that came before. The earlier years - the ones I've just been telling you about - they tend to blur into each other as a kind of golden time, and when I think about them at all, even the not-so-great things, I can't help feeling a sort of glow. But those last years feel different. They weren't unhappy exactly - I've got plenty of memories I treasure from them - but they were more serious, and in some ways darker. Maybe I've exaggerated it in my mind, but I've got an impression of things changing rapidly around then, like day moving into night.

That talk with Tommy beside the pond: I think of it now as a kind of marker between the two eras. Not that anything significant started to happen immediately afterwards; but for me at least, that conversation was a turning point. I definitely started to look at everything differently. Where before I'd have backed away from awkward stuff, I began instead, more and more, to ask questions, if not out loud, at least within myself.

In particular, that conversation got me looking at Miss Lucy in a new light. I watched her carefully whenever I could, not just from curiosity, but because I now saw her as the most likely source of important clues. And that's how it was, over the next year or two, I came to notice various odd little things she said or did that my friends missed altogether.

There was the time, for example, maybe a few weeks after the talk by the pond, when Miss Lucy was taking us for English. We'd been looking at some poetry, but had somehow drifted onto talking about soldiers in World War Two being kept in prison camps. One of the boys asked if the fences around the camps had been electrified, and then someone else had said how strange it must have been, living in a place like that, where you could commit suicide any time you liked just by touching a fence. This might have been intended as a serious point, but the rest of us thought it pretty funny. We were all laughing and talking at once, and then Laura - typical of her - got up on her seat and did a hysterical impersonation of someone reaching out and getting electrocuted. For a moment things got riotous, with everyone shouting and mimicking touching electric fences.

I went on watching Miss Lucy through all this and I could see, just for a second, a ghostly expression come over her face as she watched the class in front of her. Then - I kept watching carefully - she pulled herself together, smiled and said: 'It's just as well the fences at Hailsham aren't electrified. You get terrible accidents sometimes.'

She said this quite softly, and because people were still shouting, she was more or less drowned out. But I heard her clearly enough. 'You get terrible accidents sometimes.' What accidents? Where? But no one picked her up on it, and we went back to discussing our poem.

There were other little incidents like that, and before long I came to see Miss Lucy as being not quite like the other guardians. It's even possible I began to realise, right back then, the nature of her worries and frustrations. But that's probably going too far; chances are, at the time, I noticed all these things without knowing what on earth to make of them. And if these incidents now seem full of significance and all of a piece, it's probably because I'm looking at them in the light of what came later - particularly what happened that day at the pavilion while we were sheltering from the downpour.

We were fifteen by then, already into our last year at Hailsham. We'd been in the pavilion getting ready for a game of rounders. The boys were going through a phase of 'enjoying' rounders in order to flirt with us, so there were over thirty of us that afternoon. The downpour had started while we were changing, and we found ourselves gathering on the veranda - which was sheltered by the pavilion roof - while we waited for it to stop. But the rain kept going, and when the last of us had emerged, the veranda was pretty crowded, with everyone milling around restlessly. I remember Laura was demonstrating to me an especially disgusting way of blowing your nose for when you really wanted to put off a boy.

Miss Lucy was the only guardian present. She was leaning over the rail at the front, peering into the rain like she was trying to see right across the playing field. I was watching her as carefully as ever in those days, and even as I was laughing at Laura, I was stealing glances at Miss Lucy's back. I remember wondering if there wasn't something a bit odd about her posture, the way her head was bent down just a little too far so she looked like a crouching animal waiting to pounce. And the way she was leaning forward over the rail meant drops from the overhanging gutter were only just missing her - but she seemed to show no sign of caring. I remember actually convincing myself there was nothing unusual in all this - that she was simply anxious for the rain to stop - and turning my attention back to what Laura was saying. Then a few minutes later, when I'd forgotten all about Miss Lucy and was laughing my head off at something, I suddenly realised things had gone quiet around us, and that Miss Lucy was speaking.

She was standing at the same spot as before, but she'd turned to face us now, so her back was against the rail, and the rainy sky behind her.

'No, no, I'm sorry, I'm going to have to interrupt you,' she was saying, and I could see she was talking to two boys sitting on the benches immediately in front of her. Her voice wasn't exactly strange, but she was speaking very loudly, in the sort of voice she'd use to announce something to the lot of us, and that was why we'd all gone quiet. 'No, Peter, I'm going to have to stop you. I can't listen to you any more and keep silent.'

Then she raised her gaze to include the rest of us and took a deep breath. 'All right, you can hear this, it's for all of you. It's time someone spelt it out.'

We waited while she kept staring at us. Later, some people said they'd thought she was going to give us a big telling-off; others that she was about to announce a new rule on how we played rounders. But I knew before she said another word it would be something more.

'Boys, you must forgive me for listening. But you were right behind me, so I couldn't help it. Peter, why don't you tell the others what you were saying to Gordon just now?'

Peter J. looked bewildered and I could see him getting ready his injured innocence face. But then Miss Lucy said again, this time much more gently:

'Peter, go on. Please tell the others what you were just saying.'

Peter shrugged. 'We were just talking about what it would feel like if we became actors. What sort of life it would be.'

'Yes,' Miss Lucy said, 'and you were saying to Gordon you'd have to go to America to stand the best chance.'

Peter J. shrugged again and muttered quietly: 'Yes, Miss Lucy.'

But Miss Lucy was now moving her gaze over the lot of us. 'I know you don't mean any harm. But there's just too much talk like this. I hear it all the time, it's been allowed to go on, and it's not right.' I could see more drops coming off the gutter and landing on her shoulder, but she didn't seem to notice. 'If no one else will talk to you,' she continued, 'then I will. The problem, as I see it, is that you've been told and not told. You've been told, but none of you really understand, and I dare say, some people are quite happy to leave it that way. But I'm not. If you're going to have decent lives, then you've got to know and know properly. None of you will go to America, none of you will be film stars. And none of you will be working in supermarkets as I heard some of you planning the other day. Your lives are set out for you. You'll become adults, then before you're old, before you're even middle-aged, you'll start to donate your vital organs. That's what each of you was created to do. You're not like the actors you watch on your videos, you're not even like me. You were brought into this world for a purpose, and your futures, all of them, have been decided. So you're not to talk that way any more. You'll be leaving Hailsham before long, and it's not so far off, the day you'll be preparing for your first donations. You need to remember that. If you're to have decent lives, you have to know who you are and what lies ahead of you, every one of you.'

Then she went silent, but my impression was that she was continuing to say things inside her head, because for some time her gaze kept roving over us, going from face to face just as if she were still speaking to us. We were all pretty relieved when she turned to look out over the playing field again.

'It's not so bad now,' she said, even though the rain was as steady as ever. 'Let's just go out there. Then maybe the sun will come out too.'

I think that was all she said. When I was discussing it with Ruth a few years ago at the centre in Dover, she claimed Miss Lucy had told us a lot more; that she'd explained how before donations we'd all spend some time first as carers, about the usual sequence of the donations, the recovery centres and so on - but I'm pretty sure she didn't. Okay, she probably intended to when she began talking. But my guess is once she'd set off, once she'd seen the puzzled, uncomfortable faces in front of her, she realised the impossibility of completing what she'd started.

It's hard to say clearly what sort of impact Miss Lucy's outburst at the pavilion made. Word got round fast enough, but the talk mostly focused on Miss Lucy herself rather than on what she'd been trying to tell us. Some students thought she'd lost her marbles for a moment; others that she'd been asked to say what she had by Miss Emily and the other guardians; there were even some who'd actually been there and who thought Miss Lucy had been telling us off for being too rowdy on the veranda. But as I say there was surprisingly little discussion about what she'd said. If it did come up, people tended to say: 'Well so what? We already knew all that.'

But that had been Miss Lucy's point exactly. We'd been 'told and not told', as she'd put it. A few years ago, when Tommy and I were going over it all again, and I reminded him of Miss Lucy's 'told and not told' idea, he came up with a theory.

Tommy thought it possible the guardians had, throughout all our years at Hailsham, timed very carefully and deliberately everything they told us, so that we were always just too young to understand properly the latest piece of information. But of course we'd take it in at some level, so that before long all this stuff was there in our heads without us ever having examined it properly.

It's a bit too much like a conspiracy theory for me - I don't think our guardians were that crafty - but there's probably something in it. Certainly, it feels like I always knew about donations in some vague way, even as early as six or seven. And it's curious, when we were older and the guardians were giving us those talks, nothing came as a complete surprise. It was like we'd heard everything somewhere before.

One thing that occurs to me now is that when the guardians first started giving us proper lectures about sex, they tended to run them together with talk about the donations. At that age - again, I'm talking of around thirteen - we were all pretty worried and excited about sex, and naturally would have pushed the other stuff into the background. In other words, it's possible the guardians managed to smuggle into our heads a lot of the basic facts about our futures.

Now to be fair, it was probably natural to run these two subjects together. If, say, they were telling us how we'd have to be very careful to avoid diseases when we had sex, it would have been odd not to mention how much more important this was for us than for normal people outside. And that, of course, would bring us onto the donations.

Then there was the whole business about our not being able to have babies. Miss Emily used to give a lot of the sex lectures herself, and I remember once, she brought in a life-size skeleton from the biology class to demonstrate how it was done. We watched in complete astonishment as she put the skeleton through various contortions, thrusting her pointer around without the slightest self-consciousness. She was going through all the nuts and bolts of how you did it, what went in where, the different variations, like this was still Geography. Then suddenly, with the skeleton in an obscene heap on the desktop, she turned away and began telling us how we had to be careful who we had sex with. Not just because of the diseases, but because, she said, 'sex affects emotions in ways you'd never expect'. We had to be extremely careful about having sex in the outside world, especially with people who weren't students, because out there sex meant all sorts of things. Out there people were even fighting and killing each other over who had sex with whom. And the reason it meant so much - so much more than, say, dancing or table-tennis - was because the people out there were different from us students: they could have babies from sex. That was why it was so important to them, this question of who did it with whom. And even though, as we knew, it was completely impossible for any of us to have babies, out there, we had to behave like them. We had to respect the rules and treat sex as something pretty special.

Miss Emily's lecture that day was typical of what I'm talking about. We'd be focusing on sex, and then the other stuff would creep in. I suppose that was all part of how we came to be 'told and not told'.

I think in the end we must have absorbed quite a lot of information, because I remember, around that age, a marked change in the way we approached the whole territory surrounding the donations. Until then, as I've said, we'd done everything to avoid the subject; we'd backed off at the first sign we were entering that ground, and there'd been severe punishment for any idiot - like Marge that time - who got careless. But from when we were thirteen, like I say, things started to change. We still didn't discuss the donations and all that went with them; we still found the whole area awkward enough. But it became something we made jokes about, in much the way we joked about sex. Looking back now, I'd say the rule about not discussing the donations openly was still there, as strong as ever. But now it was okay, almost required, every now and then, to make some jokey allusion to these things that lay in front of us.

A good example is what happened the time Tommy got the gash on his elbow. It must have been just before my talk with him by the pond; a time, I suppose, when Tommy was still coming out of that phase of being teased and taunted.

It wasn't such a bad gash, and though he was sent to Crow Face to have it seen to, he was back almost straight away with a square of dressing plastered to his elbow. No one thought much about it until a couple of days later, when

Tommy took off the dressing to reveal something at just that stage between sealing and still being an open wound. You could see bits of skin starting to bond, and soft red bits peeping up from underneath. We were in the middle of lunch, so everyone crowded round to go 'urgh!'. Then Christopher H., from the year above, said with a dead straight face: 'Pity it's on that bit of the elbow. Just about anywhere else, it wouldn't matter.'

Tommy looked worried - Christopher being someone he looked up to in those days - and asked what he meant. Christopher went on eating, then said nonchalantly:

'Don't you know? If it's right on the elbow like that, it can unzip. All you have to do is bend your arm quickly. Not just that actual bit, the whole elbow, it can all unzip like a bag opening up. Thought you'd know that.'

I could hear Tommy complaining that Crow Face hadn't warned him of anything of that sort, but Christopher shrugged and said: 'She thought you knew, of course. Everyone knows.'

A number of people nearby murmured agreement. 'You've got to keep your arm dead straight,' someone else said. 'Bending it at all's really dangerous.'

The next day I could see Tommy going about with his arm held out very rigidly and looking worried. Everybody was laughing at him, and I was cross about that, but I had to admit, there was a funny side to it. Then towards the end of the afternoon as we were leaving the Art Room, he came up to me in the corridor and said: 'Kath, can I just have a quick word?'

This was maybe a couple of weeks after the time I'd gone up to him in the playing field to remind him about his polo shirt, so it had got about we were special friends of some sort. All the same, his coming up like that asking for a private talk was pretty embarrassing and threw me off balance. Maybe that partly explains why I wasn't more helpful than I was.

'I'm not too worried or anything,' he began, once he'd got me aside. 'But I wanted to play safe, that's all. We should never take chances with our health. I need someone to help, Kath.' He was, he explained, concerned about what he'd do in his sleep. He might easily bend his elbow in the night.

'I have these dreams all the time where I'm fighting loads of Roman soldiers.'

When I quizzed him a bit, it became obvious all kinds of people - people who hadn't been there that lunch-time - had been coming up to him to repeat Christopher H.'s warning. In fact, it seemed a few had carried the joke further: Tommy had been told of a student who'd gone to sleep with a cut on the elbow just like his and woken up to find his whole upper arm and hand skeletally exposed, the skin flopping about next to him 'like one of those long gloves in My Fair Lady'.

What Tommy was asking me now was to help tie a splint on the arm to keep it rigid through the night.

'I don't trust any of the others,' he said, holding up a thick ruler he wanted to use. 'They might deliberately do it so it comes undone in the night.'

He was looking at me in complete innocence and I didn't know what to say. A part of me wanted badly to tell him what was going on, and I suppose I knew that to do anything else would be to betray the trust we'd built up since the moment I'd reminded him about his polo shirt. And for me to strap up his arm in a splint would have meant my becoming one of the main perpetrators of the joke. I still feel ashamed I didn't tell him then. But you've got to remember I was still young, and that I only had a few seconds to decide. And when someone's asking you to do something in such a pleading way, everything goes against saying no.

I suppose the main thing was that I didn't want to upset him. Because I could see, for all his anxiety about his elbow, Tommy was touched by all the concern he believed had been shown him. Of course, I knew he'd find out the truth sooner or later, but at that moment I just couldn't tell him. The best I could do was to ask:

‘Did Crow Face tell you you had to do this?’

‘No. But imagine how angry she'd be if my elbow slipped out.’

I still feel bad about it, but I promised to strap his arm for him – in Room 14 half an hour before the night bell – and watched him go off grateful and reassured.

As it happened, I didn't have to go through with it because Tommy found out first. It was around eight in the evening, I was coming down the main staircase, and heard a burst of laughter rising up the stairwell from the ground floor. My heart sank because I knew immediately it was to do with Tommy. I paused on the first-floor landing and looked over the rail just as Tommy came out of the billiards room with thunderous footsteps. I remember thinking: ‘At least he's not shouting.’ And he didn't, the whole time he went to the cloakroom, got his things and left the main house. And all that time, laughter kept coming from the open doorway of the billiards room, and voices yelling things like: ‘If you lose your temper, your elbow will definitely pop out!’

I thought about following him out into the evening and catching up with him before he got to his dorm hut, but then I remembered how I'd promised to put his arm in a splint for the night, and didn't move. I just kept saying to myself:

‘At least he didn't have a tantrum. At least he kept hold of that temper.’

But I've gone off a bit. The reason I was talking about all this was because the idea of things ‘unzipping’ carried over from Tommy's elbow to become a running joke among us about the donations. The idea was that when the time came, you'd be able just to unzip a bit of yourself, a kidney or something would slide out, and you'd hand it over. It wasn't something we found so funny in itself; it was more a way of putting each other off our food. You unzipped your liver, say, and dumped it on someone's plate, that sort of thing. I remember once Gary B., who had this unbelievable appetite, coming back with a third helping of pudding, and virtually the whole table 'unzipping' bits of themselves and piling it all over Gary's bowl, while he went on determinedly stuffing himself.

Tommy never liked it much when the unzipping stuff came up again, but by then the days of his being teased were past and no one connected the joke with him any more. It was just done to get a laugh, to put someone off their dinner - and, I suppose, as some way of acknowledging what was in front of us. And this was my original point. By that time in our lives, we no longer shrank from the subject of donations as we'd have done a year or two earlier; but neither did we think about it very seriously, or discuss it. All that business about 'unzipping', that was typical of the way the whole subject impinged on us when we were thirteen.

So I'd say Miss Lucy had it about right when she said, a couple of years later, that we'd been 'told and not told'. And what's more, now I think about it, I'd say what Miss Lucy said to us that afternoon led to a real shift in our attitudes. It was after that day, jokes about donations faded away, and we started to think properly about things. If anything, the donations went back to being a subject to be avoided, but not in the way it had been when we were younger. This time round it wasn't awkward or embarrassing any more; just sombre and serious.

'It's funny,' Tommy said to me when we were remembering it all again a few years ago. 'None of us stopped to think about how she felt, Miss Lucy herself. We never worried if she'd got into trouble, saying what she did to us. We were so selfish back then. '

'But you can't blame us,' I said. 'We'd been taught to think about each other, but never about the guardians. The idea the guardians had differences between them, that never occurred to us. '

'But we were old enough,' Tommy said. 'By that age, it should have occurred to us. But it didn't. We didn't think about poor Miss Lucy at all. Not even after that time, you know, when you saw her. '

I knew straight away what he meant. He was talking about the morning early in our last summer at Hailsham, when I'd stumbled across her up in Room 22. Thinking about it now, I'd say Tommy had a point. After that moment it should have been clear, even to us, how troubled Miss Lucy had become. But as he said, we never considered anything from her viewpoint, and it never occurred to us to say or do anything to support her.

CHAPTER EIGHT

Many of us had turned sixteen by then. It was a morning of brilliant sunshine and we'd all just come down to the courtyard after a lesson in the main house, when I remembered something I'd left in the classroom. So I went back up to the third floor and that's how the thing with Miss Lucy happened.

In those days I had this secret game. When I found myself alone, I'd stop and look for a view - out of a window, say, or through a doorway into a room - any view so long as there were no people in it. I did this so that I could, for a few seconds at least, create the illusion the place wasn't crawling with students, but that instead Hailsham was this quiet, tranquil house where I lived with just five or six others. To make this work, you had to get yourself into a sort of dream, and shut off all the stray noises and voices. Usually you had to be pretty patient too: if, say, you were focusing from a window on one particular bit of the playing field, you could wait ages for those couple of seconds when there wasn't anyone at all in your frame. Anyway, that was what I was doing that morning after I'd fetched whatever it was I'd left in the classroom and come back out onto the third-floor landing.

I was keeping very still near a window looking down onto a section of the courtyard where I'd been standing only moments before. My friends had gone, and the courtyard was steadily emptying, so I was waiting for my trick to work, when I heard behind me what sounded like gas or steam escaping in sharp bursts.

It was a hissing noise that would go on for about ten seconds, pause, then come again. I wasn't alarmed exactly, but since I seemed to be the only person around, I thought I'd better go and investigate.

I went across the landing towards the sound, along the corridor past the room I'd just been in, and down to Room 22, second from the end. The door was partly open, and just as I came up to it, the hissing started up again with a new intensity. I don't know what I expected to discover as I cautiously pushed the door, but I was properly surprised to find Miss Lucy.

Room 22 was hardly used for classes because it was so small and, even on a day like that one, hardly any light got in. The guardians sometimes went in there to mark our work or get on with reading. That morning the room was darker than ever because the blinds had been pulled almost all the way down. There were two tables pushed together for a group to sit around, but Miss Lucy was there alone near the back. I could see several loose sheets of dark, shiny paper scattered over the table in front of her. She herself was leaning over in concentration, forehead very low, arms up on the surface, scrawling furious lines over a page with a pencil. Underneath the heavy black lines I could see neat blue handwriting. As I watched, she went on scrubbing the pencil point over the paper, almost in the way we did shading in Art, except her movements were much more angry, as if she didn't mind gouging right through the sheet. Then I realised, in the same instant, that this was the source of the odd noise, and that what I'd taken for dark shiny paper on the table had also, not long before, been pages of neat handwriting.

She was so lost in what she was doing, it took a while for her to realise I was there. When she looked up with a start, I could see her face was flushed, but there were no traces of tears. She stared at me, then put down her pencil.

'Hello, young lady,' she said, then took a deep breath. 'What can I do for you?'

I think I turned away so I didn't have to look at her or at the papers over the desk. I can't remember if I said very much - if I explained about the noise and how I'd worried about it being gas. In any case, there was no proper conversation: she didn't want me there and neither did I. I think I made some apology and went out, half expecting her to call me back. But she didn't, and what I remember now is that I went down the staircase burning with shame and resentment. At that moment I wished more than anything that I hadn't seen what I'd just seen, though if you'd asked me to define just what I was so upset about, I wouldn't have been able to explain. Shame, as I say, had a lot to do with it, and also fury, though not exactly at Miss Lucy herself. I was very confused, and that's probably why I didn't say anything about it to my friends until much later.

After that morning I became convinced something else - perhaps something awful - lay around the corner to do with Miss Lucy, and I kept my eyes and ears open for it. But the days passed and I heard nothing. What I didn't know at the time was that something pretty significant had happened only a few days after I'd seen her in Room 22 - something between Miss Lucy and Tommy that had left him upset and disorientated. There would have been a time not so much earlier when Tommy and I would have immediately reported to each other any news of this sort; but just around that summer, various things were going on which meant we weren't talking so freely.

That's why I didn't hear about it for so long. Afterwards I could have kicked myself for not guessing, for not seeking Tommy out and getting it out of him. But as I've said, there was a lot going on around then, between Tommy and Ruth, a whole host of other stuff, and I'd put all the changes I'd noticed in him down to that.

It's probably going too far to say Tommy's whole act fell apart that summer, but there were times when I got seriously worried he was turning back into the awkward and changeable figure from several years before. Once, for instance, a few of us were going back from the pavilion towards the dorm huts and found ourselves walking behind Tommy and a couple of other boys. They were just a few paces ahead, and all of them – Tommy included – looked to be in good form, laughing and shoving each other. In fact, I'd say Laura, who was walking beside me, took her cue from the way the boys were larking about. The thing was, Tommy must have been sitting on the ground earlier, because there was a sizeable chunk of mud stuck on his rugby shirt near the small of his back. He was obviously unaware of it, and I don't think his friends had seen it either or they'd surely have made something of it. Anyway, Laura being Laura shouted out something like: 'Tommy! You got poo-poo on your back! What have you been doing?'

She'd done this in a completely friendly way, and if some of the rest of us made a few noises too, it wasn't anything more than the sort of thing students did the whole time. So it was a complete shock when Tommy came to a dead halt, wheeled round and stared at Laura with a face like thunder. We all stopped too – the boys looking as bewildered as we were – and for a few seconds I thought Tommy was going to blow for the first time in years. But then he abruptly stalked off, leaving us all swapping looks and shrugging.

Nearly as bad was the time I showed him Patricia C.'s calendar. Patricia was two years below us but everyone was in awe of her drawing skills, and her stuff was always sought after at the Art Exchanges. I'd been particularly pleased with the calendar, which I'd managed to get at the last Exchange, because word had been going round about it from weeks before. It wasn't anything like, say, Miss Emily's flappy colour calendars of the English counties. Patricia's calendar was tiny and dumpy, and for each month there was a stunning little pencil sketch of a scene from Hailsham life. I wish I still had it now, especially since in some of the pictures – like the ones for June and for September – you can make out the faces of particular students and guardians. It's one of the things I lost when I left the Cottages, when my mind was elsewhere and I wasn't being so careful what I took with me - but I'll come to all that in its place. My point now is that Patricia's calendar was a real catch, I was proud of it, and that's why I wanted to show it to Tommy.

I'd spotted him standing in the late afternoon sunshine beside the big sycamore near the South Playing Field, and since my calendar was there in my bag - I'd been showing it off during our music lesson - I'd gone over to him.

He was absorbed in a football match involving some younger boys over in the next field and at this stage his mood seemed just fine, tranquil even. He smiled when I came up to him and we chatted for a minute about nothing in particular. Then I said: 'Tommy, look what I managed to get.' I didn't try to keep the triumph out of my voice, and I may even have gone 'dah-dah!' as I brought it out and handed it to him. When he took the calendar, there was still a smile on his features, but as he flicked through I could see something closing off inside him.

'That Patricia,' I began to say, but I could hear my own voice changing. 'She's so clever ...'

But Tommy was already handing it back to me. Then without another word he marched past me off towards the main house.

This last incident should have given me a clue. If I'd thought about it with half a brain, I should have guessed Tommy's recent moods had something to do with Miss Lucy and his old problems about 'being creative'. But with everything else going on just at that time, I didn't, as I say, think in these terms at all. I suppose I must have assumed those old problems had been left behind with our early teen years, and that only the big issues that now loomed so large could possibly preoccupy any of us.

So what had been going on? Well, for a start, Ruth and Tommy had had a serious bust-up. They'd been a couple for about six months by then; at least, that's how long they'd been 'public' about it - walking around with arms around each other, that kind of thing. They were respected as a couple because they weren't show-offs. Some others, Sylvia B. and Roger D., for example, could get stomach-churning, and you had to give them a chorus of vomiting noises just to keep them in order. But Ruth and Tommy never did anything gross in front of people, and if sometimes they cuddled or whatever, it felt like they were genuinely doing it for each other, not for an audience.

Looking back now, I can see we were pretty confused about this whole area around sex. That's hardly surprising, I suppose, given we were barely sixteen. But what added to the confusion - I can see it more clearly now - was the fact that the guardians were themselves confused. On the one hand we had, say, Miss Emily's talks, when she'd tell us how important it was not to be ashamed of our bodies, to 'respect our physical needs', how sex was 'a very beautiful gift' as long as both people really wanted it. But when it came down to it, the guardians made it more or less impossible for any of us actually to do much without breaking rules. We couldn't visit the boys' dorms after nine o'clock, they couldn't visit ours. The classrooms were all officially 'out of bounds' in the evenings, as were the areas behind the sheds and the pavilion. And you didn't want to do it in the fields even when it was warm enough, because you'd almost certainly discover afterwards you'd had an audience watching from the house passing around binoculars. In other words, for all the talk of sex being beautiful, we had the distinct impression we'd be in trouble if the guardians caught us at it.

I say this, but the only real case I personally knew of like that was when Jenny C. and Rob D. got interrupted in Room 14. They were doing it after lunch, right there over one of the desks, and Mr Jack had come in to get something. According to Jenny, Mr Jack had turned red and gone right out again, but they'd been put off and had stopped. They'd more or less dressed themselves when Mr Jack came back, just as though for the first time, and pretended to be surprised and shocked.

‘It’s very clear to me what you’ve been doing and it’s not appropriate,’ he’d said, and told them both to go and see Miss Emily. But once they’d got to Miss Emily’s office, she’d told them she was on her way to an important meeting and didn’t have time to talk to them.

‘But you know you shouldn’t have been doing whatever you were doing, and I don’t expect you’ll do it again,’ she’d said, before rushing out with her folders.

Gay sex, incidentally, was something we were even more confused about. For some reason, we called it ‘umbrella sex’; if you fancied someone your own sex, you were ‘an umbrella’. I don’t know how it was where you were, but at Hailsham we definitely weren’t at all kind towards any signs of gay stuff. The boys especially could do the cruellest things. According to Ruth this was because quite a few of them had done things with each other when they’d been younger, before they’d realised what they were doing. So now they were ridiculously tense about it. I don’t know if she was right, but for sure, accusing someone of ‘getting all umbrella’ could easily end in a fight.

When we discussed all these things – as we did endlessly back then – we couldn’t decide whether or not the guardians wanted us to have sex or not. Some people thought they did, but that we kept trying to do it at all the wrong times. Hannah had the theory that it was their duty to make us have sex because otherwise we wouldn’t be good donors later on. According to her, things like your kidneys and pancreas didn’t work properly unless you kept having sex. Someone else said what we had to remember was that the guardians were ‘normals’. That’s why they were so odd about it; for them, sex was for when you wanted babies, and even though they knew, intellectually, that we couldn’t have babies, they still felt uneasy about us doing it because deep down they couldn't quite believe we wouldn't end up with babies.

Annette B. had another theory: that the guardians were uncomfortable about us having sex with each other because they'd then want to have sex with us. Mr Chris in particular, she said, looked at us girls in that way. Laura said that what Annette really meant was she wanted to have sex with Mr Chris. We all cracked up at this because the idea of having sex with Mr Chris seemed absurd, as well as completely sick-making.

The theory I think came closest was the one put forward by Ruth. 'They're telling us about sex for after we leave Hailsham,' she said. 'They want us to do it properly, with someone we like and without getting diseases. But they really mean it for after we leave. They don't want us doing it here, because it's too much hassle for them.'

My guess, anyway, is that there wasn't nearly as much sex going on as people made out. A lot of snogging and touching up, maybe; and couples hinting they were having proper sex. But looking back, I wonder how much of it there really was. If everyone who claimed to be doing it really had been, then that's all you'd have seen when you walked about Hailsham - couples going at it left, right and centre.

What I remember is that there was this discreet agreement among us all not to quiz each other too much about our claims. If, say, Hannah rolled her eyes when you were discussing another girl and murmured: 'Virgin' - meaning 'Of course we're not, but she is, so what can you expect?' - then it definitely wasn't on to ask her: 'Who did you do it with? When? Where?' No, you just nodded knowingly. It was like there was some parallel universe we all vanished off to where we had all this sex.

I must have seen at the time how all these claims being made around me didn't add up. All the same, as that summer approached, I began to feel more and more the odd one out. In a way, sex had got like 'being creative' had been a few years earlier. It felt like if you hadn't done it yet, you ought to, and quickly. And in my case, the whole thing was made more complicated by the fact that two of the girls I was closest to definitely had done it. Laura with Rob D., even though they'd never been a proper couple. And Ruth with Tommy.

For all that, I'd been holding it off for ages, repeating to myself Miss Emily's advice - 'If you can't find someone with whom you truly wish to share this experience, then don't!' But around the spring of the year I'm talking about now, I started to think I wouldn't mind having sex with a boy. Not just to see what it was like, but also because it occurred to me I needed to get familiar with sex, and it would be just as well to practise first with a boy I didn't care about too much. Then later on, if I was with someone special, I'd have more chance of doing everything right. What I mean is, if Miss Emily was correct and sex was this really big deal between people, then I didn't want to be doing it for the first time when it was really important how well it went.

So I had my eye on Harry C. I chose him for a number of reasons. First, I knew he'd definitely done it before, with Sharon D. Next, I didn't fancy him that much, but I certainly didn't find him sick-making. Also, he was quiet and decent, so unlikely to go round gossiping afterwards if it was a complete disaster. And he'd hinted a few times he'd like to have sex with me. Okay, a lot of the boys were making flirty noises in those days, but it was clear by then what was a real proposition and what was the usual boys' stuff.

So I'd chosen Harry, and I only delayed those couple of months because I wanted to make sure I'd be all right physically. Miss Emily had told us it could be painful and a big failure if you didn't get wet enough and this was my one real worry. It wasn't being ripped apart down there, which we often joked about, and was the secret fear of quite a few girls. I kept thinking, as long as I got wet quick enough, there'd be no problem, and I did it a lot on my own just to make sure.

I realise this may sound like I was getting obsessive, but I remember I also spent a lot of time re-reading passages from books where people had sex, going over the lines again and again, trying to tease out clues. The trouble was, the books we had at Hailsham weren't at all helpful. We had a lot of nineteenth-century stuff by Thomas Hardy and people like that, which was more or less useless. Some modern books, by people like Edna O'Brien and Margaret Drabble, had some sex in them, but it wasn't ever very clear what was happening because the authors always assumed you'd already had a lot of sex before and there was no need to go into details. So I was having a frustrating time with the books, and the videos weren't much better. We'd got a video player in the billiards room a couple of years earlier, and by that spring had built up quite a good collection of movies. A lot of them had sex in them, but most scenes would end just as the sex was starting up, or else you'd only see their faces and their backs. And when there was a useful scene, it was difficult to see it more than fleetingly because there were usually twenty others in the room watching with you. We'd evolved this system where we called for particular favourite scenes to be played again - like, for instance, the moment the American jumps over the barbed wire on his bike in The Great Escape. There'd be a chant of: 'Rewind! Rewind!' until someone got the remote and we'd see the portion again, sometimes three, four times. But I could hardly, by myself, start shouting for rewinds just to see sex scenes again.

So I kept delaying week by week, while I went on preparing, until the summer came and I decided I was as ready as I'd ever be. By then, I was even feeling reasonably confident about it, and began dropping hints to Harry. Everything was going fine and according to plan, when Ruth and Tommy split up and it all got confused.

CHAPTER NINE

What happened was that a few days after they split, I was in the Art Room with some other girls, working on a still life. I remember it being stifling that day, even though we had the fan rattling behind us. We were using charcoal, and because someone had commandeered all the easels, we were having to work with our boards propped up on our laps. I was sitting beside Cynthia E., and we'd just been chatting and complaining about the heat. Then somehow we'd got onto the subject of boys, and she'd said, not looking up from her work:

‘And Tommy. I knew it wouldn't last with Ruth. Well, I suppose you're the natural successor.’

She'd said it in a throwaway manner. But Cynthia was a perceptive person, and the fact that she wasn't part of our group just gave her remark more weight. What I mean is, I couldn't help thinking she represented what anyone with any distance on the subject would think. After all, I'd been Tommy's friend for years until all this couples stuff had come up. It was perfectly possible that to someone on the outside, I'd look like Ruth's ‘natural successor’. I just let it go, though, and Cynthia, who wasn't trying to make any big point, said nothing else about it.

Then maybe a day or two later, I was coming out of the pavilion with Hannah when she suddenly nudged me and nodded towards a group of boys over on the North Playing Field.

‘Look,’ she said quietly. ‘Tommy. Sitting by himself.’

I shrugged, as though to say: ‘So what?’. And that's all there was to it. But afterwards I found myself thinking a lot about it. Maybe all Hannah had meant to do was point out how Tommy, since splitting with Ruth, looked a bit of a spare part. But I couldn't quite buy this; I knew Hannah too well. The way she'd nudged me and lowered her voice had made it all too obvious she too was expressing some assumption, probably doing the rounds, about me being the 'natural successor'.

All this did, as I say, put me in a bit of a confusion, because until then I'd been all set on my Harry plan. In fact, looking back now, I'm sure I would have had sex with Harry if it hadn't been for this 'natural successor' business. I'd had it all sorted, and my preparations had gone well. And I still think Harry was a good choice for that stage in my life. I think he would have been considerate and gentle, and have understood what I was wanting from him.

I saw Harry fleetingly a couple of years ago at the recovery centre in Wiltshire. He was being brought in after a donation. I wasn't in the best of moods because my own donor had just completed the night before. No one was blaming me for that - it had been a particularly untidy operation - but I wasn't feeling great all the same. I'd been up most of the night, sorting all the arrangements, and I was in the front reception getting ready to leave when I saw Harry coming in. He was in a wheelchair - because he was so weak, I found out later, not because he couldn't actually walk - and I'm not sure he recognised me when I went up and said hello. I suppose there's no reason I should have any special place in his memory. We'd never had much to do with each other apart from that one time. To him, if he remembered me at all, I'd just be this daft girl who came up to him once, asked if he wanted sex, then backed off. He must have been pretty mature for his age, because he didn't get annoyed or go round telling people I was a tease, or any of that. So when I saw him being brought in that day, I felt grateful to him and wished I was his carer. I looked about, but whoever was his carer wasn't even around. The orderlies were impatient to get him to his room, so I didn't talk with him long. I just said hello, that I hoped he'd feel better soon, and he smiled tiredly. When I mentioned Hailsham he did a thumbs-up, but I could tell he didn't recognise me. Maybe later, when he wasn't so tired, or when the medication wasn't so strong, he'd have tried to place me and remembered.

Anyway, I was talking about back then: about how after Ruth and Tommy split, all my plans got confused. Looking at it now, I feel a bit sorry for Harry. After all the hints I'd been dropping the previous week, there I was, suddenly whispering stuff to put him off. I suppose I must have assumed he was raring to go, that I had my work cut out just to hold him off. Because whenever I saw him, I'd always get something in quick, then rush off before he could say anything back. It was only much later, when I thought about it, it occurred to me he might not have had sex on his mind at all. For all I know, he might have been happy to forget the whole thing, except that every time he saw me, along a corridor or in the grounds, I'd come up and whisper some excuse why I didn't want sex with him just then. It must have looked pretty daft from his side, and if he hadn't been such a decent type, I'd have been a laughing stock in no time. Well, anyway, this era of putting Harry off lasted maybe a couple of weeks, and then came Ruth's request.

That summer, right up until the warm weather faded, we developed this odd way of listening to music together in the fields. Walkmans had started appearing at Hailsham since the previous year's Sales and by that summer there were at least six of them in circulation. The craze was for several people to sit on the grass around a single Walkman, passing the headset around. Okay, it sounds a stupid way to listen to music, but it created a really good feeling. You listened for maybe twenty seconds, took off the headset, passed it on. After a while, provided you kept the same tape going over and over, it was surprising how close it was to having heard all of it by yourself. As I say, the craze really took off that summer, and during the lunch breaks you'd see all these clusters of students lying about the grass around the Walkmans. The guardians weren't too keen, saying we'd spread ear infections, but they let us carry on. I can't remember that last summer without thinking about those afternoons around the Walkmans. Someone would wander up and ask: 'What's the sound?' and if they liked the answer, they'd sit down on the grass and wait their turn. There was almost always a good atmosphere around these sessions and I don't remember anyone being refused a share of the headset.

Anyway, that's what I was up to with a few other girls when Ruth came up to ask if we could have a talk. I could tell it was something important, so I left my other friends and the two of us walked off, all the way to our dorm hut. When we got to our room, I sat down on Ruth's bed, close to the window - the sun had warmed the blanket - and she sat on mine over by the back wall. There was a bluebottle buzzing around, and for a minute we had a laugh playing 'bluebottle tennis', throwing our hands about to make the demented creature go from one to the other of us. Then it found its way out of the window, and Ruth said:

'I want me and Tommy to get back together again. Kathy, will you help?' Then she asked: 'What's the matter?'

'Nothing. I was just a bit surprised, after what's happened. Of course I'll help.'

'I haven't told anybody else about wanting to get back with Tommy. Not even Hannah. You're the only one I trust.'

'What do you want me to do?'

'Just talk to him. You've always had this way with him. He'll listen to you. And he'll know you're not bullshitting about me.'

For a moment we sat there swinging our feet under our beds.

'It's really good you're telling me this,' I said eventually. 'I probably am the best person. Talking to Tommy and all that. '

'What I want is for us to make a fresh start. We're about evens now, we've both done daft things just to hurt each other, but it's enough now. Martha bloody H., I ask you! Maybe he did it just to give me a good laugh. Well you can tell him he succeeded, and the scores are all even again. It's time we grew up and started afresh. I know you can reason with him, Kathy. You'll deal with it the best way possible. Then if he's still not prepared to be sensible, I'll know there's no point carrying on with him. '

I shrugged. 'As you say, Tommy and I, we've always been able to talk. '

'Yeah, and he really respects you. I know because he's often talked about it. How you've got guts and how you always do what you say you're going to do. He told me once if he was in a corner, he'd rather have you backing him than any of the boys.' She did a quick laugh. 'Now you've got to admit, that's a real compliment. So you see, it's got to be you to our rescue. Tommy and I were made for each other and he'll listen to you. You'll do it for us, won't you, Kathy? '

I didn't say anything for a moment. Then I asked: 'Ruth, are you serious about Tommy? I mean, if I do persuade him, and you get back together, you won't hurt him again? '

Ruth gave an impatient sigh. 'Of course I'm serious. We're adults now. Soon we'll be leaving Hailsham. It's not a game any more. '

'Okay. I'll talk to him. Like you say, we'll be leaving here soon. We can't afford to waste time. '

After that, I remember us sitting on those beds, talking for some time. Ruth wanted to go over everything again and again: how stupid he was being, why they were really suited to each other, how differently they'd do things next time round, how they'd keep much more private, how they'd have sex in better places at better times. We talked about it all and she wanted my advice on everything. Then at one point, I was looking out of the window towards the hills in the distance, when I was startled to feel Ruth, suddenly beside me, squeeze my shoulders.

‘Kathy, I knew we could depend on you,’ she said. ‘Tommy’s right. You’re just the person to have when you’re in a corner.’

What with one thing and another, I didn’t get a chance to talk to Tommy for the next few days. Then one lunch-time I spotted him on the edge of the South Playing Field practising with his football. He’d been having a kickabout earlier with two other boys, but now he was alone, juggling the ball about in the air. I went over and sat down on the grass behind him, putting my back against a fence post. This couldn’t have been long after that time I’d shown him Patricia C.’s calendar and he’d marched off, because I remember we weren’t sure how we stood with each other. He went on with his ball-juggling, scowling with concentration – knee, foot, head, foot – while I sat there picking away at clovers and gazing at the woods in the distance that we’d once been so frightened of. In the end I decided to break the deadlock and said:

‘Tommy, let’s talk now. There’s something I want to talk to you about.’

As soon as I said this, he let the ball roll away and came to sit down beside me. It was typical of Tommy that once he knew I was willing to talk, there was suddenly no trace left of any sulkiness; just a kind of grateful eagerness that reminded me of the way we were back in the Juniors when a guardian who’d been telling us off went back to being normal. He was panting a bit, and though I knew this was from the football, it added to his overall impression of eagerness. In other words, before we’d said anything, he’d already got my back up. Then when I said to him: ‘Tommy, I can tell. You haven’t been too happy lately,’ he said: ‘What do you mean? I’m perfectly happy. I really am.’ And he did a big beam, followed by this hearty laugh. That was what did it. Years later, when I saw a shadow of it every now and then, I'd just smile. But back then, it really used to get to me. If Tommy happened to say to you: 'I'm really upset about it,' he'd have to put on a long, downcast face, then and there, to back up his words. I don't mean he did this ironically. He actually thought he'd be more convincing. So now, to prove he was happy, here he was, trying to sparkle with bonhomie. As I say, there would come a time when I'd think this was sweet; but that summer all I could see was that it advertised what a child he still was, and how easily you could take advantage of him. I didn't know much then about the world that awaited us beyond Hailsham, but I'd guessed we'd need all our wits about us, and when Tommy did anything like this, I felt something close to panic. Until that afternoon I'd always let it go - it always seemed too difficult to explain - but this time I burst out, saying:

'Tommy, you look so stupid, laughing like that! If you want to pretend you're happy, you don't do it that way! Just take it from me, you don't do it that way! You definitely don't! Look, you've got to grow up. And you've got to get yourself back on track. Everything's been falling apart for you just lately, and we both know why.'

Tommy was looking puzzled. When he was sure I'd finished, he said: 'You're right. Things have been falling apart for me. But I don't see what you mean, Kath. What do you mean, we both know? I don't see how you could know. I haven't told anyone.'

'Obviously I don't have all the details. But we all know about you splitting with Ruth.'

Tommy still looked puzzled. Finally he did another little laugh, but this time it was a real one. 'I see what you mean,' he mumbled, then paused a moment to think something over. 'To be honest, Kath,' he said eventually, 'that's not really what's bothering me. It's really something else altogether. I just keep thinking about it all the time. About Miss Lucy.'

And that was how I came to hear about it, about what had happened between Tommy and Miss Lucy at the start of that summer. Later, when I'd had time to think it over, I worked out it must have happened no more than a few days after the morning I'd seen Miss Lucy up in Room 22 scrawling over her paperwork. And like I said, I felt like kicking myself I hadn't found out from him earlier.

It had been in the afternoon near the 'dead hour' - when the lessons were finished but there was still some time to go until supper. Tommy had seen Miss Lucy coming out of the main house, her arms loaded with flipcharts and box files, and because it looked like she'd drop something any moment, he'd run over and offered to help.

'Well, she gave me a few things to carry and said we were headed back to her study with it all. Even between the two of us there was too much and I dropped a couple of things on the way. Then when we were coming up to the Orangery, she suddenly stopped, and I thought she'd dropped something else. But she was looking at me, like this, straight in the face, all serious. Then she says we've got to have a talk, a good talk. I say fine, and so we go into the Orangery, into her study, put all the stuff down. And she tells me to sit down, and I end up exactly where I was the last time, you know, that time years ago. And I can tell she's remembering that time as well, because she starts talking about it like it was only the day before. No explanations, nothing, she just starts off saying something like: "Tommy, I made a mistake, when I said what I did to you. And I should have put you right about it long before now." Then she's saying I should forget everything she told me before. That she'd done me a big disservice telling me not to worry about being creative. That the other guardians had been right all along, and there was no excuse for my art being so rubbish ...'

‘Hold on, Tommy. Did she actually say your art was “rubbish”?’

‘If it wasn’t “rubbish” it was something like it. Negligible. That might have been it. Or incompetent. She might as well have said rubbish. She said she was sorry she’d told me what she had the last time because if she hadn’t, I might have sorted it all by now.’

‘What were you saying through all this?’

‘I didn’t know what to say. In the end, she actually asked. She said: “Tommy, what are you thinking?” So I said I wasn’t sure but that she shouldn’t worry either way because I was all right now. And she said, no, I wasn’t all right. My art was rubbish, and that was partly her fault for telling me what she had. And I said to her, but what does it matter? I’m all right now, no one laughs at me about that any more. But she keeps shaking her head saying: “It does matter. I shouldn’t have said what I did.” So it occurs to me she’s talking about later, you know, about after we leave here. So I say: “But I’ll be all right, Miss. I’m really fit, I know how to look after myself. When it’s time for donations, I’ll be able to do it really well.” When I said this, she starts shaking her head, shaking it really hard so I’m worried she’ll get dizzy. Then she says: “Listen, Tommy, your art, it is important. And not just because it’s evidence. But for your own sake. You’ll get a lot from it, just for yourself.”’

‘Hold on. What did she mean, “evidence”?’

‘I don’t know. But she definitely said that. She said our art was important, and “not just because it’s evidence”. God knows what she meant. I did actually ask her, when she said that. I said I didn’t understand what she was telling me, and was it something to do with Madame and her gallery? And she did a big sigh and said: “Madame’s gallery, yes, that’s important. Much more important than I once thought. I see that now.” Then she said: “Look, there are all kinds of things you don't understand, Tommy, and I can't tell you about them. Things about Hailsham, about your place in the wider world, all kinds of things. But perhaps one day, you'll try and find out. They won't make it easy for you, but if you want to, really want to, you might find out." She started shaking her head again after that, though not as bad as before, and she says: "But why should you be any different? The students who leave here, they never find out much. Why should you be any different?" I didn't know what she was talking about, so I just said again: "I'll be all right, Miss." She was quiet for a time, then she suddenly stood up and kind of bent over me and hugged me. Not in a sexy way. More like they used to do when we were little. I just kept as still as possible. Then she stood back and said again she was sorry for what she'd told me before. And that it wasn't too late, I should start straight away, making up the lost time. I don't think I said anything, and she looked at me and I thought she'd hug me again. But instead she said: "Just do it for my sake, Tommy." I told her I'd do my best, because by then I just wanted out of there. I was probably bright scarlet, what with her hugging me and everything. I mean, it's not the same, is it, now we've got bigger.'

Until this point I'd been so engrossed in Tommy's story, I'd forgotten my reason for having this talk with him. But this reference to our getting 'bigger' reminded me of my original mission.

'Look, Tommy,' I said, 'we'll have to talk this over carefully soon. It's really interesting and I can see how it must have made you miserable. But either way, you're going to have to pull yourself together a bit more. We're going to be leaving here this summer. You've got to get yourself sorted again, and there's one thing you can straighten out right now. Ruth told me she's prepared to call it quits and have you get back with her again. I think that's a good chance for you. Don't mess it up.'

He was quiet for a few seconds, then said: 'I don't know, Kath. There are all these other things to think about.'

'Tommy, just listen. You're really lucky. Of all the people here, you've got Ruth fancying you. After we leave, if you're with her, you won't have to worry. She's the best, you'll be fine so long as you're with her. She's saying she wants a fresh start. So don't blow it.'

I waited but Tommy gave no response, and again I felt something like panic coming over me. I leaned forward and said: 'Look, you fool, you're not going to get many more chances. Don't you realise, we won't be here together like this much longer?'

To my surprise Tommy's response, when it came, was calm and considered - the side of Tommy that was to emerge more and more in the years ahead.

'I do realise that, Kath. That's exactly why I can't rush back into it with Ruth. We've got to think about the next move really carefully.' Then he sighed and looked right at me. 'Like you say, Kath. We're going to be leaving here soon. It's not like a game any more. We've got to think carefully.'

I was suddenly lost for what to say and just sat there tugging away at the clovers. I could feel his eyes on me, but I didn't look up. We might have gone on that way for a while longer, except we were interrupted. I think the boys he'd been playing football with earlier came back, or maybe it was some students strolling by who came and sat down with us. Anyway, our little heart-to-heart was at an end and I came away feeling I hadn't done what I'd set out to do - that I'd somehow let Ruth down.

I never got to assess what kind of impact my talk with Tommy had had, because it was the very next day the news broke. It was midway through the morning and we'd been in yet another Culture Briefing. These were classes where we had to role play various people we'd find out there - waiters in cafés, policemen and so on. The sessions always got us excited and worried all at the same time, so we were pretty keyed up anyway. Then at the end of the lesson, as we were filing out, Charlotte F. came rushing into the room and the news about Miss Lucy leaving Hailsham spread through us in an instant. Mr Chris, who'd been taking the class and who must have known all along, shuffled off guiltily before we could ask him anything. At first we weren't sure if Charlotte was just reporting a rumour, but the more she told us, the clearer it became this was for real. Earlier in the morning, one of the other Senior classes had gone into Room 12 expecting Music Appreciation with Miss Lucy. But Miss Emily had been there instead and she'd told them Miss Lucy couldn't come just at that moment, so she would take the class. For the next twenty minutes or so everything had gone quite normally. Then suddenly - right in mid-sentence, apparently - Miss Emily had broken off from talking about Beethoven and announced that Miss Lucy had left Hailsham and wouldn't be returning. That class had finished several minutes early - Miss Emily had rushed off with a preoccupied frown - and the word had started to go round as soon as the students had come out.

I immediately set off to look for Tommy, because I desperately wanted him to hear it first from me. But when I stepped into the courtyard, I saw I was too late. There was Tommy, over on the far side, on the edge of a circle of boys, nodding to what was being said. The other boys were animated, maybe excited even, but Tommy's eyes looked empty. That very evening, Tommy and Ruth got back together again, and I remember Ruth finding me a few days later to thank me for 'sorting it all out so well'. I told her I probably hadn't helped much, but she was having none of that. I was most definitely in her good books. And that was more or less the way things stayed throughout our last days at Hailsham.

PART TWO

CHAPTER TEN

Sometimes I'll be driving on a long weaving road across marshland, or maybe past rows of furrowed fields, the sky big and grey and never changing mile after mile, and I find I'm thinking about my essay, the one I was supposed to be writing back then, when we were at the Cottages. The guardians had talked to us about our essays on and off throughout that last summer, trying to help each of us choose a topic that would absorb us properly for anything up to two years. But somehow – maybe we could see something in the guardians' manner – no one really believed the essays were that important, and among ourselves we hardly discussed the matter. I remember when I went in to tell Miss Emily my chosen topic was Victorian novels, I hadn't really thought about it much and I could see she knew it. But she just gave me one of her searching stares and said nothing more.

Once we got to the Cottages, though, the essays took on a new importance. In our first days there, and for some of us a lot longer, it was like we were each clinging to our essay, this last task from Hailsham, like it was a farewell gift from the guardians. Over time, they would fade from our minds, but for a while those essays helped keep us afloat in our new surroundings.

When I think about my essay today, what I do is go over it in some detail: I may think of a completely new approach I could have taken, or about different writers and books I could have focused on. I might be having coffee in a service station, staring at the motorway through the big windows, and my essay will pop into my head for no reason. Then I quite enjoy sitting there, going through it all again. Just lately, I've even toyed with the idea of going back and working on it, once I'm not a carer any more and I've got the time. But in the end, I suppose I'm not really serious about it. It's just a bit of nostalgia to pass the time. I think about the essay the same way I might a rounders match at Hailsham I did particularly well in, or else an argument from long ago where I can now think of all the clever things I should have said. It's at that sort of level - daydream stuff. But as I say, that's not how it was when we first got to the Cottages.

Eight of us who left Hailsham that summer ended up at the Cottages. Others went to the White Mansion in the Welsh hills, or to Poplar Farm in Dorset. We didn't know then that all these places had only the most tenuous links with Hailsham. We arrived at the Cottages expecting a version of Hailsham for older students, and I suppose that was the way we continued to see them for some time. We certainly didn't think much about our lives beyond the Cottages, or about who ran them, or how they fitted into the larger world. None of us thought like that in those days.

The Cottages were the remains of a farm that had gone out of business years before. There was an old farmhouse, and around it, barns, outhouses, stables all converted for us to live in. There were other buildings, usually the outlying ones, that were virtually falling down, which we couldn't use for much, but for which we felt in some vague way responsible - mainly on account of Keffer. He was this grumpy old guy who turned up two or three times a week in his muddy van to look the place over. He didn't like to talk to us much, and the way he went round sighing and shaking his head disgustingly implied we weren't doing nearly enough to keep the place up. But it was never clear what more he wanted us to do. He'd shown us a list of chores when we'd first arrived, and the students who were already there - 'the veterans', as Hannah called them - had long since worked out a rota which we kept to conscientiously. There really wasn't much else we could do other than report leaking gutters and mop up after floods.

The old farmhouse - the heart of the Cottages - had a number of fireplaces where we could burn the split logs stacked in the outer barns. Otherwise we had to make do with big boxy heaters. The problem with these was they worked on gas canisters, and unless it was really cold, Keffers wouldn't bring many in. We kept asking him to leave a big supply with us, but he'd shake his head gloomily, like we were bound to use them up frivolously or else cause an explosion. So I remember a lot of the time, outside the summer months, being chilly. You went around with two, even three jumpers on, and your jeans felt cold and stiff. We sometimes kept our Wellingtons on the whole day, leaving trails of mud and damp through the rooms. Keffers, observing this, would again shake his head, but when we asked him what else we were supposed to do, the floors being in the state they were, he'd make no reply.

I'm making it sound pretty bad, but none of us minded the discomforts one bit - it was all part of the excitement of being at the Cottages. If we were honest, though, particularly near the beginning, most of us would have admitted missing the guardians. A few of us, for a time, even tried to think of Keffers as a sort of guardian, but he was having none of it. You went up to greet him when he arrived in his van and he'd stare at you like you were mad. But this was one thing we'd been told over and over: that after Hailsham there'd be no more guardians, so we'd have to look after each other. And by and large, I'd say Hailsham prepared us well on that score.

Most of the students I was close to at Hailsham ended up at the Cottages that summer. Cynthia E. - the girl who'd said about me being Ruth's 'natural successor' that time in the Art Room - I wouldn't have minded her, but she went to Dorset with the rest of her crowd. And Harry, the boy I'd nearly had sex with, I heard he went to Wales. But all our gang had stayed together. And if we ever missed the others, we could tell ourselves there was nothing stopping us going to visit them. For all our map lessons with Miss Emily, we had no real idea at that point about distances and how easy or hard it was to visit a particular place. We'd talk about getting lifts from the veterans when they were going on their trips, or else how in time we'd learn to drive ourselves and then we'd be able to see them whenever we pleased.

Of course, in practice, especially during the first months, we rarely stepped beyond the confines of the Cottages. We didn't even walk about the surrounding countryside or wander into the nearby village. I don't think we were afraid exactly. We all knew no one would stop us if we wandered off, provided we were back by the day and the time we entered into Keffers's ledgerbook. That summer we arrived, we were constantly seeing veterans packing their bags and rucksacks and going off for two or three days at a time with what seemed to us scary nonchalance. We'd watched them with astonishment, wondering if by the following summer we'd be doing the same. Of course, we were, but in those early days, it didn't seem possible. You have to remember that until that point we'd never been beyond the grounds of Hailsham, and we were just bewildered. If you'd told me then that within a year, I'd not only develop a habit of taking long solitary walks, but that I'd start learning to drive a car, I'd have thought you were mad.

Even Ruth looked daunted that sunny day the minibus dropped us in front of the farmhouse, circled round the little pond and disappeared up the slope. We could see hills in the distance that reminded us of the ones in the distance at Hailsham, but they seemed to us oddly crooked, like when you draw a picture of a friend and it's almost right but not quite, and the face on the sheet gives you the creeps. But at least it was the summer, not the way the Cottages would get a few months on, with all the puddles frozen over and the rough ground frosted bone hard. The place looked beautiful and cosy, with overgrown grass everywhere - a novelty to us. We stood together in a huddle, the eight of us, and watched Keffers go in and out of the farmhouse, expecting him to address us at any moment. But he didn't, and all we could catch was the odd irritated mutter about the students who already lived there. Once, as he went to get something from his van, he gave us a moody glance, then returned to the farmhouse and closed the door behind him.

Before too long, though, the veterans, who'd been having a bit of fun watching us being pathetic - we were to do much the same the following summer - came out and took us in hand. In fact, looking back, I see they really went out of their way helping us settle in. Even so, those first weeks were strange and we were glad we had each other. We'd always move about together and seemed to spend large parts of the day awkwardly standing outside the farmhouse, not knowing what else to do.

It's funny now recalling the way it was at the beginning, because when I think of those two years at the Cottages, that scared, bewildered start doesn't seem to go with any of the rest of it. If someone mentions the Cottages today, I think of easy-going days drifting in and out of each other's rooms, the languid way the afternoon would fold into evening then into night. I think of my pile of old paperbacks, their pages gone wobbly, like they'd once belonged to the sea. I think about how I read them, lying on my front in the grass on warm afternoons, my hair - which I was growing long then - always falling across my vision. I think about the mornings waking up in my room at the top of the Black Barn to the voices of students outside in the field, arguing about poetry or philosophy; or the long winters, the breakfasts in steamed-up kitchens, meandering discussions around the table about Kafka or Picasso. It was always stuff like that at breakfast; never who you'd had sex with the night before, or why Larry and Helen weren't talking to each other any more.

But then again, when I think about it, there's a sense in which that picture of us on that first day, huddled together in front of the farmhouse, isn't so incongruous after all. Because maybe, in a way, we didn't leave it behind nearly as much as we might once have thought. Because somewhere underneath, a part of us stayed like that: fearful of the world around us, and - no matter how much we despised ourselves for it - unable quite to let each other go.

The veterans, who of course knew nothing about the history of Tommy and Ruth's relationship, treated them as a long-established couple, and this seemed to please Ruth no end. For the first weeks after we arrived, she made a big deal of it, always putting her arm around Tommy, sometimes snogging him in the corner of a room while other people were still about. Well, this kind of thing might have been fine at Hailsham, but looked immature at the Cottages. The veteran couples never did anything showy in public, going about in a sensible sort of way, like a mother and father might do in a normal family.

There was, incidentally, something I noticed about these veteran couples at the Cottages - something Ruth, for all her close study of them, failed to spot - and this was how so many of their mannerisms were copied from the television. It first came to me watching this couple, Susie and Greg - probably the oldest students at the Cottages and generally thought to be 'in charge' of the place. There was this particular thing Susie did whenever Greg set off on one of his speeches about Proust or whoever: she'd smile at the rest of us, roll her eyes, and mouth very emphatically, but only just audibly: 'Gawd help us.' Television at Hailsham had been pretty restricted, and at the Cottages too - though there was nothing to stop us watching all day - no one was very keen on it. But there was an old set in the farmhouse and another in the Black Barn, and I'd watch every now and then. That's how I realised that this 'Gawd help us' stuff came from an American series, one of those with an audience laughing along at everything anyone said or did. There was a character - a large woman who lived next door to the main characters - who did exactly what Susie did, so when her husband went off on a big spiel, the audience would be waiting for her to roll her eyes and say 'Gawd help us' so they could burst out with this huge laugh. Once I'd spotted this, I began to notice all kinds of other things the veteran couples had taken from TV programmes: the way they gestured to each other, sat together on sofas, even the way they argued and stormed out of rooms.

Anyway, my point is, it wasn't long before Ruth realised the way she'd been carrying on with Tommy was all wrong for the Cottages, and she set about changing how they did things in front of people. And there was in particular this one gesture Ruth picked up from the veterans. Back at Hailsham, if a couple were parting, even for a few minutes, it had been an excuse for big embraces and snogging. At the Cottages, though, when a couple were saying goodbye to each other, there'd be hardly any words, never mind embraces or kisses. Instead, you slapped your partner's arm near the elbow, lightly with the back of your knuckles, the way you might do to attract someone's attention. Usually the girl did it to the boy, just as they were moving apart. This custom had faded out by the winter, but when we arrived, it was what was going on and Ruth was soon doing it to Tommy. Mind you, at first, Tommy didn't have a clue what was going on, and would turn abruptly to Ruth and go: 'What?', so that she'd have to glare furiously at him, like they were in a play and he'd forgotten his lines. I suppose she eventually had a word with him, because after a week or so they were managing to do it right, more or less exactly like the veteran couples.

I'd not actually seen the slap on the elbow on the television, but I was pretty sure that's where the idea had come from, and just as sure Ruth hadn't realised it. That was why, that afternoon I was reading Daniel Deronda on the grass and Ruth was being irritating, I decided it was time someone pointed it out to her.

It was nearly autumn and starting to get chilly. The veterans were spending more time indoors and generally going back to whatever routines they'd had before the summer. But those of us who'd arrived from Hailsham kept sitting outside on the uncut grass - wanting to keep going for as long as possible the only routine we'd got used to. Even so, by that particular afternoon, there were maybe only three or four apart from me reading in the field, and since I'd gone out of my way to find a quiet corner to myself, I'm pretty sure what happened between me and Ruth wasn't overheard.

I was lying on a piece of old tarpaulin reading, as I say, Daniel Deronda, when Ruth came wandering over and sat down beside me. She studied the cover of my book and nodded to herself. Then after about a minute, just as I knew she would, she began to outline to me the plot of Daniel Deronda. Until that point, I'd been in a perfectly okay mood, and had been pleased to see Ruth, but now I was irritated. She'd done this to me a couple of times before, and I'd seen her doing it to others. For one thing, there was the manner she put on: a kind of nonchalant but sincere one as though she expected people to be really grateful for her assistance. Okay, even at the time, I was vaguely aware what was behind it. In those early months, we'd somehow developed this idea that how well you were settling in at the Cottages - how well you were coping - was somehow reflected by how many books you'd read. It sounds odd, but there you are, it was just something that developed between us, the ones who'd arrived from Hailsham. The whole notion was kept deliberately hazy - in fact, it was pretty reminiscent of the way we'd dealt with sex at Hailsham. You could go around implying you'd read all kinds of things, nodding knowingly when someone mentioned, say, War and Peace, and the understanding was that no one would scrutinise your claim too rationally. You have to remember, since we'd been in each other's company constantly since arriving at the Cottages, it wasn't possible for any of us to have read War and Peace without the rest noticing. But just like with the sex at Hailsham, there was an unspoken agreement to allow for a mysterious dimension where we went off and did all this reading.

It was, as I say, a little game we all indulged in to some extent. Even so, it was Ruth who took it further than anyone else. She was the one always pretending to have finished anything anyone happened to be reading; and she was the only one with this notion that the way to demonstrate your superior reading was to go around telling people the plots of novels they were in the middle of. That's why, when she started on Daniel Deronda, even though I'd not been enjoying it much, I closed the book, sat up and said to her, completely out of the blue:

'Ruth, I've been meaning to ask you. Why do you always hit Tommy on the arm like that when you're saying goodbye? You know what I mean.'

Of course she claimed not to, so I patiently explained what I was talking about. Ruth heard me out then shrugged.

'I didn't realise I was doing it. I must have just picked it up.'

A few months before I might have let it go at that - or probably wouldn't have brought it up in the first place. But that afternoon I just pressed on, explaining to her how it was something from a television series. 'It's not something worth copying,' I told her. 'It's not what people really do out there, in normal life, if that's what you were thinking.'

Ruth, I could see, was now angry but unsure how to fight back. She looked away and did another shrug. 'So what?' she said. 'It's no big deal. A lot of us do it.'

'What you mean is Chrissie and Rodney do it.'

As soon as I said this I realised I'd made a mistake; that until I'd mentioned these two, I'd had Ruth in a corner, but now she was out. It was like when you make a move in chess and just as you take your finger off the piece, you see the mistake you've made, and there's this panic because you don't know yet the scale of disaster you've left yourself open to. Sure enough, I saw a gleam come into Ruth's eyes and when she spoke again it was in an entirely new voice.

'So that's it, that's what's upsetting poor little Kathy. Ruth isn't paying enough attention to her. Ruth's got big new friends and baby sister isn't getting played with so often ...'

'Stop all that. Anyway that's not how it works in real families. You don't know anything about it.'

'Oh Kathy, the great expert on real families. So sorry. But that's what this is, isn't it? You've still got this idea. Us Hailsham lot, we have to stay together, a tight little bunch, must never make any new friends.'

'I've never said that. I'm just talking about Chrissie and Rodney. It looks daft, the way you copy everything they do.'

'But I'm right, aren't I?' Ruth went on. 'You're upset because I've managed to move on, make new friends. Some of the veterans hardly remember your name, and who can blame them? You never talk to anyone unless they're Hailsham. But you can't expect me to hold your hand the whole time. We've been here nearly two months now.'

I didn't take the bait, but said instead: 'Never mind me, never mind Hailsham. But you keep leaving Tommy in the lurch. I've watched you, you've done it a few times just this week. You leave him stranded, looking like a spare part. That's not fair. You and Tommy are supposed to be a couple. That means you look out for him.'

'Quite right, Kathy, we're a couple, like you say. And if you must intrude, I'll tell you. We've talked about this, and we've agreed. If he sometimes doesn't feel like doing things with Chrissie and Rodney, that's his choice. I'm not going to make him do anything he's not yet ready for. But we've agreed, he shouldn't hold me back. Nice of you to be concerned though.' Then she added, in a quite different voice: 'Come to think of it, I suppose you haven't been that slow making friends with at least some of the veterans.'

She watched me carefully, then did a laugh, as though to say: 'We're still friends, aren't we?' But I didn't find anything to laugh about in this last remark of hers. I just picked up my book and walked off without another word.

CHAPTER ELEVEN

I should explain why I got so bothered by Ruth saying what she did. Those early months at the Cottages had been a strange time in our friendship. We were quarrelling over all kinds of little things, but at the same time we were confiding in each other more than ever. In particular, we used to have these talks, the two of us, usually up in my room at the top of the Black Barn just before going to bed. You could say they were a sort of hangover from those talks in our dorm after lights out. Anyway, the thing was, however much we might have fallen out during the day, come bed-time, Ruth and I would still find ourselves sitting side by side on my mattress, sipping our hot drinks, exchanging our deepest feelings about our new life like nothing had ever come between us. And what made these heart-to-hearts possible – you might even say what made the whole friendship possible during that time – was this understanding we had that anything we told each other during these moments would be treated with careful respect: that we'd honour confidences, and that no matter how much we rowed, we wouldn't use against each other anything we'd talked about during those sessions. Okay, this had never been spelt out exactly, but it was definitely, as I say, an understanding, and until the afternoon of the Daniel Deronda business, neither of us had come anywhere near breaching it. That was why, when Ruth said what she did about my not being slow making friends with certain veterans, I wasn't just cross. To me, it was a betrayal. Because there wasn't any doubt what she'd meant by it; she was referring to something I'd confided in her one night about me and sex.

As you'd expect, sex was different at the Cottages from how it had been at Hailsham. It was a lot more straightforward – more 'grown up'. You didn't go around gossiping and giggling about who'd been doing it with whom. If you knew two students had had sex, you didn't immediately start speculating about whether they'd become a proper couple. And if a new couple did emerge one day, you didn't go around talking about it like it was a big event. You just accepted it quietly, and from then on, when you referred to one, you also referred to the other, as in 'Chrissie and Rodney' or 'Ruth and Tommy'. When someone wanted sex with you, that too was much more straightforward. A boy would come up and ask if you wanted to spend the night in his room 'for a change', something like that, it was no big deal. Sometimes it was because he was interested in becoming a couple with you; other times it was just for a one-nighter.

The atmosphere, like I say, was much more grown up. But when I look back, the sex at the Cottages seems a bit functional. Maybe it was precisely because all the gossip and secrecy had gone. Or maybe it was because of the cold.

When I remember sex at the Cottages, I think about doing it in freezing rooms in the pitch dark, usually under a ton of blankets. And the blankets often weren't even blankets, but a really odd assortment - old curtains, even bits of carpet. Sometimes it got so cold you just had to pile anything you could over you, and if you were having sex at the bottom of it, it felt like a mountain of bedding was pounding at you, so that half the time you weren't sure if you were doing it with the boy or all that stuff.

Anyway, the point is, I'd had a few one-nighters shortly after getting to the Cottages. I hadn't planned it that way. My plan had been to take my time, maybe become part of a couple with someone I chose carefully. I'd never been in a couple before, and especially after watching Ruth and Tommy for a while, I was quite curious to give it a try for myself. As I say, that had been my plan, and when the one-nighters kept happening, it unsettled me a bit. That was why I'd decided to confide in Ruth that night.

It was in many ways a typical evening session for us. We'd brought up our mugs of tea, and we were sitting in my room, side by side on the mattress, our heads slightly stooped because of the rafters. We talked about the different boys at the Cottages, and whether any of them might be right for me. And Ruth had been at her best: encouraging, funny, tactful, wise. That's why I decided to tell her about the one-nighters. I told her how they'd happened without my really wanting them to; and how, even though we couldn't have babies from doing it, the sex had done funny things to my feelings, just as Miss Emily had warned. Then I said to her:

'Ruth, I wanted to ask you. Do you ever get so you just really have to do it? With anybody almost?'

Ruth shrugged, then said: 'I'm in a couple. So if I want to do it, I just do it with Tommy.'

'I suppose so. Maybe it's just me anyway. There might be something not quite right with me, down there. Because sometimes I just really, really need to do it.'

'That's strange, Kathy.' She fixed me with a concerned look, which made me feel all the more worried.

'So you don't ever get like that.'

She shrugged again. 'Not so as I'd do it with just anybody. What you're saying does sound a bit weird, Kathy. But maybe it'll calm down after a while.'

'Sometimes it won't be there for ages. Then it suddenly comes on. It was like that, the first time it happened. He started snogging me and I just wanted him to get off. Then suddenly it just came on, out of nowhere. I just really had to do it.'

Ruth shook her head. 'It does sound a bit weird. But it'll probably go away. It's probably just to do with the different food we're eating here.'

She hadn't been a huge help, but she'd been sympathetic and I'd felt a little better about it all afterwards. That's why it was such a jolt to have Ruth suddenly bring it up the way she did in the middle of the argument we were having that afternoon in the field. Okay, there was probably no one to overhear us, but even so, there was something not at all right about what she'd done. In those first months at the Cottages, our friendship had stayed intact because, on my side at least, I'd had this notion there were two quite separate Ruths. There was one Ruth who was always trying to impress the veterans, who wouldn't hesitate to ignore me, Tommy, any of the others, if she thought we'd cramp her style. This was the Ruth I wasn't pleased with, the one I could see every day putting on airs and pretending – the Ruth who did the slap-on-the-elbow gesture. But the Ruth who sat beside me in my little attic room at the day's close, legs outstretched over the edge of my mattress, her steaming mug held in both her hands, that was the Ruth from Hailsham, and whatever had been happening during the day, I could just pick up with her where we'd left off the last time we'd sat together like that. And until that afternoon in the field, there'd been a definite understanding these two Ruths wouldn't merge; that the one I confided in before bed was one I could absolutely trust. That's why when she said that, about my 'not being slow making friends with at least some of the veterans', I got so upset. That's why I just picked up my book and walked off.

But when I think about it now, I can see things more from Ruth's viewpoint. I can see, for instance, how she might have felt I had been the one to first violate an understanding, and that her little dig had just been a retaliation. This never occurred to me at the time, but I see now it's a possibility, and an explanation for what happened. After all, immediately before she made that remark, I'd been talking about the arm-slapping business. Now it's a bit hard to explain this, but some sort of understanding had definitely developed between the two of us about the way Ruth behaved in front of the veterans. Okay, she often bluffed and implied all sorts of things I knew weren't true. Sometimes, as I said, she did things to impress the veterans at our expense. But it seems to me Ruth believed, at some level, she was doing all this on behalf of us all. And my role, as her closest friend, was to give her silent support, as if I was in the front row of the audience when she was performing on stage. She was struggling to become someone else, and maybe felt the pressure more than the rest of us because, as I say, she'd somehow taken on the responsibility for all of us. In that case, then, the way I'd talked about her slap on the elbow thing could be seen as a betrayal, and she might well then have felt justified retaliating as she had. As I say, this explanation only occurred to me recently. At the time I didn't look at the larger picture or at my own part in it. I suppose, in general, I never appreciated in those days the sheer effort Ruth was making to move on, to grow up and leave Hailsham behind. Thinking about this now, I'm reminded of something she told me once, when I was caring for her in the recovery centre at Dover. We'd been sitting in her room, watching the sunset, as we so often did, enjoying the mineral water and biscuits I'd brought, and I'd been telling her how I still had most of my old Hailsham collection box safely stowed inside my pine chest in my bedsit. Then - I wasn't trying to lead onto anything, or make any kind of point - I just happened to say to her:

'You never had a collection after Hailsham, did you?'

Ruth, who was sitting up in bed, was quiet for a long time, the sunset falling over the tiled wall behind her. Then she said:

'Remember the guardians, before we left, how they kept reminding us we could take our collections with us. So I'd taken everything out of my box and put it into this holdall bag. My plan was I'd find a really good wooden box for it all once I got to the Cottages. But when we got there, I could see none of the veterans had collections. It was only us, it wasn't normal. We must all have realised it, I wasn't the only one, but we didn't really talk about it, did we? So I didn't go looking for a new box. My things all stayed in the holdall bag for months, then in the end I threw them away.'

I stared at her. 'You put your collection out with the rubbish?'

Ruth shook her head, and for the next few moments seemed to be going through in her mind all the different items in her collection. Finally she said:

'I put them all in a bin bag, but I couldn't stand the idea of putting them out with the rubbish. So I asked old Keffers, once when he was about to drive off, if he'd take the bin bag to a shop. I knew about charity shops, I'd found it all out. Keffers rummaged in the bag a bit, he didn't know what any of it was - why should he? - and he did this laugh and said no shop he knew would want stuff like that. And I said, but it's good stuff, really good stuff. And he could see I was getting a bit emotional, and he changed his tune then. He said something like: "All right, missy, I'll take it along to the Oxfam people." Then he made a real effort and said: "Now I've had a closer look, you're right, it is pretty good stuff!" He wasn't very convincing though. I suppose he just took it away and put it in some bin somewhere. But at least I didn't have to know that.' Then she smiled and said: 'You were different. I remember. You were never embarrassed about your collection and you kept it. I wish now I'd done that too.'

What I'm saying is that we were all of us struggling to adjust to our new life, and I suppose we all did things back then we later regretted. I was really upset by Ruth's remark at the time, but it's pointless now trying to judge her or anyone else for the way they behaved during those early days at the Cottages.

As the autumn came on, and I got more familiar with our surroundings, I began noticing things I'd missed earlier. There was, for instance, the odd attitude to students who'd recently left. The veterans were never slow coming out with funny anecdotes about characters they'd met on trips to the White Mansion or to Poplar Farm; but they hardly ever mentioned students who, right up until just before we'd arrived, must have been their intimate friends.

Another thing I noticed - and I could see it tied in - was the big hush that would descend around certain veterans when they went off on 'courses' - which even we knew had to do with becoming carers. They could be gone for four or five days, but were hardly mentioned in that time; and when they came back, no one really asked them anything. I suppose they might have talked to their closest friends in private. But there was definitely an understanding that you didn't mention these trips out in the open. I can remember one morning watching, through the misted-up windows of our kitchen, two veterans leaving for a course, and wondering if by the next spring or summer, they'd have gone altogether, and we'd be taking care not to mention them.

But it's perhaps stretching it to claim students who'd left were an actual taboo. If they had to be mentioned, they got mentioned. Most commonly, you'd hear them referred to indirectly, in connection with an object or a chore. For example, if repairs were needed to a downpipe, there'd be a lot of discussion about 'the way Mike used to do it'. And there was a tree stump outside the Black Barn everyone called 'Dave's stump' because for over three years, until a few weeks before our arrival, he'd sat on it to read and write, sometimes even when it was raining or cold. Then, maybe most memorably, there was Steve. None of us ever discovered anything much about the sort of person Steve had been - except that he'd liked porn magazines.

Every now and again, you'd come across a porn mag at the Cottages, thrown behind a sofa or amidst a pile of old newspapers. They were what you'd call 'soft' porn, though we didn't know about such distinctions then. We'd never come across anything like that before and didn't know what to think. The veterans usually laughed when one showed up and flicked through it quickly in a blasé way before throwing it aside, so we did the same. When Ruth and I were remembering all this a few years ago, she claimed there were dozens of these magazines circulating around the Cottages. 'No one admitted to liking them,' she said. 'But you remember how it was. If one turned up in a room, everyone pretended to find it dead boring. Then you came back half an hour later and it would always be gone.'

Anyway, my point is that whenever one of these magazines turned up, people would claim it was a left-over from 'Steve's collection'. Steve, in other words, was responsible for every porn mag that ever showed up. As I say, we never found out much else about Steve. We did, though, see the funny side of it even then, so that when someone pointed and said: 'Oh look, one of Steve's magazines,' they did it with a bit of irony.

These magazines, incidentally, used to drive old Keffer mad. There was a rumour that he was religious and dead against not just porn, but sex in general. Sometimes he'd work himself into a complete state - you could see his face under his grey whiskers blotchy with fury - and he'd go thudding around the place, barging into people's rooms without knocking, determined to round up every one of 'Steve's magazines'. We did our best to find him amusing on these occasions, but there was something truly scary about him in these moods. For one thing, the grumbling he usually kept up suddenly stopped and this silence alone gave him an alarming aura.

I remember one particular time when Keffer had collected up six or seven of 'Steve's mags' and stormed out with them to his van. Laura and I were watching him from up in my room, and I'd been laughing at something Laura had just said. Then

I saw Keffers opening his van door, and maybe because he needed both hands to move some stuff about, he put the mags down on top of some bricks stacked outside the boiler hut - some veterans had tried to build a barbecue there a few months earlier. Keffers's figure, bent forwards, his head and shoulders hidden in the van, went on rummaging about for ages, and something told me that, for all his fury of a moment ago, he'd now forgotten about the magazines. Sure enough, a few minutes later, I saw him straighten, climb in behind the wheel, slam the door and drive off.

When I pointed out to Laura that Keffers had left the magazines behind, she said: 'Well, they won't stay put for long. He'll just have to collect them all up again, next time he decides on a purge.'

But when I found myself strolling past the boiler hut about half an hour later, I saw the magazines hadn't been touched. I thought for a moment about taking them up to my room, but then I could see if they were ever found there, I'd get no end of teasing; and how there was no way people would understand my reasons for doing such a thing. That was why I picked up the magazines and went inside the boiler hut with them.

The boiler hut was really just another barn, built onto the end of the farmhouse, filled with old mowers and pitchforks - stuff Keffers reckoned wouldn't catch alight too easily if one day the boiler decided to blow up. Keffers also kept a workbench in there, and so I put the magazines down on it, pushed aside some old rags and heaved myself up to sit on the tabletop. The light wasn't too good, but there was a grimy window somewhere behind me, and when I opened the first magazine I found I could see well enough.

There were lots of pictures of girls holding their legs open or sticking their bottoms out. I'll admit, there have been times when I've looked at pictures like that and felt excited, though I've never fancied doing it with a girl. But that's not what I was after that afternoon. I moved through the pages quickly, not wanting to be distracted by any buzz of sex coming off those pages. In fact, I hardly saw the contorted bodies, because I was focusing on the faces. Even in the little adverts for videos or whatever tucked away to the side, I checked each model's face before moving on.

It wasn't until I was nearing the end of the pile that I became certain there was somebody standing outside the barn, just beside the doorway. I'd left the door open because that's how it was normally, and because I wanted the light; and twice already I'd found myself glancing up, thinking I'd heard some small noise. But there'd been no one there, and I'd just gone on with what I was doing. Now I was certain, though, and lowering my magazine I made a heavy sighing sound that would be clearly audible.

I waited for giggling, or maybe for two or three students to come bursting into the barn, eager to make the best of having caught me with a pile of porn mags. But nothing happened. So I called out, in what I tried to make a weary tone:

'Delighted you could join me. Why be so shy?'

There was a little chuckle, then Tommy appeared at the threshold. 'Hi, Kath,' he said sheepishly.

'Come on in, Tommy. Join in the fun.'

He came towards me cautiously, then stopped a few steps away. Then he looked over to the boiler, and said: 'I didn't know you liked that sort of stuff.'

'Girls are allowed too, aren't we?'

I kept going through the pages, and for the next few seconds he stayed silent. Then I heard him say:

'I wasn't trying to spy on you. But I saw you from my room. I saw you come out here and pick up that pile Keffer's left.'

‘You’re very welcome to them when I’ve finished.’

He laughed awkwardly. ‘It’s just sex stuff. I expect I’ve seen them all already.’ He did another laugh, but then when I glanced up, I saw he was watching me with a serious expression. Then he asked:

‘Are you looking for something, Kath?’

‘What do you mean? I’m just looking at dirty pictures.’

‘Just for kicks?’

‘I suppose you could say that.’ I put down one mag and started on the next one.

Then I heard Tommy’s steps coming nearer until he was right up to me. When I looked up again, his hands were hovering fretfully in the air, like I was doing a complicated manual task and he was itching to help.

‘Kath, you don’t ... Well, if it’s for kicks, you don’t do it like that. You’ve got to look at the pictures much more carefully. It doesn’t really work if you go that fast.’

‘How do you know what works for girls? Or maybe you’ve looked these over with Ruth. Sorry, not thinking.’

‘Kath, what are you looking for?’

I ignored him. I was nearly at the end of the pile and I was now keen to finish. Then he said:

‘I saw you doing this once before.’

This time I did stop and look at him. ‘What’s going on here, Tommy? Has Keffers recruited you for his porn patrol?’

‘I wasn’t trying to spy on you. But I did see you, that time last week, after we’d all been up in Charley’s room. There was one of these mags there, and you thought we’d all left and gone. But I came back to get my jumper, and Claire’s doors were open so I could see straight through to Charley’s room. That's how I saw you in there, going through the magazine. '

'Well, so what? We all have to get our kicks some way. '

'You weren't doing it for kicks. I could tell, just like I can now. It's your face, Kath. That time in Charley's room, you had a strange face. Like you were sad, maybe. And a bit scared. '

I jumped off the workbench, gathered up the mags and dumped them in his arms. 'Here. Give these to Ruth. See if they do anything for her. '

I walked past him and out of the barn. I knew he'd be disappointed I hadn't told him anything, but at that point I hadn't thought things through properly myself and wasn't ready to tell anyone. But I hadn't minded him coming into the boiler hut after me. I hadn't minded at all. I'd felt comforted, protected almost. I did tell him eventually, but that wasn't until a few months later, when we went on our Norfolk trip.

CHAPTER TWELVE

I want to talk about the Norfolk trip, and all the things that happened that day, but I'll first have to go back a bit, to give you the background and explain why it was we went.

Our first winter was just about over by then and we were all feeling much more settled. For all our little hiccups, Ruth and I had kept up our habit of rounding off the day in my room, talking over our hot drinks, and it was during one of those sessions, when we were larking around about something, that she suddenly said:

'I suppose you've heard what Chrissie and Rodney have been saying.'

When I said I hadn't, she did a laugh and continued: 'They're probably just having me on. Their idea of a joke. Forget I mentioned it.'

But I could see she wanted me to drag it out of her, so I kept pressing until in the end she said in a lowered voice:

'You remember last week, when Chrissie and Rodney were away? They'd been up to this town called Cromer, up on the north Norfolk coast.'

'What were they doing there?'

'Oh, I think they've got a friend there, someone who used to live here. That's not the point. The point is, they claim they saw this ... person. Working there in this open-plan office. And, well, you know. They reckon this person's a possible. For me.'

Though most of us had first come across the idea of 'possibles' back at Hailsham, we'd sensed we weren't supposed to discuss it, and so we hadn't - though for sure, it had both intrigued and disturbed us. And even at the Cottages, it wasn't a topic you could bring up casually. There was definitely more awkwardness around any talk of possibles than there was around, say, sex. At the same time, you could tell people were fascinated - obsessed, in some cases - and so it kept coming up, usually in solemn arguments, a world away from our ones about, say, James Joyce.

The basic idea behind the possibles theory was simple, and didn't provoke much dispute. It went something like this. Since each of us was copied at some point from a normal person, there must be, for each of us, somewhere out there, a model getting on with his or her life. This meant, at least in theory, you'd be able to find the person you were modelled from. That's why, when you were out there yourself - in the towns, shopping centres, transport cafés - you kept an eye out for 'possibles' - the people who might have been the models for you and your friends.

Beyond these basics, though, there wasn't much consensus. For a start, no one could agree what we were looking for when we looked for possibles. Some students thought you should be looking for a person twenty to thirty years older than yourself - the sort of age a normal parent would be. But others claimed this was sentimental. Why would there be a 'natural' generation between us and our models? They could have used babies, old people, what difference would it have made? Others argued back that they'd use for models people at the peak of their health, and that's why they were likely to be 'normal parent' age. But around here, we'd all sense we were near territory we didn't want to enter, and the arguments would fizzle out.

Then there were those questions about why we wanted to track down our models at all. One big idea behind finding your model was that when you did, you'd glimpse your future. Now I don't mean anyone really thought that if your model turned out to be, say, a guy working at a railway station, that's what you'd end up doing too. We all realised it wasn't that simple. Nevertheless, we all of us, to varying degrees, believed that when you saw the person you were copied from, you'd get some insight into who you were deep down, and maybe too, you'd see something of what your life held in store.

There were some who thought it stupid to be concerned about possibles at all. Our models were an irrelevance, a technical necessity for bringing us into the world, nothing more than that. It was up to each of us to make of our lives what we could. This was the camp Ruth always claimed to side with, and I probably did too. All the same, whenever we heard reports of a possible – whoever it was for – we couldn't help getting curious.

The way I remember it, sightings of possibles tended to come in batches. Weeks could go by with no one mentioning the subject, then one reported sighting would trigger off a whole spate of others. Most of them were obviously not worth pursuing: someone seen in a car going by, stuff like that. But every now and then, a sighting seemed to have substance to it – like the one Ruth told me about that night.

According to Ruth, Chrissie and Rodney had been busy exploring this seaside town they'd gone to and had split up for a while. When they'd met up again, Rodney was all excited and had told Chrissie how he'd been wandering the side-streets off the High Street, and had gone past an office with a large glass front. Inside had been a lot of people, some of them at their desks, some walking about and chatting. And that's where he'd spotted Ruth's possible.

'Chrissie came and told me as soon as they got back. She made Rodney describe everything, and he did his best, but it was impossible to tell anything. Now they keep talking about driving me up there, but I don't know. I don't know if I ought to do anything about it.'

I can't remember exactly what I said to her that night, but I was at that point pretty sceptical. In fact, to be honest, my guess was that Chrissie and Rodney had made the whole thing up. I don't really want to suggest Chrissie and Rodney were bad people - that would be unfair. In many ways, I actually liked them. But the fact was, the way they regarded us newcomers, and Ruth in particular, was far from straightforward.

Chrissie was a tall girl who was quite beautiful when she stood up to her full height, but she didn't seem to realise this and spent her time crouching to be the same as the rest of us. That's why she often looked more like the Wicked Witch than a movie star - an impression reinforced by her irritating way of jabbing you with a finger the second before she said something to you. She always wore long skirts rather than jeans, and little glasses pressed too far into her face. She'd been one of the veterans who'd really welcomed us when we'd first arrived in the summer, and I'd at first been really taken by her and looked to her for guidance. But as the weeks had passed, I'd begun to have reservations. There was something odd about the way she was always mentioning the fact that we'd come from Hailsham, like that could explain almost anything to do with us. And she was always asking us questions about Hailsham - about little details, much like my donors do now - and although she tried to make out these were very casual, I could see there was a whole other dimension to her interest. Another thing that got to me was the way she always seemed to want to separate us: taking one of us aside when a few of us were doing something together, or else inviting two of us to join in something while leaving another two stranded - that sort of thing.

You'd hardly ever see Chrissie without her boyfriend, Rodney. He went around with his hair tied back in a ponytail, like a rock musician from the seventies, and talked a lot about things like reincarnation. I actually got to quite like him, but he was pretty much under Chrissie's influence. In any discussion, you knew he'd back up Chrissie's angle, and if Chrissie ever said anything mildly amusing, he'd be chortling and shaking his head like he couldn't believe how funny it was.

Okay, I'm maybe being a bit hard on these two. When I was remembering them with Tommy not so long ago, he thought they were pretty decent people. But I'm telling you all this now to explain why I was so sceptical about their reported sighting of Ruth's possible. As I say, my first instinct was not to believe it, and to suppose Chrissie was up to something.

The other thing that made me doubtful about all this had to do with the actual description given by Chrissie and Rodney: their picture of a woman working in a nice glass-fronted office. To me, at the time, this seemed just too close a match to what we then knew to be Ruth's 'dream future'.

I suppose it was mainly us newcomers who talked about 'dream futures' that winter, though a number of veterans did too. Some older ones - especially those who'd started their training - would sigh quietly and leave the room when this sort of talk began, but for a long time we didn't even notice this happening. I'm not sure what was going on in our heads during those discussions. We probably knew they couldn't be serious, but then again, I'm sure we didn't regard them as fantasy either. Maybe once Hailsham was behind us, it was possible, just for that half year or so, before all the talk of becoming carers, before the driving lessons, all those other things, it was possible to forget for whole stretches of time who we really were; to forget what the guardians had told us; to forget Miss Lucy's outburst that rainy afternoon at the pavilion, as well as all those theories we'd developed amongst ourselves over the years. It couldn't last, of course, but like I say, just for those few months, we somehow managed to live in this cosy state of suspension in which we could ponder our lives without the usual boundaries. Looking back now, it feels like we spent ages in that steamed-up kitchen after breakfast, or huddled around half-dead fires in the small hours, lost in conversation about our plans for the future.

Mind you, none of us pushed it too far. I don't remember anyone saying they were going to be a movie star or anything like that. The talk was more likely to be about becoming a postman or working on a farm. Quite a few students wanted to be drivers of one sort or other, and often, when the conversation went this way, some veterans would begin comparing particular scenic routes they'd travelled, favourite roadside cafés, difficult roundabouts, that sort of thing. Today, of course, I'd be able to talk the lot of them under the table on those topics. Back then, though, I used to just listen, not saying a thing, drinking in their talk. Sometimes, if it was late, I'd close my eyes and nestle against the arm of a sofa - or of a boy, if it was during one of those brief phases I was officially 'with' someone - and drift in and out of sleep, letting images of the roads move through my head.

Anyway, to get back to my point, when this sort of talk was going on, it was often Ruth who took it further than anybody - especially when there were veterans around. She'd been talking about offices right from the start of the winter, but when it really took on life, when it became her 'dream future', was after that morning she and I walked into the village.

It was during a bitterly cold spell, and our boxy gas heaters had been giving us trouble. We'd spend ages trying to get them to light, clicking away with no result, and we'd had to give up on more and more - and along with them, the rooms they were supposed to heat. Keffers refused to deal with it, claiming it was our responsibility, but in the end, when things were getting really cold, he'd handed us an envelope with money and a note of some igniter fuel we had to buy. So Ruth and I had volunteered to walk to the village to get it, and that's why we were going down the lane that frosty morning. We'd reached a spot where the hedges were high on both sides, and the ground was covered in frozen cowpats, when Ruth suddenly stopped a few steps behind me.

It took me a moment to realise, so that by the time I turned back to her she was breathing over her fingers and looking down, engrossed by something beside her feet. I thought maybe it was some poor creature dead in the frost, but when I came up, I saw it was a colour magazine - not one of 'Steve's magazines', but one of those bright cheerful things that come free with newspapers. It had fallen open at this glossy double page advert, and though the paper had gone soggy and there was mud at one corner, you could see it well enough. It showed this beautifully modern open-plan office with three or four people who worked in it having some kind of joke with each other. The place looked sparkling and so did the people. Ruth was staring at this picture and, when she noticed me beside her, said: 'Now that would be a proper place to work.'

Then she got self-conscious - maybe even cross that I'd caught her like that - and set off again much faster than before.

But a few evenings later, when several of us were sitting around a fire in the farmhouse, Ruth began telling us about the sort of office she'd ideally work in, and I immediately recognised it. She went into all the details - the plants, the gleaming equipment, the chairs with their swivels and castors - and it was so vivid everyone let her talk uninterrupted for ages. I was watching her closely, but it never seemed to occur to her I might make the connection - maybe she'd even forgotten herself where the image had come from. She even talked at one point about how the people in her office would all be 'dynamic, go-ahead types', and I remembered clearly those same words written in big letters across the top of the advert: 'Are you the dynamic, go-ahead type?' - something like that. Of course, I didn't say anything. In fact, listening to her, I even started wondering if maybe it was all feasible: if one day we might all of us move into a place like that and carry on our lives together.

Chrissie and Rodney were there that night, of course, hanging onto every word. And then for days afterwards, Chrissie kept trying to get Ruth to talk some more about it. I'd pass them sitting together in the corner of a room and Chrissie would be asking: 'Are you sure you wouldn't put each other off, working all together in a place like that?' just to get Ruth going on it again.

The point about Chrissie - and this applied to a lot of the veterans - was that for all her slightly patronising manner towards us when we'd first arrived, she was awestruck about our being from Hailsham. It took me a long time to realise this. Take the business about Ruth's office: Chrissie would never herself have talked about working in any office, never mind one like that. But because Ruth was from Hailsham, somehow the whole notion came within the realms of the possible. That's how Chrissie saw it, and I suppose Ruth did say a few things every now and then to encourage the idea that, sure enough, in some mysterious way, a separate set of rules applied to us Hailsham students. I never heard Ruth actually lie to veterans; it was more to do with not denying certain things, implying others. There were occasions when I could have brought the whole thing down over her head. But if Ruth was sometimes embarrassed, catching my eye in the middle of some story or other, she seemed confident I wouldn't give her away. And of course, I didn't.

So that was the background to Chrissie and Rodney's claim to have seen Ruth's 'possible', and you can maybe see now why I was wary about it. I wasn't keen on Ruth going with them to Norfolk, though I couldn't really say why. And once it became clear she was completely set on going, I told her I'd come too. At first, she didn't seem too delighted, and there was even a hint that she wouldn't let Tommy come with her either. In the end, though, we all went, the five of us: Chrissie, Rodney, Ruth, Tommy and me.

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

Rodney, who had a driver's licence, had made an arrangement to borrow a car for the day from the farm-workers at Metchley a couple of miles down the road. He'd regularly got cars this way in the past, but this particular time, the arrangement broke down the day before we were due to set off. Though things got sorted out fairly easily - Rodney walked over to the farm and got a promise on another car - the interesting thing was the way Ruth responded during those few hours when it looked like the trip might have to be called off.

Until then, she'd been making out the whole thing was a bit of a joke, that if anything she was going along with it to please Chrissie. And she'd talked a lot about how we weren't exploring our freedom nearly enough since leaving Hailsham; how anyway she'd always wanted to go to Norfolk to 'find all our lost things'. In other words, she'd gone out of her way to let us know she wasn't very serious about the prospect of finding her 'possible'.

That day before we went, I remember Ruth and I had been out for a stroll, and we came into the farmhouse kitchen where Fiona and a few veterans were making a huge stew. And it was Fiona herself, not looking up from what she was doing, who told us how the farm boy had come in earlier with the message. Ruth was standing just in front of me, so I couldn't see her face, but her whole posture froze up. Then without a word, she turned and pushed past me out of the cottage. I got a glimpse of her face then, and that's when I realised how upset she was. Fiona started to say something like: 'Oh, I didn't know ...' But I said quickly: 'That's not what Ruth's upset about. It's about something else, something that happened earlier on.' It wasn't very good, but it was the best I could do on the spur of the moment.

In the end, as I said, the vehicle crisis got resolved, and early the next morning, in the pitch dark, the five of us got inside a bashed but perfectly decent Rover car. The way we sat was with Chrissie up front next to Rodney, and the three of us in the back. That was what had felt natural, and we'd got in like that without thinking about it. But after only a few minutes, once Rodney had brought us out of the dark winding lanes onto the proper roads, Ruth, who was in the middle, leaned forward, put her hands on the front seats, and began talking to the two veterans. She did this in a way that meant Tommy and I, on either side of her, couldn't hear anything they were saying, and because she was between us, couldn't talk to or even see each other. Sometimes, on the rare occasions she did lean back, I tried to get something going between the three of us, but Ruth wouldn't pick up on it, and before long, she'd be crouched forwards again, her face stuck between the two front seats.

After about an hour, with day starting to break, we stopped to stretch our legs and let Rodney go for a pee. We'd pulled over beside a big empty field, so we jumped over the ditch and spent a few minutes rubbing our hands together and watching our breaths rise. At one point, I noticed Ruth had drifted away from the rest of us and was gazing across the field at the sunrise. So I went over to her and made the suggestion that, since she only wanted to talk to the veterans, she swap seats with me. That way she could go on talking at least with Chrissie, and Tommy and I could have some sort of conversation to while away the journey. I'd hardly finished before Ruth said in a whisper:

'Why do you have to be difficult? Now of all times! I don't get it. Why do you want to make trouble?' Then she yanked me round so both our backs were to the others and they wouldn't see if we started to argue. It was the way she did this, rather than her words, that suddenly made me see things her way; I could see that Ruth was making a big effort to present not just herself, but all of us, in the right way to Chrissie and Rodney; and here I was, threatening to undermine her and start an embarrassing scene. I saw all this, and so I touched her on the shoulder and went off back to the others. And when we returned to the car, I made sure the three of us sat exactly as before. But now, as we drove on, Ruth stayed more or less silent, sitting right back in her seat, and even when Chrissie or Rodney shouted things to us from the front, responded only in sulky monosyllables.

Things cheered up considerably, though, once we arrived in our seaside town. We got there around lunch-time and left the Rover in a car park beside a mini-golf course full of fluttering flags. It had turned into a crisp, sunny day, and my memory of it is that for the first hour we all felt so exhilarated to be out and about we didn't give much thought to what had brought us there. At one point Rodney actually let out a few whoops, waving his arms around as he led the way up a road climbing steadily past rows of houses and the occasional shop, and you could sense just from the huge sky, that you were walking towards the sea.

Actually, when we did reach the sea, we found we were standing on a road carved into a cliff edge. It seemed at first there was a sheer drop down to the sands, but once you leant over the rail, you could see zigzagging footpaths leading you down the cliff-face to the seafront.

We were starving by now and went into a little café perched on the cliff just where one of the footpaths began. When we went in, the only people inside were the two chubby women in aprons who worked there. They were smoking cigarettes at one of the tables, but they quickly got up and disappeared into the kitchen, so then we had the place to ourselves.

We took the table right at the back - which meant the one stuck out closest to the cliff edge - and when we sat down it felt like we were virtually suspended over the sea. I didn't have anything to compare it with at the time, but I realise now the café was tiny, with just three or four little tables. They'd left a window open - probably to stop the place filling up with frying smells - so that every now and then a gust would pass through the room making all the signs advertising their good deals flutter about. There was one cardboard notice pinned over the counter that had been done in coloured felt-tips, and at the top of it was the word 'look' with a staring eye drawn inside each 'o'. I see the same thing so often these days I don't even register it, but back then I hadn't seen it before. So I was looking at it admiringly, then caught Ruth's eye, and realised she too was looking at it amazed, and we both burst out laughing. That was a cosy little moment, when it felt like we'd left behind the bad feeling that had grown between us in the car. As it turned out, though, it was just about the last moment like that between me and Ruth for the rest of that outing.

We hadn't mentioned the 'possible' at all since arriving in the town, and I'd assumed when we sat down we'd finally discuss the matter properly. But once we'd started on our sandwiches, Rodney began talking about their old friend, Martin, who'd left the Cottages the year before and was now living somewhere in the town. Chrissie eagerly took up the subject and soon both veterans were coming out with anecdotes about all the hilarious things Martin had got up to. We couldn't follow much of it, but Chrissie and Rodney were really enjoying themselves. They kept exchanging glances and laughing, and although they pretended it was for our benefit, it was clear they were remembering for each other. Thinking about it now, it occurs to me the near-taboo at the Cottages surrounding people who'd left might well have stopped them talking about their friend even to each other, and it was only once we'd come away they'd felt able to indulge themselves in this way.

Whenever they laughed, I laughed too just to be polite. Tommy seemed to be understanding things even less than me and was letting out hesitant little half-laughs that lagged some way behind. Ruth, though, was laughing and laughing, and kept nodding to everything being said about Martin just like she too was remembering them. Then once, when Chrissie made a really obscure reference – she'd said something like: 'Oh, yes, the time he put out his jeans!' – Ruth gave a big laugh and signalled in our direction, as though to say to Chrissie: 'Go on, explain it to them so they can enjoy it too.' I let this all go, but when Chrissie and Rodney started discussing whether we should go round to Martin's flat, I finally said, maybe a bit coldly:

'What exactly is he doing here? Why's he got a flat?'

There was a silence, then I heard Ruth let out an exasperated sigh. Chrissie leaned over the table towards me and said quietly, like she was explaining to a child: 'He's being a carer. What else do you think he'd be doing here? He's a proper carer now.'

There was a bit of shifting, and I said: 'That's what I mean. We can't just go and visit him.'

Chrissie sighed. 'Okay. We're not supposed to visit carers. Absolutely strictly speaking. Certainly not encouraged.'

Rodney chuckled and added: 'Definitely not encouraged. Naughty naughty to go and visit him.'

'Very naughty,' Chrissie said and made a tutting noise.

Then Ruth joined in, saying: 'Kathy hates to be naughty. So we'd better not go and visit him.'

Tommy was looking at Ruth, clearly puzzled about whose side she'd taken, and I wasn't sure either. It occurred to me she didn't want the expedition side-tracked and was reluctantly siding with me, so I smiled at her, but she didn't return my look. Then Tommy asked suddenly:

'Whereabouts was it you saw Ruth's possible, Rodney?'

‘Oh ...’ Rodney didn’t seem nearly so interested in the possible now we were in the town, and I could see anxiety cross Ruth’s face. Finally Rodney said: ‘It was a turning off the High Street, somewhere up the other end. Of course, it might be her day off.’ Then when no one said anything, he added: ‘They do have days off, you know. They’re not always at their work.’

For a moment, as he said this, the fear passed through me that we’d misjudged things badly; that for all we knew, veterans often used talk of possibles just as a pretext to go on trips, and didn’t really expect to take it any further. Ruth might well have been thinking along the same lines, because she was now looking definitely worried, but in the end she did a little laugh, like Rodney had made a joke.

Then Chrissie said in a new voice: ‘You know, Ruth, we might be coming here in a few years’ time to visit you. Working in a nice office. I don’t see how anyone could stop us visiting you then.’

‘That’s right,’ Ruth said quickly. ‘You can all come and see me.’

‘I suppose,’ Rodney said, ‘there aren’t any rules about visiting people if they’re working in an office.’ He laughed suddenly. ‘We don’t know. It hasn’t really happened with us before.’

‘It’ll be all right,’ Ruth said. ‘They let you do it. You can all come and visit me. Except Tommy, that is.’

Tommy looked shocked. ‘Why can’t I come?’

‘Because you’ll already be with me, stupid,’ Ruth said. ‘I’m keeping you.’

We all laughed, Tommy again a little behind the rest of us.

‘I heard about this girl up in Wales,’ Chrissie said. ‘She was Hailsham, maybe a few years before you lot.’

Apparently she's working in this clothes shop right now. A really smart one.'

There were murmurs of approval and for a while we all looked dreamily out at the clouds.

'That's Hailsham for you,' Rodney said eventually, and shook his head as though in amazement.

'And then there was that other person' - Chrissie had turned to Ruth - 'that boy you were telling us about the other day. The one a couple of years above you who's a park keeper now.'

Ruth was nodding thoughtfully. It occurred to me that I should shoot Tommy a warning glance, but by the time I'd turned to him, he'd already started to speak.

'Who was that?' he asked in a bewildered voice.

'You know who it is, Tommy,' I said quickly. It was too risky to kick him, or even to make my voice wink-wink: Chrissie would have picked it up in a flash. So I said it dead straight, with a bit of weariness, like we were all fed up with Tommy forgetting all the time. But this just meant Tommy still didn't twig.

'Someone we knew?'

'Tommy, let's not go through this again,' I said. 'You'll have to have your brains tested.'

At last the penny seemed to drop, and Tommy shut up.

Chrissie said: 'I know how lucky I am, getting to be at the Cottages. But you Hailsham lot, you're really lucky. You know ...' She lowered her voice and leaned forward again.

'There's something I've been wanting to talk to you lot about. It's just that back there, at the Cottages, it's impossible. Everyone always listening in.'

She looked around the table, then fixed her gaze on Ruth. Rodney suddenly tensed and he too leaned forward. And something told me we were coming to what was, for Chrissie and Rodney, the central purpose of this whole expedition.

‘When Rodney and I, we were up in Wales,’ she said.

‘The same time we heard about this girl in the clothes shop. We heard something else, something about Hailsham students. What they were saying was that some Hailsham students in the past, in special circumstances, had managed to get a deferral. That this was something you could do if you were a Hailsham student. You could ask for your donations to be put back by three, even four years. It wasn’t easy, but just sometimes they’d let you do it. So long as you could convince them. So long as you qualified.’

Chrissie paused and looked at each of us, maybe for dramatic effect, maybe to check us for signs of recognition. Tommy and I probably had puzzled looks, but Ruth had on one of her faces where you couldn’t tell what was going on.

‘What they said,’ Chrissie continued, ‘was that if you were a boy and a girl, and you were in love with each other, really, properly in love, and if you could show it, then the people who run Hailsham, they sorted it out for you. They sorted it out so you could have a few years together before you began your donations.’

There was now a strange atmosphere around the table, a kind of tingle going round.

‘When we were in Wales,’ Chrissie went on, ‘the students at the White Mansion. They’d heard of this Hailsham couple, the guy had only a few weeks left before he became a carer. And they went to see someone and got everything put back three years. They were allowed to go on living there together, up at the White Mansion, three years straight, didn’t have to go on with their training or anything. Three years just to themselves, because they could prove they were properly in love.’

It was at this point I noticed Ruth nodding with a lot of authority. Chrissie and Rodney noticed too and for a few seconds they watched her like they were hypnotised. And I had a kind of vision of Chrissie and Rodney, back at the Cottages, in the months leading up to this moment, probing and prodding this subject between them. I could see them bringing it up, at first very tentatively, shrugging, putting it to one side, bringing it up again, never able quite to leave it alone. I could see them toying with the idea of talking to us about it, see them refining how they'd do it, what exactly they'd say. I looked again at Chrissie and Rodney in front of me, gazing at Ruth, and tried to read their faces. Chrissie looked both afraid and hopeful. Rodney looked on edge, like he didn't trust himself not to blurt out something he wasn't supposed to.

This wasn't the first time I'd come across the rumour about deferrals. Over the past several weeks, I'd caught more and more snatches of it at the Cottages. It was always veterans talking among themselves, and when any of us showed up, they'd look awkward and go quiet. But I'd heard enough to get the gist of it; and I knew it had specifically to do with us Hailsham students. Even so, it was only that day, in that seafront café, that it really came home to me how important this whole notion had become for some veterans.

'I suppose,' Chrissie went on, her voice wobbling slightly, 'you lot would know about it. The rules, all that sort of thing.'

She and Rodney looked at each of us in turn, then their gazes settled back on Ruth.

Ruth sighed and said: 'Well, they told us a few things, obviously. But' - she gave a shrug - 'it's not something we know much about. We never talked about it really. Anyway, we should get going soon.'

'Who is it you go to?' Rodney suddenly asked. 'Who did they say you had to go to if you wanted, you know, to apply? ’

Ruth shrugged again. ‘Well, I told you. It wasn’t something we talked about much.’ Almost instinctively she looked to me and Tommy for support, which was probably a mistake, because Tommy said:

‘To be honest, I don’t know what you’re all talking about. What rules are these?’

Ruth stared daggers at him, and I said quickly: ‘You know, Tommy. All that talk that used to go round at Hailsham.’

Tommy shook his head. ‘I don’t remember it,’ he said flatly. And this time I could see – and Ruth could too – that he wasn’t being slow. ‘I don’t remember anything like that at Hailsham.’

Ruth turned away from him. ‘What you’ve got to realise,’ she said to Chrissie, ‘is that even though Tommy was at Hailsham, he isn’t like a real Hailsham student. He was left out of everything and people were always laughing at him. So there’s no point in asking him about anything like this. Now, I want to go and find this person Rodney saw.’

A look had appeared in Tommy’s eyes that made me catch my breath. It was one I hadn’t seen for a long time and that belonged to the Tommy who’d had to be barricaded inside a classroom while he kicked over desks. Then the look faded, he turned to the sky outside and let out a heavy breath.

The veterans hadn’t noticed anything because Ruth, at the same moment, had risen to her feet and was fiddling with her coat. Then there was a bit of confusion as the rest of us all moved back our chairs from the little table all at once. I’d been put in charge of the spending money, so I went up to pay. The others filed out behind me, and while I was waiting for the change, I watched them through one of the big misty windows, shuffling about in the sunshine, not talking, looking down at the sea.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

When I got outside, it was obvious the excitement from when we'd first arrived had evaporated completely. We walked in silence, Rodney leading the way, through little backstreets hardly penetrated by the sun, the pavements so narrow we often had to shuffle along in single file. It was a relief to come out onto the High Street where the noise made our rotten mood less obvious. As we crossed at a pelican to the sunnier side, I could see Rodney and Chrissie conferring about something and I wondered how much of the bad atmosphere had to do with their believing we were holding back on some big Hailsham secret, and how much was just to do with Ruth's having a go at Tommy.

Then once we'd crossed the High Street, Chrissie announced she and Rodney wanted to go shopping for birthday cards. Ruth was stunned by this, but Chrissie just went on:

'We like buying them in big batches. It's always cheaper in the long run. And you've always got one handy when it's someone's birthday.' She pointed to the entrance of a Woolworth's shop. 'You can get pretty good cards in there really cheap.'

Rodney was nodding, and I thought there was something a little bit mocking around the edges of his smile. 'Of course,' he said, 'you end up with a lot of cards the same, but you can put your own illustrations on them. You know, personalise them.'

Both veterans were now standing in the middle of the pavement, letting people with pushchairs move round them, waiting for us to put up a challenge. I could tell Ruth was furious, but without Rodney's co-operation there wasn't much that could be done anyway.

So we went into the Woolworth's, and immediately I felt much more cheerful. Even now, I like places like that: a large store with lots of aisles displaying bright plastic toys, greeting cards, loads of cosmetics, maybe even a photo booth. Today, if I'm in a town and find myself with some time to kill, I'll stroll into somewhere just like that, where you can hang around and enjoy yourself, not buying a thing, and the assistants don't mind at all.

Anyway, we went in and before long we'd wandered apart to look at different aisles. Rodney had stayed near the entrance beside a big rack of cards, and further inside, I spotted Tommy under a big pop-group poster, rummaging through the music cassettes. After about ten minutes, when I was somewhere near the back of the store, I thought I heard Ruth's voice and wandered towards it. I'd already turned into the aisle - one with fluffy animals and big boxed jigsaws - before I realised Ruth and Chrissie were standing together at the end of it, having some sort of tête-à-tête. I wasn't sure what to do: I didn't want to interrupt, but it was time we were leaving and I didn't want to turn and walk off again. So I just stopped where I was, pretended to examine a jigsaw and waited for them to notice me.

That was when I realised they were back on the subject of this rumour. Chrissie was saying, in a lowered voice, something like:

'But all that time you were there, I'm amazed you didn't think more about how you'd do it. About who you'd go to, all of that.'

'You don't understand,' Ruth was saying. 'If you were from Hailsham, then you'd see. It's never been such a big deal for us. I suppose we've always known if we ever wanted to look into it, all we'd have to do is get word back to Hailsham ...'

Ruth saw me and broke off. When I lowered the jigsaw and turned to them, they were both looking at me angrily. At the same time, it was like I'd caught them doing something they shouldn't, and they moved apart self-consciously.

'It's time we were off,' I said, pretending to have heard nothing.

But Ruth wasn't fooled. As they came past, she gave me a really dirty look.

So by the time we set off again, following Rodney in search of the office where he'd seen Ruth's possible the month before, the atmosphere between us was worse than ever. Things weren't helped either by Rodney repeatedly taking us down the wrong streets. At least four times, he led us confidently down a turning off the High Street, only for the shops and offices to run out, and we'd have to turn and come back. Before long, Rodney was looking defensive and on the verge of giving up. But then we found it.

Again, we'd turned and were heading back towards the High Street, when Rodney had stopped suddenly. Then he'd indicated silently an office on the other side of the street.

There it was, sure enough. It wasn't exactly like the magazine advert we'd found on the ground that day, but then it wasn't so far off either. There was a big glass front at street-level, so anyone going by could see right into it: a large open-plan room with maybe a dozen desks arranged in irregular L-patterns. There were the potted palms, the shiny machines and swooping desk lamps. People were moving about between desks, or leaning on a partition, chatting and sharing jokes, while others had pulled their swivel chairs close to each other and were enjoying a coffee and sandwich.

'Look,' Tommy said. 'It's their lunch break, but they don't go out. Don't blame them either.'

We kept on staring, and it looked like a smart, cosy, self-contained world. I glanced at Ruth and noticed her eyes moving anxiously around the faces behind the glass.

‘Okay, Rod,’ Chrissie said. ‘So which one’s the possible?’

She said this almost sarcastically, like she was sure the whole thing would turn out to be a big mistake on his part. But Rodney said quietly, with a tremor of excitement:

‘There. Over in that corner. In the blue outfit. Her, talking now to the big red woman.’

It wasn’t obvious, but the longer we kept looking, the more it seemed he had something. The woman was around fifty, and had kept her figure pretty well. Her hair was darker than Ruth’s – though it could have been dyed – and she had it tied back in a simple pony-tail the way Ruth usually did. She was laughing at something her friend in the red outfit was saying, and her face, especially when she was finishing her laugh with a shake of her head, had more than a hint of Ruth about it.

We all kept on watching her, not saying a word. Then we became aware that in another part of the office, a couple of the other women had noticed us. One raised a hand and gave us an uncertain wave. This broke the spell and we took to our heels in giggly panic.

We stopped again further down the street, talking excitedly all at once. Except for Ruth, that is, who remained silent in the middle of it. It was hard to read her face at that moment: she certainly wasn’t disappointed, but then she wasn’t elated either. She had on a half-smile, the sort a mother might have in an ordinary family, weighing things up while the children jumped and screamed around her asking her to say, yes, they could do whatever. So there we were, all coming out with our views, and I was glad I could say honestly, along with the others, that the woman we’d seen was by no means out of the question. The truth was, we were all relieved: without quite realising it, we’d been bracing ourselves for a let-down. But now we could go back to the Cottages, Ruth could take encouragement from what she'd seen, and the rest of us could back her up. And the office life the woman appeared to be leading was about as close as you could hope to the one Ruth had often described for herself. Regardless of what had been going on between us that day, deep down, none of us wanted Ruth to return home despondent, and at that moment we thought we were safe. And so we would have been, I'm pretty sure, had we put an end to the matter at that point.

But then Ruth said: 'Let's sit over there, over on that wall. Just for a few minutes. Once they've forgotten about us, we can go and have another look.'

We agreed to this, but as we walked towards the low wall around the small car park Ruth had indicated, Chrissie said, perhaps a little too eagerly:

'But even if we don't get to see her again, we're all agreed she's a possibility. And it's a lovely office. It really is.'

'Let's just wait a few minutes,' Ruth said. 'Then we'll go back.'

I didn't sit on the wall myself because it was damp and crumbling, and because I thought someone might appear any minute and shout at us for sitting there. But Ruth did sit on it, knees on either side like she was astride a horse. And today I have these vivid images of the ten, fifteen minutes we waited there. No one's talking about the possibility any more. We're pretending instead that we're just killing a bit of time, maybe at a scenic spot during a carefree day-trip. Rodney's doing a little dance to demonstrate what a good feeling there is. He gets up on the wall, balances along it then deliberately falls off. Tommy's making jokes about some passers-by, and though they're not very funny, we're all laughing. Just Ruth, in the middle, astride the wall, remains silent. She keeps the smile on her face, but hardly moves. There's a breeze messing up her hair, and the bright winter sun's making her crinkle up her eyes, so you're not sure if she's smiling at our antics, or just grimacing in the light. These are the pictures I've kept of those moments we waited by that car park. I suppose we were waiting for Ruth to decide when it was time to go back for a second look. Well, she never got to make that decision because of what happened next.

Tommy, who had been mucking about on the wall with Rodney, suddenly jumped down and went still. Then he said: 'That's her. That's the same one.'

We all stopped what we were doing and watched the figure coming from the direction of the office. She was now wearing a cream-coloured overcoat, and struggling to fasten her briefcase as she walked. The buckle was giving her trouble, so she kept slowing down and starting again. We went on watching her in a kind of trance as she went past on the other side. Then as she was turning into the High Street, Ruth leapt up and said: 'Let's see where she goes.'

We came out of our trance and were off after her. In fact, Chrissie had to remind us to slow down or someone would think we were a gang of muggers going after the woman. We followed along the High Street at a reasonable distance, giggling, dodging past people, separating and coming together again. It must have been around two o'clock by then, and the pavement was busy with shoppers. At times we nearly lost sight of her, but we kept up, loitering in front of window displays when she went into a shop, squeezing past pushchairs and old people when she came out again.

Then the woman turned off the High Street into the little lanes near the seafront. Chrissie was worried she'd notice us away from the crowds, but Ruth just kept going, and we followed behind her.

Eventually we came into a narrow side-street that had the occasional shop, but was mainly just ordinary houses. We had to walk again in single file, and once when a van came the other way, we had to press ourselves into the houses to let it pass. Before long there was only the woman and us in the entire street, and if she'd glanced back, there was no way she wouldn't have noticed us. But she just kept walking, a dozen or so steps ahead, then went in through a door - into 'The Portway Studios' .

I've been back to the Portway Studios a number of times since then. It changed owners a few years ago and now sells all kinds of arty things: pots, plates, clay animals. Back then, it was two big white rooms just with paintings - beautifully displayed with plenty of spaces between them. The wooden sign hanging over the door is still the same one though. Anyway, we decided to go in after Rodney pointed out how suspicious we looked in that quiet little street. Inside the shop, we could at least pretend we were looking at the pictures.

We came in to find the woman we'd been following talking to a much older woman with silver hair, who seemed to be in charge of the place. They were sitting on either side of a small desk near the door, and apart from them, the gallery was empty. Neither woman paid much attention as we filed past, spread out and tried to look fascinated by the pictures.

Actually, preoccupied though I was with Ruth's possible, I did begin to enjoy the paintings and the sheer peacefulness of the place. It felt like we'd come a hundred miles from the High Street. The walls and ceilings were peppermint, and here and there, you'd see a bit of fishing net, or a rotted piece from a boat stuck up high near the cornicing. The paintings too - mostly oils in deep blues and greens - had sea themes. Maybe it was the tiredness suddenly catching up with us - after all, we'd been travelling since before dawn - but I wasn't the only one who went off into a bit of a dream in there. We'd all wandered into different corners, and were staring at one picture after another, only occasionally making the odd hushed remark like: 'Come and look at this!'

All the time, we could hear Ruth's possible and the silver-haired lady talking on and on. They weren't especially loud, but in that place, their voices seemed to fill the entire space. They were discussing some man they both knew, how he didn't have a clue with his children. And as we kept listening to them, stealing the odd glance in their direction, bit by bit, something started to change. It did for me, and I could tell it was happening for the others. If we'd left it at seeing the woman through the glass of her office, even if we'd followed her through the town then lost her, we could still have gone back to the Cottages excited and triumphant. But now, in that gallery, the woman was too close, much closer than we'd ever really wanted. And the more we heard her and looked at her, the less she seemed like Ruth. It was a feeling that grew among us almost tangibly, and I could tell that Ruth, absorbed in a picture on the other side of the room, was feeling it as much as anyone. That was probably why we went on shuffling around that gallery for so long; we were delaying the moment when we'd have to confer.

Then suddenly the woman had left, and we all kept standing about, avoiding each other's eyes. But none of us had thought to follow the woman, and as the seconds kept ticking on, it became like we were agreeing, without speaking, about how we now saw the situation.

Eventually the silver-haired lady came out from behind her desk and said to Tommy, who was the nearest to her:

'That's a particularly lovely work. That one's a favourite of mine.'

Tommy turned to her and let out a laugh. Then as I was hurrying over to help him out, the lady asked: 'Are you art students?'

'Not exactly,' I said before Tommy could respond. 'We're just, well, keen.'

The silver-haired lady beamed, then started to tell us how the artist whose work we were looking at was related to her, and all about the artist's career thus far. This had the effect, at least, of breaking the trance-like state we'd been in, and we gathered round her to listen, the way we might have done at Hailsham when a guardian started to speak. This really got the silver-haired lady going, and we kept nodding and exclaiming while she talked about where the paintings had been done, the times of day the artist liked to work, how some had been done without sketches. Then there came a kind of natural end to her lecture, and we all gave a sigh, thanked her and went out.

The street outside being so narrow, we couldn't talk properly for a while longer, and I think we were all grateful for that. As we walked away from the gallery in single file, I could see Rodney, up at the front, theatrically stretching out his arms, like he was exhilarated the way he'd been when we'd first arrived in the town. But it wasn't convincing, and once we came out onto a wider street, we all shuffled to a halt.

We were once again near a cliff edge. And like before, if you peered over the rail, you could see the paths zigzagging down to the seafront, except this time you could see the promenade at the bottom with rows of boarded-up stalls.

We spent a few moments just looking out, letting the wind hit us. Rodney was still trying to be cheerful, like he'd decided not to let any of this business spoil a good outing. He was pointing out to Chrissie something in the sea, way off on the horizon. But Chrissie turned away from him and said:

'Well, I think we're agreed, aren't we? That isn't Ruth.' She gave a small laugh and laid a hand on Ruth's shoulder. 'I'm sorry. We're all sorry. But we can't blame Rodney really. It wasn't that wild a try. You've got to admit, when we saw her through those windows, it did look

...’ She trailed off, then touched Ruth on the shoulder again.

Ruth said nothing, but gave a little shrug, almost as if to shrug off the touch. She was squinting into the distance, at the sky rather than the water. I could tell she was upset, but someone who didn’t know her well might well have supposed she was being thoughtful.

‘Sorry, Ruth,’ Rodney said, and he too gave Ruth a pat on the shoulder. But he had a smile on his face like he didn’t expect for one moment to be blamed for anything. It was the way someone apologised when they’d tried to do you a favour, but it hadn’t worked out.

Watching Chrissie and Rodney at that moment, I remember thinking, yes, they were okay. They were kind in their way and were trying to cheer Ruth up. At the same time, though, I remember feeling – even though they were the ones doing the talking, and Tommy and I were silent – a sort of resentment towards them on Ruth’s behalf. Because however sympathetic they were, I could see that deep down they were relieved. They were relieved things had turned out the way they had; that they were in a position to comfort Ruth, instead of being left behind in the wake of a dizzying boost to her hopes. They were relieved they wouldn’t have to face, more starkly than ever, the notion which fascinated and nagged and scared them: this notion of theirs that there were all kinds of possibilities open to us Hailsham students that weren’t open to them. I remember thinking then how different they actually were, Chrissie and Rodney, from the three of us.

Then Tommy said: ‘I don’t see what difference it makes. It was just a bit of fun we were having.’

‘A bit of fun for you maybe, Tommy,’ Ruth said coldly, still gazing straight ahead of her. ‘You wouldn’t think so if it was your possible we’d been looking for.’

‘I think I would,’ Tommy said. ‘I don’t see how it matters. Even if you found your possible, the actual model they got you from. Even then, I don’t see what difference it makes to anything.’

‘Thank you for your profound contribution, Tommy,’ said Ruth.

‘But I think Tommy’s right,’ I said. ‘It’s daft to assume you’ll have the same sort of life as your model. I agree with Tommy. It’s just a bit of fun. We shouldn’t get so serious about it.’

I too reached out and touched Ruth on the shoulder. I wanted her to feel the contrast to when Chrissie and Rodney had touched her, and I deliberately chose exactly the same spot. I expected some response, some signal that she accepted understanding from me and Tommy in a way she didn’t from the veterans. But she gave me nothing, not even the shrug she’d given Chrissie.

Somewhere behind me I could hear Rodney pacing about, making noises to suggest he was getting chilly in the strong wind. ‘How about going to visit Martin now?’ he said. ‘His flat’s just over there, behind those houses.’

Ruth suddenly sighed and turned to us. ‘To be honest,’ she said, ‘I knew all along it was stupid.’

‘Yeah,’ said Tommy, eagerly. ‘Just a bit of fun.’

Ruth gave him an irritated look. ‘Tommy, please shut up with all this “bit of fun” stuff. No one’s listening.’ Then turning to Chrissie and Rodney she went on: ‘I didn’t want to say when you first told me about this. But look, it was never on. They don’t ever, ever, use people like that woman. Think about it. Why would she want to? We all know it, so why don’t we all face it. We’re not modelled from that sort ...’

‘Ruth,’ I cut in firmly. ‘Ruth, don’t.’

But she just carried on: 'We all know it. We're modelled from trash. Junkies, prostitutes, winos, tramps. Convicts, maybe, just so long as they aren't psychos. That's what we come from. We all know it, so why don't we say it? A woman like that? Come on. Yeah, right, Tommy. A bit of fun. Let's have a bit of fun pretending. That other woman in there, her friend, the old one in the gallery. Art students, that's what she thought we were. Do you think she'd have talked to us like that if she'd known what we really were? What do you think she'd have said if we'd asked her? "Excuse me, but do you think your friend was ever a clone model?" She'd have thrown us out. We know it, so we might as well just say it. If you want to look for possibles, if you want to do it properly, then you look in the gutter. You look in rubbish bins. Look down the toilet, that's where you'll find where we all came from.'

'Ruth' - Rodney's voice was steady and had a warning in it - 'let's forget about it and go and see Martin. He's off this afternoon. You'll like him, he's a real laugh.'

Chrissie put an arm around Ruth. 'Come on, Ruth. Let's do what Rodney says.'

Ruth got to her feet and Rodney started to walk.

'Well, you lot can go,' I said quietly. 'I'm not going.'

Ruth turned and looked at me carefully. 'Well, what do you know? Who's the upset one now?'

'I'm not upset. But sometimes you speak garbage, Ruth.'

'Oh, look who's upset now. Poor Kathy. She never likes straight talking.'

'It's nothing to do with that. I don't want to visit a carer. We're not supposed to and I don't even know this guy.'

Ruth shrugged and exchanged glances with Chrissie. 'Well,' she said, 'there's no reason we've got to go round together the whole time. If little Miss here doesn't want to join us, she doesn't have to. Let her go off by herself.' Then she leaned over to Chrissie and said in a stage whisper: 'That's always the best way when Kathy's in a mood. Leave her alone and she'll walk it off.'

'Be back at the car by four o'clock,' Rodney said to me. 'Otherwise you'll have to hitch-hike.' Then he did a laugh. 'Come on, Kathy, don't get in a sulk. Come with us.'

'No. You go on. I don't feel like it.'

Rodney shrugged and started to move off again. Ruth and Chrissie followed, but Tommy didn't move. Only when Ruth stared at him did he say:

'I'll stay with Kath. If we're splitting, then I'll stay with Kath.'

Ruth glared at him in fury, then turned and strode off. Chrissie and Rodney looked at Tommy awkwardly, then they too began walking again.

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

Tommy and I leaned on the rail and stared at the view until the others had gone out of sight.

‘It’s just talk,’ he said eventually. Then after a pause: ‘It’s just what people say when they’re feeling sorry for themselves. It’s just talk. The guardians never told us anything like that.’

I started to walk – the opposite way to the others – and let Tommy fall in step beside me.

‘It’s not worth getting upset about,’ Tommy went on. ‘Ruth’s always doing things like that now. It’s just her letting off steam. Anyway, like we were telling her, even if it’s true, even a little bit true, I don’t see how it makes any difference. Our models, what they were like, that’s nothing to do with us, Kath. It’s just not worth getting upset about.’

‘Okay,’ I said, and deliberately bumped my shoulder into his. ‘Okay, okay.’

I had the impression we were walking towards the town centre, though I couldn’t be sure. I was trying to think of a way to change the subject, when Tommy said first:

‘You know when we were in that Woolworth’s place earlier? When you were down at the back with the others? I was trying to find something. Something for you.’

‘A present?’ I looked at him in surprise. ‘I’m not sure Ruth would approve of that. Not unless you got her a bigger one.’

‘A sort of present. But I couldn’t find it. I wasn’t going to tell you, but now, well, I’ve got another chance to find it. Except you might have to help me. I'm not very good at shopping.'

'Tommy, what are you talking about? You want to get me a present, but you want me to help you choose it ...'

'No, I know what it is. It's just that ...' He laughed and shrugged. 'Oh, I might as well tell you. In that shop we were in, they had this shelf with loads of records and tapes. So I was looking for the one you lost that time. Do you remember, Kath? Except I couldn't remember what it was any more.'

'My tape? I didn't realise you ever knew about it, Tommy.'

'Oh yeah. Ruth was getting people to look for it and saying you were really upset about losing it. So I tried to find it. I never told you at the time, but I did try really hard. I thought there'd be places I could look where you couldn't. In boys' dorms, stuff like that. I remember looking for ages, but I couldn't find it.'

I glanced at him and felt my rotten mood evaporating. 'I never knew that, Tommy. That was really sweet of you.'

'Well, it didn't help much. But I really wanted to find it for you. And when it looked in the end like it wasn't going to turn up, I just said to myself, one day I'll go to Norfolk and I'll find it there for her.'

'The lost corner of England,' I said, and looked around me. 'And here we are!'

Tommy too looked around him, and we came to a halt. We were in another side-street, not as narrow as the one with the gallery. For a moment we both kept glancing around theatrically, then giggled.

'So it wasn't such a daft idea,' Tommy said. 'That Woolworth's shop earlier, it had all these tapes, so I thought they were bound to have yours. But I don't think they did. '

'You don't think they did? Oh, Tommy, you mean you didn't even look properly! '

'I did, Kath. It's just that, well, it's really annoying but I couldn't remember what it was called. All that time at Hailsham, I was opening boys' collection chests and everything, and now I can't remember. It was Julie Bridges or something ...'

'Judy Bridgewater. Songs After Dark. '

Tommy shook his head solemnly. 'They definitely didn't have that. '

I laughed and punched his arm. He looked puzzled so I said: 'Tommy, they wouldn't have something like that in Woolworth's. They have the latest hits. Judy Bridgewater, she's someone from ages ago. It just happened to turn up, at one of our Sales. It's not going to be in Woolworth's now, you idiot! '

'Well, like I said, I don't know about things like that. But they had so many tapes ...'

'They had some, Tommy. Oh, never mind. It was a sweet idea. I'm really touched. It was a great idea. This is Norfolk, after all. '

We started walking again and Tommy said hesitantly: 'Well, that's why I had to tell you. I wanted to surprise you, but it's useless. I don't know where to look, even if I do know the name of the record. Now I've told you, you can help me. We can look for it together. '

'Tommy, what are you talking about?' I was trying to sound reproachful, but I couldn't help laughing.

'Well, we've got over an hour. This is a real chance. '

‘Tommy, you idiot. You really believe it, don’t you? All this lost-corner stuff.’

‘I don’t necessarily believe it. But we might as well look now we’re here. I mean, you’d like to find it again, wouldn’t you? What have we got to lose?’

‘All right. You’re a complete idiot, but all right.’

He opened his arms out helplessly. ‘Well, Kath, where do we go? Like I say, I’m no good at shopping.’

‘We have to look in second-hand places,’ I said, after a moment’s thought. ‘Places full of old clothes, old books. They’ll sometimes have a box full of records and tapes.’

‘Okay. But where are these shops?’

When I think of that moment now, standing with Tommy in the little side-street about to begin our search, I feel a warmth welling up through me. Everything suddenly felt perfect: an hour set aside, stretching ahead of us, and there wasn’t a better way to spend it. I had to really hold myself back from giggling stupidly, or jumping up and down on the pavement like a little kid. Not long ago, when I was caring for Tommy, and I brought up our Norfolk trip, he told me he’d felt exactly the same. That moment when we decided to go searching for my lost tape, it was like suddenly every cloud had blown away, and we had nothing but fun and laughter before us.

At the start, we kept going into the wrong sort of places: second-hand bookshops, or shops full of old vacuum cleaners, but no music at all. After a while Tommy decided I didn’t know any better than he did and announced he would lead the way. As it happened, by sheer luck really, he discovered straight away a street with four shops of just the kind we were after, standing virtually in a row. Their front windows were full of dresses, handbags, children’s annuals, and when you went inside, a sweet stale smell. There were piles of creased paperbacks, dusty boxes full of postcards or trinkets. One shop specialised in hippie stuff, while another had war medals and photos of soldiers in the desert. But they all had somewhere a big cardboard box or two with LPs and cassette tapes. We rummaged around those shops, and in all honesty, after the first few minutes, I think Judy Bridgewater had more or less slipped from our minds. We were just enjoying looking through all those things together; drifting apart then finding ourselves side by side again, maybe competing for the same box of bric-a-brac in a dusty corner lit up by a shaft of sun.

Then of course I found it. I'd been flicking through a row of cassette cases, my mind on other things, when suddenly there it was, under my fingers, looking just the way it had all those years ago: Judy, her cigarette, the coquettish look for the barman, the blurred palms in the background.

I didn't exclaim, the way I'd been doing when I'd come across other items that had mildly excited me. I stood there quite still, looking at the plastic case, unsure whether or not I was delighted. For a second, it even felt like a mistake. The tape had been the perfect excuse for all this fun, and now it had turned up, we'd have to stop. Maybe that was why, to my own surprise, I kept silent at first; why I thought about pretending never to have seen it. And now it was there in front of me, there was something vaguely embarrassing about the tape, like it was something I should have grown out of. I actually went as far as flicking the cassette on and letting its neighbour fall on it. But there was the spine, looking up at me, and in the end I called Tommy over.

'Is that it?' He seemed genuinely sceptical, perhaps because I wasn't making more fuss. I pulled it out and held it in both hands. Then suddenly I felt a huge pleasure - and something else, something more complicated that threatened to make me burst into tears. But I got a hold of the emotion, and just gave Tommy's arm a tug.

‘Yes, this is it,’ I said, and for the first time smiled excitedly. ‘Can you believe it? We’ve really found it!’

‘Do you think it could be the same one? I mean, the actual one. The one you lost?’

As I turned it in my fingers, I found I could remember all the design details on the back, the titles of the tracks, everything.

‘For all I know, it might be,’ I said. ‘But I have to tell you, Tommy, there might be thousands of these knocking about.’

Then it was my turn to notice Tommy wasn’t as triumphant as he might be.

‘Tommy, you don’t seem very pleased for me,’ I said, though in an obviously jokey voice.

‘I am pleased for you, Kath. It’s just that, well, I wish I’d found it.’ Then he did a small laugh and went on:

‘Back then, when you lost it, I used to think about it, in my head, what it would be like, if I found it and brought it to you. What you’d say, your face, all of that.’

His voice was softer than usual and he kept his eyes on the plastic case in my hand. And I suddenly became very conscious of the fact that we were the only people in the shop, except for the old guy behind the counter at the front engrossed in his paperwork. We were right at the back of the shop, on a raised platform where it was darker and more secluded, like the old guy didn’t want to think about the stuff in our area and had mentally curtained it off. For several seconds, Tommy stayed in a sort of trance, for all I know playing over in his mind one of these old fantasies of giving me back my lost tape. Then suddenly he snatched the case out of my hand.

‘Well at least I can buy it for you,’ he said with a grin, and before I could stop him, he’d started down the floor towards the front.

I went on browsing around the back of the shop while the old guy searched around for the tape to go with the case. I was still feeling a pang of regret that we’d found it so quickly, and it was only later, when we were back at the Cottages and I was alone in my room, that I really appreciated having the tape – and that song – back again. Even then, it was mainly a nostalgia thing, and today, if I happen to get the tape out and look at it, it brings back memories of that afternoon in Norfolk every bit as much as it does our Hailsham days.

As we came out of the shop, I was keen to regain the carefree, almost silly mood we’d been in before. But when I made a few little jokes, Tommy was lost in his thoughts and didn’t respond.

We began going up a steeply climbing path, and we could see – maybe a hundred yards further up – a kind of viewing area right on the cliff edge with benches facing out to sea. It would have made a nice spot in the summer for an ordinary family to sit and eat a picnic. Now, despite the chilly wind, we found ourselves walking up towards it, but when there was still some way left to go, Tommy slowed to a dawdle and said to me:

‘Chrissie and Rodney, they’re really obsessed with this idea. You know, the one about people having their donations deferred if they’re really in love. They’re convinced we know all about it, but no one said anything like that at Hailsham. At least, I never heard anything like that, did you, Kath? No, it’s just something going around recently among the veterans. And people like Ruth, they’ve been stoking it up.’

I looked at him carefully, but it was hard to tell if he’d just spoken with mischievous affection or else a kind of disgust. I could see anyway there was something else on his mind, nothing to do with Ruth, so I didn't say anything and waited. Eventually he came to a complete halt and started to poke around with his foot a squashed paper cup on the ground.

'Actually, Kath,' he said, 'I've been thinking about it for a while. I'm sure we're right, there was no talk like that when we were at Hailsham. But there were a lot of things that didn't make sense back then. And I've been thinking, if it's true, this rumour, then it could explain quite a lot. Stuff we used to puzzle over.'

'What do you mean? What sort of stuff?'

'The Gallery, for instance.' Tommy had lowered his voice and I stepped in closer, just as though we were still at Hailsham, talking in the dinner queue or beside the pond.

'We never got to the bottom of it, what the Gallery was for. Why Madame took away all the best work. But now I think I know. Kath, you remember that time everyone was arguing about tokens? Whether they should get them or not to make up for stuff they'd had taken away by Madame? And Roy J. went in to see Miss Emily about it? Well, there was something Miss Emily said then, something she let drop, and that's what's been making me think.'

Two women were passing by with dogs on leads, and although it was completely stupid, we both stopped talking until they'd gone further up the slope and out of earshot. Then I said:

'What thing, Tommy? What thing Miss Emily let drop?'

'When Roy J. asked her why Madame took our stuff away. Do you remember what she's supposed to have said?'

'I remember her saying it was a privilege, and we should be proud ...'

'But that wasn't all.' Tommy's voice was now down to a whisper. 'What she told Roy, what she let slip, which she probably didn't mean to let slip, do you remember, Kath? She told Roy that things like pictures, poetry, all that kind of stuff, she said they revealed what you were like inside. She said they revealed your soul.'

When he said this, I suddenly remembered a drawing Laura had done once of her intestines and laughed. But something was coming back to me.

'That's right,' I said. 'I remember. So what are you getting at?'

'What I think,' said Tommy slowly, 'is this. Suppose it's true, what the veterans are saying. Suppose some special arrangement has been made for Hailsham students. Suppose two people say they're truly in love, and they want extra time to be together. Then you see, Kath, there has to be a way to judge if they're really telling the truth. That they aren't just saying they're in love, just to defer their donations. You see how difficult it could be to decide? Or a couple might really believe they're in love, but it's just a sex thing. Or just a crush. You see what I mean, Kath? It'll be really hard to judge, and it's probably impossible to get it right every time. But the point is, whoever decides, Madame or whoever it is, they need something to go on.'

I nodded slowly. 'So that's why they took away our art ...'

'It could be. Madame's got a gallery somewhere filled with stuff by students from when they were tiny. Suppose two people come up and say they're in love. She can find the art they've done over years and years. She can see if they go. If they match. Don't forget, Kath, what she's got reveals our souls. She could decide for herself what's a good match and what's just a stupid crush.'

I started to walk slowly again, hardly looking in front of me. Tommy fell in step, waiting for my response.

‘I’m not sure,’ I said in the end. ‘What you’re saying could certainly explain Miss Emily, what she said to Roy. And I suppose it explains too why the guardians always thought it was so important for us, to be able to paint and all of that.’

‘Exactly. And that’s why ...’ Tommy sighed and went on with some effort. ‘That’s why Miss Lucy had to admit she’d been wrong, telling me it didn’t really matter. She’d said that because she was sorry for me at the time. But she knew deep down it did matter. The thing about being from Hailsham was that you had this special chance. And if you didn’t get stuff into Madame’s gallery, then you were as good as throwing that chance away.’

It was after he said this that it suddenly dawned on me, with a real chill, where this was leading. I stopped and turned to him, but before I could speak, Tommy let out a laugh.

‘If I’ve got this right, then, well, it looks like I might have blown my chance.’

‘Tommy, did you ever get anything into the Gallery? When you were much younger maybe?’

He was already shaking his head. ‘You know how useless I was. And then there was that stuff with Miss Lucy. I know she meant well. She was sorry for me and she wanted to help me. I’m sure she did. But if my theory’s right, well ...’

‘It’s only a theory, Tommy,’ I said. ‘You know what your theories are like.’

I’d wanted to lighten things a bit, but I couldn’t get the tone right, and it must have been obvious I was still thinking hard about what he’d just said. ‘Maybe they’ve got all sorts of ways to judge,’ I said after a moment. ‘Maybe the art’s just one out of all kinds of different ways.’

Tommy shook his head again. 'Like what? Madame never got to know us. She wouldn't remember us individually. Besides, it's probably not just Madame that decides. There's probably people higher up than her, people who never set foot in Hailsham. I've thought about this a lot, Kath. It all fits. That's why the Gallery was so important, and why the guardians wanted us to work so hard on our art and our poetry. Kath, what are you thinking?'

Sure enough, I'd drifted off a bit. Actually, I was thinking about that afternoon I'd been alone in our dorm, playing the tape we'd just found; how I'd been swaying around, clutching a pillow to my breast, and how Madame had been watching me from the doorway, tears in her eyes. Even this episode, for which I'd never yet found a convincing explanation, seemed to fit Tommy's theory. In my head, I'd been imagining I was holding a baby, but of course, there'd have been no way for Madame to know that. She'd have supposed I was holding a lover in my arms. If Tommy's theory was right, if Madame was connected to us for the sole purpose of deferring our donations when, later on, we fell in love, then it made sense - for all her usual coldness towards us - she'd be really moved stumbling on a scene like that. All this flashed through my mind, and I was on the point of blurting it all out to Tommy. But I held back because I wanted now to play down his theory.

'I was just thinking over what you said, that's all,' I said. 'We should start going back now. It might take us a while to find the car park.'

We began to retrace our steps down the slope, but we knew we still had time and didn't hurry.

'Tommy,' I asked, after we'd been walking for a while. 'Have you said any of this to Ruth?'

He shook his head and went on walking. Eventually he said: 'The thing is, Ruth believes it all, everything the veterans are saying. Okay, she likes to pretend she knows much more than she does. But she does believe it. And sooner or later, she's going to want to take it further.'

'You mean, she'll want to ...'

'Yeah. She'll want to apply. But she hasn't thought it through yet. Not the way we just did.'

'You've never told her your theory about the Gallery?'

He shook his head again, but said nothing.

'If you tell her your theory,' I said, 'and she buys it ... Well, she's going to be furious.'

Tommy seemed thoughtful, but still didn't say anything. It wasn't until we were back down in the narrow side-streets that he spoke again, and then his voice was suddenly sheepish.

'Actually, Kath,' he said, 'I have been doing some stuff. Just in case. I haven't told anyone, not even Ruth. It's just a start.'

That was when I first heard about his imaginary animals. When he started to describe what he'd been doing - I didn't actually see anything until a few weeks later - I found it hard to show much enthusiasm. In fact, I have to admit, I was reminded of the original elephant-in-the-grass picture that had started off all Tommy's problems at Hailsham. The inspiration, he explained, had come from an old children's book with the back cover missing which he'd found behind one of the sofas at the Cottages. He'd then persuaded Keffers to give him one of the little black notebooks he scribbled his figures in, and since then, Tommy had finished at least a dozen of his fantastic creatures.

'The thing is, I'm doing them really small. Tiny. I'd never thought of that at Hailsham. I think maybe that's where I went wrong. If you make them tiny, and you have to because the pages are only about this big, then everything changes. It's like they come to life by themselves. Then you have to draw in all these different details for them. You have to think about how they'd protect themselves, how they'd reach things. Honest, Kath, it's nothing like anything I ever did at Hailsham.'

He started describing his favourites, but I couldn't really concentrate; the more excited he got telling me about his animals, the more uneasy I was growing. 'Tommy,' I wanted to say to him, 'you're going to make yourself a laughing stock all over again. Imaginary animals? What's up with you?' But I didn't. I just looked at him cautiously and kept saying: 'That sounds really good, Tommy.'

Then he said at one point: 'Like I said, Kath, Ruth doesn't know about the animals.' And when he said this, he seemed to remember everything else, and why we'd been talking about his animals in the first place, and the energy faded from his face. Then we were walking in silence again, and as we came out onto the High Street, I said:

'Well, even if there's something to your theory, Tommy, there's a lot more we'll have to find out. For one thing, how's a couple supposed to apply? What are they supposed to do? There aren't exactly forms lying about.'

'I've been wondering about all of that too.' His voice was quiet and solemn again. 'As far as I can see, there's only one obvious way forward. And that's to find Madame.'

I gave this a think, then said: 'That might not be so easy. We don't really know a thing about her. We don't even know her name. And you remember how she was? She didn't like us even coming near her. Even if we did ever track her down, I don't see her helping much.'

Tommy sighed. 'I know,' he said. 'Well, I suppose we've got time. None of us are in any particular hurry.'

By the time we got back to the car park, the afternoon had clouded over and was growing pretty chilly. There was no sign of the others yet, so Tommy and I leaned against our car and looked towards the mini-golf course. No one was playing and the flags were fluttering away in the wind. I didn't want to talk any more about Madame, the Gallery or any of the rest of it, so I got the Judy Bridgewater tape out from its little bag and gave it a good look-over.

'Thanks for buying this for me,' I said.

Tommy smiled. 'If I'd got to that tape box and you were on the LPs, I'd have found it first. It was bad luck for poor old Tommy.'

'It doesn't make any difference. We only found it because you said to look for it. I'd forgotten about all this lost-corner stuff. After Ruth going on like that, I was in such a mood. Judy Bridgewater. My old friend. It's like she's never been away. I wonder who stole it back then?'

For a moment, we turned towards the street, looking for the others.

'You know,' Tommy said, 'when Ruth said what she did earlier on, and I saw how upset you looked ...'

'Leave it, Tommy. I'm all right about it now. And I'm not going to bring it up with her when she comes back.'

'No, that's not what I was getting at.' He took his weight off the car, turned and pressed a foot against the front tyre as though to test it. 'What I meant was, I realised then, when Ruth came out with all that, I realised why you keep looking through those porn mags. Okay, I haven't realised It's just a theory. Another of my theories. But when Ruth said what she did earlier on, it kind of clicked.'

I knew he was looking at me, but I kept my eyes straight ahead and made no response.

'But I still don't really get it, Kath,' he said eventually. 'Even if what Ruth says is right, and I don't think it is, why are you looking through old porn mags for your possibles? Why would your model have to be one of those girls?'

I shrugged, still not looking at him. 'I don't claim it makes sense. It's just something I do.' There were tears filling my eyes now and I tried to hide them from Tommy. But my voice wobbled as I said: 'If it annoys you so much, I won't do it any more.'

I don't know if Tommy saw the tears. In any case, I'd got them under control by the time he came close to me and gave my shoulders a squeeze. This was something he'd done before from time to time, it wasn't anything special or new. But somehow I did feel better and gave a little laugh. He let go of me then, but we stayed almost touching, side by side again, our backs to the car.

'Okay, there's no sense in it,' I said. 'But we all do it, don't we? We all wonder about our model. After all, that's why we came out here today. We all do it.'

'Kath, you know, don't you, I haven't told anyone. About that time in the boiler hut. Not Ruth, not anyone. But I just don't get it. I don't get what it's about.'

'All right, Tommy. I'll tell you. It may not make any more sense after you've heard it, but you can hear it anyway. It's just that sometimes, every now and again, I get these really strong feelings when I want to have sex. Sometimes it just comes over me and for an hour or two it's scary. For all I know, I could end up doing it with old Keffer, it's that bad. That's why ... that's the only reason I did it with Hughie. And with Oliver. It didn't mean anything deep down. I don't even like them much. I don't know what it is, and afterwards, when it's passed over, it's just scary. That's why I started thinking, well, it has to come from somewhere. It must be to do with the way I am.' I stopped, but when Tommy didn't say anything, I went on: 'So I thought if I find her picture, in one of those magazines, it'll at least explain it. I wouldn't want to go and find her or anything.'

It would just, you know, kind of explain why I am the way I am. '

'I get it too sometimes,' said Tommy. 'When I really feel like doing it. I reckon everyone does, if they're honest. I don't think there's anything different about you, Kath. In fact, I get like that quite a lot ...' He broke off and laughed, but I didn't laugh with him.

'What I'm talking about's different,' I said. 'I've watched other people. They get in the mood for it, but that doesn't make them do things. They never do things like I've done, going with people like that Hughie ...'

I might have started crying again, because I felt Tommy's arm going back around my shoulders. Upset as I was, I remained conscious of where we were, and I made a kind of check in my mind that if Ruth and the others came up the street, even if they saw us at that moment, there'd be no room for misunderstanding. We were still side by side, leaning against the car, and they'd see I was upset about something and Tommy was just comforting me. Then I heard him say:

'I don't think it's necessarily a bad thing. Once you find someone, Kath, someone you really want to be with, then it could be really good. Remember what the guardians used to tell us? If it's with the right person, it makes you feel really good. '

I made a movement with my shoulder to get Tommy's arm off me, then took a deep breath. 'Let's forget it. Anyway, I've got much better at controlling these moods when they come on. So let's just forget it. '

'All the same, Kath, it's stupid looking through those magazines. '

'It's stupid, okay. Tommy, let's leave it. I'm all right now. '

I don't remember what else we talked about until the others showed up. We didn't discuss any more of those serious things, and if the others sensed something still in the air, they didn't remark on it. They were in good spirits, and Ruth in particular seemed determined to make up for the bad scene earlier on. She came up and touched my cheek, making some joke or other, and once we got in the car, she made sure the jovial mood kept going. She and Chrissie had found everything about Martin comical and were relishing the chance to laugh openly about him now they'd left his flat. Rodney looked disapproving, and I realised Ruth and Chrissie were making a song and dance of it mainly to tease him. It all seemed good-natured enough. But what I noticed was that whereas before Ruth would have taken the opportunity to keep me and Tommy in the dark about all the jokes and references, throughout the journey back, she kept turning to me and explaining carefully everything they were talking about. In fact it got a bit tiring after a while because it was like everything being said in the car was for our - or at least my - special benefit. But I was pleased Ruth was making such a fuss. I understood - as did Tommy - that she'd recognised she'd behaved badly before, and this was her way of admitting it. We were sitting with her in the middle, just as we'd done on the journey out, but now she spent all her time talking to me, turning occasionally to her other side to give Tommy a little squeeze or the odd kiss. It was a good atmosphere, and no one brought up Ruth's possible or anything like that. And I didn't mention the Judy Bridgewater tape Tommy had bought me. I knew Ruth would find out about it sooner or later, but I didn't want her to find out just yet. On that journey home, with the darkness setting in over those long empty roads, it felt like the three of us were close again and I didn't want anything to come along and break that mood.

CHAPTER SIXTEEN

The odd thing about our Norfolk trip was that once we got back, we hardly talked about it. So much so that for a while all kinds of rumours went around about what we'd been up to. Even then, we kept pretty quiet, until eventually people lost interest.

I'm still not sure why this happened. Perhaps we felt it was up to Ruth, that it was her call how much got told, and we were waiting to take our cue from her. And Ruth, for one reason or another – maybe she was embarrassed how things had turned out with her possible, maybe she was enjoying the mystery – had remained completely closed on the subject. Even among ourselves, we avoided talking about the trip.

This air of secrecy made it easier for me to keep from telling Ruth about Tommy buying me the Judy Bridgewater tape. I didn't go as far as actually hiding the thing. It was always there in my collection, in one of my little piles next to the skirting board. But I always made sure not to leave it out or on top of a pile. There were times when I wanted badly to tell her, when I wanted us to reminisce about Hailsham with the tape playing in the background. But the further away we got from the Norfolk trip, and I still hadn't told her, the more it came to feel like a guilty secret. Of course, she did spot the tape in the end, much later, and it was probably a much worse time for her to find it, but that's the way your luck sometimes goes.

As spring came on, there seemed to be more and more veterans leaving to start their training, and though they left without fuss in the usual way, the increased numbers made them impossible to ignore. I'm not sure what our feelings were, witnessing these departures. I suppose to some extent we envied the people leaving. It did feel like they were headed for a bigger, more exciting world. But of course, without a doubt, their going made us increasingly uneasy.

Then, I think it was around April, Alice F. became the first of our Hailsham bunch to leave, and not long after that Gordon C. did too. They'd both asked to start their training, and went off with cheerful smiles, but after that, for our lot anyway, the atmosphere at the Cottages changed forever.

Many veterans, too, seemed affected by the flurry of departures, and maybe as a direct result, there was a fresh spate of rumours of the sort Chrissie and Rodney had spoken about in Norfolk. Talk went around of students, somewhere else in the country, getting deferrals because they'd shown they were in love - and now, just sometimes, the talk was of students with no connections to Hailsham. Here again, the five of us who'd been to Norfolk backed away from these topics: even Chrissie and Rodney, who'd once been at the centre of just this sort of talk, now looked awkwardly away when these rumours got going.

The 'Norfolk effect' even got to me and Tommy. I'd been assuming, once we were back, we'd be taking little opportunities, whenever we were alone, to exchange more thoughts on his theory about the Gallery. But for some reason - and it wasn't any more him than me - this never really happened. The one exception, I suppose, was that time in the goosehouse, the morning when he showed me his imaginary animals.

The barn we called the goosehouse was on the outer fringes of the Cottages, and because the roof leaked badly and the door was permanently off its hinges, it wasn't used for anything much other than as a place for couples to sneak off to in the warmer months. By then I'd taken to going for long solitary walks, and I think I was setting out on one of these, and had just gone past the goosehouse, when I heard Tommy calling me. I turned to see him in his bare feet, perched awkwardly on a bit of dry ground surrounded by huge puddles, one hand on the side of the barn to keep his balance.

‘What happened to your Wellies, Tommy?’ I asked. Aside from his bare feet, he was dressed in his usual thick jumper and jeans.

‘I was, you know, drawing ...’ He laughed, and held up a little black notebook similar to the ones Keffers always went around with. It was by then over two months since the Norfolk trip, but I realised as soon as I saw the notebook what this was about. But I waited for him to say:

‘If you like, Kath, I’ll show you.’

He led the way into the goosehouse, hopping over the jaggy ground. I’d expected it to be dark inside, but the sunlight was pouring through the skylights. Pushed against one wall were various bits of furniture heaved out over the past year or so – broken tables, old fridges, that kind of thing. Tommy appeared to have dragged into the middle of the floor a two-seater settee with stuffing poking out of its black plastic, and I guessed he’d been sitting in it doing his drawing when I’d gone past. Just nearby, his Wellingtons were lying fallen on their sides, his football socks peeking out of the tops.

Tommy jumped back onto the settee, nursing his big toe.

‘Sorry my feet poo a bit. I took everything off without realising. I think I’ve cut myself now. Kath, do you want to see these? Ruth looked at them last week, so I’ve been meaning to show you ever since. No one’s seen them apart from Ruth. Have a look, Kath.’

That was when I first saw his animals. When he’d told me about them in Norfolk, I’d seen in my mind scaled-down versions of the sort of pictures we’d done when we were small. So I was taken aback at how densely detailed each one was. In fact, it took a moment to see they were animals at all. The first impression was like one you’d get if you took the back off a radio set: tiny canals, weaving tendons, miniature screws and wheels were all drawn with obsessive precision, and only when you held the page away could you see it was some kind of armadillo, say, or a bird.

‘It’s my second book,’ Tommy said. ‘There’s no way anyone’s seeing the first one! It took me a while to get going.’

He was lying back on the settee now, tugging a sock over his foot and trying to sound casual, but I knew he was anxious for my reaction. Even so, for some time, I didn’t come up with wholehearted praise. Maybe it was partly my worry that any artwork was liable to get him into trouble all over again. But also, what I was looking at was so different from anything the guardians had taught us to do at Hailsham, I didn’t know how to judge it. I did say something like:

‘God, Tommy, these must take so much concentration. I’m surprised you can see well enough in here to do all this tiny stuff.’ And then, as I flicked through the pages, perhaps because I was still struggling to find the right thing to say, I came out with: ‘I wonder what Madame would say if she saw these.’

I’d said it in a jokey tone, and Tommy responded with a little snigger, but then there was something hanging in the air that hadn’t been there before. I went on turning the pages of the notebook – it was about a quarter full – not looking up at him, wishing I’d never brought up Madame. Finally I heard him say:

‘I suppose I’ll have to get a lot better before she gets to see any of it.’

I wasn’t sure if this was a cue for me to say how good the drawings were, but by this time, I was becoming genuinely drawn to these fantastical creatures in front of me. For all their busy, metallic features, there was something sweet, even vulnerable about each of them. I remembered him telling me, in Norfolk, that he worried, even as he created them, how they'd protect themselves or be able to reach and fetch things, and looking at them now, I could feel the same sort of concerns. Even so, for some reason I couldn't fathom, something continued to stop me coming out with praise. Then Tommy said:

'Anyway, it's not only because of all that I'm doing the animals. I just like doing them. I was wondering, Kath, if I should go on keeping it secret. I was thinking, maybe there's no harm in people knowing I do these. Hannah still does her watercolours, a lot of the veterans do stuff. I don't mean I'm going to go round showing everyone exactly. But I was thinking, well, there's no reason why I should keep it all secret any more.'

At last I was able to look up at him and say with some conviction: 'Tommy, there's no reason, no reason at all. These are good. Really, really good. In fact, if that's why you're hiding in here now, it's really daft.'

He didn't say anything in response, but a kind of smirk appeared over his face, like he was enjoying a joke with himself, and I knew how happy I'd made him. I don't think we spoke much more to each other after that. I think before long he got his Wellingtons on, and we both left the goosehouse. As I say, that was about the only time Tommy and I touched directly on his theory that spring.

Then the summer came, and the one year point from when we'd first arrived. A batch of new students turned up in a minibus, much as we'd done, but none of them were from Hailsham. This was in some ways a relief: I think we'd all been getting anxious about how a fresh lot of Hailsham students might complicate things. But for me at least, this non-appearance of Hailsham students just added to a feeling that Hailsham was now far away in the past, and that the ties binding our old crowd were fraying. It wasn't just that people like Hannah were always talking about following Alice's example and starting their training; others, like Laura, had found boyfriends who weren't Hailsham and you could almost forget they'd ever had much to do with us.

And then there was the way Ruth kept pretending to forget things about Hailsham. Okay, these were mostly trivial things, but I got more and more irritated with her. There was the time, for instance, we were sitting around the kitchen table after a long breakfast, Ruth, me and a few veterans. One of the veterans had been talking about how eating cheese late at night always disturbed your sleep, and I'd turned to Ruth to say something like: 'You remember how Miss Geraldine always used to tell us that?' It was just a casual aside, and all it needed was for Ruth to smile or nod. But she made a point of staring back at me blankly, like she didn't have the faintest what I was talking about. Only when I said to the veterans, by way of explanation: 'One of our guardians,' did Ruth give a frowning nod, as though she'd just that moment remembered.

I let her get away with it that time. But there was another occasion when I didn't, that evening we were sitting out in the ruined bus shelter. I got angry then because it was one thing to play this game in front of veterans; quite another when it was just the two of us, in the middle of a serious talk. I'd referred, just in passing, to the fact that at Hailsham, the short-cut down to the pond through the rhubarb patch was out of bounds. When she put on her puzzled look, I abandoned whatever point I'd been trying to make and said: 'Ruth, there's no way you've forgotten. So don't give me that.'

Perhaps if I hadn't pulled her up so sharply - perhaps if I'd just made a joke of it and carried on - she'd have seen how absurd it was and laughed. But because I'd snapped at her, Ruth glared back and said:

'What does it matter anyway? What's the rhubarb patch got to do with any of this? Just get on with what you were saying. '

It was getting late, the summer evening was fading, and the old bus shelter felt musty and damp after a recent thunderstorm. So I didn't have the head to go into why it mattered so much. And though I did just drop it and carry on with the discussion we'd been having, the atmosphere had gone chilly, and could hardly have helped us get through the difficult matter in hand.

But to explain what we were talking about that evening, I'll have to go back a little bit. In fact, I'll have to go back several weeks, to the earlier part of the summer. I'd been having a relationship with one of the veterans, a boy called Lenny, which, to be honest, had been mainly about the sex. But then he'd suddenly opted to start his training and left. This unsettled me a little, and Ruth had been great about it, watching over me without seeming to make a fuss, always ready to cheer me up if I seemed gloomy. She also kept doing little favours for me, like making me sandwiches, or taking on parts of my cleaning rota.

Then about a fortnight after Lenny had gone, the two of us were sitting in my attic room some time after midnight chatting over mugs of tea, and Ruth got me really laughing about Lenny. He hadn't been such a bad guy, but once I'd started telling Ruth some of the more intimate things about him, it did seem like everything to do with him was hilarious, and we just kept laughing and laughing. Then at one point Ruth was running a finger up and down the cassettes stacked in little piles along my skirting board. She was doing this in an absent-minded sort of way while she kept laughing, but afterwards, I went through a spell of suspecting it hadn't been by chance at all; that she'd noticed it there maybe days before, perhaps even examined it to make sure, then had waited for the best time to 'find' it. Years later, I gently hinted this to Ruth, and she didn't seem to know what I was talking about, so maybe I was wrong. Anyway, there we were, laughing and laughing each time I came out with another detail about poor Lenny, and then suddenly it was like a plug had been pulled out. There was Ruth, lying on her side across my rug, peering at the spines of the cassettes in the low light, and then the Judy Bridgewater tape was in her hands. After what seemed an eternity, she said:

‘So how long have you had this again?’

I told her, as neutrally as I could, about how Tommy and I had come across it that day while she’d been gone with the others. She went on examining it, then said:

‘So Tommy found it for you.’

‘No. I found it. I saw it first.’

‘Neither of you told me.’ She shrugged. ‘At least, if you did, I never heard.’

‘The Norfolk thing was true,’ I said. ‘You know, about it being the lost corner of England.’

It did flash through my mind Ruth would pretend not to remember this reference, but she nodded thoughtfully.

‘I should have remembered at the time,’ she said. ‘I might have found my red scarf then.’

We both laughed and the uneasiness seemed to pass. But there was something about the way Ruth put the tape back without discussing it any further that made me think it wasn’t finished with yet.

I don’t know if the way the conversation went after that was something controlled by Ruth in the light of her discovery, or if we were headed that way anyway, and that it was only afterwards Ruth realised she could do with it what she did. We went back to discussing Lenny, in particular a lot of stuff about how he had sex, and we were laughing away again. At that point, I think I was just relieved she’d finally found the tape and not made a huge scene about it, and so maybe I wasn't being as careful as I might have been. Because before long, we'd drifted from laughing about Lenny to laughing about Tommy. At first it had all felt good-natured enough, like we were just being affectionate towards him. But then we were laughing about his animals.

As I say, I've never been sure whether or not Ruth deliberately moved things round to this. To be fair, I can't even say for certain she was the one who first mentioned the animals. And once we started, I was laughing just as much as she was - about how one of them looked like it was wearing underpants, how another had to have been inspired by a squashed hedgehog. I suppose I should have said in there somewhere that the animals were good, that he'd done really well to have got where he had with them. But I didn't. That was partly because of the tape; and maybe, if I have to be honest, because I was pleased by the notion that Ruth wasn't taking the animals seriously, and everything that implied. I think when we eventually broke up for the night, we felt as close as we'd ever done. She touched my cheek on her way out, saying: 'It's really good the way you always keep your spirits up, Kathy.'

So I wasn't prepared at all for what happened at the churchyard several days later. Ruth had discovered that summer a lovely old church about half a mile from the Cottages, which had behind it rambling grounds with very old gravestones leaning in the grass. Everything was overgrown, but it was really peaceful and Ruth had taken to doing a lot of her reading there, near the back railings, on a bench under a big willow. I hadn't at first been too keen on this development, remembering how the previous summer we'd all sat around together in the grass right outside the Cottages. All the same, if I was headed that way on one of my walks, and I knew Ruth was likely to be there, I'd find myself going through the low wooden gate and along the overgrown path past the gravestones. On that afternoon, it was warm and still, and I'd come down the path in a dreamy mood, reading off names on the stones, when I saw not only Ruth, but Tommy on the bench under the willow.

Ruth was actually sitting on the bench, while Tommy was standing with one foot up on its rusty armrest, doing a kind of stretching exercise as they talked. It didn't look like they were having any big conversation and I didn't hesitate to go up to them. Maybe I should have picked up something in the way they greeted me, but I'm sure there wasn't anything obvious. I had some gossip I was dying to tell them – something about one of the newcomers – and so for a while it was just me blabbing on while they nodded and asked the odd question. It was some time before it occurred to me something wasn't right, and even then, when I paused and asked: 'Did I interrupt something here?' it was in a jokey sort of way.

But then Ruth said: 'Tommy's been telling me about his big theory. He says he's already told you. Ages ago. But now, very kindly, he's allowing me to share in it too.'

Tommy gave a sigh and was about to say something, but Ruth said in a mock whisper: 'Tommy's big Gallery theory!'

Then they were both looking at me, like I was now in charge of everything and it was up to me what happened next.

'It's not a bad theory,' I said. 'It might be right, I don't know. What do you think, Ruth?'

'I had to really dig it out of Sweet Boy here. Not very keen at all on letting me in on it, were you, sweetie gums? It was only when I kept pressing him to tell me what was behind all this art.'

'I'm not doing it just for that,' Tommy said sulkily. His foot was still up on the armrest and he kept on with his stretching. 'All I said was, if it was right, about the Gallery, then I could always try and put in the animals ...'

'Tommy, sweetie, don't make a fool of yourself in front of our friend. Do it to me, that's all right. But not in front of our dear Kathy. '

'I don't see why it's such a joke,' Tommy said. 'It's as good a theory as anyone else's. '

'It's not the theory people will find funny, sweetie gums. They might well buy the theory, right enough. But the idea that you'll swing it by showing Madame your little animals ...' Ruth smiled and shook her head.

Tommy said nothing and continued with his stretching. I wanted to come to his defence and was trying to think of just the right thing that would make him feel better without making Ruth even more angry. But that was when Ruth said what she did. It felt bad enough at the time, but I had no idea in the churchyard that day how far-reaching the repercussions would be. What she said was:

'It's not just me, sweetie. Kathy here finds your animals a complete hoot. '

My first instinct was to deny it, then just to laugh. But there was a real authority about the way Ruth had spoken, and the three of us knew each other well enough to know there had to be something behind her words. So in the end I stayed silent, while my mind searched back frantically, and with a cold horror, settled on that night up in my room with our mugs of tea. Then Ruth said:

'As long as people think you're doing those little creatures as a kind of joke, fine. But don't give out you're serious about it. Please. '

Tommy had stopped his stretching and was looking questioningly at me. Suddenly he was really child-like again, with no front whatsoever, and I could see too something dark and troubling gathering behind his eyes.

'Look, Tommy, you've got to understand,' Ruth went on. 'If Kathy and I have a good laugh about you, it doesn't really matter. Because that's just us. But please, let's not bring everyone else in on it.'

I've thought about those moments over and over. I should have found something to say. I could have just denied it, though Tommy probably wouldn't have believed me. And to try to explain the thing truthfully would have been too complicated. But I could have done something. I could have challenged Ruth, told her she was twisting things, that even if I might have laughed, it wasn't in the way she was implying. I could even have gone up to Tommy and hugged him, right there in front of Ruth. That's something that came to me years later, and probably wasn't a real option at the time, given the person I was, and the way the three of us were with each other. But that might have done it, where words would only have got us in deeper.

But I didn't say or do anything. It was partly, I suppose, that I was so floored by the fact that Ruth would come out with such a trick. I remember a huge tiredness coming over me, a kind of lethargy in the face of the tangled mess before me. It was like being given a maths problem when your brain's exhausted, and you know there's some far-off solution, but you can't work up the energy even to give it a go. Something in me just gave up. A voice went: 'All right, let him think the absolute worst. Let him think it, let him think it.' And I suppose I looked at him with resignation, with a face that said: 'Yes, it's true, what else did you expect?' And I can recall now, as fresh as anything, Tommy's own face, the anger receding for the moment, being replaced by an expression almost of wonder, like I was a rare butterfly he'd come across on a fence-post.

It wasn't that I thought I'd burst into tears or lose my temper or anything like that. But I decided just to turn and go. Even later that day, I realised this was a bad mistake. All I can say is that at the time what I feared more than anything was that one or the other of them would stalk off first, and I'd be left with the remaining one. I don't know why, but it didn't seem an option for more than one of us to storm off, and I wanted to make sure that one was me. So I turned and marched back the way I'd come, past the gravestones towards the low wooden gate, and for several minutes, I felt as though I'd triumphed; that now they'd been left in each other's company, they were suffering a fate they thoroughly deserved.

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN

As I've said, it wasn't until a long time afterwards – long after I'd left the Cottages – that I realised just how significant our little encounter in the churchyard had been. I was upset at the time, yes. But I didn't believe it to be anything so different from other tiffs we'd had. It never occurred to me that our lives, until then so closely interwoven, could unravel and separate over a thing like that.

But the fact was, I suppose, there were powerful tides tugging us apart by then, and it only needed something like that to finish the task. If we'd understood that back then – who knows? – maybe we'd have kept a tighter hold of one another.

For one thing, more and more students were going off to be carers, and among our old Hailsham crowd, there was a growing feeling this was the natural course to follow. We still had our essays to finish, but it was well known we didn't really have to finish them if we chose to start our training. In our early days at the Cottages, the idea of not finishing our essays would have been unthinkable. But the more distant Hailsham grew, the less important the essays seemed. I had this idea at the time – and I was probably right – that if our sense of the essays being important was allowed to seep away, then so too would whatever bound us together as Hailsham students. That's why I tried for a while to keep going our enthusiasm for all the reading and note-taking. But with no reason to suppose we'd ever see our guardians again, and with so many students moving on, it soon began to feel like a lost cause.

Anyway, in the days after that talk in the churchyard, I did what I could to put it behind us. I behaved towards both Tommy and Ruth as though nothing special had occurred, and they did much the same. But there was always something there now, and it wasn't just between me and them. Though they still made a show of being a couple - they still did the punching-on-the-arm thing when they parted - I knew them well enough to see they'd grown quite distant from each other.

Of course I felt bad about it all, especially about Tommy's animals. But it wasn't as simple any more as going to him and saying sorry and explaining how things really were. A few years earlier, even six months earlier, it might have worked out that way. Tommy and I would have talked it over and sorted it out. But somehow, by that second summer, things were different. Maybe it was because of this relationship with Lenny, I don't know. Anyway, talking to Tommy wasn't so easy any more. On the surface, at least, it was much like before, but we never mentioned the animals or what had happened in the churchyard.

So that was what had been happening just before I had that conversation with Ruth in the old bus shelter, when I got so annoyed with her for pretending to forget about the rhubarb patch at Hailsham. Like I said, I'd probably not have got nearly so cross if it hadn't come up in the middle of such a serious conversation. Okay, we'd got through a lot of the meat of it by then, but even so, even if we were just easing off and chatting by that point, that was still all part of our trying to sort things with each other, and there was no room for any pretend stuff like that.

What had happened was this. Although something had come between me and Tommy, it hadn't quite got like that with Ruth - or at least that's what I'd thought - and I'd decided it was time I talked with her about what had happened in the churchyard. We'd just had one of those summer days of rain and thunderstorms, and we'd been cooped up indoors despite the humidity. So when it appeared to clear for the evening, with a nice pink sunset, I suggested to Ruth we get a bit of air. There was a steep footpath I'd discovered leading up along the edge of the valley and just where it came out onto the road was an old bus shelter. The buses had stopped coming ages ago, the bus stop sign had been taken away, and on the wall at the back of the shelter, there was left only the frame of what must have once been a glassed-in notice displaying all the bus times. But the shelter itself – which was like a lovingly constructed wooden hut with one side open to the fields going down the valleyside – was still standing, and even had its bench intact. So that's where Ruth and I were sitting to get our breath back, looking at the cobwebs up on the rafters and the summer evening outside. Then I said something like:

‘You know, Ruth, we should try and sort it out, what happened the other day.’

I'd made my voice conciliatory, and Ruth responded. She said immediately how daft it was, the three of us having rows over the most stupid things. She brought up other times we'd rowed and we laughed a bit about them. But I didn't really want Ruth just to bury the thing like that, so I said, still in the least challenging voice I could:

‘Ruth, you know, I think sometimes, when you're in a couple, you don't see things as clearly as maybe someone can from the outside. Just sometimes.’

She nodded. ‘That's probably right.’

‘I don't want to interfere. But sometimes, just lately, I think Tommy's been quite upset. You know. About certain things you've said or done.’

I was worried Ruth would get angry, but she nodded and sighed. ‘I think you're right,’ she said in the end. ‘I've been thinking about it a lot too.’

‘Then maybe I shouldn't have brought it up. I should have known you'd see what was happening. It's not my business really.’

‘But it is, Kathy. You’re really one of us, and so it’s always your business. You’re right, it hasn’t been good. I know what you mean. That stuff the other day, about his animals. That wasn’t good. I told him I was sorry about that.’

‘I’m glad you talked it over. I didn’t know if you had.’

Ruth had been picking at some moulding flakes of wood on the bench beside her, and for a moment she seemed completely absorbed in this task. Then she said:

‘Look, Kathy, it’s good we’re talking now about Tommy. I’ve been wanting to tell you something, but I’ve never quite known how to say it, or when, really. Kathy, promise you won’t be too cross with me.’

I looked at her and said: ‘As long as it’s not about those T-shirts again.’

‘No, seriously. Promise you won’t get too cross. Because I’ve got to tell you this. I wouldn’t forgive myself if I kept quiet much longer.’

‘Okay, what is it?’

‘Kathy, I’ve been thinking this for some time. You’re no fool, and you can see that maybe me and Tommy, we might not be a couple for ever. That’s no tragedy. We were right for each other once. Whether we always will be, that’s anyone’s guess. And now there’s all this talk, about couples getting deferrals if they can prove, you know, that they’re really right. Okay, look, what I wanted to say, Kathy, is this. It’d be completely natural if you’d thought about, you know, what would happen if me and Tommy decided we shouldn’t be together any more. We’re not about to split, don’t get me wrong. But I’d think it was completely normal if you at least wondered about it. Well, Kathy, what you have to realise is that Tommy doesn’t see you like that. He really, really likes you, he thinks you’re really great. But I know he doesn’t see you like, you know, a proper girlfriend. Besides ...' Ruth paused, then sighed. 'Besides, you know how Tommy is. He can be fussy.'

I stared at her. 'What do you mean?'

'You must know what I mean. Tommy doesn't like girls who've been with ... well, you know, with this person and that. It's just a thing he has. I'm sorry, Kathy, but it wouldn't be right not to have told you.'

I thought about it, then said: 'It's always good to know these things.'

I felt Ruth touch my arm. 'I knew you'd take it the right way. What you've got to understand, though, is that he thinks the world of you. He really does.'

I wanted to change the subject, but for the moment my mind was a blank. I suppose Ruth must have picked up on this, because she stretched out her arms and did a kind of yawn, saying:

'If I ever learn to drive a car, I'd take us all on a trip to some wild place. Dartmoor, say. The three of us, maybe Laura and Hannah too. I'd love to see all the bogs and stuff.'

We spent the next several minutes talking about what we'd do on a trip like that if we ever went on one. I asked where we'd stay, and Ruth said we could borrow a big tent. I pointed out the wind could get really fierce in places like that and our tent could easily blow away in the night. None of this was that serious. But it was around here I remembered the time back at Hailsham, when we'd still been Juniors and we were having a picnic by the pond with Miss Geraldine. James B. had been sent to the main house to fetch the cake we'd all baked earlier, but as he was carrying it back, a strong gust of wind had taken off the whole top layer of sponge, tossing it into the rhubarb leaves. Ruth said she could only vaguely remember the incident, and I'd said, trying to clinch it for her memory:

'The thing was, he got into trouble because that proved he'd been coming down through the rhubarb patch.'

And that was when Ruth looked at me and said: 'Why? What was wrong with that?'

It was just the way she said it, suddenly so false even an onlooker, if there'd been one, would have seen through it. I sighed with irritation and said:

'Ruth, don't give me that. There's no way you've forgotten. You know that route was out of bounds.'

Maybe it was a bit sharp, the way I said it. Anyway, Ruth didn't back down. She continued pretending to remember nothing, and I got all the more irritated. And that was when she said:

'What does it matter anyway? What's the rhubarb patch got to do with anything? Just get on with what you were saying.'

After that I think we went back to talking in a more or less friendly way, and then before long we were making our way down the footpath in the half-light back to the Cottages. But the atmosphere never quite righted itself, and when we said our goodnights in front of the Black Barn, we parted without our usual little touches on the arms and shoulders.

It wasn't long after that I made my decision, and once I'd made it, I never wavered. I just got up one morning and told Keffers I wanted to start my training to become a carer. It was surprisingly easy. He was walking across the yard, his Wellingtons covered in mud, grumbling to himself and holding a piece of piping. I went up and told him, and he just looked at me like I'd bothered him about more firewood. Then he mumbled something about coming to see him later that afternoon to go through the forms. It was that easy.

It took a little while after that, of course, but the whole thing had been set in motion, and I was suddenly looking at everything – the Cottages, everybody there – in a different light. I was now one of the ones leaving, and soon enough, everyone knew it. Maybe Ruth thought we'd be spending hours talking about my future; maybe she thought she'd have a big influence on whether or not I changed my mind. But I kept a certain distance from her, just as I did from Tommy. We didn't really talk properly again at the Cottages, and before I knew it, I was saying my goodbyes.

PART THREE

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN

For the most part being a carer's suited me fine. You could even say it's brought the best out of me. But some people just aren't cut out for it, and for them the whole thing becomes a real struggle. They might start off positively enough, but then comes all that time spent so close to the pain and the worry. And sooner or later a donor doesn't make it, even though, say, it's only the second donation and no one anticipated complications. When a donor completes like that, out of the blue, it doesn't make much difference what the nurses say to you afterwards, and neither does that letter saying how they're sure you did all you could and to keep up the good work. For a while at least, you're demoralised. Some of us learn pretty quick how to deal with it. But others - like Laura, say - they never do.

Then there's the solitude. You grow up surrounded by crowds of people, that's all you've ever known, and suddenly you're a carer. You spend hour after hour, on your own, driving across the country, centre to centre, hospital to hospital, sleeping in overnights, no one to talk to about your worries, no one to have a laugh with. Just now and again you run into a student you know - a carer or donor you recognise from the old days - but there's never much time. You're always in a rush, or else you're too exhausted to have a proper conversation. Soon enough, the long hours, the travelling, the broken sleep have all crept into your being and become part of you, so everyone can see it, in your posture, your gaze, the way you move and talk.

I don't claim I've been immune to all of this, but I've learnt to live with it. Some carers, though, their whole attitude lets them down. A lot of them, you can tell, are just going through the motions, waiting for the day they're told they can stop and become donors. It really gets me, too, the way so many of them 'shrink' the moment they step inside a hospital. They don't know what to say to the whitecoats, they can't make themselves speak up on behalf of their donor. No wonder they end up feeling frustrated and blaming themselves when things go wrong. I try not to make a nuisance of myself, but I've figured out how to get my voice heard when I have to. And when things go badly, of course I'm upset, but at least I can feel I've done all I could and keep things in perspective.

Even the solitude, I've actually grown to quite like. That's not to say I'm not looking forward to a bit more companionship come the end of the year when I'm finished with all of this. But I do like the feeling of getting into my little car, knowing for the next couple of hours I'll have only the roads, the big grey sky and my daydreams for company. And if I'm in a town somewhere with several minutes to kill, I'll enjoy myself wandering about looking in the shop windows. Here in my bedsit, I've got these four desk-lamps, each a different colour, but all the same design - they have these ribbed necks you can bend whichever way you want. So I might go looking for a shop with another lamp like that in its window - not to buy, but just to compare with my ones at home.

Sometimes I get so immersed in my own company, if I unexpectedly run into someone I know, it's a bit of a shock and takes me a while to adjust. That's the way it was the morning I was walking across the windswept car park of the service station and spotted Laura, sitting behind the wheel of one of the parked cars, looking vacantly towards the motorway. I was still some way away, and just for a second, even though we hadn't met since the Cottages seven years before, I was tempted to ignore her and keep walking. An odd reaction, I know, considering she'd been one of my closest friends. As I say, it may have been partly because I didn't like being bumped out of my daydreams. But also, I suppose, when I saw Laura slumped in her car like that, I saw immediately she'd become one of these carers I've just been describing, and a part of me just didn't want to find out much more about it.

But of course I did go to her. There was a chilly wind blowing against me as I walked over to her hatchback, parked away from the other vehicles. Laura was wearing a shapeless blue anorak, and her hair - a lot shorter than before - was sticking to her forehead. When I tapped on her window, she didn't start, or even look surprised to see me after all that time. It was almost like she'd been sitting there waiting, if not for me precisely, then for someone more or less like me from the old days. And now I'd shown up, her first thought seemed to be: 'At last!' Because I could see her shoulders move in a kind of sigh, then without further ado, she reached over to open the door for me.

We talked for about twenty minutes: I didn't leave until the last possible moment. A lot of it was about her, how exhausted she'd been, how difficult one of her donors was, how much she loathed this nurse or that doctor. I waited to see a flash of the old Laura, with the mischievous grin and inevitable wisecrack, but none of that came. She talked faster than she used to, and although she seemed pleased to see me, I sometimes got the impression it wouldn't have mattered much if it wasn't me, but someone else, so long as she got to talk.

Maybe we both felt there was something dangerous about bringing up the old days, because for ages we avoided any mention of them. In the end, though, we found ourselves talking about Ruth, who Laura had run into at a clinic a few years earlier, when Ruth was still a carer. I began quizzing her about how Ruth had been, but she was so unforthcoming, in the end I said to her:

'Look, you must have talked about something.'

Laura let out a long sigh. 'You know how it gets,' she said. 'We were both in a hurry.' Then she added: 'Anyway, we hadn't parted the best of friends, back at the Cottages. So maybe we weren't so delighted to see one another.'

'I didn't realise you'd fallen out with her too,' I said.

She shrugged. 'It wasn't any big deal. You remember the way she was back then. If anything, after you left, she got worse. You know, always telling everyone what to do. So I was keeping out of her way, that was all. We never had a big fight or anything. So you haven't seen her since then?'

'No. Funny, but I've never even glimpsed her.'

'Yeah, it's funny. You'd think we'd all run into each other much more. I've seen Hannah a few times. And Michael H. too.' Then she said: 'I heard this rumour, that Ruth had a really bad first donation. Just a rumour, but I heard it more than once.'

'I heard that too,' I said.

'Poor Ruth.'

We were quiet for a moment. Then Laura asked: 'Is it right, Kathy? That they let you choose your donors now?'

She'd not asked in the accusing way people do sometimes, so I nodded and said: 'Not every time. But I did well with a few donors, so yeah, I get to have a say every now and then.'

'If you can choose,' Laura said, 'why don't you become Ruth's carer?'

I shrugged. 'I've thought about it. But I'm not sure it's such a great idea.'

Laura looked puzzled. 'But you and Ruth, you were so close.'

'Yeah, I suppose so. But like with you, Laura. She and I weren't such great friends by the end.'

‘Oh, but that was back then. She’s had a bad time. And I’ve heard she’s had trouble with her carers too. They’ve had to change them around a lot for her.’

‘Not surprising really,’ I said. ‘Can you imagine? Being Ruth’s carer?’

Laura laughed, and for a second a look came into her eyes that made me think she was finally going to come out with a crack. But then the light died, and she just went on sitting there looking tired.

We talked a little more about Laura’s problems – in particular about a certain nursing sister who seemed to have it in for her. Then it was time for me to go, and I reached for the door and was telling her we’d have to talk more the next time we met. But we were both of us by then acutely aware of something we’d not yet mentioned, and I think we both sensed there’d be something wrong about us parting like that. In fact, I’m pretty sure now, at that moment, our minds were running along exactly the same lines. Then she said:

I turned in my seat to face her again. ‘Yeah, it’s really strange,’ I said. ‘I can’t really believe it’s not there any more.’

‘It’s so weird,’ Laura said. ‘I suppose it shouldn’t make any difference to me now. But somehow it does.’

‘I know what you mean.’

It was that exchange, when we finally mentioned the closing of Hailsham, that suddenly brought us close again, and we hugged, quite spontaneously, not so much to comfort one another, but as a way of affirming Hailsham, the fact that it was still there in both our memories. Then I had to hurry off to my own car.

I’d first started hearing rumours about Hailsham closing a year or so before that meeting with Laura in the car park.

I'd be talking to a donor or a carer and they'd bring it up in passing, like they expected me to know all about it. 'You were at Hailsham, weren't you? So is it really true?' That sort of thing. Then one day I was coming out of a clinic in Suffolk and ran into Roger C., who'd been in the year below, and he told me with complete certainty it was about to happen. Hailsham was going to close any day and there were plans to sell the house and grounds to a hotel chain. I remember my first response when he told me this. I said: 'But what'll happen to all the students?' Roger obviously thought I'd meant the ones still there, the little ones dependent on their guardians, and he put on a troubled face and began speculating how they'd have to be transferred to other houses around the country, even though some of these would be a far cry from Hailsham. But of course, that wasn't what I'd meant. I'd meant us, all the students who'd grown up with me and were now spread across the country, carers and donors, all separated now but still somehow linked by the place we'd come from.

That same night, trying to get to sleep in an overnight, I kept thinking about something that had happened to me a few days earlier. I'd been in a seaside town in North Wales. It had been raining hard all morning, but after lunch, it had stopped and the sun had come out a bit. I was walking back to where I'd left my car, along one of those long straight seafront roads. There was hardly anyone else about, so I could see an unbroken line of wet paving stones stretching on in front of me. Then after a while a van pulled up, maybe thirty yards ahead of me, and a man got out dressed as a clown. He opened the back of the van and took out a bunch of helium balloons, about a dozen of them, and for a moment, he was holding the balloons in one hand, while he bent down and rummaged about in his vehicle with the other. As I came closer, I could see the balloons had faces and shaped ears, and they looked like a little tribe, bobbing in the air above their owner, waiting for him.

Then the clown straightened, closed up his van and started walking, in the same direction I was walking, several paces ahead of me, a small suitcase in one hand, the balloons in the other. The seafront continued long and straight, and I was walking behind him for what seemed like ages. Sometimes I felt awkward about it, and I even thought the clown might turn and say something. But since that was the way I had to go, there wasn't much else I could do. So we just kept walking, the clown and me, on and on along the deserted pavement still wet from the morning, and all the time the balloons were bumping and grinning down at me. Every so often, I could see the man's fist, where all the balloon strings converged, and I could see he had them securely twisted together and in a tight grip. Even so, I kept worrying that one of the strings would come unravelled and a single balloon would sail off up into that cloudy sky.

Lying awake that night after what Roger had told me, I kept seeing those balloons again. I thought about Hailsham closing, and how it was like someone coming along with a pair of shears and snipping the balloon strings just where they entwined above the man's fist. Once that happened, there'd be no real sense in which those balloons belonged with each other any more. When he was telling me the news about Hailsham, Roger had made a remark, saying he supposed it wouldn't make so much difference to the likes of us any more. And in certain ways, he might have been right. But it was unnerving, to think things weren't still going on back there, just as always; that people like Miss Geraldine, say, weren't leading groups of Juniors around the North Playing Field.

In the months after that talk with Roger, I kept thinking about it a lot, about Hailsham closing and all the implications. And it started to dawn on me, I suppose, that a lot of things I'd always assumed I'd plenty of time to get round to doing, I might now have to act on pretty soon or else let them go forever. It's not that I started to panic, exactly. But it definitely felt like Hailsham's going away had shifted everything around us. That's why what Laura said to me that day, about my becoming Ruth's carer, had such an impact on me, even though I'd stone-walled her at the time. It was almost like a part of me had already made that decision, and Laura's words had simply pulled away a veil that had been covering it over.

I first turned up at Ruth's recovery centre in Dover - the modern one with the white tiled walls - just a few weeks after that talk with Laura. It had been around two months since Ruth's first donation - which, as Laura had said, hadn't gone at all well. When I came into her room, she was sitting on the edge of her bed in her night-dress and gave me a big smile. She got up to give me a hug, but almost immediately sat down again. She told me I was looking better than ever, and that my hair suited me really well. I said nice things about her too, and for the next half hour or so, I think we were genuinely delighted to be with each other. We talked about all kinds of things - Hailsham, the Cottages, what we'd been doing since then - and it felt like we could talk and talk forever. In other words, it was a really encouraging start - better than I'd dared expect.

Even so, that first time, we didn't say anything about the way we'd parted. Maybe if we'd tackled it at the start, things would have played out differently, who knows? As it was, we just skipped over it, and once we'd been talking for a while, it was as if we'd agreed to pretend none of that had ever happened.

That may have been fine as far as that first meeting was concerned. But once I officially became her carer, and I began to see her regularly, the sense of something not being right grew stronger and stronger. I developed a routine of coming in three or four times a week in the late afternoon, with mineral water and a packet of her favourite biscuits, and it should have been wonderful, but at the beginning it was anything but that. We'd start talking about something, something completely innocent, and for no obvious reason we'd come to a halt. Or if we did manage to keep up a conversation, the longer we went on, the more stilted and guarded it became.

Then one afternoon, I was coming down her corridor to see her and heard someone in the shower room opposite her door. I guessed it was Ruth in there, so I let myself into her room, and was standing waiting for her, looking at the view from her window over all the rooftops. About five minutes passed, then she came in wrapped in a towel. Now to be fair, she wasn't expecting me for another hour, and I suppose we all feel a bit vulnerable after a shower with just a towel on. Even so, the look of alarm that went across her face took me aback. I have to explain this a bit. Of course, I was expecting her to be a little surprised. But the thing was, after she'd taken it in and seen it was me, there was a clear second, maybe more, when she went on looking at me if not with fear, then with a real wariness. It was like she'd been waiting and waiting for me to do something to her, and she thought the time had now come.

The look was gone the next instant and we just carried on as usual, but that incident gave us both a jolt. It made me realise Ruth didn't trust me, and for all I know, maybe she herself hadn't fully realised it until that moment. In any case, after that day, the atmosphere got even worse. It was like we'd let something out into the open, and far from clearing the air, it had made us more aware than ever of everything that had come between us. It got to the stage where before I went in to see her, I'd sit in my car for several minutes working myself up for the ordeal. After one particular session, when we did all the checks on her in stony silence, then afterwards just sat there in more silence, I was about ready to report to them that it hadn't worked out, that I should stop being Ruth's carer. But then everything changed again, and that was because of the boat.

God knows how these things work. Sometimes it's a particular joke, sometimes a rumour. It travels from centre to centre, right the way across the country in a matter of days, and suddenly every donor's talking about it. Well, this time it was to do with this boat. I'd first heard about it from a couple of my donors up in North Wales. Then a few days later, Ruth too started telling me about it. I was just relieved we'd found something to talk about, and encouraged her to go on.

'This boy on the next floor,' she said. 'His carer's actually been to see it. He says it's not far from the road, so anyone can get to it without much bother. This boat, it's just sitting there, stranded in the marshes.'

'How did it get there?' I asked.

'How do I know? Maybe they wanted to dump it, whoever owned it. Or maybe sometime, when everything was flooded, it just drifted in and got itself beached. Who knows? It's supposed to be this old fishing boat. With a little cabin for a couple of fishermen to squeeze into when it's stormy.'

The next few times I came to see her, she always managed to bring up the boat again. Then one afternoon, when she began telling me how one of the other donors at the centre had been taken by her carer to see it, I said to her:

'Look, it's not particularly near, you know. It would take an hour, maybe an hour and a half to drive.'

'I wasn't suggesting anything. I know you've got other donors to worry about.'

'But you'd like to see it. You'd like to see this boat, wouldn't you, Ruth?'

'I suppose so. I suppose I would. You spend day after day in this place. Yeah, it'd be good to see something like that.'

‘And do you suppose’ - I said this gently, without a hint of sarcasm - ‘if we’re driving all that way, we should think about calling in on Tommy? Seeing his centre’s just down the road from where this boat’s meant to be?’

Ruth’s face didn’t show anything at first. ‘I suppose we could think about it,’ she said. Then she laughed and added:

‘Honest, Kathy, that wasn’t the only reason I’ve been going on about the boat. I do want to see it, for its own sake. All this time in and out of hospital. Then cooped up here. Things like that matter more than they once did. But all right, I did know. I knew Tommy was at the Kingsfield centre.’

‘Are you sure you want to see him?’

‘Yes,’ she said, no hesitation, looking straight at me.

‘Yes, I do.’ Then she said quietly: ‘I haven’t seen that boy for a long time. Not since the Cottages.’

Then, at last, we talked about Tommy. We didn’t go into things in a big way and I didn’t learn much I didn’t know already. But I think we both felt better we’d finally brought him up. Ruth told me how, by the time she left the Cottages the autumn after me, she and Tommy had more or less drifted apart.

‘Since we were going different places to do our training anyway,’ she said, ‘it didn’t seem worth it, to split up properly. So we just stayed together until I left.’

And at that stage, we didn’t say much more about it than that.

As for the trip out to see the boat, I neither agreed nor disagreed to it, that first time we discussed it. But over the next couple of weeks, Ruth kept bringing it up, and our plans somehow grew firmer, until in the end, I sent a message to Tommy’s carer through a contact, saying that unless we heard from Tommy telling us not to, we’d show up at the Kingsfield on a particular afternoon the following week.

CHAPTER NINETEEN

I'd hardly ever been to the Kingsfield in those days, so Ruth and I had to consult the map a number of times on the way and we still arrived several minutes late. It's not very well-appointed as recovery centres go, and if it wasn't for the associations it now has for me, it's not somewhere I'd look forward to visiting. It's out of the way and awkward to get to, and yet when you're there, there's no real sense of peace and quiet. You can always hear traffic on the big roads beyond the fencing, and there's a general feeling they never properly finished converting the place. A lot of the donors' rooms you can't get to with a wheelchair, or else they're too stuffy or too draughty. There aren't nearly enough bathrooms and the ones there are are hard to keep clean, get freezing in winter and are generally too far from the donors' rooms. The Kingsfield, in other words, falls way short of a place like Ruth's centre in Dover, with its gleaming tiles and double-glazed windows that seal at the twist of a handle.

Later on, after the Kingsfield became the familiar and precious place it did, I was in one of the admin buildings and came across a framed black-and-white photo of the place the way it was before it was converted, when it was still a holiday camp for ordinary families. The picture was probably taken in the late fifties or early sixties, and shows a big rectangular swimming pool with all these happy people - children, parents - splashing about having a great time. It's concrete all around the pool, but people have set up deck chairs and sun loungers, and they've got large parasols to keep them in the shade. When I first saw this, it took me a while to realise I was looking at what the donors now call 'the Square' - the place where you drive in when you first arrive at the centre. Of course, the pool's filled in now, but the outline's still there, and they've left standing at one end - an example of this unfinished atmosphere - the metal frame for the high diving board. It was only when I saw the photo it occurred to me what the frame was and why it was there, and today, each time I see it, I can't help picturing a swimmer taking a dive off the top only to crash into the cement.

I might not have easily recognised the Square in the photo, except for the white bunker-like two-storey buildings in the background, on all three visible sides of the pool area. That must have been where the families had their holiday apartments, and though I'd guess the interiors have changed a lot, the outsides look much the same. In some ways, I suppose, the Square today isn't so different to what the pool was back then. It's the social hub of the place, where donors come out of their rooms for a bit of air and a chat. There are a few wooden picnic benches around the Square, but - especially when the sun's too hot, or it's raining - the donors prefer to gather under the overhanging flat roof of the recreation hall at the far end behind the old diving board frame.

That afternoon Ruth and I went to the Kingsfield, it was overcast and a bit chilly, and as we drove into the Square it was deserted except for a group of six or seven shadowy figures underneath that roof. As I brought the car to a stop somewhere over the old pool - which of course I didn't know about then - one figure detached itself from the group and came towards us, and I saw it was Tommy. He had on a faded green track-suit top and looked about a stone heavier than when I'd last seen him.

Beside me Ruth, for a second, seemed to panic. 'What do we do?' she went. 'Do we get out? No, no, let's not get out. Don't move, don't move.'

I don't know what I'd been intending to do, but when Ruth said this, for some reason, without really thinking about it, I just stepped out of the car. Ruth stayed where she was, and that was why, when Tommy came up to us, his gaze fell on me and why it was me he hugged first. I could smell a faint odour of something medical on him which I couldn't identify. Then, though we hadn't yet said anything to each other, we both sensed Ruth watching us from the car and pulled away.

There was a lot of sky reflected in the windscreen, so I couldn't make her out very well. But I got the impression Ruth had on a serious, almost frozen look, like Tommy and I were people in a play she was watching. There was something odd about the look and it made me uneasy. Then Tommy was walking past me to the car. He opened a rear door, got into the back seat, and then it was my turn to watch them, inside the car, exchanging words, then polite little kisses on the cheeks.

Across the Square, the donors under the roof were also watching, and though I felt nothing hostile about them, I suddenly wanted to get out of there quickly. But I made myself take my time getting back into the car, so that Tommy and Ruth could have a little longer to themselves.

We began by driving through narrow, twisting lanes. Then we came out into open, featureless countryside and travelled on along a near-empty road. What I remember about that part of our trip to the boat was that for the first time in ages the sun started to shine weakly through the greyness; and whenever I glanced at Ruth beside me, she had on a quiet little smile. As for what we talked about, well, my memory is that we behaved much as if we'd been seeing each other regularly, and there was no need to talk about anything other than what we had immediately in front of us. I asked Tommy if he'd been to see the boat already, and he said no, he hadn't, but a lot of the other donors at the centre had. He'd had a few opportunities, but hadn't taken them.

'I wasn't not wanting to go,' he said, leaning forward from the back. 'I couldn't be bothered really. I was going to go once, with a couple of others and their carers, but then I got a bit of bleeding and couldn't go any more. That was ages ago now. I don't get any trouble like that any more.'

Then a little further on, as we continued across the empty countryside, Ruth turned right round in her seat until she was facing Tommy, and just kept looking at him. She still had on her little smile, but said nothing, and I could see in my mirror Tommy looking distinctly uncomfortable. He kept looking out of the window beside him, then back at her, then back out of the window again. After a while, without taking her gaze off him, Ruth started on a rambling anecdote about someone or other, a donor at her centre, someone we'd never heard of, and all the time she kept looking at Tommy, the gentle smile never leaving her face. Perhaps because I was getting bored by her anecdote, perhaps because I wanted to help Tommy out, I interrupted after a minute or so, saying:

'Yeah, okay, we don't need to hear every last thing about her.'

I said this without any malice, and really hadn't intended anything by it. But even before Ruth paused, almost as I was still speaking, Tommy made a sudden laughing noise, a kind of explosion, a noise I'd never heard him make before. And he said:

'That's exactly what I was about to say. I lost track of it a while ago.'

My eyes were on the road, so I wasn't sure if he'd addressed me or Ruth. In any case, Ruth stopped talking and slowly turned back in her seat until she was facing the front again. She didn't seem particularly upset, but the smile had gone, and her eyes looked far away, fixed somewhere on the sky ahead of us. But I have to be honest: at that instant I wasn't really thinking about Ruth. My heart had done a little leap, because in a single stroke, with that little laugh of agreement, it felt as though Tommy and I had come close together again after all the years.

I found the turning we needed around twenty minutes after we'd set off from the Kingsfield. We went down a narrow curving road shrouded by hedges, and parked beside a clump of sycamores. I led the way to where the woods began, but then, faced with three distinct paths through the trees, had to stop to consult the sheet of directions I'd brought with me. While I stood there trying to decipher the person's handwriting, I was suddenly conscious of Ruth and Tommy standing behind me, not talking, waiting almost like children to be told which way to go.

We entered the woods, and though it was pretty easy walking, I noticed Ruth's breath coming less and less easily. Tommy, by contrast, didn't seem to be experiencing any difficulty, though there was a hint of a limp in his gait. Then we came to a barbed wire fence, which was tilted and rusted, the wire itself yanked all over the place. When Ruth saw it, she came to an abrupt halt.

'Oh no,' she said, anxiously. Then she turned to me: 'You didn't say anything about this. You didn't say we had to get past barbed wire!'

'It's not going to be difficult,' I said. 'We can go under it. We just have to hold it for each other.'

But Ruth looked really upset and didn't move. And it was then, as she stood there, her shoulders rising and falling with her breathing, that Tommy seemed to become aware for the first time just how frail she was. Maybe he'd noticed before, and hadn't wanted to take it in. But now he stared at her for a good few seconds. Then I think what happened next - though of course I can't know for certain - was that the both of us, Tommy and I, we remembered what had happened in the car, when we'd more or less ganged up on her. And almost as an instinct, we both went to her. I took an arm, Tommy supported her elbow on the other side, and we began gently guiding her towards the fence.

I let go of Ruth only to pass through the fence myself. Then I held up the wire as high as I could, and Tommy and I both helped her through. It wasn't so difficult for her in the end: it was more a confidence thing, and with us there for support, she seemed to lose her fear of the fence. On the other side, she actually made a go of helping me hold up the wire for Tommy. He came through without any bother, and Ruth said to him:

'It's only bending down like that. I'm sometimes not so clever at it.'

Tommy was looking sheepish, and I wondered if he was embarrassed by what had just happened, or if he was remembering again our ganging up on Ruth in the car. He nodded towards the trees in front of us and said:

'I suppose it's through that way. Is that right, Kath?'

I glanced at my sheet and began to lead the way again. Further into the trees, it grew quite dark and the ground became more and more marshy.

'Hope we don't get lost,' I heard Ruth say to Tommy with a laugh, but I could see a clearing not far away. And now with time to reflect, I realised why I was so bothered by what had happened in the car. It wasn't simply that we'd ganged up on Ruth: it was the way she'd just taken it. In the old days, it was inconceivable she'd have let something like that happen without striking back. As this point sunk in, I paused on the path, waited for Ruth and Tommy to catch up, and put my arm around Ruth's shoulders.

This didn't seem so soppy; it just looked like carer stuff, because by now there was something uncertain about her walk, and I wondered if I'd badly underestimated how weak she still was. Her breathing was getting quite laboured, and as we walked together, she'd now and then lurch into me. But then we were through the trees and into the clearing, and we could see the boat.

Actually, we hadn't really stepped into a clearing: it was more that the thin woods we'd come through had ended, and now in front of us there was open marshland as far as we could see. The pale sky looked vast and you could see it reflected every so often in the patches of water breaking up the land. Not so long ago, the woods must have extended further, because you could see here and there ghostly dead trunks poking out of the soil, most of them broken off only a few feet up. And beyond the dead trunks, maybe sixty yards away, was the boat, sitting beached in the marshes under the weak sun.

'Oh, it's just like my friend said it was,' Ruth said. 'It's really beautiful.'

We were surrounded by silence and when we started to move towards the boat, you could hear the squelch under our shoes. Before long I noticed my feet sinking beneath the tufts of grass, and called out: 'Okay, this is as far as we can go.'

The other two, who were behind me, raised no objection, and when I glanced over my shoulder, I saw Tommy was again holding Ruth by the arm. It was clear, though, this was just to steady her. I took long strides to the nearest dead tree trunk, where the soil was firmer, and held onto it for balance. Following my example, Tommy and Ruth made their way to another tree trunk, hollow and more emaciated than mine, a short way behind to my left. They perched on either side of it and seemed to settle. Then we gazed at the beached boat. I could now see how its paint was cracking, and how the timber frames of the little cabin were crumbling away. It had once been painted a sky blue, but now looked almost white under the sky.

'I wonder how it got here,' I said. I'd raised my voice to let it get to the others and had expected an echo. But the sound was surprisingly close, like I was in a carpeted room.

Then I heard Tommy say behind me: 'Maybe this is what Hailsham looks like now. Do you think?'

‘Why would it look like this?’ Ruth sounded genuinely puzzled. ‘It wouldn’t turn into marshland just because it’s closed.’

‘That’s funny,’ Ruth said, ‘because I was having this dream the other morning. I was dreaming I was up in Room 14. I knew the whole place had been shut down, but there I was, in Room 14, and I was looking out of the window and everything outside was flooded. Just like a giant lake. And I could see rubbish floating by under my window, empty drinks cartons, everything. But there wasn’t any sense of panic or anything like that. It was nice and tranquil, just like it is here. I knew I wasn’t in any danger, that it was only like that because it had closed down.’

‘You know,’ Tommy said, ‘Meg B. was at our centre for a while. She’s left now, gone up north somewhere for her third donation. I never heard how she got on. Have either of you heard?’

I shook my head, and when I didn’t hear Ruth say anything, turned to look at her. At first I thought she was still staring at the boat, but then I saw her gaze was on the vapour trail of a plane in the far distance, climbing slowly into the sky. Then she said:

‘I’ll tell you something I heard. I heard about Chrissie. I heard she completed during her second donation.’

‘I heard that as well,’ said Tommy. ‘It must be right. I heard exactly the same. A shame. Only her second as well. Glad that didn’t happen to me.’

‘I think it happens much more than they ever tell us,’ Ruth said. ‘My carer over there. She probably knows that’s right. But she won't say.'

'There's no big conspiracy about it,' I said, turning back to the boat. 'Sometimes it happens. It was really sad about Chrissie. But that's not common. They're really careful these days.'

'I bet it happens much more than they tell us,' Ruth said again. 'That's one reason why they keep moving us around between donations.'

'I ran into Rodney once,' I said. 'It wasn't so long after Chrissie completed. I saw him in this clinic, up in North Wales. He was doing okay.'

'I bet he was cut up about Chrissie though,' said Ruth. Then to Tommy: 'They don't tell you the half of it, you see?'

'Actually,' I said, 'he wasn't too bad about it. He was sad, obviously. But he was okay. They hadn't seen each other for a couple of years anyway. He said he thought Chrissie wouldn't have minded too much. And I suppose he should know.'

'Why would he know?' Ruth said. 'How could he possibly know what Chrissie would have felt? What she would have wanted? It wasn't him on that table, trying to cling onto life. How would he know?'

This flash of anger was more like the old Ruth, and made me turn to her again. Maybe it was just the glare in her eyes, but she seemed to be looking back at me with a hard, stern expression.

'It can't be good,' Tommy said. 'Completing at the second donation. Can't be good.'

'I can't believe Rodney was okay about it,' Ruth said. 'You only spoke to him for a few minutes. How can you tell anything from that?'

‘Yeah,’ said Tommy, ‘but if like Kath says, they’d already split up ...’

‘That wouldn’t make any difference,’ Ruth cut in. ‘In some ways that might have made it worse.’

‘I’ve seen a lot of people in Rodney’s position,’ I said. ‘They do come to terms with it.’

‘How would you know?’ said Ruth. ‘How could you possibly know? You’re still a carer.’

‘I get to see a lot as a carer. An awful lot.’

‘She wouldn’t know, would she, Tommy? Not what it’s really like.’

For a moment we were both looking at Tommy, but he just went on gazing at the boat. Then he said:

‘There was this guy, at my centre. Always worried he wouldn’t make it past his second. Used to say he could feel it in his bones. But it all turned out fine. He’s just come through his third now, and he’s completely all right.’ He put up a hand to shield his eyes. ‘I wasn’t much good as a carer. Never learnt to drive even. I think that’s why the notice for my first came so early. I know it’s not supposed to work that way, but I reckon that’s what it was. Didn’t mind really. I’m a pretty good donor, but I was a lousy carer.’

No one spoke for a while. Then Ruth said, her voice quieter now:

‘I think I was a pretty decent carer. But five years felt about enough for me. I was like you, Tommy. I was pretty much ready when I became a donor. It felt right. After all, it’s what we’re supposed to be doing, isn’t it?’

I wasn’t sure if she expected me to respond to this. She hadn’t said it in any obviously leading way, and it’s perfectly possible this was a statement she’d come out with just out of habit – it was the sort of thing you hear donors say to each other all the time. When I turned to them again, Tommy still had his hand up to shade his eyes.

‘Pity we can’t go closer to the boat,’ he said. ‘One day when it’s drier, maybe we could come back.’

‘I’m glad to have seen it,’ Ruth said, softly. ‘It’s really nice. But I think I want to go back now. This wind’s quite chilly.’

‘At least we’ve seen it now,’ Tommy said.

We chatted much more freely on our walk back to the car than on the way out. Ruth and Tommy were comparing notes on their centres – the food, the towels, that kind of thing – and I was always part of the conversation because they kept asking me about other centres, if this or that was normal. Ruth’s walk was much steadier now and when we came to the fence, and I held up the wire, she hardly hesitated.

We got in the car, again with Tommy in the back, and for a while there was a perfectly okay feeling between us. Maybe, looking back, there was an atmosphere of something being held back, but it’s possible I’m only thinking that now because of what happened next.

The way it began, it was a bit like a repeat of earlier. We’d got back onto the long near-empty road, and Ruth made some remark about a poster we were passing. I don’t even remember the poster now, it was just one of those huge advertising images on the roadside. She made the remark almost to herself, obviously not meaning much by it. She said something like: ‘Oh my God, look at that one. You’d think they’d at least try to come up with something new.’

But Tommy said from the back: ‘Actually I quite like that one. It’s been in the newspapers as well. I think it’s got something.’

Maybe I was wanting that feeling again, of me and Tommy being brought close together. Because although the walk to the boat had been fine in itself, I was starting to feel that apart from our first embrace, and that moment in the car earlier on, Tommy and I hadn't really had much to do with each other. Anyway, I found myself saying:

'Actually, I like it too. It takes a lot more effort than you'd think, making up these posters.'

'That's right,' Tommy said. 'Someone told me it takes weeks and weeks putting something like that together. Months even. People sometimes work all night on them, over and over, until they're just right.'

'It's too easy,' I said, 'to criticise when you're just driving by.'

'Easiest thing in the world,' Tommy said.

Ruth said nothing, and kept looking at the empty road in front of us. Then I said:

'Since we're on the subject of posters. There was one I noticed on the way out. It should be coming up again pretty soon. It'll be on our side this time. It should come up any time now.'

'What's it of?' Tommy asked.

'You'll see. It'll be coming up soon.'

I glanced at Ruth beside me. There was no anger in her eyes, just a kind of wariness. There was even a sort of hope, I thought, that when the poster appeared, it would be perfectly innocuous - something that reminded us of Hailsham, something like that. I could see all of this in her face, the way it didn't quite settle on any one expression, but hovered tentatively. All the time, her gaze remained fixed in front of her.

I slowed down the car and pulled over, bumping up onto the rough grass verge.

‘Why are we stopping, Kath?’ Tommy asked.

‘Because you can see it best from here. Any nearer, we have to look up at it too much.’

I could hear Tommy shifting behind us, trying to get a better view. Ruth didn’t move, and I wasn’t even sure she was looking at the poster at all.

‘Okay, it’s not exactly the same,’ I said after a moment. ‘But it reminded me. Open-plan office, smart smiling people.’

Ruth stayed silent, but Tommy said from the back: ‘I get it. You mean, like that place we went to that time.’

‘Not only that,’ I said. ‘It’s a lot like that ad. The one we found on the ground. You remember, Ruth?’

‘I’m not sure I do,’ she said quietly.

‘Oh, come on. You remember. We found it in a magazine in some lane. Near a puddle. You were really taken by it. Don’t pretend you don’t remember.’

‘I think I do.’ Ruth’s voice was now almost a whisper. A lorry went past, making our car wobble and, for a few seconds, obscuring our view of the hoarding. Ruth bowed her head, as though she hoped the lorry had removed the image forever, and when we could see it clearly again, she didn’t raise her gaze.

‘It’s funny,’ I said, ‘remembering it all now. Remember how you used to go on about it? How you’d one day work in an office like that one?’

‘Oh yeah, that was why we went that day,’ Tommy said, like he’d only that second remembered. ‘When we went to Norfolk. We went to find your possible. Working in an office.’

‘Don’t you sometimes think,’ I said to Ruth, ‘you should have looked into it more? All right, you’d have been the first. The first one any of us would have heard of getting to do something like that. But you might have done it. Don’t you wonder sometimes, what might have happened if you’d tried?’

‘How could I have tried?’ Ruth’s voice was hardly audible. ‘It’s just something I once dreamt about. That’s all.’

‘But if you’d at least looked into it. How do you know? They might have let you.’

‘Yeah, Ruth,’ Tommy said. ‘Maybe you should at least have tried. After going on about it so much. I think Kath’s got a point.’

‘I didn’t go on about it, Tommy. At least, I don’t remember going on about it.’

‘But Tommy’s right. You should at least have tried. Then you could see a poster like that one, and remember that’s what you wanted once, and that you at least looked into it ...’

‘How could I have looked into it?’ For the first time, Ruth’s voice had hardened, but then she let out a sigh and looked down again. Then Tommy said:

‘You kept talking like you might qualify for special treatment. And for all you know, you might have done. You should have asked at least.’

‘Okay,’ Ruth said. ‘You say I should have looked into it. How? Where would I have gone? There wasn’t a way to look into it.’

‘Tommy’s right though,’ I said. ‘If you believed yourself special, you should at least have asked. You should have gone to Madame and asked.’

As soon as I said this - as soon as I mentioned Madame - I realised I'd made a mistake. Ruth looked up at me and I saw something like triumph flash across her face. You see it in films sometimes, when one person's pointing a gun at another person, and the one with the gun's making the other one do all kinds of things. Then suddenly there's a mistake, a tussle, and the gun's with the second person. And the second person looks at the first person with a gleam, a kind of can't-believe-my-luck expression that promises all kinds of vengeance. Well, that was how suddenly Ruth was looking at me, and though I'd said nothing about deferrals, I'd mentioned Madame, and I knew we'd stumbled into some new territory altogether.

Ruth saw my panic and shifted round in her seat to face me. So I was preparing myself for her attack; busy telling myself that no matter what she came at me with, things were different now, she wouldn't get her way like she'd done in the past. I was telling myself all of this, and that's why I wasn't at all ready for what she did come out with.

'Kathy,' she said, 'I don't really expect you to forgive me ever. I can't even see why you should. But I'm going to ask you to all the same.'

I was so thrown by this, all I could find to say was a rather limp: 'Forgive you for what?'

'Forgive me for what? Well, for starters, there's the way I always lied to you about your urges. When you used to tell me, back then, how sometimes it got so you wanted to do it with virtually anyone.'

Tommy shifted again behind us, but Ruth was leaning forward now, looking straight at me, like for the moment Tommy wasn't with us in the car at all.

'I knew how it worried you,' she said. 'I should have told you. I should have said how it was the same for me too, just the way you described it. You realise all of this now, I know. But you didn't back then, and I should have said. I should have told you how even though I was with Tommy, I couldn't resist doing it with other people sometimes. At least three others when we were at the Cottages.'

She said this still without looking Tommy's way. But it wasn't so much like she was ignoring him, than that she was trying so intensely to get through to me everything else had been blurred out.

'I almost did tell you a few times,' she went on. 'But I didn't. Even then, at the time, I realised you'd look back one day and realise and blame me for it. But I still didn't say anything to you. There's no reason you should ever forgive me for that, but I want to ask now because ...' She stopped suddenly.

'Because what?' I asked.

She laughed and said: 'Because nothing. I'd like you to forgive me, but I don't expect you to. Anyway, that's not the half of it, not even a small bit of it, actually. The main thing is, I kept you and Tommy apart.' Her voice had dropped again, almost to a whisper. 'That was the worst thing I did.'

She turned a little, taking Tommy in her gaze for the first time. Then almost immediately, she was looking just at me again, but now it was like she was talking to the both of us.

'That was the worst thing I did,' she said again. 'I'm not even asking you to forgive me about that. God, I've said all this in my head so many times, I can't believe I'm really doing it. It should have been you two. I'm not pretending I didn't always see that. Of course I did, as far back as I can remember. But I kept you apart. I'm not asking you to forgive me for that. That's not what I'm after just now. What I want is for you to put it right. Put right what I messed up for you.'

‘How d’ you mean, Ruth?’ Tommy asked. ‘How d’ you mean, put it right?’ His voice was gentle, full of child-like curiosity, and I think that was what started me sobbing.

‘Kathy, listen,’ Ruth said. ‘You and Tommy, you’ve got to try and get a deferral. If it’s you two, there’s got to be a chance. A real chance.’

She’d reached out a hand and put it on my shoulder, but I shook her off roughly and glared at her through the tears.

‘It’s too late for that. Way too late.’

‘It’s not too late. Kathy, listen, it’s not too late. Okay, so Tommy’s done two donations. Who says that has to make any difference?’

‘It’s too late for all that now.’ I’d started to sob again. ‘It’s stupid even thinking about it. As stupid as wanting to work in that office up there. We’re all way beyond that now.’

Ruth was shaking her head. ‘It’s not too late. Tommy, you tell her.’

I was leaning on the steering wheel, so couldn’t see Tommy at all. He made a kind of puzzled humming sound, but didn’t say anything.

‘Look,’ Ruth said, ‘both of you, listen. I wanted us all to do this trip, because I wanted to say what I just said. But I also wanted it because I wanted to give you something.’ She’d been rummaging in the pockets of her anorak, and now she held out a crumpled piece of paper.

‘Tommy, you’d better take this. Look after it. Then when Kathy changes her mind, you’ll have it.’

Tommy reached forward between the seats and took the paper. ‘Thanks, Ruth,’ he said, like she’d given him a chocolate bar. Then after a few seconds, he said: ‘What is it? I don’t get it.’

‘It’s Madame’s address. It’s like you were saying to me just now. You’ve at least got to try.’

‘How d’ you find it?’ Tommy asked.

‘It wasn’t easy. It took me a long time, and I ran a few risks. But I got it in the end, and I got it for you two. Now it’s up to you to find her and try.’

I’d stopped sobbing by now and started the engine. ‘That’s enough of all this,’ I said. ‘We’ve got to get Tommy back. Then we need to be getting back ourselves.’

‘But you will think about it, both of you, won’t you?’

‘I just want to get back now,’ I said.

‘Tommy, you’ll keep that address safe? In case Kathy comes round.’

‘I’ll keep it,’ Tommy said. Then, much more solemnly than the last time: ‘Thanks, Ruth.’

‘We’ve seen the boat,’ I said, ‘but now we’ve got to get back. It might be over two hours back to Dover.’

I put the car on the road again, and my memory of it is that we didn’t talk much more on the way back to the Kingsfield. There was still a small group of donors huddled under the roof as we came into the Square. I turned the car before letting Tommy out. Neither of us hugged or kissed him, but as he walked away towards his fellow donors, he paused and gave us a big smile and wave.

It might seem odd, but on the journey back to Ruth’s centre, we didn’t really discuss any of what had just happened. It was partly because Ruth was exhausted – that last conversation on the roadside seemed to have drained her. But also, I think we both sensed we’d done enough serious talking for one day, and that if we tried any more of it, things would start going wrong. I’m not sure how Ruth was feeling on that drive home, but as for me, once all the strong emotions had settled, once the night began to set in and all the lights came on along the roadside, I was feeling okay. It was like something that had been hanging over me for a long time had gone, and even if things were still far from sorted, it felt like there was now at least a door open to somewhere better. I'm not saying I was elated or anything like that. Everything between the three of us seemed really delicate and I felt tense, but it wasn't altogether a bad tension.

We didn't even discuss Tommy beyond saying how he looked okay, and wondering how much weight he'd put on. Then we spent large stretches of the journey watching the road together in silence.

It wasn't until a few days later I came to see what a difference that trip had made. All the guardedness, all the suspicions between me and Ruth evaporated, and we seemed to remember everything we'd once meant to each other. And that was the start of it, that era, with the summer coming on, and Ruth's health at least on an even keel, when I'd come in the evenings with biscuits and mineral water, and we'd sit side by side at her window, watching the sun go down over the roofs, talking about Hailsham, the Cottages, anything that drifted into our minds. When I think about Ruth now, of course, I feel sad she's gone; but I also feel really grateful for that period we had at the end.

There was, even so, one topic we never discussed properly, and that was about what she'd said to us on the roadside that day. Just every now and then, Ruth would allude to it. She'd come out with something like:

'Have you thought any more about becoming Tommy's carer? You know you could arrange it, if you wanted to.'

Soon, it was this idea - of my becoming Tommy's carer - that came to stand in for all the rest of it. I'd tell her I was thinking about it, that anyway it wasn't so simple, even for me, to arrange such a thing. Then we'd usually let the topic drop. But I could tell it was never far from Ruth's mind, and that's why, that very last time I saw her, even though she wasn't able to speak, I knew what it was she wanted to say to me.

That was three days after her second donation, when they finally let me in to see her in the small hours of the morning. She was in a room by herself, and it looked like they'd done everything they could for her. It had become obvious to me by then, from the way the doctors, the co-ordinator, the nurses were behaving, that they didn't think she was going to make it. Now I took one glance at her in that hospital bed under the dull light and recognised the look on her face, which I'd seen on donors often enough before. It was like she was willing her eyes to see right inside herself, so she could patrol and marshal all the better the separate areas of pain in her body - the way, maybe, an anxious carer might rush between three or four ailing donors in different parts of the country. She was, strictly speaking, still conscious, but she wasn't accessible to me as I stood there beside her metal bed. All the same, I pulled up a chair and sat with her hand in both of mine, squeezing whenever another flood of pain made her twist away from me.

I stayed beside her like that for as long as they let me, three hours, maybe longer. And as I say, for almost all of that time, she was far away inside herself. But just once, as she was twisting herself in a way that seemed scarily unnatural, and I was on the verge of calling the nurses for more painkillers, just for a few seconds, no more, she looked straight at me and she knew exactly who I was. It was one of those little islands of lucidity donors sometimes get to in the midst of their ghastly battles, and she looked at me, just for that moment, and although she didn't speak, I knew what her look meant. So I said to her: 'It's okay, I'm going to do it, Ruth. I'm going to become Tommy's carer as soon as I can.' I said it under my breath, because I didn't think she'd hear the words anyway, even if I shouted them. But my hope was that with our gazes locked as they were for those few seconds, she'd read my expression exactly as I'd read hers. Then the moment was over, and she was away again. Of course, I'll never know for sure, but I think she did understand. And even if she didn't, what occurs to me now is that she probably knew all along, even before I did, that I'd become Tommy's carer, and that we'd 'give it a try', just as she'd told us to in the car that day.

CHAPTER TWENTY

I became Tommy's carer almost a year to the day after that trip to see the boat. It wasn't long after Tommy's third donation, and though he was recovering well, he was still needing a lot of time to rest, and as it turned out, that wasn't a bad way at all for us to start this new phase together. Before long, I was getting used to the Kingsfield, growing to like it even.

Most donors at the Kingsfield get their own room after third donation, and Tommy was given one of the largest singles in the centre. Some people assumed afterwards I'd fixed it for him, but that wasn't the case; it was just luck, and anyway, it wasn't that great a room. I think it had been a bathroom back in the holiday camp days, because the only window had frosted glass and was really high up near the ceiling. You could only look out by standing on a chair and holding open the pane, and then you only got a view down onto the dense shrubbery. The room was L-shaped, which meant they could get in, as well as the usual bed, chair and wardrobe, a little school desk with a lift-up lid - an item that proved a real bonus, as I'll explain.

I don't want to give the wrong idea about that period at the Kingsfield. A lot of it was really relaxed, almost idyllic. My usual time to arrive was after lunch, and I'd come up to find Tommy stretched out on the narrow bed - always fully clothed because he didn't want to 'be like a patient'. I'd sit in the chair and read to him from various paperbacks I'd bring in, stuff like The Odyssey or One Thousand and One Nights. Otherwise we'd just talk, sometimes about the old days, sometimes about other things. He'd often doze off in the late afternoon, when I'd catch up on my reports over at his school desk. It was amazing really, the way the years seemed to melt away, and we were so easy with each other.

Obviously, though, not everything was like before. For a start, Tommy and I finally started having sex. I don't know how much Tommy had thought about us having sex before we started. He was still recovering, after all, and maybe it wasn't the first thing on his mind. I wasn't wanting to force it on him, but on the other hand it had occurred to me if we left it too long, just when we were starting out together again, it would just get harder and harder to make it a natural part of us. And my other thought, I suppose, was that if our plans went along the lines Ruth had wanted, and we did find ourselves going for a deferral, it might prove a real drawback if we'd never had sex. I don't mean I thought this was necessarily something they'd ask us about. But my worry was that it would show somehow, in a kind of lack of intimacy.

So I decided to start it off one afternoon up in that room, in a way he could take or leave. He'd been lying on the bed as usual, staring at the ceiling while I read to him. When I finished, I went over, sat on the edge of the bed, and slid a hand under his T-shirt. Pretty soon I was down around his stuff, and though it took a while for him to get hard, I could tell straight away he was happy about it. That first time, we still had stitches to worry about, and anyway, after all the years of knowing each other and not having sex, it was like we needed some intermediary stage before we could get into it in a full-blown way. So after a while I just did it for him with my hands, and he just lay there not making any attempt to feel me up in return, not even making any noises, but just looking peaceful.

But even that first time, there was something there, a feeling, right there alongside our sense that this was a beginning, a gateway we were passing through. I didn't want to acknowledge it for a long time, and even when I did, I tried to persuade myself it was something that would go away along with his various aches and pains. What I mean is, right from that first time, there was something in Tommy's manner that was tinged with sadness, that seemed to say: 'Yes, we're doing this now and I'm glad we're doing it now. But what a pity we left it so late.'

And in the days that followed, when we had proper sex and we were really happy about it, even then, this same nagging feeling would always be there. I did everything to keep it away. I had us going at it all stops out, so that everything would become a delirious blur, and there'd be no room for anything else. If he was on top, I'd put my knees right up for him; whatever other position we used, I'd say anything, do anything I thought would make it better, more passionate, but it still never quite went away.

Maybe it was to do with that room, the way the sun came in through the frosted glass so that even in early summer, it felt like autumn light. Or maybe it was because the stray sounds that would occasionally reach us as we lay there were of donors milling about, going about their business around the grounds, and not of students sitting in a grassy field, arguing about novels and poetry. Or maybe it had to do with how sometimes, even after we'd done it really well and were lying in each other's arms, bits of what we'd just done still drifting through our heads, Tommy would say something like:

'I used to be able to do it twice in a row easy. But I can't any more.' Then that feeling would come right to the fore and I'd have to put my hand over his mouth, whenever he said things like that, just so we could go on lying there in peace. I'm sure Tommy felt it too, because we'd always hold each other very tight after times like that, as though that way we'd manage to keep the feeling away.

For the first few weeks after I arrived, we hardly brought up Madame or that conversation with Ruth in the car that day. But the very fact of my having become his carer served as a reminder that we weren't there to mark time. And so too, of course, did Tommy's animal drawings.

I'd often wondered about Tommy's animals over the years, and even that day we'd gone to see the boat, I'd been tempted to ask him about them. Was he still drawing them? Had he kept the ones from the Cottages? But the whole history around them had made it difficult for me to ask.

Then one afternoon, maybe about a month after I'd started, I came up to his room and found him at his school desk, carefully going over a drawing, his face nearly touching the paper. He'd called for me to come in when I'd knocked, but now he didn't raise his head or stop what he was doing, and just a glance told me he was working on one of his imaginary creatures. I stopped in the doorway, uncertain whether I should come in, but eventually he looked up and closed his notebook - which I noticed looked identical to the black books he'd got from Keffer's all those years ago. I came in then and we began talking about something else entirely, and after a while he put away his notebook without us mentioning it. But after that, I'd often come in and see it left on the desk or tossed beside his pillow.

Then one day we were up in his room with several minutes to kill before we set off for some checks, and I noticed something odd coming into his manner: something coy and deliberate which made me think he was after some sex. But then he said:

'Kath, I just want you to tell me. Tell me honestly.'

Then the black notebook came out of his desk, and he showed me three separate sketches of a kind of frog - except with a long tail as though a part of it had stayed a tadpole. At least, that's what it looked like when you held it away from you. Close up, each sketch was a mass of minute detail, much like the creatures I'd seen years before.

‘These two I did thinking they were made of metal,’ he said. ‘See, everything’s got shiny surfaces. But this one here, I thought I’d try making him rubbery. You see? Almost blobby. I want to do a proper version now, a really good one, but I can’t decide. Kath, be honest, what do you think?’

I can’t remember what I answered. What I do remember is the strong mix of emotions that engulfed me at that moment. I realised immediately this was Tommy’s way of putting behind us everything that had happened around his drawings back at the Cottages, and I felt relief, gratitude, sheer delight. But I was aware too why the animals had emerged again, and of all the possible layers behind Tommy’s apparently casual query. At the least, I could see, he was showing me he hadn’t forgotten, even though we’d hardly discussed anything openly; he was telling me he wasn’t complacent, and that he was busy getting on with his part of the preparations.

But that wasn’t all I felt looking at those peculiar frogs that day. Because it was there again, only faint and in the background at first, but growing all the while, so that afterwards it was what I kept thinking about. I couldn’t help it, as I looked at those pages, the thought went through my mind, even as I tried to grab it and put it away. It came to me that Tommy’s drawings weren’t as fresh now. Okay, in many ways these frogs were a lot like what I’d seen back at the Cottages. But something was definitely gone, and they looked laboured, almost like they’d been copied. So that feeling came again, even though I tried to keep it out: that we were doing all of this too late; that there’d once been a time for it, but we’d let that go by, and there was something ridiculous, reprehensible even, about the way we were now thinking and planning.

Now I’m going over this again, it occurs to me that might have been another reason we were so slow to talk openly to each other about our plans. It was certainly the case that none of the other donors at the Kingsfield were ever heard talking about deferrals or anything like that, and we were probably vaguely embarrassed, almost like we shared a shameful secret. We might even have been scared of what might happen if word got out to the others.

But as I say, I don't want to paint too gloomy a view of that time at the Kingsfield. For a lot of it, especially after that day he asked me about his animals, there seemed to be no more shadows left from the past, and we really settled into each other's company. And though he never asked me again for advice about his pictures, he was happy to work on them in front of me, and we'd often spend our afternoons like that: me on the bed, maybe reading aloud; Tommy at the desk, drawing.

Perhaps we'd have been happy if things had stayed that way for a lot longer; if we could have whiled away more afternoons chatting, having sex, reading aloud and drawing. But with the summer drawing to an end, with Tommy getting stronger, and the possibility of notice for his fourth donation growing ever more distinct, we knew we couldn't keep putting things off indefinitely.

It had been an unusually busy period for me, and I'd not been to the Kingsfield for almost a week. I arrived in the morning that day, and I remember it was bucketing down. Tommy's room was almost dark, and you could hear a gutter splashing away near his window. He'd been down to the main hall for breakfast with his fellow donors, but had come back up again and was now sitting on his bed, looking vacant, not doing anything. I came in exhausted - I'd not had a proper night's sleep for ages - and just collapsed onto his narrow bed, pushing him against the wall. I lay like that for a few moments, and might easily have fallen asleep if Tommy hadn't kept prodding my knees with a toe. Then finally I sat up beside him and said:

'I saw Madame yesterday, Tommy. I never spoke to her or anything. But I saw her.'

He looked at me, but stayed quiet.

‘I saw her come up the street and go into her house. Ruth got it right. The right address, right door, everything.’

Then I described to him how the previous day, since I was down on the south coast anyway, I’d gone to Littlehampton in the late afternoon, and just as I’d done the last two times, walked down that long street near the seafront, past rows of terraced houses with names like ‘Wavecrest’ and ‘Sea View’, until I’d come to the public bench beside the phone box. And I’d sat down and waited – again, the way I’d done before – with my eyes fixed on the house over the street.

‘It was just like detective stuff. The previous times, I’d sat there for over half an hour each go, and nothing, absolutely nothing. But something told me I’d be lucky this time.’

I’d been so tired, I’d nearly nodded off right there on the bench. But then I’d looked up and she was there, coming down the street towards me.

‘It was really spooky,’ I said, ‘because she looked exactly the same. Maybe her face was slightly older. But otherwise, there was no real difference. Same clothes even. That smart grey suit.’

‘It couldn’t literally have been the same suit.’

‘I don’t know. It looked like it was.’

‘So you didn’t try and speak to her?’

‘Of course not, stupid. Just one step at a time. She was never exactly nice to us, remember.’

I told him how she’d walked right past me on the opposite side, never glancing over to me; how for a second I thought she would also go past the door I’d been watching – that Ruth had got the wrong address. But Madame had turned sharply at the gate, covered the tiny front path in two or three steps and vanished inside.

After I'd finished, Tommy stayed quiet for some time. Then he said:

'You sure you won't get into trouble? Always driving out to places you're not supposed to be?'

'Why do you think I'm so tired? I've been working all kinds of hours to get everything in. But at least we've found her now.'

The rain kept splashing outside. Tommy turned onto his side and put his head on my shoulder.

'Ruth did well for us,' he said, softly. 'She got it right.'

'Yeah, she did well. But now it's up to us.'

'So what's the plan, Kath? Have we got one?'

'We just go there. We just go there and ask her. Next week, when I take you for the lab tests. I'll get you signed out for the whole day. Then we can go to Littlehampton on the way back.'

Tommy gave a sigh and put his head deeper into my shoulder. Someone watching might have thought he was being unenthusiastic, but I knew what he was feeling. We'd been thinking about the deferrals, the theory about the Gallery, all of it, for so long - and now, suddenly, here we were. It was definitely a bit scary.

'If we get this,' he said, eventually. 'Just suppose we do. Suppose she lets us have three years, say, just to ourselves. What do we do exactly? See what I mean, Kath? Where do we go? We can't stay here, this is a centre.'

'I don't know, Tommy. Maybe she'll tell us to go back to the Cottages. But it'd be better somewhere else. The White Mansion, maybe. Or perhaps they've got some other place.'

Somewhere separate for people like us. We'll just have to see what she says. '

We lay quietly on the bed for a few more minutes, listening to the rain. At some stage, I began prodding him with a foot, the way he'd been doing to me earlier. Eventually he retaliated and pushed my feet off the bed altogether.

'If we're really going,' he said, 'we'll have to decide about the animals. You know, choose the best ones to take along. Maybe six or seven. We'll have to do it quite carefully.'

'Okay,' I said. Then I stood up and stretched out my arms. 'Maybe we'll take more. Fifteen, twenty even. Yeah, we'll go and see her. What can she do to us? We'll go and talk to her.'

CHAPTER TWENTY-ONE

From days before we went, I'd had in my mind this picture of me and Tommy standing in front of that door, working up the nerve to press the bell, then having to wait there with hearts thumping. The way it turned out, though, we got lucky and were spared that particular ordeal.

We deserved a bit of luck by then, because the day hadn't been going at all well. The car had played up on the journey out and we were an hour late for Tommy's tests. Then a mix-up at the clinic had meant Tommy having to re-do three of the tests. This had left him feeling pretty woozy, so when we finally set off for Littlehampton towards the end of the afternoon, he began to feel carsick and we had to keep stopping to let him walk it off.

We finally arrived just before six o'clock. We parked the car behind the bingo hall, took out from the boot the sports bag containing Tommy's notebooks, then set off towards the town centre. It had been a fine day and though the shops were all closing, a lot of people were hanging about outside the pubs, talking and drinking. Tommy began to feel better the more we walked, until eventually he remembered how he'd had to miss lunch because of the tests, and declared he'd have to eat before facing what was in front of us. So we were searching for some place to buy a takeaway sandwich, when he suddenly grabbed my arm, so hard I thought he was having some sort of attack. But then he said quietly into my ear:

'That's her, Kath. Look. Going past the hairdressers.'

And sure enough there she was, moving along the opposite pavement, dressed in her neat grey suit, just like the ones she'd always worn.

We set off after Madame at a reasonable distance, first through the pedestrian precinct, then along the near-deserted High Street. I think we were both reminded of that day we'd followed Ruth's possible through another town. But this time things proved far simpler, because pretty soon she'd led us onto that long seafront street.

Because the road was completely straight, and because the setting sun was falling on it all the way down to the end, we found we could let Madame get quite a way ahead - till she wasn't much more than a dot - and there'd still be no danger of losing her. In fact, we never even stopped hearing the echo of her heels, and the rhythmic thudding of Tommy's bag against his leg seemed to be a kind of answer.

We went on like that for a long time, past the rows of identical houses. Then the houses on the opposite pavement ran out, areas of flat lawn appeared in their place, and you could see, beyond the lawns, the tops of the beach huts lining the seafront. The water itself wasn't visible, but you could tell it was there, just from the big sky and the seagull noises.

But the houses on our side continued without a change, and after a while I said to Tommy:

'It's not long now. See that bench over there? That's the one I sit on. The house is just over from it.'

Until I said this, Tommy had been pretty calm. But now something seemed to get into him, and he began to walk much faster, like he wanted to catch up with her. But now there was no one between Madame and us, and as Tommy kept closing the gap, I had to grab his arm to slow him down. I was all the time afraid she'd turn and look at us, but she didn't, and then she was going in through her little gateway. She paused at her door to find her keys in her handbag, and then there we were, standing by her gate, watching her. She still didn't turn, and I had an idea that she'd been aware of us all along and was deliberately ignoring us. I thought too that Tommy was about to shout something to her, and that it would be the wrong thing. That was why I called from the gate, so quickly and without hesitation.

It was only a polite 'Excuse me!' but she spun round like I'd thrown something at her. And as her gaze fell on us, a chill passed through me, much like the one I'd felt years ago that time we'd waylaid her outside the main house. Her eyes were as cold, and her face maybe even more severe than I remembered. I don't know if she recognised us at that point; but without doubt, she saw and decided in a second what we were, because you could see her stiffen - as if a pair of large spiders was set to crawl towards her.

Then something changed in her expression. It didn't become warmer exactly. But that revulsion got put away somewhere, and she studied us carefully, squinting in the setting sun.

'Madame,' I said, leaning over the gate. 'We don't want to shock you or anything. But we were at Hailsham. I'm Kathy H., maybe you remember. And this is Tommy D. We haven't come to give you any trouble.'

She came a few steps back towards us. 'From Hailsham,' she said, and a small smile actually went across her face. 'Well, this is a surprise. If you aren't here to give me trouble, then why are you here?'

Suddenly Tommy said: 'We have to talk with you. I've brought some things' - he raised his bag - 'some things you might want for your gallery. We've got to talk with you.'

Madame went on standing there, hardly moving in the low sun, her head tilted as though listening for some sound from the seafront. Then she smiled again, though the smile didn't seem to be for us, but just herself.

'Very well then. Come inside. Then we'll see what it is you wish to talk about.'

As we went in, I noticed the front door had coloured glass panels, and once Tommy closed it behind us, everything got pretty dark. We were in a hallway so narrow you felt you'd be able to touch the walls on either side just by stretching out your elbows. Madame had stopped in front of us, and was standing still, her back to us, again like she was listening. Peering past her, I saw that the hallway, narrow as it was, divided further: to the left was a staircase going upstairs; to the right, an even narrower passage leading deeper into the house.

Following Madame's example, I listened too, but there was only silence in the house. Then, maybe from somewhere upstairs, there was a faint thump. That small noise seemed to signify something to her, because she now turned to us and pointing into the darkness of the passage, said:

'Go in there and wait for me. I'll be down shortly.'

She began to climb the stairs, then seeing our hesitation, leaned over the banister and pointed again into the dark.

'In there,' she said, then vanished upstairs.

Tommy and I wandered forward and found ourselves in what must have been the front room of the house. It was like a servant of some sort had got the place ready for the nighttime, then left: the curtains were closed and there were dim table lamps switched on. I could smell the old furniture, which was probably Victorian. The fireplace had been sealed off with a board, and where the fire would have been, there was a picture, woven like a tapestry, of a strange owl-like bird staring out at you. Tommy touched my arm and pointed to a framed picture hanging in a corner over a little round table.

'It's Hailsham,' he whispered.

We went up to it, but then I wasn't so sure. I could see it was a pretty nice watercolour, but the table lamp beneath it had a crooked shade covered with cobweb traces, and instead of lighting up the picture, it just put a shine over the murky glass, so you could hardly make it out at all.

‘What do you mean?’ I whispered back. ‘There’s no pond. It’s just a bit of countryside.’

‘No, the pond’s behind you.’ Tommy seemed surprisingly irritated. ‘You must be able to remember. If you’re round the back with the pond behind you, and you’re looking over towards the North Playing Field ...’

We went silent again because we could hear voices somewhere in the house. It sounded like a man’s voice, maybe coming from upstairs. Then we heard what was definitely Madame’s voice coming down the stairs, saying: ‘Yes, you’re quite right. Quite right.’

We waited for Madame to come in, but her footsteps went past the door and to the back of the house. It flashed through my mind she was going to prepare tea and scones and bring it all in on a trolley, but then I decided that was rubbish, that she’d just as likely forgotten about us, and now she’d suddenly remember, come in and tell us to leave. Then a gruff male voice called something from upstairs, so muffled it might have been two floors up. Madame’s footsteps came back into the hallway, then she called up: ‘I’ve told you what to do. Just do as I explained.’

Tommy and I waited several more minutes. Then the wall at the back of the room began to move. I saw almost immediately it wasn’t really a wall, but a pair of sliding doors which you could use to section off the front half of what was otherwise one long room. Madame had rolled back the doors just part of the way, and she was now standing there staring at us. I tried to see past her, but it was just darkness. I thought maybe she was waiting for us to explain why we were there, but in the end, she said:

‘You told me you were Kathy H. and Tommy D. Am I correct? And you were at Hailsham how long ago?’

I told her, but there was no way of telling if she remembered us or not. She just went on standing there at the threshold, as though hesitating to come in. But now Tommy spoke again:

‘We don’t want to keep you long. But there’s something we have to talk to you about.’

‘So you say. Well then. You’d better make yourselves comfortable.’

She reached out and put her hands on the backs of two matching armchairs just in front of her. There was something odd about her manner, like she hadn’t really invited us to sit down. I felt that if we did as she was suggesting and sat on those chairs, she’d just go on standing behind us, not even taking her hands away from the backs. But when we made a move towards her, she too came forwards, and – perhaps I imagined it – tucked her shoulders in tightly as she passed between us. When we turned to sit down, she was over by the windows, in front of the heavy velvet curtains, holding us in a glare, like we were in a class and she was a teacher. At least, that’s the way it looked to me at that moment. Tommy, afterwards, said he thought she was about to burst into song, and that those curtains behind her would open, and instead of the street and the flat grassy expanse leading to the seafront, there’d be this big stage set, like the ones we’d had at Hailsham, with even a chorus line to back her up. It was funny, when he said that afterwards, and I could see her again then, hands clasped, elbows out, sure enough like she was getting ready to sing. But I doubt if Tommy was really thinking anything like that at the time. I remember noticing how tense he’d got, and worrying he’d blurt out something completely daft. That was why, when she asked us, not unkindly, what it was we wanted, I stepped in quickly.

It probably came out pretty muddled at first, but after a while, as I became more confident she'd hear me out, I calmed down and got a lot clearer. I'd been turning over in my mind for weeks and weeks just what I'd say to her. I'd gone over it during those long car journeys, and while sitting at quiet tables in service-station cafés. It had seemed so difficult then, and I'd eventually resorted to a plan: I'd memorised word for word a few key lines, then drawn a mental map of how I'd go from one point to the next. But now she was there in front of me, most of what I'd prepared seemed either unnecessary or completely wrong. The strange thing was – and Tommy agreed when we discussed it afterwards – although at Hailsham she'd been like this hostile stranger from the outside, now that we were facing her again, even though she hadn't said or done anything to suggest any warmth towards us, Madame now appeared to me like an intimate, someone much closer to us than anyone new we'd met over the recent years. That's why suddenly all the things I'd been preparing in my head just went, and I spoke to her honestly and simply, almost as I might have done years ago to a guardian. I told her what we'd heard, the rumours about Hailsham students and deferrals; how we realised the rumours might not be accurate, and that we weren't banking on anything.

'And even if it is true,' I said, 'we know you must get tired of it, all these couples coming to you, claiming to be in love. Tommy and me, we never would have come and bothered you if we weren't really sure.'

'Sure?' It was the first time she'd spoken for ages and we both jolted back a bit in surprise. 'You say you're sure? Sure that you're in love? How can you know it? You think love is so simple? So you are in love. Deeply in love. Is that what you're saying to me?'

Her voice sounded almost sarcastic, but then I saw, with a kind of shock, little tears in her eyes as she looked from one to the other of us.

‘You believe this? That you’re deeply in love? And therefore you’ve come to me for this ... this deferral? Why? Why did you come to me?’

If she’d asked this in a certain way, like the whole idea was completely crazy, then I’m sure I’d have felt pretty devastated. But she hadn’t quite said it like that. She’d asked it almost like it was a test question she knew the answer to; as if, even, she’d taken other couples through an identical routine many times before. That was what kept me hopeful. But Tommy must have got anxious, because he suddenly burst in:

‘We came to see you because of your gallery. We think we know what your gallery’s for.’

‘My gallery?’ She leaned back on the window ledge, causing the curtains to sway behind her, and took a slow breath. ‘My gallery. You must mean my collection. All those paintings, poems, all those things of yours I gathered over the years. It was hard work for me, but I believed in it, we all did in those days. So you think you know what it was for, why we did it. Well, that would be most interesting to hear. Because I have to say, it’s a question I ask myself all the time.’ She suddenly switched her gaze from Tommy to me. ‘Do I go too far?’ she asked.

I didn’t know what to say, so just replied: ‘No, no.’

‘I go too far,’ she said. ‘I’m sorry. I often go too far on this subject. Forget what I just said. Young man, you were going to tell me about my gallery. Please, let me hear.’

‘It’s so you could tell,’ Tommy said. ‘So you’d have something to go on. Otherwise how would you know when students came to you and said they were in love?’

Madame's gaze had drifted over to me again, but I had the feeling she was staring at something on my arm. I actually looked down to see if there was birdshit or something on my sleeve. Then I heard her say:

'And this is why you think I gathered all those things of yours. My gallery, as all of you always called it. I laughed when I first heard that's what you were calling it. But in time, I too came to think of it as that. My gallery. Now why, young man, explain it to me. Why would my gallery help in telling which of you were really in love?'

'Because it would help show you what we were like,' Tommy said. 'Because ...'

'Because of course' - Madame cut in suddenly - 'your art will reveal your inner selves! That's it, isn't it? Because your art will display your souls!' Then suddenly she turned to me again and said: 'I go too far?'

She'd said this before, and I again had the impression she was staring at a spot on my sleeve. But by this point a faint suspicion I'd had ever since the first time she'd asked 'I go too far?' had started to grow. I looked at Madame carefully, but she seemed to sense my scrutiny and she turned back to Tommy.

'All right,' she said. 'Let us continue. What was it you were telling me?'

'The trouble is,' Tommy said, 'I was a bit mixed up in those days.'

'You were saying something about your art. How art bares the soul of the artist.'

'Well, what I'm trying to say,' Tommy persisted, 'is that I was so mixed up in those days, I didn't really do any art. I didn't do anything. I know now I should have done, but I was mixed up. So you haven't got anything of mine in your gallery. I know that's my fault, and I know it's probably way too late, but I've brought some things with me now.' He raised his bag, then began to unzip it. 'Some of it was done recently, but some of it's from quite a long time ago. You should have Kath's stuff already. She got plenty into the Gallery. Didn't you, Kath?'

For a moment they were both looking at me. Then Madame said, barely audibly:

'Poor creatures. What did we do to you? With all our schemes and plans?' She let that hang, and I thought I could see tears in her eyes again. Then she turned to me and asked: 'Do we continue with this talk? You wish to go on?'

It was when she said this that the vague idea I'd had before became something more substantial. 'Do I go too far?' And now: 'Do we continue?' I realised, with a little chill, that these questions had never been for me, or for Tommy, but for someone else - someone listening behind us in the darkened half of the room.

I turned round quite slowly and looked into the darkness. I couldn't see anything, but I heard a sound, a mechanical one, surprisingly far away - the house seemed to go much further back into the dark than I'd guessed. Then I could make out a shape moving towards us, and a woman's voice said: 'Yes, Marie-Claude. Let us carry on.'

I was still looking into the darkness when I heard Madame let out a kind of snort, and she came striding past us and on into the dark. Then there were more mechanical sounds, and Madame emerged pushing a figure in a wheelchair. She passed between us again, and for a moment longer, because Madame's back was blocking the view, I couldn't see the person in the wheelchair. But then Madame steered it around to face us and said:

'You speak to them. It's you they've come to speak to.'

'I suppose it is.'

The figure in the wheelchair was frail and contorted, and it was the voice more than anything that helped me recognise her.

‘Miss Emily,’ Tommy said, quite softly.

‘You speak to them,’ Madame said, as though washing her hands of everything. But she remained standing behind the wheelchair, her eyes blazing towards us.

CHAPTER TWENTY-TWO

‘Marie-Claude is correct,’ Miss Emily said. ‘I’m the one to whom you should be speaking. Marie-Claude worked hard for our project. And the way it all ended has left her feeling somewhat disillusioned. As for myself, whatever the disappointments, I don’t feel so badly about it. I think what we achieved merits some respect. Look at the two of you. You’ve turned out well. I’m sure you have much you could tell me to make me proud. What did you say your names were? No, no, wait. I think I shall remember. You’re the boy with the bad temper. A bad temper, but a big heart. Tommy. Am I right? And you, of course, are Kathy H. You’ve done well as a carer. We’ve heard a lot about you. I remember, you see. I dare say I can remember you all.’

‘What good does it do you or them?’ Madame asked, then strode away from the wheelchair, past the two of us and into the darkness, for all I know to occupy the space Miss Emily had been in before.

‘Miss Emily,’ I said, ‘it’s very nice to see you again.’

‘How kind of you to say so. I recognised you, but you may well not have recognised me. In fact, Kathy H., once not so long ago, I passed you sitting on that bench out there, and you certainly didn’t recognise me then. You glanced at George, the big Nigerian man pushing me. Oh yes, you had quite a good look at him, and he at you. I didn’t say a word, and you didn’t know it was me. But tonight, in context, as it were, we know each other. You both look rather shocked at the sight of me. I’ve not been well recently, but I’m hoping this contraption isn’t a permanent fixture. Unfortunately, my dears, I won’t be able to entertain you for as long as I’d like just now, because in a short while some men are coming to take away my bedside cabinet. It's a quite wonderful object. George has put protective padding around it, but I've insisted I'll accompany it myself all the same. You never know with these men. They handle it roughly, hurl it around their vehicle, then their employer claims it was like that from the start. It happened to us before, so this time, I've insisted on going along with it. It's a beautiful object, I had it with me at Hailsham, so I'm determined to get a fair price. So when they come, I'm afraid that's when I shall have to leave you. But I can see, my dears, you've come on a mission close to your hearts. I must say, it does cheer me to see you. And it cheers Marie-Claude too, even though you'd never know it to look at her. Isn't that so, darling? Oh, she pretends it's not so, but it is. She's touched that you've come to find us. Oh, she's in a sulk, ignore her, students, ignore her. Now, I'll try and answer your questions the best I can. I've heard this rumour countless times. When we still had Hailsham, we'd get two or three couples each year, trying to get in to talk to us. One even wrote to us. I suppose it's not so hard to find a large estate like that if you mean to break the rules. So you see, it's been there, this rumour, from long before your time.'

She stopped, so I said: 'What we want to know now, Miss Emily, is if the rumour's true or not.'

She went on gazing at us for a moment, then took a deep breath. 'Within Hailsham itself, whenever this talk started up, I made sure to stamp it out good and proper. But as for what students said after they'd left us, what could I do? In the end, I came to believe - and Marie-Claude believes this too, don't you, darling? - I came to believe that this rumour, it's not just a single rumour. What I mean is, I think it's one that gets created from scratch over and over. You go to the source, stamp it out, you'll not stop it starting again elsewhere. I came to this conclusion and ceased to worry about it. Marie-Claude never did worry about it. Her view was: "If they're so foolish, let them believe it." Oh yes, don't show me that sour face of yours. That's been your view of it from the beginning. After many years of it, I came not exactly to the same viewpoint. But I began to think, well, perhaps I shouldn't worry. It's not my doing, after all. And for the few couples who get disappointed, the rest will never put it to the test anyway. It's something for them to dream about, a little fantasy. What harm is there? But for the two of you, I can see this doesn't apply. You are serious. You've thought carefully. You've hoped carefully. For students like you, I do feel regret. It gives me no pleasure at all to disappoint you. But there it is.'

I didn't want to look at Tommy. I felt surprisingly calm, and even though Miss Emily's words should have crushed us, there was an aspect to them that implied something further, something being held back, that suggested we hadn't yet got to the bottom of things. There was even the possibility she wasn't telling the truth. So I asked:

'Is it the case, then, that deferrals don't exist? There's nothing you can do?'

She shook her head slowly from side to side. 'There's no truth in the rumour. I'm sorry. I truly am.'

Suddenly Tommy asked: 'Was it true once though? Before Hailsham closed?'

Miss Emily went on shaking her head. 'It was never true. Even before the Morningdale scandal, even back when Hailsham was considered a shining beacon, an example of how we might move to a more humane and better way of doing things, even then, it wasn't true. It's best to be clear about this. A wishful rumour. That's all it ever was. Oh dear, is that the men come for the cabinet?'

The doorbell had gone, and footsteps came down the stairs to answer it. There were men's voices out in the narrow hall, and Madame came out of the darkness behind us, crossed the room and went out. Miss Emily leaned forward in the wheelchair, listening intently. Then she said:

‘It’s not them. It’s that awful man from the decorating company again. Marie-Claude will see to it. So, my dears, we have a few minutes more. Was there something else you wished to talk to me about? This is all strictly against regulations, of course, and Marie-Claude should never have asked you in. And naturally, I should have turned you out the second I knew you were here. But Marie-Claude doesn’t care much for their regulations these days, and I must say, neither do I. So if you wish to stay a little longer, you’re very welcome.’

‘If the rumour was never true,’ Tommy said, ‘then why did you take all our art stuff away? Didn’t the Gallery exist either?’

‘The Gallery? Well, that rumour did have some truth to it. There was a gallery. And after a fashion, there still is. These days it’s here, in this house. I had to prune it down, which I regret. But there wasn’t room for all of it in here. But why did we take your work away? That’s what you’re asking, isn’t it?’

‘Not just that,’ I said quietly. ‘Why did we do all of that work in the first place? Why train us, encourage us, make us produce all of that? If we’re just going to give donations anyway, then die, why all those lessons? Why all those books and discussions?’

‘Why Hailsham at all?’ Madame had said this from the hallway. She came past us again and back into the darkened section of the room. ‘It’s a good question for you to ask.’

Miss Emily’s gaze followed her, and for a moment, remained fixed behind us. I felt like turning to see what looks were being exchanged, but it was almost like we were back at Hailsham, and we had to keep facing the front with complete attention. Then Miss Emily said:

‘Yes, why Hailsham at all? Marie-Claude likes to ask that a lot these days. But not so long ago, before the Morningdale scandal, she wouldn’t have dreamt of asking a question like that. It wouldn’t have entered her head. You know that’s right, don’t look at me like that! There was only one person in those days who would ask a question like that, and that was me. Long before Morningdale, right from the very beginning, I asked that. And that made it easy for the rest of them, Marie-Claude, all the rest of them, they could all carry on without a care. All you students too. I did all the worrying and questioning for the lot of you. And as long as I was steadfast, then no doubts ever crossed your minds, any of you. But you asked your questions, dear boy. Let’s answer the simplest one, and perhaps it will answer all the rest. Why did we take your artwork? Why did we do that? You said an interesting thing earlier, Tommy. When you were discussing this with Marie-Claude. You said it was because your art would reveal what you were like. What you were like inside. That’s what you said, wasn’t it? Well, you weren’t far wrong about that. We took away your art because we thought it would reveal your souls. Or to put it more finely, we did it to prove you had souls at all.’

She paused, and Tommy and I exchanged glances for the first time in ages. Then I asked:

‘Why did you have to prove a thing like that, Miss Emily? Did someone think we didn’t have souls?’

A thin smile appeared on her face. ‘It’s touching, Kathy, to see you so taken aback. It demonstrates, in a way, that we did our job well. As you say, why would anyone doubt you had a soul? But I have to tell you, my dear, it wasn’t something commonly held when we first set out all those years ago. And though we’ve come a long way since then, it’s still not a notion universally held, even today. You Hailsham students, even after you’ve been out in the world like this, you still don’t know the half of it. All around the country, at this very moment, there are students being reared in deplorable conditions, conditions you Hailsham students could hardly imagine. And now we're no more, things will only get worse.'

She paused again, and for a moment she seemed to be inspecting us carefully through narrowed eyes. Finally she went on:

'Whatever else, we at least saw to it that all of you in our care, you grew up in wonderful surroundings. And we saw to it too, after you left us, you were kept away from the worst of those horrors. We were able to do that much for you at least. But this dream of yours, this dream of being able to defer. Such a thing would always have been beyond us to grant, even at the height of our influence. I'm sorry, I can see what I'm saying won't be welcome to you. But you mustn't be dejected. I hope you can appreciate how much we were able to secure for you. Look at you both now! You've had good lives, you're educated and cultured. I'm sorry we couldn't secure more for you than we did, but you must realise how much worse things once were. When Marie-Claude and I started out, there were no places like Hailsham in existence. We were the first, along with Glenmorgan House. Then a few years later came the Saunders Trust. Together, we became a small but very vocal movement, and we challenged the entire way the donations programme was being run. Most importantly, we demonstrated to the world that if students were reared in humane, cultivated environments, it was possible for them to grow to be as sensitive and intelligent as any ordinary human being. Before that, all clones - or students, as we preferred to call you - existed only to supply medical science. In the early days, after the war, that's largely all you were to most people. Shadowy objects in test tubes. Wouldn't you agree, Marie-Claude? She's being very quiet. Usually you can't get her to shut up on this subject. Your presence, my dears, appears to have tied her tongue. Very well. So to answer your question, Tommy. That was why we collected your art. We selected the best of it and put on special exhibitions. In the late seventies, at the height of our influence, we were organising large events all around the country. There'd be cabinet ministers, bishops, all sorts of famous people coming to attend. There were speeches, large funds pledged. "There, look!" we could say. "Look at this art! How dare you claim these children are anything less than fully human?" Oh yes, there was a lot of support for our movement back then, the tide was with us.'

For the next few minutes, Miss Emily went on reminiscing about different events from those days, mentioning a lot of people whose names meant nothing to us. In fact, for a moment, it was almost like we were listening to her again at one of her morning assemblies as she drifted off on tangents none of us could follow. She seemed to enjoy herself, though, and a gentle smile settled around her eyes. Then suddenly she came out of it and said in a new tone:

'But we never quite lost touch with reality, did we, Marie-Claude? Not like our colleagues at the Saunders Trust. Even during the best of times, we always knew what a difficult battle we were engaged in. And sure enough, the Morningdale business came along, then one or two other things, and before we knew it all our hard work had come undone.'

'But what I don't understand,' I said, 'is why people would want students treated so badly in the first place.'

'From your perspective today, Kathy, your bemusement is perfectly reasonable. But you must try and see it historically. After the war, in the early fifties, when the great breakthroughs in science followed one after the other so rapidly, there wasn't time to take stock, to ask the sensible questions. Suddenly there were all these new possibilities laid before us, all these ways to cure so many previously incurable conditions. This was what the world noticed the most, wanted the most. And for a long time, people preferred to believe these organs appeared from nowhere, or at most that they grew in a kind of vacuum. Yes, there were arguments. But by the time people became concerned about ... about students, by the time they came to consider just how you were reared, whether you should have been brought into existence at all, well by then it was too late. There was no way to reverse the process. How can you ask a world that has come to regard cancer as curable, how can you ask such a world to put away that cure, to go back to the dark days? There was no going back. However uncomfortable people were about your existence, their overwhelming concern was that their own children, their spouses, their parents, their friends, did not die from cancer, motor neurone disease, heart disease. So for a long time you were kept in the shadows, and people did their best not to think about you. And if they did, they tried to convince themselves you weren't really like us. That you were less than human, so it didn't matter. And that was how things stood until our little movement came along. But do you see what we were up against? We were virtually attempting to square the circle. Here was the world, requiring students to donate. While that remained the case, there would always be a barrier against seeing you as properly human. Well, we fought that battle for many years, and what we won for you, at least, were many improvements, though of course, you were only a select few. But then came the Morningdale scandal, then other things, and before we knew it, the climate had quite changed. No one wanted to be seen supporting us any more, and our little movement, Hailsham, Glenmorgan, the Saunders Trust, we were all of us swept away.'

'What was this Morningdale scandal you keep mentioning, Miss Emily?' I asked. 'You'll have to tell us, because we don't know about it.'

'Well, I suppose there's no reason why you should. It was never such a large matter in the wider world. It concerned a scientist called James Morningdale, quite talented in his way. He carried on his work in a remote part of Scotland, where I suppose he thought he'd attract less attention. What he wanted was to offer people the possibility of having children with enhanced characteristics. Superior intelligence, superior athleticism, that sort of thing. Of course, there'd been others with similar ambitions, but this Morningdale fellow, he'd taken his research much further than anyone before him, far beyond legal boundaries. Well, he was discovered, they put an end to his work and that seemed to be that. Except, of course, it wasn't, not for us. As I say, it never became an enormous matter. But it did create a certain atmosphere, you see. It reminded people, reminded them of a fear they'd always had. It's one thing to create students, such as yourselves, for the donation programme. But a generation of created children who'd take their place in society? Children demonstrably superior to the rest of us? Oh no. That frightened people. They recoiled from that.'

'But Miss Emily,' I said, 'what did any of that have to do with us? Why did Hailsham have to close because of something like that?'

'We didn't see an obvious connection either, Kathy. Not at first. And I often think now, we were culpable not to do so. Had we been more alert, less absorbed with ourselves, if we'd worked very hard at that stage when the news about Morningdale first broke, we might have been able to avert it. Oh, Marie-Claude disagrees. She thinks it would have happened no matter what we did, and she might have a point. After all, it wasn't just Morningdale. There were other things at that time. That awful television series, for instance. All these things contributed, contributed to the turning of the tide. But I suppose when it comes down to it, the central flaw was this. Our little movement, we were always too fragile, always too dependent on the whims of our supporters. So long as the climate was in our favour, so long as a corporation or a politician could see a benefit in supporting us, then we were able to keep afloat. But it had always been a struggle, and after Morningdale, after the climate changed, we had no chance. The world didn't want to be reminded how the donation programme really worked. They didn't want to think about you students, or about the conditions you were brought up in. In other words, my dears, they wanted you back in the shadows. Back in the shadows where you'd been before the likes of Marie-Claude and myself ever came along. And all those influential people who'd once been so keen to help us, well of course, they all vanished. We lost our sponsors, one after the other, in a matter of just over a year. We kept going for as long as we could, we went on for two years more than Glenmorgan. But in the end, as you know, we were obliged to close, and today there's hardly a trace left of the work we did. You won't find anything like Hailsham anywhere in the country now. All you'll find, as ever, are those vast government "homes", and even if they're somewhat better than they once were, let me tell you, my dears, you'd not sleep for days if you saw what still goes on in some of those places. And as for Marie-Claude and me, here we are, we've retreated to this house, and upstairs we have a mountain of your work. That's what we have to remind us of what we did. And a mountain of debt too, though that's not nearly so welcome. And the memories, I suppose, of all of you. And the knowledge that we've given you better lives than you would have had otherwise.'

'Don't try and ask them to thank you,' Madame's voice said from behind us. 'Why should they be grateful? They came here looking for something much more. What we gave them, all the years, all the fighting we did on their behalf, what do they know of that? They think it's God-given. Until they came here, they knew nothing of it. All they feel now is disappointment, because we haven't given them everything possible.'

Nobody spoke for a while. Then there was a noise outside and the doorbell rang again. Madame came out of the darkness and went out into the hall.

‘This time it must be the men,’ Miss Emily said. ‘I shall have to get ready. But you can stay a little longer. The men have to bring the thing down two flights of stairs. Marie-Claude will see they don’t damage it.’

Tommy and I couldn’t quite believe that was the end of it. We neither of us stood up, and anyway, there was no sign of anyone helping Miss Emily out of her wheelchair. I wondered for a moment if she was going to try and get up by herself, but she remained still, leaning forward as before, listening intently. Then Tommy said:

‘So there’s definitely nothing. No deferral, nothing like that.’

‘Tommy,’ I murmured, and glared at him. But Miss Emily said gently:

‘No, Tommy. There’s nothing like that. Your life must now run the course that’s been set for it.’

‘So, what you’re saying, Miss,’ Tommy said, ‘is that everything we did, all the lessons, everything. It was all about what you just told us? There was nothing more to it than that?’

‘I can see,’ Miss Emily said, ‘that it might look as though you were simply pawns in a game. It can certainly be looked at like that. But think of it. You were lucky pawns. There was a certain climate and now it’s gone. You have to accept that sometimes that’s how things happen in this world. People’s opinions, their feelings, they go one way, then the other. It just so happens you grew up at a certain point in this process.’

‘It might be just some trend that came and went,’ I said. ‘But for us, it’s our life.’

‘Yes, that’s true. But think of it. You were better off than many who came before you. And who knows what those who come after you will have to face. I'm sorry, students, but I must leave you now. George! George! '

There had been a lot of noise out in the hallway, and perhaps this had stopped George from hearing, because there was no response. Tommy asked suddenly:

'Is that why Miss Lucy left?'

For a while I thought Miss Emily, whose attention was on what was going on in the hallway, hadn't heard him. She leaned back in her wheelchair and began moving it gradually towards the door. There were so many little coffee tables and chairs there didn't seem a way through. I was about to get up and clear a path, when she stopped suddenly.

'Lucy Wainright,' she said. 'Ah yes. We had a little trouble with her.' She paused, then adjusted her wheelchair back to face Tommy. 'Yes, we had a little trouble with her. A disagreement. But to answer your question, Tommy. The disagreement with Lucy Wainright wasn't to do with what I've just been telling you. Not directly, anyway. No, that was more, shall we say, an internal matter.'

I thought she was going to leave it at that, so I asked: 'Miss Emily, if it's all right, we'd like to know about it, about what happened with Miss Lucy.'

Miss Emily raised her eyebrows. 'Lucy Wainright? She was important to you? Forgive me, dear students, I'm forgetting again. Lucy wasn't with us for long, so for us she's just a peripheral figure in our memory of Hailsham. And not an altogether happy one. But I appreciate, if you were there during just those years ...' She laughed to herself and seemed to be remembering something. In the hall, Madame was telling the men off really loudly, but Miss Emily now seemed to have lost interest. She was going through her memories with a look of concentration. Finally she said: 'She was a nice enough girl, Lucy Wainright. But after she'd been with us for a while, she began to have these ideas. She thought you students had to be made more aware. More aware of what lay ahead of you, who you were, what you were for. She believed you should be given as full a picture as possible. That to do anything less would be somehow to cheat you. We considered her view and concluded she was mistaken. '

'Why?' Tommy asked. 'Why did you think that?'

'Why? She meant well, I'm sure of that. I can see you were fond of her. She had the makings of an excellent guardian. But what she was wanting to do, it was too theoretical. We had run Hailsham for many years, we had a sense of what could work, what was best for the students in the long run, beyond Hailsham. Lucy Wainright was idealistic, nothing wrong with that. But she had no grasp of practicalities. You see, we were able to give you something, something which even now no one will ever take from you, and we were able to do that principally by sheltering you. Hailsham would not have been Hailsham if we hadn't. Very well, sometimes that meant we kept things from you, lied to you. Yes, in many ways we fooled you. I suppose you could even call it that. But we sheltered you during those years, and we gave you your childhoods. Lucy was well-meaning enough. But if she'd had her way, your happiness at Hailsham would have been shattered. Look at you both now! I'm so proud to see you both. You built your lives on what we gave you. You wouldn't be who you are today if we'd not protected you. You wouldn't have become absorbed in your lessons, you wouldn't have lost yourselves in your art and your writing. Why should you have done, knowing what lay in store for each of you? You would have told us it was all pointless, and how could we have argued with you? So she had to go. '

We could hear Madame now shouting at the men. She hadn't lost her temper exactly, but her voice was frighteningly stern, and the men's voices, which until this point had been arguing with her, fell silent.

‘Perhaps it’s just as well I’ve remained in here with you,’ Miss Emily said. ‘Marie-Claude does this sort of thing so much more efficiently.’

I don’t know what made me say it. Maybe it was because I knew the visit would have to finish pretty soon; maybe I was getting curious to know how exactly Miss Emily and Madame felt about each other. Anyway, I said to her, lowering my voice and nodding towards the doorway:

‘Madame never liked us. She’s always been afraid of us. In the way people are afraid of spiders and things.’

I waited to see if Miss Emily would get angry, no longer caring much if she did. Sure enough, she turned to me sharply, as if I’d thrown a ball of paper at her, and her eyes flashed in a way that reminded me of her Hailsham days. But her voice was even and soft when she replied:

‘Marie-Claude has given everything for you. She has worked and worked and worked. Make no mistake about it, my child, Marie-Claude is on your side and will always be on your side. Is she afraid of you? We’re all afraid of you. I myself had to fight back my dread of you all almost every day I was at Hailsham. There were times I’d look down at you all from my study window and I’d feel such revulsion ...’ She stopped, then something in her eyes flashed again. ‘But I was determined not to let such feelings stop me doing what was right. I fought those feelings and I won. Now, if you’d be so good as to help me out of here, George should be waiting with my crutches.’

With us at each elbow, she walked carefully into the hall, where a large man in a nursing uniform started with alarm and quickly produced a pair of crutches.

The front door was open to the street and I was surprised to see there was still daylight left. Madame’s voice was coming from outside, talking more calmly now to the men. It felt like time for Tommy and me to slip away, but the George man was helping Miss Emily with her coat, while she stood steadily between her crutches; there was no way we could get past, so we just waited. I suppose, too, we were waiting to say goodbye to Miss Emily; maybe, after everything else, we wanted to thank her, I'm not sure. But she was now preoccupied with her cabinet. She began to make some urgent point to the men outside, then left with George, not looking back at us.

Tommy and I stayed in the hall for a while longer, not sure what to do. When we did eventually wander outside, I noticed the lamps had come on all the way down the long street, even though the sky wasn't yet dark. A white van was starting up its engine. Right behind was a big old Volvo with Miss Emily in the passenger seat. Madame was crouching by the window, nodding to something Miss Emily was saying, while George closed up the boot and moved round to the driver's door. Then the white van moved off, and Miss Emily's car followed.

Madame watched the departing vehicles for a long time. Then she turned as though to go back into the house, and seeing us there on the pavement, stopped abruptly, almost shrinking back.

'We're going now,' I said. 'Thank you for talking to us. Please say goodbye to Miss Emily for us.'

I could see her studying me in the fading light. Then she said:

'Kathy H. I remember you. Yes, I remember.' She fell silent, but went on looking at me.

'I think I know what you're thinking about,' I said, in the end. 'I think I can guess.'

'Very well.' Her voice was dreamy and her gaze had slightly lost focus. 'Very well. You are a mind-reader. Tell me.'

‘There was a time you saw me once, one afternoon, in the dormitories. There was no one else around, and I was playing this tape, this music. I was sort of dancing with my eyes closed and you saw me.’

‘That’s very good. A mind-reader. You should be on the stage. I only recognised you just now. But yes, I remember that occasion. I still think about it from time to time.’

‘That’s funny. So do I.’

‘I see.’

We could have ended the conversation there. We could have said goodbye and left. But she stepped closer to us, looking into my face all the time.

‘You were much younger then,’ she said. ‘But yes, it’s you.’

‘You don’t have to answer this if you don’t want to,’ I said. ‘But it’s always puzzled me. May I ask you?’

‘You read my mind. But I cannot read yours.’

‘Well, you were ... upset that day. You were watching me, and when I realised, and I opened my eyes, you were watching me and I think you were crying. In fact, I know you were. You were watching me and crying. Why was that?’

Madame’s expression didn’t change and she kept staring into my face. ‘I was weeping,’ she said eventually, very quietly, as though afraid the neighbours were listening, ‘because when I came in, I heard your music. I thought some foolish student had left the music on. But when I came into your dormitory, I saw you, by yourself, a little girl, dancing. As you say, eyes closed, far away, a look of yearning. You were dancing so very sympathetically. And the music, the song. There was something in the words. It was full of sadness.’

‘The song,’ I said, ‘it was called “Never Let Me Go”.’ Then I sang a couple of lines quietly under my breath for her. ‘Never let me go. Oh, baby, baby. Never let me go ...’

She nodded as though in agreement. ‘Yes, it was that song. I’ve heard it once or twice since then. On the radio, on the television. And it’s taken me back to that little girl, dancing by herself.’

‘You say you’re not a mind-reader,’ I said. ‘But maybe you were that day. Maybe that’s why you started to cry when you saw me. Because whatever the song was really about, in my head, when I was dancing, I had my own version. You see, I imagined it was about this woman who’d been told she couldn’t have babies. But then she’d had one, and she was so pleased, and she was holding it ever so tightly to her breast, really afraid something might separate them, and she’s going baby, baby, never let me go. That’s not what the song’s about at all, but that’s what I had in my head that time. Maybe you read my mind, and that’s why you found it so sad. I didn’t think it was so sad at the time, but now, when I think back, it does feel a bit sad.’

I’d spoken to Madame, but I could sense Tommy shifting next to me, and was aware of the texture of his clothes, of everything about him. Then Madame said:

‘That’s most interesting. But I was no more a mind-reader then than today. I was weeping for an altogether different reason. When I watched you dancing that day, I saw something else. I saw a new world coming rapidly. More scientific, efficient, yes. More cures for the old sicknesses. Very good. But a harsh, cruel world. And I saw a little girl, her eyes tightly closed, holding to her breast the old kind world, one that she knew in her heart could not remain, and she was holding it and pleading, never to let her go. That is what I saw. It wasn’t really you, what you were doing, I know that. But I saw you and it broke my heart. And I've never forgotten.'

Then she came forward until she was only a step or two from us. 'Your stories this evening, they touched me too.' She looked now to Tommy, then back at me. 'Poor creatures. I wish I could help you. But now you're by yourselves.'

She reached out her hand, all the while staring into my face, and placed it on my cheek. I could feel a trembling go all through her body, but she kept her hand where it was, and I could see again tears appearing in her eyes.

'You poor creatures,' she repeated, almost in a whisper. Then she turned and went back into her house.

We hardly discussed our meeting with Miss Emily and Madame on the journey back. Or if we did, we talked only about the less important things, like how much we thought they'd aged, or the stuff in their house.

I kept us on the most obscure back roads I knew, where only our headlights disturbed the darkness. We'd occasionally encounter other headlights, and then I'd get the feeling they belonged to other carers, driving home alone, or maybe like me, with a donor beside them. I realised, of course, that other people used these roads; but that night, it seemed to me these dark byways of the country existed just for the likes of us, while the big glittering motorways with their huge signs and super cafés were for everyone else. I don't know if Tommy was thinking something similar. Maybe he was, because at one point, he remarked:

'Kath, you really know some weird roads.'

He did a little laugh as he said this, but then he seemed to fall deep into thought. Then as we were going down a particularly dark lane in the back of nowhere, he said suddenly:

'I think Miss Lucy was right. Not Miss Emily.'

I can't remember if I said anything to that. If I did, it certainly wasn't anything very profound. But that was the moment I first noticed it, something in his voice, or maybe his manner, that set off distant alarm bells. I remember taking my eyes off the twisting road to glance at him, but he was just sitting there quietly, gazing straight ahead into the night.

A few minutes later, he said suddenly: 'Kath, can we stop? I'm sorry, I need to get out a minute.'

Thinking he was feeling sick again, I pulled up almost immediately, hard against a hedge. The spot was completely unlit, and even with the car lights on, I was nervous another vehicle might come round the curve and run into us. That's why, when Tommy got out and disappeared into the blackness, I didn't go with him. Also, there'd been something purposeful about the way he'd got out that suggested even if he was feeling ill, he'd prefer to cope with it on his own. Anyway, that's why I was still in the car, wondering whether to move it a little further up the hill, when I heard the first scream.

At first I didn't even think it was him, but some maniac who'd been lurking in the bushes. I was already out of the car when the second and third screams came, and by then I knew it was Tommy, though that hardly lessened my urgency. In fact, for a moment, I was probably close to panic, not having a clue where he was. I couldn't really see anything, and when I tried to go towards the screams, I was stopped by an impenetrable thicket. Then I found an opening, and stepping through a ditch, came up to a fence. I managed to climb over it and I landed in soft mud.

I could now see my surroundings much better. I was in a field that sloped down steeply not far in front of me, and I could see the lights of some village way below in the valley. The wind here was really powerful, and a gust pulled at me so hard, I had to reach for the fence post. The moon wasn't quite full, but it was bright enough, and I could make out in the mid-distance, near where the field began to fall away, Tommy's figure, raging, shouting, flinging his fists and kicking out.

I tried to run to him, but the mud sucked my feet down. The mud was impeding him too, because one time, when he kicked out, he slipped and fell out of view into the blackness. But his jumbled swear-words continued uninterrupted, and I was able to reach him just as he was getting to his feet again. I caught a glimpse of his face in the moonlight, caked in mud and distorted with fury, then I reached for his flailing arms and held on tight. He tried to shake me off, but I kept holding on, until he stopped shouting and I felt the fight go out of him. Then I realised he too had his arms around me. And so we stood together like that, at the top of that field, for what seemed like ages, not saying anything, just holding each other, while the wind kept blowing and blowing at us, tugging our clothes, and for a moment, it seemed like we were holding onto each other because that was the only way to stop us being swept away into the night.

When at last we pulled apart, he muttered: 'I'm really sorry, Kath.' Then he gave a shaky laugh and added: 'Good job there weren't cows in the field. They'd have got a fright.'

I could see he was doing his best to reassure me it was all okay now, but his chest was still heaving and his legs shaking. We walked together back towards the car, trying not to slip.

'You stink of cow poo,' I said, finally.

'Oh God, Kath. How do I explain this? We'll have to sneak in round the back.'

'You'll still have to sign in.'

'Oh God,' he said, and laughed again.

I found some rags in the car and we got the worst of the muck off. But I'd taken out of the boot, just while I was searching for the rags, the sports bag containing his animal pictures, and when we set off again, I noticed Tommy brought it inside with him.

We travelled some way, not saying much, the bag on his lap. I was waiting for him to say something about the pictures; it even occurred to me he was working up to another rage, when he'd throw all the pictures out of the window. But he held the bag protectively with both hands and kept staring at the dark road unfolding before us. After a long period of silence, he said:

'I'm sorry about just now, Kath. I really am. I'm a real idiot.' Then he added: 'What are you thinking, Kath?'

'I was thinking,' I said, 'about back then, at Hailsham, when you used to go bonkers like that, and we couldn't understand it. We couldn't understand how you could ever get like that. And I was just having this idea, just a thought really. I was thinking maybe the reason you used to get like that was because at some level you always knew.'

Tommy thought about this, then shook his head. 'Don't think so, Kath. No, it was always just me. Me being an idiot. That's all it ever was.' Then after a moment, he did a small laugh and said: 'But that's a funny idea. Maybe I did know, somewhere deep down. Something the rest of you didn't.'

CHAPTER TWENTY-THREE

Nothing seemed to change much in the week or so after that trip. I didn't expect it to stay that way though, and sure enough, by the start of October, I started noticing little differences. For one thing, though Tommy carried on with his animal pictures, he became cagey about doing them in my presence. We weren't quite back to how it was when I'd first become his carer and all the Cottages stuff was still hanging over us. But it was like he'd thought about it and come to a decision: that he'd continue with the animals as the mood took him, but if I came in, he'd stop and put them away. I wasn't that hurt by this. In fact, in many ways, it was a relief: those animals staring us in the face when we were together would have only made things more awkward.

But there were other changes I found less easy. I don't mean we weren't still having some good times up in his room. We were even having sex every now and then. But what I couldn't help noticing was how, more and more, Tommy tended to identify himself with the other donors at the centre. If, for instance, the two of us were reminiscing about old Hailsham people, he'd sooner or later move the conversation round to one of his current donor friends who'd maybe said or done something similar to what we were recalling. There was one time in particular, when I drove into the Kingsfield after a long journey and stepped out of the car. The Square was looking a bit like that time I'd come to the centre with Ruth the day we'd gone to see the boat. It was an overcast autumn afternoon, and there was no one about except for a group of donors clustered under the overhanging roof of the recreation building. I saw Tommy was with them - he was standing with a shoulder against a post - and was listening to a donor who was sitting crouched on the entrance steps. I came towards them a little way, then stopped and waited, there in the open, under the grey sky. But Tommy, though he'd seen me, went on listening to his friend, and eventually he and all the others burst out laughing. Even then, he carried on listening and smiling. He claimed afterwards he'd signalled to me to come over, but if he had, it hadn't been at all obvious. All I registered was him smiling vaguely in my direction, then going back to what his friend was saying. Okay, he was in the middle of something, and after a minute or so, he did come away, and the two of us went up to his room. But it was quite different to the way things would have happened before. And it wasn't just that he'd kept me waiting out in the Square. I wouldn't have minded that so much. It was more that I sensed for the first time that day something close to resentment on his part at having to come away with me, and once we were up in his room, the atmosphere between us wasn't so great.

To be fair, a lot of it might have been down to me as much as him. Because as I'd stood there watching them all talking and laughing, I'd felt an unexpected little tug; because there was something about the way these donors had arranged themselves in a rough semi-circle, something about their poses, almost studiously relaxed, whether standing or sitting, as though to announce to the world how much each one of them was savouring the company, that reminded me of the way our little gang used to sit around our pavilion together. That comparison, as I say, tugged something inside me, and so maybe, once we were up in his room, it was as much me feeling resentful as the other way round.

I'd feel a similar little prickle of resentment each time he told me I didn't understand something or other because I wasn't yet a donor. But apart from one particular time, which I'll come to in a moment, a little prickle was all it was. Usually he'd say these things to me half-jokingly, almost affectionately. And even when there was something more to it, like the time he told me to stop taking his dirty washing to the laundry because he could do it himself, it hardly amounted to a row. That time, I'd asked him:

'What difference does it make, which one of us takes the towels down? I'm going out that way anyway.'

To which he'd shaken his head and said: 'Look, Kath, I'll sort out my own things. If you were a donor, you'd see.'

Okay, it did niggle, but it was something I could forget easily enough. But as I say, there was this one time he brought it up, about my not being a donor, that really riled me.

It happened about a week after the notice came for his fourth donation. We'd been expecting it and had already talked it through a lot. In fact, we'd had some of our most intimate conversations since the Littlehampton trip discussing the fourth donation. I've known donors to react in all sorts of ways to their fourth donation. Some want to talk about it all the time, endlessly and pointlessly. Others will only joke about it, while others refuse to discuss it at all. And then there's this odd tendency among donors to treat a fourth donation as something worthy of congratulations. A donor 'on a fourth', even one who's been pretty unpopular up till then, is treated with special respect. Even the doctors and nurses play up to this: a donor on a fourth will go in for a check and be greeted by whitecoats smiling and shaking their hand. Well, Tommy and I, we talked about all of this, sometimes jokingly, other times seriously and carefully. We discussed all the different ways people tried to handle it, and which ways made the best sense. Once, lying side by side on the bed with the dark coming on, he said:

'You know why it is, Kath, why everyone worries so much about the fourth? It's because they're not sure they'll really complete. If you knew for certain you'd complete, it would be easier. But they never tell us for sure.'

I'd been wondering for a while if this would come up, and I'd been thinking about how I'd respond. But when it did, I couldn't find much to say. So I just said: 'It's just a lot of rubbish, Tommy. Just talk, wild talk. It's not even worth thinking about.'

But Tommy would have known I had nothing to back up my words. He'd have known, too, he was raising questions to which even the doctors had no certain answers. You'll have heard the same talk. How maybe, after the fourth donation, even if you've technically completed, you're still conscious in some sort of way; how then you find there are more donations, plenty of them, on the other side of that line; how there are no more recovery centres, no carers, no friends; how there's nothing to do except watch your remaining donations until they switch you off. It's horror movie stuff, and most of the time people don't want to think about it. Not the whitecoats, not the carers - and usually not the donors. But now and again, a donor will bring it up, as Tommy did that evening, and I wish now we'd talked about it. As it was, after I dismissed it as rubbish, we both shrank back from the whole territory. At least, though, I knew it was on Tommy's mind after that, and I was glad he'd at least confided in me that far. What I'm saying is that all in all I was under the impression we were dealing with the fourth donation pretty well together, and that's why I was so knocked off balance by what he came out with that day we walked around the field.

The Kingsfield doesn't have much in the way of grounds. The Square's the obvious congregating point and the few bits behind the buildings look more like wasteland. The largest chunk, which the donors call 'the field', is a rectangle of overgrown weeds and thistles held in by wire-mesh fences. There's always been talk of turning it into a proper lawn for the donors, but they haven't done it yet, even now. It might not be so peaceful even if they did get round to it, because of the big road nearby. All the same, when donors get restless and need to walk it off, that's where they tend to go, scraping through all the nettles and brambles. The particular morning I'm talking about, it was really foggy, and I knew the field would be soaking, but Tommy had been insistent we go there for a walk. Not surprisingly, we were the only ones there - which probably suited Tommy fine. After crashing about the thickets for a few minutes, he stopped next to the fence and stared at the blank fog on the other side. Then he said:

'Kath, I don't want you to take this the wrong way. But I've been thinking it over a lot. Kath, I think I ought to get a different carer.'

In the few seconds after he said this, I realised I wasn't surprised by it at all; that in some funny way I'd been waiting for it. But I was angry all the same and didn't say anything.

'It's not just because the fourth donation's coming up,' he went on. 'It's not just about that. It's because of stuff like what happened last week. When I had all that kidney trouble. There's going to be much more stuff like that coming.'

'That's why I came and found you,' I said. 'That's exactly why I came to help you. For what's starting now. And it's what Ruth wanted too.'

'Ruth wanted that other thing for us,' Tommy said. 'She wouldn't necessarily have wanted you to be my carer through this last bit.'

'Tommy,' I said, and I suppose by now I was furious, but I kept my voice quiet and under control, 'I'm the one to help you. That's why I came and found you again.'

'Ruth wanted the other thing for us,' Tommy repeated. 'All this is something else. Kath, I don't want to be that way in front of you.'

He was looking down at the ground, a palm pressed against the wire-mesh fence, and for a moment he looked like he was listening intently to the sound of the traffic somewhere beyond the fog. And that was when he said it, shaking his head slightly:

‘Ruth would have understood. She was a donor, so she would have understood. I’m not saying she’d necessarily have wanted the same thing for herself. If she’d been able to, maybe she’d have wanted you as her carer right to the end. But she’d have understood, about me wanting to do it differently. Kath, sometimes you just don’t see it. You don’t see it because you’re not a donor.’

It was when he came out with this that I turned and walked off. As I said, I’d been almost prepared for the bit about not wanting me any more as his carer. But what had really stung, coming after all those other little things, like when he’d kept me standing in the Square, was what he’d said then, the way he’d divided me off yet again, not just from all the other donors, but from him and Ruth.

This never turned into a huge fight though. When I stalked off, there wasn’t much else I could do other than go back up to his room, and then he came up himself several minutes later. I’d cooled down by then and so had he, and we were able to have a better conversation about it. It was a bit stiff, but we made peace, and even got into some of the practicalities of changing carers. Then, as we were sitting in the dull light, side by side on the edge of his bed, he said to me:

‘I don’t want us to fight again, Kath. But I’ve been wanting to ask you this a lot. I mean, don’t you get tired of being a carer? All the rest of us, we became donors ages ago. You’ve been doing it for years. Don’t you sometimes wish, Kath, they’d hurry up and send you your notice?’

I shrugged. ‘I don’t mind. Anyway, it’s important there are good carers. And I’m a good carer.’

‘But is it really that important? Okay, it’s really nice to have a good carer. But in the end, is it really so important? The donors will all donate, just the same, and then they’ll complete.’

‘Of course it’s important. A good carer makes a big difference to what a donor’s life’s actually like.’

‘But all this rushing about you do. All this getting exhausted and being by yourself. I’ve been watching you. It’s wearing you out. You must do, Kath, you must sometimes wish they’d tell you you can stop. I don’t know why you don’t have a word with them, ask them why it’s been so long.’ Then when I kept quiet, he said: ‘I’m just saying, that’s all. Let’s not fight again.’

I put my head on his shoulder and said: ‘Yeah, well. Maybe it won’t be for much longer anyway. But for now, I have to keep going. Even if you don’t want me around, there are others who do.’

‘I suppose you’re right, Kath. You are a really good carer. You’d be the perfect one for me too if you weren’t you.’ He did a laugh and put his arm round me, though we kept sitting side by side. Then he said: ‘I keep thinking about this river somewhere, with the water moving really fast. And these two people in the water, trying to hold onto each other, holding on as hard as they can, but in the end it’s just too much. The current’s too strong. They’ve got to let go, drift apart. That’s how I think it is with us. It’s a shame, Kath, because we’ve loved each other all our lives. But in the end, we can’t stay together forever.’

When he said this, I remembered the way I’d held onto him that night in the wind-swept field on the way back from Littlehampton. I don’t know if he was thinking about that too, or if he was still thinking about his rivers and strong currents. In any case, we went on sitting like that on the side of the bed for a long time, lost in our thoughts. Then in the end I said to him:

‘I’m sorry I blew up at you earlier. I’ll talk to them. I’ll try and see to it you get someone really good.’

‘It’s a shame, Kath,’ he said again. And I don’t think we talked any more about it that morning.

I remember the few weeks that came after that – the last few weeks before the new carer took over – as being surprisingly tranquil. Maybe Tommy and I were making a special effort to be nice to each other, but the time seemed to slip by in an almost carefree way. You might think there would have been an air of unreality about us being like that, but it didn’t seem strange at the time. I was quite busy with a couple of my other donors in North Wales and that kept me from the Kingsfield more than I’d have wanted, but I still managed to come in three or four times a week. The weather grew colder, but stayed dry and often sunny, and we whiled away the hours in his room, sometimes having sex, more often just talking, or with Tommy listening to me read. Once or twice, Tommy even brought out his notebook and doodled away for new animal ideas while I read from the bed.

Then I came in one day and it was the last time. I arrived just after one o’clock on a crisp December afternoon. I went up to his room, half expecting some change – I don’t know what. Maybe I thought he’d have put up decorations in his room or something. But of course, everything was as normal, and all in all, that was a relief. Tommy didn’t look any different either, but when we started talking, it was hard to pretend this was just another visit. Then again, we’d talked over so much in the previous weeks, it wasn’t as though we had anything in particular we had to get through. And I think we were reluctant to start any new conversation we’d regret not being able to finish properly. That’s why there was a kind of emptiness to our talk that day.

Just once, though, after I’d been wandering aimlessly around his room for a while, I did ask him:

‘Tommy, are you glad Ruth completed before finding out everything we did in the end?’

He was lying on the bed, and went on staring at the ceiling for a while before saying: ‘Funny, because I was thinking about the same thing the other day. What you’ve got to remember about Ruth, when it came to things like that, she was always different to us. You and me, right from the start, even when we were little, we were always trying to find things out. Remember, Kath, all those secret talks we used to have? But Ruth wasn’t like that. She always wanted to believe in things. That was Ruth. So yeah, in a way, I think it’s best the way it happened.’ Then he added: ‘Of course, what we found out, Miss Emily, all of that, it doesn’t change anything about Ruth. She wanted the best for us at the end. She really wanted the best for us.’

I didn’t want to get into a big discussion about Ruth at that stage, so I just agreed with him. But now I’ve had more time to think about it, I’m not so sure how I feel. A part of me keeps wishing we’d somehow been able to share everything we discovered with Ruth. Okay, maybe it would have made her feel bad; made her see whatever damage she’d once done to us couldn’t be repaired as easily as she’d hoped. And maybe, if I’m honest, that’s a small part of my wishing she knew it all before she completed. But in the end, I think it’s about something else, something much more than my feeling vengeful and mean-spirited. Because as Tommy said, she wanted the best for us at the end, and though she said that day in the car I’d never forgive her, she was wrong about that. I’ve got no anger left for her now. When I say I wish she’d found out the whole score, it’s more because I feel sad at the idea of her finishing up different from me and Tommy. The way it is, it’s like there’s a line with us on one side and Ruth on the other, and when all’s said and done, I feel sad about that, and I think she would too if she could see it.

Tommy and I, we didn’t do any big farewell number that day. When it was time, he came down the stairs with me, which he didn't usually do, and we walked across the Square together to the car. Because of the time of year, the sun was already setting behind the buildings. There were a few shadowy figures, as usual, under the overhanging roof, but the Square itself was empty. Tommy was silent all the way to the car. Then he did a little laugh and said:

'You know, Kath, when I used to play football back at Hailsham. I had this secret thing I did. When I scored a goal, I'd turn round like this' - he raised both arms up in triumph - 'and I'd run back to my mates. I never went mad or anything, just ran back with my arms up, like this.' He paused for a moment, his arms still in the air. Then he lowered them and smiled. 'In my head, Kath, when I was running back, I always imagined I was splashing through water. Nothing deep, just up to the ankles at the most. That's what I used to imagine, every time. Splash, splash, splash.' He put his arms up again. 'It felt really good. You've just scored, you turn, and then, splash, splash, splash.' He looked at me and did another little laugh. 'All this time, I never told a single soul.'

I laughed too and said: 'You crazy kid, Tommy.'

After that, we kissed - just a small kiss - then I got into the car. Tommy kept standing there while I turned the thing round. Then as I pulled away, he smiled and waved. I watched him in my rear-view, and he was standing there almost till the last moment. Right at the end, I saw him raise his hand again vaguely and turn away towards the overhanging roof. Then the Square had gone from the mirror.

I was talking to one of my donors a few days ago who was complaining about how memories, even your most precious ones, fade surprisingly quickly. But I don't go along with that. The memories I value most, I don't see them ever fading. I lost Ruth, then I lost Tommy, but I won't lose my memories of them.

I suppose I lost Hailsham too. You still hear stories about some ex-Hailsham student trying to find it, or rather the place where it used to be. And the odd rumour will go round sometimes about what Hailsham's become these days - a hotel, a school, a ruin. Myself, for all the driving I do, I've never tried to find it. I'm not really interested in seeing it, whatever way it is now.

Mind you, though I say I never go looking for Hailsham, what I find is that sometimes, when I'm driving around, I suddenly think I've spotted some bit of it. I see a sports pavilion in the distance and I'm sure it's ours. Or a row of poplars on the horizon next to a big woolly oak, and I'm convinced for a second I'm coming up to the South Playing Field from the other side. Once, on a grey morning, on a long stretch of road in Gloucestershire, I passed a broken-down car in a lay-by, and I was sure the girl standing in front of it, gazing emptily out towards the on-coming vehicles, was Susanna C., who'd been a couple of years above us and one of the Sales monitors. These moments hit me when I'm least expecting it, when I'm driving with something else entirely in my mind. So maybe at some level, I am on the lookout for Hailsham.

But as I say, I don't go searching for it, and anyway, by the end of the year, I won't be driving around like this any more. So the chances are I won't ever come across it now, and on reflection, I'm glad that's the way it'll be. It's like with my memories of Tommy and of Ruth. Once I'm able to have a quieter life, in whichever centre they send me to, I'll have Hailsham with me, safely in my head, and that'll be something no one can take away.

The only indulgent thing I did, just once, was a couple of weeks after I heard Tommy had completed, when I drove up to Norfolk, even though I had no real need to. I wasn't after anything in particular and I didn't go up as far as the coast. Maybe I just felt like looking at all those flat fields of nothing and the huge grey skies. At one stage I found myself on a road I'd never been on, and for about half an hour I didn't know where I was and didn't care. I went past field after flat, featureless field, with virtually no change except when occasionally a flock of birds, hearing my engine, flew up out of the furrows. Then at last I spotted a few trees in the distance, not far from the roadside, so I drove up to them, stopped and got out.

I found I was standing before acres of ploughed earth. There was a fence keeping me from stepping into the field, with two lines of barbed wire, and I could see how this fence and the cluster of three or four trees above me were the only things breaking the wind for miles. All along the fence, especially along the lower line of wire, all sorts of rubbish had caught and tangled. It was like the debris you get on a seashore: the wind must have carried some of it for miles and miles before finally coming up against these trees and these two lines of wire. Up in the branches of the trees, too, I could see, flapping about, torn plastic sheeting and bits of old carrier bags. That was the only time, as I stood there, looking at that strange rubbish, feeling the wind coming across those empty fields, that I started to imagine just a little fantasy thing, because this was Norfolk after all, and it was only a couple of weeks since I'd lost him. I was thinking about the rubbish, the flapping plastic in the branches, the shore-line of odd stuff caught along the fencing, and I half-closed my eyes and imagined this was the spot where everything I'd ever lost since my childhood had washed up, and I was now standing here in front of it, and if I waited long enough, a tiny figure would appear on the horizon across the field, and gradually get larger until I'd see it was Tommy, and he'd wave, maybe even call. The fantasy never got beyond that - I didn't let it - and though the tears rolled down my face, I wasn't sobbing or out of control. I just waited a bit, then turned back to the car, to drive off to wherever it was I was supposed to be.

我辈孤雏

第一部

一九三〇年七月二十四日・伦敦

第一章

那是一九二三年夏天的事了。那年夏天，我不顾姑妈要我返回什罗普郡的期望，离开剑桥南下，决定未来在首都发展，于是租下肯辛顿区贝德福德花园街十四号b室这间小公寓。如今回想起来，夏天就属那年的最美好。在寄宿学校，在剑桥读大学的时代，我长年生活在人群里，到了伦敦可以独来独往，真是惬意。我喜欢伦敦的公园，还有大英博物馆宁静的阅览室；兴致来了，就在肯辛顿区的街道逛一整个下午，天马行空想着未来的计划，走久了便把脚步稍歇，赞叹在英国这个国家，连这样的大都会区，也看得到爬山虎、常春藤攀爬在雅宅门面上的秀姿。

就在某一次这样的信步漫游里，我与老同窗詹姆斯·奥斯本不期而遇，发现他就住在附近，便邀他下回路过不妨上来小坐。尽管在此之前，我不曾邀谁到过我的住处，我却有信心他会接受邀请，因为这住所可是精心挑选的。房租虽然不贵，房东太太的装潢却十分不俗，散发着维多利亚前朝的悠闲；白天时分，客厅里阳光充足，陈设着一座年代久远的长沙发，还有两张舒适的单人扶手沙发椅、一个古董杯盘柜，以及一屏橡木书橱，里头满满地摆着一套老旧欲碎的百科全书——我相信这些东西正合这位客人的品味。除此之外，刚接下这栋公寓的时候，我就步行到骑士桥买了一套安妮女王风格的茶具、几包上好的茶和一大罐饼干。几天后，奥斯本真的突然在早晨时分来访，我便能以茶点招待，并且有十足把握——他绝对想不到，在此之前从来没有别的访客。

在头一刻钟里，奥斯本在客厅里四处走动，又赞美我公寓好，又东看看、西摸摸，还不时探头往窗外望，夸这里的街景新鲜。看了好一会儿，他终于在长沙发上安坐下来，我们这才开始叙旧——聊我们的近况与昔日校园友人最近发生的事。我记得我们谈了一会儿各个工会的活动，话题就转向了德国哲学，这场辩论漫长而愉快，展现出我们在不同学府里各自修成的功力。接着奥斯本又起来走动，一边高谈阔论他未来的各种计划。

“我打算到出版界，没错。报社、杂志社，这类机关。不瞒你说，我想辟个专栏，谈论政治、社会议题。当然啦，我的意思是，如果我决定不从政的话。我说班克斯，你真的还没想过自己未来要干什

么吗？瞧，前程就在那儿。”他指向窗外。“你总有些什么计划吧？”

“也算有，”我报以微笑。“是有那么一两件在心里，到时候你自然明白。”

“你葫芦里卖什么药？别卖关子，就说何妨！不说看我怎么拷问你。”

我还是没露半点口风，过了一会儿，我就把话题引开，跟他辩一些哲学、诗歌之类的闲事。约莫中午的时候，奥斯本忽然想起他在皮卡迪利有个午餐约会要赶赴，便收拾起随身的东西。人走到门边却又转身说：

“对了，老兄，有件事差点忘了。今天晚上我要参加一个宴会。主客是伦纳德·艾弗夏，就是那位商场大亨，主人是我家族的某位长辈。现在才讲有点仓促，不过，不知道你肯不肯赏光？我可是诚心诚意。老早就想跟你提，不巧都没谈到这上头。地点是在查林沃思。”

他看我一时没有答话，靠近一步对我说：

“我邀你是因为我想起来了。我记得你以前总是拿我的‘家世不凡’来审我。少来了，现在可别跟我装傻撇清。你当年严词拷问起我来可是一点儿也不饶人。‘家世不凡？你给我说清楚一点，是怎么个不凡法？’好吧，现在机会来了，就让班克斯老兄自己亲眼来看看‘家世不凡’是怎么回事吧。”他接着还摇了摇头，仿佛在回想往事。“可不是？以前在学校里，你可真是怪胎一个哟。”我相信我是到这个节骨眼上，才接受了那晚的邀约——那一晚对我的影响，比我想像的还深远许多，这点往后自然会说明——奥斯本最后这句话听来刺耳，我且藏起愠色，送他出门。

事后我坐了下来，烦闷竟又浮上心头。事情是这样子，我心下忽然灵光一闪，明白了奥斯本那句话指的是什么。其实，整个学生时代里，我一直听人说奥斯本如何“家世不凡”。只要提到他，总是会听到这个说法，我相信，就连我提到他的时候，也会适时地用上几次。我经常暗自思忖，他这个人尽管长相、举止跟我们其他人殊无二致，却与王公贵族、各派权贵有讳莫如深的关系。然而他指控我“严词拷问”他，我可是怎么想也没那回事。他的背景确实让我在十四五岁时纳闷不已，不过奥斯本跟我在学生时代并不算亲，在记忆里，我们两人凑在一块儿，也就只有那么一次。

那是一个有雾的秋晨，我们两人并坐在一家乡间客栈外的矮墙上。我猜想我们应该上中学五年级了。我们在一场越野赛跑里，负责指示路线，就等选手破雾而来，经过附近的田野，我们便把正确的方向指出来，前面有条泥泞小径等着他们。我们看看时间还早，选手还不会到，就随便聊了起来。我肯定就是这一次，我问奥斯本究竟他家里有哪些“有头有脸”的人物。奥斯本尽管言行浮夸，本性倒还算谦虚，只顾左右而言他。我追问再三，他拗不过才说：

“班克斯，你就饶了我行不行。全是胡说八道，哪有什么有头有脸的。谁没认识几个人嘛，大家总是有爹娘、亲戚、世交等等。我不知道这有什么好让别人弄得神秘兮兮的。”他忽然发现自己言语唐突了，转身碰碰我的手臂。“真不好意思，老哥。我这张嘴就是会闯祸。”

这个“失言”似乎让奥斯本比我还难过。若要说这件事这么多年来一直留在他心头，那也未必不可能，因此他邀请我当晚陪他去查林沃思俱乐部，也算是弥补当年失言之过。其实，那个有雾的早晨，虽然他言语的确失当，可是我真的一点都不在意。我那些贫嘴的同学，对于别人的种种不幸，有哪桩不是大家抢着调侃的，偏偏每个人一提到我父母不在，都肃穆哀戚起来，老实说，后来我还真是看不下去呢。其实别人也许觉得奇怪，但我自己对于无父无母这件事——甚至没有什么近亲在英国（除了什罗普郡那位姑妈以外）——一早就觉得没有什么不便之处。我还常跟同学说，读我们这种寄宿学校，大家都得学会过没父没母的日子，我的情况并没有特殊到哪里。总之，如今回顾这段往事，我对奥斯本“家世不凡”的着迷，部分原因可能是因为我记得当时自己的人际关系，完全止于圣邓斯坦中学的围墙之内。而我一点也不怀疑，有朝一日，我也会为自己建立这样的人脉，出人头地。然而，或许我相信从奥斯本那里可以学到个中奥妙，学到这种事情的原理。

不过，我刚才说奥斯本离开前说的话让我听了刺耳，并不是指他说我多年前嘴上不饶人。其实我不以为然的部分，是他那句脱口而出的评语，说我以前在学校里，可真是怪胎一个。

事实上，奥斯本那天早上为何如此形容我，我至今依然不解，因为我记得我已加入英国的学校生活，跟大家水乳交融。就算是刚到圣邓斯坦的头几个星期，我也没做出什么让自己出糗的事。就拿我到校的第一天为例，我记得我就发现了许多学生站着交谈时，有一套肢体语言——把右手插进背心口袋，说到什么重点，左肩便如耸肩般上下晃

动，作为强调。我清清楚楚记得，就在这到校的头一天，我已经把这套肢体语言运用得相当纯熟，没有哪个同学察觉什么异样或者想趁机取笑我。

我就这样胆大心细，迅速吸收其他肢体动作、语句转折、同侪惯常使用的大呼小叫等，至于掌握这个新环境里更深层的主流道德观与礼节，自然不在话下。我当然立刻就明白，我最好不要公开畅谈自己对于犯罪行为与侦查手段的看法——这个在我住在上海的日子里是家常便饭。这个部分我做得十分彻底，即便到了我在圣邓斯坦的第三年，校园里失窃事件频传，全校掀起一阵侦探热，我还是小心翼翼地不沾任何是非，必要时仅虚应一下。无疑也正是心中还残留的这种处世态度，让我在奥斯本来访的那个早晨，不肯多谈自己的“计划”。

然而尽管我想办法藏得滴水不漏，但是在印象中，我在学生时代还是至少有两件事显示我放松了警戒，让别人瞥见我心中的大志。就算在当时，我也无法解释自己为什么会这样做，到了今天当然就更不可能这么做了。

较早的那次，发生在我十四岁生日那天。我当时的两个好友，罗伯特·索顿—布朗与拉塞尔·斯坦顿，带我到镇上的茶点铺，享用烤饼与奶油蛋糕。那是个下雨的周六午后，店里座无虚席。于是每过一会儿，就会有满身雨水的镇民走进店里，四处看看，然后对我们投以不满的眼光，仿佛认为我们应该立刻把桌位让给他们。还好老板娘乔丹太太向来对我们照顾有加，在我生日那天下午，我们更觉得有十足的权利占用店里最好的桌位，就在飘窗旁边，窗外还有小镇的广场可以欣赏。那天我们聊什么，我大半忘了；不过等东西吃完，我的两个同伴相互使了几个眼色，索顿—布朗把手伸进背包里，拿出一个包装成礼物的包裹给我。

我动手撕开包装，才发现这个包裹不知道裹了几层，每当我揭去一层，却发现里头还有另一层，我的朋友就会哈哈大笑。这一切都显示，包裹拆到最后，里头的东西恐怕是要开我玩笑的。最后，从包裹里头冒出来的，是一只覆着皮革的盒子，我把小巧的扣片打开，掀起盒盖，里头是一把放大镜。

此时它就在我手上。它的模样这么多年来并没有什么改变；在那天下午之前，那把放大镜早已历尽沧桑。我记得我当时就看出这点，还发现它的放大效果绝佳，而且出奇地沉重，还有，那象牙镜柄有一边完全剥落。有一点则是后来才发现的一上头的镌文要拿另一把放大镜才看得清楚——它是一八八七年于苏黎世制造的。

收到这件礼物，我的第一个反应是欢天喜地。我抓起放大镜，把桌上成堆的包装纸扫到一边——我猜我正在兴头上，也不管包装纸有没有掉到地上——立刻用它来端详桌布上的奶油渍。我聚精会神地看，只是隐约听到我两个朋友捧腹狂笑——这个礼物显然就是要调侃我一番。等我抬头，总算感觉到有点尴尬，他们也不好意思地静了下来。这时候索顿——布朗挤出个戏谑的表情说：

“我们觉得，既然你立志要做侦探，你会需要这种东西。”

到了这个节骨眼，我灵机一动，虚应了一下，假装他们这个玩笑开得戏而不谑。不过，我猜想我那两个朋友觉得自己的玩笑开得莫名其妙，于是茶点铺里的气氛再也无法恢复先前那般融洽。

我想到的第二件类似情况，发生在几年之后——在六年级下学期——不过这事我反而记得没那么详细。说真的，这件事的前情与后续，我忘得一干二净。我只是有个印象：我走进教室——“旧隐修院”第十五教室——一道道阳光正好从狭窄的修道院窗户泻下，照亮了悬浮在空中的灰尘。老师虽然还没到，不过我一定到得比其他人稍迟，因为我记得同学已经三五成群坐在书桌、长椅、窗台等处。我走近五六个同学围成的一群，他们忽然全都转过头来看我，我当下明白他们正在谈我。我还来不及说什么，其中一位叫做罗杰·布伦瑟斯特的同学指着我说：

“他想当福尔摩斯，未免矮了点吧。”

有几个同学笑了出来，笑声里倒没什么恶意，这就是我所能记得的一切了。我再也没听到有人谈到我想成为“福尔摩斯”的壮志，但过后不久，却觉得心头有根拔不掉的芒刺，担心我的秘密已经曝光，成为我不在场时的话题。

顺带一提，在我进圣邓斯坦之前，周遭的情势就已经让我觉得，我得小心避免碰触到我做侦探的志向这个话题。因为我到英国的头几个星期里，大部分的时间都待在姑妈什罗普郡的木屋附近，在那片公有的绿地上闲逛，在潮湿的蕨丛之间排演秋良跟我在上海一起编造出来的侦探故事。如今只剩我一人，我自然也得扮演他的戏份；此外，由于我感觉到从木屋可以看见我的一举一动，因此我怀着戒心把剧情动作缩小，台词则咕哝在嘴里，压着嗓子念——这跟过去我与秋良奔放不羁的惯用方式完全不同。

如此小心翼翼，终究还是徒劳。一天早晨，我在我阁楼的小房间里，无意间听到楼下客厅里姑妈跟客人在说话。原本我并不在意，可是他们忽然把声音压低，让我心生好奇，不由自主地蹑起脚步，溜到楼梯转角处，靠在扶栏上。

“他一去就是好几个钟头，”我听到她这样说，“才这么大的孩子，就这样整天自己一个，不理别人，简直有问题。他好歹也该看开了。”

“其实也难为他了，不是吗？”客人说，“才多大，就经历了那些事。”

“他这样闷着也没有好处，”我姑妈说，“他不愁吃、不愁穿，退一步想想，还算好命的了。这么久，也该看开了。我是说，不要再这样钻牛角尖。”

从那天起，我就不再去那块公有的绿地闲逛了，而且渐渐在各方面把“钻牛角尖”的样子收藏起来。不过，当时我只是个小毛头，夜阑人静躺在阁楼的房间里，听着地板吱吱作响——那是姑妈在木屋里走动，给时钟上发条，还有喂猫——我常常就在脑子里又把所有的戏码排练一番，就像秋良跟我从前做的那样。

还是回头谈谈奥斯本光临我肯辛顿寓所的那个夏日吧。我不希望让人以为我念念不忘他说我是“怪胎”，这事只怕没一会儿就被我抛诸脑后了。其实，奥斯本走后一会儿，我自己也跟着出门，心情还算不错，没多久就到了圣詹姆斯公园，在花坛间溜达，心中愈来愈期待当晚的聚会。

回想起那个下午，我的印象是，照理说我该觉得有点紧张才对，可是我一点也不，正是这种愚昧的傲慢，带着我度过了早年的伦敦岁月。我自然明白那天晚上我将见到的场面，那层次绝不是我在大学里见识过的；此外，也可能碰到我还不熟悉的应对礼节。不过，我觉得以我向来的精明，总有办法化解这类难题，大体上可以让自己举止合宜。我在公园闲逛时，心中关注的是别的事。当奥斯本提及某些“家世不凡”的客人时，我立刻假想其中至少包括几位当时顶尖的侦探。我猜想那天下午，我花了许多时间练习要怎么把自己介绍给马特洛克·斯蒂文森，或者甚至是乔维尔教授。我一而再、再而三地练习，要怎么在谦虚中带着几分自重，陈述自己的雄心壮志；我想像其中会有人怜惜我这个后生晚辈，提供我种种建议，坚持要我将来若有什么不懂的一定要去问他。

当晚自然是令我大失所望——尽管现在回顾起来，却因为不相干的理由，使得那晚别具意义。我当时尚不知情的是，在英国，侦探通常不参与社交聚会。倒不是没人邀请；我自己最近的经验证实了这一点，时髦的社交圈子向来想要把当时出名的侦探拉进自己的圈子里，只不过这些侦探常常也是诚恳而离群索居的个人，他们投入工作，一点也不想跟别人交往，更别提参加什么上流社会的社交活动了。

如我所说，那天晚上到达查林沃思俱乐部时，我并不了解这点。我有样学样跟着奥斯本向制服体面的门房愉快地打个招呼。可是才走进二楼拥挤的厅堂，没几分钟我就大失所望。我不知道事情发生的确切情况如何——因为我没时间确定在场的是哪些人物——只不过我凭直觉恍然悟到自己下午的兴奋期待真是愚蠢之至。忽然间，我不敢相信自己竟然会以为马特洛克·斯蒂文森或者乔维尔教授会在这里，跟眼前这些金融要人或政界高官生张熟魏地交际。说真的，整个下午我想得天花乱坠，而实际情况竟是如此，其间的巨大落差让我在诧异之余手足无措，至少一时之间无法回神，结果有半个多钟头，即使我心中不愿，却也不敢离开奥斯本身边。

我敢说，就是这种不愉快的心理因素让我如今忆起当晚的许多景象，都显得有点夸大或者不自然。例如，现在回想起那个房间，我就觉得好暗；尽管墙上有壁灯，桌上有烛火，头顶上还有一盏大吊灯——却无一挥得去笼罩全室的昏暗。地毯则是过厚，大家走动时不得不拖着步伐，而环顾室内各处，一些头发泛白、穿着黑色上装的人全都这么做，有些还把肩膀向前倾，仿佛顶着强风走路。托着银盘的侍者也一样得向前倾个角度才能跟客人交谈。在场的女士没有几位，却又出奇地内敛，几乎一眨眼就溶化在黑色晚礼服的森林里，失去踪影。

我刚才说了，我很确定这些印象并不准确，不过那个晚上在我心里留下的就是这幅光景。我记得我像个木头人似的，别扭地站在奥斯本身边，反复啜着杯中的饮料，奥斯本客气地与客人交谈，一个换过一个，客人们大都长我们足足三十岁有余。有那么一两次我想加入交谈，不过我的声音很显然稚气未脱，更何况他们谈论的人或事，我都一无所知。

后来，我愈想愈气一气我自己，气奥斯本，气这一切。我觉得我有十足资格鄙视身边的这些人；他们大部分都贪婪而自私自利，心中没有半点理想抱负或是对大众的责任感。仗着胸口的怒火，我终于离开奥斯本身边，在昏暗中到房里的别处走走。

我来到一处微弱光环笼罩的角落，光源是一盏小壁灯。这里人没那么挤，我发现有位年约七旬的银发先生背对着房间抽烟。我看了一会儿才明白，他凝视着一面镜子，那时他也察觉了我在看他。我正想走开，他却向镜中的我说：

“玩得愉快吗？”

“还不错，”我报以浅笑，“托您的福。这场面可不小。”

“有点混乱哦？”

我迟疑了一下，又笑了笑。“也许有一点吧。是有那么点儿，先生。”

银发先生转过身来，仔细把我打量一番。接着才说：“这里头谁是谁，我略有所知，你想知道的话，我可以告诉你。假如其中有哪位你特别想认识，我可以代为引见。你觉得如何？”

“果真如此，晚辈真是感激不尽。”

“好说。”

他向我靠近一步，环顾屋里有哪些人在我们眼前。接着就在我耳边说，这位是某某，那位是某某，并且把人指给我看。即使是鼎鼎有名的人物，他也好心地为我补上“这位是银行家”或“那位是作曲家”等等。名气没那么大的，他会把这个人的事业做个摘要说明，并告诉我这个人为什么重要。我想，就是在他谈到离我们极近的一位牧师时，他冷不防地岔开话题说：

“哪，我看你没在听哦……”

“真是对不起……”

“无妨，无妨。窈窕淑女，君子好逑嘛。像你这样的年轻小伙子。”

“我保证我……”

“欸，你何罪之有，”他笑一笑，用肘部顶一顶我的手臂。“你觉得她美吗？”

我不知道该怎么反应才妥。我委实无法否认，我分心去看了左侧约莫十步之外的一位少妇，她正在和两位中年男士聊天。不过实情是，刚看第一眼，我并不觉得她有什么姿色可言。情况甚至可能是这样的：在那个时刻与地点，我第一次看到她，便不知怎么地感受到她的一些重要特质，那是我后来才得到验证的。我看到的是位娇小得像个小精灵的少妇，留着及肩的黑发。尽管当时她显然想讨好与她交谈的男士，但我看得出来，她的笑容随时都可以立刻变成嘲笑。她的肩膀微耸，有如鹰隼，她的姿态泄露了心中的城府。最重要的是，我在她眼睛周围注意到一种特质——可说是严厉而苛刻到无情的眼神——如今我回想起来，那天晚上，主要就是为了这点，我才如此醉心地注视她。

正当我们还在对她品头论足的时候，她向我们望过来，认出我身边的同伴，对他冷冷一笑。银发先生也回礼，并且郑重地鞠躬。

“迷人的女孩，”他口中喃喃念着，同时把我带开，“不过，像你这样的年轻小伙子，倒不必浪费时间去追她。恕我直言，你实在像个乖小孩儿。人家可是亨明斯小姐。莎拉·亨明斯小姐。”

那个名字对我没有任何意义可言。我这位向导，虽然在此之前都用心良苦地为我解说他点到名的客人的背景资料，这回却只说了姓名，显然认为我也闻名已久。因此我就顺势点头说：

“说的也是。原来那就是亨明斯小姐。”

老先生又停了下来，找了个新的山头开始瞭望。

“让我看一看。我猜你正在寻找可以提拔你的贵人。猜对了吧？别担心。我自己年轻的时候也玩这套。还有谁在这儿。让我看一看，今天有谁来了？”接着，他忽然转身问我：“你刚才说，你的人生抱负是什么？”

在此之前，我根本什么都还没谈到。不过既然如此，我迟疑了一下，便明白地告诉他：

“侦探，先生。”

“侦探？这个嘛……”他的目光继续在室内搜寻，“你不会是指……警探吧？”

“我指的是私人的咨询服务。”

他点点头。“那当然，那当然。”他继续抽了口雪茄，心思重重。接着他说：“你不会碰巧对博物馆有兴趣吧？那边那个家伙，认识他好多年了。博物馆。骨头、古物，那类东西。没兴趣？我想也是。”他继续环视屋内各处，有时伸长脖子好把人看个清楚。“当然啦，”他最后开口说道，“许多年轻人梦想要当侦探。我敢说，在我年少轻狂时也做过这种梦。你这个年纪的人，心中充满理想抱负，一心想做名震一代的大侦探，单枪匹马就除尽世上所有恶人。值得嘉许。不过，说真的，小伙子，不妨这么说吧，你好歹也有别的退路。因为过个一两年，恕我直言，反正过不了多久，你对世事会有完全不同的看法。有没有兴趣从事家具业？我会问，是因为那边那位先生不是别人，正是哈米什·罗伯逊本人。”

“我并无冒犯之意，先生。不过方才晚辈陈述的志向，绝不是一时奇想，是我一生都感受到的召唤。”

“一生？你能有多大年纪？二十一？二十二？我想我是不该泼你冷水。毕竟，假如连年轻人都没有半点理想主义式的想法，谁还会有呢？那么，小伙子，你必然认为今日世风，比起三十年前要败坏啰？而文明已在崩溃边缘，诸如此类的？”

“老实说，先生，”我直言不讳，“我正是这么认为。”

“记得当年，我也是这么想。”忽然间，他讥讽的口吻变得厚道许多，我甚至觉得我看到他泪水盈眶，“怎么会这样子呢？小伙子，你觉得呢？世风真的一日不如一日吗？难道智人正一步步地堕落成动物？”

“这点我也不明白，先生。”我回答，语气温和多了，“我只能说，从客观的角度来看，现代的罪犯变得愈来愈聪明。他们的胃口变大，胆量也更大，科学更是为他们准备了全套崭新的先进作案工具，供他们使用。”

“原来如此。要是没有你这种才华高的有为青年站在我们这边，未来就不堪设想了，是这样吗？”他悲哀地摇摇头，“看来你也许真

的有心。我这样的老家伙太喜欢说风凉话了。小伙子，也许你说的没错。或许是我们放任事情恶化。唉！”

莎拉·亨明斯从我们身边走过，银发先生再度向她点头致意。她以高傲的优雅穿过人群，目光左右搜寻还有谁配站在她身边——我这么觉得。她注意到我的同伴，脸上闪过一抹微笑回礼，就跟刚才一样，不过脚步半点也没减缓。有那么一刹那，她的目光落在我身上，但转瞬间就把我抛诸脑后，我还来不及对她微笑，她早已穿过人群，走向房中另一个新发现的目标。

晚宴结束后，我和奥斯本共乘一辆计程车急驰回肯辛顿区，我试着从他那里多套点关于莎拉·亨明斯的事。奥斯本虽然满口说那晚的聚会真无聊，其实他满意得很，急着要仔仔细细地跟我说，他跟哪些达官贵人谈了多少事情。看来我不装出求知若渴的样子，是不可能让他把话题转到亨明斯小姐身上的。好不容易我才把他的话头引到亨明斯小姐的身上：

“亨明斯小姐吗？这个嘛，我想起来了。曾经跟海列特—刘易斯订婚。你知道的，那位指挥家。接着，海列特—刘易斯就在艾伯特亲王纪念厅举行舒伯特作品的音乐会，就去年秋天。记不记得，那简直是一场灾难。”

我向他承认，不曾听说这件事，奥斯本继续说：

“他们差点要把椅子砸过去，还好椅子都钉死在地上。《泰晤士报》有个记者还形容那次演出是‘胡搞乱来’呢。还是用‘污辱乐迷’这个字眼？反正他也不在乎。”

“而亨明斯小姐呢……”

“她把他甩了，像个烫山芋似的。显然她把订婚戒指退回去了，从此躲他躲得远远的。”

“就为了那场音乐会？”

“这个嘛，反正事情闹得很大。引起不小的骚动呢。我是说，她解除婚约这件事。不过，班克斯，今晚那些人真是无聊透了。你觉得等我们上了那个年纪，会不会也变成那样？”

离开剑桥后的头一年里，大半拜奥斯本的交情所赐，我发现我每隔一阵子就有时髦的社交宴会可以参与。那段人生，现在蓦然想起，觉得当时真是不务正业。我周游于晚宴、午餐聚会、鸡尾酒会之间，

通常都在布卢姆斯伯里区以及霍尔本区的公寓里举行。我下定决心要改掉那夜我在查林沃思表现的别扭，我在这类场合的表现也日益稳健。一点也不假，有那么一阵子，我甚至可以说，我在时髦的伦敦社交圈里也占有一席之地。

亨明斯小姐不属于我那个圈子，不过每当我跟朋友提起她时，任谁都知道有这个人。此外，在晚宴聚会里，或者在一些豪华饭店的午茶厅里，也经常瞥见她的身影。总之，关于她在伦敦社交圈的事迹，我总算累积了不少资料。

关于她，当时我所知的一切，不过是些模糊的二手印象，回想这样的日子，真是别有趣味！不用多久我就确定，许多人对她并无好感。即使与安东尼·海列特—刘易斯解除婚约之前，她早就因为许多人形容她的“直性子”而得罪了不少人。海列特—刘易斯的朋友—他们的看法恐怕无法客观，实在不足为信—说她先前曾经不择手段倒追这位指挥家。有人则指控她玩弄海列特—刘易斯的朋友，好接近他。她后来又把这位指挥家给甩了，有人觉得不解，有人则认为这恰好证实当初她就不安好心。反观我听说的，很多都是说亨明斯小姐好话的。我常听到人家说她“慧黠”、“迷人”、“有深度”。女性尤其支持她有解除婚约的权利，不论她的理由为何。然而，即使是为她说话的人，也同意她是“新品种的势利鬼”；同意她是认名不认人，倘若没有个显赫的姓氏，她连正眼也不瞧你。我也得承认，尽管那一年我只是在远处观察她，也实在找不到什么可以推翻这些说法。一点也不假，有时候她让我觉得，只有顶尖杰出人才周围的空气，她才呼吸得惯。有一阵子她与一位名叫亨利·奎因的律师交往，只因为“查尔斯·勃朗宁案”失利败诉，她就跟这位律师疏远。接着有流言说她与詹姆斯·比肯愈走愈近，当时他是政坛上旭日东升的新人。总之，到了这时候，我总算完全明白那位银发先生告诉我的话，像我这种“小伙子”别妄想追求亨明斯小姐了。我当时自然没有真正体会他话里的真意。现在明白了，反而让我别有兴致，在那一年里到处追踪亨明斯小姐的各种活动。即便如此，我第一次与她本人交谈，却是在查林沃思俱乐部初见后近两年的某个下午。

我与友人在华尔道夫饭店的午茶厅喝茶，他忽然有事先走一步。于是我独自坐在棕榈厅那里，享用我的果酱烤饼，这时我瞥见亨明斯小姐也是独自一人，坐在外头阳台上的桌位。我也说过了，我不是第一次在这种地方看到她，不过那天下午情况有所不同。当时“曼纳林案”结案才刚满一个月，我兴奋之情犹在心头。那是我首次功成名

就，接下来有一阵子春风醉人的日子：许多新的机会忽然都浮现眼前；邀请函从新的领域如雪片飞来；原先顶多对我点头微笑的人，现在看到我出现，都欢欣地对我大呼小叫。也难怪我会有点忘形。

总之，在华尔道夫饭店的那个下午，我竟然起身向阳台走去。我不确定我期待的是什麼。在那段志得意满的日子里，我经常这样，也不想亨明斯小姐有没有这个兴致与我结识。也许在我晃过钢琴师身边，走近她看书的桌位时，心中曾闪过一丝疑虑。不过我记得，我还算满意自己开口说话的声音，礼貌中不失轻松：

“容我冒昧向您自我介绍。我们有许多共同的朋友呢。在下克里斯托弗·班克斯。”

说到姓名时，我还想办法说得有些花哨，不过在此之前，我的把握已然松动。因为亨明斯小姐抬头看我的眼神冷漠而严厉。她什麼话也不答，立刻又低头瞥了一眼她的书，仿佛那本书不悦地哼了一声。过了半晌，她才用全然不明就里的语气回答：

“是吗？幸会。”

“‘曼纳林案’，”我提起此事，实属不智，“也许您知道这个案子。”

“当然，是您经手办的啰。”

这句话说得平淡无味，让我再也无法装得神情自若。因为，她的语气不带半点拨云见日的意味；那句话没有任何意义，只表示她一开始就相当清楚我的身份地位，而且仍然想不出我有什么理由配站在她桌边。过去几周那种飘飘然的感觉，忽然消失无踪。我干笑了几声，相信是从那一刻开始，我心底明白了，尽管在“曼纳林案”里，我的调查毋庸置疑是十分杰出的，尽管我的朋友也对我赞美有加，但是对于圈外的世界来说，我并不如我自以为的那么重要。

我们极可能中规中矩地寒暄了几句，我便打了退堂鼓回到自己的桌位。今日再回顾此事，我觉得亨明斯小姐那样待我，已经是太客气了；像是“曼纳林案”这种小事，竟奢望亨明斯小姐听过，我真是可笑得不像话了！不过，我记得我又回自己桌边坐下，心中又生气又沮丧。我忽然觉得，我不只是在亨明斯小姐面前自取其辱，也许过去一个月以来，不知道自己出过多少丑态；我的朋友尽管在面前恭喜我，背后却嘲笑我。

到了第二天，我完全自知这个钉子我碰得活该。不过在华尔道夫饭店的这件事，恐怕着实在我心里埋下对于亨明斯小姐的恨意，至今都不曾全然消失—无疑也引发了昨晚那些不愉快的事。不过在当年，我却认为，我算是幸运才会遇到这整件事。毕竟它让我醒悟，我们是如何容易分心，而偏离自己珍爱的目标。我的志向是要打击邪恶—特别是暗中滋长、隐而不显的那种邪恶—这样的志向，跟在社交圈里沽名钓誉根本无甚关系。

从那时起，我大幅减少社交活动，并且更深入沉浸在我的工作里。我研究过去的著名案件，吸收新领域的知识，以备日后使用。也是约略在这个时期，我开始钻研各路名侦探的一生事业，发现我可以分辨出有些人的名声是建立在真实的贡献之上，有些则纯粹靠他在社交圈子的地位而浪得虚名；从中我了解了侦探成名的方法也有虚实之分。简言之，尽管我十分兴奋在“曼纳林案”之后，许多人都来攀连结交，但经过华尔道夫饭店一事，我想起父母立下的典范，并且下定决心不让琐事杂务再让我变心易志。

\(1\)一战时的一场血腥战役，发生于1917年。

第二章

既然我现在想起了“曼纳林案”后的那段人生，或许也该顺带谈谈与张伯伦上校的不期而遇。说来也许让人感到意外，尽管他在我孩提时代扮演了相当关键的角色，后来我们却鲜少联络。不管是出于什么原因，我们就是没再联络，而我再次遇见他——那是在华尔道夫饭店遇见亨明斯小姐的一两个月后——则纯属巧合。

有个下雨的午后，我站在查令十字路上一家书店里，细看一本有插画的《艾凡赫》。我感觉有人在我背后徘徊了好一阵子，我以为他想要看我这边书架上的东西，于是就让开了来。可是后来，这个人还是在我身旁流连，我忍不住转身看看。

我一眼就认出上校，因为他的体态几乎没变。只是以成人的眼光看来，他已比我儿时的印象要羞怯而寒酸。他身着雨衣站在那儿，害羞地注视着我，直到我喊了一声：“是你，上校！”他才露出笑容，伸出手来。

“近况如何，孩子？我就知道是你。真是！近况如何，孩子？”

如今回想起来，选择多尔切斯特饭店真是极不体贴。毕竟我已经猜到上校经济拮据；我也该想到，若不让他至少付他自己那份账单，岂不太伤他自尊了？不过在那段日子里，我哪有这么细心；我想，我只是太急着要让这位老先生清清楚楚地知道，自从他上次见过我以后，我早已不是昔日吴下阿蒙了。

这个企图，我想是达到了。其实在此之前，因为两次机缘，别人带我到过多尔切斯特饭店，因此与张伯伦上校相约的那个晚上，侍者

问候我说：“真高兴又见到您，先生。”后来他又见识到我跟餐厅总管谈笑，等汤上桌以后，他突然笑了起来。

“真想不到，”他说，“这就是船上在我身边哭个不停的那小鬼！”

他又笑了几声，忽然闭口不语，也许后悔自己不该再把话题引到这个方向。不过我用平静的笑容对他说：

“那趟路上，我一定烦死你了，上校。”

有那么一会儿，老先生的脸色凝重。接着他严肃地说：“以当时的情况来看，我觉得你实在是极为勇敢，孩子，极为勇敢。”

我记得这时候，两人都没再说话，气氛有点尴尬，等我们两人齐夸那汤味道鲜美，僵局就冰消烟散了。隔壁桌，有位珠光宝气的胖夫人开怀大笑，上校不太客气地看了她一眼。然后他似乎做了什么决定。

“你知道吗，有一件事真奇怪。”他说，“今天出门以前，我回想我们初次见面的情况，不知道你还记不记得，孩子，我想你大概忘了。毕竟，当时你心头要烦的事情太多。”

“才不呢，”我说，“那天我记得一清二楚。”

这并非谎言。即使是现在，只消阖眼片刻，我就可以让心神回到上海那个晴朗的早晨，还有哈罗德·安德森先生的办公室，他是家父在摩根洋行这家大贸易公司的上司。我正坐在一张覆着皮革的橡木座椅上，椅子打过蜡的气味依稀可闻，这种椅子通常只会出现在堂皇的大办公桌后，不过那一次，却放置在房间中央。我感觉得出这张椅子只保留给最重要的人，不过那次可能因为情况严重，或者为了表达慰问之意，那张椅子竟让给我坐。我还记得，不管我用什么坐姿，坐相就是不庄重；特别是我找不到任何姿势，可以让双肘同时放在雕工细致的扶手上。此外，那天早上我穿了一件全新的外套，是用粗糙的灰色布料缝制的那件衣服怎么来的，我不知道——还有那排扣子，一路往上扣到下颌，让我丑得浑身不自在。

那个房间有个高挑又富丽堂皇的天花板，墙上有张大地图，安德森先生书桌后的大窗户阳光熠熠，微风徐徐透了进来。我想天花板上应该有电扇在转动，不过这点我记不清楚了。我记得的是，我坐在房间中央的椅子上，置身于严肃的关怀与讨论的焦点。我四周全是大人，都在讨论事情，大半都站着；有时候有几位会漫步到窗边，有争

论的时候便把声音压低。我记得安德森先生本人对我的举止让我诧异。他身材高大，白发皤皤，嘴上还有一排大胡子，他待我仿佛多年老友似的一好得让我有那么一会儿猜想我更小的时候就认识他，只是我忘了。过了好一阵子我才确定，在那个早晨之前，我们绝不可能见过面。总之，他扮演父执辈的角色，不时对我微笑，拍拍我的肩膀，用肘部碰碰我，眨眨眼。他还问了我一次要不要茶，他说：“哪，克里斯托弗，这个可以让你舒服一点。”他还弯下身子，盯着我喝茶。后来，房内又是一阵交头接耳与讨论，接着安德森先生再度走到我面前，对我说：

“就这样吧，克里斯托弗。一切都安排好了。这位是张伯伦上校。他愿意不辞辛劳，护送你回英国。”

我记得就在这一刻，室内静了下来。事实上，我的印象是所有的大人都往后退去，全靠到墙边作壁上观。安德森先生最后给了我鼓励的一笑，接着也往后退去。到了这个时候，我才首度看见张伯伦上校。他向我缓缓走来，俯身望着我，接着伸出手。我觉得我该站起来与他握手；不过他手伸得极快，而我一时又站不起来，便坐着握住他的手。我记得他接着说：

“可怜的孩子，先是你父亲，现在是你母亲，你一定觉得周遭的世界就在你身边崩溃了。还好我们明天就回英国去。你姑妈正等着你，所以鼓起勇气吧，不久你就会恢复正常了。”

我一时之间竟说不出话，后来总算把话吐出来：“您真是太仁慈了，先生。您的协助，我感激不尽，而且我也不希望您以为我不懂事。不过有一点请您谅解，我觉得我不该在这个时候返回英国。”上校一时之间并没有反应，于是我接着说：

“是这样子的，先生，侦探们都尽全力在寻找家父家母，他们全都是上海最厉害的侦探。我想他们应该很快就会找到。”

上校点点头。“我确定有关当局会尽全力侦办。”

“那就是了，先生，尽管我十分感激您的好意，但我觉得回英国这件事，或许可以作罢。”

我记得这时候房内又是一阵交头接耳。上校则继续点头，仿佛仔仔细细地把诸事重新斟酌了一番。

“也许你说得对，孩子，”他最后回答说，“我真心希望你说的
是对的。不过为防万一，你不妨还是跟我回去。反正一旦找到令尊令

堂，他们也许会接你回来。谁也说不准的。说不定他们自己也想回英国呢。所以，你觉得如何？咱们俩明天就回英国，然后再看看事情怎么发展。”

“可是您知道吗，先生，恕我多嘴。您知道吗，侦探们都在找我父母，他们可都是最最顶尖的侦探。”

我不太确定上校怎么回答我这句话，也许他只是继续点头。总之，接下来他把身子沉得更靠近我，一只手搭在我肩上。

“听我说。我能体会你此刻的心情。全世界都在你眼前崩溃了。不过你得鼓起勇气。再说，你还有个姑妈在英国，她在等着你，明白吗？你总不能在这个节骨眼上让她失望，对不对？”

对着桌上的汤，我对他陈述我记忆里当时他所说的一字一句，我还以为这些往事能逗他笑一下。谁知道他反而严肃地回答：

“我真为你难过，孩子，非常难过。”接着，也许他察觉他误会了我的用意，凑趣地笑了笑，然后以轻松多了的语气说，“我还记得跟你在港边等船。我一直说：‘跟你说，搭船出海一定很有趣，我们可得要好好玩一玩。’而你只能不停回答我：‘没错，先生。没错，先生。没错，先生。’”

接下来几分钟，我就随他回想那天早上在安德森先生的办公室里，在场的人之中有多少人是他的旧识。他提到的人名，没有一个对我有任何意义。后来，上校停了一下，眉头皱了起来。

“至于安德森本人，”他半晌才开口，“那家伙总是让我不安。他就是有点不对劲。老实告诉你，那件事就是有点不对劲。”

一说完这句话，他抬头看着我，身子忽然一震。我还来不及反应，他就赶紧开始谈些别的，把话题引到那趟返英之旅，显然他认为这个部分比较安全。没多久，他就谈起船上同行的旅客、船长及船员、有趣的小事，那些事有些我已经遗忘，有些则根本不曾留意，他说到有趣之处便兀自发笑。他说得愉快，我也在一旁附和，常常假装我也记得他说的事情，好助他的兴。然而随着他这般漫谈往事，我心底却开始有些不悦。他在一件又一件温馨的陈年轶事里，渐渐把我形容得有点不堪。他不断影射我不管在船上哪里，都是畏畏缩缩而闷闷不乐，一丁点的小事就能让我掉眼泪。无疑上校曾经自视为护卫孤儿的英雄，如果事隔这么多年还要撕破这层幻想，我觉得不但不厚道，也没有意义。可是，如我所说，我心中的不悦愈来愈强烈。根据我清

晰的记忆，我一下子便安然适应了环境的改变。我清楚记得，我在旅途中非但没有悲伤之情，那海上生活还过得十分兴奋，同时也期待上岸以后的未来。我当然有时会想念父母，不过我还记得我告诉自己，总是还有别的大人可以让我付出爱与信任。事实上，在旅程中就有一千妇人，耳闻我的遭遇，便到我身边赶着安慰致怜，胡缠了我好一阵子，我还记得她们给我的感受，就像在多尔切斯特饭店那夜对上校的不悦。其实我并非如我周遭大人以为的那么沮丧，就我记忆所及，在整个漫长的航程里，独独只有一件事，让我配得上“哭个不停的小鬼”这个头衔，而那还是发生在启程当天。

那天早晨阴霾漫天，四周的水域混浊。我站在轮船甲板上回望港口，回望杂乱的港边景物，船只、步桥、泥屋、暗色的木制船坞、远处上海滩的高楼，一切都在此时淡去，化成一抹灰影。

“还好吧，小伙子？”上校的声音就在耳边，“你觉得你会再回来吗？”

“会的，先生，我觉得我会。”

“难说哦。你一旦在英国安定下来，我敢说你很快就会把这里的一切忘掉。上海是不差，不过，我觉得八年我就受够了，我猜想，你也没必要再多留恋，再多待一阵子，你就会变成中国佬。”

“是的，先生。”

“说真的，好孩子，你真该高兴才对。毕竟你要返回英国了，要回家了。”

就是最后这句话，提到我“要回家了”，让我的情绪一时失控——我记得千真万确——是第一次也是最后一次。即便如此，我的泪水里也是气愤多于悲伤，因为我对上校的话厌恶至极。在我看来，我前往的国度，并无一人相识，而渐行渐远的那座城市却蕴含了我所知道的一切。最重要的是我父母还在那里，在港口的另一端，在上海滩高耸的楼影山脉之外某处，我对着海岸做最后的凝望，心想，说不定就在此时会看到母亲——甚至父亲——冲到港边，挥手高呼叫我回去。不过即使是当年，我心底也知道，这种愿望只不过是幼稚的胡思乱想。眼看着那座曾是家园的城市渐渐淡去，我记得我转身面向上校，带着欣喜之色说：“我们应该马上就要进入大海了，对吧，先生？”

那天晚上，我把对上校的不悦之情，藏得滴水不漏。一点不假，直到他在南奥利街搭上计程车，我们互道再会，他始终满怀愉快的心

情。一直要等到正好一年之后，他的死讯传来，我才有些愧疚，后悔那夜在多尔切斯特饭店没对他好些。他毕竟曾经有恩于我，而且在我看来，他是位正人君子。不过我也只能说，他在我人生里所扮演的角色——我无法否认他与当时发生的事情密不可分——会永远在我的记忆里定型为一个褒贬互见的人物。

华尔道夫饭店一事过后，有三至四年之久，莎拉·亨明斯与我没有任何接触。我记得这段日子里，有一次我在梅费尔区的某个鸡尾酒会上看到她。那次聚会上人很多，可是我没认识几个，所以决定先离开。我朝大门挤过去，发现莎拉·亨明斯正在与别人聊天，就挡在我往大门的路上。我的直觉反应是绕道而行。不过那一阵子，我又因“罗杰·帕克案”而名声大噪，我好奇之心油然而生，心想亨明斯小姐是否还敢像在华尔道夫饭店一样目中无人。于是我继续往人群里开路，对准方向，想从她面前挤过去。经过她身旁，我看到她的目光转过来认我的五官。她先是脸上一阵茫然，显然在回想我这个人到底是谁，后来我看出她认出来了，但她既不笑一下，也不点个头，又把目光转回跟她聊天的人身上。

其实，这种事情我才懒得去烦，因为那阵子，我手头上正忙着几件难解的案子。尽管当时距我建立今日这般的名声地位，还有好长一段时间，不过那时我已初尝任何稍有名气的侦探所承受的甜美负担。我向来了解，要根除那些行迹最隐秘的邪恶，而且要在恶行即将逃过法眼之际将之清除，固然是重大而严肃的事业，然而我一直要到经历了“罗杰·帕克谋杀案”这类案子之后，才切身体会，能把这类潜伏的坏事清除，对别人有什么样的意义——这不只是指那些直接与案情牵连的人，也指一般大众。于是我变得更加坚决，不让伦敦生活的浮华琐事害我分心。我也渐渐了解，也许我父母就是靠这点才能拥有他们的名声。总之，像亨明斯小姐这类人物，在我那个时期的心思里不会留下什么痕迹，若非那天在肯辛顿花园遇到约瑟夫·特纳，恐怕我早把她忘得一干二净了。

当时我在诺福克调查一个案子，正好回伦敦几天，打算研究一下我做过的各类笔记。其中一个阴天的早晨，我正在肯辛顿花园漫步，沉思与受害者失踪相关的诸多耐人寻味的细节。有人从远处喊住我，我立刻就认出是特纳，他是一位社交场合里的点头之交。他赶上来问我这阵子怎么这么难得见到踪影，随即邀我参加当晚他与友人在某家餐厅举行的晚宴。我礼貌地婉拒，推说我现在为手上的案子忙得无法分身，也不容分心，他回答说：

“真可惜。莎拉·亨明斯也要来，人家想跟你聊聊可想死了。”

“亨明斯小姐？”

“还记得是谁吧？人家可记得你哦。还说你们几年前就认识。她老是抱怨怎么到哪儿都没你的影子。”

我忍着不予置评，仅淡淡地回答：“仅代我问候她一声。”

我几乎话一说完就转身走了，不过回到书桌前，我承认听说亨明斯小姐想见我，让我有些分神。想了一会儿，我告诉自己，很可能是特纳会错了意；或者，他是夸大其词，想诱我参加那次聚会。不过从那次以后的几个月里，我耳闻好几件类似的事：有人听到莎拉·亨明斯向人抱怨，我跟她也曾经朋友一场，怎么现在她想见我一面却难如登天。我还从好几个地方听说，她扬言非把我“揪出来”不可。直到上个礼拜，我留在牛津郡夏克顿镇调查“斯塔德利农庄案”，亨明斯小姐终于本尊现身，显然是刻意安排的。

我找到那座围墙里的花园——查尔斯·埃默里的尸体就在花园的池塘里被人发现——在大宅子下方的草地一带。走下四层石阶，我便进入一处阳光难以触及的长方形区域，即使是晴朗的早晨，周遭一切依然笼罩在阴影之中。墙上虽爬满了藤蔓，可是人在其中总觉得像是走进一间没有天花板的牢房。

池塘占去这个区域的大半空间。尽管好几个人跟我说过里头养了金鱼，但我并没有看见里头有什么活物；事实上，池水如此阴寒，实在难以想像有什么生物能在这里生存——不过倒是顶适合在里头发现尸体就是了。池塘边上围了一圈覆满青苔的方形石板，底部全嵌在泥土里。我猜想我在那里勘查了约莫二十分钟——我趴在地上，用放大镜细看一块突出水面的石板——感觉到有人在观察我。起先我以为是这户人家的成员，想过来问东问西。由于稍早我已坚持不准有人打扰我，所以决定谁也不理，就算让他们觉得我无礼也在所不惜。

最后我听到园子的入口处有鞋子踏在石板上的声音。到这个时候，要是我还老是趴在地上不动，就有点不自然了；再说，我用这个姿势能查到的线索，正好也找得差不多了。此外，我还记得我趴的位置，几乎就是凶杀案发生的地点，而凶手还在逍遥法外呢。我爬了起来，拍掉身上的尘土，转身看到来者是谁，一阵寒意袭上我心头。

看见莎拉·亨明斯当然让我有些意外，不过我相信我脸上没有露出异色。我装出被打扰的表情，我猜想那也是她所见到的，因为她开

口就说：

“噢，我可没有偷看您。不过这种机会实在难得。我是说，能看到大人物在工作。”

我仔细看她的表情，没有找到讥讽的痕迹。尽管如此，我尽量冷淡地回答：“亨明斯小姐，我可是怎么也没料到会是您。”

“我听说您在这里。我来磐梅俐拜访朋友，从那条路走过去就到了。”

她停了一下，无疑是等我回答。我并未答腔，她全然不露愠色，反而向我走近。

“我跟埃默里一家是好朋友，您知道吗？”她继续说：“这桩凶杀案，真可怕。”

“没错，可怕得很。”

“啊，所以您也觉得是他杀。那大概就错不了。有结论了吗，班克斯先生？”

我耸耸肩。“是有些发现罢了。”

“我觉得埃默里的家人也真是不该，四月事情发生的当时就该找您才对。我说真是的，这种事情，怎么会交给赛尔温·亨德森来办？他们以为那样能如何？那种货色，早该叫他回家养老去。您瞧，住在这种乡下地方，就会变得什么事都脱节。在伦敦随便问谁，保证人人都会跟他们谈起您的所有事迹。”

我必须承认，最后这句话吊起了我的胃口，因此，我迟疑了一会儿，还是禁不住问了她一句：“容我多问，我有什么事情好让人家这样谈呢？说真的。”

“您也真是的，您可是全英国最杰出的侦探，可不是。去年春天，我们早跟他们力荐您不就没事了？可是埃默里的家人一就是要这么久才能开窍。也许迟些也总比没有好，不过我猜想，这时候线索恐怕都模糊了。”

“其实，有时候等案子发生一阵子再来调查也有好处。”

“真的吗？好高深哟。我总以为最好尽早赶到现场，好找些蛛丝马迹，您懂我的意思吧。”

“正好相反，要找您所谓的蛛丝马迹，永远不嫌晚。”

“可是这件案子，闹得大家心神不宁，真不是一个惨字能形容。还不只是苦主家属而已，整个夏克顿镇都快毁了。以前这里是个欢乐的市集小镇，现在您瞧瞧大家，谁也不敢正眼看谁了。这整个事件，让所有的镇民彼此猜忌。我向您保证，班克斯先生，破了这个案子，镇民会永远记得您。”

“您真的这么认为吗？那可是有趣得很。”

“一点不假，他们会感激不尽，世代都会提起您。”

我浅笑一声。“看来您蛮熟悉这个小镇的嘛，亨明斯小姐。我还以为您从不离开伦敦呢。”

“哦，伦敦也不过如此，每当我受够了，总得跳出来才行。我要说明白，在我心里，我可不是个城市女子。”

“您让我感到意外。我一直以为您向往都市生活。”

“您说得一点都不错，班克斯先生。”她语气里带有一丝气愤，仿佛被我将了一军，“都市确实有吸引我的地方，都市对我有一种……一种吸引力。”她这时候总算把脸转开，不再面对着我，四处看看墙内的花园。“这让我想起一件事，”她说，“好吧，我就招认，我才不是现在才想起什么。我装什么装呢？我们聊了半天，我心里一直在挂着这件事。我想求您帮我一个忙。”

“敢问何事？亨明斯小姐。”

“有个可靠的消息来源告诉我，您获邀参加今年梅瑞迪斯基金会的晚宴。可有此事？”

我略停了一下才回答：“没错，是有这么回事。”

“以您的年纪能受邀，可真不简单。听说今年的主客是塞西尔·梅德赫斯特。”

“没错，我想是的。”

“我也听说查尔斯·乌尔夫会出席这场盛会。”

“那位小提琴家吗？”

她开怀地笑了。“难不成他还会别的？还有托马斯·拜伦，这不难料到。”

她兴奋之情溢于言表，不过这时候，她又再度转身注视四周，身子微微一颤。

“您刚才是说，”我等了半天才问她，“您希望我帮您一个忙吗？”

“哦，没错，没错。我想请您……我想请您邀我做您的女伴，参加梅瑞迪斯基基金的晚宴。”

她此时以热烈的目光盯着我。我花了一会儿才想出对策，不过我开口时，语气如井水无波。

“我很想从命，亨明斯小姐。只可惜我几天之前已经回复过主事者。只怕现在才要通知他们我要携伴出席，为时已晚……”

“才怪！”她冒起火来打断我的话，“您的大名，谁人不知？何人不晓？您要带个伴儿，他们答应都来不及了。班克斯先生，您不会让我失望吧？这可不像您的为人哟。再说，我们这么熟也不是一两天了。”

最后这句话一让我想起我们“成为朋友”的历史一让我清醒过来。

“亨明斯小姐，”我语气坚决地说，“这个忙，实非在下能力所及。”

然而此时，亨明斯小姐眼露心意已决的神色。

“我知道一切细节，班克斯先生。地点是克拉里奇饭店，时间是下星期三晚上。我决心要去，我期盼当晚的盛会，我会在大厅等您。”

“克拉里奇饭店的大厅，就我所知，绅士淑女人人去得。假如您下周三晚上想光临该地，在下自然无法干涉，亨明斯小姐。”

她小心翼翼地看着我的脸色，不确定我的用意何在。最后她说：“那么您下周三肯定会见到我，班克斯先生。”

“在下已经说过，这是您的事，亨明斯小姐。现在请容在下告退。”

第三章

我花了好几天才解开查尔斯·埃默里之死的谜团。这个案子并没有像其他案子那样让我名噪一时，不过埃默里一家一甚至是整个夏克顿镇的镇民一深刻的感激，让我觉得这个案子跟至今所破的其他案子同样令我满意。我在幸福的气氛里返回伦敦，因此未曾多花心思去挂念调查的第一天，在围墙里的花园与亨明斯小姐邂逅一事。我倒不是说，我完全忘记她曾扬言要在梅瑞迪斯基金会的晚宴当天做什么事，不过如我所述，我当时正沉浸在得意的心情里，这种事才懒得多想。也许我心底深处相信，当时她的“威胁”不过是虚张声势罢了。

总之，当晚我在克拉里奇饭店外下计程车时，心里想的是别的事情。一则，我提醒自己，最近的成功何止给我带来参加宴会的资格；他们不但不会质疑我有没有分量出席这种聚会，其他客人恐怕还会缠着我追问最近办的这些案件的内情。我还提醒自己，绝不提早退场，即使一个人在角落枯立也要坚持。走进富丽堂皇的大厅，此刻，我全然没料到会看到亨明斯小姐面带笑容在那里等我。

她打扮得明艳动人，一身深色丝绸晚礼服，几件简单而高雅的首饰。她自信满满地向我走来，甚至还理所当然地用笑容跟走过我们身边的一对夫妻打招呼。

“啊，亨明斯小姐。”我口头先应付，心里则尽快回想那天在办“斯塔德利农庄案”的时候，我们之间谈了什么。此时此刻，我必须承认，我忽然觉得她似乎有充分的权利理直气壮地期望我邀她入席。她无疑看得出我心虚，于是就更加笃定。

“亲爱的克里斯托弗，”她说，“你看起来真是神采奕奕，把我完全迷住了！对了，我还没有机会恭喜你。你为埃默里一家人所做的事，真是太好了。你一向就是这么厉害。”

“过奖。其实那个案子也没那么复杂。”

她此时已经挽着我的手臂，要是此刻她就走向那位领客上楼的侍者，我确定自己是无计可施，只能任她摆布。不过，如今想来，她在这里走错了一着棋。也许她想要继续享受这得手的快感；也许她一时胆大妄为起来。总之，她并未往楼梯的方向移动，反而注视着鱼贯入厅的宾客，并且对我说：

“塞西尔·梅德赫斯特爵士还没到。我真希望能有机会跟他本人聊聊。今年梅瑞迪斯基基金会向他致敬也算实至名归了，你觉得如何？”

“没错。”

“你可知道，克里斯托弗，我想不用几年，他们要致敬的人就会是你哟！”

我笑了出来。“哪里，哪里……”

“不必客气。这点我毫不怀疑。没错，也许还要等个三年五载，但是那天总是会到，等着瞧吧。”

“您太抬举在下了，亨明斯小姐。”

我们交谈时，她一直挽着我的手臂。过往的宾客不时有人向我或者向她微笑或打招呼。我得承认，我发现自己还蛮喜欢让大家一其中不乏知名人物一看到我和亨明斯小姐挽着手臂站在这里。我似乎看到他们与我们打招呼时，眼神里说着：“哦，瞧她缠上谁了，是他。这再自然不过。”这种想法一点也不让我觉得愚蠢，或者有任何屈辱的感觉，我甚至还觉得有几分得意。不过，忽然之间一我不确定出于什么原因一完全没有感觉到任何前兆，我对她燃起炽烈的怒火。我确定在那一刻，我的举止看不出任何改变，于是我们又气氛融洽地谈了几分钟，有时向路过的宾客点头致意。不过，当我放开她的手臂，转身面向她时，我的态度坚决似铁。

“那么，亨明斯小姐，真高兴再见到您。但此刻我得上楼入席了。”

我对她微微鞠躬，向后退去。这一着棋显然她没算到，就算她留了一手以应付我拒绝合作，这时候也难以施展了。我才走了几步，不巧有对年长夫妇拦下我向我问候，她逮住机会飞赶了上来。

“克里斯托弗！”她低声急切地说，“你敢！你答应过我的！”

“你知道没这回事。”

“你敢！克里斯托弗，你敢！”

“晚安，再会了，亨明斯小姐。”

我离她而去一顺带也丢下了那对老夫妇，他们尽全力装做什么都没听见一我快步穿过正厅阶梯上的人群登上楼去。

一到楼上，就有人带领我到一间灯火辉煌的接待厅。我依序跟着其他宾客排成一路走过一张桌子，桌后坐着一位身着制服、面如冰霜的先生，拿着名单核对来宾姓名。轮到我的时候，那位先生也在我的名字旁边打个钩，我看到他冰封雪覆的脸上闪过一抹兴奋之情，让我觉得很高兴。在留名册上签过名，我走向通往另一个大厅的玄关，可以看到厅中已有不少来宾在场。一跨过门槛，谈笑声立时围了上来，有位身材高大、胡子又浓又黑的先生向我致意，并跟我握手。我猜想他是今晚的主办人之一，不过我听不进他讲的话——老实说，那时候我还满脑子想着刚才在楼下发生的事，别的事情还进不来。我觉得心中有种没来由的莫名兴奋，我提醒自己，我没有算计亨明斯小姐；她要是蒙受了什么委屈，全是自取其辱。

我离开胡子先生，往厅里逛去，但莎拉·亨明斯还是在我心头挥之不去。我约略记得有位侍者端了一盘开胃酒迎向前来；还有各路宾客向我问候。有一会儿，我加入三四位先生围成的小圈子跟着聊天——他们都是科学家，也似乎都听说过我。在厅中过了约一刻钟，我察觉到气氛微微改变，四下环顾，发现所有的张望与耳语，都围绕着玄关那里的骚动，也就是此厅的入口。

我一注意到这点，心里便觉得事态严重，一时有股冲动想躲到厅内深处，不过有股神秘的力量把我推向玄关，不一会我又回到胡子先生身边，他背对着接待处，面露痛苦的表情，看着接待厅里上演的好戏。

我隔着他观望，确定闹事者确实就是亨明斯小姐。她让接待桌边等着签名入场的队伍停顿了下来。她虽然没有大呼小叫，不过似乎也完全不管别人有没有听见。我看见她推开一位上前劝阻的年长侍者；接着，她紧立在桌边，两眼直瞅着依然稳若泰山坐在桌后的冰霜面孔，然后以近乎啜泣的口吻说：

“你根本不懂！我非进去不可，明白吗？我里头有好多朋友，我属于那里，一点也不假！你得讲讲理呀！”

“我无能为力，小姐……”面如冰霜的先生接口。不过莎拉·亨明斯不让他说完，也不顾有一边的头发已经散落在脸上。

“一定是你们漏掉了，明白吗？就是这样，你们漏掉了！就因为这样，让你这样糟蹋我，真是岂有此理！岂有此理！……”

众人目睹这场闹剧，都一同僵在尴尬之中。这时候胡子先生打定了主意，威严地大步走进接待厅。

“发生什么事了？”他以安抚的口吻说，“小姐，有什么问题吗？没事，没事，我们会帮您处理，没问题，在下听候您使唤。”接着他身子一震，讶异地说，“哟，这不是亨明斯小姐吗？”

“不是我是谁！是我呀！你不明白吗？这个人简直太过分了……”

“可是亨明斯小姐，我的好小姐，您没必要为这个生气。来，我们先到这边来……”

“才不！你休想叫我走开！我不吃这套！我告诉你，我一定得进去，无论如何，我非进去不可，我梦想这刻好久了……”

“你们总可以为这位小姐通融一下吧？”旁观者里头有人讲话了。“何必这么小气？她都不辞辛劳来了，何不就让她进去？”众人也跟着在旁轻声表示赞同，不过我也看到有人露出反对的神情。胡子先生迟疑了一会，接着，他似乎决定当务之急是先平息骚动。

“那么，也许就破个例吧……”他转向桌后面若冰霜的先生，继续说，“我确定我们总有办法再挪个位子给亨明斯小姐吧，爱德华先生？”

我原本可以再多留一会儿，不过在他们对话的过程中，我忽然害怕起来：万一亨明斯小姐瞄到我在场，把过错赖到我头上，那可不妙。事实上，我正要退去的时候，她有那么一秒钟正眼盯着我看，但是她不动声色，下一刻，她焦虑的眼神又转回胡子先生身上。我于是趁机开溜。

接下来的二十几分钟里，我尽量逗留在厅中离入口最远的角落。过分看重这个场合的来宾实在多得出奇，以至于大部分的谈话——我身边所闻以及与人交谈的内容——都是在彼此恭维。等夸奖对方的话都说光了，大家就开始称颂今天的主要贵宾。后来，大家还把塞西尔·梅德赫斯特的丰功伟业巨细靡遗地算了一回，我向一位刚这样细数家珍的老先生问道：

“不知道塞西尔爵士到了没？”

老先生用杯子指给我看，我看到这位伟大政治家的高大身影就在不远处，略弓着身子，正在与两位中年女士交谈。接着，正当我还在望着他的时候，我看到莎拉·亨明斯从人群里冒出来，直接朝他走去。

刚才接待厅里的苦旦演出，此刻在她身上已找不到痕迹。她果然容光焕发。我看着她大步向前，毫不犹豫地把手搭上他的臂膀。

我身边的老先生开始把我介绍给别人，我只得回头应付一下。等我再回头看塞西尔爵士这边，我看见两位中年女士已经挪到一侧，脸上挂着尴尬的笑容，而亨明斯小姐则完全占据了他的注意力。我甚至看见塞西尔爵士不知听她说了什么，还仰头大笑。

时候到了，领座的侍者便带领大家进入晚宴厅，在辉煌的吊灯下，在一列既宽且长的餐桌边就座。所幸亨明斯小姐的位子离我有一段距离，有那么一刻，我觉得这个聚会还算愉快。我轮流与两侧的女士闲聊，觉得她们各有各的风韵，菜色还算可口丰盛。不过，随着菜一道道上桌，我发现我一再探出身子，瞄着长桌另一头的亨明斯小姐，然而我也一再告诉自己，刚才那么做绝无理亏之处。

也许就是因为这件事萦绕心头，现在我反而不太记得晚宴本身的事了。聚会末了是致辞：各方人物起身歌颂塞西尔爵士在国际事务上的贡献，特别是他在建立“国际联盟”中所扮演的角色。最后，是塞西尔爵士自己起身致辞。

我记得他的演讲，自谦而乐观。在他的观点里，人类从自己的错误中学习，现在已经稳固建立起一套体制结构，足以保证不会有世界大战那样的全球灾难发生。战争虽然可怕，但也不过是“人类演化过程里不方便的缺口”，每过几年，我们的科技进步超前了我们组织的能力，战争就会发生。我们全然想不到人类在工程学方面的发展有多快，并且以我们所获得的能力，运用现代化武器发动战争，但现在我们把这个缺口弥补上了。既然知道可怕的事情有可能在世界上爆发，文明的力量便抢占上风，并且立法加以规范。他的演讲谈的就是这些论点，我们也都热情地鼓掌。

餐后男女宾客并未分开，大会力邀所有人都到舞厅。在那里已有一组弦乐四重奏在演奏，而侍者则托着银盘，四处分送酒、雪茄、咖啡。宾客立刻流动起来，气氛远比餐前轻松。有那么一刻，我瞥见亨明斯小姐在厅内另一处看着我，我没料到的是，她竟对我微笑。我第一个感觉是，那是敌人的笑容，笑容底下计划着什么阴狠的报复；不过当晚我不时观察她，我觉得这点我错了。原来莎拉·亨明斯是打从心里快乐。她也许花了数月甚至数年的计划，才打进这个圈子，完成她的心愿，她就好像一套一句我们常听到的说法——刚生产完的妇女，把这一路上所吃的苦头，全部抛诸脑后。我看着她在小圈子之间穿梭，如鱼得水。我一时觉得不妨趁她心情好的时候过去跟她重修旧

好，不过随即想到她也可能立刻翻脸再大闹一场，结果我还是躲得远远的。

大约晚餐后半个小时，终于有人为我向塞西尔·梅德赫斯特引见。我并未刻意要会他，不过，我觉得要是来到这个场合，却未能与这位名声显赫的政治家谈上几句，难免会有些遗憾。实际的情况是，有人带他来看我——是亚当斯夫人，几个月前我们在一次调查中认识。塞西尔爵士亲切地握住我的手，并说：“啊，年轻人，原来你在这里！”

有几分钟，我们身边没有别人，在我们四周，谈笑声喧闹如市，我们寒暄时必须倾向对方或提高声量。他还推推我说：

“我刚才在晚宴上说的每一句话——关于世界会更和平、更文明。我真的相信，真的。至少……”他抓起我的手，对我做个滑稽的眼神。“至少我宁可这样相信。没错，我好想相信这点。不过我不知道，我的朋友。我不知道到最后，我们是否能维持局面。我们尽人事就是了。组织、讨论。把大国的大人物凑在一块儿，要他们去谈。可是邪恶总是躲在暗处等着逮住我们。噢，没错，就算此时此刻，我们在这里谈什么大道理，它们也忙着密谋要让文明付之一炬。它们聪明得很，穷凶极恶地聪明。好人可以尽力而为，用一生把它们围堵在角落，不过，我觉得这样恐怕不够，朋友。这样恐怕不够。坏人太狡猾，不是你们平凡的正直百姓可以对付的。他们会在一般人的身边徘徊，腐化他，让他不利于自己的同胞。我看到这种事，我一直看到这种事，而情况只会变得更糟。这也就是为什么我们比过去更需要仰赖你这种人，朋友，我们好人阵营里，能跟他们较量脑力的人实在不多。像你这样的人，可立刻看穿他们的把戏，消灭邪恶之源，让它没有机会生根、蔓延。”

或许是他喝多了；或许这个场合让他忘我。总之他就这样在兴头上好一阵子，边说还边激动地握着我的手。也许是因为这位大人物如此真情流露——或者，是因为我心里整晚就想问他一件事——等他终于讲完，我便对他说：

“塞西尔爵士，我相信您最近去过上海。”

“上海？没错，我的朋友。来来去去嘛。中国的局势，事关重大呀。你知道的，我们不能只管欧洲如何，现在必须把眼光放远。”

“我问这事，是因为我在上海出生。”

“真的吗？原来如此。”

“我只是好奇，先生，不知道您会不会碰巧遇到过我在那里的一位老友。当然，我这样问您实在有点没头没脑。不过，他姓‘山下’。山下秋良。”

“山下？这个嘛。我懂了，是日本人。上海日本人自然不少。他们在那里的影响力愈来愈强。山下，是吧。”

“山下秋良。”

“我不敢说有没有遇见过他。他是外交人员还是什么？”

“老实说，先生，我也不知道。他是我儿时的朋友。”

“哦，原来如此。如果是这样，你确定他人还在上海吗？也许你的朋友回日本去了。”

“不会的，我确定他还在那里。秋良非常喜欢上海。再说，他早下定决心永远不回日本，所以，我确定他还在那里。”

“可惜我没遇见过他。我跟一个叫‘斋藤’的很熟，还有几个军官，不过没人叫那个名字。”

“那当然……”我笑了笑，好掩藏我的失望，“本来就机会渺茫。不过我真的只是碰碰运气。”

这时候有件事让我略微一惊——莎拉·亨明斯竟已站在我身边。

“好啊，您可终于逮住我们的大侦探了，塞西尔爵士。”她欢愉地说。

“没错，亲爱的，”老先生回答，对她展露笑容，“我才在跟他讲，往后这些年，我们不知道要多么仰赖他们这些人呢。”

莎拉·亨明斯对我微笑。“我得说句话，塞西尔爵士，就我个人的经验，班克斯先生也未必一定可靠，不过我们要再找到更好的人也不容易了。”

我决定到了这个节骨眼上，不如尽早脱身来得妙，于是假装看到别处有个旧识，便先行告退。

过了好一会儿，我才再看到亨明斯小姐。那时候许多宾客已经准备打道回府，舞厅里也没那么拥挤。此外，侍者打开好几扇连着阳台的落地窗，让清新的晚风吹进舞厅。尽管如此，我还是觉得有点暖，

为了透透气，我逛到其中一个阳台。我一踏进阳台才发现莎拉·亨明斯早已站在那里，背对舞厅，长烟嘴上点了根烟，凝望着夜空。我退了一步，不过虽然她动也不动，我却感觉得到，她知道我在那里。因此我便走上前去：

“亨明斯小姐，今晚您到底没有白跑一回。”

“今晚真是美极了，”她说，并没有转头看我。她满足地叹了口气，抽口烟，然后侧过脸对我淡淡一笑，随即仰首凝望夜空。“一切都如我所想。全是了不起的人物。无处不值得流连。了不起的人物。还有那塞西尔爵士，人真是好，你说是不？我跟埃里克·米切尔谈他的画展谈得最愉快不过。他邀我下个月参加私人展示会。”

我没说什么。有一会儿，我们只是一同靠在栏杆上站着。说来奇怪——也许是那弦乐四重奏的关系吧，一首柔美的华尔兹从那里飘来——如此无言并立，并不如常理以为的那样尴尬。最后她说了：

“我猜，你没想到我会这样。”

“会怎样？”

“决心这么强烈。今晚非来不可。”

“我的确没想到。”接着说，“你怎么会这么想，亨明斯小姐，非得要到像今夜这样的场合来找伴？”

“非得？你真的以为我非这么做不可？”

“我也只能这么猜啰。早一点的时候，在接待厅发生的事，可是支持这个说法的。”

我没想到她只是一笑置之，然后带着笑容对我说：“有何不可，克里斯托弗？有什么理由我不该希望自己能参加这种聚会。这里简直是……天堂！”

我并没有作答，她的笑容暗去。

“我想你并不同意。”她说，语调完全不同。

“我只是想说……”

“你尽管说。你说得对。刚才那件事你全知道，你觉得丢脸，所以你不同意。可是，我还有什么办法呢？我不希望等我老了，回顾人生才发现一场空虚。我要有所成就，足以自豪的那种成就。你知道吗，克里斯托弗，我有我的抱负。”

“我不确定我完全了解你的意思。你是否以为，只要跟名人搭上关系，人生就值得了？”

“你真的当我是这种人？”

她转过头去，也许真的伤了心，然后又抽了一口烟。我看着她注视楼下无人的街道，以及对街楼房灰泥粉刷的门面。她平静地说：

“我了解你为什么这样觉得。如果你要以嘲弄的冷眼看待我，这再自然不过。”

“我希望我没有这样看待你。如果有，我会很难过。”

“那么你就应该用点心体谅。”她转向我，眼中露出专注的眼神，然后又转回去。“假如我父母今天还在世，”她说，“那么他们一定会跟我说，我该嫁人了。他们也许没错。不过我不要跟我眼前许多女孩一样。我不愿把我所有的爱、所有的精力、所有的才智——尽管没多少——浪费在只会打打高尔夫球，或是在伦敦商业区卖债券的窝囊废身上。我要嫁，就要嫁给真正有所贡献的人。我是指对世人、对于改善世界有贡献的人。这样的抱负有什么不对？我不是来这种地方找名人，克里斯托弗。我是来这里找杰出的人。偶尔遇到一点尴尬场面，我才不在乎！”——她挥手指向厅内——“我就是不愿认命把人生浪费在某个愉快、礼貌、循规蹈矩的废物身上。”

“听你这么说，”我回答，“我看得出，你把自己看作，呃，一个狂热分子。”

“克里斯托弗，这样说也没错。哦，他们在演奏什么？这个我听过。是莫扎特吗？”

“我想是海顿。”

“啊，你说得对，是海顿。”有好几秒钟，她望着天空，仿佛在聆听乐声。

“亨明斯小姐，”我终究还是说了，“傍晚我对待你的态度，我感到十分不妥。老实说，我十分后悔，也满心愧疚，希望你能原谅我。”

她继续望着天空，轻轻用长烟嘴抚过脸颊。“你真是个正人君子，克里斯托弗。”她幽然道出，“不过该道歉的是我，毕竟我只是想利用你。毋庸否认。刚才闹得鸡犬不宁，我才不在乎。我却在乎我没有善待你，你也许不信，但是那一点也不假。”

我笑了出来。“那好，我们不妨就一起原谅对方。”

“好，就这么办。”她转向我，脸上忽然绽放笑容，简直有如孩童般开怀。接着，一股倦意似乎再度袭来，她又转身看夜空去了。

“我一定糟蹋过别人，”她说，“我想，那是我的抱负心使然。而我剩下的时间也不多了。”

“你很久以前就失去了父母吗？”我问。

“就像永远那么久。不过话说回来，他们也永远与我同在。”

“嗯，我很高兴你今晚过得愉快。我只能再说一次，我后悔我待你的行为。”

“你瞧，大家都要走了。真可惜！我还想跟你聊好多事情呢，譬如说，聊你的朋友。”

“我的朋友？”

“你向塞西尔爵士打听的那位。上海的那位。”

“秋良吗？他只是个儿时玩伴。”

“可是我感觉得到他对你非常重要。”

我站直身子，回头看了看。“你说得对，大家都要走了。”

“那么我最好也走罢，免得我的离场跟我的进场一样轰动。”

不过她并未动身离去，最后还是我先告退，回到厅里。此时我回顾阳台，觉得她的身影在阳台上显得孤单，她兀自抽烟，把烟吹入夜空，任身后屋内的宾客如水流逝。我甚至想到我该回头，伸出手臂邀她一同离场。不过她提到秋良的事情又让我生起戒心，于是我决定暂且打住——今晚我已经尽了全力，改善我跟莎拉·亨明斯的关系。

第二部

一九三一年五月十五日・伦敦

第四章

在我上海家中的花园尽头，有座草丘，上头有棵槭树就长在丘顶。秋良与我约六岁大时，常喜欢在草丘周围和上头玩耍。如今，每当我想起这位儿时玩伴，脑海里常出现我们俩在草坡跑上跑下的景象，有时我们干脆就从最陡的地方跳下来。

每次我们玩累了，就会坐在丘顶，背靠着树干喘口气。从这个高处，我们可以清楚地俯瞰我家的花园与耸立在花园尽头的白色大宅。我只要阖眼片刻，就可以唤起那幅景象，如同身历其境：细心打理的“英国式”草皮，分隔我家与秋良家花园的那排榆树在午后所投下的阴影，还有房子本身一硕大的白色建筑物，有无数个厢房与花格栏杆阳台。我想，这段关于房子的记忆，不过是孩童的想像，实际上恐怕没那么富丽堂皇。当然，即使在那个时候，我也已经知道这栋房子怎么也比不上涌泉路那一带的住宅。不过，这房子给我们一家人住是绰绰有余，家里不过我父母、我、梅俐；再有一些仆人。

那是摩根洋行的房产，这表示屋中有许多装饰品与画是我不准碰的，这也表示我家不时会有“房客”——公司里刚到上海，还“立足未稳”的职员。我不知道我父母是否反对这样的安排。我一点也不在乎，因为房客通常是年轻人，带来英国小巷与草地的气息，那是在童书《柳林风声》里读到的内容，或是柯南·道尔悬疑小说里多雾街道的气氛。这些年轻的英国人无疑都急于制造好印象，都肯耐着性子任我问个没完，或者答应我无理的要求。现在想想，他们大部分都比此刻的我还年轻，而且全都远离了自己的家园。不过，当时对我而言，他们每一个都是我仔细研究与模仿的对象。

还是回头谈秋良吧：我现在想起某个下午发生的一件事，当时我们俩一直在草丘那儿，像无头苍蝇似的冲上跑下，排演我们一起编的戏。我们靠着槭树坐下来喘口气，我凝望着草地另一头的房子，等着胸口的起伏平息，这时秋良在我背后说：

“小心，老格。有蜈蚣。在你脚边。”

我清清楚楚听到他说“老格”，不过那时并没有多想。只是秋良用过一次以后，似乎爱上了这个小名，在接下来的几分钟里，我们又玩起我们的游戏，他不断用这个名字叫我：“这边，老格！快一点，老格！”

“反正不是老格就是了，”有一次我们争论游戏该怎么进行的时候，我终于告诉他，“是老哥好不好？”

正如我所料，秋良强烈抗议。“才怪，才怪。布朗太太，她要我说一次又一次。老格。老格。正确的发音，就是这样。她念老格。她可是老师哦！”

想说服他根本没有意义；自从他开始上英文课，他就极为自豪在家中他是英语专家。我每次总是不肯让步；吵到无法收拾，秋良气得干脆拂袖而去，丢下游戏不管，从我们的“秘密通道”离开一分隔两个花园的围篱上有一道缺口。

往后几次一起玩耍，他没有叫我“老格”，也没有提起我们在草丘上的争论。几周后的某个早晨，我早已忘记这件事，我们从涌泉路回家，路经一排富丽堂皇的房子与美丽的草坪。我不太记得我到底跟他说了一些什么，总之，他的回答是：

“你真好，老哥。”

我记得我忍住不提他也同意了我的念法。因为我已经太了解秋良了，他这样说“老哥”并非以间接的方式承认他先前念错，而是一不知怎么地，我也懂他的意思——而是他要表示，他可是一一直都认为该念“老哥”的；现在他只是重申了他的论点，我没发出异议，更让他确信自己是对的。确实，当天下午，他更加得意忘形地跟我“老哥”来“老哥”去的，仿佛说：“所以你决定不再无理取闹啰，我很高兴你变得明理了一点。”

这种行为，在秋良身上并不罕见，尽管总是让我火冒三丈，但我很少会花工夫去反驳。事实上一虽然今天我觉得这件事难以解释——我当时觉得有必要为秋良保留这样的错觉，要是有什么大人想裁定这场“老格”之争谁是谁非，我八成会为秋良说话。

我可没有意思要暗示，我完全受制于秋良的气势，或者我们的关系是段不平衡的友谊。在游戏里，常常是由我走第一步，而且大半关键决策都由我作出。事实上，我在心智方面比他强，他大概也接受这点。从另一个角度来看，我觉得其他各种事情，却让我的日本朋友拥有强大的权威。举个例子，像是他的擒拿术——每次我说了他不喜欢听的话，或是演戏的时候，我拒绝接受他很想采用的剧情转折，他就会用擒拿术来对付我。尽管他才大我一个月，但在一般事情上，我觉得他比我世故多了。他似乎知道许多我不知道的事情。最重要的是，他声称有数次，他曾经冒险走出租界的范围。

如今回顾起来，有件事倒让我有点意外，当时，像我们这样的小男孩，竟然可以在那些地方自由来去也没人管。当然，这些地方都还是在相对比较安全的公共租界内。就我而言，大人绝对不准我进入上海市区里的中国人区域，据我所知，秋良的父母对于此事，态度也一样严格。大人告诉我们，在那些区域，有说不尽的可怕疾病、污秽、坏人。有一次我几乎要走出租界：我与母亲所搭的马车意外走到苏州河靠闸北区的一条路；运河对岸拥挤的低矮屋顶就在眼前，我紧紧屏住呼吸，害怕瘟疫会越过那弯细流飘过来。难怪那时我的朋友声称他曾经数度秘密侵入这样的地区，会让我钦佩不已。

我不记得我曾经质疑过秋良的任何这类大话。有一次我跟母亲提到我朋友在租界外的冒险之旅，我记得她笑着说了些什么，让我开始怀疑这些事迹。我好生她的气，我想就是从那时起，一切和秋良有关的任何私密事件，我都小心不跟她提。

顺带一提，母亲是秋良唯一特别敬畏的人。假如他用擒拿术把我制伏，我还是不愿接受他的论点，我就会把母亲抬出来，警告他我要去母亲那里告状。当然，我也不会动不动就这么做——在那个年纪，要拿母亲的权威当靠山，还是觉得丢脸。不过在不得不这么做的情况下，我总是惊讶于这招引起的变化——一个张牙舞爪的残忍妖魔霎时变成惊慌的小孩。我永远也搞不懂母亲对秋良怎么会有这样的影响；尽管他一向非常有礼貌，但他一点也不怕大人。而印象中，我不记得母亲对他说话，有哪次语气不是温和而友善的。我还记得当时我就思索过这个谜，心中想到有几种可能。

有那么一阵子，我觉得秋良会这样看待母亲，是因为她“美丽”。我有位“美丽”的母亲，这是我在成长过程中接受的一件事

我早就接受了生活里的这种事：每一阵子就会有一位公司派来的高级干部，在家中逛上一个钟头，在笔记本上记东记西，看到问题便唠叨。我记得母亲有一次告诉我，我很小的时候，喜欢“当”公司的卫生督察，每次我拿起铅笔研究我们家的厕所，她常常得设法把我哄开，免得我玩个没完没了。情况也许是如此，不过就我记忆所及，这些察访大半都平静无事，有好几年，我连想都没想起过。然而，如今我明白了，这些督察除了检查卫生情况，也来检查家中成员有无疾病或寄生虫的迹象，这类行动可能极为难堪，无疑公司选派执行人员时，也会挑选办事技巧与分寸拿捏都高明的人。我当然记得好些温和而善于察言观色的人——通常是英国人，有时是法国人——他们不但对母亲总是恭恭敬敬，连对梅俐也不敢造次。不过那天早上来的督察——当时我一定已经八岁了一——却完全不是这种人。

今天我还清楚记得关于他的两件事：其一，他留着下垂的胡子；其二，他的帽子后面有块棕色的渍——也许是茶渍——延伸到环帽缎带底下。我在屋前马车道围成的草坪上玩耍。我记得那天天气阴沉。那个人出现在大门口，向屋里走来，我正全神贯注玩我的游戏。他从我身旁经过，喃喃说着：“你好，小伙子。妈妈在家吗？”接着便往前

走，也不等我回答。就在我注视他背影的时候，发现了他帽上的污渍。

我只记得，接下来的事大约发生在一个钟头以后。这时候秋良已经过来了，我们在游戏间玩得正起劲。他们说话的声音——虽然没有人拉高嗓门，却充满升高的紧张气氛——让我们停下游戏抬头细听，后来还溜到走廊里，缩在游戏间外面的橡木大柜旁偷听。

我家的楼梯比寻常住家要更堂皇些，从这个有利的位置，我们可以看到闪亮的护栏，顺着楼梯的弧度降到开阔的玄关。母亲与督察就在那里，面对面，两人都又直又僵，站在房间中央，看起来有如留在西洋棋盘上的两只敌对棋子。我发现那位督察把有污渍的帽子抓在胸口，而我母亲则两手相握，置于上腹前方，那样子就像某几个晚上，美国助理牧师娘刘易斯太太弹着钢琴，而母亲正要引吭高歌一般。

接下来的争执，尽管本身不怎么重要，但我相信对母亲却别具意义，也代表道德获胜的关键时刻。我记得，后来随着我成长，她也一再提起这件事，仿佛要我铭记在心；我记得客人来访时，经常听她从头到尾把整件事说给客人听，结束之前，母亲通常先笑一声，然后说那位督察在此事发生后，不久就被撤职。结果，我已经无法确定我对那天早上的记忆，有多少是我从走廊边上亲眼目睹的情况，有多少是来自母亲的叙述。总之，印象里，秋良和我在橡木柜后窥探时，督察大约是这样说的：

“我完全尊重您的感受，班克斯太太。但是我们来到海外，还是小心为上。公司对所有职员的福利负有责任，对于资深优秀的职员就更不用说了，像是您本人与班克斯先生。”

“对不起，赖特先生，”母亲回答，“可是我依然不明白您反对的是什么呢？您提到的这些仆人，这些年来都表现得极为良好。我可以为他们的卫生标准做担保。而您也才承认，他们看不出任何传染病的迹象。”

“就算这样，夫人，他们也是从山东来的。而公司有义务建议公司所有的职员，不要把那个省份的居民雇到家中使唤。虽然失之严苛，却是惨痛经验所换来的教训。”

“您不会当真吧？您希望我辞退我这些朋友——没错，我们早就当他们是朋友了！——就仅仅因为他们来自山东？”

这时候，督察的态度变得愈加冠冕堂皇，他继续向母亲解释，公司反对山东来的帮佣，无疑不但基于卫生与健康的理由，也是因为他们的诚信堪疑。由于屋内有许多物品属于公司财产——督察边说边指——他有责任以最坚决的态度一再重申他的建议。家母此时再度打断他的话，要他说明这个骇人听闻的论点有何依据，督察疲惫地叹了口气才说：

“夫人，事情很简单，就是抽鸦片。山东境内的鸦片瘾，已经到了十分悲惨的地步，甚至整个村子的人都离不开烧鸦片的烟枪。因此，班克斯太太，山东的卫生水准下降，传染病的发生率却高涨。而且，那些从山东来上海工作的人，就算他们自身本性诚实，不用多久也会开始偷窃，因为他们家乡的父母、兄弟、亲戚、族人，还有许许多多，都指望他们来满足毒瘾……噢，夫人！我只是想说……”

不只是督察此时不敢再说下去；我身边的秋良也倒抽了一口气。我瞥了他一眼，发现他张着嘴，凝视楼下的母亲。正是他此刻的神情，让我推测他后来对母亲毕恭毕敬，一定是从这个早上开始的。

不过，虽说督察与秋良两人，因为母亲在此刻所做的事而吓了一跳，我自己却看不出有什么反常的部分。在我看来，她只是重新摆个站姿，准备发表自己的意见罢了。话说回来，她的举止我早已熟悉；也许对于不熟悉的人，母亲在这种情况下惯常表现的表情与姿势，的确会让人觉得心惊。

这不是说我完全没警觉到山雨欲来的气氛，其实打从督察提到“鸦片”开始，我就知道这个可怜虫完蛋了。

他忽然闭口不语，无疑知道对方会打断他的话。不过，我记得母亲也沉默不语，营造出一种暴风雨前的宁静——虽然无言，两眼却炯炯盯着督察不放——对阵了半日，才用冷静下藏着怒火、一触即发的口吻说道：

“督察先生，敢情您是要代表这家公司，来和我谈鸦片喽？”

接下来是针针见血的猛烈抨击，她对督察所用的这一招，我早已熟悉，而日后也还要听她陈述其中概要好多次：她先泛泛地批评英国政府，再把火力集中到私人企业，特别是摩根洋行身上，说他们不该从印度，输入这么庞大数量的鸦片到中国，然后冷眼旁观这整个民族陷入悲惨与堕落。说的时候，母亲的声音常常高张欲裂，不过都尖而未破。她双眼始终不曾放松，最后问他：

“您不觉得羞耻吗？您还是基督徒、英国人、循规蹈矩的人吗？为这样的公司服务，您不觉得羞耻吗？告诉我，赚这种亵渎上帝的钱财来过活，您的良心能安吗？”

要是这位仁兄多点胆量，他也许可以指出，母亲之于他，也不过是公司同仁的眷属，并没有身份立场以这样的口吻、这样的言语斥责他。不过此时他知道再辩下去势必无法收拾，于是咕哝几句不痛不痒的话来保留自己的面子，就告退了。

在那些日子里，每次看到有大人一像是这位督察一还不知道母亲是“鹰派”的反鸦片健将，我都颇感意外。在整个成长的过程里，我一直认为母亲名闻遐迩，受人景仰，是中国鸦片毒龙的头号大敌。我得说明一下，关于鸦片的话题，在上海的大人并不会顾忌有无儿童在场，然而我年幼时，对这种事当然所知不多。每天乘车上学，我习惯看到南京路上有中国人摊成大字，躺在门口晒太阳，有一阵子，每当我听到母亲抨击鸦片，我总以为她帮的就是这种人。只不过后来，我长大了一点，就有更多机会一窥这个错综复杂的主题。像是后来母亲举办午餐会时，也会要我在场。

这些聚会在我家举行，利用平常日子父亲在上班的时间。通常会来四五位女士，仆人引领她们到花房，里头已经有张桌子陈设在藤蔓与棕榈树之间。我会在旁帮忙递茶杯、茶碟，还有盘子，然后等待我已知那一刻的来临：母亲会开始问客人，要是她们“凭着良心回答”，她们会怎么看待公司的政策。从这一刻起，愉快的谈话结束，所有的女士都静静聆听母亲继续表达她对“我们公司的行为”的深恶痛绝，她认为那“不是基督徒与英国人该做的事”。就我所记得，这些午餐聚会总是从这时候开始，变得安静而尴尬，没多久这些女士就会冷冰冰地道别，然后漫步走向等候的马车或汽车。不过我从母亲告诉我的事情里得知，她也在公司同仁的眷属里，赢得一些太太的赞同，于是志同道合的人就会受邀参加她的聚会。

这第二种聚会就严肃多了，我是不准参加的。他们会关在饭厅里进行，要是聚会进行的时候我在家，我走路时就不准发出声响。偶尔母亲带我去见见她特别景仰的人物——也许是一位牧师，或是某位外交官——不过一有客人要到，她总会叫梅俐把我带到最碍事的角落。菲利普叔叔当然是每次必到的一员，而我总是想尽办法在散会的时候出现，好让他看到我。只要他瞥见我，每次都会带着笑容来到我身边，我们就会聊聊。有时候，他要是没有急事，我就会把他拉到一旁，看我那个星期画的图画，或者到后院的露台去坐坐。

一旦所有客人都走了，家里的气氛就会变得完全不同。母亲每次心情都会快乐起来，仿佛聚会把她所有的忧虑都一扫而空。我听见她在屋子里一边收拾东西，一边还哼着歌，一听到她的歌，我就会跑到花园里等候。因为我知道，她整理完毕之后，一出来就会看到我，不管离午餐时间还有多久，她都会陪我玩。

等我再长大些，在这样的时刻，也就是聚会结束之后，母亲会跟我一起去极司菲尔公园<sup>(3)</sup>散步。不过到我六七岁时，我们就比较常待在家里下棋，有时也玩我的玩具士兵。我还记得，我们在这些日子里发展出一套游戏的程序。那个时候，离露台不远的草坪上有架秋千，母亲会从屋子里哼着歌走出来，踏过草地，在秋千上坐下。我会在后花园里，在我的草丘上等候，然后向她奔跑过去，假装发脾气。

“下来啦，妈！你会把它压坏！”我会在秋千前胡蹦乱跳，挥舞手臂。“你太重了！你会把它压坏！”

而母亲则假装既没看见也没听见，反而把秋千愈荡愈高，同时放声高唱这样的歌曲：“黛丝，黛丝，请你跟我说你愿意。”等我的请求无效，我就会在草地上一直学倒立——其中缘由已不可考。她的歌声里就会穿插阵阵笑声，最后她会从秋千上下来，我们两人便去玩我准备好的游戏。就算是今天，每次想起母亲的那些聚会，我总会跟着想到会后随之而来的殷切期盼。

几年前，我在大英博物馆的阅览室花了几天的时间，研究那个时代关于把鸦片输入中国的种种争论。我仔细阅读了许多当年的报纸文章、信件、文献，有一些儿时百思不解的议题，如今明朗了许多。然而——我也得承认——我做这样的研究，主要动机是希望能翻到有关母亲的报导。如我前面所述，毕竟儿时的经验让我相信，她是反鸦片运动的关键人物。结果她的名字连一次都没出现，我有些失望。以前我不断听到别人引用她的话、赞美她、批评她，怎么在我搜集的资料里却一次也没有出现。我倒是碰到好几则提到菲利普叔叔。有一则是在一封瑞典传教士给《字林西报》的投书里，他在谴责数家欧洲公司的同时，称菲利普叔叔是“可敬可佩的道德明灯”。找不到母亲的名字让我失望透了，失望之情实在沉痛，于是我从此放弃这方面的研究。

我其实无意在此立刻谈到菲利普叔叔。今天傍晚，我以为下午我曾在公车上对莎拉·亨明斯提起菲利普叔叔的名字——还告诉她一些基本生平。不过我把事情从头到尾仔细想了一回，我有理由确定菲利普叔叔根本不在我们的谈话之中——我得说我松了一口气。有个想法也许

愚蠢，不过我向来觉得不该让菲利普叔叔的存在太具体，这样他就会留在我一个人的记忆里。

那天下午，我倒是跟她谈了一点秋良的事，如今我有机会再想想这件事，觉得这样做也好。反正我也没有透露太多，而她也并非真的有兴趣。我完全不知道为什么我会忽然跟她说了那么多事情；其实，在草秣市场站上公车时，我原本无意跟她说这些。

我受大卫·科贝特的邀请，参加他与一些朋友在摄政王南街的餐厅聚餐——此人与我只是泛泛之交。那是个时髦的餐会地点，他为我们这十几位客人在餐厅深处，预订了一张长餐桌。我很高兴看到莎拉也在客人里头——也有点意外，因为我一直不知道她也是科贝特的朋友——由于我到晚了，没办法坐在可以与她谈话的地方。

那时天色转阴，侍者为我们的餐桌点了一架烛台。我们这伙人里头有个名叫海格利的，喜欢把蜡烛吹熄再叫侍者来点上，他觉得这样闹着玩挺有意思。他在二十分钟之内做了三次——每次他认为热闹的气氛开始冷却就来上这么一回——而其他人似乎也觉得这个恶作剧很好玩。在我看来，莎拉这时候玩得还算愉快，跟着其他人起哄。我们在那里也许待了一个钟头——有几位男士先行告退回办公室去——这时候，大家的注意力转到了艾玛·卡梅伦身上，一位热力四射的女性，坐在莎拉那头。我只知道她已经与身边的人谈了一会儿她的难题；然而此刻，餐桌上似乎静了下来，一下子让她成为聚会的焦点。接下来大家半正经、半嘲讽地讨论艾玛·卡梅伦与她母亲的问题——显然最近这对母女之间的关系，因为艾玛与一位法国人订婚而进入另一个新的危机。什么建议都有人提。例如那位名叫海格利的家伙，就提议在蛇河边盖一栋类似动物园的机构，把每个人的母亲——“当然还包括那些三姑六婆”——通通关进去。其他人则依自己的经验，提出更有用的建议，而艾玛·卡梅伦巴不得所有人的注意力都集中在她身上，她也把话题炒得热乎乎，陈述一则又一则洒狗血的轶事，以显示她这位至亲教人忍无可忍的个性。讨论进行了十五分钟左右，我看见莎拉在聚会主人耳边说了句话就离开房间。女士的化妆室位于餐厅大门的接待厅附近，因此别人——若有人看到她离去——无疑都以为她是去化妆室。不过我发现她表情有异，于是几分钟后就离席去找她。

我发现她站在餐厅入口，望着窗外的摄政王南街。她没有注意到我走近，我便上前碰碰她的手臂，问她：

“怎么了，没事吧？”

她吓了一跳，而且我注意到她眼中有些许泪痕，她立刻用笑容掩盖过去。

“是啊，我没事。只是觉得有点闷，就这样。现在好多了。”她笑了笑，又朝街上凝望，像在找什么似的，“真不好意思，我看起来一定很没礼貌。我真该进去了。”

“如果你不想这么做，我实在不觉得有什么该不该的。”

她仔细端详着我，然后问道：“他们还在谈刚才谈的那些吗？”

“我出来的时候还是，”我又补充，“我想，在讨论问题母亲的研究会上，我们两个无法做出任何贡献。”

她忽然笑出了声，拭去泪水，不再对我隐藏心情。“是啊，”她说，“我猜我们两个确实都没资格与会。”接着她又笑着说：“我真傻。他们也不过是给午餐助兴罢了。”

“你在等车吗？”我问，因为她殷切地观望街上的往来车辆。

“什么？没有，没有。我只是看看风景。”接着她又说，“不知道公车会不会来。你瞧，就在对街，那里有个站牌。我以前与母亲在公车上度过许多时光。我们只是坐着玩。我是说我小时候。要是我们坐不到双层公车的上层第一排，我们便直接下车等下一班。有时候我们会花几个钟头在伦敦市区里绕。看看风景，聊聊天，指着有趣的东西要对方看。我以前常常坐公车玩。难道你没上过公车，克里斯托弗？你该试试。从公车上层可以看到好多东西哦。”

“我得承认，通常我若不是步行就是叫计程车。我有点害怕伦敦的公车。我总觉得如果我上了公车，它就会带我到我不想去的地方，然后我得花一整天的时间找路回来。”

“有件事不知该不该告诉你，克里斯托弗？”她的声音变得非常冷静，“其实是我笨，我一直到最近才想通，以前从来没有明白过。母亲那时候一定已经非常痛苦，她没办法跟我一起做别的事，那也是为什么我们会在公车上待那么久，只有这件事我们还能一起做。”

“你现在想不想搭公车？”我问。

她又往窗外望去。“难道你不忙吗？”

“这可是我的荣幸。我也说了，我害怕自己搭公车。要是有你这样的老手带领，这可是我的福气。”

“很好。”她忽然眼神一亮，“就让我来教你怎么搭伦敦公车。”

后来我们没在摄政王南街上公车——我们可不希望他们午餐散会出来，看见我们在等车——而是到不远处的草秣市场站等车。我们登上公车上层，她发现前面第一排空着，竟表现出一种幼稚的喜悦。公车蹒跚驶往特拉法尔加广场，我们就坐在那里一起摇晃。伦敦今天看起来灰沉沉的，一路上人行道上的行人都人手一把雨伞或穿着雨衣。我估计我们在公车上大约待了半个钟头，或更久一点，路经斯特兰德大街、官署街、克勒肯维尔路。有时候我们静静地欣赏车下的街景；有时则聊聊，讲的都是些无关紧要的事。她的心情比午餐时要轻松多了，也不再提她母亲。我不确定那个话题是如何开启的，不过却是在许多乘客于上霍尔本路下车之后，那时，车子沿着格雷旅店路继续行驶，我竟然谈起了秋良。我相信一开始只是顺口提到，形容他是我的“儿时玩伴”。不过她一定试着想多了解我，我记得没过多久我就笑着跟她说：

“我总是忘不了，那时候我们还一起偷东西呢。”

“真的！”她惊呼，“真是这样吗！大侦探也有段不为人知的犯罪史！我就知道这个日本男孩会有文章。拜托，告诉我，你们偷了什么？”

“其实也算不上偷。我们那时才十岁。”

“可是你良心不安，对吧？直到现在，”

“才不。那只是小事一桩，我们从用人房里偷了点东西。”

“真有趣。那是在上海吧？”

我想我一定还跟她说了几件往事，当然都是些没什么意义的事，可是下午与她分手时——后来我们在新牛津街下车——我感到有些意外，也有些不安，我竟然什么事都跟她说了。毕竟到了这个国家以后，我从来不曾跟任何人提起过去，而且，如我所说，我也绝对没有打算要从今日开始破戒。

不过这也许只是迟早的事。老实说，在过去这一年里，我愈来愈专注地回想往事；这样的专注背后有个动力，那就是我发现我的记忆——儿时的、父母的一近来开始变得模糊。最近有好几次，我发现两三年前我相信会永铭心头的事情，现在却要想半天。换言之，我不得不接受我在上海的人生随着岁月流逝，将愈来愈模糊，最后只剩几抹残

影。就在今夜，我坐下来把我还记得的事，大略依照顺序重新温习，我又再次警觉到，这些记忆竟然变得更为朦胧。就像我刚才述说的母亲与卫生督察这件轶事——尽管我对自己精确记得此事的梗概十分有把握，不过在心头重温一遍之后，对于细节已经没有那么肯定了。到头来，我不再确定她对督察所说的话，到底用了哪些字句：“赚这种亵渎上帝的钱财来过活，您的良心能安吗？”现在我觉得，即使在母亲激动的时候，她一样会注意到这话说得牵强，而且可能会害她让人笑话。我不相信母亲会这么失态。换个角度来看，我把这些话跟她连在一起，可能正是因为这样的问题是我们住上海的时候，她常常问自己的问题。不争的事实是，我们“赖以维生”的这家公司所做的是，正是她认为该打入地狱的坏事，这一定成为她挥之不去的良心折磨。

说真的，也许我连她说那些话的前情后事都记不清楚；说不定这个问题不是对卫生督察说的，而是对父亲，而且是另一天早上，他们在餐厅里争吵的时候说的。

第五章

我不记得那次在餐厅里的争吵发生在卫生督察来访之前还是之后。我只记得那天下午雨下得好大，屋子里到处阴沉沉的，我还记得我在图书室里温习我的算术功课，梅俐则在旁陪伴。

我们称之为图书室，其实也不过是个前厅，而墙上碰巧摆了几排书罢了。中间的空地刚好只够放下一张红木书桌，那里向来是我做功课的地方，我的背就靠在通往餐厅的双开门上。梅俐，我的阿妈，认为我的学业是件严肃的大事，即使我做了一个钟头的功课，她也就一个钟头不苟言笑地站在我身边看着，从没想要往身后的书架上靠一靠，或者到我对面的椅子上坐一坐。用人们早就知道读书时间不可以闯进来，连我父母也这么认为，除非有什么重大事情，不然他们也不会来打扰我们。

那天下午，父亲竟然大步走过前厅，无视我们的存在，进入饭后把门牢牢关上。几分钟后，又有人闯入，是母亲，她也一样大步通过，迅速地走进饭厅。接下来的几分钟，即使隔着厚重的门，仍不时听到只字片语透过来，可见他们吵得多么不可开交。不过真正教人沮丧的是，只要我多听了一会儿，只要我手中的铅笔迟迟写不出算数题目的答案，就会招来梅俐的责骂。

可是就在这时候——我不知道怎么会这样——有人来唤梅俐过去，书桌边忽然只剩我一人。起先我还继续在做功课，好怕梅俐回来会发现我离开了椅子。不过她离开愈久，我就愈想要听清楚闷在那扇重门后头的争执到底在吵什么。终究我还是站了起来，走到门边——即便到了这个节骨眼，我还是每隔几秒就跑回书桌，以为听见了阿妈的脚步声。后来，我想到一个可以理直气壮地留在门边的办法：我把尺握在手里，就算梅俐逮到我，我也可以说我正在测量房间的大小。

尽管如此，也只有在我父母按捺不住，音量失控的时候，我才听得见整句话。我约略可以从母亲愤怒的声音里，听到义正词严的语气，就像那天早上她对卫生督察说的话一样。我听见她反复说了好几次：“可耻！”还一直用“罪恶的生意”来指称她批评的事。她说：“你把我们都变成了共犯！无一幸免！真是可耻！”父亲听起来也很生气，不过他的语气是辩解与无奈。他一直说着这类的话：“事情没那么简单。一点也不像你说的那么简单！”忽然间，他扯着嗓门说：

“可惜啊！我不是菲利普！我天生就不是。可惜啊！真是可惜啊！”

他的咆哮里别有深意，像是某种锥心刺骨的无奈，我忽然好气梅俐在这种情况下留我一个人在那里。也许就是这时候，我站在门边，手里握着尺，既想再听下去，又想逃回我的游戏间，到玩具士兵身旁寻找庇护，忽然间，我听到母亲说出这些话：

“为这样的公司服务，您不觉得羞耻吗？告诉我，赚这种亵渎上帝的钱财来过活，您的良心能安吗？”

我不记得后来梅俐是否回来了，或者父母出来的时候我是否还在图书室。我倒是记得随之而来的，是我父母之间一段相当长期的冷战——也就是说，持续了好几个星期，而非数日而已。我不是说他们之间连只字片语都没有，只不过所有的交谈都仅限于现实事务。

这种冷战我早就司空见惯，也从来不会多问。反正这也不太会给我的生活带来什么影响。例如，父亲来吃早餐的时候还是会先说一声：“早安！”再把双手合在一块，只不过母亲的回应是冰冷的眼神。遇到这种情况，父亲为了掩饰他的尴尬，便转向我，用同样欢愉的语气问道：

“那么你呢，小海雀？昨晚有没有什么好玩的梦？”

根据我的经验，我该含糊应声然后继续吃东西。除此之外，如我所说，我的生活一切照旧。不过我想我一定对这件事多少有过什么想法，因为我确实记得，有一次我在秋良家玩耍，跟他有过一次特别的谈话。

在我记忆里，秋良的家从建筑本身来看，与我家十分类似；事实上，我记得父亲告诉过我，两栋房子是二十年前由同一家英国公司建造的。不过他家内部就另当别论了，那也是让我着迷之处。倒不是因为里头放眼皆是东方的画或装饰品——在上海，在我人生的那个阶段，我对这些东西必定是司空见惯——而是因为他家人在应用西式家具的方法上，有十分奇特的想法。我觉得该在地板上出现的小地毯，他们挂到墙上去；椅子的高度总是与桌子不搭；桌灯则顶着硕大欲坠的灯罩。最值得一游的，是他父母在屋子顶层布置的那两个和式房间。这两个房间小巧却不显得拥挤，地上铺了榻榻米，墙上则安上了纸板，如此一来，一旦进入房里——至少根据秋良的看法——就感觉不出自己其实不在木头与纸建造的纯正日式房子里。我记得这两个房间的门格外

有意思：从外面看，“西式”的这面，是橡木门板配上磨亮的铜制手把；从里面看，“和式”的那面，是细致的纸配上漆木格框。

总之，有一次，天气酷热如蒸，秋良与我在其中一个和式房间里玩耍。他教我玩一种游戏，用的是一叠写了日本字的纸牌。我尽力学会了基本规则，玩了几分钟，我忽然问他：

“你母亲会不会有时候不再跟你父亲讲话？”

他茫然地看着我，可能是因为他没听懂我的话；每次我像这样另起一个话题，他的英文程度往往就应付不了。于是我又问了一次，他耸耸肩说：

“母亲不跟父亲讲话，当父亲在办公室；母亲不跟父亲讲话，当父亲在厕所！”

话一说完，他抱着肚子狂笑，翻身仰卧在地上，两脚朝空中乱踢。我只好暂时丢下这事不提。不过既然都提了，我决心要问出他的看法，过了几分钟，我又问了一次。

这次他似乎感觉到我是真心要问，便把纸牌摆一边，问了我几个问题，就这样我或多或少让他明白了我心中的忧虑所为何来。他接着又翻身仰卧在地，不过这次他若有所思地盯着天花板上旋转的风扇。过了一会，他说：

“我知道为什么他们不。我知道。”接着他转向我说，“克里斯托弗，你，不够英国人。”

我请他解释，他又望着天花板，沉默不语。我也翻身仰卧，跟他一样盯着风扇。他躺在房内的另一角，后来他开口了，我记得他的声音哽咽几不成声。

“我家，一样，”他说，“母亲和父亲，他们不说话。因为，我，不够日本人。”

也许正如我提过的，我常把秋良当作人情世故的权威，因此那天我非常仔细地听他说话。我父母不跟对方说话，依他之见，是因为他们对我的行为感到痛心——也就是说，因为我的言行举止不够像英国人。他说，假如我朝这个方向去想，我就可以找出每次父母不说话跟自己在这方面的疏失间的关联。就他自己而言，他总是知道每次自己对不起日本血统，他果然就发现父母不再跟对方说话。我问他，那为什么他们不能像我们不乖的时候那样，用一般的方式责骂我们就好

了，秋良对我解释，情况不同；他谈的犯错，迥异于平时会让我们受责罚的行为不检。他指的是，我们让父母失望到连想责骂我们都没办法。

“母亲和父亲，非常非常，很失望，”他幽幽道出，“所以他们不说话。”

接着他坐了起来，指着当时窗户上半掩的百叶遮阳帘。我们这些小孩，他说，就像把帘叶系住的绳子。以前有位日本僧侣这么告诉他。我们常常不了解这点，不过正是我们这些小孩，不但把家系在一起，也把全世界系在一起。假如我们不尽自己的责任，帘叶就会散落一地。

我不记得那天我们还谈了些什么，再说，这种事情我不会老挂在心头。无论如何，我记得，我不止一次好想跟母亲求证我朋友说的理论，结果我一次也没问成，倒是有一次我跟菲利普叔叔谈起了这个话题。

菲利普叔叔并不是我的亲叔叔。他刚到上海时，曾跟我父母同住，在我家“做客”，当时我还没出生，他还受雇于摩根洋行。后来，我还很小的时候，他基于“自身与雇主对于中国该如何成长的想法，有极深鸿沟”的理由，辞掉了公司的职务，这是母亲每次描述的用词。等我年纪渐长，知道了这号人物的存在时，他已经在经营一家名为“圣木”的慈善机构了，宗旨是要改善上海中国人区域的生活条件。他是我父母长年的朋友，不过，我也提过，在母亲热衷反鸦片运动的那几年，他更成为家里的常客。

我还记得常常跟母亲一起去菲利普叔叔的办公室，地点就在市中心某教会的花园里—如今我猜测，应该是苏州路上的“联合教会”。我们的马车会直接驶进花园，停在一片果树成荫的大草坪边。在这里，尽管四周传来大都市的噪音，气氛却相当宁静，母亲下了马车会停下脚步，抬起头说一句：“空气，这里纯净多了。”看得出她的心情变得轻松，而且有时候一假如来早了些—我们就到草地上玩游戏，打发个几分钟。如果我们玩的是捉人游戏，在果树之间穿梭，母亲常常会跟我一样兴奋地欢笑尖叫。记得有一次我们玩到一半，她看见有牧师从教堂里出来，便立刻打住。我们文静地站在草坪边，他从我们身边走过的时候，我们还跟他寒暄一番。可是一看他走掉，母亲马上转身朝我蹲下来，与我共谋似的噗嗤一笑。这种事可能不止一次。总之，我记得一想到母亲也会跟我一样，参与一些会被“教训”的事

情，心里就觉得好奇妙。那些在教堂墓园里无忧无虑玩耍的时光，也许就是因为这个层面，才让我永远有些特别的感觉。

在我记忆中，菲利普叔叔的办公室总是乱七八糟，到处摆放着大大小小的箱子、一堆堆的报纸，甚至还有零散的抽屉匣，里头仍装有东西，摇摇晃晃地叠成小塔。我猜想母亲不会准许房间搞成这副德性，不过每次形容菲利普叔叔的办公室，她都只用“温馨”、“忙碌”之类的形容词。

每次来看他，他总不忘好好招呼我，热情地与我握手，请我坐下，然后跟我聊上好几分钟，母亲则带着笑容在一旁静候。通常他还会送我一份礼物，还佯称是早就准备好，等着我来拿的——其实没几次我就看出来，他是当下眼前有什么东西就拿来给我。“猜，我给你准备了什么，小海雀？”他会这么说，而眼神则在房内寻找一件合适的东西。就这样，我得到许多办公室的用具，全都保存在游戏室的一个旧柜子里：一只烟灰缸、一个象牙笔架、一块铅制的镇纸。有一次，菲利普叔叔说要送我礼物，话说完了，却还没看到什么合适的东西。他先是尴尬地停了一下，接着跳了起来，在办公室里走来走去，口中喃喃念着：“我放哪里去了？我到底丢哪儿去了？”找了半天，也许是情急之举，他走到墙边，把长江流域的地图扯下，还弄破了一角，他把地图卷起来就捧到我面前。

我向他吐露心声的那次，办公室里只有菲利普叔叔与我独处，母亲因事出去，我们正在等她回来。他邀我坐上他办公桌后的椅子，而他自己则在办公室里走动。他像平常一样，跟我闲聊些趣事，换作平时，不用多久就可以逗得我开怀大笑，不过那次不同——就在我与秋良讨论过后没几天——我没心情玩笑。菲利普叔叔马上就看出异样，于是他说：

“怎么啦，小海雀，今天怎么不开心了？”

我觉得时机恰当，便顺势说了：“菲利普叔叔，我有个疑问。你觉得要怎样才能更像英国人？”

“更像英国人？”他放下手边的事情，看着我。接着，他脸上带着关心的表情朝我走来，顺手拉了一张椅子到桌边坐下。

“你怎么会想要比你现在更像英国人呢，小海雀？”

“我只是在想……我，我只是在想，也许可以嘛。”

“谁说过你不够像英国人了？”

“也没有啦。”过了一秒我又补充，“不过，我觉得也许我爸妈这样觉得。”

“那么你自己觉得如何呢，小海雀？你觉得你自己应该更英国一点吗？”

“我也说不上来，叔叔。”

“我想也是。哪，没错，你在这里长大，周遭什么人都有。中国人、法国人、德国人、美国人，什么人都有。你要是长得有点像个混血，一点也不奇怪哟。”他略微笑了一笑。接着又说：“不过那绝不是坏事。你知道我怎么想吗？小海雀，我认为像你这样的孩子，要是长大成人后，都能博采各家之长，那可绝不是坏事。到了那时，也许我们会更加善待彼此。至少，战争会比现在少得多。没错。也许有一天，一切冲突都会结束，但绝不是因为有什么伟大的政治家或教会或我们这样的机构，而是因为人们改变了。他们会像你一样，小海雀，更像是一种综合体。所以变成混血儿有什么不好？好处多多呢。”

“可要是我真的变成了那样，世界可能会……”我没说下去。

“世界会怎样，小海雀？”

“就像挂在那里的遮阳帘一样，”——我指了指——“假如绳子断了。世界可能会四分五裂。”

菲利普叔叔凝视我所指的百叶帘。接着他站起来走到窗边，轻轻碰了碰帘子。

“世界可能会四分五裂。也许你说得对。我想，这种事要置身事外，恐怕不容易。人总是要有归属的感觉，要属于某个国家、某个种族。否则，谁知道会发生什么事。我们这个文明，也许就要崩溃。然后世界就会四分五裂，如你所说的。”他叹了口气，仿佛我辩倒了他，“所以你想要更像英国人。这个嘛，小海雀。那么我们该怎么做呢？”

“不知道，有一件事不知道好不好，叔叔，不知道你介不介意。不知道我可不可以有时候就模仿你。”

“模仿我？”

“没错，叔叔。有时候而已。就这样，我学学英国人的做事方法。”

“你真是太抬举我了，老弟。可是你不觉得，令尊才是该享受这项殊荣的人？他再英国人不过了，我敢这么说。”

我把脸转开，菲利普叔叔一定立刻就察觉自己说了什么不该说的话。他坐回到椅子上，又正对着我。

“你听我说，”他平静地说，“那么我们就这样做好了：只要你觉得有件事情，不管什么事，你担心做得不好，你就来我这儿，我们再好好讨论讨论。我们就讨论到你完全清楚要怎么做为止。哪，这样有没有好一点？”

“是的，叔叔。我觉得好多了。”我勉强笑笑，“谢谢你，叔叔。”

“我说小海雀，你有时也是个可怕的淘气鬼。不过以淘气鬼来说，你算是最可爱乖巧的一种了。我相信你爸妈都为你感到非常非常骄傲。”

“你真的这么觉得吗？”

“我是真的这么觉得，真的。好啦，你感觉好过些了吗？”

说完这句话，他跳了起来，继续在办公室里走来走去。他说话的语调又回复原先的轻松随兴，开始说隔壁办公室那位女士的奇闻怪谭，让我笑个不停。

我多么喜欢菲利普叔叔啊！然而，我有没有任何有根据的理由怀疑，他并非真心喜欢我？在那个阶段，也许他确实只想为了我好，然而他也跟我一样，对于世事会如何发展茫然无知。

第六章

同样在那段时间里——那个夏天——秋良的行为里有某些表现让我不安，特别是没完没了地吹嘘他们日本人的成就。这是他的老毛病，不过那个夏天简直到了无法自拔的地步。一次又一次，他中断我们正在玩的游戏，就为了对我宣布日本最近在商业区又盖了什么大楼，或者又有另一艘日本战舰即将进港。他强迫我听他说最微小的细枝末节，而且每隔几分钟，他就说一次日本会成为“非常、非常伟大的国家，就像英国”。最让人讨厌的是，他又开始比较哪国人比较爱哭，是日本人还是英国人。要是我替英国人讲话，我的朋友马上要求立刻测验，也就是说，他就动手用他可怕的擒拿术把我压制住，直到我屈服或哭出来。

在那个时候，我把秋良迷恋他们种族的神勇，归因于他在当年秋天就要回日本读书。他父母安排他住在长崎的亲戚家，尽管学校放假他就会回上海，我们都明白往后能相见的日子并不多。起初，这个消息对我们有如晴天霹雳，不过随着夏日流逝，秋良显然相信他在日本的生活，各方面都会比在上海强，于是对于新学校的期盼也就愈来愈殷切。我则是渐渐受不了他一而再、再而三地夸耀日本的一切一事实上，到了夏末，我还巴不得他走。说真的，等分手那天的早晨来临，我站在他家外面，对着载他到港口的汽车挥别，我相信我当时一点都不难过。

然而，没过多久，我就开始想念他了。不是因为我没有其他朋友。要说朋友，我家附近就住了一对英国兄弟，我常常跟他们玩，自从秋良走了以后就更常见面。我跟他们交情愈来愈好，特别是只有我们三个人的时候。不过有时候会有其他学童加入——其他就读上海公学的学生——他们对待我的方式就会改变，我有时会成为他们开玩笑的对象。当然，这个我一点也不在意，因为我看得出他们基本上是良家子弟，对我没有恶意。即便在那个时候，我也明白，五六个小孩组成的团体里，其中若有一人与其他人读不同学校，这个圈外人注定要让大伙开些无伤大雅的玩笑。我的意思是，我并不会因此就认为我的英国朋友不好，然而，不管怎样，这种事的确让我无法与他们发展出我与秋良之间那种亲密的感情，而随着时光流逝，我想我愈加怀念有秋良陪伴的日子。

其实秋良不在的那个秋天，怎么说也不算是特别悲伤。在我记忆中，那段日子经常闲散无事，空虚的午后一个接一个过去，当时的事大半已从我心中褪去。然而有几件小事发生在那些日子里，后来我却认为别具深意。

例如，我们跟菲利普叔叔去看赛马的事——我有理由确定这事发生在某个周六早晨，母亲安排的聚会之后。也许我已经提过，尽管母亲会鼓励我到客厅去跟她志同道合的人认识一下，可是等他们在客厅碰面后，进入餐厅开始聚会，我却被拒于门外。我记得有一次问她，可不可以让我参加一次聚会，没想到她考虑半天，最后才说：

“对不起，小海雀。安德鲁斯夫人与卡洛太太都不喜欢有小孩子在场。真可惜，如果你来的话，就可以学到一些重要的事情。”

父亲当然不在被拒之列，不过大家似乎有种默契，也就是他应该自行回避这些聚会。现在我已难以确定，究竟是什么原因造成这样的情况，不过每个有聚会的星期六，早餐的气氛总是不对。母亲不会对父亲明白提起聚会的事，吃早餐时却始终以近乎厌恶的眼神看着他。父亲这边则是强颜欢笑，而且愈装愈过火，直到母亲的客人一个个抵达为止。菲利普叔叔总是非常早到，他会跟父亲在客厅里聊个几分钟，两人笑声不断。等客人来得多了，母亲就会过来把菲利普叔叔带到角落，严肃地讨论当天聚会的内容。总是在这个时候，父亲就会告退，通常是到他书房里去。

那天，在我今日的印象里，我听到聚会结束，客人开始散去，就到花园等候母亲——我以为她会如平常一样，过一会儿就会出来霸占我的秋千，用她清扬美妙的嗓音歌唱。等了一会儿，看不到她，我进屋里看个究竟，走到图书室，看见餐厅的双开门已经打开了；我知道聚会已经散场了，可是菲利普叔叔与母亲仍在里头，在桌边专注地讨论事情，桌上摆满了文件。接着，父亲出现在我身后，无疑也以为早上的聚会已经结束。他听见餐厅里有人声，拉住我并对我说：

“哦，他们还在里头。”

“只剩菲利普叔叔。”

父亲面露笑容，接着绕过我走进餐厅。透过门缝，我看到菲利普叔叔站起来，接着我听见两位男士一起大笑的声音。过了一会儿，母亲走出来，脸上有不悦之色，怀里抱了一堆文件。

那时候已过正午，菲利普叔叔留下来吃午饭，同时又有更多开怀的笑声。午饭快吃完的时候，菲利普叔叔提议：下午何不一起到赛马场去逛逛？母亲想了想，认为这是个好主意。父亲也说他觉得这个主意不错，不过实在无法奉陪，因为书房里还有许多公事等着他办。

“不过那也无妨，亲爱的，”他转身对母亲说，“不妨就跟菲利普去。下午天气好极了。”

“老实说，我也是这么想，”母亲说，“去散散心，也许对大家都不无好处。克里斯托弗也来吧。”

这时候他们全对着我看。尽管我才九岁大，但我相信此刻的情势，我还是略知一二。我知道他们让我选择：一者跟着去赛马场，一者在家里陪父亲。不过我相信我也懂得背后隐藏的含意：假如我决定留在家里，那么母亲就会因为不便单独与菲利普叔叔同游赛马场而婉拒邀请。换言之，要不要出游，全看我要不要跟。此外我也知道——我有十足把握——在那一刻，父亲极度希望我们别去，我们要是去了，会让他痛苦万分。之所以看出这一点，并不是因为他的举止里有什么异样，而是因为我在那一阵子——或许是不得不——所体会到的一切。当然，在那段日子里，有许多事情我完全不了解，不过，至少这个层面我看得一清二楚：在那一刻，父亲全赖我解围。

不过，或许我的了解还不够多，因为母亲催我说：“来吧，小海雀。赶快把鞋子穿上。”我穿上鞋，一副兴高采烈的样子，其中兴奋之情是我装给他们看的。直到今天，我都还记得父亲把我们送到前门，跟菲利普叔叔握握手，马车载着母亲、菲利普叔叔跟我离去，他笑着挥手，目送我们在午后出游。

那年秋天，关于父亲的事，只有另一件还清楚留在我的记忆里，那就是几次耐人寻味的“自吹自擂”。父亲总是态度谦冲，觉得别人的自夸令人难堪。正因如此，那阵子在好几次不同的场合中，听到他那样子讲话，让我觉得很诧异。那都是一些小事，仅让我略感纳罕，不过这么多年来却一直留在心底。

举个例来说，有一次在晚餐桌上，他冷不防对母亲冒出一句：“亲爱的，我告诉过你了吗？那个家伙，那个码头工人代表，他又跑来见我了。他要感谢我为他们所做的一切。他英语好得很。当然啦，这些中国人说话总是一副欢天喜地的样子，这种话的内容都得打个折扣才行。不过你知道吗，亲爱的，我清清楚楚觉得，他讲这话是诚心

诚意的。他说我是他们‘德高望重的英雄’。不赖吧！德高望重的英雄。”

父亲笑了起来，接着细看母亲的反应。她继续吃了一會兒才回答：

“是啊，亲爱的，你跟我说过了。”

父亲看起来有点泄气，可是才一下子他又满脸欣喜之色，笑了笑说：“原来我说过！”接着他转向我，对我说，“不过，小海雀可没有听过哦！有没有，儿子？德高望重的英雄。他们是这样称呼你爹的。”

我已经记不得这一切究竟怎么回事，可能当时也不在乎。会记得这段轶事纯粹是因为，如我说过的，这么谈论自己，实在不像我父亲的所作所为。

另一次类似的情况发生在某个下午，父母带我去公花园听铜管演奏会。我们刚在外滩北端的尽头走下马车，我与母亲遥望宽阔的马路对面的公园入口。那是个星期天的下午，我记得马路两边的人行道上，处处都是衣着讲究的人在散步，享受港口吹拂的微风。外滩的港堤上穿流着马车、汽车、黄包车，我与母亲正准备过马路，父亲付了车资随后赶上，没来由地大声说：

“所以，亲爱的，公司的人现在明白了。他们现在明白，我不会让步。像是本特利，他就明白这点。没错，他清楚得很。”

正如那次在晚餐桌上的情况一样，母亲最初的反应像是没有听到。她牵起我的手，穿越过往的车辆往花园走去。到了对街，她才在嘴里念了一句：“他当真明白？”

不过事情并没有就这样结束。我们走进公花园，有一阵子我们就像其他在周日午后游园的家庭一样，在草地花圃间闲逛，与朋友熟人寒暄，有时候停下来小谈片刻。有时我会碰到我认识的男孩子——有些是学校同学，有些是在刘易斯太太家上钢琴课认识的一不过他们也跟我一样，在父母身边表现最文静的一面，我们最多只是羞怯地打个招呼。铜管乐队会准时在五点半开始演奏，虽然游客们都知道这点，但大部分的人都要等到乐声飘过绿地才肯向演奏亭移动。

我们总是迟迟才出发，因此到的时候，座位都坐满了。我不是太在乎有没有座位，因为只有在演奏亭附近，父母才会让孩子走远一点，而我有时候也会跟其他男孩玩在一块儿。就在那天下午——一定是

深秋，因为我记得夕阳已经低垂，在演奏亭后的水面一母亲走开了几步，跟站在附近的朋友说话，我听了几分钟的演奏，问父亲可不可以到听众区外围那里找我认识的一些美国男孩玩。他继续盯着演奏亭没有回答，我才要再问他，他却平静地说：

“所有在这里的人，小海雀，每一个人。如果你去问他们，他们都会表明自己有一套标准。不过等你长大一些，你会明白其实没几个人真的言行合一。不过你母亲，她不同。她从来不会违背自己的想法。还有，你知道吗，小海雀，也因为这样，最后她成功了，她让你父亲变成了更好的人。变得好多了。没错，她好严格，我不需要跟你提这点，哈哈！可以说，她对你有多严格，对我就有多严格。结果呢，谁知道，我竟然因此变成了更好的人。这可花了不少工夫，不过她办到了。我希望你知道，小海雀，爸爸今天已经不是你上次看到的那个人，你知道的，你跟妈妈闯到我房里的那次。你记得那件事吧，你当然记得。在我书房。很抱歉你得看到自己父亲的那副德性。反正那都过去了。今天，多亏你妈妈，我变得更坚强。让你有朝一日，我敢说，小海雀，会以我为荣。”

我一点也不了解他在讲什么，而且我觉得要是母亲一才几步远而已一听到了只字片语，一定会不高兴，所以我并没有回答父亲什么。我觉得我干脆再问他一次就是了。过了一会儿，我问他可不可以去跟美国小孩玩，整件事就到此为止。

不过接下来几天，我没事就会想起父亲这段耐人寻味的话，特别是他提起我跟母亲“闯进他书房”的那件事。过了好久我都想不出他到底指什么，思考多时，还是无法把任何往事跟他的话联系起来。最后我觉得有一件事最具可能，那事发生在我很小的时候，恐怕还不到四五岁一即使在我九岁的时候，那件往事在我心中也早已模糊。

父亲的书房位于房子顶层，可以清楚地俯瞰后花园。我难得获准入内，一般而言，连在附近玩耍都有可能被骂。从楼梯口到书房有一条狭长的走廊，廊上挂了一排画，镶在厚重的金色画框里。每一幅都是工笔风景画，画的是从浦东回望外滩的景色；也就是说，前有港中无数船舰，背景里则有上海滩头的高楼大厦。这些画最早可追溯到一八八〇年代，我猜跟屋子里许多摆饰与图画一样，都属于公司的财产。有件事我自己不记得，倒是母亲常跟我提起：我很小的时候，她跟我常站在画前，一起给港里的船只取各种奇名怪号当游戏玩。根据母亲的说法，我才玩一下就笑个不停，有时候不把眼前每艘船都取个名字还不肯走开。如果是这样一如果我们在玩这个游戏时，真的习惯

玩得如此笑闹不忌——那么我差不多可以确定，父亲若在书房工作，我们绝不会上去那里放肆。不过等我再次思考那天父亲在演奏亭边所说的话，我开始想起有一次，母亲与我的确一起站在阁楼上一——如果我没记错的话——玩我们这个游戏，忽然她停下来，完全静止不动。

我第一个念头是要被骂了，也许刚才说了什么话惹她不高兴。我不是没见过母亲忽然翻脸的样子，前一刻还和和气气地说着话，下一刻想起当天早些时候我犯了什么错，她就会开始骂人。不过等我静下来等着她爆发，却发现她其实是在倾听什么。接着，她突如其来地转身推开父亲书房的门。

我隔着母亲的身影瞥见书房里的状况。心中还存留的印象是，父亲撑着办公桌，脸上全是汗水，表情因为沮丧而扭曲。或许他正在啜泣，正是这声音引起母亲的注意。在他前面，文件、账册，撒得满桌都是。我顺着母亲的目光望去，发现地上也有很多文件与记事本，仿佛是他一怒之下扔的。他抬头看到我们，吓了一跳，接着他说话的语调让我有点吃惊：

“我们不能做这种事！我们会永远回不去！我们不能做这种事！你的要求太过分了，黛安娜。太过分了！”

母亲压低嗓子对他说了些话，无疑是在责备他，要他冷静下来。父亲这时稍微镇定了一些，目光越过母亲才发现我也在场。可是他的脸孔几乎立刻又绝望地皱了起来，转向母亲，无助地摇头，对着她说：

“我们不能做这种事，黛安娜。这会毁了我们。我从头到尾都想过了。我们会永远回不了英国。我们弄不到足够的钱。只要没有公司，我们就会被困在这里。”

接着他似乎又失去了控制，母亲开始说别的事——用平静却愤怒的语气说别的事——父亲则吼了起来，虽是对她，不过更像是对着墙壁发泄：

“黛安娜，我不干！老天爷，你当我是什么，我做不到，你听到没有？我做不到！我不干！”

也许就在这时候，母亲不再理会他，把门关上，把我带开。我不记得这件事后来怎么了。我当然也无法确定父亲那天到底是什么样的情绪，更别说他到底用的是哪些字眼。不过我承认，这里我确实用了点后见之明重建这段往事。

当时，这件事对我来说，只是一个让我困惑的经验，尽管我或许觉得父亲跟我一样有时也会哭闹是件有趣的事，但我却没有深究到底是怎么回事。此外，等我再见到父亲，他已恢复正常，母亲则从来不曾提起这件事。要是多年后，父亲没有在演奏亭边跟我说了那些耐人寻味的话，我大概永远不会重拾那件往事。

但如我所说，除了这几段耐人寻味的小插曲，那年秋天与随之而来的无聊冬天里，几乎没什么值得重新回味的事。那段日子我大半无精打采，后来有个下午，梅俐以近乎随口说说的语气告诉我，秋良刚刚从日本回来，隔壁门口的车道上，正卸着他的行李。

第七章

知道秋良回上海不只是暂访而是要长住，我心中为之欣喜。他打算从夏季班开始，回到四川北路他上过的学校复学。我不记得我们俩有没有以什么特别的方式庆祝他回来。印象中，我们只是重拾前一个秋天中断的友情，一切都低调处理。我十分想听秋良谈谈他在日本的事情，不过他让我觉得，幼稚的人才谈这种事——我们应该成熟些了吧——因此我们刻意继续做过去例行的事，仿佛不曾中断过一般。我当然猜想他在日本的情况并不顺利，不过直到那个温暖的春日，他把和服的袖子弄破之前，我完全没想过情况曾经糟到什么地步。

每当我们到屋外玩耍，秋良的衣着总与我大致相同——衬衫配短裤，盛暑之际则加顶遮阳帽。不过那天早上，我们在花园的草丘上玩耍时，他穿着和服——也没什么特别的，不过是他在家常穿的衣着。我们在草丘跑上跑下，搬演我们自编的剧情，他忽然在丘顶附近停住，皱着眉头坐下。我以为他哪里受了伤，等我过去看他，却发现他在检查和服袖子上的一处裂口。他的神情十分焦急，我相信我说了类似这样的话：

“怎么了？你家女仆或谁，马上就可以缝好。”

他没回答——似乎一时根本忘了我在身边——我明白他当着我的面，陷入了深沉的焦虑。他继续检查裂口一会儿，接着垂下手臂，瞪着他眼前的地面，仿佛刚才发生了什么重大的悲剧。

“这是第三次，”他喃喃念着，“第三次这个星期我做坏事。”

我继续盯着他看，他一脸茫然地说：“第三件坏事。现在妈妈跟爸爸，他们要我回日本。”

我自然不以为和服上的一个小裂口，会造成这么严重的后果，不过我当时也被这个可能性吓到，于是蹲在他身边，急切地要求他把话说清楚。但是那天早上，我怎么求他，他都不说话——他愈来愈懊恼、封闭——我隐约记得那天分手时的气氛不是很好。然而往后几个星期，我却渐渐发现他怪异举止背后的秘密。

从秋良回到日本的第一天起，他就过着悲惨的日子。尽管他从未明白承认这点，但我猜他为了他的“异国风格”而受到排挤；他的举止、态度、言语、数不尽的事情，让他与其他人相异，不只是他的同

学逗弄他，连师长，甚至让他寄住的亲戚——他不止一次暗示这点——也不放过他。结果他痛苦至极，于是他父母只好在学期当中把他接回家。

有可能再次回到日本——这成为我朋友心中挥不去的阴影。事实上，他的父母极为思念日本，常常谈到举家返国的事。连秋良的姊姊悦子也毫不反对回到日本定居，于是秋良成为家中唯一想留在上海的一员；全因他全力反对才让他父母打消念头，不再准备收拾行李搭船回长崎，然而他一点也不确定，他的意愿跟他姊姊与父母的愿望拮抗之下，还能有多久的优势。两者可谓势均力敌，他只要走错一步——任何不规矩的事、功课稍微退步——都可能让情势不利于他。于是他觉得和服上的小裂口，极可能带来严重的后果。

结果，和服上的裂口一点也没有像我们所害怕的那样，让他父母大发雷霆，当然也就没什么严重后果伴随而来。不过在刚回来的几个月里，却接二连三发生了一些小小的不幸，让我的朋友又坠入忧虑与沮丧的深渊。影响最大的一件，我觉得是跟凌田和我们的“窃盗行为”有关的那件事，也就是那天下午在我们的公车之旅上，让亨明斯小姐好奇不已的那件“我过去的犯罪行为”。

秋良他们家到上海多久，凌田在他家大约也就待了多久。我到隔壁他家玩耍的记忆里，最初的几个印象之中，有一个便是这位老仆人拿着扫帚忙东忙西。他看起来非常老迈，穿着厚重的深色长袍，就算夏天也一样，头上一顶小帽，后脑勺一条辫子。他不像这一带的中国仆人，他很少以笑容对待儿童，然而他也不会对我们生气或吼叫，要不是秋良对他的态度有异，我恐怕也不会认为他有什么好怕的。没错，我记得当初确实纳闷不已：为什么每当这个仆人——在我们身边出现，秋良就会变得紧张兮兮。比方说，假使凌田从走廊路过，不管我们在做什么，我的朋友都会立刻停下来，僵立在房内的某个角落，不让外面那位老先生看到，等危险过去之后才开始动作。在我们刚成为朋友的那段日子里，我还没感染到秋良的恐惧，还以为那是因为他跟凌田之间曾经发生过什么事。如我所说，我纳闷不已，可是每次要秋良解释他为何如此，他就是不理睬我的问题。后来我渐渐体会，他因为自己无法控制面对凌田的恐惧而尴尬困窘不已，于是学会了在每次游戏因此中断时，不发一语。

然而等我们长大些，我猜想秋良渐渐觉得有必要交代他的恐惧。到了我们七八岁左右，我的朋友看到凌田的时候，不会再凝住不动；他会停下他手边正在做的事，对我挤出一张诡异的笑脸，然后把嘴巴

靠到我耳边，用古怪呆板的声音——有点像是蓬路市场常听到的和尚诵经声——告诉我这个老仆人不为人知的骇人真相。

我这才知道凌田对于手竟有如此可怕的爱好。有一次，秋良朝用人房的走廊那头望去，正好碰上凌田难得忘了把房门关妥，秋良竟然看见地上堆着一堆切下的手，有男人的、女人的、小孩的、猿猴的。还有一次，夜色深沉，秋良瞄见这位老仆人拎着篮子走进屋里，里头装满从猴子身上砍下来的小手臂。我们得时时盯牢他，秋良这么警告我。假如我们给他丝毫的机会，凌田就会毫不犹豫地砍走我们的手。

这种耳语听了几次以后，我就质问为什么凌田对手情有独钟。秋良很谨慎地看着我，然后问我能否守住他家族最不可告人的秘密。我向他保证没问题，他考虑良久，最后才对我说：

“那么我告诉你，老哥！可怕的理由！为什么凌田砍手。我告诉你！”

凌田显然发现了某种方法，可以把砍下的手变成蜘蛛。他房间里有许多大碗，各装了不同的汁液，用来把他搜集的手泡上几个月。手指慢慢会动起来——起初只是微微抽搐，接着会卷缩起来，最后还会长出黑色的毛发，这时凌田就会把它们从浸泡的汁液里头取出来，任它们像蜘蛛一样在附近乱跑。秋良时常在三更半夜听见这个老仆人溜出去，就为了做这件事。甚至还有一次，我的朋友在花园里看到花丛下有一只变形的手在爬，一定是凌田太早把它从浸泡的汁液里拿出来，因此还没完全化成蜘蛛，一眼就让人看出是砍断的手。

尽管当时还小，我也不全然相信这些故事，然而它们确实让我心里发毛，而且有一阵子，只要一瞥见凌田，就会让我恐惧不已。说真的，我们虽然年岁渐长，却也甩不掉心里对凌田的惧怕。这点总是困扰着秋良的自尊，到了我们八岁的时候，他似乎发展出不时挑战这些陈年恐惧的需要。我常常想起他拉着我到他家的某个角落，窥视凌田做事或打扫走廊。我并不那么在乎窥视这种事，只不过我害怕的是，秋良有时候会坚持要看我有没有胆量走近凌田的房间。

在此之前，我们都离那房间远远的，特别是因为秋良总是坚称，凌田那些汁液所飘出的烟雾会把我们迷晕，然后把我们勾引到他房间里去。但现在，走近那个房间反而成为我朋友满脑子想着的事情。或许我们正聊着完全不相干的事，但他脸上却冷不防地出现那抹诡异的笑容，然后轻声问我：“你怕了吗？克里斯托弗，你怕了吗？”

接着他会强拉着我跟他一起走过屋子，穿过装潢怪异的房间，来到巨梁拱门下，再过去就是仆人住的地方。走过拱门，我们便置身于一条阴暗的走廊里，墙面是抛光的素面木板，走廊尽头，正对着我们的，就是凌田的房间。

起先我只需站在拱门下，看着秋良强逼自己一步一步地沿着走廊前进，一直走到离那间可怕的房间一半远的地方。我依然看得见我的朋友，他矮壮的身影紧张得僵硬起来，每当他回头向我张望的时候，脸庞都闪烁着汗水。他勉强自己往前多走了几步，然后就转身跑回来，脸上带着胜利的笑容。接着他对我冷嘲热讽一番，闹得我最后也生出勇气来与他争个高下。有好一阵子，如我所说，这种用凌田房间来测验勇气的游戏让秋良很着迷，到他家玩耍的乐趣因此大大折损。

然而有好一阵子，我们两人都不敢走到房门口，更别说进房了。等我们终于溜进凌田房间的时候，我俩已经十岁了，而且一当时无法预知——已经是我在上海的最后一年。正是当时我和秋良干了那件小小的偷窃勾当——那是心血来潮之举，我们只顾着兴奋，至于此事会有什么后果，我们完全没有去想。

我们早知道凌田在八月初会回老家，到杭州附近探亲六天，我们常说这是我们的机会，终于可以进他的房间。我记得很清楚，就在凌田离开以后的第一天下午，我到秋良家里，发现我的朋友满脑子都是这件事。到了这个时候，我该说，整体而言我比一年前的我更有自信，即使我还有一点害怕凌田，我也很确定我没有表现出来。事实上，我相信我对闯进用人房这件事，表现得相当镇定——这点我确定我的朋友也注意到了，而且把这当作对他的又一层挑战。

结果那天下午，秋良的母亲整个下午都在缝制一件衣服，而为了某些原因，她必须在各个房间不停地走动，秋良于是宣称，就连想着我们的冒险都太危险。我当然一点也不会不高兴，不过我确定秋良更庆幸有这个借口。

接下来这天是星期六，我大约上午十点左右到他家，他的父母都出门了。秋良并不像我一样有个阿妈看着，我们更小的时候，常常为此争论谁比较幸运。他总是采取这样的论点，认为日本小孩比西方小孩要“勇敢”，所以不需要阿妈。有一回我们又在争论此事，我问他，万一他母亲不在的时候，他碰巧想喝冰水，或者割伤了自己，谁来照顾他。我记得他告诉我，日本母亲绝不会外出，除非她的子女明确地准许她们外出——我实在难以相信他的说法，因为我明明白白知道

日本太太也有她们自己的社交圈子，就像欧洲太太一样——日本太太们常在四川路的礼查饭店或马歇尔茶点铺聚会。不过他又说，他有女仆照料他的一切需求，而且他爱做什么就可以做什么，完全无人管束，我这才开始相信我比较命苦。说来奇怪，我就一直抱持着这种想法，尽管实际上每次我去他家玩而他母亲不在的时候，总是有位仆人奉命自始至终看顾我们的一举一动。真的，特别是在我们更小的时候，这些人总是板着脸孔，无疑是害怕我们有个万一，他们可承担不起，于是紧紧跟在我们身边，而我们则想尽办法要玩得尽兴。

随着年岁渐长，到了那年夏天，大人还是给了我们更大的活动自由，不必让人看管。溜进凌田房间的那天早上，我们原本一直在三楼，待在秋良空旷的榻榻米房间里，有位年长的女仆——除了我们之外，当时唯一在家的人——就在正下方的房里忙她的针线活儿。我记得，秋良突然打断我们玩到一半的游戏，蹑手蹑脚地走到阳台上，上半身探出护栏伸得远远的，我真怕他会翻落下去。后来他急急忙忙地缩了回来，我注意到他脸上浮现一抹诡异的笑容。他轻声告诉我，那位女仆果然如他所料睡着了。

“现在我们就得进去！你怕了吗，克里斯托弗？你怕了吗？”

秋良忽然变得十分亢奋，一时之间，我对凌田的恐惧又涌上心头。到了这个节骨眼，我们两人谁也不可能临阵脱逃，于是我们尽可能放轻脚步溜到用人房那个角落，再一次一起站在那道素面木板墙的幽暗走廊中。

我记得我们毫不犹豫地迈步走向凌田房间，就在剩下四五码的时候，不知怎么我们就停了下来，有那么一会儿，我们两个都无法继续前进；要是那一刻秋良转身就跑，我一定也跟着跑。不过我的朋友似乎又生出了一线决心，便向我伸出手臂说：“来吧，老哥！一起，我们走。”

我们挽着手臂，就那样走完最后几步。接着秋良把门拉开，我们一起往里头瞄。

我们看见房间不大，没什么家具，收拾得整整齐齐，木头地板也扫得干干净净。窗户放下了遮阳帘，不过灿烂的阳光仍从边缘泻下。空气中微微飘着线香焚烧的味道，房间另一头有座神龛，床则又低又窄，还有一个大得出奇的百屈柜，柜子的漆饰十分美丽，每个小抽屉上都饰着一个雕花拉环。

我们走进房间，有好几秒钟我们一动也不动，连大气都不敢出。后来秋良轻轻呼了一口气，笑容满面地转向我，显然很高兴终于克服他多年来的恐惧。可是不一会儿，胜利的喜悦就变成了某种担心，因为这个房间似乎看不出有什么邪恶之处，这么一来，秋良岂不是显得庸人自扰？我还来不及说什么，他立刻指着百屉柜，压低急切的声音说：

“那里！在那里头！小心，小心了，老哥！那些蜘蛛，它们，在那里头！”

我一点也没被他吓到，他一定也看出了这点。然而有那么一两秒，我心中浮现了一个影像：那些小抽屉在我眼前打开，那些怪物——它们正处于从断手化成蜘蛛的各个变幻阶段——伸脚出来试探。不过这时候，秋良兴奋地指着凌田床头的矮桌上立着的小瓶子。

“药水！”他低声说，“他用的魔药！就在那里！”

我不禁想嘲笑他这么无所不用其极地想要保留一个我们早该留在幼年的幻想，可就在那一刻，我心中又浮现了抽屉打开的影像，心底残留的恐惧让我什么也没说。再者，我开始担心一个更可能发生的下场，就是我们被女仆或者哪个碰巧路过的大人逮个正着。我无法想像那会有多丢脸，会有什么惩罚，我父母跟秋良的父母对此会有怎样的长谈等等。我甚至不敢想像我们要怎么解释自己的行为。

就在这时，秋良快步向前，抓起瓶子抱在胸口。

“走！走！”他嘶声下令，忽然间我们俩慌成一团。我们憋住笑声，冲出房间，穿过走廊。

等我们安然回到楼上的房间——女仆还在楼下打盹——秋良坚称那些抽屉里装满了断手。我现在看得出来，他十分担心我会嘲笑我们多年来的这个幻想。事实上，我也暗自觉得有必要保存这个幻想，因此我没说什么话来戳穿他，也没有暗示凌田的房间真教人失望，或者我们的勇气只是自欺欺人。我们把瓶子搁在一只盘子上，放在地板的正中央，然后坐下来仔细研究。

秋良小心地拔起瓶塞。瓶里头装着浅色的液体，有淡淡的洋茴香味道。直到今日，我还是完全不明白那位老仆人用这个药做什么；我猜是他买来治什么宿疾的成药吧。反正也看不出个所以然，正好随我们去猜。我们小心翼翼地把树枝插到瓶中，然后让液体滴在纸上。秋良提出警告，这液体一滴都碰不得，否则明早起床就会发现手臂连着

蜘蛛。没有人真的相信，可是话说回来，似乎又有必要帮秋良留点面子，假装相信，所以我们做这些事的时候，都小心得不得了。

最后，秋良塞回瓶塞，把瓶子放到他保存特殊物件的盒子里，说他还要对那药水进行一些实验再回归原处。总之，那天早上我离去的时候，我们两人都心满意足。

不过第二天下午秋良到我家的時候，我立刻看出有点不对劲；他心事重重，什么事都无法专心。我怕是他父母已经发现我们昨天做的事，有一会儿我还忍着不问他发生了什么。但到头来我还是憋不住，便要他把事情告诉我，再糟也得说。然而秋良说他父母并没有发现什么，可是神情却变得更加凝重，经我再三追问，他才告诉我事情的始末。

原来是秋良憋不住心头的得意，便向他姊姊悦子透露了我们的壮举。他没想到悦子竟会惊恐万状。我说他没想到，是因为悦子一大我们四岁一从来不附和我们认为凌田有什么邪恶一面的说法。不过听了秋良的故事，她瞪大眼睛看着他，仿佛他会在她眼前扭成一团死掉。接着她告诉秋良，我们能逃出来已属万幸；她还说，以前家里雇的用人，有几位是她亲身认识的，这些人做了我们所做的事，后来就消失不见了一他们的尸骸几周后才在租界边上的巷子里找到。秋良对他姊姊说，她只不过是吓唬他，他一秒钟也没信过她的话。不过显然他已经吓坏了，而我听到有人“证实”了我们先前对凌田的恐惧一悦子已堪称权威一也觉得一股寒气窜过全身。

这时候我才了解秋良烦恼的事：有人得在凌田回来之前，也就是在三天内，把瓶子放回原处。然而毋庸再提，我们先前的勇气早已消失殆尽，要我们再回到那个房间，根本不可能。

我们没办法再定下心来玩平日的游戏，于是决定走到我们在运河边的老地方。一路上我们从各个角度来讨论这个问题。假如我们不把瓶子放回去，结果会怎样？也许药水非常珍贵，他们会报警处理。或者，也许凌田对谁也不提瓶子失窃，但是决定亲手对我们施以毒计暗中报复。我记得我们完全搞不清楚，我们究竟有多么想保留对凌田的幻想，又多希望理性地想出法子，尽量避免不可收拾的后果。我记得，举个例子来说，我们也曾想过那药水可能是凌田存了几个月的钱才买的药剂，而且少了它病情就会恶化；可是下一秒，心里还抱持这个想法，却也想起了其他假设：也许那药水的用处，是我们一直以为的那样。

我们在运河边上的老地方，离我们家步行约十五分钟，就在怡和洋行所属的仓库后面。我们一直不确定这样算不算非法侵入；要到我们的老地方，得经过一扇从来不关的大门，然后走过一片水泥空地，经过几名中国工人，他们会狐疑地注视我们，但从不阻止。接着我们绕过一个摇摇欲坠的船坞，走过一段防波堤，然后沿着阶梯下到运河岸边那块深色的硬土地。那块地只够我们两人望着河水并肩坐下，不过即使是酷热的天气，背后的船坞也保证那里有块凉荫，而每当有船或舢板经过，水波便会轻抚我们的双脚。河对岸还有更多仓库，不过我记得，差不多就在我们正对面，两栋仓库之间有段空隙，透过去可以看到一条马路，夹道种满树木。虽然我和秋良常常到那里去，但我们还是尽量守紧口风，绝不让父母知道，免得他们不放心我们那么靠近水边玩耍。

那天下午在岸边坐定以后，有那么一阵子我们试着要忘掉一切烦恼。我记得就像每次到这里来的时候一样，秋良又开始问我，要是有什么紧急状况，我会游到当时停泊在附近水域的哪条船上。但他说着说着，忽然哭了起来，让我吃了一惊。

我难得看到我这个朋友哭。老实说，我印象中看到他哭，也只有今天这么一次。就算是上回我们在美国教会后面玩耍，有一大块混凝土砸在他腿上，尽管他面白如纸，还是没哭。可是那天下午在运河边，秋良显然已经乱了方寸。

我记得他两手拿着一块泡过水的朽木，一面啜泣，一面把木头剥成一片片扔进水里。我好想安慰他，只是心中的言语不知都躲到何处去了。我记得我起身去找了更多这样的朽木，帮他剥成小片递给他，仿佛这是急救良方。后来再找不到木头让他丢，秋良也渐渐止住泪水。

“如果父母亲查出来，”过了半晌他才说，“他们这么生气。到时候他们不让我留在这里。到时候我们全部回日本。”

我还是不知道要说什么。接着，有条船驶过，他喃喃说：“我永远也不要住在日本。”

“我也永远不要去英国。”我以这句话回应，这是每次他提到这件事，我都会接口说的话。

说完这些，我们沉默了一阵子。可当我们凝视着水面时，我愈想就愈觉得，只要我们做了某件事，这一切可怕的惩罚就全都可以避免

了，最后我很简单地告诉他，只要我们及时把瓶子放回去，就什么问题都没有了。

秋良好像没听见，所以我又说了一次。他还是不予理会。我这才明白，他对凌田的恐惧，从我们上次冒险之后，已经更加真实；没错，我看得出，他现在的恐惧跟我们小时候一样巨大，只不过现在碍着面子不能承认。我看得出他的难处，他正绞尽脑汁想着如何脱困。最后，我平静地说：

“秋良。我们一起再进去一次。就跟上次一样。我们手勾着手，再进去一次，把瓶子放回原处。如果我们像这样一起行动，我们就会很安全，不会有任何坏事发生在我们身上。什么事也不会有。神不知鬼不觉的，谁也不会知道我们干了什么好事。”

秋良想了想，转身看着我，我在他脸上看出深刻凝重的感激之情。

“明天，在下午，三点钟，”他说，“母亲会出门去公园。假如女仆又睡着，那么我们有机会。”

我向他保证女仆铁定会睡着，然后再提一次：如果我们一起进房间，就什么也不用怕。

“我们一起行动，老哥！”他这么说，脸上突然绽放出笑容，并且站了起来。

回程路上，我们把计划敲定。我答应第二天在他母亲出门之前，就早早到他家伺机而动，只要她一出门，我们就到楼上，一起等候，把凌田的瓶子准备好，就等女仆睡着。秋良的心情明显轻松了许多，不过我记得那天下午分手时，他勉强摆出一副满不在乎的样子，转身提醒我第二天可别迟到。

第二天又是同样炎热而潮湿的一天。多年来，我把记忆里那天发生的每一件事，反复想了许多遍，试着把各种不同的细节依序排列。那天早上的前半段我记得不多。我脑海里有那么一幕，是我送父亲出门上班的影像。我先到了外头，在马车道附近晃来晃去等他出来。他出来的时候，身着白衣白帽，手上拿着公事包与手杖。他眯起眼睛，往大门望一眼。接着，正当我等着他朝我走近的时候，母亲出现在他背后的门阶上，并跟他说话。父亲往回走了几步，跟她谈了几句，笑了笑，轻吻她的脸颊，接着就大步走向我等候的地方。那天他怎么离家的，我就只记得这些了。现在我不记得我们有没有握握手，他有没

有拍拍我的肩膀，他到了大门有没有转身再临别挥手。我所记得的一切，都显示那天早上他出门上班的方式，跟任何一天的早晨没有两样。

那天早晨的后半段，我只记得我都在我卧室的小地毯上玩玩具士兵，心思则一直想着那天稍晚些等着我们的艰巨任务。我记得母亲后来出门去了，我便和梅俐在厨房吃午餐。午餐过后直到三点，还有一些时间要打发，我走了一小段路，到了两棵大橡树矗立的地方，树虽然不是种在路边，却正好在邻近花园围墙的正前方。

也许是因为我早已在心头鼓足了勇气，那天我在其中一棵橡树上，爬到了以前不曾到达的高度。我满怀欣喜地趴在大树岔出的分枝上，看到附近所有住户的围篱草坪全在我的视野之内。记得我在那里待了一会儿，风吹拂着脸，但我心里却为下午的任务不胜焦急。我忽然想到，我虽然心中害怕，可是秋良此时对凌田房间的恐惧则更强烈，这次得由我来当“头头”。我明白此举将带来的责任，于是下定决心到他家的时候，要把最有自信的一面表现出来。不过在树上坐久了，心头不禁浮现几种可能让我们无法得逞的结局：女仆也许没睡着；她也许正好选择今天来打扫凌田房间外面的走廊；要不然就是秋良的母亲改变想法，当天没有如预定计划出门。当然，我心中那些旧日不理性的恐惧还是萦绕不去，怎么也忘不干净。

过了许久，我爬下橡树，想回家喝杯水，顺便看看几点钟了。走进大门，我看见车道上停了两辆汽车。我心中有点好奇，不过这时候我自己心事重重，没有太理会。接着我走进玄关，透过客厅打开的门，我看见三位男士，手持帽子站立，跟母亲说话。这也没什么好奇怪的，因为他们也许在跟母亲讨论她推动的那些事——不过这气氛却让我在走廊上驻足。我一站住，谈话也跟着停止，他们全看着我。我认出其中一位是辛普森先生，父亲在摩根洋行的同事；其他两位则没见过。接着母亲冒了出来，她探头看到我在那儿。我想，我也许感觉到了其中有什么不寻常的事在进行。总之，我立刻往厨房跑去。

一进厨房，我就听见脚步声，母亲随即走了进来。我常常想要回忆她当时的面孔——脸上到底是什么样的表情——不过怎么也想不起来。也许某种本能要我别看她的脸。我记得的是她的身影，如泰山压顶，仿佛我又回到了幼儿时期，还有她那天穿的浅色夏装。她以压低却极其冷静的声音说：

“克里斯托弗，辛普森先生旁边的两位先生是警察。我得先跟他们谈完。请你先到图书室等我好吗？”

我才想说不，不过母亲凝视的目光让我不敢多说。

“那就到图书室等我。”她说完转身就走，“我跟他们一谈完就会去找你。”

“爸怎么了吗？”我问。

母亲转过来对着我。“你爸爸今天早上根本没进办公室。不过我相信，事情一定很单纯。到图书室等我。我马上来。”

我跟着她走出厨房，往图书室走去。我在我做功课的书桌边坐下等着，心里想的不是父亲，而是秋良，还有我一定会迟到。不知道他有没有勇气自己把瓶子放回去，就算放了，他还是会非常生我的气。当时我也想到秋良的情况实属火急，我认真考虑了要不要违抗母亲的指示，溜了再说。在此同时，客厅里的讨论似乎没完没了。图书室里有个钟，我盯着指针看。有一刻，我跑到走廊上，希望引起母亲注意，这样我就可以请她准我离开，不过我发现这时候客厅的门已经关上。接着我便在走廊上踱来踱去，再度想到开溜，此时梅俐出现了，严肃地指着图书室。我一进去， she 就把门关上，我可以听到她在门外踱步的声音。我又坐了下来，继续盯着时钟。指针一过三点，我的心情沉到了谷底，满腔怒火地怨着母亲与梅俐。

接着，我终于听见送客的声音。我听见有位男士说：

“我们会全力协助，班克斯太太。吉人自有天相。”

我听不见母亲回答什么。

客人一走，我冲出去请母亲准我去秋良家。可是母亲无视我的怒气，完全不理睬我的请求，只说：“我们进图书室去。”

尽管我好沮丧，但还是听话跟了进去，到了图书室里，她要我坐下，然后蹲在我面前，以极为平静的语气告诉我，父亲从早上就失踪了。警方接获办公室报案，正在进行搜寻，可是到目前为止仍一无所获。

“不过他可能到了晚餐时间就会出现。”她带着笑容说。

“他当然会。”我这么说，希望她听出我已经为这样小题大作感到十分不悦。接着我从椅子上站起来，再问她我可不可以离开。不过这次我没有那么热切，因为我看了时间，这时候去秋良家为时已晚。他母亲可能已经回家；他家的晚餐再过不久就要开动了。我心中对母亲极为不满：把我留半天，为的就是要告诉我一个半钟头前，我在厨

房里多少就猜到的事情。她好不容易才说声准，我却直接回我房间，把玩具士兵排在小地毯上，尽量不去猜想秋良此时对我的感受。不过我却不断记起我们在运河边所说的话，还有他对我充满感激的眼神。更何况，不只是他不想回日本，我又何尝希望他离开？

我到了晚上还在闷闷不乐，不过大家当然都以为这是我对父亲出事的自然反应。母亲整晚都跟我说这样的话：“我们先别担心。我相信一定会没事。”梅俐帮我洗澡时，简直温柔得不像她。不过我也记得随着夜色渐深，母亲有几次表现出“恍惚”的神情，那是接下来几个星期里司空见惯的。事实上，我相信就是在那天的夜里，我躺在床上，烦恼下次碰到秋良的时候要说什么，母亲喃喃自语，眼神茫然望着房内某处：

“不管发生什么事，你都能以他为荣，小海雀。你永远都能以他所做的事为荣。”

第八章

紧接着父亲失踪后的几天，我记得的事不多，只记得常常担心秋良——特别是担心我下次见到他的时候该说什么——于是做什么事都定不下心。然而我发现我一直在拖延，不上隔壁找他，有时候甚至还想到，我可能永远都不必再见他——他的父母因为我们做的错事而大发雷霆，此刻正在打包回日本。在那几天里，只要屋外有个风吹草动，我都会立刻冲到楼上的窗前，从那里仔细观察隔壁的前院有没有堆放行李的迹象。

三四天过去了。有个阴沉的早晨，我独自在我家前面的圆形草坪上玩耍，我听到有声音从秋良家那边的围篱传来。我立刻听出是秋良在他家的马车道上骑着他姊姊的脚踏车；他学骑这辆脚踏车的样子我非常熟悉，车子稍嫌太高，我认得他拼命保持平衡让轮子发出的噪音。有时候我听到摔倒的声音，连带着他摔下来的叫声。有种可能是：他从楼上窗户看到我在外头玩，所以下来骑脚踏车，还故意骑得这样惊天动地，好引起我的注意。经过几番内心交战——秋良则在围篱另一侧摔了又摔——我终于大步走出我家大门，转到隔壁，往他家前院里望。

秋良确实正在骑悦子的车，他专心尝试着马戏般的特技，双手不握车把绕着小圈子打转。他显然全神贯注，没注意到我，甚至我走上前去，他也好像没看见我一样。最后我干脆开口说：

“对不起，那天我没办法过来。”

秋良忿恨地瞪了我一眼，继续玩他的特技。我正想向他解释为什么我让他失望，可是不知怎的，话却说不出口。我站在那里看了一会儿。接着再往前走近一步，我压低声音近乎耳语：

“怎么样？你放回去了吗？”

我的朋友瞪了我一眼，回拒了我语气里表现的亲密，四处骑他的车。我感觉到泪水已经盈眶，不过想起我们长久以来争辩是英国人还是日本人更爱哭，我只得勉强忍住。我再次想要告诉他父亲失踪的事，忽然间，我发现这似乎是个天大的好理由，不但可以解释我为什么会失约，也可以解释我为何如此自怜。我想像秋良的表情会先是震

惊，继而羞愧，只要我说出：“我那天不能来是因为……因为我父亲被人绑架了！”——然而，我就是没说。我记得我只是转身跑回家去。

接下来几天我都没看到秋良。后来，有天下午，他来我家后门，如往常一样，向梅俐问我在不在。我正好在做什么事，但还是丢下事情出来见他。他以笑容相迎，拉着我到他家花园时，还关爱地拍拍我的背。我自然急于知道凌田那件事到底怎么样了，不过却更害怕会重揭伤口，于是压下提出任何问题的冲动。

我们到他家花园后头——到我们称为“丛林”的灌木丛那里——不一会儿就说起我们编造的剧本对白。我觉得我们演的应该是《艾凡赫》，那是我当时正在看的书——也说不定我们演的其实是秋良读的武士冒险故事。总之，过了一个钟头左右，我的朋友忽然停了下来，用一种奇怪的方式看着我。接着他说：

“如果你要的话，我们玩新游戏。”

“新游戏？”

“新游戏。有关克里斯托弗父亲。如果你要的话。”

我吓了一跳，我不记得我回答了什么。他从高高的草丛里向我走近几步，我看见他以近乎温柔的眼神看着我。

“对，”他说，“如果你要的话，我们玩侦探游戏。我们寻找父亲。我们拯救父亲。”

我这才想到，秋良应该是从哪儿听到了父亲的事——无疑这件事已经在附近传开——才回头来找我。我也明白现在这桩提议，是他表现关心与帮助意愿的方式，我心中对他的感情油然而生。然而我还是装作若无其事地回答说：

“好啊。如果你想玩，我们就来玩啊。”

事情就是这样开始，今天回想起来，好像经历了一整个时代——其实，实际上可能只有两三个月——我们日复一日地以拯救我父亲为主题，编造并演出变化无穷的情节。

在此同时，警方也在进行我父亲失踪案的调查工作。这点我知道，是因为家里常有一些男士来访，他们把帽子拿在胸前，严肃地跟母亲谈话；加上有一天傍晚时分，母亲表情凝重地过来跟梅俐说话，两人都压低声音；更重要的是母亲在楼梯口对我说的那番话。

我不太记得那一刻之前我们在做什么。我正好要跑上楼去，急着到房间里拿东西，看到母亲从楼上正好要下阶梯。她一定是正要出门，因为她穿了那套特别的米色礼服，会散发特殊的腐朽树叶味道的那件。我想我一定感觉到她的举止里有异样，便停在第三或第四阶楼梯上等她下来。她带着笑容走近，向我伸出一只手。她这时距我还有几阶楼梯，因此我以为她要我扶她走完剩下的阶梯，就像父亲在楼梯口等她的时候，有时会做的那样。不过她只是用手臂揽着我的肩，和我一起走下阶梯。接着她放开我，走向玄关另一头的帽架。就在这个过程中，她对我说：

“小海雀，我知道过去这几天，你不好过。你一定觉得整个世界都要坍塌了。其实，我也不好过。不过，你一定要跟我一样。你一定要向上帝祷告，要存着希望。我希望你还记得你的祷告词，你没忘了吧，小海雀？”

“还记得。”我随口回答。

“这真是不幸，”她继续说，“在这样的城市里，不时有人遭到绑架。事实上这种事常常发生。在许多案子里，我只能说在大部分的案子里，被绑架的人都能平安回来。所以我们得有耐心。小海雀，你有没有在听？”

“有，我在听呢。”这时候我背对着她，双臂攀挂在梯栏的柱头上。

“我们必须庆幸，”母亲停了一会儿之后说道，“城里最杰出的几个侦探接了这个案子。我跟他们谈过，他们很乐观，认为不久就会有结果。”

“可是那要多久呢？”我快快地说。

“我们得抱持希望。我们得信任这些侦探。也许要花上一段时日，不过我们必须有耐心。最后事情一定会雨过天晴，一切又可以恢复到从前那样。我们必须继续向上帝祷告，永远抱着希望。小海雀，你在干什么？你听我说话没有？”

我没有立即回答，因为我在试一步可以跨过几阶，双臂还攀在护栏上。接着我才问：

“万一那些侦探都太忙了怎么办？他们有一大堆别的事要解决。杀人案、抢劫案。他们又不是万能的。”

我听见母亲朝我走近几步，她再开口时，声音里多了谨慎与小心翼翼的语气。

“小海雀，侦探们‘太忙’，这点是事实。上海的每一个人，我们租界里最重要的人物，每一位都非常担心你爸爸，也都急着找出事情的真相。我是说，像福斯特先生、卡麦柯先生等等，甚至总领事本人也一样。我知道他们都亲口交代过，要把你爸爸尽快安全救回。所以你瞧，小海雀，那些侦探都必须尽全力去办案。他们也在这么做，就在此时此刻。你知道吗，小海雀，孔探长受指派负责这件案子？是的，没错：孔探长。所以我们怎么说都该抱持希望。”

这段对话无疑有些分量，因为我记得接下来几天，我几乎不再担心什么。即使到了晚上，忧虑往往重回心头，上床睡觉时，我也常想着上海的侦探满城在搜寻，愈来愈逼近绑匪。有时候，在黑暗中躺着，我发现自己编织了一出错综复杂的戏才渐渐睡去，其中有很多便成为第二天我与秋良所用的材料。

顺带一提，我并不是说在这段日子里，我跟秋良不玩与父亲案情完全无关的游戏；有时候我们会沉浸在比较传统的幻想里，好几个小时。不过每当我的朋友发现我别有心事，或者我的心思不在我们玩的游戏上头，他就会说：“老哥，我们玩拯救父亲游戏。”

我们给这些关于父亲的游戏所编的内容，如我所说，有无穷的变化，但不久便建立了一个重复出现的基本架构。我父亲被关在租界外的一栋房子里。绑匪打算索取一笔庞大的赎金。许多较小的细节也跟着迅速发展，渐渐成为定案。情节永远是这样，尽管房子的周围是惨不忍睹的中国人区域，父亲所在之处却舒适干净。事实上我还记得这一项特殊的安排是怎么建立的。也许是我们第二或第三次玩这个游戏的时候，秋良与我一直轮流扮演传奇人物孔探长——他英俊的容貌与那顶戴得潇洒不羁的帽子，我们从报纸照片上早已熟悉。我们正投入幻想中，玩得起劲，忽然玩到了故事里父亲上场的部分，秋良指着我一意思是该由我来演他一并说：“你，绑在椅子上。”

我们原本玩得很顺，这时候我停了下来。

“不要，”我说，“我爸爸才没被绑住。他怎么可能一直被绑住？”

秋良在发展故事时，从来就不喜欢人家反驳，他不耐烦地重复我父亲被绑在椅子上，我应该立刻到树干底下演出被绑的样子。我吼回去：“不要！”接着转身就走。不过，我没有离开秋良家的花园就是

了。我记得我站在草坪边上一也就是走到我们的“丛林”外缘一茫然地望着一只蜥蜴爬上榆树。过了一会儿，我听见身后传来秋良的脚步声，我准备好要跟他大吵一架。没想到等我转身，我看见我朋友以安慰的眼神凝视我。他走上前来，款语说道：

“你对。父亲没被绑起来。他非常舒服。绑匪的房子舒服。非常舒服。”

从此以后，秋良总是百般用心，好确保父亲在所有的戏码里得到舒适与尊严。绑匪总是让父亲衣着体面，他们自己却像是仆役，只要父亲开口要求，就为他送上食物、饮料、报纸。于是绑匪的性格也软化了；原来他们也不是坏人，只是家里有些嗷嗷待哺的亲人罢了。他们真心遗憾非铤而走险不可，他们会跟父亲解释，但他们又不能坐看自己的子女饿死。他们知道这样做不对，但他们还能怎样？他们选择班克斯先生，正是因为大家都知道他对中国穷人抱持着慈悲心，因此他比较可能体谅他们给他带来的不便。对于这点，父亲一每次都由我来演出一会同情地叹气，不过接着说，生活再艰难，犯下的罪行也不能就此赦免。再说，孔探长迟早会带人来把他们全部逮捕，他们会锒铛入狱，甚至押赴刑场处决。那么他们的家人又该如何？绑匪一由秋良饰演一就会回答，一旦警方查获他们的藏身处，他们就会束手就擒，并祝福班克斯先生与家人安然团聚。不过没到这步田地之前，他们还是得想办法让计划成功。他们接着会询问父亲晚餐想吃什么，我就会为他点一顿大餐，都是他爱吃的菜肴一里头总是包括烤牛里脊肉、奶油欧洲萝卜、清蒸黑斑鳕鱼。如我所说，秋良常常比我更坚持菜色要丰盛，而且常常是他加入许多很小却很重要的细节：父亲的房间必须比周遭屋顶还高，可以遥望河景，床则是绑匪为他从汇中饭店偷来的，因此睡起来舒服得不得了。接下来秋良跟我会扮演侦探一不过有时候也演我们自己一直到故事尾声，其间还会在中国人区域的弯街窄巷里追逐、打斗、枪战，不管剧情如何曲折、如何变化，结局必然是极司菲尔公园里的盛大典礼，在典礼中，大家依序登上特别搭建的平台一母亲、父亲、秋良、孔探长，还有我一接受群众欢呼。这个部分，如我所说，是故事的基本架构，顺带一提，我想这也是我返回英国初期，在那些阴雨日子里反复搬演的情节，那时候我漫步于姑妈家附近的绿地打发空虚的光阴，嘴里喃喃念着秋良的台词。

大约在父亲失踪一个月以后，我才好不容易鼓起勇气问秋良，凌田的瓶子后来怎么了。我们玩到一半停下来休息，在我们的草丘顶

上，坐在槭树荫下喝着梅俐用两只茶碗送来的冰水。秋良不再有任何怪罪之情，让我松了一口气。

“悦子拿回去瓶子。”他说。

刚开始的时候，他姊姊真是救命恩人。不过现在每回她要强迫秋良做什么事，就以要向父母报告此事来要挟。秋良为此可谓吃足苦头。

“她也去房间。所以她跟我们一样坏。她不说。”

“所以没有问题。”我说。

“没问题，老哥。”

“因此你不用回日本定居。”

“不要日本。”他转向我笑笑，“我永远留上海。”接着他沉重地看着我问道，“如果父亲不找到，你必须去英国？”

这个令人震惊的想法，不知道为何我从来不曾想过。我想了想才说：

“不回。就算找不到父亲，我们也永远住在这里。母亲永远不会想回英国。再说梅俐也不会想去。她是中国人。”

有那么一会儿，秋良兀自沉思，盯着浮在茶碗里的冰块。接着他抬头看我，粲然而笑。

“老哥！”他说，“我们一起住这里，永远！”

“没错，”我说，“我们永远都要住在上海！”

“老哥！永远！”

父亲失踪后的头几个星期里，还有另一件小事，我如今认为影响深远。我以前并不这么认为；老实说，我差不多已经把此事抛诸脑后，直到几年前，机缘巧合发生了一些事，不但让我想起这件往事，更让我首次明白，那天我目睹的事，其实别具深义。

那是“曼纳林案”结束后不久的日子，我着手研究我住上海那几年的背景资料。我相信我前面已经提过，我是在大英博物馆里进行的这项研究。我想，我的企图中至少有一部分是想以成人的角度，理解我幼年时期根本不可能明了的那些力量的本质。还有一部分则是想先打好基础，准备有朝一日要全心投入，调查有关我父母失踪的整个事

件一尽管上海警方仍持续侦查，可是案子至今未破。顺便提一句，我一直打算在不久的将来，着手这方面的调查。其实，若不是我忙得不可开交，我敢说我就早就动手了。

总之，如我所说，几年前我花了许多时间在大英博物馆搜集鸦片贸易在中国的史料，还有摩根洋行的历史，以及当时上海复杂政治生态的资料。我还多次写信到中国，请他们提供我在伦敦无法取得的情报。结果有一天我收到一张发黄的《华北日报》剪报，发报日期大约是我离开上海后三年。我的特派员寄给我有关租界港埠贸易法规变迁的报道一无疑是我要求的资料一不过，立刻引起我注意的，却是碰巧在剪报背面顺带剪进来的照片。

我把这张发黄报纸上的照片装进一只锡制的雪茄盒，放在书桌的抽屉里，不时拿出来端详一番。相片里头拍了三个男人在林荫大道上，三个都是中国人。外侧的两位着硬领西服，拿着帽子与手杖。中间那个胖男士则着传统中国服装：深色长袍、瓜皮帽、辫子。正如当时大半的新闻照片，多少有点矫情做作的味道，而我的特派员几乎把左边四分之一的部分都剪掉了。总之，从我看到这张照片的那一刻起，这张照片一说得更精确些，中间那个人一就格外令我感兴趣。

我把这张照片，跟我那位特派员回复我的信件一他约莫在一个月后又答复了我更进一步的问题一同放进抽屉里的锡制雪茄盒。信中他告诉我，那位着长袍、戴瓜皮帽的胖男士是王顾，一个军阀头子，拍那张照片的时候，在湖南有不小的势力，手下养了一支三百人左右的杂牌军。与他的大部分同类一样，他在蒋介石掌权后势力大减，但据说身体依然安康，目前在南京城内某处还算舒适的冷宫中蹉跎岁月。我的特派员针对我明确的问题，答说他无法确定王顾是否曾经与摩根洋行有任何公开的关系。然而依他所见，我们不无理由怀疑，他在某个时期与该公司曾有往来。在那个年代，我的特派员指出，任何走长江水域穿过湖南运送的鸦片一或者其他值钱的货物一都可能遭受盘踞当地的强盗土匪抢夺。只有借助割据当地的军阀，才能确保货物平安，而像摩根洋行这种商行，自然极可能花了工夫跟这种人建立关系。在我儿时的上海，以王顾手头握有的兵力，他应该会成为特别受青睐的盟友。我的特派员在信末道歉未能提供更进一步的具体资料。

如我说过，我在发现那张照片之后五六一个星期，才请求我的特派员提供这些信息。延迟的原因是，尽管我明明确定我在过去某地见过那位胖男士，可想了半天却一点也想不起来是在何时何地，为了何事。那人让我觉得跟某件尴尬、不快的事有关，不过除此之外，什么

别的也记不起来。直到有天早晨，我在肯辛顿高街上漫步找计程车，往事在全无预兆的情况下，忽然涌上心头。

那位胖男士刚到我家的时候，我并没有花什么心思注意他。毕竟当时距离父亲失踪才两三个星期，陌生人不时来来去去：警察、英国领事馆的人、摩根洋行的人，还有一些女士一进我家看见母亲，便会伸出双臂并发出一声痛苦的惊呼。对于这些女士，我记得母亲以冷静的一笑回应，然后走向她们，直截了当地谢绝拥抱，并以她最有自信的口吻说出这样的话：“艾格妮丝，真高兴见到你。”接着她会牵着客人的手——也许还僵在空中——带领她们到客厅去。

总之，如我所说，胖男士那天刚到家门口，并没有引起我多少兴趣。我记得我从游戏室的窗户往下瞄了一眼，看见他走下汽车。他当时的样子，我相信跟那张剪报上的照片差不多：深色长袍、瓜皮帽、辫子。我注意到车子硕大闪亮，他不但有司机还有另两位随扈，不过就算这样，这排场也不算什么；父亲失踪后的那段日子，许多有头有脸的大人物早已来访过。倒是菲利普叔叔迎上前去寒暄的样子，让我有些意外，他当时已在家中待了约一个钟头。他们一副相见甚欢的样子——仿佛至交——接着菲利普叔叔引领客人进屋子里来。

我不记得接下来的一时半刻里我做了什么。我还留在屋子里——不过不是为了那位胖男士，我说了，我对他没什么兴趣。事实上，当我第一次听到楼下的骚动时，我记得我还很诧异客人竟然还没走。我赶到游戏室窗前，看见汽车还在马车道上，三位留在车上的随扈——他们也听到了争吵声——急忙下车，表情紧张。接着我看到胖男士平心静气地走向汽车，挥手向手下示意不要担心。司机已开好车门等着胖男士上车，他上车的时候母亲出现了。事实上，刚才是她的声音让我赶到窗口观望。我一直告诉自己，这种语气只有对我或对用人生气的时候才有，不过等母亲的身影在楼下出现，她说的每个字都清楚可辨，我就算想骗自己也没办法了。有些东西她再也压抑不住了，我从未见她如此，但我立刻意识到，从父亲失踪之后，我早该接受这样的事了。

她对胖男士吼叫，多亏有菲利普叔叔拉住她。母亲指责胖男士背叛自己的同胞，指责他是恶魔的帮凶，她才不要他那种协助，要是他再回到我家，她会当他是禽兽不如的东西唾他的面。

胖男士听了一点也不动怒。他指示随扈们上车，司机发车时，他从车窗对母亲微笑，几乎颌首向她表示赞许一般，仿佛母亲在那儿礼数周到地向他告别。车子走了以后，菲利普叔叔劝母亲进屋子里来。

等他们走到大厅，母亲已不再说话。我听见菲利普叔叔说：“可是我们什么方法都得试一试，你难道不明白吗？”他的脚步声跟着母亲的进入客厅，门随即关上，我就什么也没再听见了。

看见母亲这种举止，当然让我不安。不过，假如她发现对访客怒吼解放了她几个星期以来严密压抑的情绪，那么我内心也有类似的变化。正是因为目睹她情绪爆发，不管过去这两三个星期以来我怎么想，今天我终于能够接受这件事情已经有了最坏的可能，而随之而来的感受，则是心中的巨石落地。

顺带一提，我得承认，我不敢完全肯定那天所见的中国人，就是剪报照片上的那位——照片中的人已查出是军阀王顾。我只能说，从我看到照片的第一眼开始，我就毫不怀疑，那张脸孔——而不是每位中国乡绅都极可能拥有的长袍、瓜皮帽、辫子——就是父亲才失踪几天后我所看见的那个人。这件事，我每在心中多回想一次，就愈相信照片中的人正是那天来我家的那位男士。这项发现的影响深远——它有助于提供我父母如今身在何处的线索，并且在我想做的诸多调查之中，居于中心地位——如我所述，这些事我想要尽快动手。

第九章

我刚才描述的这件事还有更深的一个层面，在此不知该不该提，我也不确定这件事有没有任何实质意义。此事跟菲利普叔叔那天在我家前面拉住我母亲的方式有关；还有，就是他进了屋子里对母亲说的话，声音有点不对劲：“可是我们什么方法都得试一试，你难道不明白吗？”我提不出任何具体证据，只不过小孩有时往往更能察觉那些比较不明确的事物。总之，我就是觉得那天菲利普叔叔绝对有问题。我不知道为什么，可是我清清楚楚感觉到菲利普叔叔这次并不是“站在我们这边”；感觉到他跟那个肥胖的中国人，比跟我们还要亲密；甚至还感觉到——这极可能纯粹是我的幻想——胖男士坐车走的时候，菲利普叔叔还跟他交换了个眼神。如我所说，我无法指出任何具体线索来佐证这些感觉，也许是因为菲利普叔叔最后终究还是现出原形，才让我有这些后见之明罢。

我说“放松警戒”，是因为在那最后一天来临前的一阵子，我愈来愈为母亲的安危担忧，不时看着她。就连她说想独处，我都会留心她走进哪个房间，并且留心有哪扇门、哪扇窗是绑匪可能闯入的。晚上我躺着不睡，听她在屋内走动，我总是把我的武器放在手边——那是一根末端削尖的棍子，是秋良给我的。

然而深入回想这一切，我觉得，事情发展到那个时候，我内心深处并不太相信我的恐惧会成为现实。就拿我认为一根尖棍儿就足以吓阻绑匪一事来说——我常在睡梦中幻想自己与数十名闯进楼上的绑匪恶斗，他们一个个被我打倒——这或许也说明了当时我的恐惧，依然停留在一个多么脱离现实、荒诞不经的层级上。

尽管如此，我为母亲的安危心焦不已是毋庸置疑的。我当时实在不懂，其他大人怎么都没有采取任何保护她的措施。那段时间，我不

喜欢让母亲离开我的视线，而如我所说，倘若那天邀我的人不是菲利普叔叔，我绝不会放松警戒。

那是个晴朗多风的早晨。我记得我从游戏室的窗口，看着树叶在前院的马车道上飞舞。早餐后不久，菲利普叔叔就和母亲一起待在楼下，我于是可以放松一下，相信只要菲利普叔叔在她身边，她就不会有事。

上午过了一半，我听见菲利普叔叔叫我。我走到楼梯口，从护栏往下望，看见母亲与菲利普叔叔站在玄关抬头看我。这是几个星期以来，我第一次感觉到他们有欣喜之色，仿佛听了一则笑话才刚笑完一样。大门没关上，有一道细长的阳光泻进玄关。菲利普叔叔说：

“我说小海雀，你不是一直说你要手风琴吗？哪，我要买一架送你。昨天我在汉口路的橱窗里看到一架精美的法式手风琴。店主显然不知道价格开得太低呢。我说不如我们俩过去看看。你要是看了喜欢，就是你的了。这主意不赖吧？”

这件事让我冲下楼梯，最后四阶还并作一步，还在大人周围打转，鼓动双臂模仿老鹰。我在耍宝时，很高兴能听到母亲的笑声——好一阵子没有听到她这样笑了。老实说，有可能这种气氛——以为情况或许就要开始回到从前——正是导致我“放松警戒”的重大因素。我问菲利普叔叔我们什么时候可以去，他耸耸肩说：

“何不现在就走？如果放着，说不定就让别人看上了。说不定此时此刻，我们还在谈，它就被别人买走了呢！”

我冲向门口，母亲又笑了。接着她告诉我，我得把外套、鞋子穿好。我记得我想说我不要穿外套，结果没提，以免大人改变心意，不只是害怕买不成手风琴，也怕整个轻松的气氛跟着改变。

菲利普叔叔跟我走过前院出发时，我漫不经心地向母亲挥别。接着我又走了几步，赶向等候的马车。菲利普叔叔拉住我的肩膀说：

“哪，跟母亲挥挥手。”也不管我才挥过。不过我当时并没有多想，只是依他吩咐转身向母亲再次挥手，她的身影优雅端庄，亭亭立于门口。

大半的路，马车走的是我与母亲平日到市中心的路线。一路上菲利普叔叔沉默不语，这让我有点意外，不过我从来没有单独跟他共乘过马车，所以猜想这也许是他平常的习惯。每当我指着路旁的东西给他看，他的确会愉快地回应；不过没一会儿，他就又沉默地凝视窗

外。林荫大道渐渐变成拥挤的街道，我们的车夫对着挡路的黄包车与路人吼叫。我们经过南京路那间小小的古玩店，我记得我伸长了脖子，想看看广西路转角的那间玩具店。马车接近蔬菜市场，我才想着该掩鼻阻挡腐菜味的时候，菲利普叔叔忽然用手杖轻敲，指示车夫把马车停下来。

“我们从这里开始走路，”他对我说，“我知道一条捷径。走那里快得多。”

这个变通之道完全合理。我从过去的经验知道，南京路附近的街道人潮汹涌，马车或汽车往往一被堵住就是五分钟，甚至十分钟不能动弹。于是我什么也没说就让他扶我下车。不过就在那时候，我开始有了某种不祥的预感。也许是菲利普叔叔扶我下车碰我的方式有点不对劲；也许是他的态度哪里不对。不过他接着对我笑笑，又说了些话，可惜周遭太嘈杂听不到。他指向邻近的巷子，我紧跟在他后面，挤过洋溢着欢乐气氛的人潮。我们从阳光走进阴影，接着他停下来转身向我，就在推推搡搡的人群当中。他把一只手放到我肩上，然后问我：

“克里斯托弗，你知道我们在哪里吗？你猜得到吗？”

我向四周看看，然后指着一座石头拱门，门下的菜贩四周围满人群，我答说：“知道，那里过去是九江路。”

“好，那么你完全清楚我们现在在哪里。”他诡异地一笑，“这一带的路你很熟啰。”

我点点头，静待其变，但心底深处却涌起一种感觉：非常可怕的事情就要发生了。也许菲利普叔叔要说别的事——也许他本来的计划完全不是这样——可是在那一刻，我们站在熙来攘往的人群里，我相信他从我表情里看出事迹已然败露。他脸上一阵错愕，接着他尽可能压过周围的噪音对我说：

“好孩子。”

他再度抓住我的肩膀，眼神则四下观望。然后他仿佛做好了决定——这个我早有心理准备。

“好孩子！”他说，这次声量更大，声音因激动而颤抖。他继续说：“我没有要伤害你的意思，你明白吗？我没有要伤害你的意思。”

说完他便转身消失在人群里。我只抱着些许希望跟了上去，过了一会儿，瞥见他的白色外套急忙穿过人群离去。他穿过拱门之后就再也看不见了。

接下来有一会儿，我就呆立在人群之中，尽量不去回想刚才的事情到底有什么道理。接着，我忽然开始移动脚步，往来时的方向走回去，回到我们下马车的地方。我再也顾不得礼节，在群众里看到缝隙就强挤，有空间就硬钻，惹得好多路人在我背后或大笑或叫骂。我到了那条街上，自然发现马车早已驶离。有那么几秒钟，我不知所措地站在马路中央，试着在脑子里想好回家的路线，接着就使尽全力快跑。

我沿着九江路跑，横越了石子高低不平的云南路，到了南京路则再次挤过人群。跑到涌泉路，我已经气喘如牛，不过我激励自己，就剩这一段又长又直的路了，路上的人还算少。

也许是因为觉得自己的恐惧纯属个人感受——也或许因为我的看法已经有了深沉的转变——我竟没有想到向路过的大人求救，或者拦下路上的马车或汽车。我开步就跑，尽管已经上气不接下气，尽管我的步伐一定很引人侧目，尽管闷热与疲倦让我有时只能半走半跑，但我相信我一路都没停过。最后我经过美国领事的住所，接着是罗伯逊先生的家。离开涌泉路便进入了我家所在的道路，再喘口气，我便一路跑到我家的大门口。

走过车道——尽管没有什么明显迹象——我知道已经太迟了，事情早已结束。我发现正门被闩上了。我跑到后门，一推就开，跑过屋内，不知怎么，我并没有呼唤母亲，反而是呼唤梅俐——也许都到了这个地步，我还不愿接受呼唤母亲所意味的事情。

家里好像空无一人。我站在玄关，奇怪，怎么会听到咯咯傻笑的声音。声音从图书室传来，我转身走过去，房门半开，我看见梅俐坐在我的书桌旁。她坐得直挺挺，我在玄关出现时，她朝我看看，又发出一声傻笑，仿佛听了一则有关别人私事的笑话，想要憋住不笑出来。那时候我才忽然意识到她是在啜泣，而我已然明白，我在那段痛苦的长跑之中就心知肚明，母亲已经不在那儿了。我心中对梅俐生起一股冷冷的愤怒——这么多年来，她让我敬畏有加，可现在我明白这一切全是装腔作势：她丝毫无法控制这个逐渐将我们吞没的混乱世界；她只是个可悲的小女人，全靠伪装在我眼中建立她的形象，当巨大势力相互冲突斗争之际，她根本贱于蝼蚁。我站在走廊上瞪着她，眼神鄙夷至极。

现在已是深夜一写下最后那句话，又过了一个多钟头——然而我还在这里，在书桌边。我想我一直坐在那儿，反复回想这些往事，其中有些已经多年不曾从心底唤起。然而我也展望未来，期盼有一天我终于可以重回上海；期盼我可以跟秋良一起做的所有事情。那城市当然会经历一些变化。不过我也知道，秋良只会想带着我到处逛，向我炫耀他将这城市不为人知的角落摸得多么熟。他会知道吃该到哪儿吃，喝要到哪儿喝，逛又得到哪儿逛；也知道有哪个绝佳的场所，可以让我们在辛苦了一整天以后，坐下来聊到深夜，叙叙自从上回一别，我们各自经历了多少沧海桑田。

可是此刻我得先睡觉。明天早上还有许多事要忙，而且下午跟莎拉搭公车漫游伦敦花了些时间，我得把进度赶上。

第三部

一九三七年四月十二日・伦敦

第十章

昨天，小詹妮弗与吉文斯小姐购物回来时，我的书房已经一片昏暗。这栋窄而高的楼房，是用姑妈去世后留下的遗产购置的，从里头可以俯瞰一片广场，房子尽管还算体面，采光却比左邻右舍差。我从书房的窗户俯瞰广场上的她在计程车与屋子之间来来回回，把取下的购物袋靠着栏杆排好，吉文斯小姐则拿着钱包在掏车资。忙了半晌她们才走进屋里，我听见她们在斗嘴，虽然我也到楼梯口喊了一声向她们打招呼，但想想还是别下去的好。她们正在吵些鸡毛蒜皮的事——怎么买了这个，怎么没买那个——更何况我还在为早上到的信兴奋着——我可不想糟蹋了这份心情。

等我下楼，她们早已吵完了，我看到詹妮弗蒙着眼睛在客厅里走来走去，两手伸在身子前面。

“嗨，詹妮弗，”我说，假装没看到什么异于平常的事，“新学期需要的所有东西，有没有买齐？”

她眼见就要撞上珍玩柜，我忍住没喊她。她及时停步，双手摸着柜子时还咯咯傻笑。

“哎哟，克里斯托弗叔叔！你怎么不警告我？”

“警告？警告什么？”

“我瞎了呀！你看不出来吗？我瞎了！你看嘛！”

“哦，没错。你是瞎了。”

我随她在家具之间摸索，自己走到厨房，吉文斯小姐把桌上袋子里的东西拿出来，礼貌地向我打了个招呼，却清楚地让我看到她向桌子另一头瞥了一眼，我吃剩的午餐还摆在那里。自从上星期我们的女仆波莉走了，每次有迹象暗示她得勉为其难暂代其职，她都一副鄙夷的样子。

“吉文斯小姐，”我对她说，“有件事得跟您商量。”我侧脸向她低声地说，“是跟詹妮弗有关的事。”

“请说，班克斯先生。”

“老实说，吉文斯小姐，我在想，我们可不可以到温室里去谈。我是说，这件事，可不是小事。”

就在这个时候，客厅传来东西砸到地上的声音。吉文斯小姐从我身边赶了过去，在门口就喊了：

“詹妮弗，够了！我早告诉你会这样！”

“可是我瞎啦，”她回答，“我也没办法。”

吉文斯小姐想起我还在跟她说话，一时之间一心不能二用。愣了一会儿，她回到我这里，平静地问我：“抱歉，班克斯先生。您刚才说的是……？”

“其实，吉文斯小姐，我想不如等晚一点詹妮弗上床了，我们再谈比较方便。”

“没问题，到时候我再过来。”

不知她对于我要谈的事有没有什么不祥的预感，反正她当时并没有表现出来。她对我例行地一笑，便走进客厅尽她的职责去了。

自从第一次遇见詹妮弗，到今天已经快三年了。我的老同窗奥斯本邀我参加一场晚宴，我好一阵子没见到他了。他当时还住在格洛斯特街，那夜我初遇后来成为他妻子的那位少妇。他的客人中还有比顿夫人，她是一位著名慈善家的遗孀。也许是因为客人我都不认识——他们整晚净说些笑话，取笑我一无所知的一些陌生人——我发现我老是跟比顿夫人讲话，有好几次我甚至担心我会不会烦扰到她。总之，就在热汤上桌时，她开始跟我谈起一件她最近遇到的悲惨个案，她负责某慈善机构的财务，所以有机会得知这种事情。有对夫妇两年在康沃尔的船难中罹难，他们的独生女如今已十岁，目前在加拿大与祖母同住。老太太显然健康不佳，难得出门或有访客。

“上个月我去多伦多，”比顿夫人告诉我，“我决定亲自登门拜访。那个可怜的小东西，想死英国了。而老太太，连自己都照顾不来，哪里顾得了那个小女孩。”

“贵机构有办法帮她？”

“我尽量想办法就是了。可是我们要帮助的对象太多了，你明白吧。严格说来，她还不算优先关注对象。毕竟她还有住的地方，她父母留下的钱也够她温饱了。做我们这种事，有个大原则，不可以太感

情用事。可是见了那女孩儿，不动感情都难。尽管她显然过得不快乐，却散发着某种气质，常人难比。”

晚宴里，她应该还跟我提了几件詹妮弗的事。我记得我很有礼貌地倾听，并未说什么。等到更晚一些，客人渐渐告辞，奥斯本款留大家，我才把比顿夫人请到一旁。

“我希望您不嫌我冒昧，”我说，“您刚才跟我提起的那个女孩。那位詹妮弗。我想为她尽点绵薄之力。老实说，比顿夫人，我打定主意要领养她。”

也许我不该怪她听了之后满脸狐疑地退了一步。反正在我看来是如此。过了半晌她才回答：

“您真好心，班克斯先生。那么容我另日再跟您详谈。”

“我可是真心真意，比顿夫人。我最近继承了一笔遗产，我相信我有能力让她过好日子。”

“那还用说，班克斯先生。那么我们约时间再细谈。”说完，她转身跟其他客人喧闹地道别。

比顿夫人的确不到一周就与我联络。有可能她先去查问了我的为人，也许她只是充分考虑过了；总之，她的态度改变了许多。在皇家咖啡厅共进的午餐以及接下来的几次会晤里，她对我简直再亲切不过，于是在奥斯本寓所的晚宴过后四个月，詹妮弗就顺利抵达了我的新居。

随行的是一位加拿大护士亨特小姐，待了一周就走了，临别时欣喜地吻了女孩的脸颊，提醒她要写信给祖母。詹妮弗仔细地比较我让她挑选的三个房间，最后选中最小的一间，因为她说墙上那排木架子，正好可以摆放她的“收藏品”。不久我便明白那是一些精挑细选过的贝壳、坚果、干树叶、小卵石以及几件她多年来收集的东西。她把这些东西在架子上仔细摆设妥当。然后有一天，她请我进去参观。

“每一个我都取了名字，”她解释道，“我知道这样做有点傻，可是谁教我这么爱它们呢。等哪一天，克里斯托弗叔叔，等我没那么忙的时候，我再把它们每一个的故事说给你听。可不可以请你转告波莉，打扫我房间的时候，要格外小心哦。”

比顿夫人过来协助我面试保姆，不过在隔壁偷听的詹妮弗才是真正做决定的人。每回应征者谈完一走，她就会过来判她出局。“糟透

了，”她这样否决了其中一位，“她说上一位小姐死于肺炎，骗谁呀！根本是被她下毒害死的。”有一次她这么说了应征者：“她怎么行？没见过这么会紧张的。”

面谈的时候，我觉得吉文斯小姐有点呆板甚至冷漠，可是不知道为什么，她却立刻赢得了詹妮弗的认同，而我也必须承认，她过去两年半以来的表现，也算不负詹妮弗的眼光。

别人听完我介绍詹妮弗，几乎一致赞叹，她虽然经历那么悲惨的不幸遭遇，却能如此镇定。没错，她的定力的确非常好，一些会让她这个年纪的女孩潜然落泪的挫折，她尤其能泰然处之。她的行李遗失一事，就是个好例子。

她到达以后有好几个星期，一再提及她那口从加拿大走海路来的皮箱。例如，我记得她有一次仔细地向我描述她有个木雕的旋转木马，某人特地为她做的，就在那口皮箱里。还有一次，我赞美她与吉文斯在榭芙丽百货公司买的某一件衣服，她冷眼看着我说：“我有条发带跟这件衣服真是绝配。就在我皮箱里，快寄到了。”

然而有一天我收到船运公司的信，信中对方为了皮箱遗失而致歉，并且说明愿意照价赔偿。我告诉詹妮弗时，她先是愣了一愣，然后浅浅一笑说：

“既然如此，吉文斯小姐跟我恐怕还得再去好好采购一番了。”

过了两三天，她还是没有因为掉了皮箱而露出半点沮丧的迹象，我觉得我必须跟她谈谈，于是有天吃完早餐，瞥见她在花园里散步，我便过去找她。

那是个凉爽晴朗的早晨。我的花园并不大，就城里的花园来说也算是小的一块长方形的绿地，被四周邻居包围环伺——然而花园的陈设精巧，无论如何，有种与世隔绝的静谧。当我走下台阶到草地上时，詹妮弗手上正拿着一只玩具马在到处漫步，让马儿如梦似幻地放蹄于围篱与树丛顶端。我记得我倒是担心玩具会被叶上的露水浸坏，想要提醒她。不过等我走到她身边，却只是说：

“关于行李的事，我们运气实在很糟。虽然你看起来毫不在意，但我想这事一定让你难过极了。”

“哦……”她心不在焉地玩她的马，“是有点烦啦。反正我总是可以用赔偿金买更多东西。吉文斯小姐说我们星期二可以去购物。”

“总之，我觉得你真是勇敢。不过你可不需要强忍心中的感受，如果你懂我的意思。如果你想发泄一下，尽管发泄就是。我不会告诉任何人，我敢说吉文斯小姐也不会。”

“没事的。我并不难过。毕竟也只是一些东西嘛。我连父亲和母亲都已经失去了，丢掉一点东西算什么，你说是不是？”说完她笑了一下。

我不记得她提过几次父母，这是其中一次。我也笑了笑说：“的确不算什么。”我开始往屋子走，但又转身向她说：

“你知道吗，詹妮，我不敢确定我这样说对不对。你也许跟许多人说过这类的话，他们也相信。不过，我个人的经验告诉我，事情不是这样。我从上海回来的时候，有些东西，我特别装在我自己的皮箱里，那些东西对我来说可是非比寻常。至今也依然重要如昔。”

“我可以看看吗？”

“给你看看？只怕大部分东西对你都没什么意义就是了。”

“我喜欢中国的东西。我想看看。”

“大部分都不是中国的东西，”我说，“哪，我要说的是，对我而言，我的皮箱对我别具意义。如果丢了我会难过。”

她耸耸肩，让马儿跑上她的脸颊。“那天我也难过啊。可是现在不了。人生总得往前看嘛。”

“没错。不管这是谁教你的，教得好。反正你好就好。现在，把你的皮箱忘掉吧，不过你要记住……”我一时无语，忘了本来想说什么。

“记住什么？”

“没事。别忘了，你要是有什么事想对我说，有什么事困扰你，我永远在这儿。”

“没问题。”她开朗地回答。

我走回屋子的路上，回头瞄了一眼，看见她又在园里漫步，让她的马儿在空中奔腾，画出一个接一个梦幻的圆弧。

对詹妮弗如此承诺，我并非轻许。当时我真心想实践承诺，而且在接下来的日子里，我对詹妮弗的爱怜有增无减。然而时至今日，我

已经打算离开她；会离开多久，我根本不知道。当然，我有可能夸大了她对我的依赖。再说，如果一切顺利，下次学校放假之前，我早已回到伦敦，她根本不会察觉我离开。然而，我不得不承认，我可能会去得更久一点，就像昨夜吉文斯小姐开门见山问我，我就承认了。正是这归期不定泄漏了在我心中究竟孰轻孰重，我相信詹妮弗马上会有自己的结论。不管她脸上表现得如何不在乎，我知道她会视我的决定为背叛。

事情怎么会走到这一步田地，并不容易解释。我只能说是从几年前开始一远在詹妮弗来以前一起先是一种隐约的感觉，不时浮上心头：我感觉有人不认可我，而且掩饰得相当勉强。说来奇怪，只要跟我认为最能欣赏我成就的人在一起，这种感觉往往就会浮现。比方在晚宴上，我跟某位政治人物或警界人物，甚至只是跟我的客户谈话，我总会突然觉得对方的握手怎么变冷漠了，相谈甚欢之际，对方怎么会唐突了几句，有时我以为对方会感激不尽，结果对方竟然只是礼貌地把我打发。起初这类情况发生的时候，我会回想自己是否曾无意得罪这个人；到后来我只能得出这样的结论：问题出在一般人看待我的方式。

我这里谈的事朦胧不清，极不容易举出例子，作为清楚的说明。不过我想，去年秋天我与埃克塞特来的警探有过一段奇怪的对谈，或许就是一例，地点是萨默塞特郡柯林村外一处幽暗的巷口。

那是我经手的调查里，最教人痛心的案件之一。我到达的时候，案发已经四天，他们在一条巷子里找到那些孩子的尸体，由于经常下雨，窄巷变成了泥河一想搜集相关证据变得难上加难。尽管如此，在我听见一位警探走近的脚步声之前，我已经对事发经过有了相当清楚的概念。

“这种事最让人不安。”我对走上前来的警探说。

“这让我反胃，班克斯先生，”警探说，“真是让我反胃。”

我本来蹲着细细察看围篱，现在站了起来，跟他面对面站着，小雨一直没停过。接着他说：

“您知道吗，先生，此时此刻我真希望自己是木匠。我父亲就希望我做木匠。我真希望做个木匠，先生。经历了今天这个案子，我真希望如此。”

“真是惨，没错。不过我们也别气馁。我们得让正义得以伸张。”

他哀怨地摇摇头，接着说：“我是过来问问，您对案情有没有什么看法。因为，您知道的……”他抬头看看头上滴着水的树枝，然后勉为其难地继续说道：“您知道，我自己的调查让我得出了某个结论。我很厌恶这样的结论，不太想去碰它。”

我沉重地看着他点点头。“您的结论恐怕没错，”我严肃地说，“四天前，案情看起来已经惨绝人寰。不过再看过一回，真相只怕更加骇人听闻。”

“怎么会这样呢，先生？”警探脸色苍白如纸，“怎么会有这种事？尽管我做了这么多年的探员，我还是无法理解这种……”他说不下去，转身背对着我。

“很不幸的是，我看不出有别的可能，”我平静地说，“事情的确令人震惊。我们似乎正俯瞰着黑暗的深渊。”

“如果是什么路过的疯子，我还能接受。不过，这……我想到都觉得恶心。”

“您不得不接受，”我说，“我们必须接受事实。因为事情就是这样发生的。”

“您确定，先生？”

“我确定。”

他凝望的眼神越过邻近田野，落在远处的一排村舍。

“在这种情况下，”我说，“我可以体会您会因此气馁。不过容我直言，还好您没有听从令尊的建议。因为像您这样的人才，警探先生，这样的人才实在难得。像我们这样的人，我们的职责就是打击坏人，我们……该怎么说好呢？我们就像系住百叶窗叶片的细绳。一旦我们系得不牢靠，一切都会分崩离析。您背负的责任可是相当重大啊，警探先生。”

他沉默了一会儿，然后又开了口，语气里的坚决让我吃了一惊。

“我只是个普通人，先生。我会留下来尽我所能。我会留在这个位子上尽全力打击毒蛇。不过这回的对手可是个九头怪兽。你砍掉一个头，它却又长出三个。我觉得情况就是这样，先生。情况变糟了。每一天都在恶化。这里发生的事，这些可怜的小孩……”他转回来面

对着我，我此时可以看到他脸上的怒火，“我只是个小人物。假如我有身份地位”——此刻，毫无疑问，他以控诉的眼神直视我双眼——“假如我有身份地位的话，老实告诉您，先生，我决不迟疑。我会直攻它的要害。”

“要害？”

“毒蛇的要害。我会去做。何苦跟这斩之不尽的头搏斗呢？我今天就到毒蛇的要害所在，斩草除根，免得……免得……”

他显然词穷了，只能站在那儿瞪着我。我不记得我回答了什么。也许喃喃说了这类的话：

“您能这么做的话，真是再好不过了。”然后转身离去。

还有去年夏天的一件事，那次我前往皇家地理学会听H·L·莫蒂默演讲。那个晚上相当温暖。一百多个听众，都是各个领域的一时之选；我看到听众里有一位自由派人士，还有一位来自牛津大学的知名历史学家。莫蒂默教授才讲了一个多小时，厅里已渐渐闷热起来。他的论文题目是：“纳粹主义是否会威胁基督教？”内容充满争议，认为全民普选会减弱英国对国际事务的控制力量。演讲后的发问时间，厅内讨论气氛炽热，不过都无关莫蒂默教授的想法，而是关于德军进入莱茵河以西非军事区的动作。宽容与谴责德国这项行动的声音一样热烈，不过那夜，我才刚度过忙碌不堪的几周，没花力气跟着起哄。

讨论得差不多了，来宾被引领到隔壁厅里用点心。那一边空间实在不够，等我进去的时候——我后面还有一串人呢——里头早已摩肩接踵。那夜留给我的印象，有一幕是身材高大、穿着围裙的女士，端着装有樱桃的托盘，挤过人群；还有一幕是头发泛白、体形如鸟的教授们，两两在那里交谈，大家的头部都往后仰，以保持礼貌的谈话距离。我觉得这种环境我实在待不下去，于是往出口挤了过去，此时有人轻拍我肩膀。我回头看见坎农·莫利对我微笑。他是位牧师，最近有个案子多亏他鼎力协助，不知他是否有话要跟我说，于是我停下来打个招呼。

“今夜真是棒极了，”他说，“启发了我好多思考空间。”

“的确有趣极了。”

“不过恕我直言，班克斯先生，我看到您也在会场，就等着听您发表高见呢。”

“可惜今晚我有点体力不济。再说，厅内每位来宾对这个议题的了解，似乎都比我多得多。”

“哪，您太客气，太客气了。”他笑了笑，轻轻碰了我胸口一下。接着他靠了过来——也许背后有人推挤——他的脸离我仅数寸。“我老老实实对您说，”他开口道，“我有点意外，您怎么忍得住不发言。大家都在谈论欧洲的危机。您说您累了；也许只是礼貌性的托辞罢。无论如何，我没想到您会任由他们胡诌。”

“胡诌？”

“我要说的是，请您包涵——今晚出席的这些绅士们，自然会认为欧洲是当前世界动乱的暴风眼。不过，班克斯先生您，您当然知道真相。您知道我们目前危机的中心，其实距离我们非常遥远。”

我认真地看了他一会儿，然后说：“对不起，先生。我不太懂您指的是什么。”

“噢，怎么可能呢。”他笑笑，一副心照不宣的样子，“您可能不懂。”

“我说的是真的，先生，我真的不明白为什么您会认为我对这种事有什么独到的见解。没错，这些年我调查过一些刑案，也许我已描绘出某些邪恶的形式如何显形的基本图像。可是，对于强权之间如何保持平衡，我们如何遏制欧洲境内激烈的欲望冲突，对于这类事情，我得承认我没什么大理论可言。”

“没有理论？也许没有。”坎农·莫利继续对我微笑，“不过您有的，这么说好了，那是一种特殊的背景，当前我们一切焦虑的核心其实就跟这个背景有关。噢，别这么说吧，好老兄！您完全清楚我指的是什么！您比谁都清楚，暴风眼根本不在欧洲，而在远东。说准确一点，是在上海。”

“上海，”我语气疲软，“没错，我也觉得……觉得那个城市里，的确有些问题。”

“的确有问题。原本只是当地的问题，却任由它蔓延坐大，这几年来，把毒素散布到世界各处，浸透了我的文明。这个哪里需要我来跟您提。”

“我想，先生，您会明白，”我说，决定不再隐藏我的不悦，“我这些年致力于阻止犯罪与邪恶的扩张，不管它们在何处现身。但

是，我当然也只能在我有限的领域里发挥所长。至于那些发生在海角天涯的事，说真的，先生，您总不能期望我也……”

“噢，别这么说吧！真是的！”

我原本几乎要失去耐性了，可巧有位牧师挤过人群来跟他寒暄。坎农·莫利将我们介绍给对方认识，我也趁机告退。

这种事还有好几桩，就算没这么明白直截，也渐渐累积成一股推动力，让我渐渐往某个方向走去。当然，这也包括那次在德雷科茨的婚礼上与莎拉·亨明斯的相遇。

第十一章

这件事至今已一年。当时我坐在教堂后排的座位上一新娘还有几分钟才会出现——这时我看见莎拉·亨明斯与塞西尔·梅德赫斯特爵士从教堂中殿的另一侧进来。塞西尔·梅德赫斯特爵士固然没有比上次在梅瑞迪斯基基金会向他致敬的晚宴上更显老迈；不过多方传闻他与莎拉的婚事让他返老回春，恐怕也只是夸大之词。不管怎么说，从他跟相识的人挥手的欢欣模样看来，他确实相当幸福。

我要到婚礼结束后才有机会跟莎拉说话。我在教堂的花园里闲逛，穿梭于聊天的宾客之间。我停下来欣赏一处花圃时，她忽然来到我身边。

“欸，克里斯托弗，”她说，“在场的真的就只剩你还没夸我的帽子好看哦！这是西莉亚·马西森亲手为我制作的。”

“美极了。确实与众不同。你近况如何？”

我们有好一阵子没见面了。我记得，我们在人群外围缓缓走着，客套地聊了片刻。接着我们停了下来，我问道：

“塞西尔爵士近来好吗？他看起来气色确实不错。”

“哦，他健康得很。克里斯托弗，你老实告诉我。我嫁给他，有没有遭人议论？”

“议论？哦，没有，没有。有什么好议论的？”

“我是说他比我年长许多。当然，没有人会当着我们的面说。不过你得告诉我。大家议论纷纷，对吧？”

“就我所知，大家都说好。当然啦，大家都很意外。决定得那么突然。但是，我相信大家都说好。”

“这样的话，也只证实了我担心的事。我在他们眼中一定是个老处女。所以他们才不议论。要是早个几年，他们不议论纷纷才怪。”

“怎么会……”

莎拉看我尴尬的样子，笑了起来，还碰碰我的手臂。“克里斯托弗，你真好。别担心。你一点都不用担心。”接着她补充，“哪，你

一定要来看我们。塞西尔还记得上次晚宴见过你哦。他想再看看你。”

“随唤随到。”

“呃，只怕也来不及了。是这样子的，我们要远行。再过八天，我们就要坐船到远东去。”

“是吗。你们要去很久吗？”

“也许几个月。也许几年。不过等我们回来，你可要来看我们。”

我想，听到这个消息，我不知道该说什么才好。不过就在那时候，新娘与新郎走过草地出现在我们眼前，莎拉说：

“真是璧人一对，可不是吗？还真是相配。”有一会儿，她若有所思地望着他们。接着她说：“我刚刚才问他们，未来有什么愿望。艾丽森说他们只想在多塞特有栋小屋子，好让他们年复一年待在里头不用出来。要等到子女成群、鬓发斑白。多么美好，对不对？我也祝他们如愿。还有，他们认识的过程真是神奇，完全靠缘分。”

她继续凝视他们，仿佛被催眠了。后来她不再神游，我想我们又谈了几分钟，聊聊共同朋友的近况。接着有人加入了我们，过一会儿我就走开了。

那天稍晚，我又碰到莎拉一次，就在南丘边上举行婚宴的乡村旅馆。当时已近傍晚，夕阳低垂天际。那时大家都喝了不少酒，我记得我走过旅馆，穿过一群群衣冠不整的客人，有的三三两两斜坐在沙发上，有的摇摇晃晃地倚在墙凹里，我走上了多风的露台才看见莎拉在那儿倚着栏杆俯望草地。我正走向她时，听见背后有人说话，回头一看，是个粗壮红脸的男士，他冲过阳台追上我，抓住我的手臂，然后站定喘气，以严肃的眼神看着我。接着他说：

“你知道的，我一直看着。我看到了刚才的事，早些时候也看到同样的情况。真是丢脸，我身为新郎的兄弟，我要再次向你致歉。那些醉汉，我不晓得他们是谁。真对不起，老兄，刚才你一定很不愉快。”

“哦，别在意，”我笑着说，“我真的没事。大家多喝了点，闹着好玩而已。”

“那可是野蛮的行为。他们是客人，你也是客人，要是他们不礼貌，他们就得滚。”

“说真的，是你多心了。他们没恶意的。更何况我也没受委屈。有时候让人开开玩笑，也是人之常情嘛。”

“可是他们已经闹了一整个下午了。我早些时候就看到了，甚至在教堂里也是这样。这可是我弟弟的婚礼。我不容许这样的行为。说真的，我现在就要在这里把这笔账算清楚。跟我来，老兄。我倒要看看他们还敢不敢取笑你。”

“别这么做，嘿，你搞错了。再怎么说明，那些玩笑，我跟他们一样觉得有趣。”

“我就是不准！这年头这种事情就是太多了。他们一次次逃过制裁，今天可不。在我弟弟的婚礼上绝对不行。来，你跟我来。”

他扯着我的手臂，我看见他脸上满是汗珠。我不确定我原本会如何应变，不过就在那一刻，莎拉袅娜走来，手里还拿着一杯鸡尾酒，对红脸男士说：

“欸，罗德里克，刚才是你搞错啰。那些是克里斯托弗的朋友。再说，克里斯托弗用得着你保护吗？”

红脸男士看看我又看看她。最后他问莎拉：“你确定？因为我看了一整天了。每次这位仁兄走近他们……”

“你操太多心了，罗德里克。他们是克里斯托弗的朋友。要是他有那么一点不高兴，你不会不知道的。克里斯托弗自己就有办法把他们痛骂一顿。说真的，克里斯托弗要的话，可以叫他们跪地求饶，或任他摆布，他爱怎样就可以怎么样，只要一个眼神就够了。所以不用操心，罗德里克。你尽管自便，这里没事的。”

红脸男士对我的态度里有了新的敬意，不知所措地伸出手来。“我是杰姆的哥哥，”与我握手时他自我介绍，“很高兴认识你。有什么可以效劳的地方，过来找我别客气。有什么误会都怪我不好。祝你玩得开心。”我们看着他蹒跚走向屋子。接着莎拉说：

“来吧，克里斯托弗。过来这里，我们聊聊吧。”

她啜了一口酒，袅娜离去。我跟着她走过阳台，走到栏杆旁俯瞰草地。

“谢谢你帮我解围。”我过了一会才说。

“没什么，这是应该的。克里斯托弗，你整个下午在忙什么？”

“哦，没什么。老实说，我一直在想。想几年前的那个晚上，为塞西尔爵士举行的那场晚宴。不知道那天晚上你与他会见时，有没有想到有一天……”

“拜托，克里斯托弗”——她打断我的话，我发现她已经很醉了——“我会告诉你的，告诉你也无妨。我们初次相见的那天晚上，我就觉得他好迷人哦。但真的仅此而已。事情是在更晚些时候发生的，呃，一年以后吧，或者更久一点。哦，没错，我会告诉你，你跟我交情那么好。有一次我们正在吃晚餐，有人谈起墨索里尼，有人就说，情况已经非同儿戏，可能有另一场大战要爆发，甚至是世界末日。就在这时候，有人提起塞西尔的名字。说什么这种时候，我们比任何时候都需要他这种人，还有，他实在不该退休，他总该还有不少活力罢。接着有人说，他正是承担大任的人选，有的人则说，不，要他承担不公平，他太老了，同侪没几个在世，他到现在连个老婆都还没娶。这句话惊醒了我这个梦中人。我想，怎么说，连他那样的大人物，功勋卓著，还是需要一个她，一个不一样的女人。在他事业的尾声，有人能帮助他，最后一次老当益壮，好好立个大功，给一生的事业写下辉煌的结局。”

她一时话都说完了，所以我就说：“这么看来，塞西尔爵士显然也有同感。”

“我想说服人的时候都会成功，克里斯托弗。再说，他说他第一眼见到我就爱上了我，就在那次宴会上。”

“真好。”

在我们下方，在草地上，离我们有段距离的地方，有几位客人在池塘边嬉戏。我们看到有位男士，领子在颈后翻起，他在那儿追赶鸭子。最后我说：

“塞西尔爵士最后再好好立个大功这回事，他的巅峰之作。你心里到底替他想到了什么？远行数月，就是为了这个吗？”

莎拉深深吸了一口气，凝视的眼神变得认真而沉着。“克里斯托弗。你一定知道答案。”

“要是我知道答案……”

“欸，真是的。我们当然是去上海。”

刚听她说出这句话，我心中的感受实在无法描述。也许心里多少还有点惊讶。不过最主要的是，我记得那是某种解脱；心中有种诡异的感觉：自从多年前在查林沃思俱乐部第一眼见到她，我心中就有个期待，等候这样的一刻来临；我也可以这么说：我跟莎拉的整段友谊，一直朝着这一点前进，如今终于走到了。接下来说的这些话，有种似曾相识的感觉，仿佛我们早在哪儿演练过许多回。

“塞西尔在那里是老地头了，”她继续说，“他觉得他也许有能力把那里的事情理出头绪，他觉得他该去。因此我们非去不可。下星期。我们的行李都已经打包好了。”

“那么，我诚挚地祝福塞西尔爵士，祝福你们两人，顺利完成在上海的任务。你是不是盼着要去？我觉得你一直盼着。”

“当然了。我当然期望。这种事情，我已经等了好久。我实在非常厌倦伦敦了，还有……还有这一切的一切”——她的手往旅馆的方向一挥。“我也不再年轻，有时候我觉得我的机会不会再来。不过现在不同了，我们要去上海。怎么了，克里斯托弗，有什么不对吗？”

“我想这件事，或许你会觉得没有什么，”我说，“不过我还是说说好了。你知道，我自己一直想要回上海一趟。我是说，去……去解决那里的问题。我一直这么想。”

有一会儿，她凝视着夕阳。接着她转向我，面露笑容，我想她的笑容里充满悲伤，还带了一丝指责。她伸出一只手，温柔地碰碰我的脸颊，然后又回头去看风景。

“也许塞西尔有办法很快就把上海的事情解决，”她说，“也许没办法。总之，我们会留在那里很久。所以，如果你刚才说的话当真，克里斯托弗，我们很可能会在那里碰面。对不对？”

“没错，”我说，“确实如此。”

到莎拉出发之前，我都没再见到她。她原本就可以指责我这么多年迟迟没有行动，那么现在，如果我再不有所作为，她就更有理由对我失望了。有件事不言自明：不管过去的几个月间塞西尔爵士在上海有了什么进展，解决方案依然遥不可见。全球的紧张情势持续升温；饱学之士把我们的文明比喻作干草堆上扔了点燃的火柴。此刻，我还在这儿，依然在伦敦闲着。不过，随着昨天那封信件的到来，情况大不相同了；我可以说，那最后一片拼图到齐了。一点不假，我亲自回

去的时机终于来临，回到上海一事隔多年一回去“斩除毒蛇”，如同那位埃克塞特来的正派警探所说。

不过这事也有代价。上午稍早的时候，詹妮弗跟昨天一样外出购物一再添购最后几件她声称新学期必备的东西。出门时她显得既兴奋又快乐；她还完全不知道我的计划以及我昨夜与吉文斯小姐讨论的事。

我请吉文斯小姐到客厅，邀了三次她才肯坐下。也许她多少猜到我要谈的事，觉得跟我坐下来谈，等于是共谋。我尽可能把事情对她解释清楚；尽量让她了解事情的重大；还有，这件事我已涉入许多许多年了。她听我说话未做反应，只到了我稍停一会儿时，她才问我一个简单的问题：我要去多久？我想我接着又说了一会儿，想办法对她解释，为什么我要处理的这种事，没法给一个确定的时间进度。我隐约记得后来是她问了什么打断我的话，接着我们讨论了几分钟，设想我不在的时候会发生的种种状况。我们费尽力气谈了这些事情，她起身正要离去时，我对她说：

“吉文斯小姐，我很清楚，短期之内，虽然有您竭尽心力照顾詹妮弗，但我不在家，她心里恐怕还是会不好受。可是，如果您就长期的影响来看，我走上刚才向您解释的那条路，不论对詹妮弗还是对我，恐怕才会是最好的事。更何况，要是哪天她知道了，她的监护人竟然在他最神圣的使命发出召唤之际转身逃去，她如何能爱他，尊敬他？不管她现在想要的是什麼，等她长大以后只会鄙视我。那样对我或对她又有什么好处？”

吉文斯小姐目不转睛凝视着我，然后说：“这点您说得有理，班克斯先生。”接着又补上一句，“不过她会好想您，班克斯先生，她会好想您。”

“没错，没错，我相信会是如此。可是吉文斯小姐，难道您不明白？”这时我的声量也许提高了些，“难道您不明白现在的局势有多急迫？您不知道世界的动乱不断在加剧吗？我不能不去！”

“当然，班克斯先生。”

“对不起。我向您道歉。今晚我有点激动。总之，今天发生了好多事。”

“要不要由我来告诉她？”吉文斯小姐问我。

我想了想才摇摇头。“我看不要，还是我来说好了。我会找个适当的时机再告诉她。在此之前，可否请您先别对她说什么。”

昨晚我本想今天找个时间告诉她。不过再三考虑之后，我觉得时机还未成熟；再说，她目前对于即将开始的新学期还兴致勃勃，没必要破坏这种心情。无论如何，此刻最好是先把事情搁着，等我把一切安排妥当，再到学校找她。詹妮弗这女孩坚强得很，没理由担心她会因为我远行而伤心过度。

然而，我此时不禁想起两年前的那个冬日，那天是我第一次到圣玛格丽特中学去见她。我正好在离校不远处办案，她也刚住校不久，因此我决定去找她，看看她过得好不好。

学校包括一栋大宅，再加上周围的草地。大宅后面是一片草坡，坡底有片湖。也许因为有湖，我去的那四次，那一带都有薄雾笼罩。鹅儿四处漫步，闷闷不乐的园丁则整理着水边的草坪。大体上环境有些清冷，尽管那里的老师，每次我见到都表情亲切。那一天，我记得有位纳丁小姐一五十多岁的和善女士一领着我走过寒冷的走廊。走到一半，她停在一处墙凹边，压低声音对我说：

“大体上来说，班克斯先生，她适应得已经算是顶不错了。毕竟一开始总是会遇到一些困难，有些同学还当她是新生。其中有一两个，有时候难免失了分寸。不过到下个学期，这一切都不会有问题的，我确定。”

詹妮弗在一间装了橡木壁板的房间等我，壁炉里还有木块在燃烧。纳丁小姐离去后，詹妮弗站在炉架前，略带羞涩地对我笑笑。

“他们怎么不把屋子弄暖和些。”我边说边搓着双手走向壁炉。

“你应该去我们宿舍，看看那里有多冷。被单上都生出冰柱了！”她咯咯笑了。

我在壁炉边的椅子坐下，她还站着。我原本还担心她在不同的情境下见我会觉得尴尬，不过她马上就聊开了，谈她的羽毛球，谈她喜欢的女孩，谈到食物，她说什么都是“炖、炖、炖”的。

“有时候，新到一个地方，”我中间插嘴，“总是有些难处。她们没有一起……欺负你吧？”

“没有，没有，”她说，“有时候会逗逗我，不过她们没恶意。这里都是好女孩。”

我们谈了大约二十分钟，我站起来把我放在公事包里的纸盒取出交给她。

“哦？这是什么？”她兴奋地叫起来。

“詹妮弗，这不是……不是礼物之类的东西。”

她听出我声音里的警告语气，望着手上捧的盒子，显示出有戒心的样子。“那么这是什么？”她问。

“打开来，自己看看。”

我望着她除去盒盖一大约鞋盒大小的一个纸盒一往里头一看。她原本已经一副小心翼翼的表情，看了之后还是一点也没变。接着她伸手摸摸里头的东西。

“恐怕，”我温和地说，“我就只能找回这些东西了。你的皮箱，我查出来了，它并没有掉到海里，而是在伦敦的仓库里跟其他几件行李一起被偷走的。我尽了全力。很遗憾的是，不好卖的东西小偷干脆都砸坏了。我找不到衣服之类的东西。只找回来这些小玩意。”

她取出一条手链，仔细检视一番，仿佛在查看有没有瑕疵。她把它放回去，接着又取出一对小银铃以同样的方式检查。接着她盖回盒盖，抬头看我。

“你真好，克里斯托弗叔叔，”她平静地说，“你都那么忙了。”

“一点儿也不麻烦。我只是遗憾不能多找回一些东西。”

“你真好。”

“我想我得让你回去上地理课了。我来的时候真不巧。”

她没动，只是继续静静地站在原地，凝视手上捧的盒子。然后她说：

“在学校里，有时候什么都忘了。就是有时候。跟别的女孩一样算着日子等假期，那时候，我会以为自己还会见到爸妈。”

即便在这样的情境里，听她提起父母还是让我感到意外。我等她继续说下去，可是她没再开口；她只是抬头凝视着我，仿佛她刚才问了我一个问题。最后我说：

“有时候日子非常不好过，我知道。好像你的整个世界都垮了。不过我还是要告诉你，詹妮。你表现得非常好，你把自己的世界又重建了起来。你真的很了不起。我知道你的世界已经不可能和过去完全一样了，不过我也知道你已经重新出发，为自己建筑了一个幸福快乐的未来。还有，我会永远在一旁帮你，我要你知道这点。”

“谢谢你，”她说，“还有，谢谢你带来这些东西。”

就我记忆所及，那天会面就到此为止。我们离开较暖和的火边，走出那个多风的房间到走廊上，我便目送她回教室。

两年前的那个冬日午后，我当时完全没想到，我对她说的话全然不牢靠。等我下次到圣玛格丽特中学见她，向她告别，我们也许会在同一个多风的房间相见，在同一个壁炉旁边。果真如此，就教我更加为难了，因为詹妮弗铁定会清清楚楚记起我们在那里的上一次会面。不过她是个聪明的女孩，不管她当下的感受是什么，她都能完全了解我要跟她说的话。或许她甚至能领悟得更快，比她保姆昨晚还要快：等她年纪大了一等这件事成为辉煌的记忆——她会真心庆幸我不畏艰难，挺身迎向我的使命。

第十二章

到阿拉伯国家旅行的人，常常会抱怨当地人跟你讲话把脸靠得很近，让人不知所措。当然这不过是因为当地的习俗与我们不同罢了，任何思想开放的访客，不久便能见怪不怪。我也想过，我应该设法以类似的观点来看待这三个星期以来，我在上海碰到的某个状况，也就是：大家一有机会就挡住别人的视线。每当你刚进入某个房间或者才下车，马上就有人面带笑容挡住你的视线，让你连最基本的环境观察都无法进行。多半挡你的人，就是邀你来的那个人或是带路的人；但是，就算被围堵的视线一时有了缺口，那儿也永远不乏旁人急着填补这个空缺。就我所知，这个社区里的各国成员——英国人、中国人、法国人、美国人、日本人、俄国人——都同样热中此道，于是我们不得不做出结论：这是上海公共租界发展出来的独特习俗，超越所有种族与阶级的藩篱。

我花了好几天才看清楚这项本地的奇风异俗，并理解这就是我刚到的那阵子屡屡迷失方向手足无措的乱源。如今，尽管偶尔又为之气恼，我却不会再过度在意此事。再说，我发现上海有另一种可与之互补的习俗，这让我的生活好过些：在这里，对于挡路的人，就算你把他一脚踢开，似乎大家都还能容许。虽然我自己还没那个胆量亲身试试这种特许权，但我早在几次社交聚会上见识过名媛淑女扫除路障是何等霸气，而且不会惹来半声怨言。

阳斜照。我瞥见远处有座大舞台，台上有几位身着白色燕尾服的乐师在那儿闲晃聊天。他们跟大家一样，好像在等待什么——也许只是等待夜幕低垂。总之，会场的气氛浮动，大家互相推挤着，没有明显的目的。

我几乎跟丢了主人，不过我随即看到麦克唐纳先生向我招手，于是我走到一张小桌边坐下，桌上铺着浆熨过的白色桌巾，我的伙伴们也跟着挤了过来。从这个较低的位置，我可以看到一大片地板现在已经空了出来——待会儿应该会有歌舞表演——所有在场的人都挤到厅里靠玻璃窗这一侧的狭长地带。我坐的这张桌子跟一长排的桌子放在一起，我想看看这排桌子的尽头有多远，却被人挡住了。邻桌并没有人坐，可能是因为人潮拥挤不好坐。一点也不假，没多久我这张桌子仿佛变成了一叶小舟，任上海名流的浪潮从四面八方冲击。再者，我的到场也并非没人注意；我听到耳语在身边传递，告诉大家我来了，愈来愈多的目光投射过来。

后来的情况实在教人如坐针毡，尽管如此，我记得在我还能忍受的时候，我还是努力继续刚才坐车来饭店的时候，在车上与两位主人谈论的话题。我记得曾对麦克唐纳先生说：

“我深深感激您的建议，先生。不过，老实说，我宁可独自进行调查。我习惯这样工作。”

“那就依你了，老兄，”麦克唐纳先生说，“我只是想提提无妨。我建议的那些人当然对上海了如指掌。最厉害的几位可以媲美苏格兰场的高手。我只是觉得他们或许可以帮你省去些许宝贵的时间罢了。”

“不过，您应该记得我告诉过您，麦克唐纳先生。我是对案情有了清楚的了解，才从英国出发的。换言之，抵达此地并非起点，而是多年研究的顶峰。”

“换句话说，”格雷森忽然插嘴，“您来我们这里，就是要把这事做个了结。真了不起！真令人高兴！”

麦克唐纳对这位工部局的代表投以鄙夷的眼神，然后当格雷森没说过这些话似的，继续他的话题。

“我绝没有怀疑你的能力，老兄。你的记录可是相当辉煌。我的意思是，多一点人手支援你。当然是完全听命于你。不过，你知道的，就是要让事情尽快了结。你刚到这里，可能还不完全明白情况已

经紧迫到了什么地步。表面上看起来风平浪静，我知道；可是，我只怕我们没那么多太平日子了。”

“我完全了解情况紧急，麦克唐纳先生。不过我只能重申一事：我有十足把握相信事情在相当短的时间之内，就可以得出令人满意的结论。条件即是，我必须要在没有阻碍的情况下进行调查。”

“那真是太棒了！”格雷森欢呼，又让麦克唐纳冷冷瞪了一眼。

那天大半的时间，麦克唐纳先生都陪在我身边，我愈来愈受不了他假装只是一位身兼接待事务的领事。让他露出狐狸尾巴的，不只是他对我的计划好奇得超乎常情——或者他急着强塞“助手”给我；还有他说谎时脸不红气不喘的样子，再加上雍容优雅的礼节，一眼就看得出他是高阶情报人员。当天晚上到了那个节骨眼，我大概已经厌倦于应付他言辞闪烁的把戏，于是我提出了一项请求，仿佛真相我们早已彼此心照不宣。

“既然您提起协助一事，我倒是对警方所谓的‘黄蛇凶杀案’特别感兴趣。”

“哦，是吗？”我看得出麦克唐纳的表情里出现戒心。反观格雷森，他似乎不知道我所指为何，看看我又看看他。

“老实说”——我说下去，仔细盯着麦克唐纳——“我正是搜集了充足的‘黄蛇凶杀案’的资料，才决定走这一趟。”

“原来如此。所以你对‘黄蛇’的案子有兴趣。”麦克唐纳假装若无其事，往厅里望了一眼，“那案子很棘手哟，不过没那么重要吧，若以大局而论，我倒不会想到这桩案子。”

“那可不然。我相信这案子事关重大。”

“容我打个岔，”格雷森终于找到空当插嘴，“敢问你们谈的‘黄蛇凶杀案’是怎么回事？我从来没听过。”

“那就是大家所说的共产党报复行动。”麦克唐纳告诉他，“红军对待背叛自己人的告密者，便是杀光他的全部同党。”接着他转过来说，这种时候有所闻。红军干起这种事毫不留情。不过那是中国人的家务事。红军已完全在蒋介石的股掌之上，蒋介石也打算继续把他们捏在掌心里，不管日本人侵不侵略。我们只想作壁上观，你知道的。真没想到你对这个案子这么有兴趣，老兄。”

“不过这些特定的报复行动，”我说，“这些‘黄蛇凶杀案’，已经持续许多年。过去四年来每隔一阵子就会发生，至今已有十三人遇害。”

“你细节知道得比我还多，老兄。不过就我所听到的消息，这些报复行动之所以会延续这么多时日，是因为红军不知道谁是叛徒。每当他们认为这位‘黄蛇’老兄另有其人了，他们就再找个目标下手。”

“麦克唐纳先生，有件事对我的工作会有很大帮助，就是让我跟这位告密者谈谈。这位大家所说的‘黄蛇’。”

麦克唐纳耸耸肩。“这全都是中国人的家务事，老兄。我们谁也不知道‘黄蛇’是谁。在我看来，要是中国政府肯公布此人身份，也算是好事一桩，免得又有无辜百姓被误认为和他有瓜葛。可说实在的，老兄，这全都是中国人的家务事啊，我们最好别插手。”

“我得跟这个告密者谈，这事关重大。”

“好吧，既然你的意愿这么强，我会帮你跟一些人说说看。不过，我可不能跟你保证什么。这家伙似乎对中国政府极有用处。蒋介石的人马把他的身份藏得滴水不漏，我猜想。”

我开始察觉，这时候有许多人从四面八方挤过来，不但想看看我本人，更想顺便听听我们在谈什么。在这样的情况下，我不必期望麦克唐纳会说真话，所以我决定暂时搁下这个话题。事实上，我当时有个冲动，想要站起来喘口气，不过我还来不及动作，格雷森就面带笑容倾身向我说：“班克斯先生，我有件事想简单向您报告。是这样子，先生，我好荣幸能负责举办那个宴会。就是那个欢迎仪式。”

“格雷森先生，我实在不愿显得不知好歹，不过就像麦克唐纳先生刚刚说的，时间实在相当紧迫。而且我已经感受到太多热情的接待了，实在承担不起……”

“不，不，先生”——格雷森先生紧张地笑了笑——“我指的是另一个欢迎的仪式。我的意思是，欢迎令尊令堂历劫多年归来的那个。”

这点，我得承认，来得有点突然，也许有那么一秒我愣在那里瞪着他。他又紧张地笑笑，对我说：

“当然，现在还言之过早，这个我明白。还得等您破案呢。当然，我也不想先空欢喜一场。可是无论如何，您知道的，我们还是

义务准备。只要您一宣布破案，大家的目光都会投向我们工部局，期望我们举办一个场面配得上这事的典礼。他们会希望典礼能别出心裁，他们会希望愈快愈好。不过您知道的，先生，举办这种场面的活动，实在不简单。因此是这样子的，不知道可不可以先提几个概略的方案让您选择。我想先请教，先生，不知道您满不满意极司菲尔公园这个地点？是这样子，我们恐怕需要一个相当大的场地……”

格雷森说话的当儿，我渐渐听到某种声音——从宾客谈笑声后面的某处传来——那是远方的枪炮声。这时格雷森的话被一记撼动舞厅的轰然巨响打断。我紧张地抬起头来，却见四周宾客谈笑依旧，甚至欢笑，鸡尾酒杯还拿在手上。过了一会儿，我可以察觉人群往窗边移动，就好像是外头有一场板球赛又开局了似的。我决定逮住这个机会脱身，于是起身跟着大家移动。我前面挡了太多人，什么也看不到，我想办法往前钻，这时我听到身边有位鬓发斑白的老太太对我说话。

“班克斯先生，”她说，“您知不知道，您来了上海，大家都觉得救兵来了？当然，我们并不喜欢形之于色，可是我们实在好担心，哪”——她指向枪炮声的来处——“我丈夫，他坚称日本人不敢攻打公共租界。可是您知道吗，他一天至少要提个二十次，那一点也不会教人安心。告诉您，班克斯先生，您即将抵达的消息才传来，那可是我们这里几个月以来的第一个好消息。我丈夫甚至不再念经似的反复提说日本人呢，至少停了好几天。天哪！”

另一声雷霆般的巨响撼动舞厅，激起了几声倒彩。接着我发现离我不远处有几扇落地窗已经打开，大家挤到阳台上。

“别担心，班克斯先生，”有位年轻人说，抓住我的手肘，“那不可能炸到我们这里来。双方自从‘血腥星期一’之后，都极度小心。”

“不过这声音是从哪里来的？”我问他。

“哦，是从港湾里的日本战舰来的。实际上炮弹越过我们头顶上空，落在那条河的对岸。入夜以后，就壮观了。有点像流星雨。”

“万一落得近了呢？”

我这个想法，不仅让跟我说话的年轻人笑了，连我身边其他几个人也笑了一——我实在不该把心里的话说出来。接着有人说：“我们也只能信任日本人的射击技术啰。毕竟炸偏了，也可能炸到他们自己人。”

“班克斯先生，也许您需要这个。”

有人递上一只看歌剧的望远镜。我才接下，这动作就仿佛是一道指令，众人立刻让出一条路给我，我发现大家竟簇拥着我走向落地窗。

我踏上一座小阳台。一阵温暖的微风吹来，满天晚霞嫣红。我这里位置相当高，看得到另一排楼房外的运河。河的对岸是一大片低矮破旧的房子，有道灰色的烟柱从那儿升向夜空。

我把望远镜放到眼前，不过焦距不对，什么都看不见。我转了转调焦钮，发现我对准的是运河，看到的景象让我略感意外：河上各种船只竟然无视邻近的战斗，继续忙着日常事务。我对准某一艘船一类似舢板的小舟，上头只有船夫一人一船上堆满木箱与包裹，似乎钻不过我眼下这个低矮的运河桥洞。我看的时候，那条小船急速接近桥洞，我敢说至少堆在顶层的一两件一定会掉到水里。接下来的几秒，我透过望远镜盯着船，完全忘了战事。我注意到船夫跟我一样，全心关注着他货物的安危，完全无视他右方不到六十码处就有战斗在进行。接着船钻入桥底，等它顺畅地从另一头滑出，那些摇摇欲坠的货物一件也不少，我轻叹一声放下望远镜。

我发现我看船的时候，背后聚集了一大群人。我把望远镜递给旁人，没特别对谁说：“原来那就是战争。值得一看。伤亡情况不知道怎样，你们觉得呢？”

这个问题引发了许多回答。有人说：“闸北区死了一大堆人。不过日本佬再过几天就会把那儿攻下来，到时又会安静了。”

“还不一定呢，”另一个人又说，“国民党到目前为止的表现都很让人惊讶，我敢说他们会坚持下去。我敢说他们还可以撑上好一阵子。”

接着，我周遭每个人似乎都同时争论了起来。几天、几周，这有何不同呢？中国人迟早要投降，为什么不趁早呢？有几个人反对这看法，事情不可能这么简单干脆。情况天天在变，有许多因素都相互关联，牵一发动全局。

“再说，”有人大声问道，“班克斯先生不是来了吗？”

说这话的人显然自以为很有说服力，可这话却僵在半空中，让大家鸦雀无声，再度将所有的目光投向我。事实上，我发现不只是阳台附近的人群，而是整个舞厅里的人都静了下来，等着我回应。我灵机

一动，正好利用这个机会发表声明——也许在我踏进舞厅的那一刻，就有必要这么做——我清清喉咙，大声宣布：

“各位女士先生们，我看得出这里的情况陷入了困局。我也无意在这种时机带来虚假的期望。但是容我这么说：假如我没有信心能在不久的未来圆满地了结此案，我也不会来这里。事实上，女士们先生们，我觉得我不只是有信心而已。因此，容我请求各位在往后的一两个星期里耐心等待。之后再来看看我们做了多少事。”

我说完最后这些话，爵士乐队忽然在舞厅里演奏起来。我不确定这是否只是巧合，无论如何，倒给了我的演讲一个漂亮的结尾。我觉得舞厅内的目光渐渐从我身上移开，也看到大家都开始往厅内移动。我也往里头走，想办法找回原来那个桌位——有一会儿我有点迷失方向——发现一群舞娘已在舞池里载歌载舞。

舞娘也许多达二十名，许多都是欧亚混血，鸟形的服装极尽暴露之能事。舞娘翩翩起舞，尽管这片歌舞升平景象的背后杂音清晰可闻，然而大家似乎不再对一水之隔的战事感兴趣了。对这些人而言，这有如结束了一个节目，另一个又接着上场。我心里产生一股反感，自从抵达上海以后，这样的感觉已经不是第一次了。不只是因为这么些年来他们只会坐困愁城，面对难题束手无策，放任情况恶化到今天这种令人发指的地步，还衍生出许多盘根错节的难题。从我抵达的那一刻起，真正教我心里暗暗吃惊的是，这里每一个人都拒绝承认他们罪有应得。待在这里约两周的时间里，在我所接触的所有这些英国人当中，不论地位高低，我都还没遇到——一次也没有——有谁真心感到羞愧。换言之，在这里，在这个可能吞噬整个文明世界的大漩涡的涡眼里，大家在心照不宣中无耻可悲地集体否认现实，否认自身的责任，而这种行为转为自我封闭，变本加厉，以冠冕堂皇的自我保护表现于外，这是我经常碰到的情况。而现在眼前的这一群所谓上海的精英，如此不屑一顾地凝望他们的中国邻居在运河对岸受苦受难。

我沿着围观歌舞的人群背后走动，尽量把厌恶之情收藏起来，这时有人拉扯我的手臂，我转身一看，是莎拉。

“克里斯托弗，”她说，“我整晚想尽办法要挤到你身边。难道你没时间跟家乡来的朋友打个招呼吗？瞧，塞西尔在那里，他正在向你挥手呢。”

我花了一会儿工夫才在人群中找到塞西尔爵士；他独自坐在厅内远处角落里的桌位，果然在向我挥手。我也向他挥挥手，然后转向莎

拉。

这是我抵达后首次和她碰面。那天晚上她给我的印象是她过得非常不错；上海的阳光驱走了她惯有的苍白，让她显得脸色红润。而且，当我们问候交谈的时候，她的态度依然轻松自信。一直要到此刻，经历了昨晚的事件，我才又想起那夜首次碰面的情况，真不知道我怎么瞎了眼似的，没看出端倪。当然或许只是后见之明，才让我吹毛求疵地回想她的笑容有无异样，特别是提起塞西尔爵士的时候。而且，即使我们交谈的内容仅止于寒暄问候，经过昨夜的事，那天晚上她说了一句话——就算是当时，也已经让我略微一怔一直到今天还在我心头镇日萦绕。

我当时问她跟塞西尔爵士在这里的一年过得可愉快。她向我保证，尽管塞西尔爵士并未达成他预期的突破，但他的诸多努力依然赢得了上海各界的感激。就在这时候，我问了她一个问题，没什么特别用意：

“这么说，你们没有立即离开上海的打算啰？”

莎拉听了以后笑了出来，又往塞西尔爵士的方向凝望一眼，然后才说：“没有，我们现在安定得很。新城饭店非常舒适。我想我们近期内哪儿也不会去。除非有人来拯救我们，那就另当别论了。”

她说这些话的语气——包括最后说的拯救云云——尽管像是说笑，尽管我不清楚她话中是否有话，我还是浅笑了两声表示附和。那时候，就我记忆所及，我们转而聊起在英国共同的朋友，后来格雷森走过来，三言两语就打断了这场看似单纯的谈话。

如我所说，直到此刻，经历了昨夜的一切，我好像才开始追溯这三个星期跟莎拉几次碰面的情况，而每次回溯，最后都归结到莎拉的这句话，一句仿佛事后才在她愉快的回答里加上的话。

第十三章

昨天下午，我大半时间待在那艘昏暗、吱吱作响的船屋上，那三具尸体就是在那里发现的。警方十分尊重我希望不受打扰的调查方式，而这竟然让我忘了时间，几乎没注意到船外已然夕阳低垂。等我走过码头，沿着南京路逛去，灯火都已点亮，人行道上挤满晚间出游的人。经过沉闷的一整天，我觉得我得放松一下，于是走向南京路与江西路转角的一个小俱乐部——我刚到的那几天，有人带我去过。那里没有什么特别之处，只是一所清静的地下室，通常晚上会有一位法国籍的钢琴师在那儿忧郁地诠释比才或者格什温。不过这恰好符合我的需要，几个星期以来我去了好几次。昨夜我在角落的桌位待了约一个钟头，吃了一点法国菜，把船屋里的发现做成笔记，那时有几位职业舞女跟着客人随乐起舞。

我爬上楼梯回到街上，准备回旅馆，却跟俄籍的门房聊了起来。他是某某伯爵，英语非常流利，据他说，是革命以前家庭女教师教的。我已习惯每次到这家俱乐部就跟他聊个几句，昨夜只是照旧——我不记得我们在讨论什么——他随口提到塞西尔爵士与他夫人当晚早些才来过。

“我猜想，”我说，“今晚他们不会在家啰。”

关于这点，伯爵想了一会儿才说：“‘鸿运宫’。没错，我相信塞西尔爵士提到这个地方，他们就是去那儿。”

那地方我并不知道，不过，伯爵不等我问就自动把地点告诉了我，由于不远，我就往那里走去。

他把路说得十分清楚，不过我对南京路附近的街巷还是很生疏，结果在路上有点迷失。对此我并不太在意。这一带市区的气氛还不算糟，即使入夜也还好，尽管有个怪模怪样的乞丐上前向我讨食，走到另一处，还有个醉酒的水手与我撞个正着，但我还是轻松平静地跟着夜游的人群闲逛。在船屋上辛苦了一天，能加入不同种族、阶级寻欢作乐的人潮，能在经过每一个灯火通明的门口时，闻到菜肴与焚香的气味，我的心情也轻松了起来。

昨夜，我相信我跟平常一样四下张望，如同我近日逐渐习惯的那样，用目光梭巡往来行人的脸孔，希望能发现秋良的踪影。事实上，

我几乎确定我才抵达上海不久就看到过他——大约是到这里的第二或第三天晚上。正是那夜，怡和洋行的凯瑟克先生与其他几位城里的显赫人物力邀我“尝试夜生活”。我当时还在调适期间，觉得舞厅俱乐部一间间逛下来好不累人。我们到了法国租界的风化区——这时我看得出来，我这几位东道主带我来这些灯红酒绿的地方，就是想看我大惊小怪的样子——正当我们走出一家酒店时，我看到秋良的脸孔在人群里闪过。

他夹杂在一群衣着时髦的日本人当中，显然是到城里去玩。当然，如此惊鸿一瞥——他的身影事实上是一排门廊上的灯光所衬托出来的剪影——我无法完全肯定那就是秋良。也许为了这个原因，也许为了别的，我没有做任何举动来引起老友的注意。这也许难以理解，但我只能说，事情就是这样。我猜想，我当时以为这种机会还多的是；也许我觉得那样子见面，纯靠巧合，两人都各自跟友人在一起，并不适当——更配不上我对这场久别重逢的多年期盼。总之，我让时机溜走，只跟着凯瑟克先生和其他人走向等候的轿车。

然而，在过去这几周里，我有许多理由教我后悔那夜未能及时行动。尽管在最忙碌的时候，我也不停在人群中、在街上或各个旅馆的大厅里搜寻他的身影，但仍然不见他的踪迹。我明白我可以采取更积极的步骤把他找出来；可惜此刻案情才是第一要务。再说上海也没多大；迟早会再次邂逅吧。

言归正传，谈谈昨夜发生的事。我依门房所说的路，最后走到一个广场，是几条街巷的交汇处，这里的人潮再拥挤不过了。有人在这儿卖东西，有人乞讨，也有人只是站着聊天、张望。有辆落单的黄包车刚才钻进人潮，现在困在其中动弹不得，我经过的时候，车夫正在跟路人愤怒地争吵。我看见鸿运宫就在远处转角上，不久便有人引领我走上铺了猩红色长毛地毯的狭窄楼梯。

我先进入一个房间，大小跟一般旅馆的房间差不多，里头有十几个中国人围着一张赌桌。我询问塞西尔爵士是否在此处，两个在那儿做事的人迅速地讨论了一会儿，其中一位招手要我跟着他走。

我上了另一层楼，走过一条幽暗的走廊，接着进入一个烟雾弥漫的房间，里头有一群法国人在打牌。我摇了摇头，那人却耸耸肩，又跟我示意要我跟上。如此，我很快就看出这是家不小的赌场，里头有无数个小房间，不时进行各种赌局。可是我渐渐受不了每次我重提莎拉或塞西尔爵士，我的向导就点点头，一副懂我意思的样子，却又带我到另一个烟雾弥漫的房间，里头只有陌生人抬头对我投以狐疑的眼

神。总之，我把这里摸得愈熟，我就愈觉得塞西尔爵士不可能带莎拉来这种地方；正当我要放弃的时候，我走进了一个房间，看到塞西尔爵士坐在桌边，瞪着一座轮盘。

在场约有二十个人，大半是男士。这里的烟没有别的房间浓，只是更热些。塞西尔爵士一心全在赌局上，只对我胡乱挥个手，两只眼睛就又转回去盯着轮盘。排列在房内四边的是包覆红色布料的扶手椅，其中一张座椅上有位中国老先生一穿着西装，满身是汗一在那儿打鼾熟睡。上头也坐着人的椅子，只有另外一张，放在距离赌桌最远的阴暗角落，上面坐的正是莎拉，她以掌心支颐，双眸半阖。

我在她身边坐下时，她吓了一跳。“噢，克里斯托弗。你在这儿干什么？”

“我只是路过。实在抱歉。我无意惊吓你。”

“只是路过？这种地方？我才不信。你尾随我们？”

我们压低声音讲话，免得惊动桌上赌客。楼房里不知何处传来练习喇叭的乐声。

“我必须承认，”我说，“我碰巧听说你来这里。而且我也路过……”

“唉，克里斯托弗，没人陪你。”

“不是这样。不过我今天有点闷，我想放松一下，如此而已。不过我得承认，假如我知道你在这种地方，我就拿不定主意要不要跟来了。”

“别刻薄了。塞西尔跟我喜欢过这种放荡的生活。有趣得很。这也是上海魅力的一部分。瞧你泄气的样子。看来你的案子没有什么进展。”

“进展是没有，我倒没泄气。案情正逐渐明朗。”

我开始跟她谈我趴在破旧的船屋里，耗了两个多钟头做了什么事，身旁还躺了三具腐烂的尸体，她皱起眉头，要我别说。

“真是恐怖极了。今天打网球的时候，有人说死者的手臂跟腿都被砍掉了，是真的吗？”

“恐怕是如此。”

她又皱起眉头。“真是恐怖得无法用言语形容。可是那都是些工厂的中国工人，对吧？说真的，他们不太可能跟你……你父母有关联吧？”

“事实上，我相信这件凶案跟我父母的失踪案有极大的牵连。”

“真的？在网球俱乐部那里，人家都说这些凶案是什么‘黄鼠行动’的一部分。他们说受害者是跟‘黄鼠’最亲、最近的人。”

“‘黄蛇’。”

“什么？”

“是共产党中的告密者。是蛇，不是鼠。”

“哦，没错。不管是哪个，都可怕极了。中国人在干什么，大敌当前，还这样杀得你死我活？你总以为红军跟国民政府好歹会联合起来对抗日本人，至少也可以多争取一点时间。”

“我猜想共产党跟国民党之间的仇恨非常深。”

“塞西尔也是这么说。唉，瞧他，赌成那副德性。”

我顺着她的目光看去，只见塞西尔爵士——他背对着我们一瘫向一侧，身体几乎全靠桌子撑着，看起来似乎随时会从椅子上滑下来。

莎拉看看我，脸上有些尴尬。她接着便站起来走过去，双手各扶一肩，轻声在他耳边说话。塞西尔爵士醒来，向身旁看了看。也许那时候我碰巧把视线转开了，因为我一点也不确定接下来发生了什么事。我只看到莎拉往后踉跄了几步，仿佛有人打她，有那么一秒仿佛就要摔倒在地，不过她又及时站稳。等我细看塞西尔爵士，他又坐正了，专注于赌局，我不敢确定是他让莎拉险些跌倒。

她看见我注视着她，笑了笑，又回到我身边坐下。

“他累了，”她说，“他精力真是吓人。可是在这个年纪，他实在应该多休息才是。”

“你们俩常来这里吗？”

她点头。“还有其他几个类似的地方。塞西尔不喜欢那些金碧辉煌的场所。他觉得在那种地方别想赢钱。”

“他出入这些场所，你都跟着吗？”

“总要有人照顾他吧。他不年轻啰。再说，我觉得还好。而且还有点刺激呢。这不就是上海该有的样子吗？”

赌桌那里大家齐声叹息，赌客们三三两两聚在一起讲话。我看见塞西尔爵士想站起来，这时候我才明白他醉得多厉害。他垮回椅子上，但他又试了一次，挣扎着站了起来，蹒跚走向我们。我起身准备与他握手，不过他把手扶在我肩膀上，大概只是怕站不稳跌倒而已，他说：

“小兄弟，小兄弟，很高兴见到你。”

“刚才手气怎么样？”

“手气？唉，背死了。今晚运气糟透了。这要命的一整个星期都背，背，背透了。不过谁知道呢？说不定我还可以东山再起，哈！哈！从灰烬里重生。”

莎拉也站了起来，伸手要扶他，不过他没瞧她一眼，就把她的手拨开，然后又对着我说：

“怎么样，喝杯鸡尾酒去？楼下有个酒吧。”

“您实在太客气了，先生。不过我真的得回旅馆了。明天还有得忙。”

“能看到你努力工作真好。当然，我来上海就是要有所作为。不过，你明白——”他倾身把脸凑近，直到离我只有一两寸的距离——“这实在太难了，我没办法，小兄弟，太难了。”

“塞西尔，亲爱的，我们回家吧。”

“家？你把那鼠窝般的旅馆房间叫家？有一点你比我强，老婆，你是个乞丐婆。所以你不在于。”

“我们走吧，亲爱的，我累了。”

“你累了。我的小乞丐婆累了。班克斯，你外头有车吗？”

“恐怕没有。不过我可以帮您叫计程车。”

“计程车？你以为这里是皮卡迪利广场吗？你想叫车就有车吗？马上就有人把你宰了哟，这些中国人。”

“塞西尔，亲爱的，请你先坐坐，让克里斯托弗帮我们把鲍里斯找来。”接着她对我说：“我们的司机应该就在附近。真是太麻烦你

了。可怜的塞西尔，磨了一整晚，有点累坏了。”

我尽量保持愉快的样子走出楼房，暗记怎么回到这个房间。外头的广场依旧人潮汹涌，可是再过去一点，有条街上有成排的黄包车与汽车在等候。我挤了过去，沿路对汽车里各种国籍都有的司机说塞西尔爵士的名字，最后终于有一位有反应。

等我回到赌场，莎拉跟塞西尔爵士已经站在门口，她双手搀扶着他，不过他高大倾斜的身躯看起来好像随时都会压垮她。我连忙赶上去，听到他说：

“他们不喜欢的是你呀，老婆。我以前自己来的时候，他们总是待我如皇亲国戚。没错，像皇亲国戚。他们不喜欢你这种女人。他们只要真正的淑女，没有淑女妓女也行。你两者皆非。所以你明白吧，他们一点也不喜欢你。我在这里从来没碰过麻烦，直到你硬要跟着我来。”

“走吧，亲爱的。克里斯托弗来了。辛苦你了，克里斯托弗。亲爱的，你看，他帮我们把鲍里斯找来了。”

那里离新城饭店没多远，可是汽车在人潮与黄包车阵中，往往移动得比走路还慢。在路上，莎拉一直挽着塞西尔爵士的手臂，他则时睡时醒。每次他醒来，就想把莎拉甩开，而她则笑脸相迎，在忽动忽停的汽车里把他牢牢挽住。

穿过饭店的旋转门时，换我上场来扶他，莎拉跟旅馆大厅里的侍者高兴地寒暄，我便搀扶着他走到电梯。我们终于到了梅德赫斯特夫妇的套房，我这才放开塞西尔爵士，让他在扶手椅上坐下。

我原以为他会昏睡过去，谁知道他突然醒了，问我一些没头没脑的问题，听来实在不知所云。这时候莎拉从浴室走出来，拿着一块法兰绒巾，替他擦拭前额，他对我说：

“班克斯，小兄弟，你坦白跟我说无妨。这个小妞。你也看得出来，比我年轻许多。但她也不是什么青春玉女，你不介意吧？哈、哈！总之，她就是小我好多岁数。你坦白告诉我，小兄弟，你觉得，在今晚那种地方，你找到我们的地方，像那种地方，你觉得不认识的人看到我们两个在一起……哪，我们打开天窗说亮话！我问你的是，别人会不会以为我太太是什么风尘女子？”

就我所见，莎拉的表情并没有改变，尽管她服侍塞西尔爵士的动作里多了一丝急迫，仿佛她希望她的照料能改变他的情绪。塞西尔爵

士摇着头，好像在躲苍蝇似的，然后又说：

“怎么，小兄弟。坦白告诉我吧。”

“别这样，亲爱的，”莎拉平静地说，“你可要惹人嫌啰。”

“让我告诉你一个秘密，小兄弟。让我告诉你一个秘密。我有点喜欢这样呢。我喜欢别人以为我太太是风尘女子。所以我才喜欢常去今晚我们去的那种地方。别碰我！别烦我们行吗！”他把莎拉推开，然后继续说，“我去的其他理由，当然你猜着了，是我欠了点钱。背了一点债，就这样。没有什么我赢不回来，这不用说。”

“亲爱的，人家克里斯托弗真是好心，你可别烦了人家。”

“荡妇说话了？听到她说什么了没，小兄弟？哪，你别听。别听她的话。别听这小淫妇说什么，这是我的看法。她们会让你迷失。特别是在战争与动乱的年头。战争的年头千万别听小淫妇的话。”

他自己站了起来，有一会儿当着我们的面，在房里摇摇晃晃，解开的衣领从脖子边翘了起来。接着他走进卧室，把门关上。

莎拉对我一笑，便跟了过去。若不是因为这一笑一或者该说我察觉了笑容背后似乎隐藏着某种请求——我必然当时就告辞了。于是我留在房内，心不在焉地欣赏入口处矮几上的一只中国瓷碗。有一会儿，我听见塞西尔爵士在叫骂，接着就没了声音。

大约又过了五分钟莎拉才出来，看到我没走，脸上有意外之色。

“他还好吗？”我问。

“现在睡着了。明天就没事了。真是麻烦你了，克里斯托弗。晚上你来找我们，大概绝没想到会是这般光景。我们得想个办法来补偿你。我们请你到哪儿吃顿晚饭吧。礼查饭店的菜不错哦。”

她送我出门，可是到了门边，我回头问她说：

“这种事，常发生吗？”

她叹了口气。“再常不过了。不过你别以为我会介意。我只是有时候会担心罢了。他的心脏不好，你知道吗。所以我现在才寸步不离。”

“你把他照顾得很好。”

“你可别误会了。塞西尔人很好。我们得尽快请你这顿饭。等你不忙啰。不过我想你总是很忙。”

“塞西尔爵士晚上都这么过吗？”

“大部分晚上。有时候白天也是。”

“有没有什么我可以帮得上忙的地方？”

“帮得上忙？”她轻轻笑了一声，“你听我说，克里斯托弗，我没事。真的，你可别错看了塞西尔。他人很好。而我……我好爱他。”

“那么，我就先告辞了。”

她向我走近几步，似有若无地伸出手。我发现我握住她的手，一时还弄不清楚下一步该怎么做，便吻了她的手背，接着口中咕哝了声再会，就走到外头的走廊上去了。

“你不用为我担心，克里斯托弗，”她在门边轻声低诉，“我什么事也没有。”

那是昨晚她对我说的话。可是今天，萦绕心头挥之不去的，却是她更久以前说过的话，那是三个星期以前，我初次在汇中饭店舞厅里听她说的。“我想我们近期内哪儿也不会去，”她当时说，“除非有人来拯救我们，那就另当别论了。”她那天晚上跟我说这句话到底有什么用意？我也说了，当下一听，我就已经觉得不对劲，我本来还可以再多问出一些东西，都怪在那一刻，格雷森从人群里冒出来找我。

第五部

一九三七年九月二十九日·上海·华懋饭店

第十四章

早上我在英国领事馆与麦克唐纳先生的会面，我并没有处理得宜，今晚回想起来只让我充满挫折感。事实上他早已成竹在胸，而我却还没准备好。一次又一次，我让他引导我走寻假目标，浪费精力于争论一些他最初就决定透露给我的情报。甚至可以说，四周前在汇中饭店的那晚，我第一次提出要跟“黄蛇”会面的想法，那时我反倒把他看得更透彻。我袭其不备，至少让他明明白白地透露了他在上海真正扮演的角色。然而今天早上，我甚至没法逼他脱去那身假称自己只是一个礼宾司官员的蹩脚伪装。

我想我低估了他。我只想到要上他的办公室，责备他为何我要求安排的事情进度如此缓慢，我以为这样就好了。到现在我才看清他如何设下陷阱，我才明白自己一旦急躁，他就可以轻易占到上风。我那样表现自己的不悦，实属不智；不过这连续几天的繁重工作也确实让我疲惫不堪。当然，我上楼找麦克唐纳时，跟那个工部局代表格雷森不期而遇，这件事也有关系。事实上，我觉得这件事影响之大更甚于其他事情，让我在那个早上失控，害我接下来跟麦克唐纳讨论的时候，心思却系在别处。

他们请我到领事馆二楼的小休息室，让我等了好几分钟，秘书才来通知我麦克唐纳先生准备好了，于是我走过铺着大理石地砖的楼梯口，到了电梯门边，格雷森这时却急急忙忙从楼梯跑下来唤住我。

“早安，班克斯先生！实在抱歉，也许我来得不是时候。”

“早安，格雷森先生。老实说，是不理想。我才要上楼看我们的朋友麦克唐纳先生。”

“既然如此，我就不耽误您的时间。我只是碰巧在这里，而我又听说您刚好也在这里。”他开心的笑声在大楼里回荡。

“真高兴再见到您，只是现在……”

“只要一下子就好了，先生。容我直言，您最近实在很难找。”

“好吧，格雷森先生，如果能尽快的话。”

“很快，很快。是这样子，先生，我明白现在提有点言之过早，不过这种事总是要提早着手进行才好。万一这么重大的活动安排上有

了闪失，万一办得寒酸了或是办差了……”

“格雷森先生……”

“对不起。我只是恳请您考虑关于欢迎仪式的一些细节。我们已经说好拿极司菲尔公园做会场。我们会搭个有舞台的大帐篷，并且装设扩音系统……对不起，我会尽量讲重点。班克斯先生，我真的想跟您讨论您在整个仪式的过程里扮演的角色。我们觉得整个仪式应该从简。我的设想是，也许您可以简单谈一下您是怎么破案的。是哪些关键线索让您好不容易找到令尊令堂等等这类事情。几句话就好了，底下的人会想听的。再来，您演讲完了，我想他们可能会想上台来。”

“他们？格雷森先生？”

“令尊令堂呀，先生。我的主意是不妨让他们站到台上，向群众挥手，接受群众欢呼，然后退场。不过，这当然只是我个人的拙见。我想说您一定有更高明的建议……”

“没有，没有，格雷森先生”——我忽然觉得一股倦意袭上身来——“您说的都很好，很好。现在如果没别的事，我真的得……”

“只剩一件，先生。有件小事，不过却可以带来极大的效果，假如配合得恰到好处。我的想法是令尊令堂走上讲台的那一刻，管乐队就开始演奏。也许可以演奏《希望与荣耀的土地》这类曲目。我有些同事并不喜欢这个想法，可是在我看来……”

“格雷森先生，您的想法听起来真不错。而且我也很荣幸您对我能破案有绝对的信心。不过实在很不好意思，我让麦克唐纳先生等太久了。”

“当然。那么谢谢您花这么多宝贵的时间跟我说话。”

我按了电梯钮，等候时格雷森依旧在我身后徘徊。我已经转身背对着他，面向电梯的门，却听到他说：

“只剩一件事我想请教，班克斯先生。典礼那天令尊令堂的住处，不知道您有没有什么高见？是这样，我们得确定往返会场的途中，他们可以尽量不要受到群众的干扰。”

我记不得我回答了什么。也许电梯门这时候正好打开，我恰好逮住机会，随口礼貌地应声话便告退了。不过正是最后这个问题，在会见麦克唐纳的时候从头到尾萦绕在我的心头，也可能是这个问题，如

我所说，更甚于其他因素，让我无法把当时面对的事情想清楚。而今晚，当白天的事务都过去了，我发现这个问题又浮上心头。

我并非没想过我父母究竟要安置在何处。只不过这点对我而言，总是显得言之过早——甚至是“空欢喜一场”——案情还杂乱如麻，尚待厘清，何必在这时就做成功的假想。我想，在过去这几个星期里，只有那么一次，我好好思考了这个问题，那就是我巧遇老同窗安东尼·摩根的那天晚上。

当时我到此地还没多久——第三夜或第四夜吧。之前好一阵子我就已经听说摩根住在上海，不过由于我在圣邓斯坦跟他从来没有特别的交情——除了我们一直是同班同学——所以我没有特别花工夫找他碰面。不过第三天早上，我接到他打来的电话。我听得出他有点不高兴我没找他，谈到最后，我答应当晚到法租界一家旅馆跟他见面。

我在灯光昏暗的旅馆会客厅看到他的时候，天已经黑了。毕业以后我就再没见过他的人，看他变得苍老肥胖让我吃了一惊。不过我们亲切寒暄时，我尽量不在说话的声音里泄漏这个看法。

“真奇怪，”他说，拍拍我的背，“好像才没多久。不过从某些方面看来，却又恍如隔世。”

“确实如此。”

“你知道吗，”他继续说，“前一阵子，我收到了丹麦佬埃默里克的信。记得他吧？丹麦佬埃默里克！多少年没他消息了！看起来，他现在是在住维也纳。老埃。你记得他吧？”

“当然记得，”我说，尽管我心中只能唤起某个男孩的模糊印象，“老埃这家伙！”

接下来约莫半个钟头，摩根的嘴巴几乎没阖过。牛津毕业后，他直接到香港，然后十一年前在怡和洋行谋得一职便搬到上海。后来他搁下自己的故事，提起别的事：

“自从这里不太平了，你不会相信，我为司机的事伤透了脑筋。原来当班的在日本人轰炸的时候炸死了。再找了一个，竟然是个混混。不时就说帮派里有事就跑掉，每次要出门都找不到人。有一次他到美国人的俱乐部接我，满身都是血，别人的血。连句抱歉也没说，中国人都是这样。我受够了。可是接下来的两个，根本不会开车。有

一个还撞上黄包车，把车夫撞成重伤。我现在雇的这个也好不到哪里去，所以让我们先祷告我们能平安到达。”

我完全不明白他指的是什么，因为我记得那天晚上我并没有说要跟他去别的地方。不过我并不想挑他话里的毛病，他马上又转到别的事上头，告诉我旅馆所受的物资短缺之苦。他透露说，我们见面的那个大厅原先灯光没那么暗：战争让闸北区的工厂没法送灯泡过来，旅馆里有些地方，客人还得摸黑。他还指着厅里另一头为舞客演奏的乐队里，至少有三位乐师只是在装模作样。

“他们其实是门房。真正的乐师有的早已逃离上海，有的被战斗波及而丧命。尽管如此，他们装得还满不赖的，对不对？”

经他一挑出来，我看了看，装得实在一点都不像。有一位满脸写着无聊，连琴弓都没靠在小提琴上；有一位只是茫茫然握着竖笛，张着嘴巴，瞪着周遭正牌的乐师，心里不知道在想什么。等我夸他知道这么多内幕消息，他才告诉我，其实他在那里已经住了一个月，因为他在虹桥区的寓所太靠近战区，住不安稳。我为他必须放弃住所表达了同情之意，他的情绪忽然一变，我第一次看到他流露出忧伤的神情，让我想起昔日同班那个抑郁孤单的男孩。

“那里也算不上家就是了，”他说，眼睛看着手上的鸡尾酒，“里头只有我，还有来来去去的用人。老实说，不过是个又破又窄的屋子。怕被战火波及——那只是个借口，让我有个好理由把它丢开。这个又破又窄的屋子。家具全是中国式的。坐哪里都不舒服。养过一只画眉，可是后来死了。我住这里比较好。离交际场所近多了。”他接着看看表，把饮料喝光，又说，“哪，别让他们等。车子就在外头。”

摩根的态度里有个微妙的地方——他催得理所当然，让人不知道要怎么拒绝。再说，那时候我才来不久，习惯让不同活动的东道主接来带去。因此我跟着摩根走出屋子，不久就跟他并排坐在他的汽车后座，驶过法租界热闹的夜生活区。

才开车，司机就以毫发之差，闪过迎面驶来的电车，我以为这又要让摩根唠叨找不到好司机的问题。可是他现在忙着想心事，静静凝视车窗外飞过的霓虹灯和中文招牌。路上我问他一个问题，想套出他要带我去的地方：“你不觉得我们会迟到？”他看了看表，漫不经心地回答：“他们都等这么久了，不会介意再多等几分钟的。”接着他又补上一句，“你一定觉得很奇怪。”

之后车子又走了一阵子，我们几乎没有交谈。车子一度转向一条小街，两侧的人行道上挤满窝在一起的身影。在街灯下，我看到他们或坐或蹲或睡倒在地，相互挤靠在一起，街心只留下足以通行车辆的空间。这些人老少都有一我看到婴儿在母亲怀里睡觉——他们的财产全放在身边：破烂的布包、鸟笼，有的还有推车，上头堆满了家当。这样的景象我已经看惯了，不过那天晚上我看得心里很沮丧。那些脸孔大半是中国人，不过到了街尾，我看到成群的欧洲小孩——我猜是俄国人。

“从运河北岸来的难民。”摩根面无表情地说，然后面向他处。他自己也算是半个难民，对于情况更凄惨的同类，竟然一点也未能感同身受。有一次我们甚至辗过一个像是睡在地上的身形，我紧张地回头张望，我的伙伴随口说了一声：“别担心。可能只是件旧行李罢了。”

我们又沉默了几分钟，他笑了一声，吓了我一跳。“同窗岁月，”他说，“全涌上心头。那段日子还不赖，我想。”

我瞄了他一眼，发现他已泪水盈眶。接着他说：

“你知道吗，我们俩该团结起来。两只可怜的孤鸟。就这么说定了。你和我，我们该团结在一起。真不懂那时候怎么不呢？早团结在一起，我们就不会沦落至此。”

我吃惊地转向他。他的脸上光影流动，心思不知已飘到哪个遥远的地方。

如我前面所说，我清楚记得安东尼·摩根在学校时代就是一副“孤僻可怜虫”的模样。大家倒也没有特别去欺负他或寻他开心；其实，就我所知，是摩根自己很早以前就把这样的角色模式往自己身上套。他总是宁可独行，落在大伙一群人后面几码远；晴朗的夏日也不出来跟大家玩耍，却独自躲在屋里，在笔记本上涂鸦解闷。这些往事清晰如昨。事实上，那天晚上，我在昏暗的旅馆大厅一看到他，心中立刻想起大家穿过那个方形的院子，从美术教室走到回廊时，他闷闷不乐，在众人后方独行的身影。不过，他也把我认做可以跟他结交拜把的“孤僻可怜虫”，这倒是让我吃了一惊，我愣了一会儿才明白，这不过是摩根在自欺欺人罢了——一极可能是多年前他创造的东西，好让那段黯淡的岁月多少还值得回忆。我也说了，我并没有马上想到这上头，现在回想起来，我觉得我当时的反应恐怕有点迟钝。因为我记得我说了类似这样的话：

“你一定把我想成别人了，老兄。我敢说你想的是毕格瓦这家伙。艾德里安·毕格瓦。他确实不太跟别人往来。”

“毕格瓦？”摩根想了想，接着摇摇头，“我记得这家伙。有点肥胖，还有一对招风耳？好个毕格瓦。真是。可是我想的不是他。”

“反正也不是我，老哥。”

“这就奇怪了。”他又摇摇头，接着转头望着车窗。

我也把头转开，凝视夜晚的街景好一会儿。我们又回到繁华的风化区，我双眼梭巡来往路人的面孔，希望能看到秋良。接着我们到了住宅区，到处都是围篱与树木，不久，司机把车子开进一栋大宅的院子里。

摩根匆忙下了车。我也跟着下车——司机一点也没有想帮我拉开车门的样子——跟着他走上一条绕到屋后的砾石小径。我以为会有一个盛大的欢迎会，但看来似乎没有这回事；房子大半没有点灯，而且院子里除了我们的车子，只停了另外一辆。

摩根显然很熟悉这里的环境，引我走到一处边门，门的两侧是高大的灌木。他门铃也没摁就把门打开，带我走了进去。

门一开，里头是一道宽敞的走廊，烛光照着廊道。我往前凝视，约略看得出陈旧的画卷、高大的瓷花瓶、漆饰百屉柜。空气闻起来——焚香的气味混着排泄物的味道——有一种奇特温馨的感觉。

仆人没出现，屋子的主人也没出现。我的伙伴一直站在我身边，一言不发。过了一会儿，我想到一点，他是不是在等我对这里的环境发表看法。于是我说：

“我对中国艺术品所知有限。但就算在我这个外行人看来，也看得出我们身边这些东西应该都是精品。”

摩根睁大了眼吃惊地看我。接着他耸耸肩说：“你说的应该没错。我们进去吧。”

他带我往屋子更深处走去。有几步路我们完全摸黑，接着我听到有人说华语，看到某个遮有珠帘的门廊上有灯光。我们穿过珠帘，又推开布帘，才进入一处宫灯、烛火通明的温暖房间。

那个晚上接下来的事我还记得多少呢？往事在心里已经有点模糊，且让我试着把事情拼凑出最完整的面貌。进了房间，我第一个想法是，我们打搅了别人家的喜事。我瞥见一张摆满菜肴的大桌子，桌

边围坐了八九个人。房里全是中国人，最年轻的两位一二十多岁的年轻人一着西式服装，其他则着传统服装。有位老太太坐在桌子的一端，吃饭的时候有仆人服侍。有位年长的绅士——以东方人的体格来看，算是出奇的高大宽胖——我想是一家之长，我们一到他就立刻站起来，此时在场的其他男性成员也都跟着起立。不过在这时候，这里的人给我的印象仍旧朦胧，因为房间本身很快就抢走了我所有的注意力。

天花板高悬在横梁上。越过用餐的人望去，就在他们的正后方，有个仿佛戏台的东西，护栏上还挂了一串纸灯笼。房内吸引我目光的，就是这个地方。此时我越过桌面凝视着那个戏台模样的东西，几乎没听到主人欢迎的话。因为，我忽然明白了：我在这个房间的整个后半截，其实正是我上海故居的门厅。

显然这么多年来，这地方已经改装得面目全非。别的不说，我就怎么也厘不清楚，刚才摩根带我走进屋子的路，跟我家以前的旧厅堂有什么关系。不过后头的那个戏台倒是跟从前那座大圆弧阶梯顶上的平台若合符节。

我往前晃了几步，然后可能在那里站了好一会儿，凝视着那个戏台，用目光回溯那些阶梯以前依循的弧线。一阶阶的楼梯在心中找回，往事也回到眼前：小时候曾经有段日子，我喜欢高速冲下这座大圆弧梯，在最后两三阶的地方飞跃起来——通常还拍动双臂——降落在不远处的长沙发深处。父亲每次看到都笑了起来；母亲与梅俐则不能苟同。没错，母亲虽然从来不曾清楚地解释这样做哪里不对，但她总是警告我如果恶习不改，就要把那张长沙发搬走。有一次，我已八岁大，歇停了几个月以后，我再度重施故技，发现那长沙发再也承受不了我的体重。沙发的一头完全垮下，害我滚到地板上，吓坏了我。我记得就在下一刻，母亲从阶梯走下来，出现在我身后，我正准备让她狠狠痛骂一顿。母亲的身影缓缓逼近，最后她竟然笑了起来。“看看你自己的脸，小海雀！”她大笑，“该拿面镜子给你照照！”

我一点伤也没有，母亲却大笑不止——也许我害怕责骂还在后头——于是把脚踝的不适尽量夸大。母亲这才没再大笑，温柔地拉我起来。我记得她扶着我慢慢在门厅里绕着走，一只手臂搭在我肩上，说着：“现在好一点了没有？走一走就会好。瞧，没事了。”

我从来没有为这件事挨过骂；几天之后，我发现长沙发已经修好；尽管我还是略过底部的两三阶一跃而下，却再也没试过直接跳进那沙发窝里去了。

我在厅里绕了几步，想推算出那张沙发原先放置的确切位置。如此推算着，我才发现这里原来的样子我只能唤起极为模糊的印象——尽管那丝质沙发布的触感还历历如昨。

绕了半晌，我才想起厅内还有其他人，也发现他们都面带笑容看着我。摩根与年长的中国人悄悄交谈。摩根见我转回身来，便往前跨了一步，清了清喉咙开始帮大家介绍。

他显然熟识这家人，每个人的姓名都如数家珍。介绍到谁，谁便点头微笑。桌子尽头的老太太，摩根介绍时格外尊敬，只有她依旧淡淡地凝视着我。这家姓林——除此之外，名字我一个也没记得——这时候，便由林老先生上场了，也就是年长的那位身材肥壮的绅士。

“我相信，先生您重回旧地，”林老先生的英语里，只有些微的中国腔，“一定觉得十分温馨。”

“没错，确实如此。”我浅浅一笑，“没错。但也觉得有点陌生呢。”

“那当然，”林老先生说，“就当做是自己家罢。摩根先生说您已用过餐。不过您也看得出我们为您备了点粗茶淡饭。我们不知道您喜不喜欢中国菜，因此向我们的英国邻居借了他的厨师。”

“可是班克斯先生说不定不饿。”

这是其中一个穿西式服装的年轻人说的话。他转向我继续说：“祖父还是挺古板的。要是客人不领情，他会很生气。”年轻人对长者粲然而笑，“您可别任他摆布，班克斯先生。”

“我孙子认为我是个古板的中国人。”林老先生说，向我走近，脸上始终挂着笑容，“事实上，我在上海出生长大，就在公共租界里。家父家母被迫逃离慈禧太后的魔掌，在这里寻求庇护，躲在这个外国人的城市里，我可以说彻头彻尾都是上海人。我这个孙子根本不知道，在真正的中国，生活是什么样子。说我古板！咱们别理他，先生。在这屋子里，不必担心那些繁文缛节。如果您不饿，但说无妨。我不会逼您吃的。”

“您真是太客气了。”我说，也许有点心不在焉，因为我其实还在打量这屋子到底有什么改变。

忽然老太太以中文说了些什么。刚才跟我说话的年轻人听了之后对我说：

“祖母说她以为您永远不会来了。她等了好久。现在见到了您的人，她很高兴您来到这里。”

他还没翻译完，老太太又开始说话。这次，她说完的时候，年轻人却沉默了一会儿。他望着祖父，仿佛寻求什么指示，接着似乎心下有了主意。

“请您多包涵我祖母，”他说，“她有时候有点古怪。”

老太太也许懂得这两句英语，她不耐烦地指指她的孙子要他翻译出来。年轻人推托不了，叹了口气说：“她说今晚您还没到之前，她怨您。也就是说，她气您要我们的家，从我们手上夺回去。”

我望着年轻人，心里觉得很困惑，不过老太太又开口了。

“她说，有好长一段日子，”她孙子继续翻译，“也希望您永远不要回来。她相信这个家现在属于我家族。不过，今晚她见到您本人，看到您眼中的情感，她可以理解了。她现在衷心认为那桩协议是对的。”

“协议？这，想必……”

这句话我留在嘴里没说完。我当时虽不明就里，但是当年轻人翻译他祖母的话时，我渐渐想起一些模糊的往事，好像有这么一桩关于这栋老宅子还有我重返家园的协议。不过如我所说，这件事在我记忆里非常模糊，我暗忖此时若讨论这个问题，只会自讨没趣。总之，就在这时候，林老先生说：

“我们真是不体贴班克斯先生。瞧我们这样拉着人家讲话，其实他一定很想再看看这栋房子呢。”接着他转向我，以亲切的笑容对我说：“跟我来，先生。待会儿要跟大伙聊天的话，时间还很多呢。这边请，容我带路。”

第十五章

接下来的几分钟，我跟着林老先生在屋里到处走。尽管主人年事已高，却一点都不显衰老；肥壮的身躯动作起来还十分稳健，有时虽然会慢下来，却也不曾停步喘气。我跟随着他的黑色长袍与窸窣作响的便鞋声，在狭窄的楼梯登上爬下，屋子深处的走廊，往往只点着一盏宫灯。他带我穿过一些没有家具只见蛛网四布的地方，行经无数排列整齐、装在木箱里的米酿酒。其他地方却又极尽奢华之能事——处处美丽的屏风与壁上的挂饰，一面面嵌在墙上的什锦格里展示着各色的瓷器古玩。通常，他一开门就让开请我先走。我看了各式各样的房间，也花了好一会儿的工夫——不过就是没看到我熟悉的东西。

好不容易我来到一处勾起我回忆的地方。我多待了几秒钟，随即满怀感伤地想起这是我从前的“图书室”。这里已经大刀阔斧改建过了：天花板比以前高，有面墙被敲掉，好让房间变成曲肘形；曾经是通往餐厅的双开门处，现在则封以隔板，板子前面堆了更多箱酒。不过这里的的确确曾经是我小时候做完大部分功课的地方。

我往房间深处逛去，环顾四周。过了一会儿，发现林老先生看着我，我尴尬地笑了笑。这时候他说：

“显然有很多地方都改过了。请接受我的道歉。不过也请您谅解，我们在这儿也住了十八年了，为了家人和生意上的需要，一点改变是免不了的。我也明白在我们之前住在这儿的人，还有更早的，他们都大兴土木。这很不幸，但我们谁也没料到您与令尊令堂，有一天会……”

他就此把话收住，也许以为我没在听，也许他就像大部分中国人一样，不惯于道歉。我继续往四周多凝望了一会儿，接着才问他：

“因此这栋房子不再属于摩根洋行了吧？”

他一脸讶异，然后笑了笑。“先生，屋主正是在下呀。”

我看得出我伤了他的自尊，赶紧说：“我真是的。请原谅我一时失言。”

“别在意，先生”——他友善的笑容迅速回到脸上——“您问的也有道理。毕竟您与令尊令堂住在这里的时候，情况确实是如此。只是我

相信如今早已人事全非了。先生，您只要想想上海这么多年来变了多少。一切，这一切都变了又变，改了又改。所有这些”——他叹口气，环指四周——“相较之下，这里的改变只是小巫见大巫。上海有些地区，我曾经了若指掌，有些地方我每天都会走过，现在我再去那里，连该转哪个方向都不知道。改变，无时无刻不在改变。现在是日本人，他们要加入他们的变化。更可怕的变化只怕还在后头。可是大家不应该悲观。”

我们默默地站了一会儿，两人都向四周看了看。接着他又平静地说：

“我的家族，自然舍不得离开这屋子。先父就是在这里过世的。两个孙子也在这里出世。不过刚才内人所说的话——您得包涵她心直口快，班克斯先生——她确实帮我们把话说出来了。当然我们还是认为物归原主，把屋子还给您与令尊令堂，是我们无上的荣幸。嗯，先生，请继续随我来吧。”

我想不久我们就登上一道铺了地毯的阶梯——这楼梯在我小时候绝对不存在——走进一间金碧辉煌的寝室。布幔华丽，宫灯映红。

“这是内人的房间。”林先生说。

看得出这是个避难所，老太太大概一天大半的时光都消磨在这间舒适的闺房里。在宫灯温暖的光辉里，我看到有张牌桌，上头似乎有各式赌局在进行；有张书桌，桌侧一排缀着金穗流苏的抽屉；一张宽大的四柱床，挂了层层帐幔。目光所及都是精雕细琢的装饰品，还有一些我猜不出用途的古玩。

“夫人必定很喜欢这个房间，”我说了，“我在这里可以看到她的世界。”

“这里适合她。不过您可不要为她操心，先生。我们会为她找处住所，她一样会这么喜爱的。”

他说这些是要让我安心，可是他的声音里却有些心虚。此刻他走到房间远处，到梳妆台那里，有件小东西让他看得入神，也许是个胸针。过了好一会儿，他才平静地说：

“她以前真是个大美人。倾城佳人哪，先生。您无法想像的。就婚姻而言，我的心比较像西方人。除了她，我从来不曾想过要娶别的女人。妻子一位就够了。当然，我还是娶了几房妾。尽管我一辈子都住在这个外国人的城市里，但毕竟还是中国人。我有我不得已的地

方。不过我真正关心的只有她。其他几位都不在了，她还好好的。我也想念其他几位，不过我心中庆幸，到了晚年，能再度只有我们俩长相厮守。”有好几秒钟，他似乎忘了我的存在。接着他转向我说：

“这个房间。不知道您会如何使用？恕我无礼。不知道您会不会把这个房间留给您的夫人？当然，我注意到许多外国人，不管多么富有，夫妻总是同睡一房。不知道，您与夫人是否会使用这个房间。我知道我这样好奇，唐突得很。可是这房间对我别具意义。我个人也希望它能拿它做特别的用途。”

“没错……”我再次仔细环顾四周，然后说，“也许不会给内人吧。内人，是这样，老实说……”我发现，一谈到夫妻，我心中立刻浮现莎拉的身影。我连忙说下去，以掩饰尴尬之情：“我是说，先生，我还没结婚呢。所以没有内人。不过我想这个房间给家母正好。”

“说得是。毕竟令堂吃了那么多苦，这个房间给令堂再适合不过了。那么令尊呢？不知道他们会不会同房，像一般西方人那样？我这样问实在冒昧得很。”

“一点也不，林先生。毕竟您让我有幸踏进这个房间，您这么不见外，不管怎么说，您都可以问这些问题。只不过事情来得太突然，我还没有时间好好想过……”

我没再说话，信步绕着屋子，四处端详。过了一会儿，我对他说：“我说这话恐怕会得罪您，林先生。您待我如此真诚慷慨，我实在受宠若惊，我觉得您是可以坦率相见的。您自己才说过，每次屋子易主，变动在所难免。那么，先生，尽管这个房间对您胜似珍宝，但是等我家人住进来，恐怕我们也会进行我们的改建。这个房间，只怕也会改得面目全非。”

林先生阖上眼睛，周遭一时充满凝重的沉默。我不知道他是否正怒火中烧，有那么一瞬间，我后悔不该直言不讳。但他却睁开眼睛，温和地望着我。

“那当然，”他说，“这是人之常情嘛。你会希望这房子回到您孩提时的光景。这确实是人之常情。先生，我完全理解。”

他的话，我想了一会儿才回答：“嗯，老实说，林先生，我们大概不会完全恢复旧观。拿一件事来说好了。就我印象所及，从前我们就有许多不满意的地方。譬如家母从来就没有自己的书房。她那些政

治活动，卧室里的小书桌根本不够用。父亲则想要一个小工坊来做些木工。我的意思是，恢复过去，本身没有太大意义。”

“这真是睿智，班克斯先生。而且尽管您还未成亲，也许不久就得为妻小做安排呢。”

“那是当然。不过，就目前看来，这娶亲成家的事，就算在西方习俗里……”我发现自己不知所云，因此把话打住。不过老先生倒是若有高见地点头说：

“当然，感情的事，谁也说不准的。”他接着又问，“您想要孩子吗，先生？不知道您打算生几个呢。”

“老实说，我已经有一个孩子了。一个女孩。尽管不是我亲生的。她是个孤儿，现在由我监护。我视她如亲生女儿。”

我有一阵子没想起詹妮弗，忽然这样子提到她，不禁百感交集。她的身影一帧帧浮现在我眼前；我想到她在住校，不知过得如何，现在不晓得在做些什么。

也许我把脸撇开了，以隐藏我的感情。总之，等我再回头看着林先生，他又点了点头。

“我们中国人也常有这样的安排，”他说，“血缘固然亲，家人也一样亲。先父曾经领养一名孤女，她就像我亲妹妹一样跟我们一起长大。尽管我知道她是领养的，但我还是视她如亲手足。她病歿于某次霍乱肆虐，那时我还年轻，我难过得像是走了一位亲妹妹一样。”

“容我直言，林先生，能与您谈心真是我的荣幸。我难得遇到有人如此知心。”

他浅浅鞠个躬，双手的指尖在胸前相触。“活到我这把岁数的人，又经历这么多年的动乱，什么悲欢离合没尝过。我希望您的义女在这里能住得愉快。不知您会把哪个房间派给她。瞧，我又来了！请见谅，如您所说，这里还会改建。”

“老实说，刚才我们看过的房间里，有一间给詹妮弗真是配。就是墙上有一整排木壁架的那间。”

“她喜欢这种壁架？”

“没错。好放她的那些家当。其实，我还得给另一个人安排住所。名义上，她算是用人，不过在我家里，她总是不止于此。她叫梅俐。”

“她是您的阿妈，先生？”

我点点头。“她现在年龄更大了，我敢说她会想休息养老。照顾小孩子顶耗神的。我一直认为她老了以后，应该继续跟我们同住。”

“您真是菩萨心肠。我们常听到外国家庭在孩子长大以后，就把阿妈遣散。这样的妇女，最后往往沦落街头行乞，以了残生。”

我笑了笑。“我想这恐怕不会发生在我家梅俐身上。老实说，连动了这种念头都算荒唐。总之，如我所说，她会跟我们同住。一旦我的任务完成，我就有心思好好找她。我想，要找到她，应该不难。”

“那么请告诉我，您给她的房间，会在用人那厢还是在家人这厢？”

“自然是在家人这边了。家父家母也许会不以为然。不过话说回来，现在一家之主是我。”

林先生露出笑容。“依你们的习俗，自然是如此。就中国人而言，还好，我们允许我这样的老头，不管多衰老无能都可以继续当家。”

老先生兀自笑了笑，转身向门走去。我正要跟上，就在那一刹那突如其来却历历在目一心头浮现了另一段往事。后来我回想起来，却完全不明白为什么浮上心头的是那件往事而不是别件。那件事发生在我六七岁的时候，母亲与我在一块长长的草坪上赛跑。我不知道确切的地点究竟在哪里；我推想应该是在某个公园里吧——也许是极司菲尔公园——因为我记得跑的地方，旁边有一片格子状的围篱，上头爬满花朵与藤蔓。那是个温暖的日子，阳光倒不强。我忍不住向母亲挑战，看谁先跑到前方不远处的某个地方，我要向她炫耀我跑步的能力进步了。我满心以为我可以赢她，然后她就会用她惯有的方式表达她的惊喜，赞叹我的本事又长进了。然而事与愿违，她一路都没落后，还边跑边笑，我则是使尽了全力。我不记得实际上到底谁“赢了”，不过我还记得我好气她，觉得自己受了天大的委屈。那夜我站在林老夫人寝室那温馨安乐、风雨不侵的氛围里，这件事又回到心头。或者该说这件事的残篇断简：一个全力迎风而跑的我、一个在我身边欢笑的母亲、一阵她裙褶磨擦的窸窣声、一股涌上心头的挫折感。

“林先生，”我对主人说，“可否冒昧请教一事。您说您一生都住在租界。那么，不知您当年是否见过家母？”

“只可惜我从来没这个运气见到她本人，”林先生说，“不过，我当然听说过她，还有她推动的伟大运动。我景仰她，有正直心肠的人都景仰她。我相信她人一定很好。而且我听说她非常美丽。”

“我想她应该是很美。只是谁也不会在乎自己母亲到底美不美就是了。”

“噢，我还听说她是上海最美丽的英国女性。”

“我想应该是吧。当然啦，她现在也有些年纪了。”

“有些美貌，是不会褪色的。内人”——他伸手指向房间——“跟我当年娶她的时候一样美丽。”

当他说出这句话的时候，我忽然觉得自己擅闯了禁地，这回是我抢在前头走出房间。

我不太记得那天晚上重返故居还有什么别的事情。也许我们又待了一个钟头，与那一家人围在桌边聊天用餐。总之，我知道我离开林家时，气氛相当融洽。反倒是在回程上，摩根与我有些摩擦。

错可能在我。那个时候我很疲倦，甚至有些兴奋过度。车子行驶在一片夜色中，我们两人沉默了好一阵子，我的心思也许飘回了还在眼前的那项艰巨任务。因为我记得我冷不防地对摩根说：

“嘿，你说你在这里也待了几年了。告诉我，你有没有遇见过一位孔探长？”

“孔探长？是警探还是什么？”

“我小时候，孔探长简直是传奇人物。老实告诉你，我父母的案子，最初承办的警官就是他。”

没想到摩根竟在旁大笑了一阵。接着他说：

“孔？孔老头吗？没错，当然了，他以前是警探。那么，也难怪当年查不出什么结果了。”

他的语调让我吃惊，我冷冷回答：“姑且不提他在全中国的声望如何，至少在上海，孔探长可是当年最受敬重的警探。”

“这个嘛，他现在还有一点名气就是了，我不妨告诉你。孔老头啊。真没想到。”

“我很高兴至少他人还在上海。你知不知道该到哪里去找他？”

“最简单的方法，就是入夜后到法租界去逛。你迟早会遇到他。你通常会看到他倒卧在人行道上。要是有一家破酒吧准他进去，他也会被嘘到昏暗的角落里去。”

“你的意思是，孔探长变成酒鬼了？”

“酒、鸦片都来。中国佬常有的玩意。不过他可是个宝。他会说他当年如何神勇的故事，然后等人家赏他几毛钱。”

“我觉得你说的是别人，老兄。”

“才不呢，老哥。孔老头。所以他真的干过警察啰。我总是猜想他那些故事是瞎掰的。他的故事大部分都荒诞不经。怎么了，老兄？”

“你的毛病，摩根，就是老把事情给搞混了。你先把我跟毕格瓦弄混。现在你又把孔探长跟哪个一文不名的破乞丐扯在一起。你外放久了，脑筋也放糊了吗，大哥？”

“你听好，火气别这么大。我告诉你的，你尽管去问别人，看看说的可有两样？你的高见我可不苟同。我的脑筋一点也没糊涂。”

他把我送抵华懋饭店时，我们彼此可能又是客客气气的了，不过分手时显然毫无眷恋，我从此没再见过摩根。至于孔探长，从那夜起，我心里就急着要尽快把他找到，不过不知为了什么原因——也许害怕摩根说的是实话——这事从来就没排在第一要务里——至少到昨夜之前没有。昨夜我翻查警局的档案，无巧不成书，里头竟冒出他的名字。

顺带一提，这天早上我跟麦克唐纳略提起孔探长，他的反应跟那夜摩根的反应类似，我怀疑这是另一个原因，导致我面对他的时候失去耐性——在他那间高踞领事馆草坪之上、又小又闷的办公室里。总之，要是我稍稍克制一点，我知道我可以表现得好些。那天早上我根本的错误，在于我让他激得我动了肝火。只怕有那么一刻，我简直是在对他咆哮。

“麦克唐纳先生，事情就是没办法靠您所谓的我的‘力量’来解决！我没有这个‘力量’！我只是凡人，如果没人提供基本的协助，我根本办不了事。我也没要您帮多大的忙，先生。根本连件小事都算不上！我要求的事，我早说得清清楚楚了。我希望跟这位共产党的告密者谈一谈。跟他谈谈而已，就说几句话也成。我以最明白的方式提出了请求。我无法了解为什么还安排不了？怎么会这样，先生？怎么会这样？究竟有什么事耽搁您了？”

“你听好，老兄，这种事根本不在我权限之内啊。如果你接受，我可以请警政厅厅长跟你谈谈。恕我直言，你知道吗，我根本不确定这样有什么用。‘黄蛇’又不在他们手上……”

“我完全了解，庇护‘黄蛇’的是中国政府。所以我才来找您，而没去找警方。我知道这么重大的事，只怕警察还没资格管。”

“我尽力就是了，老哥。但是你得谅解，这里可不是英属殖民地。我们无权命令中国人。不过我会跟适当的主事者谈谈。你可别以为事情很快就会有结果。蒋介石以前也有别的内线，可是从来就没有一个可以把红军的底细摸得这么透。蒋介石宁可再吃日本人几场败仗，也不肯让‘黄蛇’出什么差错。对蒋介石而言，真正的敌人不是日本人，而是红军。”

我重重叹了一口气。“麦克唐纳先生，蒋介石或者他的第一要务，与我何干？此时此刻，我有案子要破，请您无论如何安排一下，让我跟这个内线谈谈。这是我亲自向您提出的，要是我一切的努力，全因为缺了这么件小事而化为乌有，我会立刻让大家知道，当初我去找的人是您……”

“不会吧，老兄，拜托！没必要这么说嘛！完全没必要！这里大伙都是朋友。大家都希望你能成功。相信我，我们由衷希望呢。听我说，我说过，我会尽力而为。我会找人谈谈，你知道的，那个圈子里的人。我会找他们谈谈，告诉他们你的意愿有多强烈。不过请你一定要谅解，我们可以使在中国人身上的力气，也就这么点而已。”接着他倾身向前，与我分享秘密，“其实，你不妨找找法国人。他们手上总是握有许多蒋介石的小辫子。你知道的，见不得光的事情。我们不碰的那种东西。法国人这条线，就算奉送啰。”

或许麦克唐纳的建议另有玄机。也或许我真的可以从法国当局那里得到一些有用的协助。不过，老实说，从那天早上起，我就没把这则建议太当一回事。我已看清，麦克唐纳为了某些不明的原因，一直搪塞推诿，可一旦他确知满足我的要求事关重大，刻不容缓，那他一定会尽力协助的。可惜那天早上我恐怕把那次会面搞砸了，我还得找个时机再去与他周旋。这可不是什么我想做的好差事，但至少下次我的手段会有所不同，届时他会发现，想教我空手而回，并没有那么容易。

第六部

一九三七年十月二十日・上海・华懋饭店

第十六章

我知道我们在法租界某处，离港口不远，其他则一无所知。有那么一会儿司机把车开进窄巷，那里实在不宜行车，只听他喇叭摁个不停以驱开行人，我渐渐觉得这实在荒唐，就像有人把马骑进屋子里一样。不过车子终究是停靠了下来，司机为我打开车门，手指着“晨欣旅社”的大门。

有位瘦削的独眼中国人带我进去。今天回想起来的笼统印象，是低垂的天花板、深色潮湿的木头与寻常闻见的阴沟味道。不过那地方看起来倒还算干净；走到一处，我们得绕过三位趴在地上的妇女，她们辛勤地刷着木头地板。到了这栋建筑物的后段，我们来到一条走廊，一长排都是门。这让我联想起马厩，甚至是牢房，其实这些小房间，竟然都是客房。独眼人敲敲其中一扇门，不等回应就把门打开。

房间小而狭长。室内没有窗户，不过隔墙并未连上天花板一最上面留了一英尺左右的空间，装有铁网一作为采光与空气流通之用。尽管如此，小隔墙里还是又闷又暗，就连外头午后高照的艳阳，也只在地上映出铁网诡异的图案。床上躺着的人似乎还在睡觉，不过等我站到床与墙之间，他动了动腿。独眼人咕哝了几句话就走了，并把门关上。

这位前孔探长骨瘦如柴，脸部和颈部的皮肤皱缩还带着斑；他的嘴巴松弛半开；一条光腿细瘦如棍棒，伸在粗糙的毯子之外，可是我看到他上身穿的内衣却白得出奇。他起先没打算坐起来，只是约略表示知道我的造访。然而他不像是抽了鸦片或喝了酒还没醒，于是我表明身份与来意，说着说着，他慢慢懂了，渐渐表现出一些应有的礼貌。

“对不住，先生”——他的英语，听起来还算流利——“我这儿没有茶水可以招待。”他咕哝了几句中文，在毯子底下动了动他的双腿。接着他似乎觉得自己失礼了，又说：“对不起。我身体不舒服。不过我很快就可以恢复健康。”

“我诚挚希望如此，”我说，“毕竟您曾是上海警界的顶尖警探。”

“真的？您实在太抬举我了，先生。我那时还算称职就是了。”他忽然用力一撑，坐了起来，把一双赤脚小心翼翼放到地上。或许是为了遮羞，或许是因为怕冷，他还是将毯子围在腰腹一带。“可是到头来，”他继续说，“这个城市会打败你。每个人都背叛朋友。你信任别人，最后才知道他原来一直在收帮派的钱。政府也是个帮派。警探在这种地方，如何善尽自己的职责？我这儿说不定还有烟。您要不要抽支烟？”

“多谢，不用了。探长，我这么说吧，我还是孩子的时候，您的英勇事迹就让我十分景仰。”

“您还是个孩子的时候？”

“没错，探长。邻家的男孩和我”——我浅浅一笑——“我们常常扮演您。您是……您是我们的英雄。”

“真有其事？”老人含笑摇摇头，“果真如此吗。那么，我就更不好意思了，我什么也没能招待您。您不要茶，也不抽烟？”

“老实说，探长，您可以给我更有用的东西。我今天来找您，是因为我相信您能提供我一条关键线索。一九一五年春天，您承办了一个案子，是福州路上一家名叫‘五城楼’的餐厅里发生的枪击事件。三人丧命，多人受伤。您逮捕了两名涉案人。在警局的记录里，这件事称作‘五城楼枪击事件’。这案子也许事隔多年，这个我也明白，不过孔探长，不知您是否还记得此事？”

在我身后，也许在两三间房外，有人咳嗽咳个没完。孔探长陷入沉思，接着说：“‘五城楼’的案子我记得很清楚。当时我还算风光。即使像现在这样卧病在床，我有时还是会想起这个案子。”

“那么，您也许记得您审问过一位嫌犯，后来您断定他并未涉及枪击案情。根据记录，那个人叫韦强。您问他‘五城楼’的案情，他却供出其他完全不相干的事。”

尽管老探长的身体已如一只松垮的皮囊包着散骨，此刻他的双眼却充满生气。“一点也没错，”他说，“他跟枪击案无关。不过他一害怕就说个不停。他什么都招。我记得，他招认他几年前参加过一个绑架集团。”

“太好了，探长。这正是档案里记载的。您听我说，孔探长，有件事非常重要。这个人给了您一些地址。那是他们绑架集团用来藏肉票的地方。”

孔探长原先盯着天花板下的铁网边嗡嗡萦绕的苍蝇，现在慢慢把目光移降到我站的地方。“确实如此，”他平静地说，“可是班克斯先生，我们已经把那些房子彻查过了。他提到的那些绑架案，都是许多年前的事了。我们在那些房子里没查出什么可疑线索。”

“我知道，孔探长，您分内该做的事，一定丝毫不含糊，这毋庸置疑。只不过您当时的目标是枪击事件。倘若您没把精力花在横生的枝节上，这也是理所当然。我想说的是，如果当时有某些有力人士，出手阻挠您搜索其中一处，或许您也不会太坚持。”

老警探再度陷入沉思，过了半晌才开口说：“是有那么一栋。我现在想起来了。我的手下会向我呈报结果。所有别的房子，总共七栋，我都收到回报。我记得当时确实有点不对劲。这最后一处没有报告。我的手下受到了干预。没错，我记得当时就觉得其中必有蹊跷。就是警探的直觉罢。您懂我的意思吧，先生？”

“那最后一栋，您从来就没有看到过调查报告。”

“正是，先生。不过如您所说，那实在不是什么要紧的事。您懂吧，‘五城楼’的事情可大了。闹得满城风雨。搜捕杀手的行动持续了好几周。”

“我记得没错的话，这案子难倒了两位比您资深的同仁。”

孔探长面露笑容。“如我所说，那是我事业上最风光的日子。别人办不出来，我才来接手。全城的人都在谈这件事。我才花了几天时间就逮捕了那些杀手。”

“我读过那些资料，真是佩服，佩服。”

不过这时候老人专注地盯着我看。最后他缓缓说：“那栋房子。我的手下没有搜查的那栋。那栋房子。您是说……？”

“没错。我个人以为，那正是家父家母被挟持的地方。”

“原来如此。”他沉默了好一会儿，试着消化这个庞杂的想法。

“您绝无疏忽之处，”我说，“容我重申，我读过报告，对您真是佩服之至。您的手下没有到那里搜查，是因为受到警界里更高层人士的阻拦。那些人，我们现在已经查明，他们收了犯罪集团的贿赂。”

咳嗽声再度传来。孔探长沉默了一会儿，才再抬头看我，缓缓说：“您是来找我帮忙。您来是要我帮忙找到这栋房子。”

“很不幸，档案给弄得一团糟。市政搞成这副德性，真是可耻。报告有的归错档，有的根本遗失了。最后，我还是决定直接来找您，这样会比较有用。我知道这简直不可思议，但我想请教您，是否还记得关于那栋房子的一点资料或是什么。”

“那栋房子。让我想想。”老人专注地阖上眼睛，但是过了一会儿，他摇摇头，“‘五城楼枪击事件’。都二十多年前的事了。真对不住。那房子我什么也想不起来。”

“探长，请您再仔细想一想。甚至只要想出在哪一区也行。比方说，是不是在公共租界里头。”

他又想了一会儿，接着再度摇头。“那真是好久以前的事了。我这脑筋，它不是很正常。有时候我什么都不记得，连前一天的事都记不住。不过，我还是会再想想，看能不能想得起来。也许明天，也许后天，我一觉醒来就想起什么也说不定。班克斯先生，实在很抱歉。但此时此刻，我什么事也记不得。”

等我回到公共租界，已是傍晚。我相信我在房里花了一个钟头左右，重温我做的笔记，想把跟老警探会面的失望抛诸脑后。八点过后我才下楼吃晚餐，在那华丽的餐厅里，坐在我常坐的角落。我记得那天晚上我胃口不太好，我才想丢下主菜不吃，回楼上工作去，这时候侍者却送来沙拉的纸条。

此刻我把纸条拿在手上。不过是张没有格线的白纸，上头潦潦草草写着几行字，上半张已经撕去。她写下这些话，恐怕未经斟酌；上头只写着要我立刻到三四楼楼梯间的平台去见她。如今回头看这件事，跟一周前在托尼·凯瑟克先生家发生的那桩小事，两者之间的关系显而易见；也就是说，要不是我们之间发生了那件事，她可能根本不会写这张纸条。说来奇怪，侍者刚递上纸条时，我并没有多想；我在那儿多坐了一会儿，完全不明白她为什么要那样召唤我。

我得在这里说明一下，自从在鸿运宫的那个晚上之后，我又遇到她三次。其中两次有旁人在场，我们只打了个照面，几乎没说什么话。第三次也一样——在怡和洋行董事长凯瑟克先生家的晚宴——我想我们又是在公共场合，所以几乎没有交谈；然而，事后看来，我们在那里的相遇，可说是某种相当重要的转折点。

那天晚上，我到得迟了些，等我被领进凯瑟克先生宽广的花房，六十多位宾客早已在树荫下与藤蔓间的几张桌子边坐定。我看到莎拉

在房中远处一塞西尔爵士没来—不过我看得出她还在找自己的座位，因此我并不打算走过去。

这种场合里，宾客们似乎都遵守上海另一个特有的习俗，那就是甜点一上一甚至还等不及好好吃完—就离开原先排定的座位，四处找人交际。毫无疑问，我心想等这一刻到了，我就可以过去跟莎拉聊聊。然而等到甜点终于上桌，我却给坐在我身边的女士缠住了，她想跟我解释中南半岛政局的细节。我才甩掉她，主人却又站出来宣布“余兴节目”的时间到了。他接着介绍第一位演出者—有位弱不禁风的女士从身后的桌位走出来，到众人面前朗诵一首有趣的诗，显然写诗的人就是她自己。

她后面又有位先生清唱了几段吉尔伯特与沙利文的轻歌剧，我推断我周遭的人，大半都是有备而来。客人一个接一个上场，有时三两成群；还有情歌清唱与讲笑话。风格总是戏谑轻浮，有时甚至还开黄腔。

接着有位高大的红脸男士—我后来得知他是汇丰银行的董事—走到众人前面，他晚宴的短外套外面还套了一件短袍。他展开手上的卷轴，读一篇从各个层面讽刺上海生活的长篇大论。几乎文章里提到的所有人事物—某些人、某些夜总会洗手间的摆设、某些官场上文山会海的轶事—我都完全没有概念，可是房里的每一个角落很快就充满了笑声。到这时候，我四处寻找莎拉的踪影，结果看到她在另一个角落里，和一群女士坐在一起，跟大家笑得一样开心。她身边的女士，显然喝了不少，放声狂笑，几近失态。

红脸先生演出差不多五分钟的时候—那时大家的兴奋似乎有增无减—他连续说了三四个极其有趣的笑话，整个房里的人几乎都放声大笑起来。正巧在这时候，我又瞥见莎拉。起初这一幕似乎与之前别无二致：莎拉在人群中，笑得快要没有力气的样子。我之所以再多看她几眼，是因为我有点意外：她来上海也不过一年，怎么就已经对上海的社交圈这般烂熟，连这些极其晦涩的笑话也能让她乐成那样。正是这个时候，正当我凝视着她思索这个问题时，我才赫然发现，她根本不是在笑；她并不是在拭着笑出来的眼泪，是我看错了，她其实是在啜泣。我又盯着她看了一会儿，简直不敢相信眼前所见。后来，众人还在大笑，我悄悄起身，穿过人群。我略微闪躲，走到她的身后，此刻我已不再有疑问。在一片欢乐中，莎拉悲不可抑地独自哭泣。

由于我是从她身后靠近的，因此我递上手帕给她时，她吓了一跳。接着她抬头望着我，凝视着我—看了我约莫四五秒—目光中除了

感激，还有类似疑问的眼神。我倾身向前，以便把她的眼神看清楚些，可是她接过手帕，却转身面向红脸先生那边。又是一阵欢笑响遍房里，莎拉也跟着笑了一声，尽管她拿手帕压在眼角，还是看得出她在强颜欢笑。

我想到我可能会害她遭人指点，随即退回原座，而且当晚确实没再靠近她，直到宾客彼此告别，渐渐散去，我才在花房的玄关，当着许多离去宾客的面，跟她行了个相当正式的告别礼。

不过几天之后，我心中隐隐期望她能就那天晚上的事给我一点回应。只是这段时间，我又把全副精神投注在调查工作上，直到我在华懋饭店的餐厅里收到了那张纸条，我还是完全没有联想到先前那天晚上的事情，登上大阶梯时，心中还在纳闷，怎么会是她想要见我。

莎拉所指的楼梯间的平台，其实相当宽阔，上面疏落有致地排放着扶手椅、茶几以及棕榈盆栽。尤其在早晨，一扇扇的大窗户敞开，吊扇呼呼地转着，可以想像那里会是客人看看报纸、喝杯咖啡的好地方。然而到了晚上，这地方却冷冷清清；也许跟物资短缺有关，这里没有点灯，只能借楼梯的灯光，还有从底下的外滩透过窗户照上来的光线。那一夜，除了莎拉，这个地方空无一人，我看见她人在大片的窗玻璃前有如一幅剪影，向外凝视着夜空。我走向她，在椅子上坐了下来，她听到声音转过身来。

“我以为有月亮可看，”她说，“可惜没有。今晚连炮火都没得看。”

“是啊。这几个晚上都平平静静的。”

“塞西尔说双方的士兵都打累了。”

“我想也是。”

“克里斯托弗，过来这里。无妨的。我不会对你怎样。不过，我希望我们的话只有我们俩听得见。”

我渐渐移近，最后到了她身边。我现在看得见楼下的外滩，一整排路灯标示出了港边步道的位置。

“我一切都安排好了，”她悄悄说，“这可不简单，不过再难的事也都解决了。”

“你到底做了什么安排？”

“一切。证件、船票，一切。我没办法在这里再待下去了。我尽全力了，现在我身心俱疲。我要离开了。”

“原来如此。塞西尔呢？他知道你的想法吗？”

“这事不会完全在他意料之外。不过我想他还是会震惊吧。你听了会吃惊吗，克里斯托弗？”

“没有，还好。就我看到的这一切，我多少猜到会有这样的可能。不过在走这步险棋之前，你确定没有别的……？”

“唉，该想的我都想过了。没有用的。就算塞西尔明天就愿意回英国也一样。再说，他在这里输了不少钱。他决定翻了本才回国。”

“我看得出来，这趟上海之旅并未完全如你所愿。我也替你难过。”

“上海之行本身还不算什么。”她笑了一声便沉默不语。过了一会儿她才说：“我试着去爱塞西尔。我费尽了力气。他人不坏。你看到他在这里的德性，恐怕不会同意我的说法。可是他原先不是这个样子。我也有自知之明，变成这个局面，我要负大半责任。他人生走到这个阶段，需要的是休息。可是我的出现让他觉得自己还得有所作为。这是我的错。我们刚到的时候，他确实努力过，卖命地苦干。但这实在不是他能力所及，我想事情就是这样，他就是这样垮了。也许我一走，他就有办法振作起来。”

“可是你要去哪儿？你要回英国吗？”

“就目前而言，我的钱还走不了那么远。我打算先去澳门。到了那里，以后的事以后再说。什么情况都有可能发生。老实说，就是这样，我才必须跟你谈谈。克里斯托弗，我承认，我有点害怕。我不要一个人去那儿单打独斗。我想知道你愿不愿意跟我一起走。”

“你的意思是，跟你去澳门？明天就跟你一起走？”

“对。明天就跟我去澳门。到了澳门再决定下一步怎么走。如果你想的话，我们还可以在南中国海上逍遥一阵子。或许我们可以去南美洲，像黑夜里遁走的小偷。那不是很有趣吗？”

我想，听到她说这些话，我吃了一惊；不过我现在还记得，那时最强烈的感受，是一种几乎触手可及的慰藉感。一点也不假，有那么一两秒，我仿佛一个久陷暗室的人，忽然走到阳光之下，走进和风之

中，一时之间头晕目眩。仿佛她这些提议——我知道她只是一时冲动——包含了巨大的权威，带给我从来不敢奢望的特权。

然而正当这种感受袭上身来，我想我同时也心生警觉，会不会她对我说这些话，目的是要试探我。我记得我最后的回答如下：

“问题是我在这里的任务未了。我得先把这里的事情处理好。毕竟全世界正走到大难的边缘，假如我这个时候一走了之，世人会怎么看待我？既然说到了这个，到时候你又会怎么看待我？”

“噢，克里斯托弗，我们两个真是一样可悲。我们不能再这样子想事情了。否则我们将会一无所有，最后我们有的，就是再多尝一些过去这几年的经历。多尝几年寂寞，多过几天空洞的人生，永远只知道自己做得还不够。我们现在必须把这些全都抛开。放下你的工作，克里斯托弗。你已经耗费够多生命在这上头了。我们明天就走，别再浪费任何一天，再耗下去可就来不及了。”

“究竟什么事情会来不及呢？”

“来不及……呃，我不知道嘛。我只知道我已经浪费了许多年寻寻觅觅，寻找我必须费尽心血才配得到的奖品。可是现在我不稀罕了，现在我要别的东西，我要能给我温暖与庇护的东西，无论我做了什么事，变成什么样的人，都能接纳我的东西。永远都存在的东西，永远，像是明天的天空。这就是我现在要的，而且我认为你应该也想要。可是再拖下去，马上就要来不及了。我们会因为太僵硬而无法改变。如果现在不把握，你我以后永远也不会再有机会了。克里斯托弗，你跟那棵可怜的树有仇吗？”

我这才发现，我不知不觉把身旁棕榈树的叶子一片片撕扯下来，丢在地毯上。

“真不好意思，”——我笑了一声——“算是让我给毁了。”我接着说，“就算你刚才说的那番话没有错，即使如此，事情对我也没那么容易。因为，你知道的，还有詹妮弗。”

说到这里，我心里鲜明地想起上次我们交谈的情景，当时我们在校园后区某间温馨的小会客室道别，一个温柔的英国春日午后，阳光照在橡木墙板上。我忽然想起了她的表情——她先听我把话说完，想了想之后，体贴地点点头，接着又说了一番完全出乎我意料的话。

“你知道的，还有詹妮弗呢。”我又说了一次，觉得自己就快要陷入一场绮思梦想之中了，“即使此时此刻，她都还在等我呢。”

“可是这个我想过。我已经仔仔细细地想过了。我知道她跟我一定可以做朋友。不只是朋友呢。我们三个，我们可以，呃，组成一个小家庭，就像一般的家庭。我想过这个，克里斯托弗，这对我们来说都很幸福美满。我们一安排妥当，就把她接来。我们甚至可以回欧洲，像是意大利，她可以在那里跟我们会合。我知道我会是个称职的母亲，克里斯托弗，我有把握做到。”

我暗自思忖了一会儿，然后回答：“很好，就这样吧。”

“就怎样呢，克里斯托弗？”

“我是说，好，我跟你走。我跟你走，一切依你。没错，你说的也许是对的，詹妮弗、我们、一切的一切，或许有成功的机会。”

一说完这句话，我觉得心中一块重石落地，我几乎要大大叹一口气。此时，莎拉上前一步，深深盯着我的脸看了一下。我甚至以为她要吻我，可她似乎在最后一刻克制住了自己，然后说：

“你听我说。仔细地听我说，我们一步都不能出差错。行李至多一只手提箱。不要托运任何皮箱。我在澳门已经有一些钱，需要什么可以到那边再买。我会派人来接你，一个司机，明天下午三点半。我会找个信得过的人，不过还是小心点好，没必要说的话，一句都别说。他会带你到我等候的地方。克里斯托弗，你看起来好像被什么东西重重地敲到了头。你不会让我失望吧？告诉我。”

“不，不会。我会准备好。明天三点半。别担心，我会……我会跟你到天涯海角，不管你要到世上什么地方，我都跟你一起去。”

也许只是一时冲动；也许是回想起我们把塞西尔爵士从赌场带回的那夜分手的情景；总之，我忽然伸出手，双手握紧她的一只手，亲吻了她的手背。之后，我记得我抬头看着她，仍然抓着她的手，不确定接下来该怎么做；我很可能傻笑了一声。最后，她轻轻地把手抽走，抚摸我的脸颊。

“谢谢你，克里斯托弗，”她轻声说，“谢谢你答应我。我感觉一切都忽然改观了。不过你现在得走了，别让人看到我们在这里。走吧，赶快走。”

第十七章

昨晚上床时，我没什么睡觉的心情，今早一觉醒来，却发现有一种平静的感觉传遍全身，仿佛从身上移走了一个重担。穿衣服的时候，我再度思考我新的处境，发现自己有些兴奋。

那天早晨的情况，如今只剩朦胧的印象。我现在所能记得的是，我忽然有个念头，觉得自己应该以仅剩的时间，把原本计划在往后几天达成的任务，尽量加以完成；若不如此便没有职业道德了。这种态度显然有些荒谬，然而我并不觉得不妥。早餐过后，我急切地展开工作，在楼梯里匆匆忙忙地登上爬下，催促司机穿越城里拥挤的马路。到了下午刚过两点我坐下来吃午餐时，我已大略完成了自己原先预定要做的事情，尽管这一点今日对我而言已无甚意义，但我必须承认当时对此可是相当自豪。

然而与此同时，当我回顾那天发生的事时，我有个极其强烈的印象：我跟我做的事情之间有某种奇特的疏离感。当我在公共租界里穿梭，跟许多城里最有名望的人谈话时，我的一部分内心却几乎是在嘲笑这些人回答我问题时的殷殷切切，嘲笑他们一副想要帮忙的可悲模样。老实说，我在上海待得愈久，就愈鄙视这些所谓租界的领导人物。几乎我每进行一天的调查，就会多揭露一些他们这些年来的疏漏、腐败，或者更等而下之的事。打从到了上海的那天起，我从来不曾遇见过谁真诚地为自己感到羞耻，也没人承认若非那些掌权的人优柔寡断、短视近利，甚至别有居心，这里的情况根本不会走到这般风雨飘摇的地步。那天早上我去了上海俱乐部，会见三位非常杰出的“精英”。再次面对这些人的浮夸狂妄，面对他们一再拒绝承认这整件悲剧全是他们的无能所造成的，一想到自己就要把这些人从人生里甩掉，我就觉得十分愉快。确实，在这样的情况下，我非常确信自己做了正确的决定；确定这群人几乎共有的想法不仅毫无道理可言，而且根本就应该彻底唾弃——他们竟然认为，化解危机是我一人该独扛的责任。我可以想见，不久之后，这些人听到我离去的消息会有多么震惊——接下来是接踵而至的震怒与惊慌——我承认，想到这些真让我胸中的闷气一扫而空。

吃着午餐，我发现自己回想起那个阳光明媚的午后，跟詹妮弗在学校最后一次见面的情景；想到我们两人在那间小会客室里，各自尴尬地坐在扶手椅上，阳光在橡木墙板上舞动，从她身后的窗子还可以

看见延伸到湖边的草地。她静静听我解释，我费尽唇舌告诉她为什么我非去不可，告诉她在上海等着我完成的任务有多么重大。有好几处我停了下来，期望她问我一些问题，或至少说说她的看法。不过每次她都只是认真地点点头，等我继续说下去。最后，我发现自己开始重复了，于是我把话打住，对她说：

“那么，詹妮弗。你有没有什么话要对我说？”

我不知道我想听到什么。不过她又凝视了我一会儿，脸上并无愤怒之情。她回答：

“克里斯托弗叔叔，我明白我自己什么事都做不好。不过那是因为我还年轻。等我年纪再大一点，或许不用太久，我就会有办法帮你。我就可以帮你，我保证我会帮你。所以，我不在你身边的时候，请一定要记得好吗？记得我在这里，在英国，你回来以后我会帮你。”

这实在很出乎我的预料，尽管人到了上海，我还是常常回想她说的这些话，我还是不太确定，她当日想传达给我的是什么讯息。她的意思是，尽管听我说了半天，她还是认为我不太可能达成我在上海的使命吗？我还是得回到英国，再耗很多年继续从事我的工作吗？同样地，这也可能只是个不知所措的孩子说的话，她在话里尽力掩藏心中的不满，我实在没有必要如此反复推敲。尽管如此，那天下午我坐在旅馆的花房里吃午餐时，我发现自己又再次陷入沉思，想着我们最后一次的会面。

咖啡快喝完的时候，旅馆服务台的职员过来告诉我，有通电话急着找我。他带我到外头楼梯平台上的电话亭，接线生忙乱了一会儿之后，我听到一个不知在哪儿听过的声音。

“班克斯先生吗？班克斯先生吗？班克斯先生，我终于想起来了。”

我没说话，生怕只要我一出声音，就会危及我们的计划。不过，那个人又说了：

“班克斯先生？您听得见吗？我想起了重要的事情。有关我们无法搜查的那栋房子。”

我才知道那原来是孔探长；他的声音虽然粗而沉，听来却是精神饱满。

“探长，对不起。没想到是您。请说您想起了什么。”

“班克斯先生。有时候，您知道的，我专心抽烟斗的时候比较想得起事情。许多遗忘多年的事都会浮现在眼前。所以我就想，再试一次，我该去抽个烟斗看看。于是我想起那个嫌犯跟我们说了什么。我们无法搜查的那栋房子。就在一户房主叫叶辰的人家的正对面。”

“叶辰？那是谁？”

“我不认识。许多比较穷的人说地址都不用街名。他们用显著的地标。那栋我们不能搜查的房子，就在叶辰他家对面。”

“叶辰。您确定就是这个名字？”

“我确定。现在我记得很清楚。”

“这是不是个常见的名字？上海有多少人会叫这个名字？”

“幸好那个嫌犯还给了我们另一条线索。这个叶辰是个瞎子。您要找的房子，就在一个名叫叶辰的瞎子家对面。当然，他可能搬家了，也可能过世了。不过，只要能查出我们当年办案的时候，这个人住在哪里……”

“那当然，探长。您真是帮了大忙。”

“那我就开心了。我也猜您会这么觉得。”

“探长，真是感激不尽。”

我发现时间不早了，挂上电话之后，我没回去把午餐吃完，而是直接上楼回房间打包。

我正想着该带走什么，却有某种诡异的不真实感袭上心头。有一度我在床上坐下，望着窗外的天空。我蓦然感到不可思议：刚才得到的这条线索，若是早一天出现，就会成为我人生最重要的东西。不过此时此刻，我在脑子里随意想想，却觉得这东西已经像是湮没在逝去的岁月里，如果我不愿想起就可以将它忘记。

打包完毕之后显然还有时间，因为三点半有人准时敲门的时候，我已经坐在椅子上等了好一会儿了。我把门打开，外头站了一个年轻的中国人，也许还不到二十岁，穿着长袍，帽子拿在手上。

“我是您的司机，先生，”他轻声说明，“若有行李，容我来提。”

年轻人把车驶离华懋饭店，我望着南京路上的忙碌人群走在午后的阳光里，觉得自己像是从远处眺望着他们。我在车里坐定，把什么事都交给司机去料理——尽管年纪轻轻，但他貌似十分沉稳干练。我想问他跟莎拉有什么关系，但我随即想起她提醒过，要我别说非必要的话。因此我没有开口，不久，我的心思就转向了澳门，还有多年前我在大英博物馆看到的澳门相片。

车子开了约十分钟，我忽然把身子靠向年轻人，说道：“嗯，对不起。这样问你不知道有没有用。不过，不知道你会不会碰巧认识一个叫做叶辰的人？”

年轻人的目光并没有从眼前的路上移开，我才要再问他一次，他就说了：

“叶辰。那个失明的演员吗？”

“没错。呃，我知道他是瞎了，却不知道他是演员。”

“他不是什么知名的演员。叶辰。他以前是演员，好多年前，那时我还是个小孩。”

“你是说……你认识他？”

“不认识。不过我知道这个人。您对叶辰有兴趣吗，先生？”

“没，没有。没什么。正好有人对我提起他。没什么要紧的。”

路上我没再说什么。我们在窄街小巷里转来转去，等他在一条静谧的后街停下车子，我已经完全不知道我们到哪里了。

年轻人把车门打开，把手提箱递给我。

“那家商店，”他说，用手一指，“有留声机的那家。”

对街有个小店铺，肮脏的窗子里确实展示着一架留声机。我还看见一个英文写的招牌：“留声机唱片、自动钢琴曲卷、手稿”。我往街道左右望了望，街上除了两个黄包车夫蹲在他们的车边说说笑笑，就只剩我跟年轻人两个人。我提起行李，正要过街，忽然有个冲动，于是对年轻人说：

“不知道可不可以请你等一会儿？”

年轻人露出不解之色。“梅德赫斯特夫人只说要把您送来这里。”

“没错，没错。不过，这是我个人的请求，你明白吗。我希望你能多等我一会儿，也许等一下还有用得着你的时候。当然，也许用不着。不过你知道的，以防万一。你瞧”——我把手伸进口袋掏出钞票——“瞧，不会让你白等的。”

年轻人气得涨红了脸，转身避开钞票，仿佛我手中拿的是什么污秽不堪的东西。他气呼呼地回到车上，砰的一声关上车门。

我知道自己错估了什么，不过在那一刻，也没心情去烦这件事。此外，年轻人气虽气，却并未发动引擎。我把钞票塞回口袋，提起行李过街。

小店里十分拥挤。午后的阳光倾泻进来，然而只有几块灰尘满布的地方照得到阳光。店的一侧，有架琴键褪色的立式钢琴，还有几张没装在套子里的留声机唱片，排放在谱架上。唱片上不但有灰尘还有蜘蛛网。其他地方还有几块奇形怪状的厚绒布——看起来像从戏院舞台的帘幕上裁下来的一跟一些歌剧演唱家与舞蹈家的照片一起钉在墙上。我或许期望莎拉就站在那里等我，可是在场的只有另外一个人，一个瘦弱的欧洲人，蓄着尖尖的黑胡子，坐在柜台后面。

“午安，”他操着德国口音说话，从摊在他面前的账册里抬头瞄了我一眼。接着他上上下下把我仔细打量一遍，问道：“你是英国人吗？”

“我是。午安。”

“我们有一些英国来的唱片。例如，我们有张咪咪·强森演唱《我眼中只有你》的唱片。有兴趣吗？”

他小心翼翼的说话方式里有种东西，让我觉得这是事先安排的暗语的开场。可我在脑子里回想莎拉是否交代过什么口令或句子，却什么也想不起来。最后我说：

“我在上海没有留声机。不过我很喜欢咪咪·强森。其实几年前我还听过她的演唱会呢。”

“真的？咪咪·强森，没错。”

我清楚地感觉我错误的回答把他搞糊涂了。于是我说：“嘿，我姓班克斯。克里斯托弗·班克斯。”

“班克斯。班克斯先生。”那个人面无表情地念了我的名字，接着说，“假如你喜欢咪咪·强森的《我眼中只有你》，我就为你播

放。稍候。”

他的身子伏到柜台底下，我趁此机会看了看窗外街上的状况。两位黄包车夫还在那儿谈笑，看到那位年轻人还在车上，我的心也就安了。正当我怀疑事情是否出了大差错时，一曲温馨慵懒的爵士乐在店里荡漾开来。咪咪·强森的歌声出场，我想起这首歌在几年前让伦敦所有的夜总会都为之疯狂。

过了一会儿，我注意到那个瘦弱的店员指着店内后方挂着深色厚重布幔的一个角落。我刚才没注意到那里有道门，可我一推，却发现里头还有一个房间。

莎拉正坐在一只木制行李箱上，一身便装加上一顶女帽。烟嘴上点了根香烟，储物柜般的小房间里早已烟雾弥漫。我们四周堆满了一叠叠的唱片还有一页页分门别类装在纸箱和茶叶箱里的乐谱。房内并无窗户，不过我看到一扇通到屋外的后门，此时并未阖拢。

“好啦，我来了，”我说，“我只带了一件行李，如你所坚持。不过显然你带了三件。”

“这个袋子装的是埃塞尔伯特。我的玩具熊。他跟了我好久了，一辈子了。很可笑，对不对？”

“可笑？才不，一点也不。”

“跟塞西尔来这里的时候，我错不该把他塞在一大堆东西里头。等我打开手提箱，他的手臂已经断了。我在箱子的角落里找到了那只断臂，卡在一只便鞋里头。所以这次，除了几条围巾，整只袋子里就只有他了。实在很可笑。”

“不会，不会。我完全能理解。埃塞尔伯特值得。”

她小心地放下烟嘴，站了起来。接着我们互相拥吻——我想，就像银幕上的情侣一样。这几乎跟我向来想像的一样，只不过我们的拥抱却有某种奇怪的别扭，我好几次想调整我的姿势；可是我的右脚已经紧紧靠在一只沉重的箱子上，真想转身的话，一定会失去平衡。接着她退后一步，深深吸了一口气，目光不曾离开我的脸。

“都准备妥当了吗？”我问她。

她起先没有回答，我以为她还要再吻我一次。但最后，她只是简单地说：

“一切都安排妥当了。只要再等几分钟。然后我们就从那里出去”——她指着后门——“走到码头边，那里有条舢舨会带我们走水路到两英里外，再上蒸汽船，接着就到澳门了。”

“塞西尔呢，他知不知道？”

“我整天都没见到他。早餐一吃完就到他常去的地方赌去了，我想他还在那里。”

“真是遗憾。说真的，总得有人教他振作振作。”

“这件事嘛，我们想管也管不着了。”

“我想也是。”我忽然笑了一声，“一切都随他去吧，我们只管走我们选择的路。”

“你说的对。克里斯托弗，有什么不对吗？”

“没事，没事。我只是想……我只是希望……”

我向她伸出双臂，想再抱抱她，她却抬起手说：

“克里斯托弗，我想你该坐下来。别担心，不管什么事以后再做都不迟，任何事情都一样。”

“没错，没错。对不起。”

“我们只要到了澳门，就可以好好想想我们的未来。认真考虑待在什么地方对我们最好。还有，什么地方对詹妮弗最好。我们把地图全摊在床上，望着房间外的大海，争执该去哪里。噢，我们一定会争执。我甚至好期待这些争执。你到底要不要先坐下来？嘿，坐下来嘛。”

“是这样的……嗯，如果我们得再等个几分钟，那我先去做一件事。”

“做一件事？到底是什么事？”

“就是……一件事嘛。真的，不会花多少时间，就几分钟。事情是这样子的，我刚才问了某人一件事。”

“问谁？克里斯托弗，我觉得这个时候我们不该跟任何人说话。”

“我不是那个意思，真的。我完全明白在这个节骨眼上，一切的一切都要小心。不是那样，别担心。是那个年轻人。你派来的那位，

开车载我来的那位。有件事情我得问他。”

“可是他应该走了吧。”

“没有，他没走。他还在外头。听我说，我马上回来。”

我急忙穿过布幔回到店里，那位蓄着胡子的瘦弱男子抬头看我，一脸意外。

“你喜欢咪咪·强森吗？”他问。

“是啊，是啊。棒极了。我只出去一下子。”

“容我把话说清楚，先生，我是瑞士人。你的国家和我的国家，近期内应该不会陷于敌对状态。”

“啊，没错。那太好了。我马上回来。”

我赶过街道，来到车旁。那个年轻人看到我，把窗玻璃摇下，礼貌地微笑；他先前的火气似乎消了。我倾身悄悄问他：

“听我说。这位叶辰。你知不知道在哪儿可以找到他？”

“叶辰？他就住在附近。”

“叶辰。我说的是眼睛失明的那位叶辰哦。”

“对啊。再过去一点就到了。”

“他家就这么近？”

“没错。”

“听我说，你好像没听懂我说的话。你是说叶辰，眼睛失明的那位叶辰，他家就在附近？”

“没错，先生。您可以走过去，如果您想坐车，我就载您过去。”

“请听清楚，此事关系重大。你知不知叶辰在他现在这栋房子里住多久了？”

年轻人想了想，然后说：“他一直住那儿，先生。从我小时候就住那儿了。”

“你确定？你听好，这可是事关重大。你确定这位就是那个眼睛失明的叶辰，而且他住在那里很久了？”

“我才说了啊，先生。我还是个小孩的时候，他就住那里了。我猜想他在那里已经住了很多很多年啰。”

我挺起身子，深深吸了口气，想想我刚才听到的事背后的各种可能。接着我再度弯下身子对他说：“我想该由你带我过去。我是说，坐车。我们必须小心地接近那里。请你载我过去，不过车子稍微停远些。只要让我能清楚看到叶辰家对面那栋房子就好了。你了解吗？”

我上了车，年轻人发动引擎。他把车掉头，然后开进另一条狭窄的街道。在路上，我想了满脑子事情。我不知道要不要告诉年轻人，这趟路有多么重大的意义，甚至想到要不要问他车上有没有枪——不过还是决定别问，问这种事也许只会让他惊慌。

我们又转了个弯，进入一条更窄的街道。接着又转了一次便把车停下。有一刻我还以为到了目的地，不过接着便看到发生了什么事。在我们前头的巷道上，有群小孩子想拉住一头晕头转向的水牛。孩童间似乎在争吵什么，我看的时候，有个孩子用棍子在牛鼻子上头打了一下。我觉得浑身紧张，想起母亲在我小时候不时警告我，这种牛发起火来，可是跟任何蛮牛一样危险。那头牲畜还好没有反应，男孩们继续争吵。年轻人徒然按了几声喇叭，最后叹了口气，只好把车子倒回原来的街道。

我们走旁边的一条巷子，不过换了条路似乎让我的司机有点迷失方向，他转了几个弯以后，又停下来倒车，可是这次路并没有被挡住。其间，我们来到一条较宽阔却凹凸不平的黄土路上，有一侧全是破旧的木棚屋。

“请开快一点，我时间不多。”

这时候一声巨响震动了车子行进的地面。年轻人不为所动继续开他的车，不过却紧张地遥望远处。

“开打了，”他说，“双方又开打了。”

“听起来好近。”我说。

接下来的几分钟，我们又绕过更多的狭窄巷口与矮小的木头房子，不停地响着喇叭，以驱开路上的孩童与狗。接着汽车又猛然刹住，我听到年轻人懊恼地叫了一声。我越过他肩头一望，发现马路已经被沙包墙与铁丝网给堵住了。

“我们得绕个远路才行，”他说，“没别的路了。”

“等等，那个地方就在眼前了吧。”

“非常近，没错。不过路堵了，所以我们得绕远路过去。不用急，先生。我们很快就可以到那里。”

可是年轻人的态度里，有了明显的变化。他先前沉稳的样子已经消失，现在他看起来却这么小，也许不过十五六岁，让他开车根本就是件荒唐的事。有一会儿，我们开过泥泞、发臭的街道，钻过许多小巷，我时时刻刻都以为车轮就要陷进未加盖的水沟里了——还好年轻人每次总有办法以毫发之距闪过。一路上我们听到枪炮在远处响起，看到人群纷纷躲到房子或遮蔽物下。不过路上还是有孩童跟狗，似乎都无家可归，在车子前方四处乱跑，浑然不知危险。有一刻，我们颠簸地开过一家小工厂的院子，我说：

“等等，你怎么不停下来问个路？”

“不用急，先生。”

“不用急？其实你现在跟我一样，已经不知道怎么走了。”

“我们马上就到，先生。”

“胡说。你为什么一定要这样装模作样呢？中国人都是这样。你迷了路又不承认。我们至少开了……我看，开了一整天了。”

他没有回应，把车开上一条陡峭的路，路旁是堆积如山的工厂废料。接着又是一声巨响，近得吓人，年轻人把车速减到近乎步行的速度。

“先生，我看我们现在回去吧。”

“回去？回去哪里？”

“战斗就在附近。这里不安全。”

“你是什么意思，战斗就在附近？”一个念头突然闪过，“我们是不是在闸北区附近？”

“先生，这里就是闸北区。我们已经在这区里一会儿了。”

“什么？你是说我们已经离开租界了？”

“我们已经在闸北区了。”

“可是……天啊！我们真的离开租界了！在闸北区？好啊，你是个笨蛋，你知道吗？笨蛋！你跟我说房子就在附近。现在我们迷路

了。我们可能就在交战区的边上，随时都会有危险。我们竟然离开租界了！你真是个标准的笨蛋。知道为什么吗？让我告诉你。你不懂又要装懂。你自大又不肯承认自己的缺点。这正是我对笨蛋的定义。典型的笨蛋！听到没有？彻头彻尾的笨蛋！”

他把车停下，然后打开车门，头也不回地走了。

我花了一会儿工夫才冷静下来评估情势。我们已经开上一座小丘，车子现在孤零零地停在黄土路上，四周是成堆破碎的砖块、扭曲的铁条还有一些看似脚踏车残留的破烂车轮。我看见年轻人的身影走在山丘上的一条小径。

我下车追他。他一定听到了我的声音，但他既不加快脚步也不回头。我追了上去，拉住他的肩膀。

“等等，是我不对。”我说，有点喘，“我道歉。我不该发脾气。可是，事情是……你不明白这件事有多重要。现在，拜托”——我指着车子——“我们继续吧。”

年轻人不肯看我。“不开车了。”他说。

“别这样，我已经道歉了。现在，拜托，请你讲讲道理。”

“不开车了。这里太危险。战斗很近。”

“请听我说，找到这栋房子对我来说非常重要。真的很重要。现在请你老实告诉我。你迷路了吗，或者你真的知道房子在哪里？”

“我知道。我知道房子在哪儿。不过现在不安全。战斗非常近。”

机关枪声忽然在我们四周回响，仿佛佐证着他的看法。枪声听起来还算远，不过根本听不出来处，我们两人同时环顾四周，觉得自己忽然暴露在山头上。

“就这么办好了，”我说，从口袋里取出记事本与铅笔。“我看得出你不想再扯进这件事里，我可以理解你的想法。刚才冒犯了你，是我不对。不过你走之前，我想请你再为我做两件事。第一，我想请你在这里写下叶辰的地址。”

“没有地址，先生。那里没有地址。”

“没关系，可不可以画个地图。写下走法。什么都好。请为我做这件事。接着，请你送我到最近的警察局。当然，我一开始就该这么

做。我需要受过训练的武装人员。拜托。”

我把笔记本与铅笔拿给他。前几页写满了当天早上我所做的调查。他翻过小巧的书页，直到有空白的地方。接着他说：

“不用英文。我不会写英文，先生。”

“你会写什么就写什么罢。画张地图。什么都好，请快点。”

这时，他似乎领会了我要求的事情非同小可。他仔细地想了几秒，接着提笔疾书。他写满一页，又写一页。写了四五页以后，他把笔插进书脊里一起还给我。我翻翻他写的东西，看不懂那些中文字有什么意义。尽管如此，我还是对他说：

“谢谢你。真的非常感谢你。现在，请送我到警察局。你就可以回家了。”

“警察局在这边，先生。”他又往原先前进的方向走了几步。他从山脊上，往下指着坡底。约两三百码远的地方，有一片灰色的房子。

“那里就是警察局，先生。”

“哪里？哪一栋？”

“那栋，有旗子的。”

“看到了，好。你确定那是警察局？”

“确定，先生。那是警察局。”

从我们所在的地方望去，那看起来确实像是警察局。此外我也明白了根本不必去开车了；车子停在山丘的另一侧，而我们刚才过来的路太窄，车子开不过来；我也知道若要找路绕过山丘，很容易就会迷路。我把笔记本放回口袋，考虑要给他几张钞票，接着就想到先前他对此深恶痛绝。于是我只是说：“谢谢你。你真是帮了大忙。从现在开始我可以自己来。”

年轻人迅速地点了个头——似乎还在生我的气——接着转身朝汽车的方向走下山坡。

第十八章

那所警察局似乎已经荒废。我爬下山坡就看到了一些破窗子，有扇大门的门板还斜挂在铰链上。不过在我小心走过碎玻璃，进入警局接待处的时候，我碰到了三个中国人，其中两人持步枪对着我，第三位则舞弄着一把园艺用的圆锹助长声势。其中一人一穿着中国陆军军装的那位一用结巴的英语问我要干什么。我好不容易才让他们了解我是谁，告诉他们我想跟这里的主官说话，这些人开始辩了起来。过了半晌，拿圆锹的那位走进后面的房里去，等着他回来的这段时间，另外两个人依旧拿枪对着我。我趁机看看四周，心想恐怕不会有任何警察留在这里了。尽管还有几张海报和几条标语，可是这地方看起来已经荒废一阵子了。电线从墙上垂挂下来，房间后半截已经遭火焚毁。

大约五分钟之后，拿圆锹的人回来了。他们又交谈了几句，我猜那是上海话，最后那位士兵比比手势叫我跟拿圆锹的人走。

我跟着他穿过后面的房间，发现那里也有武装人员守卫。不过他们让路给我们，不久我走下一道摇摇欲坠的楼梯，到了警察局的地下室。

我们怎么走到那地窖里去，现在的记忆有点模糊；我记得我们走过类似地道的地方，还得低头避开横梁；这里一样有卫兵，每次有卫兵的身影迫近，我就得贴在粗糙的墙壁上才挤得过去。

最后我被带进一个没有窗户的房间，那里像是临时搭设的军事指挥所。里头的光源是两颗灯泡，并排垂挂在中央的横梁上。墙壁的砖头外露，我右边的墙上打了个刚好够一人爬过的洞。对面的角落里放了一台破旧的无线电，房间的正中央则放了一张办公桌——我看了一眼，发现桌子曾经从中被锯成两半，现在又用钉子、绳子等物勉强凑了起来。几口翻过来的木箱被拿来当椅子，唯一一把真正的椅子上，绑了一个昏迷不醒的人。他身着日本海军陆战队军服，脸的一侧有一大块瘀伤。

其他在场的只有两位中国陆军军官，都站在那儿低头看着摊在桌上的地形图。我进来的时候他们抬头看我，其中一人上前跟我握手。

“我是周中尉。这位是马上尉。班克斯先生能莅临本地，我们感到十分荣幸。您是来给我们打气的吗？”

“呃，老实说，中尉，我来这里是有事相求。然而，我相信只要我的事情办成，就可以大大提振士气。不管是这里的士气还是其他地方的士气。可是我需要一点协助，这也是我来此的原因。”

中尉向上尉说了几句话，显然后者不懂英语；接着两人同时看着我。那个昏迷的日本人忽然吐了满胸口的东西。我们全转身看他；接着中尉说：

“您说您需要协助，班克斯先生。究竟是怎样的协助呢？”

“我这里有份说明，是某栋房子的地点说明。我必须立刻赶赴此地，刻不容缓。这份说明是以中文写的，我不懂中文。不过，您也知道，即使我读得懂中文，我还是需要人带路，一个熟悉那一带的人。”

“所以您需要一个带路的。”

“不光是这样，中尉。我还需要四五个人，能再多些更好。最好是训练有素的，因为这件事有点棘手。”

中尉轻轻一笑；接着又板起脸孔说：“先生，我们此刻兵力不足。这个基地是我们防御线的要点。可是您也看得出我们的防御多么薄弱。老实说，您刚才看到的人，非病即伤，要不就是没有经验的志愿军。每个有战斗力的士兵，都送到前线去了。”

“我可以理解，中尉，你们现在的处境艰难。可是您必须了解，我要做的并不是一般的访查而已。刚才我说必须立刻到那栋房子……其实，中尉，我不妨坦白告诉您，没必要对您保密。您与这位马上尉可以是最先知道的人。我要找的这栋房子，我知道离这里不远了，正是我父母被囚禁的地方。没错，中尉！我正是要把这多年的悬案破解。因此，您现在可以理解，为什么我觉得，即使你们正忙得不可开交，我却认为我的要求合情合理。”

中尉的脸仍然对着我，上尉以中文问了他几句话，不过他没回答。接着他对我说：

“我们正在等几个出任务的人回来。出去的时候是七个人。不知道有没有办法全数回来。我原来的意思是立刻派他们到另一个据点。不过现在……在这样的情况下，我来扛这个责任。这些人，不管回来几个，就负责保护您完成您的任务。”

我不耐烦地叹了口气。“真是感谢，中尉。可是这些人我们得等多久？可不可能就派站在这里的这几位，就离开几分钟？反正那栋房子非常近。还有，事情是这样子，还有人在等我……”我忽然想起莎拉，心中忽然惊慌起来。我又向前走近一步说：“对了，中尉，不知道可不可以借电话一用。我真的得跟她说话。”

“这里恐怕没有电话，班克斯先生。那台是无线电，只能跟我们总部还有各个基地相通。”

“既然如此，那事情就更不能拖了！是这样子的，有位女士此时此刻正在等我！容我建议，我就从眼前这些卫兵挑个三四位……”

“班克斯先生，请冷静下来。我们会尽己所能帮您。但我刚才说过了，外头看到的那些人，不适合这样的任务。他们只会坏您的事。我知道您为了破这个案子等了好多年。容我建议您，别在这个节骨眼上轻率行动。”

中尉的话不无道理。我叹了口气，坐在其中一只翻过来的茶叶箱上。

“那些人应该马上就会回来，”中尉说，“班克斯先生，可否让我看看您手上的地点说明？”

我实在不愿让我的笔记本离手，几秒都不愿意。可是最后我还是把本子翻到那页，交给那位军官。他读了一会儿，便把笔记本还我。

“班克斯先生，我得告诉您。这栋房子。恐怕没那么容易接近。”

“可是我碰巧知道，先生，那房子就在附近。”

“近是近，没错。然而，想靠近却不容易。真的，班克斯先生，这房子现在可能已经在日军的防线后面了。”

“日军的防线？好，我想我总是可以跟日本人交涉。我跟他们可没有冲突。”

“先生，请跟我来，趁着等人回来的时候，让我来告诉您，我们确切的位置。”

中尉跟上尉很简短地说了一下话。接着他走向角落的扫帚柜，把柜门掀开走了进去。我愣了一会才明白他要我跟上，可我才走进扫帚柜，却险些撞到中尉皮靴的鞋跟——此时就在我脸的正前方。我听到他的声音在黑暗中从上方传来：

“请跟我来，班克斯先生。这梯子有四十八级。您最好低我至少五级比较方便。”

他的脚上去不见了。我往柜里走去，伸手向前，摸到身前砖墙上有几级铁制的梯阶。在头顶的一片黑暗里，我看到有一小片天空。我猜我们是在烟囱或者警察局的瞭望台底部。

前面几级梯子我爬得不顺手；不只是因为我害怕在黑暗中没抓稳而紧张不已，我也怕中尉万一失足压在我头上。还好那片天空愈来愈大，后来我看到了中尉在上方攀爬的身影。又过了一两分钟，我们会合了。

我们站在高高的屋顶平台上，四周数里密密麻麻地挤着其他房子的屋顶。遥遥的远处，约往东半英里，我看到一柱黑烟在午后的天空升起。

“真奇怪，”我说，同时环顾着四野，“下面的人该怎么走动呢？那儿好像没有街道。”

“从这里看，当然是这样。不过也许您会想用这个来看。”

他递给我一副双筒望远镜。我把望远镜放在眼前，花了一点工夫调整到看得清楚，才发现我只对准了数码之外的烟囱。好不容易我才对准了远方的烟柱，并且调好焦距。我听到中尉在我旁边说：

“您现在看到的是一片大杂院，班克斯先生。工厂的工人们住在这里。我敢说您小时候，绝对不曾到这片大杂院去过。”

“大杂院？我想没有。”

“几乎可以确定您不曾去过。外国人难得在这里出现，除非是传教士。或者是共产党。我是中国人，但也一样，我们这一辈的人，也都不准走近那些地方。直到上次三二年跟日本人开战之前，我对那里几乎还是一无所知。您不会相信人类也可以那样过活。就像是蚂蚁窝似的。那些房子，是盖给一穷二白的人们住的。那些屋子，房间狭小，一排接一排，屋背靠着屋背。就像养鸡场。看仔细一点，您就能看到巷子。那些小巷子，窄得仅能让人走到屋里。屋子后墙根本没窗户。后面的房间就像个黑坑，靠着再后面的房屋。容我多言，我提这个不是没有原因，您自然会明白。那些房间都很窄小，因为是给穷人住的。有一阵子，这样的房间要住七八个人。日子久了，即使房间已经小成那样，有的家庭还是不得不再做隔间，好跟别户人家分摊房租。如果还是付不起房租，他们就隔得更细。我记得我看过那个一丁

点大、像个暗柜似的房子，还隔成四份，每份各住一户人家。班克斯先生，您不会相信，人类也能住成那样吧？”

“听来确实不可思议，不过既然是您亲眼所见，中尉……”

“等打退日本人，班克斯先生，我会考虑为共产党效力。您觉得说这话有危险么？好多军官希望让共产党来领导抗日，而不愿让蒋介石领导。”

我把望远镜朝那片密密麻麻的破屋顶望去。可以看出有些已经塌陷。我还辨识出中尉提及的巷道，那是一些狭窄的通道，四出蜿蜒至各家各户。

“不过这些可不是木棚茅舍哦。”中尉继续在一旁解说，“尽管住户自己的隔间十分脆弱，但房子的主要结构，也就是大杂院本身，却是砖造的。这点在三二年日本人入侵的时候就是相当关键性的一环，至今也依然如此。”

“我懂您的意思，”我说，“大杂院如此坚固，又有士兵驻守。日本人即使有现代化的武器，恐怕也没那么容易攻下。”

“您说的没错。日军的武器，甚至他们的训练，在这里全派不上用场。这里的战斗变成只能靠步枪、刺刀、短刀、手枪、圆锹、菜刀等等。日军的防线，在过去的这个星期，甚至还被逼退了一些。您看到那阵浓烟吧？才不过是上周的事，那个地方还让敌方占领着。不过现在我们把他们打退了。”

“里头还有平民居住吗？”

“确实还有。您也许不相信，即使是那些逼近前线的房子，里头还是有人住。这让日军更加施展不开。他们不能随处轰炸。他们知道西方势力在观察，他们顾忌到任何不人道的行为都得付出代价。”

“你们的部队能撑多久？”

“天知道？蒋介石也许会派部队来增援。或许日本人决定放弃，重新调度，把重点放到南京或重庆。现在胜负都还在未定之天。不过最近的几次战斗让我们损失惨重。请您用望远镜往左方望去，班克斯先生。现在，您是否看到一条马路？看到了吗？那条路当地人叫它‘猪巷’。那条路看来不起眼，不过现在对于战情却十分重要。如您所见，那条路沿着大杂院的边缘延伸。目前我军将它封闭，想办法不让日本人进入。假如他们有机会进入那条路，这片大杂院就有可能

从整个侧面被攻破。那样子我们再守下去也没有意义了。我们将会两面受敌。您要求我派人陪同您去关押您父母的那栋房子。要跟着您去的人，原本是派去防守设在‘猪巷’尽头的路障的。过去几天，那里的战况十分惨烈。同时，我们当然还是得守住那片大杂院的防线。”

“从这高处，倒看不出底下有什么动静。”

“没错。可是我可以向您保证，在大杂院里头，情况相当恶劣。我告诉您这点，班克斯先生，是因为您要进入那个区域。”

有那么一会儿，我继续用望远镜瞭望，没有说话。后来我开口说：“中尉，那栋房子，我父母被拘禁的那栋，我从这里看得到吗？”

他用手在我肩上轻轻碰了一下，只是我的眼睛并没有离开望远镜。

“您看到左边那座残塔吗，班克斯先生？就像复活岛上的那种神像。对，对，就是那个。如果您从那里画一条直线到右边那栋庞大黑色建筑物的废墟——那里原本是一家老纺织厂，这就是早上我军击退日军后的战线。拘禁令尊令堂的房子，大约就在与您左手边那座高烟囱同一个水平线的地方。假如您画条线，非常水平的线，横跨这片大杂院，一直到我们左边一点点的地方。对，对……”

“您是说靠近那片屋顶，那个屋檐翘起，呈拱形的……”

“没错，就是那栋。当然，我也不敢确定。不过根据您给我的地点说明，大约就是那栋房子的所在。”

我透过望远镜，凝视那一片屋顶。有一阵子，我忍不住看个不停，虽然我也知道我耽误了中尉分内的任务。过了一阵子，中尉开口说话了：

“这种感觉一定十分奇特。想想，您看到的那栋房子，里头可能正拘禁着令尊令堂。”

“的确。这感觉确实有点奇特。”

“当然也有可能不是那栋。这纯粹是我个人的猜测。不过就算不是也不会太远。我指给您看的那座高烟囱，班克斯先生，当地人称之为‘东炉’。眼前比较靠近我们的这座烟囱，几乎跟‘东炉’成一直线，这座叫做‘西炉’。开战前，本地的居民常在这两个地方焚烧他们的垃圾。我建议您，一旦进入这片大杂院，就以这两座大炉作为地

标。否则外地人根本搞不清方向。请您再看清楚远处那座烟囱，先生。切记，您要找的房子，就往那儿再过去一点点，在往正南方的这条直线上。”

我终于放下望远镜。“中尉，您真是太好心了。我无法表达我的感激。事实上，有一事不知您是否在意，或许您可以容我将来在极司菲尔公园举行庆祝家父家母获释的典礼时，提起您的姓名。”

“哪里，我的协助实在微不足道。再说，班克斯先生，您别以为任务已接近尾声。站在这上头看，那地方看起来好像不远。可是在这片大杂院里，还有许多战斗在进行。尽管您不是作战人员，但要从一栋房子走到另一栋还是不容易。而且除了两座大炉以外，就没有其他清楚的地标了。然后，您还得把令尊令堂安然带出来。换言之，您还有相当艰巨的任务在前头。不过此刻，班克斯先生，我建议我们先下去。那些人员可能已经回来，正在等我的命令。至于您，务必设法在入夜之前回来。天还亮着的时候，大杂院那儿就已经像人间地狱了。到了晚上，那可比您最糟的噩梦还要糟。如果天黑了还回不来，那么我建议您就找个安全的地方，跟我的人一起等天亮了再回来。不过就在昨天，我的两名手下才彼此误杀了对方，天一黑，他们连东南西北都认不清了。”

“您所說的，我全牢记在心，中尉。那么我们就下去吧。”

楼底下，马上尉正在对一名军服破破烂烂的士兵说话。士兵看来没受伤，可是似乎受到惊吓而情绪不稳。椅子上的日军则在打鼾，仿佛正在享受安稳的小憩，不过我注意到他又多吐了些东西到前襟上。

中尉与上尉很快地讨论了一会儿，接着询问衣衫褴褛的士兵。接着他转身对我说：

“坏消息。其他人没回来。有两位确定阵亡。其余被困住了，不过也相当有可能脱困逃回来。敌军已经往前推进，就算只是暂时如此，那栋拘禁令尊令堂的房子，极可能已经在他们的占领区里头了。”

“就算这样，中尉，我还是必须继续下去，我不能再等了。请听我说，如果您答应派给我的人没回来，那么也许——我知道我这要求实在太过分——也许您可以好人做到底，陪我走一趟。老实说，中尉，我想此时此刻也没有更适当的人选可以帮我了。”

中尉脸色凝重地考虑了一下。“好吧，班克斯先生，”他过了半晌才说，“我就依您的意思。不过我们得快一点。我本来一刻都不该离开这个岗位的。离开岗位，无论多久，都可能造成极为严重的后果。”

他很快地跟上尉交代了一些事情，然后打开办公桌的抽屉，开始把一些东西放到口袋里与腰带上。

“您最好不要带步枪，班克斯先生。不过您有手枪吗？没有？那就带这把好了。德国制的，很好用。您得把它藏好，如果遇到敌军，您必须立刻清楚表明中立的立场，千万别迟疑。现在请随我来。”

他拿起靠在桌边的步枪，走向对面墙上打的洞，利落地爬了过去。我把手枪别进腰带——在外套下这把枪并不显眼——然后赶紧跟在他后头爬了过去。

第十九章

只有到了事后来，才知道我前半段的行程其实比较简单。只是在当时，我跌跌撞撞跟着中尉快步前进的身影，可不会这么想。满布砾石的地面不久便踩得脚痛了起来，每次要钻过墙上的洞，都得把身体扭曲成极不优雅的姿势。

至于后半段，简直是个永无止境的任务，所有的墙洞，多多少少都跟地下室指挥所墙上的那个洞类似。有的小一点，有的则还有足够空间让两个人同时挤过，不过每个洞的边缘都被凿得粗糙不堪，攀过去的时候还得跳一下。没多久，我觉得自己快累垮了；好不容易才爬过一个洞，却看到前头的中尉已经轻松钻过另一面墙了。

并不是每面墙壁都还好端端地立在那儿；有时候我们得从一大堆瓦砾里穿过去，走过三四栋房子的残砖破瓦，才会碰到另一面墙。屋顶几乎全数都破了，往往连片瓦都不剩，因此光线十分充足——尽管不时还是有些昏暗的影子会让人踉跄失足。好几次我踩到两片裂开的石板中间，或是陷入深及脚踝的砾石堆里，脚步一滑，接下来就是痛楚，后来才慢慢熟悉这里的地形。

置身这样的环境里，你很容易就忘了几个星期前，这里还是好几百人的家园。事实上，我常常觉得自己走过的不是贫民窟，而是一栋千房万室的大宅废墟。尽管如此，我不时便会想起，在我们脚下的断垣残壁里，埋着人们珍藏的传家宝、孩童的玩具、大家喜爱的简单家用品；每想至此，我心中就会再度燃起怒火，恨那些让这么多无辜生灵涂炭的人。我又想起租界那些自大狂妄的家伙，想起他们推诿搪塞了这么多年，逃避他们该负的责任。此时此刻，我觉得自己满腔的怒火几乎无法抑制，差点没把中尉叫住，让他听我发泄。

这时中尉碰巧停了下来，我赶上去的时候，他说：

“班克斯先生，请好好看看这里。”他指着左边稍微过去一点的地方，有个类似锅炉结构的东西，虽然覆满了尘土，大致上还完整无缺，“这就是‘西炉’。您从这儿望上去，看到的就是我们在屋顶上看到的那两根烟囱里头比较近的一根。‘东炉’看起来跟这个炉很像，那是我们另一个清楚的地标。到了那里，我们就知道离那栋房子很近了。”

我仔细研究了那座锅炉。有根相当粗的烟囱从锅炉的肩部升起，我走近几步抬头看，可以看到一根巨大的烟囱直入云霄。我还在仰望时，我的同伴说：

“请吧，班克斯先生，我们得走了。我们必须赶在日落之前完成这件事。”过了“西炉”之后几分钟，中尉的态度明显变得更为谨慎。他的脚步变得小心翼翼，而且每到一处洞口，他总会先窥探一下，端起枪，专注地倾听，接着才会爬过去。我也开始看到洞口附近有愈来愈多的沙包堆或是一圈圈的铁丝网。当我第一次听到机枪声时，我立刻静止不动，还以为有人正朝我们开火。不过我看到中尉还在我前面走着，便深吸一口气赶了上去。

后来我爬过一个洞，来到一处颇为宽阔的地方。事实上，我已身心俱疲，看着这地方，还以为是人带我去过的哪家租界里的大舞厅，只是被炸毁了而已。后来我才明白，这里原来是好几个房间，隔间的墙壁已经差不多都不见了，因此两面完好的墙壁相隔整整有二十五码之远。接着我看到七八个士兵面对砖墙排成一列。起先我以为是战俘，不过接着便看到每个人都站在一个小洞前面，洞里架着步枪的枪管。中尉走过砾石堆，跟一个蹲在机枪三脚架后头的士兵说话。这挺机枪架在最大的洞口前面——我们正是要经由这个洞口继续我们的行程。走近一看，那个洞已经被一圈圈的铁丝网封住，只留下枪管可以活动的空间。

我起先以为中尉会命令他们把挡在我们路上的东西拆掉，但我立刻发现在场的人都变得十分紧张。中尉对机枪后面的士兵说话时，那士兵一刻也没有把眼睛从那个洞口移开。其他排列在墙边的士兵也一样，全都静止不动，摆好射击姿势，全神贯注地盯着对面的动静。

一旦了解了此处的战情可能一触即发，我觉得我似乎得从原来的洞爬回去了。但我随即看到中尉朝我走来，于是便留在原地。

“我们遇到了一些麻烦，”他说，“几个钟头前，日军又向前推进了一些。我军现在又把他们击退，对峙线就停在早上原来的地方。然而似乎有一些日本士兵没有跟着撤退，现在困在我们的防线内。我的士兵相信他们这会儿就在这堵墙的对面。”

“中尉，您的意思不会是说，要等这个状况解决了，我们才能继续吧？”

“没错，恐怕我们不得不等了。”

“可是得等多久呢？”

“实在无法预料。这些散兵被困住了，最后若不能俘虏就必须将他们格毙。更何况他们有武器，十分危险。”

“您是说我们可能等上几个钟头，甚至几天？”

“都有可能。这个时候如果继续前进，会相当危险。”

“中尉，您真教我意外。我还以为您也是读书人，很清楚我们目前这件事有多紧急。总会有哪条路可以绕过这些散兵游勇吧？”

“是有别的路。不过情况还是差不多，不管走哪条路，都十分危险。先生，很不幸，我们只有等待，别无他法。这状况有可能不久就可以化解。容我失陪一下。”

墙边有位士兵急切地做着手势，此时中尉走过砾石堆跑到他身边。就在那一刻，机枪震天响起，枪声停止以后，对面传来连续不断的惨叫。那惨叫一开始是扯足了嗓子的嘶吼，接着减弱为一种奇怪的尖声呜咽。那声音如此诡异，我听得入神。后来中尉冲过来把我拉到一片断壁的后头，我才知道有颗子弹正打在我身后的墙上。对面那堵墙后头的那些散兵也开始还击，机枪手也展开另一波的射击。机枪手的武器火力强大，似乎让其他武器都噤声不语，接下来，又是一段近乎永无止境的时间，耳畔唯一的声音就是对面伤兵的哀嚎。他的尖声呜咽又持续了一阵子，接着开始以日语叫喊某句话，一遍又一遍；每隔一会儿，那声调就会升高为疯狂的尖叫，接着又减弱为呜咽。这个虚幻不实的声音在废墟里回荡，教人心底发毛，不过我面前这些中国士兵依然静止不动，他们的注意力始终专注于对面的情况。机枪手忽然转过来往身旁呕吐，接着马上转回面前满布铁丝网的洞口。从他呕吐的方式里，实在不容易断定他作呕是因为紧张，还是因为垂死士兵的声音，或者纯粹因为肠胃不适。

最后，虽然士兵们的姿势几乎没变，但还是看得出来，他们全都放松了。我听见中尉在身旁对我说：

“您现在明白，班克斯先生，从这里开始，路就不好走了。”

我们一直蹲跪在地上，我注意到我一身轻便的法兰绒西装上全是尘土与污渍。我理了一下头绪，接着才说：

“我明白其中的风险。但我还是得继续前进。特别是因为这些战斗还在进行，我父母必须尽快撤离那栋房子。我可否建议带着这些人

跟我们走呢？假如有日军攻击我们，我们的火力也比较强些。”

“身为此地的指挥军官，这一点实在无法照办，班克斯先生。假如这些人离开此地，总部便完全失去了屏障。此外，我也不能让这些士兵冒无谓的危险。”

我懊恼地叹了口气。“我不得不这么说，中尉，若不是你们的士兵防御做得太过草率，怎么会让日军跑到你们的防线里。要是你们的士兵人人尽忠职守，我敢说这种事绝不会发生。”

“我们的士兵已经表现得英勇可嘉，班克斯先生。您的任务一时受到耽搁，实在不是他们的错。”

“您这话什么意思，中尉？您在暗示什么？”

“请冷静下来，班克斯先生。我只是想要指出，这并不是我部下的错，如果……”

“那是谁的错呢，请问？我知道您在暗示什么！没错！我知道从刚才您就开始这么想了。我一直在想，您究竟什么时候才会说出口。”

“先生，您到底在说什么……”

“我非常清楚这一路上您心里在想什么，中尉！我从您的眼神就看得出来。您认为这一切都是我的错，这一切的一切，这一切苦难，这一切破坏，从刚才过来的路上，我可以从您脸上看出来。不过这全是因为您对这件事的来龙去脉一无所知，确实是一无所知，先生。打仗的事或许您略知二一，不过让我告诉您，想解决这种复杂的案子，却完全不是那么回事。这里头的牵连有多广，您显然一点概念也没有。这种案子要花时间才能解决，先生！像这样的问题，要运用许多手腕、技巧才行。我猜想，您以为只要荷枪带刀猛冲上去就行了，对吧？我们已经花了不少时间，这我承认，但对于这类案子而言这根本不足为奇。我不知道我花工夫跟您讲这些做什么。您能了解多少呢？您不过是个军人罢了。”

“班克斯先生，我们实在没必要争吵。我只是诚心诚意地希望您能成功。我只想告诉您什么事是可行的……”

“我对您认为什么事可行、什么事不可行的想法，愈来愈没有兴趣了，中尉。容我直言，您实在不配做中国陆军的表率。我想，您现在是不是打算食言？您不愿再陪我继续走下去了？我想是这样的。我 得一个人独自完成这项艰巨的任务。很好，我就自己来！我就独力攻进那栋房子里！”

“我认为，先生，您应该先冷静下来，别急着说话……”

“还有一件事，先生！有件事您可以放心，在极司菲尔公园的庆祝典礼上，我不会再提起您的名字。就算我提了，也不会有表扬的意思……”

“班克斯先生，请您听我说。如果您执意前行，不顾危险，我也阻止不了。但您一人独行，无疑是比较安全。跟着我，您肯定会成为枪口瞄准的对象。换个角度来看，您是身着平民服装的白种人。只要您尽量小心，遇到任何人先清楚表明身份，您可能就不会遭到伤害。当然，我还是得重申我的建议：留在此处等危局解除了再走比较好。但话又说回来，我自己也有年迈的双亲，我完全能体会您心中的焦急。”

我站了起来，试着掸尽身上的尘土。“既然如此，我要出发了。”我冷淡地说。

“如果是这样，班克斯先生，请您带着这个。”他递来一把小手电筒，“我的建议跟刚才一样：天黑前若还没到达目的地，就先停下来。不过从您目前的决心看来，您大概还是会继续前进。如果是这样，您一定会用得到手电筒。这电池已经不新了，所以若非必要，就先别使用。”

我把手电筒放进口袋，有点勉强地道了声谢，开始后悔方才对他发火。那个垂死的士兵不再说话，只是干嚎着。我开始朝那声音走去，这时中尉说道：

“您不能走那里，班克斯先生。您得先往北走一会儿，然后再设法转回您的方向。这边请，先生。”

有好几分钟，他带我走一条与先前那条路垂直的小径，不久便来到另一面墙前，上面已经凿了洞。

“这条路您至少得走个半英里才能再朝东前进。您还是有可能会遇到双方的士兵。记得我说过的话。把枪藏好，别忘了表明您中立的身份。如果遇到居民，就请他们告诉您‘东炉’怎么走。祝您好运，先生，我很遗憾不能再提供您任何协助了。”

我朝北走了几分钟，注意到这里的房舍损坏得没那么严重。但这个发现并没有让我的路好走些；屋顶受损得愈少，表示路上的光线愈黯淡——我决定等入夜以后再用手电筒——于是常要摸着墙壁走上一段路才找得到下一个通道。不知道为什么，这一带碎玻璃特别多，而且地上还会有大片的死水。我常听到老鼠成群流窜的碎步声，有一次还踏到一条死狗，不过却没听到任何战斗的声响。

行程走到了这个阶段，我却一次又一次想起了詹妮弗，想起我们分手的那天下午，她坐在那间小会客室里——特别是她的脸，当她起了那个耐人寻味、发自肺腑的誓言，说等她年纪再大一些定要“帮助我”时。我摸索前进时，脑中一度浮现了一幅荒谬的画面：这可怜的孩子决心要实践她的誓言，跟在我后面，攀爬过崎岖的地形。我心情忽然激动起来，一时泪水盈眶。

后来我摸到墙上有个洞，里头一片漆黑，却传来强烈难当的粪臭味。我知道若要走到原定的方向，得爬过那个房间，不过我实在无法横下心来这么干，于是继续走了下去。这样的洁癖让我付出了重大的代价，我好一阵子都再没摸到任何通道，因此我觉得我偏离既定的路线愈来愈远。

等天色完全变黑，我就开始使用手电筒。我看到愈来愈多有人居住的迹象。我常常撞到几乎完好无缺的五斗柜或神龛，甚至还有全室的家具都还放在原处，让你觉得那一家人只是刚好那天不在而已。然而再往下走，我又遇到更多全毁或积水的房间。

此外，流浪狗也愈来愈多——这些瘦巴巴的动物，我害怕它们会攻击我，不过我才用光照了一下，它们全都悻悻着退开了。有一次我碰到三条狗，不知正凶狠地把什么东西撕开，我拔出手枪，觉得它们会向我扑来；不过，连这群狗也都软弱地望着我走过，仿佛它们已经知道要敬畏人类所能施为的大屠杀。

碰到第一户人家的时候，我倒不怎么意外。我的手电筒照到他们蜷缩在黑暗的角落里——几个小孩、三个女人和一个老头。他们身边放着一些包袱与生活用具。他们恐惧地望着我，挥舞着临时凑合的武器，等我开口表示无伤害之意，他们才稍稍放下。我想办法问他们“东炉”怎么走，不过他们只用不解的眼神回答。我在附近屋子里碰到三四个这样的人家——渐渐地，我也学会使用真正的门，而不钻墙上的洞——不过他们还是一样没反应。

接着我来到一处较宽敞的地方，较远的那一头被一盏灯笼的红光所浸染。有许多人站在阴影里一大部分依然是妇女与孩子，再加上几位年长的人。我同样说了一些安抚的话，随即感觉到这里的气氛异样，便闭口并伸手去取手枪。

在灯笼的微光里，所有的脸都转向我，可是几乎立刻又转回远处的角落，那里有十几个孩子围着地上的什么东西。有的孩子用棍子戳那不知为何物的东西，接着我发现许多大人拿着磨利的圆锹、菜刀以及其他临时充场面的武器。我仿佛打断了什么邪恶的仪式，我的第一个反应是赶紧通过。不过，或许我听到了什么声音，或者是因为第六感；我发现我竟然走向那些围成一圈的孩子，枪还拿在手上。孩子们似乎不太愿意让我看他们围着的东西，不过他们的身影还是渐渐让开了来。我在昏暗的红光里，看到一个日本士兵的身影一动也不动侧卧在地上。他的双手被反绑在背后；双脚也被缚住。他双眼紧闭，我还看到他腋窝下的军服上有块深色的湿渍透出，渗到地面。他的脸与头发沾满了灰尘与血迹。尽管如此，我还是一眼就认出他就是秋良。

孩童又再度围拢上来，有个男孩用一根木棒戳了戳秋良的身体。我挥舞着手枪，叫他们走开，好不容易孩子们往后退了几步，但还是在那儿盯着我们。

我细细地看着秋良，他的眼睛依然闭着。制服的背部已经全部扯裂，露出蹭破的皮肉，显然他之前曾被人在地上拖行。腋窝附近的伤口可能是炮弹碎片所致。他后脑勺有道肿起的伤口。可是他满身厚厚的尘土，而手电筒的光又弱，实在难以确定这些伤有多严重。我把手电筒对着他照，但到处都是漆黑的影子，让我更看不清楚。

我细看了他一会儿之后，他睁开了眼睛。

“秋良！”我说，脸凑上前去，“是我。克里斯托弗！”

我忽然想到灯光在我后方，在他看来，我可能只像个可怕的黑影。于是我又叫了他的名字，这次，我把手电筒的光移到我脸上。这个动作有可能只是让我看起来像个冤魂厉鬼罢，因为秋良的五官扭曲起来，然后鄙夷地对我啐了一口。由于他没什么力气，只见唾沫慢慢淌下脸颊。

“秋良！是我！能这样遇到你，真是运气。我现在可以帮你。”

他看着我，接着说：“让我死吧。”

“你不会死的，老哥。你流了一点血，这段时间你一定不是很好受。不过我们会帮你好好处理，你会没事的，不要担心。”

“猪猡。猪猡。”

“猪猡？”

“你。猪猡。”他又啐了我一口，唾沫又无力地从嘴角流下。

“秋良。显然你还没认出我是谁。”

“让我死吧。死，像士兵那样。”

“秋良，是我，克里斯托弗。”

“我不认识。你猪。”

“听好，让我把这些绳子除掉。这样你会舒服得多。然后你很快就会清醒过来。”

我扭头回望，想叫他们给我什么工具好切断绳子，却看到房中所有的人，都在我后方不远处聚在一起——许多人手中都握着可以当作武器的东西——仿佛摆好了姿势要拍张魔鬼群像的照片。我有点吃惊——有一会儿我忘了他们的存在——伸手取枪。不过就在这个时候，秋良又提起了精神说：

“如果你割线，我杀你。警告你，懂不懂，英国人？”

“你在说什么呀？听好，你这个蠢蛋，是我，是你的朋友。我正要帮你。”

“你猪。割线。我杀你。”

“听好，这些人会先杀了你。总之，你的伤口很快就会感染。你必须让我帮你。”

忽然有两个中国女人叫了起来。其中一个仿佛在对我说，另一个则对着那群人。有一会儿大家乱成一团，接着有个约十岁的男孩握着一把镰刀走了出来。他走近光线时，我看到一块皮毛——也许是老鼠的残骸——挂在镰刀尖上。我只觉那男孩小心翼翼地握着镰刀，免得这刀尖上的祭品掉落，不过对着我叫喊的那个女人却一把抓住镰刀，那块天知道是什么的东西掉到了地上。

“大家听好，”我站起来，对着这群人厉声高呼，“你们搞错了。这位是好人。他是我的朋友。朋友。”

那个女人又叫喊起来，要我让开。

“他真的不是你们的敌人，”我继续说，“他是朋友。他马上就要帮助我，帮助我破案。”

我举起手枪，那个女人便退后。众人一时议论纷纷，有个小孩哭了起来。接着有位老人被推了出来，有个小女孩牵着他的手。

“我会说英语。”他说。

“那真是太好了，”我说，“请好言告诉大家，这个人是我的朋友。他马上就要帮我的忙。”

“他。日本兵。他杀害芸姨。”

“我肯定他没做这种事。人不是他杀的。”

“他杀人、偷窃。”

“不会是这个人的。这个人名叫秋良。有人看到他杀人偷窃吗，确定是这里的这个人吗？去啊，问问他们。”

老人不太情愿地咕哝了几句话。这更让群情哗然，众人拿了个武器传来传去，那是把磨利的圆锹，最后被前排另一位妇人拿住了。

“怎样？”我问老人，“我没说错吧？没有人看到秋良本人做过任何不对的事情。”

老人摇摇头，也许是不同意，也许是不了解。秋良在我身后发出了声音，于是我转身向他。

“瞧，你看到了吧？还好我来了。他们把你跟别人搞混了，他们想杀你。看在老天的分上，难道你还没认出我吗？秋良！是我，克里斯托弗！”

我不再看着那群人，正面转向他，再把手电筒的光打在脸上。后来，当我把手电筒关掉时，他的脸上总算露出相识的表情。

“克里斯托弗，”他说，那样子近乎牙牙学语。“克里斯托弗。”

“没错，是我。真的。虽然这么多年了，却又仿佛昨日。”

“克里斯托弗，我的朋友。”

我站起来，目光扫过众人，然后招手要一个手持菜刀的男孩靠过来。我从他手上接过刀子时，持镰刀的女人面露凶光走过来，我举起手枪对她吼叫，让她不敢靠近。接着我再度跪在秋良身边，开始帮他割断绳子。我原以为秋良说“线”，是因为他懂的英文字不多，不过此刻我看到绑在他身上的，确实只是旧麻线，刀子一划就断了。

“告诉他们，”我对老人说，这时候秋良的双手已经解开，“告诉他们，他是我的朋友。而且我们要一起去破案。告诉他们，他们弄错了。去啊，告诉他们！”

我转身扶秋良站起来，听到老人咕哝了几句话，那群人又开始议论纷纷。接着秋良小心地坐直身体，看着我。

“我的朋友，克里斯托弗，”他说，“是你，我的朋友。”

我察觉人群围拢上来，于是跳了起来。也许是替朋友着急，我一开口语气便过于强硬：“别再靠近！我会开枪！真的会！”接着转向老人，我大叫：“叫他们退开！跟他们说，不想死的就退开。”

我不知道老人翻译成什么意思。总之，他们让我这么一吼一其实他们的凶狠样子只是纸老虎一便一哄而散。有一半的人以为我要他们靠到左边那面墙边去，其余的人以为我命令他们就地坐下。他们显然都被我的样子吓坏了，大家急着照我的话做，竟乱成一团，你撞我，我踩你，惊呼失声。

秋良知道他得抓住这个机会，想办法要爬起来。我挽住他的臂把他拉起来，我们站了一会儿不动，两人都摇摇晃晃。我不得已把手枪别回腰带，好空出手来，然后我们试着一起往前走一两步。他的伤口散发出一股腐臭味，可是我暂且不去想，侧着头对后面的人群大喊，不管其中有多少人能懂：

“你们很快就会明白！你们很快就会明白你们搞错了！”

“克里斯托弗，”秋良在我耳际喃喃着，“我的朋友。克里斯托弗。”

“听好，”我平静地对他说，“我们得远离这群人。门就在那个角落里。你觉得你走得过去吗？”

秋良重重压在我身上，看看那个暗处。“可以，走吧。”

他的腿似乎没有受伤，脚步还算稳。可是才走了六七步，他就跌倒了，为了别让两人一起摔倒在地，我们相互拉扯，不知情的人看到

了，还以为我们两个在角力。幸好我们摸索出一个方法，又开始走了起来。一度，有个小男孩冲过来朝我们掷泥巴，不过立刻就被拉了回去。接着，秋良跟我走到门边一门板已经不在了一蹒跚地走进隔壁的屋子里去。

第二十章

我们又过了两道墙，还是没有人后头追赶的迹象，我这才感觉到与老友久别重逢的狂喜。我发现我们蹒跚而行的时候，我会自己笑起来；接着秋良也跟着笑，分离的岁月就这么消失无踪了。

“多少年了，秋良？真是好久好久了。”

他在我身边痛苦地跟着，不过也忍着痛说：“好久了，是啊。”

“你知道吗，我回老家去过。我猜你还住隔壁。”

“是啊，隔壁。”

“哦，你也回去了吗？当然啰，你一直留在这里。你不会觉得有什么特别的变化。”

“是啊，”他又费劲地说了一次，“好久，隔壁。”

我停下来让他坐在一片断墙上。接着我小心地除去破烂的军服外套，借着手电筒和放大镜，我再次查看他的伤口。我还是不太确定；我怕他手臂下的伤口会疽烂，不过我忽然想到，或许那股恶臭来自沾在衣服上的东西，或许是他躺过的地上有什么。此外，我发现他身体烧得很厉害，浑身都是汗。

我脱下我的外套，撕下几条衬里权充包扎伤口的纱布。接着我用手帕尽量把伤口拭净。尽管我已经尽量轻柔地把血块拭去，但他偶尔会猛抽一口气，显然我还是弄痛了他。

“对不起，秋良。我会尽量不太粗鲁。”

“粗鲁，”他说，仿佛正在玩味这个词。接着他忽然一笑，然后说：“你帮我。谢谢你。”

“我当然是在帮你。待会儿，我们就帮你找个适当的医护。你马上就没事了。不过在那之前，你必须帮我。我们眼前有件十分紧急的任务，而你比谁都了解为什么这么紧急。是这样子，秋良，我终于找到了。拘禁我父母的房子。此刻，我们就在那附近。你知道吗，老哥，刚才我还在想，我只好单枪匹马冲进去救人了。我也当真会这么做，不过那风险可就大了。天知道里面有多少绑匪。我起先以为我可以跟中国军方要几个人来帮我，结果根本不可能。我甚至还想过要找

日本人帮我。不过，现在我们两个又在一起了，我们一起来，一定可以办到。”

这一路上，我一直想办法把那条临时的绷带好好绕在他身体与脖子间，结结实实地绑好，压住他的伤口。秋良凝神望着我，待我话语稍歇，带着微笑对我说：

“是啊。我帮你。你帮我。好。”

“不过，秋良，我得跟你说实话。我有点迷路。遇到你之前一会儿，我还走得好好的。不过现在，我真的不知道该往哪个方向走了。我们得注意找一个叫‘东炉’的玩意儿。一个有大烟囱的东西。不知道，老哥，你知道哪里可以找到这东西吗？”

秋良继续望着我，胸口剧烈起伏。我一看到他这模样，昔日情景忽然回到眼前：我们那时常常一起坐在我们花园里的草丘下喘气休息。我正要跟他提这往事，他却对我说：

“我知道。我知道这个地方。”

“你知道怎么去‘东炉’？从这里？”

他点点头。“我在这里打仗，好多星期。这里，我知道，就像”——他忽然做了个笑脸——“像我的家乡村子。”

我也笑了，不过这句话我不明白。“你指的是哪个家乡村子？”我问。

“家乡村子，我出生那里。”

“你是说租界？”

秋良静了一会儿，接着说：“嗯。是啊。租界。公共租界。我的家乡村子。”

“的确，”我说，“我想这也算我的家乡村子吧。”

我们两个都笑了起来，有好一阵子还一起大笑傻笑，也许有点停不下来。等我们都比较平静了，我说：

“我跟你讲件奇怪的事情，秋良。这个只有你会懂。我住英国的这些年来，从来没有家的感觉。而公共租界，那里永远是我的家。”

“不过公共租界……”秋良摇摇头，“非常脆弱。明天，后天……”他举手一挥。

“我知道你的意思，”我说，“而我们小的时候，感觉它是如此坚固。不过就像你说的。那是我们的家乡村子。绝无仅有的一个。”

我开始帮他穿上军服，尽量小心不把他弄痛。

“感觉好一点了吗，秋良？抱歉，现在我只能做到这个地步。不久我们就可以让你得到良好的照顾。不过现在，我还有重要的事情要做。你来告诉我怎么走。”

我们前进得很缓慢。我想把手电筒对着前方照射，但这并不容易，我们常常在黑暗中摔倒，秋良吃尽了苦头。一点不假，他不止一次在中途休息时晕了过去，他的身体在我肩上愈压愈沉。我也不是没有受伤；最麻烦的，就是我右脚的鞋口开了，脚上有道深长的伤口，每走一步的疼痛都甚于刀割。有时候我们累得不行了，每走个十几步就得停下来。不过最后我们决定，这种情况不要坐下来，就摇摇晃晃地站着，大口喘气，调整倚靠的姿势，以小痛来代替大痛。他伤口传出的腐臭味愈来愈浓，周围不停传来鼠群奔跑的声音，教人不安。不过在这段时间里，我们没听到战斗声。

我尽可能地为 ourselves 打气，只要我喘得过气，就说些轻松的事。其实对于我们的重逢，在这段时间里，我可谓百感交集。不用说，我非常庆幸命运让我们及时相遇，一起完成这件大事。不过我同时又忍不住为这样的重逢感到难过——我期盼了这么久的事情——竟然发生在这般恶劣的环境里。这跟我一直想像的方式，自然有如云泥之别——我总想像我们俩可以坐在舒适的旅馆会客厅里，或者在秋良家的露台上，俯瞰一片静谧的花园，聊天叙旧谈上好几个钟头。

秋良虽然举步维艰，方向感却始终很清楚。他选的路，我常觉得恐怕是条死巷，可是走到底却会出现通道或门。我们不时会遇到居民，有些只是在黑暗中感知到的身影；有些则围在灯笼或火堆的光线里，他们眼中对秋良充满怨恨，这怨恨让我担心我们会受到围攻。不过我们大半都顺利通过了，没被为难，一度我还用口袋里的最后一张钞票，说服一位老妇给了我们一些饮水。

接着地貌显著地改变了。再也没有人家居住的迹象，就算遇到了人，也都是独自一个，孤魂野鬼似的，眼中只有绝望，或自言自语，或兀自啜泣。而且再也没有完整的门，只有中尉跟我在前半段行程钻过的那种墙洞。每一次过洞都困难重重，秋良每次攀爬——即使他的一举一动都有我协助也一样——都痛彻心肺。

我们早就没说话了，只是每走一步便喘息一声，忽然秋良停下脚步，抬起头来。那时我听到一种声音，有人在发号施令。声音难以听出远近——或许只与我们隔着几栋房子。

“日军吗？”我轻声问他。

秋良又听了一会儿，才摇摇头。

“国民党。克里斯托弗，我们现在非常靠近……靠近……”

“前线？”

“对，前线。我们现在非常靠近前线。克里斯托弗，这非常危险。”

“要到那栋房子，是不是非得经过这一带不可呢？”

“非得不可，对。”

忽然一阵枪响，接着另一处又响起枪声，是一挺机枪在反击。我们的手本能地紧握起来，不过秋良把手松开，坐了下来。

“克里斯托弗，”他平静地说，“我们现在休息。”

“可是我们必须到那栋房子去。”

“我们现在休息。黑暗中走到交战区太危险。我们被杀。必须等早晨。”

我觉得他说得有理，反正我们两个都累得一步都走不动了。于是我也坐下来，把手电筒关掉。

我们在黑暗中坐了一会儿，只有呼吸声打断寂静。忽然枪声又响起，猛烈地持续了一两分钟。声音停得也突然；接着，安静了一会儿之后，有个奇怪的声音穿墙而来。细长的声音有如荒野里动物的长嚎，不过后来却转为声嘶力竭的吼叫，接着是一串短促的尖叫与啜泣声，然后伤者开始喊出成句的话——听起来像极了先前我听到的那个垂死的日本兵，当时我累得神志不清，以为一定是同一个人；我正想跟秋良说这个人真是倒楣到家的时候，却赫然发现他喊的是中文，而非日文。听出是不同的人，让我心冷了一截。他们可怜的哀嚎如此相似——先是惨叫，然后绝望地求救，接着又惨叫，我忽然有个念头，觉得这是我们每个人走向死亡的必经过程——这些凄惨的噪音，是人类共通的语言，就像新生婴儿的哭嚎一样。

过了一会儿，我渐渐开始担心：若是战斗波及我们这个房间，那么我们坐的位置其实是毫无掩蔽的。我正想建议秋良一起挪到比较隐蔽的角落里，却发现他已经睡着了。我又打开手电筒，仔细地照照四周。

就算以这一带的标准来看，这里的破坏也算是严重的。我看得到手榴弹的炸痕，弹孔处处可见，还有残砖、破瓦和断梁。有头死掉的水牛就侧躺在房里，离我们不到七八码远；身上覆满了尘土与瓦砾，一只牛角指向屋顶。我继续四处搜寻，把屋子每一处有可能被交战双方侵入的地方都看了一遍。最要紧的是，我在屋里的另一个角落，在死水牛身后，发现有个砖造的壁龛，也许曾经是火炉或是壁炉。那里看起来是个最安全的角落，可以让我们安然度过夜晚。我把秋良摇醒，把他的手臂绕到我颈后，我们又痛苦地站了起来。

走到了那个壁龛，我把地上的砾石扫开，清出一块平整的木头地板，足够我们两人躺下。我把外套铺好给秋良睡，小心让他用没受伤的那侧躺下。接着我也躺了下来，等着自己睡着。

尽管我已疲惫不堪，但一方面因为那个垂死士兵幽幽不绝的哀嚎，一方面又害怕自己卷入战事，再加上想到还有重大的任务未了，在在都让我无法入睡。我感觉得到秋良也没睡着，后来听到他坐起来的声音，我问他：

“伤口怎么样？”

“我的伤口。没事，没事。”

“让我再看一看……”

“不，不，没事。不过谢谢你。你，好朋友。”

尽管我们才相距几寸，却完全看不到对方。停了好一会儿，我听见他说：

“克里斯托弗。你必须学日语。”

“对，我必须学。”

“不，我是说现在。你现在就学日语。”

“这个嘛，老实说，老兄，这可真不是时候……”

“不，你必须学。假如日本兵进来，我睡觉了，你必须告诉他们。告诉他们我们是朋友。你必须告诉他们，不然他们在黑暗里开

枪。”

“好，我懂你的意思。”

“所以你学。万一我睡觉了。或者我死掉。”

“你听好，我不要你这样胡说。你不用几天就可以活蹦乱跳了。”

接下来又静了一会儿，我记得多年以前，每当我的言语里，多了一些惯用语的东西，他就会跟不上。因此我又相当缓慢地说：

“你会完全康复。你明白吗，秋良？有我在这儿呢。你会康复的。”

“真好。”他说，“不过小心是最好的。你必须学会说。用日文。假如日本兵来。我教你字。你记住。”

于是他用他的母语说了什么，不过因为句子太长，我要他停下来。

“不，不要了，这个我永远学不会。短一点句子罢。只要能让人知道我们不是敌人就好了。”

他想了一会儿，接着又念了一个句子，只比刚才那句略短一些。我试了试，不过他立刻说：

“不对，克里斯托弗。错误。”

又试了几次之后，我说：“嘿，这样是没有用的。就教我一个字吧。‘朋友’这个字好了。再长的，今晚我是应付不来了。”

“托莫达契，”他说，“你就说，托一莫一达一契。”

我复诵这个字几次，以为念得完美无瑕，才发现秋良在黑暗中偷笑。我发现自己也笑了起来，接着，旧戏又重演，我们两个又笑得想停也停不住。我们也许又笑了整整一分钟，后来，我想我就突然睡着了。

我醒来的时候，破晓的曙光照进了房内。那光线苍白泛蓝，仿佛整个黑暗只被掀起了一层。垂死的那个人已无声息，却有只鸟儿不知道在哪里歌唱。此刻我可以看出屋顶的大半已经不见了，我双肩紧顶着砖墙，从我躺卧之处，可以看到清晨的天空里还有星星。

我发现有东西在动，于是紧张地坐了起来。接着我看到三四只老鼠在死水牛附近钻动，有一会儿，我就坐在那儿盯着它们看。直到此刻，我才转身看着秋良，害怕他会有什么三长两短。他静静地躺在我身边，脸色非常苍白，看到他呼吸平稳我才松了一口气。我找出放大镜，仔细检查他的伤口，不过却把他惊醒了。

“是我。”我轻声说，他慢慢坐起来，四处看了看。他一脸惊恐与迷惑，接着似乎想起了一切，眼中浮现麻木的坚定眼神。

“你做梦了吗？”我问。

他点点头。“对，做梦。”

“希望你梦到的地方比这里好。”我笑着说。

“没错。”他叹了口气，补充道，“我梦见我是小男孩的时候。”

我们静了一会儿。接着我说：

“那你一定受到了强烈的震撼。从你梦中的世界，掉到现在这个世界。”

他盯着从瓦砾堆里突出来的死水牛头看。

“没错，”他半晌后才说，“我梦见我还是小男孩的时候。我母亲、我父亲。小男孩。”

“你记得，秋良。你记得所有我们以前玩的游戏吧？在那座草丘上，在我们的花园里？你记得吧，秋良？”

“是的，我记得。”

“那是美好的回忆。”

“没错，非常美好的回忆。”

“那些日子真幸福，”我说，“只不过当时我们人在福中不知福。孩子又能知道什么，不是吗。”

“我有孩子，”秋良忽然说，“男孩。五岁大。”

“真的？我想见见他。”

“我掉照片。昨天。前天。我受伤时。我掉照片。儿子的。”

“听好，老哥，别气馁。你不久就可以再见到你儿子了。”

他盯着水牛，望了一阵子。忽然有只老鼠一窜，密密麻麻的一群苍蝇飞了起来，接着又全部落回死牛身上。

“我儿子。他在日本。”

“哦，你把他送回日本，这倒是让我很意外。”

“我儿子。在日本。假如我死，你告诉他，拜托。”

“告诉他你死了？对不起，这个我办不到。因为你不会死。至少现在还不会。”

“你告诉他，我为国家死。告诉他，要孝顺母亲。保护。并且建造美好世界。”此刻他的声音细若游丝，努力地寻找恰当的英文，同时强忍着眼泪。“建造美好世界，”他又说了，手往空中一挥，仿佛泥水匠正在把墙抹平。他的眼神跟着手晃，仿佛看到了一片美景。

“对，建造美好世界。”

“我们还小的时候，”我说，“我们住在一个美好的世界里。这些孩子，路上遇到的这些孩子，这么小就看到人世间真实的丑陋面貌，何其不幸。”

“我儿子，”秋良说，“五岁大。在日本。他都不知道，都不知道。他认为世界是美好的地方。好人。他的玩具。他的母亲、父亲。”

“我想我们也曾经那样。不过我想事情也不会永远那么糟。”我现在尽全力要打消笼罩在我朋友心头的不安与消沉，“毕竟我们小的时候，当事情变糟时，我们也无力拨正。不过现在我们是大人了，现在我们有办法了。这就是重点。看看我们自己，秋良。这么多年来，我们终于可以把事情匡正过来了。记得吗，老哥，以前我们都玩些什么游戏？一遍又一遍？我们怎么假装我们是警探，寻找我的父亲？现在我们长大了，我们可以把事情匡正过来。”

秋良好久都没说话。后来他说：“等我儿子。他发现世界不好。我希望……”他停了，也许因为痛苦，也许因为找不到适当的英文。他说了句日文，接着才又说道：“我希望我和他一起。帮助他。当他发现。”

“你听我说，大傻瓜，”我说，“说这么丧气的话干什么。你本来就会再见到你儿子。有我在这儿呢。还有，说什么我们小时候世界

多美好，你也可以说那是一派胡言。那只是大人制造的假象。我们不该对童年这么念念不忘。”

“念一念一不一忘，”秋良说着，仿佛这是他拼命想要找出来的词。接着他又说了个日本字，也许是日语的“念念不忘”。“念一念一不一忘。念念不忘是好事。非常重要。”

“真的吗？老朋友？”

“重要啊。非常重要。念念不忘。当我们念念不忘，我们记得。一个更好的世界，好过我们长大后发现的这个世界。我们记得，而且希望美好的世界再回来。所以非常重要。刚才，我做了梦。我是小孩。母亲、父亲，在我身边。在我们家。”

他沉默下来，一直望着瓦砾堆的另一边。

“秋良，”我说，觉得这样的谈话持续得愈久，我们就愈危险，但我实在不想讲明，“我们该走了。我们还有好多事要做。”

一阵机枪声响起，仿佛在回应我这句话。枪响的距离比昨晚的远，不过我们俩都吓了一跳。

“秋良，”我说，“现在离那房子远吗？我们必须想办法在战斗再度白热化以前赶到那里。到底还有多远？”

“不远。不过我们小心走。中国士兵非常近。”

我们的睡眠不但没让我们恢复体力，反而让我们更加虚弱。我们站起来的时候，秋良压在我肩上，酸痛传遍我的颈部与肩膀，我忍不住开口呻吟。刚开始，身体尚未习惯，每一步都痛苦不堪。

不仅我们的身体状况不佳，那天早上走过的那一带，困难更甚于从前。破坏的范围如此广泛，我们常常停下来，连绕过瓦砾的路都找不到。尽管看得清脚下该踩哪里确实有所帮助，可是原先隐藏在黑暗里的恐怖景象，现在都呈现在眼前，这让我们精神大受震惊。在断垣残壁间，我们看到血迹——有的还鲜红欲滴，有的则风干多时——地上、墙上都有，也有些溅在破家具上。更糟糕的是一而且鼻子比眼睛更早发出警告——我们会遇到一堆又一堆人的肠子，遇到的次数多得惊人，腐败的程度各不相同。有一次我们停下来，我就对秋良提起这点，他只是淡淡地说：

“刺刀。士兵都把刺刀刺进肚子。假如刺这里”——他指着肋间——“刺刀拔不出来。所以士兵学会。一定刺肚子。”

“至少他们把尸体清走了。至少他们做了这个。”

我们不时还听到枪声，每次听到，我就觉得我们离战斗又近了些。这让我担心，不过秋良现在似乎更加确定我们的方向了，每一次我质疑他选的路，他都不耐烦地摇头。

我们来到两个中国士兵陈尸的地方时，一束束早晨的阳光已经赤炎炎地从屋顶缺口射下。我们离尸体有段距离，没办法仔细查看，不过我猜想他们可能才死了不到几个钟头。一个俯卧在瓦砾堆里；另一个跪着死去，前额靠在砖墙上，仿佛伤痛欲绝。

有一度，我心中强烈预感我们就要误入火网，便拉住秋良说：

“听我说。你到底想做什么？你要带我去哪？”

他没回答，只是倚着我站着，垂着头调整呼吸。

“你真的知道我们要往哪儿去吗？秋良，回答我！你知道我们要往哪儿去吗？”

他疲惫地抬起头，然后朝我背后一指。

我转身——我只能慢慢移动，因为他还倚在我身上一从断墙的缺口望出去，才十几步远的地方，无疑就是“东炉”。

我没说话，只是带着他走过去。“东炉”和“西炉”都逃过了战火摧残。外表虽然尘土满布，不过看起来还能正常运作。我把秋良放开——他立刻在瓦砾堆上坐下——直接走到炉边。就像在“西炉”一样，我看到直入云霄的烟囱。我回到秋良坐下的地方，轻轻地碰了碰他的肩膀。

“秋良，对不起，我刚才用那种语气。我想告诉你，我很感激你。光靠我自己绝对到不了这里。真的，秋良，我好感激。”

“好。”他的呼吸顺畅了一点，“你帮助我。我帮助你。好。”

“可是秋良，那栋房子一定就在这附近了。让我看看。从这里开始”——我指过去——“巷子通到那边去。我们必须走那条巷子。”

秋良看起来不愿动身，不过我把他拉了起来，于是我们又出发了。我走的这条巷子，显然就是中尉从屋顶指给我看的那条，不过没走几步，我们就发现巷道全给掉落的瓦砾砖块堵住了。我们爬过一堵墙，进入邻近的房子，再走进我觉得应该是平行的一条路，在遍地瓦砾的房间里找路。

我们现在经过的这些房子，受损没那么严重，而且明显比先前经过的区域要体面些。屋里有椅子、梳妆台，有的镜子和花瓶甚至还完整无缺地留在断垣残壁之间。我急着要继续前进，不过秋良的身体开始支撑不住了，我们只好再停下来。我们坐在一根断落地面的横梁上，两人正试着把气喘过来时，我瞥见一块手绘的门牌，躺在我们面前的瓦砾之中。

这门牌已顺着本身的纹路，整齐地断裂开来，不过两片木头却并排掉落在地上；我还看得出过去将这块门牌固定在前门上的格框。这绝非我们头一次遇见这样一件物什，但不知怎的，我一时心血来潮，特别注意这块门牌。我走过去，从残砖破瓦中取出这两片木头，把它们拿到我们坐下的地方。

“秋良，”我说，“你看得懂这写什么吗？”我把两片木头凑起来，送到他面前。

他盯着上头的字看了一会儿，才说：“我的中文，不好。一个名字。什么人的名字。”

“秋良，你仔细听好。看看这些字。你一定知道它们是什么字。拜托，仔细看一看。这个非常重要。”

他又看了看，然后摇头。

“秋良，听好，”我说，“这个中文会不会就是‘叶辰’两个字？上头写的，有没有可能就是这个名字？”

“叶辰……”秋良露出思考的表情，“叶辰。没错，有可能。这里这个字……没错，有点像。这写的是叶辰。”

“真的？你确定？”

“不确定。不过……有可能。非常有可能。没错”——他点了一下头——“叶辰。我想就是。”

我放下那两片木头，小心绕过瓦砾堆到我们所在的屋子前面。原先是大门的地方有个缺口，从那里望出去，可以看见外头的窄巷。我看着正对面的房子。它左邻右舍的门面全都被炸成了断壁残垣，惟独我眼前的这栋房子不可思议地逃过了战火的摧残。看不出任何明显的损坏痕迹：窗户上的窗板、简陋的木制窗格，甚至挂在走廊上的符咒，全都毫无损伤。看过一路上的惨况，这栋房子反而像是从另一个

比较文明的世界来的幽灵。我站在那里凝望了一会儿。接着我朝秋良打了个手势。

“嘿，过来。”我尽量压低声音，“一定就是这栋房子了。不会是别栋。”

秋良没动，不过深深叹了口气。“克里斯托弗。你，朋友。我，非常喜欢。”

“小声一点好吗。秋良，我们到了。就是这栋屋子。我打从骨子里肯定就是这里。”

“克里斯托弗……”他挣扎着站起来，慢慢绕过来。等他走到我身边，我把那栋房子指给他看。早晨的阳光照进巷子，形成几道明亮的光柱打在那屋子的门面上。

“那里，秋良，那栋房子就在那里。”

他在我脚边坐下，又叹了一口气。“克里斯托弗。我的朋友。你必须想清楚。都好多年了。到现在好多、好多年了……”

“很奇怪，不是吗？”我说，“战斗竟然一点都没有波及这栋房子。竟然没有波及我父母所在的这栋房子。”

说这些话的同时，我突然觉得整个人快要崩溃了。不过我马上镇定下来并说：“现在，秋良，我们得进去。我们要一起进去，手挽着手。就像当年一起进凌田的房间那样。你还记得吗，秋良？”

“克里斯托弗。我亲爱的朋友。你必须想得非常清楚。都好多、好多年了。我的朋友，请你听我说。也许父亲和母亲。到现在好多、好多年了……”

“我们现在要一起进去。然后，等我们把该做的事做好了，我们就帮你找适当的医护，相信我。其实，说不定那里头就有些东西，有急救箱，就在那栋房子里。至少有清水，也许还有绷带。我母亲可以帮你看看伤口，也许还可以给你换上干净的绷带。不要担心，你马上就会没事的。”

“克里斯托弗。你必须想得非常清楚。这么多年过去……”

他没说下去，因为对面的门嘎的一声滑开了。我还来不及拔出手枪，就见到一个中国小女孩走出来。

她约莫六岁，脸上有种宁静的表情，有几分俏丽。她的头发仔细地扎成一束一束的。她身上的外套与宽松的长裤稍微大了些。

她环顾四周，眯着眼睛看看日光，然后又朝我们望过来。她一眼就看到我们——我们俩谁也没动——然后朝我们走来，竟然一点害怕的样子也没有。她停在巷子当中，距离我们几码远，用中文说了几句话，手指着屋子。

“秋良，她说什么？”

“不懂。也许邀请我们进去。”

“不过她怎么会跟这事有关？你觉得她跟绑匪有关联吗？她说什么？”

“我想她要我们帮助她。”

“我们得叫她走开，”我说，一边拔出手枪，“我们得提防有人反抗。”

“没错，她要我们帮助。她说她的狗受伤了。我想她说狗。我的中文，不好。”

我们看着她的时候，从她梳理整齐的发束下缘某处，有一道细细的血流过她的前额淌到脸颊上。小女孩似乎浑然不觉，又开口跟我们说话，手又朝屋子指了一指。

“没错，”秋良说，“她说狗。狗受伤了。”

“她的狗？是她受伤了吧！也许还伤得不轻。”

我朝她靠近一步，想要检查她的伤势。可是她以为我要跟她走，便转身边跑边跳，越过巷道回到她家门口。她又把门推开，回头用眼神哀求我们，接着便进屋子里去了。

我站在那里，犹豫了一会儿。接着我把手伸给地上的朋友。

“秋良，时候到了，”我说，“我们得进去。我们现在一起进去吧。”

第二十一章

走过巷子的时候，我设法把枪举在前方。不过秋良的手臂绕在我颈子上，我必须支持他大半的重量，我想我们一起走向那栋房子的步履蹒跚，一点威武的样子也没有。我隐约瞄见玄关旁边立了一只装饰用的花瓶，我相信门梁上挂的装饰物在我们从旁拂过时，发出了细微的叮咚声。接着我听到小女孩说话的声音，于是抬头看看四周。

尽管房子的门面几乎丝毫无损，但这一户的后半部却已夷为平地。今日回想起来，我猜想应该是有颗炮弹从屋顶穿过，砸垮了上层楼房，并且炸毁了房子的后半部，以及后面比邻的房舍。不过当时我最想找的是我父母，我不确定我到底注意到了什么。我先是高兴了一下——绑匪弃守逃走了。接着我看到尸体，又很害怕那会是我父母——绑匪看到我们过来就把他们杀害了。我必须坦承，当我看到室内的三具尸体都是中国人时，我的感觉是松了一大口气。

靠近屋后，在墙那边，有具女人的尸体，大概是女孩的母亲。可能是爆炸让她飞过去，人就躺在落地之处。她的脸上带着震惊的表情，一只手臂齐肘折断。此时她以断臂指着天空，也许是要指示炮弹飞来的方向。几码外的瓦砾堆里，有位老太太也同样张口睁眼，对着天花板上的大洞。她脸的一侧已经焦黑，不过我没看到血或是其他明显的伤口。最后，就在最靠近我们站立之处的地方——压在倒下的架子底下，我们起先没看到——有个男孩，只比那个带我们进来的女孩大一点。他的一条腿从臀部炸断，伤口处拖着肠子，长得出奇，有如装饰在风筝后面的长尾巴。

“狗。”秋良在我身边说。

我看着他，然后顺着他凝视的方向望去。在废墟中央，离男童尸体不远处，小女孩跪在一只受伤侧卧的狗旁边，温柔地抚摸着它的毛。狗尾巴虚弱地摇动回应。我们站在那儿看着她，她抬头看我们，说了几句话，声音依然相当镇定而平稳。

“她在说什么，秋良？”

“我想她说我们帮助狗，”秋良说，“没错，她说我们帮助狗。”接着，他忽然无助地傻笑起来。

小女孩又说了一次，这次只对着我说，也许她当秋良是疯子而不理他。接着她把脸俯到狗身边，继续温柔地抚摸它的毛。

我放开我朋友的手臂，朝她走近了一步，我手一松，秋良就垮到一旁的破家具上。我吓了一跳，回头看看，他却继续傻笑；另一边，女孩的请求也没停。我把手枪放在一旁，走到她身边，碰碰她的肩膀。

“听我说……这一切”——我指着这片屠杀的现场，而她似乎视而不见——“这真是噩运。不过你瞧，你逃过一劫，真的，你可以表现得很好，只要你……只要你继续保持你的勇气……”我不悦地转向秋良，对他吼叫，“秋良！别吵了！看在老天的分上，没什么好笑的！这可怜的女孩……”

不过女孩这时抓住我的袖子。她又说了一次，仔细而缓慢，正视着我的眼睛。

“听我说，真的，”我说，“你好勇敢。我对你发誓，不管是谁造成了这一切，不管是谁做了这些可怕的事情，他们会得到报应的。你也许不知道我是谁，不过我正好……呃，我正好是你需要的人。我保证这些人逃不掉的。你不用担心。我会……我会……”我从刚才就开始在外套里摸东西，直到现在才掏出一把放大镜，拿给她看，“瞧，你明白吗？”

我踢开挡在我前面的鸟笼，走到那位母亲倒卧之处。接着，或许只是出于习惯，没什么特别的原因，我弯下去用放大镜检查她。她的断臂看起来断得好整齐；突在肌肉外面的那截骨头白得发亮，几乎像磨光打亮过似的。

我记忆里的这些时刻已不再清晰。不过我觉得应该就在这时候，刚刚用放大镜看完那女人的断臂，我忽然挺直身子，开始寻找我父母。我只能说——这部分解释了随后发生的事——秋良还在他跌坐下来的地方傻笑，女孩则继续在那儿哀求，语气依旧平稳而坚定。换言之，气氛变得无法控制，或许这就是为什么我后来会那样行事，把小屋里所剩的每件东西全都翻了个遍。

后头还有一个很小的房间，完全被炸毁了，我从那里开始寻找，把木头地板掀起来，用一根桌脚把倒地的储物柜门打破。后来我又回到最大的那个房间，开始把瓦砾堆推到一侧，遇到任何踢不开、推不动的，我就用那根桌脚锤打。后来，我发现秋良不再傻笑，而是跟在我后面走，拉着我的肩膀，在我耳边说话。我没管他，继续我的搜

寻，甚至一个不留神把一具尸体掀翻都没停下来。秋良继续拉我的肩膀，过了一阵子，我实在不明白为什么我指望能帮我的这个人，竟然不停地阻挠我，我转身向他，大喊类似这样的话：

“你滚开！滚开！如果你不想帮我，就走开！滚回你的角落里傻笑去！”

“士兵！”他嘘声对我说，“士兵来了！”

“你滚开！我母亲，我父亲！他们在哪里？他们没在这里！他们在哪里？他们在哪里？”

“士兵！克里斯托弗，停下，你必须冷静！你必须冷静，不然我们被杀！克里斯托弗！”

他抓着我用力晃，把脸贴近我的脸。这时我才明白，确实有人声从附近传来。

秋良把我拉到房间最深处。那个小女孩，我发现她不再说话，正温柔地抱着狗的头轻摇。狗尾巴仍然有一搭没一搭微弱地摆着。

“克里斯托弗，”秋良急切地在我耳边说，“假如，士兵，中国人，我必须躲。”他指指角落，“中国士兵，必须不找到。但是假如日本人，你必须说我教的字。”

“我什么也不会说，听好，老兄，如果你不愿意帮我……”

“克里斯托弗！士兵来了！”

他摇摇晃晃走过房间，躲进角落里的储物柜。柜子的门破损得很厉害，因此他整截小腿与靴子都可以透过门板看到。这样的躲法实在可笑，我笑了出来，正当我要叫说我还能看到他时，士兵就从大门进来了。

第一个进来的士兵，用步枪对我射击，不过子弹打在我身后的墙上。他随即发现我举起双手，又是个外国平民，便对同伴喊了句话，他们随即在他身后围上来。这些士兵是日军，接下来我只记得其中三四个开始争论该怎么处置我，整个过程里，大家的枪口都对着我。后来又进来了更多的士兵，还开始搜查屋内。我听到秋良从藏身处喊了句日文，士兵便团团围住他的柜子，我看见他爬了出来。我注意到他们双方相见，似乎没有显得特别高兴。其他人围着小女孩，也在争论该怎么做。接着有位军官进来，所有的士兵都在一旁立正，室内静了下来。

这位军官——一位年轻的上尉——环顾室内。他的目光先落在小女孩身上，接着在我身上，然后盯着此时由两名日本兵架着的秋良。接下来他们开始用日语交谈，秋良却没有开口的余地。他眼中无奈的眼神里，出现了一抹恐惧。他一度想跟上尉说话，可是上尉马上要他闭嘴。接着他们又简短地谈了几句，士兵们便把秋良带走了。此时他脸上的恐惧明显可见，但他没有反抗。

“秋良！”我朝他的身影呼喊，“秋良，他们要带你去哪儿？出了什么问题？”

秋良回头一望，对我温柔地笑了一下。接着他就走进巷子里去，被围在他身边的士兵挡住看不见了。

年轻的上尉正望着小女孩。接着他对我说：

“你，英国人？”

“是的。”

“请问，你在这里做什么？”

“我在……”我看看四周。“我在寻找我父母。我姓班克斯，名叫克里斯托弗·班克斯。我是著名的侦探。也许你……”

我不知道我该怎么说下去，而且，我发现我已经啜泣好一会儿了，这给上尉留下了坏印象。我揩揩脸，继续说：“我来这里找我父母。不过他们已经不在这里了。我来晚了。”

上尉再度环顾这些断垣残壁、尸体、抱着垂死的狗的小女孩。接着他对身边的士兵吩咐了一些事，眼睛一直盯着我。最后他对我说：“先生，请随我来。”

他以礼貌却坚定的手势，指示我应当跟他走到巷子里。他没把手枪收回枪套，却也没再将枪口对着我。

“小女孩呢？”我说，“你会不会把她带到安全的地方？”

他回头静静盯着我。接着他说：“先生，请你现在就走。”

日本人对我的照顾，大致上还算得体。他们把我安置在指挥所后面的小房间——这里原先是消防队——供应我食物，还有一位医生治疗我的几处伤口，那些伤什么时候弄的，我几乎都不知道。我的脚裹了绷带，他们还给我一双大号的皮靴方便我穿进去。看管我的士兵不会说英语，似乎不确定我是囚是客，不过我也累得管不了那么多；我躺在

他们置于这间密室的行军床上，一连好几个钟头时醒时睡。房门并没有上锁；事实上，与隔壁办公室相通的门还关不拢，因此每当我恢复意识，就会听到有人用日语争论或者对着电话筒吼叫，我猜是跟我有关吧。如今我怀疑，那段时间里，我大半时候一定有点发烧；总之，在半睡半醒之间，脑子里盘旋萦绕的，不只是过去几个小时发生的事，还有过去几周的事。接着，那些杂念逐一沉淀消散，到了向晚时分，长谷川上校把我叫醒，我发现我对整个案情向来困扰我的部分，有了全新的观点。

长谷川上校——一位外表干净利落的男士，年约四十一礼貌地自我介绍，然后说：“我很高兴您已经好多了，班克斯先生。我相信他们把您照顾得很好。我很高兴告诉您，上层指示我护送您回英国领事馆。容我建议我们立即出发。”

“那当然，上校，”我说，一边小心翼翼地站起来，“我倒是想起一个地方，不知可否通融一下，先带我去那里。是这样子，这事有点急。我不太清楚那里确切的地址，不过离南京路不远。也许您知道那里。是一家唱片行。”

“您急着买唱片吗？”

我实在没力气解释，只是说：“这事很要紧。愈快到那里愈好。”

“可惜上层指示我带您到英国领事馆，先生。若带您到别处，恐怕十分不便。”

我叹了口气。“我想您说的是，上校。反正，我现在赶去，我猜，也已经太晚了。”

上校看看腕表。“是啊，恐怕是有点晚。但容我提议，假如我们立刻动身，您的音乐欣赏之旅，受到的延误就会最少。”

我们搭乘敞篷军车，由上校的侍从开车。那是个晴朗的下午，阳光照耀着闸北区的废墟。我们缓缓前进，因为，尽管路当中的瓦砾大半都已清除——在路边堆积如山——路面却已经炸得坑坑洼洼。我们偶尔会经过几乎没有损坏的街道；但是一转过街角，就全是断垣残壁，一片狼藉，仅存的电线杆也都东倒西歪，电缆乱缠。当我们驶过这样的地区，我一度发现视线可以越过一大片夷平的废墟，瞥见那两座锅炉的烟囱。

“英国是个伟大的国家，”长谷川上校说，“平静、尊贵。美丽的绿色原野。她依然是我的梦想。还有英国文学。狄更斯、萨克雷。《呼啸山庄》。我尤其偏爱贵国的狄更斯。”

“上校，恕我提起一事。昨天贵国士兵找到我的时候，还有别人在场。一名日本士兵。您会不会碰巧知道他现在怎么了？”

“那名士兵。我不确定他的下场如何。”

“不知道要怎样才能再见到他？”

“您想再见到他？”上校表情严肃起来，“班克斯先生，容我建议您，别与那名士兵有任何牵扯。”

“上校，您是否认为他犯了什么错？”

“犯了错？”他望着路旁的废墟，面带温和的笑容，“我们几乎可以断定他泄漏军情给敌方。他可能就是用这个作为脱困的条件。我知道您自己也说，是在国民党的防线附近遇到他的。这明白显示他懦弱与通敌。”

我正想反驳，然而我明白，与上校起冲突，对我、对秋良都没有好处。我好一会儿没有答话，他又说：

“感情用事并不理智。”

他的发音原本相当纯正，倒是在“感情用事”这词上有点结巴——他念得太重，听起来倒像日语。这句话我听来刺耳，便转头不予理会。过了一会儿，他却以同情的口吻说：

“这名士兵。您与他曾经认识？”

“我以为认识。我以为他是我儿时的旧友。不过现在我不太确定了。我开始明白，许多事情，都不像我所以为的那样。”

上校点点头。“我们的儿时似乎已经远去。这一切”——他挥手指向车外——“这一切苦难。我们日本有位诗人，一位古代的仕女，抒发过这种感伤。她写道，我们一旦长大成人，儿时就变得像另一个国度。”

“对我来说，上校，那可一点都不是另一个国度。从许多方面来看，我的一生都是在那里度过的。直到现在，我才开始踏出那里，展开我的旅程。”

我们通过日军检查哨进入虹桥，这里位于租界的北区。这一区除了有紧张的备战状态，也和其他地方一样，有战火摧残的痕迹。我看到许多沙包堆，以及载满士兵的卡车。接近运河时，上校说：

“班克斯先生，我也像您一样，喜欢音乐。尤其是贝多芬、门德尔松、勃拉姆斯。还有肖邦。第三号奏鸣曲真是优美。”

“像您这样有文化素养的人，上校，”我说，“必然会为这一切感到遗憾。我是说贵国侵略中国，造成尸横遍野的惨况。”

我害怕他会生气，然而他面带平静的笑容说：

“这的确教人遗憾，我同意。不过日本如果要成为伟大的国家，像贵国一样，班克斯先生，这就无法避免了。就像英国的过去一样。”

我们有一会儿没有交谈。接着他问道：

“我敢说，您昨天在闸北区一定看到什么不愉快的景象吧？”

“是的。确实如此。”

他忽然诡异地笑了一声，令人为之一颤。“班克斯先生，”他说，“您明白吗？您有没有任何概念，往后还有什么样不愉快的景象要发生？”

“如果贵国继续侵略中国，我敢说……”

“容我说明，先生”——他这时候说得眉飞色舞——“我不只是指中国而已。我指的是全世界，班克斯先生，全世界都要卷入战火。您昨日在闸北区之所见，不过是大火燎原之前的一个小小火花而已！”这些话他说得趾高气扬，接着却又哀伤地摇摇头，“那将何等可怕，”他平静地说，“何等可怕。您想像不到的，先生。”

我不太记得回来以后的最初几个钟头如何了。不过我猜想，我变得跟流浪汉相去不远，让日军的军车送我回到英国领事馆前的草坪，这点对于租界焦急的居民来说，恐怕振奋不了什么人心。我隐约记得领事馆的人冲出来接我，把我带进大楼，我也隐约记得英国总领事从楼梯上赶下来时脸上的那副表情。我忘了他对我说的第一句话是什么，不过我倒是记得我好像还没跟他寒暄问候，就先说：

“乔治先生，我必须要求您，让我立刻见您的属下麦克唐纳。”

“麦克唐纳？您是指约翰·麦克唐纳吗？怎么，你找他做什么呢，老弟？听好，你需要的是好好休息。我们有医生可以照顾你……”

“我承认我看起来蓬头垢面。别担心，我这就去洗把脸。不过拜托您，立刻请麦克唐纳先生下来。此事关系重大。”

我被带到领事馆里的客房，我想办法好好刮了胡子，洗个热水澡，尽管一直有人来敲我的门。其中有一位是个一本正经的苏格兰外科医生，他把我检查了半个钟头，认为我还对他隐瞒了什么重大伤势没说。其他人则是来关心我还有什么需要服务的地方，我至少对其中三位不耐烦地询问麦克唐纳到底准备好了没有。我得到的只是含糊的答复，说什么麦克唐纳还没找到；接着，随着夜幕低垂，我一身的疲惫——也许是因为那个医生开给我的药里有什么特殊成分——让我沉沉入睡。

我一直睡到第二天早上才醒来。我要他们把早餐送到房里，换上了干净的衣服，那是昨晚我睡觉的时候，他们从华懋饭店取来的。我精神好多了，决定当下就要自己去把麦克唐纳给揪出来。

我以为上次走过一次，就找得到麦克唐纳的办公室，不过领事馆大楼盖得有点像迷宫，我不得不向几位碰巧擦肩而过的人问路。我还是有点弄不清方向，正打算走下一道楼梯，就碰巧瞥见塞西尔·梅德赫斯特爵士的身影出现在我底下的楼梯平台。

早晨的阳光从平台上的落地窗泻下，照亮他身后一大片的灰石墙。平台上没有别人，塞西尔爵士略微躬身向前，双手叠握在身后，俯瞰楼下领事馆前的草地。我本想退回楼上，可是大楼的那部分十分清静，我的脚步声随时都有可能吸引他抬头。我索性走下楼去，来到他身边，他转过身来，仿佛早就察觉我的一举一动。

“早啊，老弟，”他说，“听说你回来了。不妨告诉你，你的失踪引起不小的恐慌哟。觉得好些了吗？”

“没事了，多谢关心。就是这只脚还有点肿。鞋子套不太进去。”

阳光照在他脸上，让他看起来年迈而疲倦。他又转向窗户，凝视着外面；我移到他身旁，也望着外头。在我们底下，三个印度籍的警察在草地上忙进忙出，把沙包堆成一排。

“你可听说她走了？”塞西尔爵士问。

“听说了。”

“当然啦，当你跟她同时失踪的时候，我自然以为是那么回事。我猜，还有些人也有同样的想法。所以我早上才会在这里。我要向你道歉。不过他们说你还醒，所以我就……我就先逛到这里来。”

“实在没有什么好抱歉的，塞西尔爵士。”

“当然有。我想那天晚上我四处说了些话。你知道的，妄下结论。当然啦，现在大家都知道是我错了。但是无论如何，我觉得我还是亲自来向你解释比较好。”

底下来了个拉着轮车的中国苦力，运来更多的沙包。印度籍的警察开始卸货。

“她有留信吗？”我问，尽量装得毫不知情的样子。

“没有。不过我早上收到一封电报。哪，她人在澳门。说她平安无事。她自己一人，不久还会写信等等。”接着他转身抓住我的手肘，“班克斯，我知道你也会想念她。从某方面来看，哪，我倒宁愿她是跟你走了。我知道她……她对你可是大有好感。”

“您一定十分震惊。”我这么说，不知道还能说什么。

塞西尔爵士转过身去，有一阵子凝视着楼下的警察。接着他说：“倒也没有，老实告诉你。我一点都不意外。”接着他又说下去，“我一直告诉她，她该离开，我叫她离开我，去寻找爱情，我是说，真爱。这是她应得的，对不对？她应该是去追寻了。去寻找真爱。也许她就找到了。在南中国海上，谁知道？她变得浪漫了，我得让她自由。”此时他泪水盈眶。

“您现在有什么打算？”我语气和缓地问他。

“我有什么打算？天知道。我想也该回家了吧。我想就这么办。回家。等我把几笔债还清了就走，没错。”

打从刚才我就听到有脚步声在我身后走下楼梯，此时脚步声慢了下来，并且完全停住，我们两个一起转过身来，看到的竟是格雷森，那个工部局的代表，我有点慌。

“早安，班克斯先生。早安，塞西尔爵士。班克斯先生，真高兴见到您安然无恙回来。”

“谢谢您，格雷森先生。”他就站在那阶楼梯上不走，一味傻笑着，我补充道，“我相信那极司菲尔公园欢迎典礼的筹备事宜，进度一定符合您的要求啰？”

“哦，当然，当然。”他含糊地笑了一声，“不过此刻，班克斯先生，我来找您，是因为我听说您想跟麦克唐纳先生说话。”

“没错，是有这么回事。老实说，我正要上去找他呢。”

“唉，可是他不会在他平时的办公室里。如果您肯跟我走，我现在就可以带您去找他。”

我在塞西尔爵士肩上轻轻地握一握——他转向窗户藏住眼泪——然后我就踩着急切的脚步跟格雷森走了。

他带我走过大楼里无人的一区，接着我们走到一道走廊，一整排都是办公室。我听到讲电话的声音，后来有人从其中一间走出来，向格雷森点点头。格雷森打开另一间的门，挥手示意让我先行入室。

我走进一间狭小但布置得宜的办公室，里头塞了一张大办公桌。我在门槛边上就停住了，因为办公室里空无一人，可是格雷森用肘触了我一下，把我推进去，然后把门关上。他接着绕过办公桌坐下，姿势指着一个空座位。

“格雷森先生，”我说，“我没时间跟您玩这些愚蠢的把戏。”

“对不起，”格雷森说，“我知道您想见麦克唐纳。不过，您知道的，麦克唐纳的职责属于礼宾司。他的确十分称职，不过他的职权恐怕非常有限。”

我不耐烦地叹了口气，不过我还来不及说话，格雷森就继续说：

“是这样，老兄，您刚才说您想见麦克唐纳，我就猜您想见的人是我。我才是您该找的人啊。”

我这才发现格雷森起了一点变化。他逢迎奉承的态度已然消失，他隔着办公桌盯着我看。等他看到我露出明白状况的眼神，又再次指着那个座位。

“请自便，老兄。我得道歉，从您来到此地，我就四处尾随。不过是这样子，我得确定您不会出什么纰漏，把其他势力给惹毛了。哪，让我猜猜，您想跟‘黄蛇’碰面。”

“没错，格雷森先生。不知道您可否安排此事？”

“可巧了，就在您离开的时候，我们终于得到回音。各方似乎都乐意答应您的要求。”接着他倾身向前对我说，“所以，班克斯先生。您觉得您快破案了吗？”

“是的，格雷森先生。好不容易，我相信快了。”

因此昨夜刚过十一点，我就乘车驶过优雅的法租界住宅区，随行的两位中国秘密警察。我们开过一条林荫大道，经过一些豪宅，其中有几栋完全隐藏在高墙与围篱之后。接着我们驶入重重大门，每道都有许多身着长袍头戴帽子的人把守，最后我们停在一处以碎石铺地的庭院中。一栋幽暗的建筑，约四五层楼高，矗立在眼前。

屋内灯光昏黄，四下的阴影里都躲着一些守卫。我跟着护送我来的人走上中央的大楼梯，我隐约觉得这屋子曾经属于一位欧洲富翁所有，不过如今已落入中国政权的手中；我看到简略的记事条与日程表，钉在一些精致的中西艺术品旁边的墙上。

他们领我进入三楼的一个房间，从这个房间的配置来看，前阵子应该还有一座桌球台。现在房间中央多出了一块空地，我等的时候在上面走来踱去。等了二十分钟，我听到楼下庭院里来了更多汽车，不过我走到窗边想看个究竟，却发现窗子面对的是屋子另一侧的花园，看不到正门前发生了什么事。

大约又过了半个钟头，他们才终于来带我。他们护送我走上另一道楼梯，然后转到一处走廊，两旁又有更多的守卫。后来，护送我的人停了下来，其中一位指着前方几码远的一扇门。我独自走过最后这段路，进入一处看来像个大书房的地方。地上铺着厚地毯，墙上几乎排满了书籍。在房间的尽头，重重布幔掩住一座凸窗，窗前有张书桌，前后两侧都有一张椅子。桌上的阅读灯下有一圈温暖的光线，可是房中其他部分都一片幽暗。正当我站在那里观察周遭的情况，有个身影从书桌边站了起来，小心地绕过书桌，回头指着桌后他空出来的座位。

“怎么不过去坐那儿，小海雀？”菲利普叔叔对我说，“你还记得吧？你以前最喜欢坐我书桌后面的位子了。”

第二十二章

若非我心里早已有数，我很可能认不出菲利普叔叔来。这些年来他发福不少，尽管算不上肥胖，脖子还是变粗了，双颊也下垂了。他的头发灰白稀疏。不过他的眼神仍像我记忆里那样平静而幽默。

我朝他走去时，脸上并无笑容；我也没有过去坐他让我坐的位子。“我坐这里就好。”我说，走到另一把椅子旁边。

菲利普叔叔耸耸肩。“反正这书桌也不是我的。事实上，我从没来过这房子。与你有关吗，这地方？”

“我也从没来过这里。我们坐下来聊，如何？”

等我们都坐了下来，才靠着桌上台灯的光线，清楚看到对方，我们花了好一会儿工夫仔细观察对方的容貌。

“你没变多少，你知道吗，小海雀，”他说，“即便是现在，也不难从你身上看出当年的那个孩子。”

“请你不要再用那个名字叫我。”

“对不起。我承认这么叫你太无礼了。所以，就这么回事：你想尽办法追查我的下落，而我一直避不见面。不过到后来，我渐渐想要再见你一面。我有义务给你一些解释，我想。不过我不确定，你知道的，我不确定你如何看待我。我是说，把我当朋友还是敌人。可是这年头，我自己对大部分人该放哪一边都不确定了。你知道吗？他们竟然要我带着这个以防万一。”他取出一把银色的小手枪，拿到灯光下晃了一晃，“你能相信吗？他们以为你会攻击我。”

“不过，我看你也当真把它带在身上了。”

“欸，我到哪儿都带着呀。这年头，好多人想在背后整我。我带枪其实不全是为了要见你。说不定外头那些人里，有人被买通了，会冲进来捅我一刀。谁知道？我过的，恐怕就是这种日子。打从‘黄蛇’这个把戏开始玩，就是这个样子了。”

“没错。看来你常常出卖人。”

“如果你话中的话，真是我听出来的意思，那就有点刻薄了。要说共产党的事，好罢，我承认我是叛徒。就算这样，我也从来不是故

意的，你知道的。蒋介石的手下有一天把我抓去，威胁说要严刑侍候我。我承认我并不想挨打，一点也不想。不过后来他们做了一件非常狡猾的事。他们设圈套让我出卖了一个同志。于是，这下子就没完没了了。你也看到了，天底下惩罚叛徒最残忍的，就是我从前的那些同志。我没有别的办法可以存活。我只有依赖政府保护，不让那些同志杀害我。”

“根据我的调查，”我说，“许多人因你而丧命。不只是被你出卖的人。有一次，大约一年前，你让共产党以为‘黄蛇’是另一个人。他的许多关联人因此都在第一波的报复行动中被杀。”

“我可不认为我自己有什么了不起的。我是个懦夫，而且我早就知道了。可是红军的残忍，不能怪到我头上来。我早就对他们不存敬意了。不过，我不认为你来找我，是为了要聊这些吧。”

“的确不是。”

“那么，小海雀。对不起。克里斯托弗。那么，我该告诉你什么呢？咱们从哪里开始？”

“我父母。他们在哪儿？”

“你父亲恐怕已经过世了。都过这么多年了。我很遗憾。”

我没回答，等他说下去。过了半晌，他才说：

“告诉我，克里斯托弗。你认为你父亲发生了什么事？”

“我怎么想，跟你有什么关系吗？我来，就是要听你怎么说。”

“好吧。不过我很好奇，你自己得出的答案是怎样的。毕竟你在这方面已经大有名气了。”

这话教我生气，不过我忽然想到，得顺着他的话，他才会说。于是我说：“我的猜测是，父亲挺身而出，勇敢反对自己的雇主，反对当年他们靠进口鸦片获利。这一来就挡了许多人的财路，于是就被人除掉。”

菲利普叔叔点点头。“我也猜你是这么以为。你母亲与我仔细地讨论过，到底该让你相信什么。我们讨论出的大约就是你刚才说的那么回事。这么说来，我们成功了。真相，小海雀，真相只怕没有那么伟大。你父亲当年是与情妇私奔的。他跟情妇在香港住了一年，女的叫作伊丽莎白·康瓦利斯。可是香港，哪，极沉闷又保守得紧，哪容得下这对奸夫淫妇，于是他们只好转奔马六甲或什么类似的地方。后 来他染上伤寒死了，在新加坡。那是他离开你们两年以后的事。对不起啰，老伙计，听了这一切，你并不好受，我知道。可是你还是要要有心理准备。今天晚上我还有好多事要跟你讲呢。”

“你是说，我母亲知情？她当时就知道了吗？”

“没错。她起先不知道。大约蒙在鼓里一个多月吧。你父亲把行踪藏得相当隐秘。你母亲会知道，是因为你父亲写信给她。这真相，从来只有我们两个人知道。”

“可是那些侦探呢？那些侦探怎么可能查不出父亲做了什么事？”

“那些侦探？”菲利普叔叔笑了一声，“那些薪资低廉、工作过量的笨蛋？把一头大象丢在南京路上，只怕他们都还找不到呢。”我依然没答腔，他便说，“她本来想找个机会告诉你。不过我们想保护你。所以才让你以为是你想的那回事。”

坐得这么靠近桌灯，我渐渐觉得不自在，不过椅背直挺挺的，不容我往后靠。由于我还是没答话，菲利普叔叔又说：

“让我也替你父亲说句话罢。他日子可不好过。他一直爱着你母亲，深爱着她。我十分确定，到死前都不曾停止爱她。有时候，小海雀，问题就出在这儿了。他太爱她，把她理想化。于是他觉得自己根本无法达到她要求的标准。他试过了。一点也不错，他试了，这几乎让他崩溃。他大可说：‘你听好，我顶多只能做到这个地步，如此而已，我就是我。’可是他崇拜她。拼命想让自己能够得着她的标准，后来他发现自己实在办不到，就逃走了。跟一个不在乎他好坏的女人跑了。我个人以为他只是要休息。他长年来拼命苦干，他只是想休息而已。你可别把他想得太多坏，小海雀。我相信他不曾停止爱你母亲。”

“那么我母亲呢？她发生了什么事？”

菲利普叔叔向前探身，双肘撑着桌子，头部微微往后仰。“你对于她的事，现在知道的有多少？”他问。

他先前在声音里所表现的轻松已经完全消失。他现在看起来有如心事重重的老人，饱受自我悔恨的折磨。尽管他把头往后仰，却还是仔细盯着我看，桌灯的黄光照拂下，看得到他白色的鼻毛突出鼻孔。我听到楼下某处，唱片正播放着中国军歌。

“我没有要烦扰你的意思，”看我没有回答，他说道，“我不想再听到自己提起此事，能躲就躲。说吧。你查出多少了？”

“直到最近，我都还以为我父母被囚禁在闸北区。所以，你瞧，我没那么厉害。”

我等着他开口。他维持那个耐人寻味的姿势好一会儿，然后坐下来才说：

“有件事你不会记得。你父亲离家之后不久，我来你家看你母亲。有一个人那天也来了。一位中国绅士。”

“你是指军阀王顾吗？”

“啊，那你还算不错嘛。”

“我是查出了他的姓名。可是，后来我下工夫追查的，恐怕是条不实的线索。”

他叹了口气，竖起耳朵倾听。“你听，”他说，“国民党的国歌。他们播这个来戏弄我。每次不管他们把我带到哪儿，都会听到这个。屡试不爽，不可能是巧合。”我并没有搭腔，他便站起来，走入重重布幔边的暗影里。

“你母亲，”他最后说，“十分投入我们的运动。阻止鸦片卖到中国。许多欧洲国家，包括你父亲所属的公司，都从印度进口鸦片到中国牟取暴利，让无数中国人成为有毒瘾的废人。那段日子里，我是这个运动的核心人物之一。有好长一段日子，我们的策略显得天真。我们以为让他们觉得羞耻，就可以让他们放弃从鸦片得到的利益。我们写信，对他们提出证据显示鸦片对中国人民造成什么伤害。没错，你会觉得可笑，我们非常天真。你看，我们以为我们面对的，是同样信仰基督教的一群人。结果呢，我们发现我们毫无进展。我们发现，这些人不只是贪图其中暴利，他们其实是真的希望中国人变成废人。他们喜欢让中国人混乱，耽溺于毒瘾，无法妥善治理自己的国家。如此一来，这个国家就可以拿来当作殖民地剥削，还不必为这个国家负起殖民母国的一般义务。于是我们改变策略。我们手腕变得复杂了。在那些日子里，现在也还是如此，鸦片顺着长江运送。船只溯江而上，货物行经盗匪遍布的区域。没有相当的保护，货物还没到长江三峡恐怕就要遭到劫掠。因此所有的公司——摩根洋行、怡和洋行等等——全部都与运送路径上的军阀有协定。这些军阀，其实就是有头有脸的盗匪罢了，不过他们拥有军队，有力量保护货物安全通过。于是我们

有了新策略。我们不再求这些贸易商。我们转而求这些军阀。诉诸他们的民族自尊心。我们指出，想要终结以鸦片牟取暴利的事，想要除去阻止中国人掌握自己命运与国土的主要障碍，全看他们的决定。当然，有一些军阀还是贪图他们所得到的重金报偿。不过，也有一些被我们说动了。王顾在当时是这些强盗军阀里势力比较大的一位。他的地盘涵盖湖南省北部数百平方英里的面积。一个相当残暴的家伙，不过深受敬畏，因此对于那些贸易商大有用处。王顾相当赞同我们的诉求。他常来上海，喜欢这里的高级生活，他来上海的时候，我们就成功地说服了他。小海雀，你还好吧？”

“没事，还好。我在听。”

“也许就到此为止吧，小海雀。你没必要听我接下来要说的事情。”

“你就说吧。我在听。”

“好吧。我觉得你是该知道的，如果你受得了的话。因为……嗯，因为你必须要找到她。你还有机会找到她。”

“这么说，我母亲还活着？”

“我没理由相信她不在了。”

“那就说吧。继续刚才说的。”

他回到桌边，又在我对面坐下。“那天王顾到你们家，”他说，“也怪不得你还记得。你怀疑那是个关键时刻，你是对的。正是那天，你母亲发现王顾的动机非常不单纯。简单地说，他打算私吞那些船运的鸦片。当然啦，他巧施玲珑手段，让货物先经过三四股其他势力，这真是典型的中国人的手段，不过最后呢，没错，还是通通落到他手里。我们大部分人都知道这点了，不过你母亲却被蒙在鼓里。我们瞒着她，或许这么做实属不智，那是因为我们觉得她不会接受。我们其他的人，心里当然会有些不安，不过我们还是决定跟王顾合作。没错，他还是把鸦片卖给那些贸易商卖的同一批人。但重点是终止进口。让进口鸦片无利可图。可惜那天王顾来你家，他说了些话，让你母亲发现了他跟我们的真正关系。我想，她觉得自己被骗了。也许她早就怀疑了，不过她不愿面对事实，她气她自己也气我，就如同她气王顾一样。总之，她大发雷霆，还甩了王顾一个耳光。只是轻轻一记，你明白吧，不过她的手确实已碰到王顾的脸颊。当然，她能当他的面骂的话，全都脱口而出了。我当时就知道，为此，她恐怕要付出

可怕的代价。我想办法当场把事情抚平。我向王顾解释，你父亲才刚遗弃她，她只是心情不好，王顾走出去的时候，我一路跟在旁边表达这个意思。他面带微笑，说不用担心，可是我担心，没错，不担心才怪。我知道你母亲所做的事，要想化解并不容易。不妨告诉你，要是王顾一气之下不跟我们合作也就罢了，我还觉得松了口气。可是他要鸦片，他已经花了好多工夫安排。再说，他被一个外国女人羞辱，他要报一箭之仇。”

我探身向他，进入桌灯炫目的光亮之中，我有种奇怪的感觉，身后的黑暗愈变愈大，此时在那里摊成一大片幽暗无光的空间。菲利普叔叔用掌心拭去前额的汗珠。不过他现在专注地看着我，继续说：

“那天后来我去新城饭店见王顾。我尽我所能化解可能降临的灾难。不过为时已晚。他那天下午对我说的话，一点都没有生气的样子。他发现你母亲的精神——他就是这么说的，她的‘精神’——非常迷人。他已经为之倾倒，因此打算娶她为妾，带她回湖南。他说要‘驯服’她，如同对待一匹野生的母马一样。这个你得理解，小海雀，你得理解那时候在上海、在中国是什么样的局势，像王顾这样的人，若是决定要做这类的事，谁也阻止不了他。这点你必须理解。向警方或任何人要求保护你母亲，根本不会有结果。也许能暂时缓一缓，不过终究是无用。没有任何人能保护她，不让这种人得逞。不过你明白吗，我真正担心的是你，小海雀。我不确定他打算怎么处置你，这才是我求他的事。结果我们达成协议。我想办法让她落单，无人守护，而同时我又把你带离现场。我只求他这件事。我不希望他连你也带走。你母亲，只能说是在劫难逃。至于你，还有商量的余地。我就是做了这样的事。”

我们相对无言，沉默了好一会儿。后来我开口说：

“你当完这个顺水媒人，不知道王顾后来是不是还继续跟你们合作，对你们言听计从？”

“别这么尖酸，小海雀。”

“那他到底有没有？”

“情势使然，他有。他得到你母亲，心满意足。于是他依着我们的计划行事，而且，容我这么说，他的介入，是各公司最后决定不再进口鸦片的因素之一。”

“依照你的说法，母亲算是为了崇高的目标，牺牲小我啰。”

“听好，小海雀，世事不是样样都由得我们自己来决定的。你一定得理解这点。”

“你后来有再见到我母亲吗？在她被这个男人掳走之后？”

我看得出他的犹豫。不过他接着说：

“有。不妨告诉你，我见过她。一次，在事情发生七年以后。我碰巧路经湖南，接受王顾邀请到他那里做客。在那里，在他的堡垒里，没错，我看到了你母亲，那是最后一次。”

他的声音此时近乎耳语。楼下的唱机已经不再播放，我们两人之间凝结着一片沉寂。

“那……那她后来怎么了？”

“她身体很好。妾自然不只她一位。在那种情况下，我猜想，她在新生活里，适应得还不错。”

“她过得还好吗？”

菲利普叔叔把脸转开，然后平静地说：“我见到她的时候，她自然就问我你的事。我把我知道的事都告诉她。她听了也很高兴。你知道的，在她见到我之前，她完全与外界隔绝。在那七年当中，她只能听到王顾让她知道的事。我是说，她不确定那桩财务的安排，是否正常执行。因此当我见到她时，那件事自然是她最想知道的，我也向她保证此事正常执行。经过七年悬肠挂肚的担心，我终于让她安心了。我实在无法形容她得到了多大的解脱。‘我只想知道这个。’这句话她说个不停，‘我只想知道这个。’”

此刻，菲利普叔叔非常仔细地盯着我看。过了一会儿，我问了他期待我问的问题。

“菲利普叔叔，什么财务安排？”

他低头看着手背，端详了半晌。“要不是为了你，她对你的爱，小海雀，我相信你母亲会毫不迟疑结束自己的生命，不会让那个恶棍碰她一下。她总会有办法，也一定会做到。可是她还担心你。因此，到了最后，她看情势比人强，便做了安排。你将会得到财务上的供应，以换取……换取她的顺从。我亲自监督了大半的程序，经由公司来安排。公司里有个对这件事全无概念的人，还以为这是在为鸦片的安全运送做安排呢！哈！哈！真是个傻子，那个人！”菲利普叔叔

摇摇头，面露笑容。接着他的表情又阴沉起来，仿佛他要回到我们原先要谈的主题。

“我的生活费，”我平静地说，“我继承的财产……”

“你在英国的姑妈。她从来就没富有过。真正资助你的人，这么多年来，一直是王顾。”

“这么说，这么多年来，我一直靠……我一直靠……”我说不下去，于是住口。

菲利普叔叔点点头。“你的教育。你在伦敦社会上的地位。你所有的一切一切。全都是靠王顾。或者该说，靠你母亲的牺牲。”

他又站了起来，对着我看，脸上有了新的表情，几乎像是怨恨。但随即他转身走入暗处，我再看不到他的脸了。

“我最后见到你母亲的那一次，”他说，“在那座堡垒里。她已经完全不在乎反鸦片的运动了。她只为你而活，只担心你。当时，进口鸦片已是非法行为。但即使是这件事，对她也已经毫无意义。我当然气这点，其他人也一样，毕竟我们努力这么多年了。我们终于达成目标了，我们是这么想的。鸦片贸易被废止了。但是只过了一两年，我们就知道，这废止其实另有文章。进口贸易不过是换个人做罢了，如此而已。现在换由蒋介石的政府来执行。上瘾的人比以前更多，只不过现在卖鸦片的所得，是用来支付给蒋介石的军队，支付给他的政权。也就是因为这样，我才加入了红军，小海雀。你母亲，我原本以为，她要是知道我们的运动竟如此收场，一定难过至极，可是她已经不在乎了。她要的，只是你受到照顾。她要的，只是你的消息。你知道吗？小海雀”——他的声音忽然有了不寻常的语调——“我见到她的当时，她看起来似乎过得相当不错。不过我留在那里的几天，我问了家里的其他成员，知道内情的成员。我要知道实情，她受到什么样的待遇，因为……因为我知道有一天，这一刻，我们现在这样的对话，必然会来临。而我发现了。是的，我发现了。一切。”

“你故意这样，是在折磨我吗？”

“那不只是在……不只是在床第之间屈服而已。他常常在晚宴的客人面前鞭打她。驯服白种女性，他这么说。而且还不只是这样。你知道吗……”

我早已掩上耳朵，不过此刻却大叫：“够了！为什么要这样折磨我？”

“为什么？”他的声音现在有了火气，“为什么？因为我要你知道真相！这些年来，你一直认为我是卑鄙小人。也许我是，不过要怪，就要怪这个世界。我从来没有要变成这个样子。我也想对这个世界有所贡献。我曾经以我自己的方式，做过勇敢的决定。结果看看我的下场。你鄙视我。你这些年来一直鄙视我，小海雀，你简直就像是我的儿子，而你依然鄙视我。不过，现在你看清世界的真实面貌了吗？你看清楚让你在英国养尊处优，靠的是什么呢？你看清楚自己是靠什么成为知名大侦探了吗？大侦探！这对谁有好处啊！寻获失窃的珠宝，查出贵族们为了继承权而杀人？你觉得这样就足够了吗？你母亲，她要你永远活在你的童话世界里。不过那是不可能的事。这个梦想终究要破灭。能维持到今天，已经是个奇迹。哪，小海雀，拿去。我给你这个机会。拿去。”

他又把手枪掏了出来。他走出阴影朝我而来，等我抬头看他，他的身影已赫然浮现在我头顶上方，就像儿时他站在我面前一样。他把外套扔开，把枪抵在背心上的心脏部位。“拿着，”他弯下身子轻声说，好让我闻到他气息陈腐的呼吸，“拿着，孩子。你可以杀我。你不是一直都想杀我吗？正因如此，我才想办法活到现在。谁也不配杀我。我这条命，我只留给你，明白吗？只留给你。扣扳机啊。这样好了，我们可以把场面弄得好像我攻击你，枪拿在我手上，我会压到你身上。等他们冲进来，他们会看到我的尸体压在你身上，你看起来就像是自卫。瞧，这里，我已经握好了。你扣扳机啊，小海雀。”

他的背心贴在我脸上，随着他胸口起伏而上下移动。我感到一股厌恶，想要逃开，不过他空着的手一皮肤粗糙得无法形容一抓住我的手臂，想把我往他身上拉。我忽然想到，只要我的手碰到手枪，他有可能自己动手扣扳机。我猛然抽身，推倒了椅子，往后踉跄几步。

有那么一秒钟，我们两个都心虚地望着门口，看看这里的骚动有没有引来警卫。不过什么也没发生，最后菲利普叔叔笑了出来，把椅子扶正，仔细地摆回书桌前。接着他自己往上头一坐，把手枪放在桌上，花了一会儿工夫喘过气来。我又退了几步，远离书桌，不过这个洞穴般的房间里没有其他东西，我干脆停下来，依然背对着他。接着我听到他说：

“好罢。这样也好。”他又喘了几口气，“我就告诉你罢。把我心底最黑暗的秘密告诉你罢。”

不过接下来的几分钟，我只听到我身后传来他沉重的呼吸声。半晌后他终于开口：

“好罢，我就向你坦白真相。为什么我那天让王顾绑走你母亲。我刚才所说的话，没错，一点都不假。我必须保护你。没错，没错，我先前说的话，或多或少都可以成立。不过，只要我真的想要，只要我真的想要救她，我知道我一定找得出办法。我现在要告诉你一件事，小海雀。这件事许多年来，我连对自己都无法坦白。我帮助王顾绑走你母亲，是因为我心里确实想让你母亲成为他的奴隶，受到百般凌虐，夜复一夜。因为，你知道，打从到你们家做房客的那段日子起，我就一直想得到她。没错，我想得到她，后来你父亲就那样跟别人跑了，我相信我的机会来了，我是当然的继位者。可是……可是你母亲，她从来不会那样看待我，你父亲走了以后我才醒悟。她只是敬重我是个正直的人……不，不，根本没希望。就算再过千年万代，我也没办法让她要我，那样子根本没可能。于是我火了。我真的火了。等事情发生了，她惹毛了王顾，我却为之兴奋。你听见没有，小海雀？我为之兴奋！他把你母亲掳走以后，每到夜深人静的时刻我就为之兴奋。那几年里，我把王顾当做替身。仿佛我也征服她了。不知多少次，我想像她的遭遇，心底兴奋快活极了。哪，快，杀了我吧！你为什么不动手？你都听见了！拿去，一枪毙了我吧！”

我在房里黑暗的地方站了好久，背对着他，听着他的呼吸。接着我再度转身向他，相当平静地说：

“你先前说你相信我母亲还活着。她还在王顾身边吗？”

“王顾四年前死了。他的军队，总之，被蒋介石解散了。我不知道她现在在哪儿。我真的不知道。”

“那样，我还是会找到她。我不会放弃。”

“这可不是容易的事，孩子。战火已经延烧全中国。马上就要吞噬一切。”

“没错，”我说，“我敢说战火马上就要吞噬全世界了。不过那不是我的错。事实上，我已经不在乎了。我要重新开始，这次，我要找到她。你还有没有什么事可以告诉我，让我可以找得顺利些？”

“恐怕没有了，小海雀。我什么都告诉你了。”

“那么再会了，菲利普叔叔。原谅我，你的要求我无法照办。”

“没关系。还怕没人想杀我这条‘黄蛇’吗？”他哼地一笑。接着他以疲惫的声音说：“再见了，小海雀。希望你找到她。”

第七部

一九五八年十一月十四日・伦敦

第二十三章

那是我多年来第一次远行，抵达香港后过了两天，我还是相当疲倦。搭飞机固然快得惊人，可是机舱内拥挤又摸不清东西南北。我的腰痛又狠狠发作起来，而头疼在我停留的这段时间又久久不退，这无疑影响了我对这块殖民地的看法。我听说有人到那儿旅游回来以后赞不绝口。“一个有前瞻性的地方。”每个人都这么说，“美得摄人。”然而那个星期的天气大半都阴沉沉，街道又拥挤不堪。我想我有时还是蛮喜欢这里隐隐呼唤的上海味——商店外的中文招牌或者只是看着中国人在市场里忙进忙出。只不过这样的呼唤，有时又教我不快。那就像在肯辛顿或贝斯沃特的无聊晚宴上，遇到曾经相爱的远房表妹，她的手势、表情、轻轻耸肩的小动作等，依然唤醒回忆，但她整个人与心中珍藏的印象相比，却像个不搭调，甚至丑陋的拙劣模仿。

我后来还是很高兴有詹妮弗陪着我。起初她在一旁暗示，要我让她跟来，我还故意装不懂。因为即使到了最近这个阶段——我谈的是过去这五年——她依然觉得我像是个卧病在床的人，特别是当我人生里又出现了有关过去，也就是关于远东地区的事。我想，我心里早已不喜欢她这般过度关心，但后来，我念头一转，想到她是真的想离开现状一阵子——一想到她也有她的烦恼，想到这样一趟旅程对她也有好处——我才同意让她与我同行。

詹妮弗还提议，我们不妨把行程延伸到上海，我认为这也未必不可行。我可以跟几位旧识谈谈，他们依然对外交部有些影响力，我确定要获准进入中国大陆，应该不会有太大的困难。我知道有人就这么做过。然而，据说今日的上海，犹如昔日的上海借尸还魂一般。共产党最终没有破坏实体建筑，因此当年的租界，今日大体上仍维持旧观。尽管街道已经重新命名，街景却是一眼就认得出来，听说熟悉旧上海的人，回到那儿不必担心会迷路。可是，外国人自然完全不准进入，昔日奢华的酒店与夜总会，今日则成为毛主席政权的政府机关。换言之，今天的上海恐怕会糟蹋昔日上海的印象，这个更加拙劣的模仿给人带来的痛苦，比起香港是有过之而无不及。

附带一提，我已听说大半的贫穷问题——以及母亲曾经奋力苦战的鸦片毒瘾——在共产党统治下已大幅消减。这些邪恶的事情根除到什么地步，仍有待观察，不过，显而易见的是，共产党在几年之间所达到

的成果，是那些慈善机构和热诚的运动几十年也没达到的。我们在香港度过的第一个晚上，我在怡东酒店的房间里踱步，调养我的腰酸，让自己心情平静下来，我记得我当时心里想着，母亲对这样的结果会有什么看法。

到了第三天，我才去“萝丝黛庄园”。我们早就说好我独自前往，詹妮弗尽管整个早上都看着我的一举一动，午餐后送别我时却不再要把我捧在手心里不放了。

那天下午，阳光破云而出，我的计程车爬上山坡路时，道路两旁修剪整齐的草坪上有成群仅着背心的园丁在浇水、推平。最后计程车爬到了坡顶的平地，停在一栋大白屋前面，建筑风格属英国殖民地的大宅，有一长排的百叶窗，还有一厢楼房从另一侧延伸出来。这里必定一度是绝佳的居住环境，可以俯瞰海洋以及小岛西侧的大部。当我迎着微风站立，遥望码头，我可以直眺远方，看见有辆缆车正爬上一座遥远的山丘。转身面对大宅，看得出人们任它凋敝；尤其是窗台与门框上的漆都龟裂剥落了。

屋内，走廊里，隐隐闻得到煮鱼的闷腥味，不过却是一尘不染。有位中国籍的修女领我走过足音蹑蹑的走廊，到修女比琳达·希尼的办公室，她大约四十五六岁，脸上表情严肃，略显阴沉。是在那里，在那间拥挤的小办公室里，她们说有位名叫“黛安娜·罗伯茨”的女人，经由一个帮助滞留在红色中国的外国人的交涉机构，转送到她们这里。中国主管当局对她所知的一切就是，她自从战争结束以后，就住在重庆的精神病院。

“有可能战时大半期间，她也待在那里，”比琳达修女说。“我们实在难以想像，班克斯先生，那是什么样的地方。任何人一旦关进那种地方，极可能就从此消失。找得到她，全靠她是白种人。中国人不知道该怎么处理她。毕竟他们希望所有的外国人都离开中国。因此后来，她就被送到我们这里，而且待在这里两年了。她刚来的时候，脾气好暴躁。不过，才一两个月，所有‘萝丝黛庄园’常有的好处，像是平静、秩序、祷告等，就发挥了作用。您现在可看不出她刚到时的那副可怜模样了。她平静多了。您刚说，您是她亲戚吗？”

“是的，很可能是。”我说，“既然我人在香港，我想我应该来探望一下才是。我至少可以做到这点。”

“是啊，有任何亲人、好友或者在英国的亲戚朋友的消息，我们都很乐意知道。而且，我们的大门永远为访客敞开。”

“她有访客吗？”

“她有定期访客。圣约瑟学院的学生会来我们这里当义工。”

“原来如此。那么，她和其他人处得怎么样？”

“还不错。她没有带给我们任何麻烦。别人要是能像她就好了！”

比琳达修女带我走过另一条走廊，来到一个阳光充足的大房间——这里也许以前是餐厅——里面有二十来位女性，全穿着罩衫式的米色长袍，有的静坐，有的拖着步伐走来走去。敞开的落地窗外是草地，阳光从窗子照进来，落在镶木地板上。要不是到处都放置了养在瓶里的鲜花，我还以为这里是育儿室；墙上到处都钉满了鲜艳的水彩画，在不同角落里，摆设着小桌子，桌上有跳棋的棋盘、纸牌、画纸与粉蜡笔。比琳达修女把我留在门口，自己走向坐在一架立式钢琴旁的修女，有几个女人停下手边的事情瞪着我看。有几位觉得不自在，想躲起来。几乎全是西方人，其中我也看到一两位欧亚混血的。接着，从我身后宅内不知何处，传来有人放声哭嚎的声音，说也奇怪，这声音反而让她们放松下来。我身旁一个满头粗丝乱发的女人对我挤个笑容然后说：

“别担心，甜心，只不过是玛莎而已。她又发作啰！”

我听她有约克郡的口音，不知道什么样的命运把她带到这步田地，这时候比琳达修女回到我身边。

“黛安娜应该就在外头，”她说，“请跟我来，班克斯先生。”

我们走出落地窗，到一片细心打理的草地上，地面起起伏伏，让我想起此处距离山丘顶不远。我跟着比琳达修女走过开满天竺葵与郁金香的花圃，目光越过修剪整齐的灌木篱，可以瞥见这里的全景。四处都有身着罩衫式米色长袍的年长女性坐着晒太阳，有的织毛衣，有的一起聊天，有的则平静地自言自语。比琳达修女一度停下来环顾四周，接着又带我走下草坡，穿过一道白色的门，来到一座围在墙里的小花园。

花园里仅有的一个人，是一位独坐在稀疏草地另一头晒太阳的老太太，她正在一张花园铁骨桌边玩牌。她专心地玩她的纸牌，我们走近也没抬头。比琳达修女碰碰她的肩膀说：

“黛安娜。这位先生来看你哟。他是从英国来的。”

母亲抬头对我们两人微笑，接着又低头玩她的纸牌。

“有时候黛安娜听不懂别人跟她讲什么，”比琳达修女说，“想叫她做什么事，都得一说再说。”

“不知道我们可不可以独处聊聊？”

比琳达修女并不喜欢这个主意，有那么一会儿，她似乎在心里找理由拒绝，不过后来还是说：“班克斯先生，如果您想这样，应该无妨。我人会在值班室里。”

比琳达修女一走，我便仔细观察母亲怎么玩牌。她比我预期的要瘦小许多，两肩严重耸起。她的头发雪白，紧紧盘成一个髻。我在一旁观看时，她有时候会抬头瞄我一眼，对我笑笑，不过我可以看到里头有一丝恐惧，是刚才修女还在时所没有的。她脸上的皱纹并不太多，不过两眼下方却有厚重的眼袋，使得袋下的褶皱深如刀割。她的颈子也许受过什么伤害或病痛，深深缩进躯体，以至于她转头看两边的纸牌时，连肩膀也必须跟着转动。她鼻尖上挂了一滴鼻涕，我拿出手帕想把它拭干净，却忽然想到这么做可能让她过度惊吓。最后，我平静地说：

“对不起，我未能事先给你一点心理准备。我明白这可能会让你吓一跳。”我停了下来，因为她显然没在听我说话。接着我说：“妈，是我。克里斯托弗。”

她抬头看看，露出与刚才类似的笑容，接着又低头玩牌。我猜想她是在玩单人牌局，只不过她独门的玩法很怪异。有一度，微风把几张纸牌从桌上吹落，但是她似乎不在意。我把纸牌从草地上拾起，拿过去还她，她笑一笑然后说：

“真谢谢你。不过实在没必要，你知道吗。我呢，我就扔着不管，等草地上撒满了纸牌再说。只有在那时候我才会去收拾，一次捡完，你明白吗。反正它们总不会飞下山去吧，对不对？”

接下来一阵子，我继续看着她。这时母亲唱起歌来。她兀自轻声吟唱，几乎没张口，手则继续取牌排放在桌面。她的歌声微弱——我听不出她在唱什么——不过旋律悠然自在。我边看边听，心头浮起一段往事：有个多风的夏天，在我家花园里，母亲荡着秋千，高声欢笑歌唱，我则在她面前直跳脚要她停下来。

我伸手轻轻碰她的手。她立刻把手缩回，并且愤怒地瞪着我。

“请你手脚放规矩点，先生！”她说，声音微弱却带着惊吓，“规规矩矩放好！”

“对不起。”我退了两步让她安心。她继续玩牌，等她再度抬头瞄瞄我，她又露出笑容，仿佛刚才什么事也没发生。

“妈，”我缓缓说，“是我。我已经从英国来了。真的很抱歉让你等了这么久。我知道我让你好失望。好失望。我尽了全力，不过，你知道，这实在不是我能力所及。我明白这一切都已经太迟了。”

我一定是哭了起来，因为母亲抬头盯着我看。然后她说：

“你牙齿疼吗，小伙子？牙齿疼，最好告诉艾格尼丝修女哦。”

“不，我还好。不过，你知道我在说什么吗？是我呀，克里斯托弗。”

她点点头，然后说：“再拖也没有用，小伙子。艾格尼丝修女会帮你填表格。”

此时我心头灵光一现。“妈，”我说，“我是小海雀。小海雀啊。”

“小海雀。”她忽然凝住不动，“小海雀。”

母亲过了好久都一语不发，不过她脸上的表情已完全改变。她又抬起头来，但是眼睛却凝视我身后某处，温柔的微笑在她脸上扩散开来。

“小海雀，”她平静地喃喃着，有一会儿似乎沉醉在幸福之中。接着她摇摇头说：“那个男孩。他真教我操心。”

“请听我说，”我说，“请听我说。假定你这个儿子，你的小海雀。假设你发现他已经竭尽所能，用尽一切方法来找你，可是最后还是没找到你。如果你知道这点，你会觉得……会觉得你能原谅他吗？”

母亲凝视的目光依旧越过我的肩膀，不过脸上出现了迷惑的表情。

“原谅小海雀？你是说原谅小海雀？他又没犯错！”接着她又幸福地粲然而笑，“那个男孩。他们说他过得不错哦。可是，这个我倒没那么有把握。唉，他老是教我操心。你不会懂的啦。”

“你也许会觉得我好笑，”我说，上个月我又再度与詹妮弗谈起那趟旅程，“不过，要等到她说了这句话，我才开始明白一件事。我的意思是，我才明白她从来不曾停止爱我，不管经历了多少苦难。她所要的，只有一件事，就是让我过好日子。而其余一切，包括我设法找她、想要拯救世界等等，有没有成功都没有什么差别。她对的感情，永远存在，不需仰赖任何事物。我想这也没什么好意外的。可是却花了我大半辈子才明白。”

“你真的认为，”詹妮弗问我，“她完完全全不知道你是谁吗？”

“我确定她不知道。她说的都是真心话，而且她知道自己在说什么。她说没有犯错，何来原谅，而且她真的搞不懂，我说的究竟是什么事。你要是在我第一次说出那个名字的时候，看到她脸上的表情，你就不会有任何疑问了。她不曾停止爱我，一刻也不曾。”

“克里斯托弗叔叔，你觉得，你没告诉修女们你是谁，是为了什么？”

“我不确定。这看起来似乎很奇怪，我知道，反正到最终，我就是没表明身份。再说，也没有理由把她从那里带走。她似乎还算满足。倒说不上是快乐。不过仿佛痛苦已经过去。回英国的家也未必会过得更好。我想，倒是她过世以后，才会有这个问题。她走了以后，我考虑过让她安葬在英国。可是话说回来，我又想了想，还是决定不要这么做。她一辈子都住在东方。我认为她宁可留在那里。”

那是个冷冽的十月早晨，詹妮弗与我正穿过格洛斯特郡的一条蜿蜒小巷。前晚我住在离她寄宿处不远的旅社，早餐过后不久来找她。我看到她这一阵子的住处实在简陋，也许我忘了把心疼的样子藏好，难怪她不顾寒冷，立刻坚持带我去附近教堂的墓园，去俯瞰温德拉什山谷。走近巷底，我看见巷底是座农庄的大门；不过还没到那里，她就带我离开小巷，钻过围篱的一处缺口。

“克里斯托弗叔叔，来看看这个。”

我们穿过浓密的荨麻丛，来到一处栏杆边上。这时候，我才看到一直延伸到谷底的原野。

“这里风景真美。”我说。

“从墓园那里可以看得更远。你从来没想过要搬到这里来住吗？伦敦现在比以前拥挤多了。”

“的确不再是从前那样，你说得没错。”

我们在那里站了一会，肩并肩，凝视底下的风景。

“对不起，”我对她说，“最近不常来看你。我猜已经好几个月了。不知道我在忙什么。”

“欸，不要为我操心。”

“可是我会操心啊。我当然操心。”

“那件事已经过去了，”她说，“去年的那一切。我绝不会再做那种傻事了。我已经答应过你了啊。那一阵子，情况碰巧糟透了，不过如此而已。再说，我也没有真心要那么干。我特意留了扇窗子不关。”

“可是你还年轻，詹妮弗。还有大好将来等着你。就算你只是想到那个念头，都够让我难过了。”

“我还年轻？三十一岁，没有子女，没有结婚。我想我的确还很年轻呢。可是也要有动力才行，你知道吗，这样才能再从头来过。现在我身心俱疲，有时候我就想干脆自己一个人安安静静过一辈子算了。我可以找个店员的工作，一个礼拜去看一次电影，也不去碍着谁。这样的人生也没什么不好。”

“可是你不会安于那样的生活。那听起来不像我认识的詹妮弗。”

她笑了一笑。“可是你根本不明白我的苦衷。像我这个年龄的女人，在这种地方寻找爱情。每次一出房门，房东太太跟其他房客就开始交头接耳。我到底该怎么办嘛？登广告吗？这样更让他们有得说了，倒不是我在不在乎的问题。”

“可是你非常迷人啊，詹妮弗。我是说，人们只要看着你，就可以看到你的心里，看到你的善良、你的温柔。我敢说缘分还在某处等着你。”

“你认为别人看得到我的心里？克里斯托弗叔叔，那只是因为你眼中看到的，还是多年前的那个小女孩呀。”

我转向她，仔细瞧瞧。“哦，还在呢，”我说，“我看得到。那个小女孩还在你身上某处，等人发现。世界带给你的改变并不如你以为的那么多，好孩子。世界只会让你一时震惊罢了。除此之外，这个

世界上正人君子也不少，我会帮你看着。只要你别一味躲着他们就好了。”

“好吧，克里斯托弗叔叔。下次我尽力而为。如果还有下次。”

有一会儿，我们望着底下，欣赏风景，有阵轻风拂过我们的脸庞。过了半晌我才说：

“我应该多关心你一点才是，詹妮弗。是我的疏忽。”

“可是你也无能为力啊。谁教我一时想不开……”

“不是，我是说……我是说更早一些。你还在成长的过程里。我该多陪陪你。可是我太忙了，想要解决世界的问题。我为你付出的关心太少，应该更多才对。是我不对。唉，老早就想告诉你。”

“千万别向我道歉，克里斯托弗叔叔！没有你，我今天会在哪儿？我原来是个无依无靠的孤儿。你万万不可以向我道歉。我欠你太多了。”

我伸手触摸张在栏杆上的湿蜘蛛网。网子破了，在我指端晃来晃去。

“呸，好恶心哦！”她大叫，“我受不了！”

“我以前就喜欢玩这个。小时候，我脱下手套就为了玩这个。”

“哟，你怎么会这样！”她放声大笑，我忽然看到了昔日的詹妮弗。“那你自己呢，克里斯托弗叔叔？你结不结婚？难道都没想过吗？”

“我才是真的太晚呢。”

“哦，我可不敢说哟。你把单身生活打点得很好。可是这种生活却不太适合你。你还有遗憾。所以你郁郁寡欢。你也该想想。你老是提起你的那些女性朋友。难道她们没半个要你？”

“她们只想跟我吃吃午餐。恐怕仅此而已。”我接着又补充，“我曾经爱过一个人。很久以前。不过那段事情跟一切都已经成为过去。”我笑了一下，“我的伟大使命，老是从中作梗，就是这样。”

我大概是把脸转开了，因为我感觉到她碰碰我的肩膀，我回头看她，发现她温柔地凝视着我的脸庞。

“你不要老是怪罪你的事业嘛，克里斯托弗叔叔。我向来欣赏你所做过的努力。”

“努力是有，最后却没有什麼成果。再说，这些都与我无关了。眼下我最大的野心，就是控制我的风湿。”

詹妮弗忽然露出笑容，用她的手臂挽着我。“我知道我们该怎么办了，”她说，“我有个计划。我决定了。我要找个好男人嫁了，然后我要生三个，不，四个小孩。我们会住在这附近，这样就可以随时来眺望这座山谷。而你也可以离开伦敦那栋拥挤的小公寓，来跟我们同住。既然你的女性朋友们不要你，你不如来做我未来子女的叔公。”

我对她微笑。“这主意听起来很不错。虽然我不知道你未来的丈夫有没有这个雅量，让我整天在他家晃来晃去。”

“哦，到时候我们会帮你搭个旧木棚之类的东西。”

“嗯，这个计划听起来很吸引人。这个提议请你先保留着，我会考虑考虑。”

“这是我的承诺，你得多留心啰。因为我保证会兑现的。到时候你一定要来住木棚子哦。”

过去这个月里，我任由伦敦的阴冷日子流逝，独自在肯辛顿花园闲逛，身旁还有秋季的观光客与中午出来吃午餐的上班族，有时还会遇到旧识，便跟着去吃顿午餐或喝茶，我常常发现我心里想着那天早上跟詹妮弗的一番话。我不能否认这带给我安慰。情况在显示，她已经度过她人生中最黑暗的时期，来到另一个新的开始。她的未来还得拭目以待，不过她这个人天生就不会轻易认输。的确，她很可能会积极实现她那天俯瞰山谷时对我说的计划——虽然只是半开玩笑的口吻。而且只要几年光景，也许事情真如她所愿地发生，那么我倒不无可能下乡去与她同住。当然，我不敢奢望她的木棚子，反正她家附近也总是找得到房子。我感激詹妮弗的心意。我们打从心底了解对方，那个冷冽早晨里那样的谈话，正是我多年来得以慰藉的泉源。

但话说回来，乡间生活可能太安静，最近我变得舍不得伦敦的生活。再说，我有时候还是会遇到有人打从大战前就听过我的名声，上前向我请教某事该怎么办。老实说，才上个礼拜，我跟奥斯本一家人吃晚餐，他们向我介绍一位女士，她立刻抓起我的手，大叫道：“你说你就是那位克里斯托弗·班克斯吗？那位大侦探？”

原来她大半人生都待在新加坡，是莎拉极亲密的朋友。“以前她常常谈起你，”她告诉我，“我真的觉得我们已经认识了。”

奥斯本一家还邀请其他几位客人，不过一旦坐下来进餐，我发现我刚好坐在这位女士身边，话题难免又转回莎拉身上。

“你是她的好朋友，不是吗？”她问我，“她提到你的时候，总是不断地赞美你。”

“我们当然是好朋友。只是她去了东方以后，我们就形同失散了。”

“她常常谈到你。她有好多你这位名侦探的故事。每次桥牌打得烦了，她这些故事总是带给我们好多乐趣。她每次都对你推崇有加。”

“没想到她还这么惦记着我，我真感动。如我所说，我们形同失散，不过我曾接到她一封信，大约在战后两年。直到那个时候，我才知道大战期间她过的是什么样的日子。她对那段俘虏营里的日子轻描淡写，不过我相信绝非好日子。”

“哦，我确定那不是人过的日子。我丈夫跟我，我们险些遭受同样的命运。我们想办法及时逃到澳洲去了。可是莎拉跟蒙·德·维弗先生，他们总是太相信命运。他们那种夫妻，常常晚上没计划就出游，遇到什么就接受什么。在大半的情况下，随遇而安是不错的生活哲学，不过等日本人都来到了门前，这种态度就不行了。你认识他吗？”

“我从来没这个荣幸认识伯爵。我知道他在莎拉过世后就回到欧洲，可惜我们不曾相遇。”

“噢，听她谈你的那个样子，还以为你跟他们俩都很熟呢。”

“没有。你知道的，我认识莎拉，是她还非常年轻的时候。恕我多问，也许你也无法回答这个问题，不过，他们的婚姻在你看来，是否快乐，莎拉跟这位法国老兄？”

“婚姻快不快乐？”我身旁的女士想了一会儿，“当然，这种事确实很难讲，不过我说真心话，也很难想像他们不快乐。他们看起来都深爱着对方。他们一向不富有，也就是说，他们绝不能像他们想要的那样无忧无虑。不过伯爵似乎总是如此，呃，如此浪漫。你笑了，班克斯先生，不过就是这个词，浪漫。她的死让伯爵身心交瘁。全都

是俘虏营造成的。她跟许多人一样，身体没有完全复原。我好想念她。这么迷人的朋友。”

自从上周的这场邂逅后，我又把莎拉的信拿出来读了几次——那是我们自多年前上海一别之后，她写给我的唯一一封信。日期是一九四七年五月十八日，从马来半岛某个小山的车站寄来的。也许我是希望跟她的朋友聊过以后，能从那些很是拘谨的，甚至毫无生气的愉快叙述里，找出一些藏在字里行间的东西。不过那封信只提供了她离开上海后的行程概要。她谈到澳门、香港、新加坡，都说“景色怡人”、“多彩多姿”、“引人入胜”这类的话，提到数次她的法籍伴侣，不过每次都一笔带过，仿佛我该知道的就那些而已。她还轻松地提及日军的俘虏营，她说她的健康问题“是个无聊的话题”。她以礼貌的方式问候我，并称她在重获自由的新加坡“生活愉快，一切正常”云云。这封信，是你人在异国的某个下午，隐约想起某位旧识，心血来潮时会写的那种信。只有在信接近尾声的时候，有那么一次，她的语调才隐隐透露我们昔日曾经共享的亲密。

“我不介意告诉你，克里斯托弗，”她写道，“那一次，我可是真的失望透了，尤其是我们彼此都已经知道了对方的心意。不过别担心，我早已不生你的气了。更何况命运又再度眷顾我，我怎么能继续怨你？再说，我现在也由衷相信，那天你没跟我走，是正确的决定。你向来觉得你有使命要达成，我敢说你若没有先完成你的使命，你也永远无法把心献给任何人。我只希望那件任务早已完成，而你现在可以找到我近来几乎视为当然的幸福与呵护。”

她信里的这些段落——尤其是最后那几行——总有些不真实的感觉。字里行间隐约有种气氛——老实说，她会在那一刻写信给我的这件事本身——跟她口口声声说日子充满“幸福与呵护”，就是教我觉得不太对劲。她与那位法国伯爵的生活，是否真与她走出上海那家小店，登上码头时立志追求的相同？我多少持疑。我觉得她提到使命感的时候，她心里想到的不仅是我，更是她自己，以及想要逃避使命的徒然。也许有人可以继续过他的人生，完全不受这种心情的羁绊。不过，对于我们这种人而言，我们的命运是以孤儿的眼光看待世界，长年追逐着父母消逝的暗影。我们只有尽全力把使命完成，别无解脱之途，在此之前，心中无法得到片刻的平静。

我不想显得洋洋自得；可是在伦敦过的这些闲散日子，大体上确实还算惬意。我喜欢在公园漫步，或是逛逛画廊，最近更是愈来愈常到大英博物馆的阅览室里，翻查报纸档案里有关我杰出事迹的报导，

愚蠢地觉得自己好了不起。换言之，这座城市已然成为我的家，就算我必须在此度过余生，我也不会介意。然而，有些时候，日子还是会充满莫名的空虚，所以我还是会慎重考虑詹妮弗的邀请。

编者后记

2017，瑞典文学院在将诺贝尔文学奖授予石黑一雄时，在颁奖词中曾对他的创作主题做过一个精妙的提炼，那就是：“记忆、时间与自我欺骗……以其巨大的情感力量，发掘了隐藏在我们与世界的虚幻联系之下的深渊。”无论他笔下的作品发生在怎样的时空背景，借用怎样的故事外壳，其核心是一以贯之的。

《我辈孤雏》是石黑一雄的第五部长篇小说，首次出版于2000年，入围当代英语小说界最高奖项布克奖短名单。与他的成名作《长日将尽》或两度改编为影视作品的《莫失莫忘》相比，《我辈孤雏》相对而言并不知名。但这同样也是一部非常典型的石黑式小说，而且更具文学野心。也正因为此，这部作品对于读者提出了相当高的阅读要求。而从本书在国内翻译出版后的一些读者反馈来看，许多人对于这本书的技法与主旨也确实存在着相当的困惑与误解。

读者们的困惑主要集中在两方面。第一，《我辈孤雏》表面上看是一部采用第一人称叙事的侦探小说：故事开篇，主人公克里斯托弗·班克斯就自称福尔摩斯再世，立志要惩奸除恶。读者们当然期望看到一个名侦探用缜密的思辨与逻辑破解重重谜团的故事。但随着叙事的推进，他们看到的却是主人公越来越失真、凌乱、不可信，最终趋于荒谬的回忆。这完全不是他们期望的那个精彩的侦探故事。第二，本书中一个最重要的时空背景设置在1937年淞沪会战爆发后的上海。对于中国读者而言，这是一段我们怀有深刻历史与民族情感的记忆，容不得半点扭曲失真。可恰恰是在这里，主人公的回忆达到了荒谬的顶点。读者很容易将这样的失真归因于作者对于中国现代史的不了解。

读者们的困惑是可以理解的，而他们不满的源头就在于主人公所叙述的不是一个可信的侦探故事。然而，《我辈孤雏》并不是一部真正的侦探小说，故事本身的不可信恰恰是作者有意为之的。无法理解这一点，也就无法走近这部作品真正的主旨。但在做进一步的剖析之前，我们先来了解一个概念：“不可靠的叙述者”（Unreliable Narrator）。

这是一个历史不算久远的文学学术语，由美国文艺批评家韦恩·布斯（Wayne Booth）于1961年首创，指的是文学作品中那些可信性存疑

的故事叙述者。在许多传统的第一人称叙事作品中，叙事者忠实地记录，转述所见、所闻、所想的一切，他们就是读者的眼睛和耳朵，通过他们读者得以了解书中的所有事件与人物。一个典型的例子就是狄更斯的名著《大卫·科波菲尔》中，那位无比绅士、无比诚实的同名主人公。但在另一些作品，尤其是现当代作品中，作者却打破传统，刻意选择一些不那么诚实可靠的叙事者，而通过他们扭曲的视野与内心，读者们看到的是一个完全变了样的世界。许多时候，这些“不可靠的叙述者”是骗子、恶棍、凶手，讲述的是颠倒黑白的谎言。他们中最臭名昭著的代表人物，就是纳博科夫的《洛丽塔》中那位狡诈狠毒，操纵人心，用诗意的语言误导读者，粉饰自己邪恶内心的“怪叔叔”亨伯特了。但另一些“不可靠的叙述者”并非是在蓄意撒谎。他们的记忆失真源自可怕的心灵创伤，源自某些他们难以直面的现实，源自自我欺骗。《少年派的奇幻漂流》就是这一类型的一个范例。少年派起初讲述的是一个不可思议的奇幻故事，但这个故事背后隐藏的却是一段黑暗恐怖的地狱之旅。与恶棍骗子相比，这一类不可靠的叙述者更难识别，因为不同于蓄意的欺人者，自欺者往往并不自知。而《我辈孤雏》中的主人公班克斯，就是属于这一类不自知的自欺者。

一个侦探，不能引领读者接近真相，反倒连自己的记忆都真假难辨，这究竟是怎么一回事呢？但《我辈孤雏》要讲述的不是神勇侦探破解谜题的老套故事。石黑一雄只是借用了侦探小说的外壳，探讨的却是“自我欺骗”究竟可以在何种程度上改写人的记忆，模糊幻想与现实的边界。故事的主人公—克里斯托弗·班克斯—是一个永远活在童年梦境中的男人，这个梦境不断涂改着记忆，扭曲着理智，一步步突破幻想与现实的边界，最终成为一个吞噬一切的黑洞。而读者要做的，就是从班克斯的这个记忆黑洞中，筛出真相的蛛丝马迹。虽然小说的主人公是名义上的侦探，但真正的侦探却是读者自己。

* * *

1930年，伦敦。故事开篇，主人公克里斯托弗·班克斯自我展示的是一个前途无量、自信热切的青年才俊形象。在应同窗旧友之邀参加的一场上流聚会中，班克斯道出了此生的志向：要成为一名铲除奸恶、扶正扬善的大侦探。也正是在这场聚会中，班克斯见到了一位令他着迷的奇女子—莎拉·亨明斯。

自以为已在侦探界小有名气的班克斯自信满满地想与莎拉结识，却不料在冷若冰霜的莎拉面前碰了一个大大的软钉子。主人公那光鲜

的自我形象从一开始就现出了破绽。尽管班克斯自称对此不以为意，但随后的故事发展很快会证明，他绝不是一个能够袒露内心波澜的人，即便是在自我回忆之中。

一场与旧相识的邂逅，勾起了主人公的童年回忆。班克斯讲述了幼时由一位“张伯伦上校”自上海护送回英国的旧事，由此引出了多年前父母双双失踪，自己沦为孤儿的事实。在与上校重逢叙旧的过程中，主人公的自我记忆却与上校对他的回忆大相径庭：班克斯坚称当年的自己坚强、镇定，处乱不惊；上校却记得登船那日的他只是个“哭个不停的小鬼”。主人公记忆的不可靠性在此始露端倪。

与此同时，班克斯的侦探生涯蒸蒸日上，莎拉终于向他抛出绣球，希望班克斯邀她作为女伴，共同出席一场盛大的上流社交晚会。班克斯婉拒，莎拉则明言定会准时现身晚会现场。

晚会当天发生了戏剧性的一幕：班克斯先是出于旧嫌，坚决不邀莎拉入席，莎拉大闹礼宾处，最终两人长谈一番，误会冰消瓦解。班克斯这才得知，原来莎拉也是孤儿。

班克斯终于开始回忆父母失踪前，他在上海公共租界度过的童年：英国商行派驻上海的高管父亲；严厉但慈爱的母亲，“全上海最美丽的英国女人”；儿时玩伴，邻家日本男孩秋良；还有一位父母的密友，也深得班克斯信任与尊重的“菲利普叔叔”。但金色的童年从一开始就蒙上了一层阴云：班克斯父亲所服务的英国公司从事着母亲最深恶痛绝的鸦片贸易，母亲甚至为此义愤填膺地当面怒斥前来督察的公司要员：“为这样的公司服务，您不觉得羞耻吗？赚这种亵渎上帝的钱财，您的良心能安吗？”

这场风波过后不久，父母的冲突爆发了。面对母亲的道德怒火，父亲进退两难。从母亲口中，先前斥责督察的那番话，居然一字不差地重现了。这不禁会让作为旁观者的我们疑惑：母亲这般怒斥的究竟是谁？那位公司督察，真的不是班克斯在记忆中替父亲寻找的一个替罪羊吗？而这时，“菲利普叔叔”则坚定地站在母亲的阵营中。尽管他此刻与班克斯情同叔侄，但某个弦外之音却暗示着另一番光景的未来。

菲利普渐渐在母亲的“反鸦片”团体中成为主心骨。父亲、母亲与菲利普叔叔三者间发展出一种微妙的关系。而在班克斯的几个记忆片段中，父亲似乎逐渐被母亲所感化。多亏你妈妈，我变得更坚强，让你有朝一日，会以我为荣。他记忆中的父亲如此对他说道。然而，

这并非班克斯九岁时的日记，而是班克斯成人后的自叙；选择性的记忆，选择性的解读，为的是支持一个自我构建的故事。

不久后的一天，父亲突然失踪。警方接报搜寻，但直到当天晚上仍一无所获。又一次，成年班克斯在自叙中轻描淡写地否认自己童年时的不安与焦虑，仿佛“他”当晚所担心的是未能履约去秋良家，而非父亲的失踪：“我已经为这样的小题大做感到十分不悦。”他如此宣称道。但无论是从人之常情，还是从接下来的情节发展，我们都不难看出，这绝非实情。最终，班克斯“相信”，母亲当夜对他如此说道：“不管发生什么事，你都能以（你父亲）为荣。”相信一记忆的不可靠性，正是通过这样细微而别具深意的用词，不动声色地显露纸间的。这就是石黑一雄细腻内敛的写作手法。

在邻家伙伴秋良的提议下，班克斯开始与他一道编排起上海滩第一神探孔探长出马，绑匪束手就擒，父亲终于获救的侦探剧。幻想与现实的边界上出现了第一道裂缝。随着剧本的不断改写，父亲渐渐从一个被五花大绑的人质变成了备受礼遇的座上宾；绑匪们甚至从汇中饭店偷了一张舒适的软床，专供父亲享用。

也正是在父亲失踪后不久，小班克斯目睹了另一场风波：母亲当着众人的面，痛斥一名菲利普叔叔引荐上门的中国士绅。多年以后，班克斯相信，此人正是湖南军阀王顾，且与父母失踪有着重大关系。而就在这场风波之后不久，“菲利普叔叔”设计诱骗小班克斯一同乘车去买手风琴，却在半途下车，将他抛下。等到小班克斯跑回家中，母亲已经不见踪迹。

5个月后，班克斯如约抵达上海，出席租界当局在汇中饭店举办的盛大晚宴。晚宴中，班克斯要求英国领事馆官员麦克唐纳提供协助，尽快安排他与一名受到蒋介石庇护的中共叛徒“黄蛇”会面。班克斯相信，这名“黄蛇”是解开父母失踪之谜的关键。但麦克唐纳似乎并不情愿涉足复杂的中国内政。

晚宴大厅内歌舞升平，觥筹交错，而就在对岸，侵华日军的几声炮响打破了一切安好的幻象。在班克斯的自叙中，租界内的各路名流都众星捧月般簇拥在他的身边，殷切期盼着他的到来能够平息战乱，化险为夷。而在作为旁观者的读者眼中，班克斯记忆的不可靠性变得愈发显眼了。一位侦探寻找父母的冒险与淞沪战局何干？又与租界的安危何干？幻想与现实的边界进一步模糊了。

晚宴临近尾声时，莎拉出现了。一番寒暄后，班克斯似乎听到了莎拉话外有话的一句暗示：“我想我们哪儿也不会去。除非有人来拯救我们……”然而，这句他记忆中不同寻常的话语，是否真有他事后层层附加的那些深意？

班克斯在追踪“黄蛇”之余，也开始追踪莎拉的行迹。在上海滩一家声名狼藉的赌场内，他发现斡旋受挫、心灰意冷的塞西尔爵士正赌性大发，而莎拉则寸步不离地陪侍一旁。酩酊大醉的塞西尔对妻子出言不逊，极尽侮辱，莎拉却显得不以为意，一再让班克斯不用为自己担心。临分别时，班克斯再度想起了前些天晚宴上莎拉的那句话，以及这句话背后他所认为的深意。

几天后，在一间寒酸的廉价客房中，班克斯见到了他儿时心中的英雄，如今老迈憔悴的孔探长。孔探长向班克斯透露了一条重要线索：多年前，在调查一桩枪击要案时，他从一名嫌犯口中审出了另一桩与此案无关的绑架案。嫌犯透露了七处可能用来窝藏肉票的地址，孔探长的手下随即搜查了其中六处，但最后一处的搜查却因为警界高层的阻挠而不了了之。孔探长怀疑此中必有蹊跷，但因为时隔太久，无法提供给班克斯关于那处地址的任何线索。

回到下榻的华懋饭店后，班克斯接到莎拉差人送来的一张字条，约他到饭店的某处楼梯间私会。在楼梯间里，莎拉告诉班克斯，自己已安排好了一切，决意离开塞西尔，要与他一同私奔去澳门，明天就动身。尽管难以舍弃自己的使命，但在莎拉的力劝下，班克斯最终答应与她第二天下午碰头，共赴天涯海角。哦，克里斯托弗，我们不能再这样子想事情了。否则我们将一无所有。多尝几年寂寞，多过几天空洞的人生，永远只知道自己做得还不够。放下你的工作，克里斯托弗。我们现在必须把这些全都抛开。我们明天就走，别再浪费任何一天……这番话究竟是出自莎拉之口，还是班克斯一厢情愿的内心？

第二天中午，班克斯在酒店中接到了孔探长打来的一通电话。老探长终于想起了最后一处未搜查的房屋就在一户叫“叶辰”的人家正对面。挂断电话后，莎拉差来的一名年轻的司机也如约现身，接上班克斯，驱车来到一家唱片店门口。路上，班克斯向司机打听叶辰的下落，发现对方果然听说过此人。

班克斯走进小小的店面，一曲慵懒的爵士乐——《我的眼中只有你》——蓦然响起，店主一指屋后角落，只见厚厚的布幔下现出一道暗门。推门进去，班克斯看到莎拉正坐在一只行李箱上，已经等候他多时了。

“她小心地放下烟嘴，站了起来。接着我们互相拥吻——我想，就像银幕上的情侣一样。这几乎跟我向来想象的一模一样，只不过我们的拥抱却有某种奇怪的别扭。”两人拥吻过后，莎拉告诉班克斯，她已雇好一条舢板，很快就会在附近的码头上靠岸，等着将他们送到一艘驶往澳门的汽轮上。班克斯却又想起了方才向年轻人打听的那位“叶辰”。此时此刻，他做出了一个没有回头路的抉择：他请求莎拉稍候片刻，自己去去便回。

然而，他这一去，便是永远。

班克斯出了店门，找到依然等候在外面的年轻司机，请他开车送自己到叶辰家。汽车在一道道狭街窄巷间迂回穿梭，远处隐隐响起了隆隆的枪炮声；尽管年轻人一遍遍向焦急的班克斯承诺叶辰家近在眼前，但一次次，前进的道路被瓦砾、人群和街垒所阻隔，那栋房子就像海市蜃楼一样可望不可即。而这正是梦境的特征：焦急地寻找一个永远无法抵达的地方。

终于，在闸北区的一片废墟之中，年轻人停下了车。这里靠近中日军队对峙的火线，年轻人不愿冒着危险继续前进。班克斯只能下

车，请年轻人画下地图，独自徒步跋涉。而他踏上的则是一段真正的噩梦之旅。

在一名中国军官的指引下，班克斯开始艰难地穿越一片惨遭战火蹂躏的闸北工厂区，依靠两座屹立在炮火中的高大烟囱 辨明方位。在迷宫一般的厂区废墟间，中日军队正在进行惨烈的巷战，逐屋争夺，白刃相接。四周不时传来伤兵濒死的哀嚎声，也分不清是中国人还是日本兵。在一间破屋的角落里，班克斯救下了一个负伤的男人。尽管这个披着日军军服的伤兵满脸血污，半人半鬼，还吐出一连串咬牙切齿的咒骂，但班克斯仍然一眼认定，这就是他的童年好友，邻家伙伴秋良。终于，男人的脸上也隐约有了故人相识的表情。于是，两人相互倚靠，朝着班克斯坚信关押着父母的那栋房子蹒跚而去……

班克斯的故事讲到了这里，作为旁观者的我们终于可以确信，这一切只可能发生在他的梦境中，因为分隔幻想与现实的逻辑边界已经彻底崩溃了。就算班克斯苦苦寻觅的那栋房子真的一度是绑匪关押人质的窝点，也只有一个孩子才会相信，在过去了整整二十年之后，他依然能够在同一个地方寻得父母。而这恰恰就是班克斯此刻的心智状态：一个永远活在童年迷梦中的男人。更离奇的是，他所遇见的每一个人——受莎拉雇用的年轻司机，与日军拼死鏖战的中国军官，还有身负重伤的那位“秋良”——都在默认，纵容，甚至协助他追逐这个荒诞的“使命”，没有一个人对他提出半点质疑。而只有在一个孩子的迷梦中，整个世界才会围绕着他的心愿旋转。莎拉——他此生的至爱——在他的梦境中越飘越远，最后彻底消失了，剩下的只有那个吞噬一切情感与理智的执念，那个童年创伤留下的黑洞——他毕生的“使命”。

班克斯的梦境继续着。最终，在一片断壁残垣之间，他找到了他苦苦寻觅的那栋房子：尽管左邻右舍都已在炮火中化为乌有，唯有这栋神奇的建筑毫发无伤，像是一个从另一个世界来的幽灵。忽然，房门吱呀一声开了。门里走出的不是班克斯的父母，而是一个孤零零的小女孩。而在她身后的屋子里，躺着三具鲜血淋漓、支离破碎的尸体——她的家人。又一个不幸的孤儿——还是说，这个梦境中的孤儿本来就是班克斯自己？班克斯走进屋里，焦急地寻找着父母的踪迹，翻箱倒柜，掘地三尺，越来越疯狂，越来越绝望。就在这时，一群日本兵夺门而入，俘虏了班克斯和他的“朋友”。

班克斯在这一场梦魇中，究竟真正经历了什么？他遇到的那个日本士兵果真是秋良吗？他真的接到过孔探长的电话吗？他真的找到了那位“叶辰”的家吗？——还是说，他只是像一个地狱里的梦游者那

样，漫无目的地在中日军队的交火线上游走？甚至，他真的在那家唱片店里见到了要与他共度此生的莎拉吗？幻想与现实已经水乳交融，难分彼此了。我们唯一能够肯定的是，他所以为的记忆与真相相去甚远。他与其说是在寻找真相，倒不如说是在逃避现实。但不论他如何逃避，真相终究是要水落石出的。

日军的军车将班克斯押送回了租界内的英国领事馆。而在那里，英国总领事为精疲力竭的班克斯准备了一份意想不到的礼物：他追踪了多时的那条“黄蛇”终于现身了。揭晓谜底的时刻到来了。

会面安排在了一栋由国民党特务严密把守的法租界洋楼内。在一间大书房的尽头，班克斯看着一个人影绕过书桌，朝自己走来。他认出了这个人正是他曾经的“菲利普叔叔”，今日的“黄蛇”。

在菲利普吐露真相之前，班克斯抢先道出了那个他在心中默默编织了二十年的童话故事，那个他如此渴望求证的幻梦：父亲和母亲因为反对鸦片贸易，致力于帮助中国人民根除毒瘾而开罪于父亲所服务的商行，结果先后遭人绑架暗算。他们是为正义的事业而献身的。

“我猜你也是这么以为。”菲利普点点头。只是真相——“真相只怕没有那么伟大。”班克斯的父亲没有被人绑架。他只是和一个情妇私奔去了马六甲，后来染病死在了新加坡。母亲对他过高的道德要求最终压垮了他，而他的选择就是彻底沉沦。母亲的命运则更为悲惨。她因为羞辱了那名湖南军阀王顾而给自己招来了厄运。就在菲利普将小班克斯骗开的当天，王顾派人将母亲掳走，押往他的湘西山寨为妾。就这样，班克斯的母亲沦为了一个残暴军阀的玩物，而她之所以甘心忍受这样的屈辱，没有一死了之，唯一的原因就是她的儿子：班克斯在英国享有的一切优渥生活与公学教育，背后的真正金主不是他的富有姑妈，而是军阀王顾；而换来这一切的，则是母亲的血泪。这，就是他的“菲利普叔叔”当年为了他与王顾达成的协议。

许多年过去了。在养女詹妮弗的陪伴下，班克斯乘班机来到了香港。终于，在故事临近尾声的时候，班克斯的自叙中出现了第一个，也是唯一一个云淡风轻的自证，暗示他之前的回忆有多少是一个病人的妄想。“即使到了最近，詹妮弗依然觉得我像是个卧病在床的人，特别是当我人生里又出现了有关过去的事时。”而他过去的病显然是心病。最终，在香港的一家精神病人疗养院中，他找到了自己的母亲。多年的磨难与屈辱摧毁了她的心智，但没有摧毁她对儿子的爱，尽管她已认不出眼前的这个男人了。当班克斯流着泪问母亲能否原谅儿子时，母亲迷惑地反问，原谅他的什么呢？他又没犯错！

至于莎拉，班克斯与她此生再未相见。去往澳门后，她一路辗转来到新加坡，在那里嫁给了一位浪漫的法国“伯爵”。战争结束两年后，班克斯收到了莎拉寄来的唯一一封信，信中莎拉用“拘谨，甚至毫无生气”的愉快语调讲述了她幸福的婚后生活。只是到了最后，莎拉才隐隐透露了她埋藏在心底的真情：“我现在由衷地相信，那天你没跟我走，是正确的决定。你向来觉得你有使命要达成，我敢说你若没有先完成你的使命，你也永远无法把心献给任何人。我只希望那件任务早已完成，而你现在可以找到我近来几乎视为当然的幸福与呵护。”

* * *

班克斯的故事结束了，但他留给我们的思考却余音绕梁。在一次访谈节目中，石黑一雄曾如此评论他的这位主人公：“我并不是在文学技巧的意义上构思一名‘不可靠的叙事者’的。我的写作发生在一个无法确定现实在何处的领域。从某种程度上讲，我想，这就是我们所有人生活的世界——在一片迷雾之中。”而这片迷雾之中的所在，恰恰就是“隐藏在我们与世界的虚幻联系之下的深渊”。也许，这就是为什么班克斯记忆的虚妄这么难以洞察吧，因为他的视角与声音就是我们每一个人的视角与声音。又有多少人穷其一生都对伪装成真实回忆的自我欺骗视而不见呢？

战争，是石黑一雄作品中一个反复出现的背景。但他并非是在用宏大的历史事件烘托个人的渺小；相反，用他自己的话说，“动荡之中的上海城是班克斯内心世界崩坏的一个外在体现”。石黑所关注的，并非巨人的碰撞与理念的对决，而是深不可测的人类情感。在这个宏大的舞台上，真正的主角无疑是人心。在“宏大”与“深度”之间，石黑选择的是后者。

石黑的大部分作品主题都是灰暗的。同《长日将尽》一样，《我辈孤雏》所讲述的也是一段被荒废的人生，一场被错过的幸福。但在一次访谈节目中，他却声称自己的作品是乐观的、积极的。听众们都笑了，但石黑并不是在开玩笑。在他看来，人终有一死；因此，以何种方式离开这个世界也许并不重要。名利终为身外之物。而一个人是否曾经拥有过对于人心而言最为宝贵的东西，才是我们应该关注的。而对于班克斯来说，那就是母亲爱的证言与莎拉的真情流露。

PART ONE

London, 24th July 1930

Chapter One

It was the summer of 1923, the summer I came down from Cambridge, when despite my aunt's wishes that I return to Shropshire, I decided my future lay in the capital and took up a small flat at Number 14b Bedford Gardens in Kensington. I remember it now as the most wonderful of summers. After years of being surrounded by fellows, both at school and at Cambridge, I took great pleasure in my own company. I enjoyed the London parks, the quiet of the Reading Room at the British Museum; I indulged entire afternoons strolling the streets of Kensington, outlining to myself plans for my future, pausing once in a while to admire how here in England, even in the midst of such a great city, creepers and ivy are to be found clinging to the fronts of fine houses.

It was on one such leisurely walk that I encountered quite by chance an old schoolfriend, James Osbourne, and discovering him to be a neighbour, suggested he call on me when he was next passing. Although at that point I had yet to receive a single visitor in my rooms, I issued my invitation with confidence, having chosen the premises with some care. The rent was not high, but my landlady had furnished the place in a tasteful manner that evoked an unhurried Victorian past; the drawing room, which received plenty of sun throughout the first half of the day, contained an ageing sofa as well as two snug armchairs, an antique sideboard and an oak bookcase filled with crumbling encyclopaedias - all of which I was convinced would win the approval of any visitor. Moreover, almost immediately upon taking the rooms, I had walked over to Knightsbridge and acquired there a Queen Anne tea service, several packets of fine teas, and a large tin of biscuits. So when Osbourne did happen along one morning a few days later, I was able to serve out the refreshments with an assurance that never once permitted him to suppose he was my first guest.

For the first fifteen minutes or so, Osbourne moved restlessly around my drawing room, complimenting me on the premises, examining this and that, looking regularly out of the windows to exclaim at whatever was going on below. Eventually he flopped down into the sofa, and we were able to exchange news - our own and that of old schoolfriends. I remember we spent a little time discussing the activities of the workers' unions, before embarking on a long and enjoyable debate on German philosophy, which enabled us to display to one another the intellectual prowess we each had gained at our respective universities. Then Osbourne rose and began his pacing again, pronouncing as he did so upon his various plans for the future.

'I've a mind to go into publishing, you know. Newspapers, magazines, that sort of thing. In fact, I fancy writing a column myself. About politics, social issues. That is, as I say, if I decide not to go into politics myself. I say, Banks, do you really have no idea what you want to do? Look, it's all out there for us' - he indicated the window - 'Surely you have some plans.'

'I suppose so,' I said, smiling. 'I have one or two things in mind. I'll let you know in good time.'

'What have you got up your sleeve? Come on, out with it! I'll get it out of you yet!'

But I revealed nothing to him, and before long got him arguing again about philosophy or poetry or some such thing. Then around noon, Osbourne suddenly remembered a lunch appointment in Piccadilly and began to gather up his belongings. It was as he was leaving, he turned at the door, saying:

'Look, old chap, I meant to say to you. I'm going along tonight to a bash. It's in honour of Leonard Evershott. The tycoon, you know. An uncle of mine's giving it. Rather short notice, but I wondered if you'd care to come along. I'm quite serious. I'd been meaning to pop over to you long ago, just never got round to it. It'll be at the Charingworth.'

When I did not reply immediately, he took a step towards me and said:

'I thought of you because I was remembering. I was remembering how you always used to quiz me about my being "well connected". Oh, come on! Don't pretend you've forgotten! You used to interrogate me mercilessly. "Well connected? Just what does that mean, well connected?" Well, I thought, here's a chance for old Banks to see "well connected" for himself.' Then he shook his head, as though at a memory, saying: 'My goodness, you were such an odd bird at school.'

I believe it was at this point I finally assented to his suggestion for the evening - an evening which, as I shall explain, was to prove far more significant than I could then have imagined - and showed him out without betraying in any part the resentment I was feeling at these last words of his.

My annoyance only grew once I had sat down again. I had, as it happened, guessed immediately what Osbourne had been referring to. The fact was, throughout school, I had heard it said repeatedly of Osbourne that he was 'well connected'. It was a phrase that came up unfailingly when people talked of him, and I believe I too used it about him whenever it seemed called for. It was indeed a concept that fascinated me, this notion that he was in some mysterious way connected to various of the higher walks of life, even though he looked and behaved no differently from the rest of us. However, I cannot imagine I 'mercilessly interrogated' him as he had claimed. It is true the subject was something I thought about a lot when I was fourteen or fifteen, but Osbourne and I had not been especially close at school and, as far as I remember, I only once brought it up with him personally.

It was on a foggy autumn morning, and the two of us had been sitting on a low wall outside a country inn. My guess is that we would have been in the Fifth by then. We had been appointed as markers for a cross-country run, and were waiting for the runners to emerge from the fog across a nearby field so that we could point them in the correct direction down a muddy lane. We were not expecting the runners for some time yet, and so had been idly chatting. It was on this occasion, I am sure, that I asked Osbourne about his 'well connectedness'. Osbourne, who for all his exuberance, had a modest nature, tried to change the subject. But I persisted until he said eventually:

'Oh, do knock it off, Banks. It's all just nonsense, there's nothing to analyse. One simply knows people. One has parents, uncles, family friends. I don't know what there is to be so puzzled about.' Then quickly realising what he had said, he had turned and touched my arm. 'Dreadfully sorry, old fellow. That was awfully tactless of me.'

This faux pas seemed to cause Osbourne much more anguish than it had me. Indeed, it is not impossible it had remained on his conscience for all those years, so that in asking me to accompany him to the Charingworth Club that evening, he was in some way trying to make amends. In any case, as I say, I had not been at all upset that foggy morning by his admittedly careless remark. In fact, it had become a matter of some irritation to me that my schoolfriends, for all their readiness to fall into banter concerning virtually any other of one's misfortunes, would observe a great solemnness at the first mention of my parents' absence. Actually, odd as it may sound, my lack of parents - indeed, of any close kin in England except my aunt in Shropshire - had by then long ceased to be of any great inconvenience to me. As I would often point out to my companions, at a boarding school like ours, we had all learned to get on without parents, and my position was not as unique as all that. Nevertheless, now I look back on it, it seems probable that at least some of my fascination with Osbourne's 'well connectedness' had to do with what I then perceived to be my complete lack of connection with the world beyond St Dunstan's. That I would, when the time came, forge such connections for myself and make my way, I had no doubts. But it is possible I believed I would learn from Osbourne something crucial, something of the way such things worked.

But when I said before that Osbourne's words as he left my flat had somewhat offended me, I was not referring to his raising the matter of my 'interrogating' him all those years before. Rather, what I had taken exception to was his casual judgement that I had been 'such an odd bird at school'.

In fact, it has always been a puzzle to me that Osbourne should have said such a thing of me that morning, since my own memory is that I blended perfectly into English school life. During even my earliest weeks at St Dunstan's, I do not believe I did anything to cause myself embarrassment. On my very first day, for instance, I recall observing a mannerism many of the boys adopted when standing and talking - of tucking the right hand into a waistcoat pocket and moving the left shoulder up and down in a kind of shrug to underline certain of their remarks. I distinctly remember reproducing this mannerism on that same first day with sufficient expertise that not a single of my fellows noticed anything odd or thought to make fun.

In much the same bold spirit, I rapidly absorbed the other gestures, turns of phrase and exclamations popular among my peers, as well as grasping the deeper mores and etiquettes prevailing in my new surroundings. I certainly realised quickly enough that it would not do for me to indulge openly - as I had been doing routinely in Shanghai - my ideas on crime and its detection. So much so that even when during my third year there was a series of thefts, and the entire school was enjoying playing at detectives, I carefully refrained from joining in in all but a nominal way. And it was, no doubt, some remnant of this same policy that caused me to reveal so little of my 'plans' to Osbourne that morning he called on me.

However, for all my caution, I can bring to mind at least two instances from school that suggest I must, at least occasionally, have lowered my guard sufficiently to give some idea of my ambitions. I was unable even at the time to account for these incidents, and am no closer to doing so today.

The earlier of these occurred on the occasion of my fourteenth birthday. My two good friends of that time, Robert Thornton-Browne and Russell Stanton, had taken me to a teashop in the village and we had been enjoying ourselves over scones and cream cakes. It was a rainy Saturday afternoon and all the other tables were occupied. This meant that every few minutes more rain-soaked villagers would come in, look around, and throw disapproving looks in our direction as though we should immediately vacate our table for them. But Mrs Jordan, the proprietress, had always been welcoming towards us, and on that afternoon of my birthday, we felt we had every right to be occupying the choice table beside the bay window with its view of the village square. I do not recall much of what we talked about that day; but once we had eaten our fill, my two companions exchanged looks, then Thornton-Browne reached down into his satchel and presented to me a gift-wrapped package.

As I set about opening it, I quickly realised the package had been wrapped in numerous sheets, and my friends would laugh noisily each time I removed one layer, only to be confronted by another. All the signs, then, were that I would find some joke item at the end of it all. What I did eventually uncover was a weathered leather case, and when I undid the tiny catch and raised the lid, a magnifying glass.

I have it here now before me. Its appearance has changed little over the years; it was on that afternoon already well travelled. I remember noting this, along with the fact that it was very powerful, surprisingly weighty, and that the ivory handle was chipped all down one side. I did not notice until later - one needs a second magnifying glass to read the engraving - that it was manufactured in Zurich in 1887.

My first reaction to this gift was one of huge excitement. I snatched it up, brushing aside the bundles of wrapping covering the table surface - I suspect in my enthusiasm I caused a few sheets to flutter to the floor - and began immediately to test it on some specks of butter smeared on the tablecloth. I became so absorbed that I was only vaguely aware of my friends laughing in that exaggerated way that signifies a joke at one's expense. By the time I looked up, finally self-conscious, they had both fallen into an uncertain silence. It was then that Thornton-Browne gave a half-hearted snigger, saying:

'We thought since you're going to be a detective, you'd be needing one of these.'

At this point, I quickly recovered my wits and made a show of pretending the whole thing had been an amusing jest. But by then, I fancy, my two friends were themselves confused about their intentions, and for the remainder of our time at the teashop, we never quite regained our former comfortable mood.

As I say, I have the magnifying glass here now in front of me. I used it when investigating the Mannering case; I used it again, most recently, during the Trevor Richardson affair. A magnifying glass may not be quite the crucial piece of equipment of popular myth, but it remains a useful tool for the gathering of certain sorts of evidence, and I fancy I will, for some time yet, carry about with me my birthday gift from Robert Thornton-Browne and Russell Stanton. Gazing at it now, this thought occurs to me: if my companions' intention was indeed to tease me, well then, the joke is now very much on them. But sadly, I have no way now of ascertaining what they had in mind, nor indeed how, for all my precautions, they had ever gleaned my secret ambition. Stanton, who had lied about his age in order to volunteer, was killed in the third battle of Ypres. Thornton-Browne, I heard, died of tuberculosis two years ago. In any case, both boys left St Dunstan's in the fifth year and I had long since lost touch with them by the time I heard of their deaths. I still remember, though, how disappointed I was when Thornton-Browne left the school; he had been the one real friend I had made since arriving in England, and I missed him much throughout the latter part of my career at St Dunstan's.

The second of these two instances that comes to mind occurred a few years later - in the Lower Sixth - but my recollection of it is not as detailed. In fact, I cannot remember at all what came before and after this particular moment. What I have is a memory of walking into a classroom - Room 15 in the Old Priory - where the sun was pouring through the narrow cloister windows in shafts, revealing the dust hanging in the air. The master had yet to arrive, but I must have come in slightly late, for I remember finding my classmates already sitting about in clusters on the desk-tops, benches and window ledges. I was about to join one such group of five or six boys, when their faces all turned to me and I saw immediately that they had been discussing me. Then, before I could say anything, one of the group, Roger Brenthurst, pointed towards me and remarked:

‘But surely he's rather too short to be a Sherlock.’

A few of them laughed, not particularly unkindly, and that, as far as I recall, was all there was to it. I never heard any further talk concerning my aspirations to be a ‘Sherlock’, but for some time afterwards I had a niggling concern that my secret had got out and become a topic for discussion behind my back.

Incidentally, the need to exercise caution around this whole topic of my ambitions had been impressed upon me before I ever arrived at St Dunstan's. For I had spent much of my first few weeks in England wandering about the common near my aunt's cottage in Shropshire, performing amidst the damp ferns the various detective scenarios Akira and I had evolved together in Shanghai. Of course, now that I was alone, I was obliged to take on all his roles as well; moreover, aware as I was that I could be seen from the cottage, I had had the sense to enact these dramas with restrained movements, muttering our lines under my breath - in marked contrast to the uninhibited manner in which Akira and I had been accustomed to carry on.

Such precautions, however, had proved inadequate. For one morning I had overheard from the little attic room I had been given, my aunt talking with some friends down in the drawing room. It was the sudden lowering of their voices that had first aroused my curiosity, and I soon found myself creeping out on to the landing and leaning over the rail.

'He's gone for hours,' I could hear her saying. 'It's hardly healthy, a boy his age, sunk in his own world like that. He has to start looking ahead.'

'But it's only to be expected, surely,' someone said. 'After everything that's happened to him.'

'He has nothing at all to gain by brooding,' my aunt said. 'He's been well provided for, and in that sense he's been lucky. It's time he looked forward. I mean to put a stop to all this introspection.'

From that day on I ceased to go to the common, and in general, took steps to avoid any further displays of 'introspection'. But I was then still very young, and at nights, lying in that attic room, listening to the creak of the boards as my aunt moved about the cottage winding her clocks and seeing to her cats, I would often enact again, in my imagination, all our old detective dramas in just the way Akira and I had always done.

But let me return to that summer's day Osbourne called at my Kensington flat. I do not wish to imply that this remark of his, about my being 'an odd bird', preoccupied me for more than a few moments. In fact, I went out myself, not long after Osbourne, in rather good spirits, and was soon to be found in St James's Park, strolling about the flower beds, growing ever more eager for the evening ahead.

Thinking again of that afternoon, it strikes me I had every right to feel a little nervous, and it is entirely typical of the foolish arrogance that carried me through those early London days that I did not. I was aware, of course, that this particular evening would be on a different level from anything I had ever attended at university; that I might well, moreover, encounter points of custom as yet unfamiliar to me. But I felt sure I would, with my usual vigilance, negotiate any such difficulties, and in general acquit myself well. My concerns as I drifted around the park were of a quite different order. When Osbourne had talked of 'well-connected' guests, I had immediately assumed these to include at least a few of the leading detectives of the day. I fancy, then, that I spent a lot of my time that afternoon working out just what I would say should I be introduced to Matlock Stevenson, or perhaps even to Professor Charleville. I rehearsed over and over how I would - modestly, but with a certain dignity - outline my ambitions; and I pictured to myself one or the other of them taking a fatherly interest in me, offering all kinds of advice and insisting I come to him for guidance in the future.

Of course, the evening turned out to be a major disappointment - even if, as you will presently see, it was to prove particularly significant for quite other reasons. What I did not know at this point was that in this country, detectives tend not to participate in society gatherings. This is not through any lack of invitations; my own recent experience will testify to the fact that fashionable circles are forever trying to recruit the celebrated detectives of the day. It is just that these same persons tend to be earnest, often reclusive individuals who are dedicated to their work and have little inclination to mingle with one another, let alone with 'society' at large.

As I say, this was not something I appreciated as I arrived at the Charingworth Club that evening and followed Osbourne's example of cheerily greeting the grandly uniformed doorman. But I was quickly disabused within minutes of our entering the crowded room on the first floor. I do not know how exactly this occurred - for I had not had the time to ascertain the identities of anyone present - but a kind of intuitive revelation swept over me which made me feel utterly foolish about my earlier excitement. Suddenly it seemed unbelievable that I had ever expected to find Matlock Stevenson or Professor Charleville hob-nobbing with the financiers and government ministers I knew were around me. Indeed, I was so thrown by this discrepancy between the event I had arrived at and the one I had been thinking about throughout the afternoon, that all my poise, at least temporarily, deserted me, and for half an hour or so, much to my annoyance, I could not bring myself to leave Osbourne's side.

I am sure this same agitated frame of mind accounts for the fact that when I now think back to that evening, so many aspects seem somewhat exaggerated or unnatural. For instance, when I now try to picture the room, it is uncommonly dark; this despite the wall lamps, the candles on the tables, the chandeliers above us - none of which seem to make any impression on the pervading darkness. The carpet is very thick, so that to move about the room, one is obliged to drag one's feet, and all around, greying men in black jackets are doing just this, some even pressing forward their shoulders as if walking into a gale. The waiters, too, with their silver trays, lean into conversations at peculiar angles. There are hardly any ladies present, and those one can see seem oddly self-effacing, almost immediately melting from one's view behind the forest of black evening suits.

As I say, I am sure these impressions are not accurate, but that is how the evening remains in my mind. I remember standing about frozen with awkwardness, repeatedly sipping from my glass, as Osbourne chatted amiably with one guest after another, most of them a good thirty years older than us. I did once or twice try to join in, but my voice sounded conspicuously child-like, and in any case, most conversations centred on people or issues about which I knew nothing.

After a while, I grew angry - at myself, at Osbourne, at the whole proceedings. I felt I had every right to despise the people around me; that they were for the most part greedy and self-seeking, lacking any idealism or sense of public duty. Fuelled by this anger, I was at last able to tear myself away from Osbourne and move off through the darkness into another part of the room.

I came to an area illuminated by a dull pool of light cast by a small wall lantern. The crowd was thinner here, and I noticed a silver-haired man of perhaps seventy smoking with his back to the room. It took a moment for me to realise he was gazing into a mirror, and by then he had noticed me looking at him. I was about to hurry on, when he said without turning:

‘Enjoying yourself?’

‘Oh yes,’ I said with a light laugh. ‘Thank you. Yes, a splendid occasion.’

‘But a little lost, eh?’

I hesitated, then gave another laugh. ‘Perhaps a little. Yes, sir.’

The silver-haired man turned and studied me carefully. He then said: ‘If you wish, I’ll tell you who some of these people are. Then if there’s anyone you want especially to talk to, I'll take you over and introduce you. What do you say to that?'

'That would be most kind. Most kind indeed.'

'Good.'

He came a step closer and surveyed what was visible to us of the room. Then leaning towards me, he proceeded to point out this personage and that. Even when the name was an illustrious one, he would remember to add for my benefit 'the financier', 'the composer', or whatever. With the less well known, he would summarise in some detail the person's career and the reason for his importance. I believe he was in the midst of telling me about a clergyman standing quite near us, when he broke off suddenly and said:

'Ah. I see the attention has drifted.'

'I'm terribly sorry ...'

'Quite all right. Perfectly natural, after all. Young fellow like you.'

'I assure you, sir ...'

'No apology required.' He gave a laugh and nudged my arm. 'Find her pretty, eh?'

I did not know quite how to respond. I could hardly deny I had been diverted by the young woman several yards to our left, at that moment in conversation with two middle-aged men. But as it happened, that first time I saw her, I did not think her at all pretty. It is even possible I somehow sensed, there and then, at my first sight of her, those qualities which I have since discovered to be so significantly a part of her. What I saw was a small, rather elf-like young woman with dark, shoulder-length hair. Even though at that moment she was clearly wishing to charm the men she was talking to, I could see something about her smile that might in an instant turn it into a sneer. A slight crouch around her shoulders, like that of a bird of prey, gave her posture a suggestion of scheming. Above all, I noticed a certain quality around her eyes - a kind of severity, something ungenerously exacting - which I see now, in retrospect, was what more than anything else caused me to stare at her with such fascination that evening.

Then, as we were both still gazing at her, she looked our way, and recognising my companion, sent him a quick, cold smile. The silver-haired man gave a salute and a respectful bow of the head.

‘A charming young lady,’ he murmured, as he began leading me away. ‘But no sense in a chap like you wasting time pursuing her. I don’t mean to be offensive, you look a jolly decent type. But you see, that’s Miss Hemmings. Miss Sarah Hemmings.’

The name meant nothing to me. But whereas my guide had earlier been so conscientious in supplying me with the backgrounds of those he had pointed out, he uttered the name of this woman clearly expecting me to be familiar with it. So it was that I nodded and said:

‘Oh yes. So that’s Miss Hemmings.’

The gentleman paused again and surveyed the room from our new vantage point.

‘Now let me see. I take it you’re looking for someone to give you a leg up in life. Correct? Don’t worry. Played much the same game myself when I was young. Now let me see. Who do we have here?’ Then he turned back to me suddenly to ask:

‘Now what was it again you said you wanted to do with your life?’

Of course, I had not at that point told him anything. But now, after a slight hesitation, I answered simply:

‘Detective, sir.’

‘Detective? Hmm.’ He continued to gaze around the room. ‘You mean ... a policeman?’

‘More a private consultant.’

He nodded. ‘Naturally, naturally.’ He continued to draw on his cigar, deep in thought. Then he said: ‘Not interested in museums, by any chance? Chap over there, known him for years. Museums. Skulls, relics, that kind of thing. Not interested? Didn’t think so.’ He went on gazing around the room, sometimes craning his neck to see someone. ‘Of course,’ he said eventually, ‘a lot of young men dream of becoming detectives. I dare say I did once, in my more fanciful moments. One feels so idealistic at your age. Longs to be the great detective of the day. To root out single-handedly all the evil in the world. Commendable. But really, my boy, it’s just as well to have, let us say, a few other strings to your bow. Because a year or two from now – I don’t mean to be offensive – but pretty soon you’ll feel quite differently about things. Are you interested in furniture? I ask because over there stands none other than Hamish Robertson himself.’

‘With all respect, sir. The ambition which I just confided to you is hardly the whim of a moment. It’s a calling I’ve felt my whole life.’

‘Your whole life? But what are you? Twenty-one? Twenty-two? Well, I suppose I shouldn’t discourage you. After all, if our young men won’t entertain idealistic notions of this sort, who is there to do so? And no doubt, my boy, you believe today’s world to be a far more evil place than the one of thirty years ago, is that it? That civilisation’s on the brink and all that?’

‘As a matter of fact, sir,’ I said curtly, ‘I do believe that to be the case.’

‘I remember when I thought so too.’ Suddenly his sarcasm had been replaced by a more kindly tone, and I even thought I saw tears fill his eyes. ‘Why is it, do you suppose, my boy? Is the world really getting more evil? Is Homo sapiens degenerating as a species?’

‘I don’t know about that, sir,’ I replied, this time more gently. ‘All I can say is that to the objective observer, the modern criminal is growing increasingly clever. He has grown more ambitious, more daring, and science has placed a whole new array of sophisticated tools at his disposal.’

‘I see. And without gifted chaps like you on our side, the future’s bleak, is that it?’ He shook his head sadly.

‘You might have something there. Too easy for an old chap to scoff. Perhaps you’re right, my boy. Perhaps we’ve allowed things to slide for too long. Ah.’

The silver-haired man bowed his head again as Sarah Hemmings came drifting past us. She was moving through the crowd with a haughty grace, her gaze moving from left to right in search – so it seemed to me – of someone she deemed worthy of her presence. Noting my companion, she gave him the same quick smile as before, but did not break her stride. For just a second, her gaze fell on me, but almost instantly – before I could so much as smile – she had dismissed me from her mind and was making her way towards someone she had spotted on the other side of the room.

Later that night, as Osbourne and I sat together in a taxicab speeding us back towards Kensington, I tried to find out something more concerning Sarah Hemmings. Osbourne, for all his pretending that he had found the evening a bore, was well pleased with himself, and eager to recount to me in detail the many conversations he had had with influential persons. It was not easy then to get him on to the subject of Miss Hemmings without my appearing unduly curious. Eventually, however, I did get him to say:

‘Miss Hemmings? Oh yes, her. Used to be engaged to Herriot-Lewis. You know, the conductor fellow. Then he went and gave that Schubert concert at the Albert Hall last autumn. Remember that debacle?’

When I confessed my ignorance of it, Osbourne went on:

‘They didn’t quite throw chairs about, but I dare say they would have done if the things hadn’t been fixed to the floor. The fellow from The Times described the performance as a “complete travesty”. Or did he say, “a violation”? Anyway, he didn’t much care for it.’

‘And Miss Hemmings ...’

‘Dropped him like a hot potato. Threw the engagement ring back at him, apparently. And she’s kept a huge distance from the chap ever since.’

‘All because of this concert?’

‘Well, it was pretty ghastly, by all accounts. Caused quite a stir. Her breaking off the engagement, I mean. But what a lot of bores they were tonight, Banks. Do you suppose when we’re that age, we’ll be carrying on like that?’

During that first year after Cambridge, largely through my friendship with Osbourne, I found myself attending other smart social events on a fairly regular basis. Thinking back to that period of my life, it now strikes me as a singularly frivolous one. There were supper parties, luncheons, cocktail parties held usually in apartments around Bloomsbury and Holborn. I was determined to put behind me the awkwardness I had displayed that evening at the Charingworth, and my manner at these events grew steadily more assured. Indeed, for a time, it is reasonable to say I came to occupy a place within one of the fashionable London ‘sets’.

Miss Hemmings was not part of my particular set, but I found that whenever I mentioned her to friends, they would know of her. Moreover, I would glimpse her from time to time at functions, or else, often, in the tea-rooms of the grander hotels. In any case, in one way or another, I ended up accumulating a fair amount of information concerning her career in London society.

How curious to recall a time when such vague second-hand impressions were all I knew of her! It did not take long to establish that there were many who did not regard her with approval. Even before the business of the broken engagement to Anthony Herriot-Lewis, it seemed she had made enemies on account of what many referred to as her 'forthrightness'. Friends of Herriot-Lewis - whose objectivity, to be fair, could hardly be counted on by this point - described how ruthlessly she had pursued the conductor. Others accused her of manipulating Herriot-Lewis's friends in order to get close to him. Her subsequent dropping of the conductor, after all her determined efforts, was viewed by some as puzzling, by others simply as conclusive evidence of her cynical motives. On the other hand, I came across plenty who spoke rather well of Miss Hemmings. She was frequently described as 'clever', 'fascinating', 'complicated'. Women in particular defended her right to break off an engagement, whatever her reasons. Even her defenders, however, agreed that she was a 'terrible snob of a new sort'; that she did not consider a person worthy of respect unless he or she possessed a celebrated name. And I must say, observing her from afar as I did that year, I came across little to counter such claims. Indeed, I sometimes got the impression she was unable properly to breathe anything other than the air surrounding the most distinguished persons. For a time she became linked with Henry Quinn, the barrister, only to distance herself again after his failure in the Charles Browning case. Then there came rumours of her growing friendship with James Beacon, who at that time was a rising young government minister. In any case, by this point, it had become abundantly clear to me what the silver-haired man had meant when he had declared there was little point in a 'chap like me' pursuing Miss Hemmings. Of course, I had not really understood his words at the time. Now that I did so, I found myself following Miss Hemmings's activities with a peculiar interest that year. For all that, I did not actually speak to her until one afternoon almost two years after I first saw her at the Charingworth Club.

I had been taking tea at the Waldorf Hotel with an acquaintance when some business had suddenly called him away. I was thus sitting there by myself on the floor of the Palm Court, indulging in the scones and jam, when I noticed Miss Hemmings, also sitting alone, up at one of the balcony tables. As I have said, this was by no means the first time I had glimpsed her at such places, but that afternoon things were different. For this was barely a month after the conclusion of the Mannering case, and I was still on something of a cloud. Certainly, that period after my first public triumph was a heady one: many new doors suddenly opened to me; invitations poured in from entirely new sources; those who previously had been no more than pleasant to me exclaimed with great enthusiasm when I entered a room. It is no wonder I lost my bearings a little.

In any case, on that afternoon at the Waldorf, I found myself rising and making my way up to the balcony. I am not sure what I expected. It is again typical of my smugness of those days that I did not stop to consider if Miss Hemmings would really be so delighted to make my acquaintance. Perhaps a flicker of doubt did cross my mind as I strolled past the pianist and approached the table where she sat reading her book. But I remember feeling rather pleased with the way my voice came out, urbane and jocular, as I said:

‘Excuse me, but I thought it time I introduced myself to you. We have so many mutual friends. I’m Christopher Banks.’

I managed to pronounce my name with a flourish, but already by this point, my assurance had started to fade. For Miss Hemmings was looking up at me with a cold, searching gaze. And in the silence that followed, she gave a quick glance back to her book, as though it had let out a groan of complaint. Finally she said, in a voice filled with bafflement:

‘Oh yes? How do you do?’

‘The Mannering case,’ I said, foolishly. ‘You might have read about it.’

‘Yes. You investigated it.’

It was this utterance, made so matter-of-factly, which quite threw me off my balance. For she had spoken with no note whatsoever of realisation; it was simply a flat statement implying that she had been quite aware of my identity all along, and that she was still far from being enlightened as to why I was standing beside her table. Suddenly I felt the giddy elation of the past weeks evaporating. And I believe it was then, as I let out a nervous laugh, it occurred to me that the Mannering case, for all the self-evident brilliance of my investigation, for all the praise of my friends, somehow did not carry as much importance in the wider world as I had assumed.

It is quite possible we had a perfectly civil exchange before I began my retreat back down to my own table. And it seems to me today that Miss Hemmings was more than entitled to respond as she did; how absurd to have imagined something like the Mannering case would be sufficient to impress her! But I remember, once I had sat down again, feeling both angry and dejected. The thought came to me that I had not only just made an ass of myself with Miss Hemmings, but that I had perhaps been doing so continuously throughout the previous month; that my friends, for all their congratulations, had been laughing at me.

By the following day, I had come to accept that I fully deserved the jolt I had received. But this episode at the Waldorf probably did arouse in me feelings of resentment towards Miss Hemmings which I never fully shook off - and which undoubtedly contributed to yesterday evening’s unfortunate events. At the time though, I tried to see the whole incident as providential. It had, after all, brought home to me how easy it was to become distracted from one’s most cherished goals. My intention was to combat evil - in particular, evil of the insidious, furtive kind - and as such had little to do with courting popularity within society circles.

I began thereafter to socialise far less and became more deeply immersed in my work. I studied notable cases from the past, and absorbed new areas of knowledge that might one day prove useful. Around this time, too, I began scrutinising the careers of various detectives who had established their names, and found I could discern a line between those reputations that rested on solid achievement, and those that derived essentially from a position within some influential set; there was, I came to see, a true and a false way for a detective to gain renown. In short, much as I had been excited by the offers of friendship extended to me following the Mannering affair, I did, after that encounter at the Waldorf, remember again the example set by my parents, and I resolved not to allow frivolous preoccupations to deflect me.

Chapter Two

Since I am now recalling that period in my life following the Mannering case, it is perhaps worth mentioning here my unexpected reunion with Colonel Chamberlain after all those years. It is perhaps surprising, given the role he played at such a pivotal juncture in my childhood, that we had not kept in closer contact. But for whatever reason, we had failed to do so, and when I did meet him again - a month or two after that encounter with Miss Hemmings at the Waldorf - it was quite by chance.

I was standing in a bookshop on the Charing Cross Road one rainy afternoon, examining an illustrated edition of Ivanhoe. I had been aware for some time of someone hovering close behind me, and assuming he was wishing access to that part of the shelf, had moved aside. But then when the person continued to loiter around me, I finally turned.

I recognised the colonel immediately, for his physical features had hardly changed. However, through adult eyes, he appeared to me meeker and shabbier than the figure from my boyhood. He was standing there in a mackintosh, regarding me shyly, and only when I exclaimed: 'Ah, Colonel!' did he smile and hold out his hand.

'How are you, my boy? I was sure it was you. My goodness! How are you, my boy?'

Although tears had appeared in his eyes, his manner remained awkward, as though he were afraid I might be annoyed at this reminder of the past. I did my best to convey delight at seeing him again, and as a downpour commenced outside, we stood there exchanging conversation in the cramped bookshop. I discovered that he was still living in Worcestershire, that he had come to London to attend a funeral and had decided 'to make a few days of it'. When I asked where he was staying, he answered vaguely, leading me to suspect he had taken modest lodgings. Before parting, I invited him to dine with me the following evening, a suggestion he took up with enthusiasm, though he seemed taken aback when I mentioned the Dorchester. But I continued to insist - 'It's the least I can do after all your past kindness,' I had pleaded - until finally he gave in.

Looking back now, my choice of the Dorchester strikes me as the height of inconsideration. I had, after all, already surmised that the colonel was short of funds; I should have seen too how wounding it would be for him not to pay at least his half of the bill. But in those days such things never occurred to me; I was much too concerned, I suspect, about impressing the old man with the full extent of my transformation since he had last seen me.

In this latter aim, I was probably rather successful. For as it happened, I had just around that point been taken to the Dorchester on two occasions, so that on the evening I met Colonel Chamberlain there, the sommelier greeted me with a 'nice to see you again, sir'. Then, after he had witnessed me exchanging witticisms with the maître d' as we started on our soup, the colonel broke into sudden laughter.

'And to think,' he said, 'this is the same little squirt I had snivelling at my side on that boat!'

He gave a few more laughs, then broke off abruptly, perhaps fearing he should never have alluded to the subject. But I smiled calmly and said:

'I must have been a trial to you on that trip, Colonel.'

The old man's face clouded for a moment. Then he said solemnly: 'Considering the circumstances, I thought you were extremely brave, my boy. Extremely brave.'

At this stage, I recall, there was a slightly awkward silence, which was broken when we both commented on the fine flavour of our soup. At the next table, a large lady with much jewellery was laughing gaily, and the colonel glanced rather indiscreetly towards her. Then he appeared to come to a decision.

‘You know, it’s funny,’ he said. ‘I was thinking about it, before I came out tonight. That time you and I first met. I wonder if you remember, my boy. I don’t suppose you do. After all, you had so much else on your mind then.’

‘On the contrary,’ I said, ‘I have the most vivid memory of the occasion.’

This was no lie. Even now, if I were for a moment to close my eyes, I could with ease transport myself back to that bright morning in Shanghai and the office of Mr Harold Anderson, my father’s superior in the great trading company of Morganbrook and Byatt. I was sitting in a chair that smelt of polished leather and oak, the sort of chair normally found behind some impressive desk, but which, on this occasion, had been pulled out into the centre of the room. I could sense it was a chair reserved for only the most important of personages, but on this occasion, owing to the gravity of the circumstances, or perhaps as a sort of consolation, it had been given to me. I can remember that, no matter how I tried, I could not find a dignified way to sit in it; in particular, I could discover no posture which would enable me to keep both elbows at once upon its finely carved arms. Moreover, I had on that morning a brand new jacket made from some coarse grey material – where it had come from, I do not know – and I was most self-conscious about the ugly way I had been made to button it almost to my chin.

The room itself had tall grand ceilings, a large map on one wall, and behind Mr Anderson’s desk, great windows through which the sun was beating and a breeze blowing. I should think there were ceiling fans moving above me, though

I do not actually remember this. What I do remember is that I was sitting in that chair in the middle of the room, the centre of solemn concern and discussion. All around me, adults were conferring, most of them on their feet; sometimes a few would drift over to the windows, their voices lowering as they argued a point. I remember too being surprised by the way Mr Anderson himself, a tall greying man with a large moustache, behaved towards me as though we were old friends - so much so that for a while I assumed we had known each other when I was younger and that I had forgotten him. Only much later did I ascertain that we could not possibly have met until that morning. In any case, he had assumed for himself the role of uncle, continually smiling at me, patting my shoulder, nudging me and winking. Once he offered me a cup of tea, saying: 'Now, Christopher, this will cheer you up,' and had bent right down to peer at me as I had taken it. After that came more murmuring and conferring around the room. Then Mr Anderson appeared in front of me again and said:

'So then, Christopher. It's all decided. This is Colonel Chamberlain. He's most kindly agreed to see you safe to England.'

I remember at this point a hush descending over the room. In fact, my impression was that all the adults shrank back until they were lining the walls like spectators. Mr Anderson too withdrew with a final encouraging smile. It was then that I first laid eyes on Colonel Chamberlain. He came up to me slowly, bent down to look into my face, then held out his hand. I had a feeling I should stand up to shake it, but he had thrust it out so quickly, and I had felt so fixed to that chair, that I had grasped his hand still sitting. Then I remember him saying:

'My poor lad. First your father. Now your mother. Must feel like the whole world's collapsed around your ears. But we'll go to England tomorrow, the two of us. Your aunt's waiting for you there. So be brave. You'll soon pick up the pieces again.'

For a moment I was quite unable to find my voice. When I finally did so, I said: 'It's awfully kind of you, sir. I'm very grateful for your offer, and I hope you don't think me very rude. But if you don't mind, sir, I think I oughtn't to go to England just now.' Then, when the colonel did not respond immediately, I went on:

'Because you see, sir, the detectives are working extremely hard to find my mother and father. And they're the very best detectives in Shanghai. I think they're bound to find them very soon.'

The colonel was nodding. 'I'm sure the authorities are doing everything possible.'

'So you see, sir, though I very much appreciate your kindness, I think my going to England, it won't be necessary after all.'

I remember a murmur passing around the room at this point. The colonel went on nodding, as though weighing things up carefully.

'You may well be right, my boy,' he said eventually. 'I sincerely hope you are. But just in case, why don't you come with me anyway? Then once your parents are found, they can send for you. Or who knows? Perhaps they'll decide to come to England too. So what do you say? Let's you and me go to England tomorrow. Then we can wait and see what happens.'

'But you see, sir, excuse me. But you see, the detectives looking for my parents. They're the very best detectives.'

I am not sure what exactly the colonel said to this. Perhaps he just went on nodding. In any case, the next moment, he leaned in even closer to me and placed a hand on my shoulder.

‘Look here. I realise how it must feel. Entire world’s collapsed about your ears. But you’ve got to be brave. Besides, your aunt in England. She’s expecting you, don’t you see? Can’t very well let the lady down at this stage, can we?’

When, sitting over our soup that evening, I related to him my memory of these last words of his, I rather expected him to laugh. Instead, he said solemnly:

‘I felt so sorry for you, my boy. So terribly sorry.’ Then perhaps sensing he had misjudged my mood, he gave a short laugh and said more lightly: ‘I remember waiting at the harbour with you. I kept saying: “Look here, we’re going to have a lot of fun on that ship, aren’t we? We’re going to have a jolly good time.” And you just kept saying: “Yes, sir. Yes, sir. Yes, sir.” ’

I allowed him, for the next several minutes, to drift through reminiscences concerning various of his old acquaintances who had been present in Mr Anderson’s office that morning. Without exception, their names meant nothing to me. Then the colonel paused and a frown crossed his face.

‘As for that Anderson himself,’ he said eventually, ‘that chap always gave me an uneasy feeling. Something fishy about him. There was something fishy about the whole damn business, if you ask me.’

No sooner had he said this than he looked up at me with a start. Then before I could respond, he began to talk again rapidly, moving us on to what he no doubt considered the safer territory of our voyage to England. Before long, he was chuckling to himself as he recounted memories of our fellow passengers, the ship’s officers, amusing little incidents I had long forgotten or had not registered in the first place. He was enjoying himself and I encouraged him to do so, often pretending to remember something just to please him. However, as he continued with these reminiscences, I found myself becoming somewhat irritated. For gradually, from behind his cheerful anecdotes, there was emerging a picture of myself on that voyage to which I took exception. His repeated insinuation was that I had gone about the ship withdrawn and moody, liable to burst into tears at the slightest thing. No doubt the colonel had an investment in giving himself the role of an heroic guardian, and after all this time, I saw it was as pointless as it was unkind to contradict him. But as I say, I began to grow steadily more irritated. For according to my own, quite clear memory, I adapted very ably to the changed realities of my circumstances. I remember very well that, far from being miserable on that voyage, I was positively excited about life aboard the ship, as well as by the prospect of the future that lay before me. Of course, I did miss my parents at times, but I can remember telling myself there would always be other adults I would come to love and trust. In fact, there were a number of ladies on the voyage who had heard what had happened to me and who, for a time, came fussing around me with pitying expressions, and I can recall feeling much the same irritation with them as I did towards the colonel that evening at the Dorchester. The fact was, I was not nearly as distressed as the adults around me seemed to suppose. As far as I can recall, there was only a single instance during the whole of that long voyage when I might conceivably have merited that title of 'snivelling little squirt', and even that occurred on the very first day of our journey.

The sky that morning was overcast, the waters around us very muddy. I was standing on the deck of the steamer gazing back towards the harbour, towards the messy shoreline of boats, gangplanks, mud huts, dark wood jetties, behind them the large buildings of the Shanghai Bund, all now fading together into a single blur.

'Well, lad?' the colonel's voice had said near me. 'Think you'll be back again one day?'

'Yes, sir. I expect I'll come back.'

‘We’ll see. Once you’re settled in England, I dare say you’ll forget all this quickly enough. Shanghai’s not a bad place. But eight years is about as much as I can take of it, and I expect you’ve had about as much as you need. Much more, you’ll be turning into a Chinaman.’

‘Yes, sir.’

‘Look here, old fellow. You really ought to cheer up. After all, you’re going to England. You’re going home.’

It was this last remark, this notion that I was ‘going home’, which caused my emotions to get the better of me for – I am certain of this – the first and last time on that voyage. Even then, my tears were more of anger than sorrow. For I had deeply resented the colonel’s words. As I saw it, I was bound for a strange land where I did not know a soul, while the city steadily receding before me contained all I knew. Above all, my parents were still there, somewhere beyond that harbour, beyond that imposing skyline of the Bund, and wiping my eyes, I had cast my gaze towards the shore one last time, wondering if even now I might catch sight of my mother – or even my father – running on to the quay, waving and shouting for me to return. But I was conscious even then that such a hope was no more than a childish indulgence. And as I watched the city that had been my home grow less and less distinct, I remember turning to the colonel with a cheerful look and saying: ‘We should be reaching the sea fairly soon, don’t you think so, sir?’

But I believe I managed to betray none of my irritation with the colonel that evening. Certainly, by the time he boarded a taxicab in South Audley Street, and we said our farewells, he was in a splendid mood. It was only when I heard of his death just over a year later that I felt somewhat guilty I had not been warmer towards him that evening at the Dorchester. He had, after all, once done me a good turn, and from all I had observed, had been a very decent man. But I suppose the role he had played in my life – the fact of his being so overwhelmingly associated with what happened at that point - will ensure he remains for ever an ambivalent figure in my memory.

For at least three or four years after that Waldorf episode, Sarah Hemmings and I had little to do with one another. I remember seeing her once during this period at a cocktail party in a flat in Mayfair. The event was very crowded, but I did not know many of those there and had decided to leave early. I was making my way towards the door, when I spotted Sarah Hemmings talking with someone, standing directly in my path. My first instinct was to turn and go another way. But this was around the time of my success with the Roger Parker case, and it did occur to me to wonder if Miss Hemmings would still dare to be quite so high-handed as she had been at the Waldorf a few years earlier. I thus continued to squeeze my way past the guests and made sure to pass right in front of her. As I did so, I saw her gaze move to check over my features. A look of bemusement crossed her face as she struggled to remember who I was. Then I saw recognition dawn, and without a smile, without a nod, she turned her gaze back to the person to whom she was talking.

But I hardly gave such an incident any thought. For it came during a period when I was deeply engrossed in many challenging cases. And although this was still a good year before my name acquired anything of the standing it has today, I was already beginning to appreciate for the first time the scale of responsibility that befalls a detective with any sort of renown. I had always understood, of course, that the task of rooting out evil in its most devious forms, often just when it is about to go unchecked, is a crucial and solemn undertaking. But it was not until my experience of such cases as the Roger Parker murder that it came home to me just how much it means to people - and not only those directly concerned, but the public at large - to be cleansed of such encroaching wickedness. As a result, I became more determined than ever not to be diverted by the more superficial priorities of London life. And I began to understand, perhaps, something of what had made it possible for my parents to take the stand they had. In any case, the likes of Sarah Hemmings did not much impinge on my thoughts during that time, and it is even possible I would have forgotten of her existence altogether had I not run into Joseph Turner that day in Kensington Gardens.

I was at that time investigating a case in Norfolk and had returned to London for a few days with the intention of studying the extensive notes I had made. It was while I was strolling around Kensington Gardens one grey morning, pondering the many curious details surrounding the victim's disappearance, that I was hailed from afar by a figure I quickly recognised to be Turner, a man I had come to know vaguely from my social rounds. He came hurrying up to me, and after asking why I was so rarely 'seen about the place these days', invited me to a dinner he and a friend were giving in a restaurant that evening. When I politely declined on the grounds that my present case was demanding all my time and attention, he said:

'Shame. Sarah Hemmings is coming along, and she's so wanting to have a good chat with you.'

'Miss Hemmings?'

'Remember her, don't you? She certainly remembers you. Said you got to know each other a bit a few years ago. She's always complaining how you're no longer to be found.'

Resisting the urge to make some comment, I said simply: 'Well, please do give her my good wishes.'

I left Turner fairly promptly after that, but on returning to my desk I confess I found myself somewhat distracted by this report of Miss Hemmings's wishing to see me. In the end, I told myself that in all likelihood Turner had made some mistake; or at the least, was exaggerating his point in an effort to entice me to his dinner. But then over the following months a number of similar reports reached my ears. Sarah Hemmings had been heard expressing annoyance at how, despite our once having been friends, I had now become impossible for her to find. I heard from several sources, moreover, how she was threatening to 'ferret me out'. Then finally, last week, while I was staying in the village of Shackton, in Oxfordshire, to investigate the Studley Grange business, Miss Hemmings turned up in person, presumably with the intention of doing just that.

I had found the walled garden - containing the pond where Charles Emery's body had been discovered - in the lower grounds of the house. Four stone steps had brought me down into a rectangular space so perversely sheltered from the sun that even on that bright morning everything around me was in shadow. The walls themselves were covered with ivy, but somehow one could not avoid the impression of having stepped into a roofless prison cell.

The pond dominated this enclosure. Though several people had told me it contained goldfish, I could see no sign of life; in fact, it was hard to imagine how anything could thrive in such dank water - a fitting place indeed to discover a corpse. Surrounding the pond was a circle of square mossy slabs embedded into the mud. I would suppose I had been examining this area for about twenty minutes - I was on my front, scrutinising with my magnifying glass one of the slabs that projected over the water - when I became conscious of someone observing me. At first I assumed this to be some family member wishing yet again to pester me with questions. Since earlier I had insisted on uninterrupted time, I decided, at the cost of appearing rude, to pretend not to have noticed anything.

Then eventually I heard the sound of a shoe scraping on stone somewhere near the entrance to the garden. By then it was starting to seem unnatural that I should remain on my belly for such a long time, and in any case, I had exhausted the investigations I could usefully carry out in such a posture. Moreover, I had not entirely forgotten I was lying at almost the exact spot where a murder had been committed, and that the murderer was still at large. A chilly sensation passed through me as I clambered to my feet, and dusting my clothes, turned to face the intruder.

The sight of Sarah Hemmings did of course rather surprise me, but I am sure nothing unusual showed on my face. I had set my features to convey annoyance, and I would suppose that is what she saw, for her opening words to me were:

‘Oh! Didn’t mean to spy on you. But it seemed too good an opportunity. To watch the great man at his work, I mean.’

I searched her face carefully, but could detect no sarcasm. Nevertheless, I kept my voice cold as I said: ‘Miss Hemmings. This is most unexpected.’

‘I heard you were here. I’m spending a few days with my friend in Pemleigh. It’s only just up the road.’

She paused, no doubt expecting me to respond. When I remained silent, she showed no sign of being perturbed, but instead came walking towards me.

‘I’m quite a good friend of the Emerys, did you know?’ she continued. ‘Awful business, this murder.’

‘Yes, awful.’

‘Ah. So you too believe it to be murder. Well, I suppose that sort of clinches it. Do you have a theory, Mr Banks?’

I gave a shrug. ‘I’ve formed a few ideas, yes.’

‘It’s too bad for the Emerys they didn’t think to ask you for help when it all first happened last April. I mean to say, bringing Celwyn Henderson on to a case like this! What did they expect? That man should have been put out to pasture long ago. Just shows you how out of touch people get living out here. Anyone in London could have told them all about you, of course. '

This last remark did, I have to confess, intrigue me somewhat, so that after a moment's hesitation, I found myself asking her: 'Excuse me, but told them what, exactly? '

'Why, that you're the most brilliant investigative mind in England, of course. We could all have told them that last spring, but the Emerys - it's taken them this long to cotton on. Better late than never, perhaps, but I suppose the trail's gone rather cold for you by now. '

'As it happens, there are some advantages in coming to a case after some time has elapsed. '

'Really? How fascinating. I always thought it was essential to get there quick, to pick up the scent, you know. '

'On the contrary, it's never too late to, as you put it, pick up the scent. '

'But isn't it so depressing, how this crime's eaten away at people's spirits here? And not just the household. It's the whole of Shackton that's started to rot. This used to be a happy and thriving market town. Now look at them, they barely meet each other's eyes. This whole business has dragged them down into a mire of suspicion. I tell you, Mr Banks, if you can solve this thing, they'll remember you here for ever. '

'Do you really think so? That would be curious. '

'No doubt about it. They'd be so grateful. Yes, they'll be talking about you here for generations. '

I let out a short laugh. 'You seem to know the village well, Miss Hemmings. And I thought you spent all your time in London. '

‘Oh, I can only take so much of London, then I’ve just got to come away. I’m not a city girl at heart, you know.’

‘You surprise me. I always thought you were much drawn to city life.’

‘You’re quite right, Mr Banks.’ A note of resentment had come into her voice, as though I had tricked her into a corner. ‘Something does draw me to the city. It does have its ... its attractions for me.’ For the first time, she turned away from me and glanced around the walled garden.

‘Which reminds me,’ she said. ‘Well, to be honest, it doesn’t remind me at all. Why should I pretend? I’ve been thinking of it all the time we’ve been talking. I wanted to ask a favour of you.’

‘And what’s that, Miss Hemmings?’

‘Reliable sources tell me you’ve been invited to this year’s Meredith Foundation dinner. Is that right?’

I paused slightly before replying: ‘Yes. That’s correct.’

‘Quite a thing, to be invited at your age. I’ve heard this year it’s in honour of Sir Cecil Medhurst.’

‘Yes, I believe so.’

‘I’ve heard too that Charles Wolfe is expected to attend.’

‘The violinist?’

She laughed brightly. ‘Does he do something else? And Thomas Byron too, apparently.’

She had become visibly excited, but now she once again turned away and gazed at our surroundings with a slight shudder.

‘Did you say,’ I asked eventually, ‘you wished me to grant you a favour?’

‘Oh yes, yes. I wanted you to ... I wished you to ask me to accompany you. To the Meredith Foundation dinner.’

She was now holding me with an intense look. It took me a moment to find a response, but when I did so, I spoke quite calmly.

‘I’d like to oblige you, Miss Hemmings. But unfortunately I’ve already replied to the organisers some days ago. I fear it’ll be rather late to inform them of my wish to bring a guest ...’

‘Nonsense!’ she broke in angrily. ‘Yours is the name on everyone’s lips just now. If you wish to bring a companion, they’d be only too pleased. Mr Banks, you aren’t about to let me down, are you? That would be quite unworthy of you. After all, we’ve been good friends for some time now.’

It was this last remark - reminding me as it did of the actual history of our ‘friendship’ - that brought me back to myself.

‘Miss Hemmings,’ I said with finality, ‘this is hardly a favour within my power to grant.’

But there was now a determined look in Sarah Hemmings’s eyes.

‘I know all the details, Mr Banks. At Claridge’s Hotel. Next Wednesday evening. I mean to be there. I shall look forward to the evening, and I shall be waiting for you in the lobby.’

‘The lobby of Claridge’s is, as far as I’m aware, open to respectable members of the public. If you choose to stand there next Wednesday evening, there is nothing I can do to prevent you, Miss Hemmings.’

She looked at me very carefully, now uncertain about my intentions. Finally she said: ‘Then you shall most certainly see me there next Wednesday, Mr Banks.’

‘As I’ve said, that is your affair, Miss Hemmings. Now, if you’ll excuse me.’

Chapter Three

It took no more than a few days to unravel the mystery of Charles Emery's death. The matter did not attract publicity on the scale of some of my other investigations, but the deep gratitude of the Emery family - indeed, of the whole community of Shackton - made the case as satisfying as any thus far in my career. I returned to London in a glow of well-being and consequently failed to give much thought to my encounter with Sarah Hemmings in the walled garden on that first day of the investigation. I would not say I forgot entirely her declared intentions regarding the Meredith Foundation dinner, but as I say, I was in a triumphant frame of mind and I suppose I chose not to dwell on such things. Perhaps deep down I believed her 'threat' to have been no more than a ploy of the moment.

In any case, when I stepped out of my taxicab outside Clar-idge's yesterday evening, my thoughts were elsewhere. I was, for one thing, reminding myself that my recent triumphs had more than entitled me to my invitation; that far from questioning my presence at such a gathering, other guests were likely to press me eagerly for inside information regarding my cases. I was reminding myself too of my resolution not to leave the proceedings prematurely, even if it meant putting up with the odd period of standing about alone. As I entered that grand lobby, then, I was quite unprepared for the sight of Sarah Hemmings waiting there with a smile.

She was dressed rather impressively in a dark silk dress and discreet but elegant jewellery. Her manner as she came towards me was utterly assured, so much so that she even found time to smile a greeting to a couple walking past us.

'Ah, Miss Hemmings,' I said, while in my mind I tried hurriedly to retrieve all that had passed between us that day at Studley Grange. At that moment, I must confess, it seemed to me perfectly possible she had every right to expect me to offer my arm and lead her inside. No doubt, she sensed my uncertainty and appeared to grow even more confident.

‘Dear Christopher,’ she said, ‘you’re looking quite dashing. I’ve overcome! Oh, and I haven’t had a chance to congratulate you. That was so marvellous, what you did for the Emerys. It was ever so clever of you.’

‘Thank you. It was hardly such a complicated matter.’

She had now taken my arm and had she at that instant moved towards the footman directing dinner guests towards the staircase, I am sure I would have been powerless to do anything other than her bidding. But here, I see now, she made an error. Perhaps she wished to savour the moment; perhaps her audacity had for a second given out. In any case, she made no move to proceed upstairs, but instead, gazing at the other guests filing into the lobby, said to me:

‘Sir Cecil hasn’t arrived yet. I do hope I shall get a chance to speak to him. So fitting he’s the one being honoured this year, don’t you think?’

‘Indeed.’

‘You know, Christopher, I don’t suppose it will be so many years until we’ll all be here to honour you.’

I laughed. ‘I hardly think ...’

‘No, no. I feel sure of it. All right, we might have to give it a few more years. But the day will come, you’ll see.’

‘It’s kind of you to say so, Miss Hemmings.’

She continued to hold my arm as we stood there talking. Not infrequently, someone passing would smile or utter a greeting to one or the other of us. And I have to say, I found I was rather enjoying the notion of all these people - many of them very distinguished - seeing me arm in arm with Sarah Hemmings. I fancied I saw in their eyes, even as they greeted us, the idea: 'Oh, she's caught him now, has she? Well, that's natural enough.' Far from making me feel foolish or in any way humiliated, this notion rather filled me with pride. But then suddenly - and I am not sure what caused this - quite without warning I began to feel a great fury towards her. I am sure there was no detectable change in my manner at that moment and for a few minutes more we went on chatting amiably, nodding the occasional greeting to a passing guest. But when I unlinked her arm from mine and turned to her, I did so with a steely resolve.

'Well, Miss Hemmings, it was very good to see you again. But now I must leave you and go up to this function.'

I gave a slight bow and began to move away. This clearly took her by surprise, and if she had ready some strategy for my failing to co-operate, she was for the moment unable to act on it. Only when I had gone several paces from her, and had in fact fallen in step with an elderly couple who had greeted me, did she suddenly come rushing up.

'Christopher!' she said in a frantic whisper. 'You wouldn't dare! You promised me!'

'You know I did nothing of the sort.'

'You wouldn't dare! Christopher, you wouldn't!'

'I wish you a pleasant evening, Miss Hemmings.'

Turning away from her - and also, incidentally, from my elderly companions, who were doing their best to hear nothing - I began to make my way rapidly up the great staircase.

On reaching the upper level, I was ushered into a brightly lit anteroom. There I duly joined a line of guests filing past a desk, behind which sat a uniformed man with a frosty face, checking people's names against a register. When it came to my turn, I was gratified to see a flicker of excitement cross the frosty man's face as he ticked off my name. I signed the guest book, then moved on towards a doorway leading into a large room, within which, I could see, there was already a sizeable crowd of guests. As I crossed the threshold and the hubbub engulfed me, a tall man with a thick dark beard greeted me and shook my hand. I supposed he was one of the evening's hosts, but I failed to register much of what he said to me because, to be frank, I was at that moment finding it hard to think about anything other than what had just occurred downstairs. I was experiencing a curiously hollow sensation, and I had to remind myself that I had not in any way ensnared Miss Hemmings; that any humiliation that had befallen her was entirely of her own making.

But as I parted from the bearded man and drifted further into the room, Sarah Hemmings continued to dominate my thoughts. I was vaguely aware of a waiter approaching me with a tray of aperitifs; of various people turning to greet me. At some point I fell into conversation with a group of three or four men - all of whom turned out to be scientists, and who seemed to know who I was. Then, when I had been in the room for perhaps fifteen minutes, I sensed a slight change in the atmosphere, and looking about me, perceived from the glances and murmurs all around that some sort of commotion was occurring near the doorway through which we had entered.

No sooner had I noted this than a sense of grave foreboding came over me and my first impulse was to escape deeper into the room. But it was as though some mysterious force were pulling me back to the doorway, and I soon found myself once more beside the bearded man - who at that moment was standing with his back to the reception, watching with a pained expression the drama unfolding in the anteroom.

Peering past him, I ascertained that Miss Hemmings was indeed at the heart of the disturbance. She had brought to a halt the procession of guests signing in their names at the desk. She was not shouting exactly, but seemed quite beyond caring who heard her. I watched her shake off an elderly hotel employee trying to restrain her; then, leaning right over the desk so as to glare all the more intently at the frosty-faced man still sitting there as before, she said in a voice close to a sob:

‘But you simply have no idea! I simply must go in, don’t you see? I have so many friends in there, I belong in there, I really do! Oh, do be reasonable!’

‘I really am sorry, Miss ...’ the frosty-faced man began. But Sarah Hemmings, whose hair had tumbled over one side of her face, did not let him finish.

‘It’s all the most silly mix-up anyway, don’t you see? That’s all it is, the most silly old mix-up! And just because of that, you’re being beastly, I can’t believe it! I just can’t believe it ...’

All of us witnessing this scene seemed for a moment united in frozen embarrassment. Then the bearded man regained his wits and strode into the anteroom with authority.

‘What has occurred?’ he said soothingly. ‘My dear young lady, has there been some error? There, there, we’ll sort it out, I’m sure. I’m at your disposal.’ Then he gave a start and exclaimed: ‘Why, it’s Miss Hemmings, isn’t it?’

‘Of course it is! It’s me! Don’t you see? This man’s being so beastly to me ...’

‘But Miss Hemmings, my dear young lady, there’s no need to upset yourself like this. Come, let’s go over here a moment ...’

‘No! No! You won’t turn me away! I won’t have it! I tell you I must, I absolutely must go in! I’ve dreamt of it for so long ...’

‘Surely, something can be done for the young lady,’ a man’s voice said from among the bystanders. ‘Why be so petty? If she's taken the trouble to come here, why can't she be allowed in?'

This produced a general murmur of assent, though I noticed too some faces set in disapproval. The bearded man hesitated, then appeared to decide that his priority was to bring the scene to an end.

'Well perhaps, in this particular case ...' Then turning to the frosty-faced man behind the desk, he went on: 'I'm sure we can find a way to accommodate Miss Hemmings, don't you think, Mr Edwards?'

I would have lingered further, but throughout this exchange I had been seized by the fear that, at any stage, Miss Hemmings might notice me and draw me into this unseemly spectacle with an accusation. In fact, just as I began to retreat, she did for one second gaze straight at me. But she did nothing, and the next moment her anguished eyes were back on the bearded man. I took the opportunity to hurry away.

For the next twenty minutes or so, I confined myself to those areas of the ballroom furthest from the doorway. A surprising number of those present appeared needlessly overawed by the occasion, so much so that most of the conversations - those I could hear around me as well as those I took part in - consisted almost entirely of mutual compliments. Once the compliments had been exhausted, people would resort to eulogising the guest of honour. At one stage, after one such speech listing exhaustively Sir Cecil Medhurst's achievements, I said to the elderly man who had just made it:

'I wonder if Sir Cecil has arrived yet?'

My companion indicated with his glass, and I saw a little way across the room the tall figure of the great statesman stooped in conversation with two middle-aged ladies. Then, just as I was looking over at him, I saw Sarah Hemmings emerge through the crowd, making straight for him.

There was now no trace left of the pitiful creature from the anteroom. She looked positively radiant. As I watched, she strode up to Sir Cecil with not a hint of hesitation and laid a hand on his arm.

The elderly man began to introduce me to someone, so that I was obliged for the moment to turn away. When I next looked towards Sir Cecil, I saw that the two middle-aged ladies were standing to one side, looking on with awkward smiles, and that Miss Hemmings had succeeded in engaging his complete attention. Even as I watched, Sir Cecil leant back his head to laugh loudly at something she was saying.

In time we were ushered into the banqueting hall and seated around a vast, long table under bright chandeliers. I was relieved to find that Miss Hemmings had been seated some way away from me, and for a while, I did rather enjoy the occasion. I chatted in turn to the ladies sitting on either side of me - both of whom, in their different ways, were quite charming - and the food was pleasantly sumptuous. But as the meal went on, I found myself leaning forward time and again to catch sight of Miss Hemmings further down the table, and I began yet again to rehearse in my head all the reasons why I had been entitled to behave as I had.

It is perhaps owing to such preoccupations that I cannot now remember much more concerning the dinner itself. Somewhere towards the end there were speeches; various personages stood up to heap praise on Sir Cecil for his contribution to world affairs, and in particular, for his role in building the League of Nations. Then finally, Sir Cecil himself rose to his feet.

His speech, as I recall it, was self-deprecating and optimistic. In his view, mankind had learnt from its mistakes, the structures were now firmly in place to ensure we would never again see on this globe a calamity on the scale of the Great War. The war, ghastly as it was, represented no more than 'an awkward window in Man's evolution' when for a few years our technical progress had run ahead of our organisational capacities. We had all surprised ourselves with the rapid development of our engineering might, and the consequent ability to wage war with modern weaponry, but now we had made good the gap. Having been reminded of the horrors that could be let loose among us, the forces of civilisation had prevailed and legislated. His speech was along some such lines, and we all applauded it heartily.

After dinner, the ladies did not leave us, but instead we were all asked to proceed through into the ballroom. There we found a string quartet playing, and waiters moving about with trays of liqueurs, cigars and coffee. The guests began immediately to circulate, and the atmosphere was far more relaxed than before dinner. At one point, I happened to catch Miss Hemmings's eye across the room, and was surprised to see her smile at me. My initial thought was that this was the smile of an enemy plotting some awful revenge; but then I continued to observe her as the evening went on, and decided I was wrong about this. I realised that Sarah Hemmings was utterly happy. After months, perhaps years of planning, she had succeeded in being at this place at this time, and having achieved her goal, she had - much like, so we are told, a woman who has just given birth - consigned to oblivion all memories of the pain she had endured along the way. I watched her drifting from group to group, chatting amiably. It occurred to me I should go over and make my peace with her while her mood lasted, but then the possibility of her suddenly turning and creating another scene kept me a good distance from her.

It was perhaps half an hour into this portion of the evening when I was finally introduced to Sir Cecil Medhurst. I had been making no special efforts to meet him, but I suppose I might have been a little disappointed had I left the occasion without having exchanged any words at all with the illustrious statesman. As it was, it was he who was led up to me - by Lady Adams, whom I had met several months ago during an investigation. Sir Cecil grasped my hand warmly, saying: 'Ah, my young friend! So here you are!'

For a few minutes, we were left alone together in the middle of the room. All around us, by this time, there was a very lively hubbub, and when we exchanged the usual pleasantries, we were obliged to lean towards one another and raise our voices. At one point, he nudged me and said:

'All of that I was saying earlier at dinner. About this world being made a safer, more civilised place. I do believe it, you know. At least' - here he grasped my hand and gave me a droll look - 'at least, I'd like to believe it. Oh yes, I'd dearly love to believe it. But I don't know, my young friend. I don't know if in the end we'll be able to hold the line. We'll do what we can. Organise, confer. Get the greatest men from the greatest nations to put their heads together and talk. But there'll always be evil lurking around the corner for us. Oh yes! They're busy, even now, even as we speak, busy conspiring to put civilisation to the torch. And they're clever, oh, devilishly clever. Good men and women can do what they can, devote their lives to keeping them at bay, but I fear it won't be enough, my friend. I fear it won't be enough. The evil ones are much too cunning for your ordinary decent citizen. They'll run rings around him, corrupt him, turn him against his fellows. I see it, I see it all the time now and it will grow worse. That's why we'll need to rely more than ever on the likes of you, my young friend. The few on our side every bit as clever as they are. Who'll spot their game quickly, destroy the fungus before it takes hold and spreads.'

Possibly he was more than a little drunk; possibly the occasion had overwhelmed him. In any case, he went on in this vein for some time, clasping my arm emotionally as he spoke. And perhaps simply because this distinguished man was being so effusive - or perhaps it was that I had had it in my mind all evening to ask him some such thing - when at last he came to a halt, I said to him:

‘Sir Cecil, I believe you’ve spent time recently in Shanghai.’

‘Shanghai? Certainly, my friend. Been back and forth. What happens in China is crucial. We can no longer look just at Europe, you see. If we wish to contain chaos in Europe, we now have to look further afield.’

‘I ask, sir, because I was born in Shanghai.’

‘Is that so? Well, well.’

‘I did just wonder, sir, if you came across an old friend of mine there. Of course, there’s no real reason why you would have done. But his name is Yamashita. Akira Yamashita.’

‘Yamashita? Hmm. Japanese, I take it. A lot of Japanese in Shanghai, of course. They have more influence there by the day. Yamashita, you say.’

‘Akira Yamashita.’

‘Can’t say I came across him. Diplomatist or something?’

‘Actually, sir, I wouldn’t know. He was a childhood friend.’

‘Oh, I see. In that case, do you know for sure he’s still in Shanghai? Perhaps your man’s left and gone back to Japan.’

‘Oh no, I’m sure he’s still there. Akira was very fond of Shanghai. Besides, he was determined never to return to Japan. No, I’m sure he’ll still be there.’

‘Well, I didn’t come across him. Saw quite a lot of that chap Saito. And a few of the military fellows. But no one by that name.’

‘Well ...’ I gave a laugh to cover my disappointment. ‘It was always unlikely. But I did just wonder.’

Just at this moment, somewhat to my alarm, I realised that Sarah Hemmings was standing beside me.

‘So you’ve finally cornered the great detective, Sir Cecil,’ she said cheerily.

‘Indeed, my dear,’ the old gentleman replied, beaming at her. ‘I was just telling him how we’ll all have to depend on him in the years to come.’

Sarah Hemmings smiled at me. ‘I have to say, Sir Cecil, I haven’t always found Mr Banks to be utterly dependable. But perhaps he’s the best we can do.’

I decided at this juncture that I should leave as quickly as possible, and pretending to notice someone across the room, I made my apologies and moved away.

I did not set eyes on Miss Hemmings again until some time later. By then, many of the guests had started to leave and the ballroom was less stuffy. Moreover, the waiters had opened a number of doors on to the balconies, so that a refreshing night breeze was blowing across the room. For all that, the evening had remained warm, and wishing for a little air, I drifted over to one of the balconies. I had all but stepped out on to it before I realised that Sarah Hemmings was already standing there, her back to the room, a cigarette in her holder, gazing out at the night sky. I started back, but then something told me, despite her not having stirred, that she had become aware of my presence. I thus made my way on to the balcony and said:

‘So, Miss Hemmings. You’ve had your evening after all.’

‘It’s been the most marvellous evening,’ she said without turning. She gave a contented sigh, drew on her cigarette, then gave me one quick smile over her shoulder before turning her gaze back to the night sky. ‘It’s exactly as I imagined it would be. All these marvellous people. Everywhere you care to glance. Marvellous people. And Sir Cecil, he's such a darling, don't you think? I had the most wonderful talk with Eric Mitchell about his exhibition. He's going to invite me to the private view next month.'

I said nothing to this, and for a few moments we continued simply to stand there side by side against the balcony rail. Curiously - perhaps it was to do with the string quartet, whose gentle waltz was drifting out to us - the silence was not as uncomfortable as one might have expected. Eventually she said:

'I suppose you're surprised at me.'

'Surprised?'

'At how determined I was. To get in here tonight.'

'I was surprised, yes.' Then I said: 'Why do you suppose it is, Miss Hemmings? That you should find it so imperative to seek out company such as this, tonight.'

'Imperative? You believe I find it imperative?'

'I would say so. And what I witnessed at the door earlier on might tend to support that view.'

Rather to my surprise, she responded with a light laugh, then gave me a smile. 'But why shouldn't I, Christopher? Why shouldn't I wish to be in company like this. Isn't it simply ... heaven?'

When I remained silent, her smile faded.

'I suppose you rather disapprove of me,' she said, in a quite different voice.

'I merely remarked ...'

'It's all right. You've every right. You find all of that, earlier on, you find it embarrassing, and you disapprove. But what else am I to do? I don't wish to look back at my life when I'm old and see something empty. I want to see something I can be proud of. You see, Christopher, I'm ambitious.'

'I'm not sure I quite understand you. You're under the impression you'll lead a more worthwhile life if you consort with famous people?'

'Is that really how you see me?'

She turned away, perhaps genuinely hurt, and drew again on her cigarette. I watched her staring down at the deserted street below, and at the white stucco-fronted buildings opposite. Then she said quietly:

'I can see it might look that way. At least to someone observing me with a cynical eye.'

'I hope I don't observe you in that way. It would upset me to think I did so.'

'Then you should try to be more understanding.' She turned to me with an intent expression, before looking away again. If my parents were alive today,' she said, 'they'd be telling me it's high time I was married. And perhaps it is. But I won't do what I've seen so many girls do. I won't waste all my love, all my energy, all my intellect - modest as that is - on some useless man who devotes himself to golf or to selling bonds in the City. When I marry, it will be to someone who'll really contribute. I mean to humanity, to a better world. Is that such an awful ambition? I don't come to places like this in search of famous men, Christopher. I come in search of distinguished ones. What do I care about a little embarrassment here and there?' - she waved towards the room - 'But I won't accept it's my fate to waste my life on some pleasant, polite, morally worthless man.'

'When you put it like that,' I said, 'I can see how you might see yourself as, well, almost a zealot.'

'In a way, Christopher, I do. Oh, what's that piece they're playing now? It's something I know. Is it Mozart?'

‘I believe it’s Haydn.’

‘Oh yes, you’re right. Yes, Haydn.’ For several seconds, she looked at the sky and appeared to be listening.

‘Miss Hemmings,’ I said, eventually, ‘I’m not proud of the way I behaved towards you earlier. In fact, I now very much regret it. I’m sorry. I hope you’ll forgive me.’

She went on looking out into the night, stroking her cheek lightly with her cigarette holder. ‘That’s very decent of you, Christopher,’ she said quietly. ‘But I should be the one to apologise. I was just trying to use you, after all. Of course I was. I’m sure I made myself look dreadful earlier on, but I don’t care about that. I do care, though, I treated you badly. You perhaps won’t believe me, but it’s true.’

I laughed. ‘Well, then, let’s both try and forgive each other.’

‘Yes, let’s.’ She turned to me and her face suddenly broke into a smile that was almost childlike in its glee. Then a weariness fell over it once more and she turned back to the night. ‘I often treat people badly,’ she said. ‘I suppose that comes with being ambitious. And not having so much time left.’

‘Did you lose your parents long ago?’ I asked.

‘It seems like for ever. But in another way, they’re always with me.’

‘Well, I’m glad you enjoyed the evening, after all. I can only say again I’m sorry for my own part in it.’

‘Oh look, everyone’s leaving. What a pity! And I wanted to talk to you about all kinds of things. About your friend, for instance.’

‘My friend?’

‘The one you were asking Sir Cecil about. The one in Shanghai.’

‘Akira? He was just a childhood friend.’

‘But I could tell he was someone very important to you.’

I straightened and looked behind us. ‘You’re right. Everyone is leaving.’

‘Then I suppose I should leave too,’ she said. ‘Otherwise my departure will be as much noticed as my entrance.’

But she made no move to go and in the end it was I who excused myself and went back into the room. At one point, when I glanced back, I thought she cut a lonely figure there on the balcony, smoking her cigarette into the night air, the room behind her fast emptying. It even ran through my mind I should go back and offer to escort her out of the proceedings. But then her mentioning Akira had slightly alarmed me, and I decided I had done sufficient for one evening towards improving relations between myself and Sarah Hemmings.

PART TWO

London, 15th May 1931

Chapter Four

At the rear of our garden in Shanghai, there was a grass mound with a single maple tree rising out of its summit. From the time Akira and I were around six years old, we enjoyed playing on and around that mound, and whenever I now think of my boyhood companion, I tend to remember the two of us running up and down its slopes, sometimes jumping right off where the sides were at their steepest.

From time to time, when we had worn ourselves out, we would sit panting at the top of the mound with our backs against the trunk of the maple tree. From this vantage point, we had a clear view over my garden and of the big white house standing at the end of it. If I close my eyes a moment, I am able to bring back that picture very vividly: the carefully tended 'English' lawn, the afternoon shadows cast by the row of elms separating my garden and Akira's; and the house itself, a huge white edifice with numerous wings and trellised balconies. I suspect this memory of the house is very much a child's vision, and that in reality, it was nothing so grand. Certainly, even at the time, I was conscious that it hardly matched the splendour of the residences round the corner in Bubbling Well Road. But the house was certainly more than adequate for a household comprising simply my parents, myself, Mei Li and our servants.

It was the property of Morganbrook and Byatt, which meant there were many ornaments and pictures around the place I was forbidden to touch. It meant also that from time to time, we would have boarding with us a 'house guest' - some employee newly arrived in Shanghai who had yet to 'find his feet'. I do not know if my parents objected to this arrangement. I did not mind at all, since usually a house guest would be some young man who brought with him the air of the English lanes and meadows I knew from The Wind in the Willows, or else the foggy streets of the Conan Doyle mysteries. These young Englishmen, no doubt eager to create a good impression, were inclined to indulge my lengthy questions and sometimes unreasonable requests. Most of them, it occurs to me, were probably younger than I am today, and were probably all at sea so far from their home. But to me at the time, they were all of them figures to study closely and emulate.

But to return to Akira: there is a particular instance that now comes to mind from one such afternoon, after the two of us had been running frantically up and down that mound to enact one of our extended dramas. We were for a moment sitting down against the maple tree to recover our breath, and I was gazing across the lawn towards the house, waiting for my chest to stop heaving, when Akira said behind me:

‘Be careful, old chip. Centipede. By your foot.’

I had clearly heard him say ‘old chip’, but did not at this point think anything of it. But having once used the phrase, Akira seemed rather pleased with it, and over the following several minutes, once we resumed our game, proceeded to address me so over and over: ‘This way, old chip!’ ‘More fast, old chip!’

‘Anyway, it’s not old chip,’ I told him in the end, during one of our disputes over how our game should proceed. ‘It’s old chap.’

Akira, as I knew he would, protested vigorously. ‘Not at all. Not at all. Mrs Brown. She make me say again and again. Old chip. Old chip. Correct pronunciation, everything. She say old chip. She teacher!’

It was pointless to try to convince him; since starting his English lessons, he was immensely proud of his position within his family as the expert English speaker. All the same, I was unwilling to concede the point, and in the end the quarrel grew to such proportions, Akira simply stalked off in a fury, our game abandoned, through our 'secret door' - a gap in the hedge separating the two gardens.

On the next few occasions we played together, he did not call me 'old chip', or make any reference to this altercation on the mound. I had all but forgotten the matter when one morning a few weeks later, it came up again suddenly as we were walking back together along Bubbling Well Road past the grand houses and beautiful lawns. I cannot remember quite what I had just said to him. In any case, he responded by saying:

'Very kind of you, old chap.'

I remember resisting the temptation to point out that he had come round to my view. For by then I knew Akira well enough to realise he was not saying 'old chap' by way of a subtle admission that he had previously been wrong; rather, in some odd way we both understood, he was implying that he had always been the one to claim it was 'old chap'; that he was now merely reasserting his argument, and my lack of protest simply confirmed his conclusive victory. Indeed, for the rest of the afternoon, he continued to 'old chap' me with an ever more smug expression, as though to say: 'So you're no longer determined to be ridiculous. I'm glad you're seeing more sense.'

This kind of behaviour was not at all untypical of Akira, and though I always found it infuriating, for some reason I rarely made the effort to protest. In fact - and today I find this hard to explain - I felt a certain need to preserve such fantasies on Akira's behalf, and had, say, an adult tried to arbitrate in the 'old chip' dispute, I would just as likely have taken Akira's side.

I do not wish to imply by this that Akira dominated me, or that ours was in any sense an unbalanced friendship. I took as much initiative in our games, and if anything, made more of the crucial decisions. The fact was, I believed myself his intellectual superior, and at some level, Akira probably accepted this. On the other hand, there were various things that gave my Japanese friend great authority in my eyes. There were, for instance, his arm-locks - which he would often administer if I made statements that displeased him, or if during one of our dramas, I became resistant to adopting a particular plot-turn he was keen on. More generally, even though he was actually only a month my senior, I did have a sense that he was the more worldly. He did seem to know about many things I did not. There was, above all, his claim to having ventured on several occasions beyond the boundaries of the Settlement.

It is slightly surprising to me, looking back today, to think how as young boys we were allowed to come and go unsupervised to the extent that we were. But this was, of course, all within the relative safety of the International Settlement. I for one was absolutely forbidden to enter the Chinese areas of the city, and as far as I know, Akira's parents were no less strict on the matter. Out there, we were told, lay all manner of ghastly diseases, filth and evil men. The closest I had ever come to going out of the Settlement was once when a carriage carrying my mother and me took an unexpected route along that part of the Soochow creek bordering the Chapei district; I could see the huddled low rooftops across the canal, and had held my breath for as long as I could for fear the pestilence would come airborne across the narrow strip of water. No wonder then that my friend's claim to have undertaken a number of secret forays into such areas made an impression on me.

I remember quizzing Akira repeatedly about these exploits. The truth concerning the Chinese districts, he told me, was far worse even than the rumours. There were no proper buildings, just shack upon shack built in great proximity to one another. It all looked, he claimed, much like the marketplace in Boone Road, except that whole families were to be found living in each 'stall'. There were, moreover, dead bodies piled up everywhere, flies buzzing all over them, and no one there thought anything of it. On one occasion, Akira had been strolling down a crowded alley and had seen a man - some powerful warlord, he supposed - being transported on a sedan chair, accompanied by a giant carrying a sword. The warlord was pointing to whomever he pleased and the giant would then proceed to lop his or her head off. Naturally, people were trying to hide themselves the best they could. Akira, though, had simply stood there, staring defiantly back at the warlord. The latter had spent a moment considering whether to have Akira beheaded, but then obviously struck by my friend's courage, had finally laughed and, reaching down, patted him on the head. Then the warlord's party had continued on its way, leaving many more severed heads in its wake.

I cannot remember ever attempting to challenge Akira on any of these claims. Once I mentioned casually to my mother something about my friend's adventures beyond the Settlement, and I remember her smiling and saying something to cast doubt on the matter. I was furious at her, and thereafter I believe I carefully avoided revealing to her anything at all intimate concerning Akira.

My mother, incidentally, was one person Akira regarded with a peculiar awe. If, say, despite his having got me in an arm-lock, I was still loath to concede a point to him, I could always resort to declaring that he would have my mother to answer to. Of course, this was not something I liked to do readily; it rather hurt my pride to have to invoke my mother's authority at such an age. But on those occasions I was obliged to do so, I was always amazed by the transformation brought about - how the merciless fiend with the vice-like grip could turn in a second into a panic-stricken child. I was never sure why my mother should have such an effect on Akira; for although he was always exceedingly polite, he was on the whole unintimidated by adults. I could not, moreover, recall my mother ever having spoken to him in anything but a gentle and friendly way. I can remember pondering this question at the time, and various possibilities occurring to me.

I did, for a while, consider the notion that Akira regarded my mother as he did because she was 'beautiful'. That my mother was 'beautiful' was something I accepted, quite dispassionately, as fact throughout my growing up. It was always being said of her, and I believe I regarded this 'beautiful' as simply a label that attached itself to my mother, no more significant than 'tall' or 'small' or 'young'. At the same time, I was not unaware of the effect her 'beauty' had on others. Of course, at that age, I had no real sense of the deeper implications of feminine allure. But accompanying her from place to place as I did, I came to take for granted, for instance, the admiring glances of strangers as we strolled through the Public Gardens, or the preferential treatment from the waiters at the Italian Café in Nanking Road where we would go for cakes on Saturday mornings. Whenever I look now at my photographs of her - I have seven in all, in the album that accompanied me here from Shanghai - she strikes me as a beauty in an older, Victorian tradition. Today, she might perhaps be regarded as 'handsome'; certainly, she is not 'pretty'. I cannot imagine her, for instance, ever having had the repertoire of coquettish little shrugs and tosses of the head that we expect of our young women today. In the photographs - all of them taken before my birth, four in Shanghai, two in Hong Kong, one in Switzerland - she is certainly elegant, stiff-backed, perhaps even haughty, but not without the gentleness around her eyes I remember well. In any case, the point I am making is that it was quite natural for me to suspect, initially at least, that Akira's odd attitude towards my mother derived, like so many other things, from her beauty. But when I thought the thing over more carefully, I recall settling on a more likely explanation: namely, that Akira had been unusually impressed by what he had witnessed the morning the company's health inspector visited our house.

It was an accepted feature of our lives to be visited from time to time by an official from Morganbrook and Byatt, some man who would spend an hour or so wandering about the house, noting things in his notebook, mumbling the occasional question. I remember my mother once telling me that when I was very young, I liked to play at 'being' a Byatt's health inspector, and that she often had to dissuade me from spending prolonged periods studying our lavatory arrangements with a pencil in my hand. This may well have been so, but as far as I can recall, these visits were mostly entirely eventless, and for years I did not think anything of them. I can see now, though, that these inspections, checking as they did not only on hygiene matters, but also for signs of disease or parasites among household members, were potentially very embarrassing, and no doubt the individuals selected by the company to conduct them tended to be those with a gift for tact and delicacy. Certainly, I remember a series of meek, shuffling men - usually English, though occasionally French - who were always carefully deferential not just to my mother, but also to Mei Li - a point which always went down well with me. But the inspector who turned up on that morning - I must then have been eight - was not at all typical.

Today, I can remember in particular two things about him: that he had a drooping moustache, and that there was a brown mark - perhaps a tea stain - at the back of his hat disappearing into its band. I was playing alone at the front of the house, on the round island of lawn encircled by our carriage track. I remember it being overcast that day. I had been absorbed in my game when the man appeared at the gate and came walking towards the house. As he passed me, he muttered: 'Hello, young man. Mother in?' then carried on without waiting for my reply. It was as I was staring at his back view that I noticed the stain on his hat.

What I remember next must have occurred around an hour later. By that time Akira had arrived and we were busy up in my playroom. It was the sound of their voices - not raised exactly, but filled with a growing tension - that caused us both to look up from our game, then eventually, to move stealthily out on to the landing and crouch beside the heavy oak cabinet outside the playroom door.

Our house had a rather grand staircase, and from our vantage point beside the oak cabinet, we could see the gleaming banister rail following the curve of the stairs down to the spacious entrance hall. There, my mother and the inspector were standing facing each other, both very stiff and straight, near the centre of the floor, so that they looked rather like two opposing chess pieces left on the board. The inspector, I noticed, was clutching to his chest his hat with the stain. For her part, my mother had her hands clasped just below her bosom, the way she did before she burst into song on those evenings Mrs Lewis, the American curate's wife, came to play the piano.

The altercation that followed, though of no apparent significance in itself, I believe came to mean something special to my mother, representing perhaps a key moment of moral triumph. I remember she would refer to it regularly as I grew older, as though it were something she wished me to take to my heart; and I remember often listening to her recount the whole story to visitors, usually concluding with a little laugh and the observation that the inspector had been removed from his post shortly after the encounter. Consequently, I cannot be sure today how much of my memory of that morning derives from what I actually witnessed from the landing, and to what extent it has merged over time with my mother's accounts of the episode. In any case, my impression is that as Akira and I peered round the edge of the oak cabinet, the inspector was saying something like:

'I have every respect for your sentiments, Mrs Banks. Nevertheless, out here, one can't be too careful. And the company does have a responsibility for all employees' welfare, even the more seasoned, such as yourself and Mr Banks. ’

‘I am sorry, Mr Wright,’ my mother responded, ‘but your objections have yet to make themselves clear to me. These servants you talk of have given excellent service over the years. I can vouch utterly for their standards of hygiene. And you have yourself admitted they show no signs of any contagious illness.’

‘Nevertheless, madam, they are from Shantung. And the company is obliged to counsel all our employees against taking natives of that province into their houses. A stricture, may I say, derived from bitter experience.’

‘Can you be serious? You wish me to drive out these friends of ours – yes, we’ve long considered them friends! – for no other reason than that they hail from Shantung?’

At this, the inspector’s manner grew rather pompous. He proceeded to explain to my mother that the company’s objections to servants from Shantung were based on doubts about not just their hygiene and health, but also their honesty. And with so many items of value in the house belonging to the company – the inspector gestured around him – he was obliged to reiterate most strongly his recommendation. When my mother broke in again to ask on what basis such astonishing generalisations had been made, the inspector gave a weary sigh, then said:

‘In a word, madam, opium. Opium addiction in Shantung has now advanced to such deplorable levels that entire villages are to be found enslaved to the pipe. Hence, Mrs Banks, the low standards of hygiene, the high incidence of contagion. And inevitably, those who come from Shantung to work in Shanghai, even if essentially of an honest disposition, tend sooner or later to resort to thieving, for the sake of their parents, brothers, cousins, uncles, what have you, all of whose cravings must somehow be pacified ... Good gracious, madam! I’m simply trying to make my point ...’

Not only was it the inspector who recoiled at this point; beside me, Akira gave a sharp intake of breath, and when I glanced at him he was staring down at my mother openmouthed. It is this picture of him at that moment which led me later to believe his subsequent awestruck view of my mother originated from that morning.

But if the inspector and Akira both started at something my mother did at that point, I did not myself see anything out of the ordinary. To me, she appeared to do no more than brace herself a little in preparation for what she was about to assert. But then, I suppose I was well used to her ways; possibly to those less familiar with them, certain of my mother's customary looks and postures in such situations might indeed have come over as somewhat alarming.

This is not to say that I was not fully alert to the explosion that was to follow. In fact, from the instant the inspector had uttered the word 'opium', I had known that the unfortunate man was done for.

He had come to an abrupt halt, no doubt expecting to be cut off. But I recall my mother letting hang a trembling silence - throughout which her glare never moved off the inspector - before finally asking in a quiet voice that nevertheless threatened to brim over with fury:

'You presume, sir, to talk to me, on behalf of this of all firms, about opium?'

There followed a tirade of controlled ferocity in which she put to the inspector the case with which I was by then already familiar and which I was to hear outlined again many more times: that the British in general, and the company of Morganbrook and Byatt especially, by importing Indian opium into China in such massive quantities had brought untold misery and degradation to a whole nation. As she spoke, my mother's voice often grew taut, but never quite lost its measured quality. Finally, still fixing her foe with her glare, she asked him:

‘Are you not ashamed, sir? As a Christian, as an Englishman, as a man with scruples? Are you not ashamed to be in the service of such a company? Tell me, how is your conscience able to rest while you owe your existence to such ungodly wealth?’

Had he had the temerity to do so, the inspector might have pointed out the inappropriateness of my mother’s admonishing him in such terms, of such words issuing from the wife of a fellow company employee, residing in a company house. But by this point he had realised he was out beyond his depth, and muttering a few stock phrases to preserve his dignity, retreated from the house.

In those days, it was still a surprise to me when any adult displayed – as had the inspector – ignorance of my mother’s campaigns against opium. Throughout much of my growing up, I held the belief that my mother was known and admired far and wide as the principal enemy of the Great Opium Dragon of China. The opium phenomenon, I should say, was not something adults in Shanghai made much effort to hide from children, but of course, when I was very young, I understood little concerning the matter. I was accustomed to seeing each day, from the carriage that took me to school, the Chinese men in doorways along Nanking Road, sprawled in the morning sun, and for some time, whenever I heard of my mother’s campaigns, I imagined her to be assisting this specific group of men. Later though, as I grew older, I had more opportunities to glimpse something of the complexity surrounding the issue. I was, for instance, required to present myself at my mother’s luncheons.

These would take place at our house, usually during the week when my father was at the office. Typically, four or five ladies would arrive and be led into the conservatory, where a table would have been laid amidst the creepers and palms. I would assist by passing around cups, saucers and plates, and wait for the moment I knew would come: that is, when my mother asked her guests how, when they ‘searched their hearts and consciences', they viewed their companies' policies. At this point the pleasant chatter would cease and the ladies would listen silently as my mother went on to express her own deep unhappiness with 'our company's actions', which she regarded as 'un-Christian and un-British'. As I remember it, these luncheons always became quiet and awkward from this stage on, until the moment, not so long afterwards, when the ladies would utter their frosty farewells and drift out to the waiting carriages and motor cars. But I knew from what my mother told me that she did 'win through' to a number of these company wives, and the converts were then invited to her meetings.

These latter were much more serious affairs and I was not permitted to attend them. They would take place in the dining room behind closed doors, and if by chance I was still in the house while a meeting was in progress, I would be required to tip-toe around silently. Occasionally I would be introduced to a personage my mother held in special esteem - a clergyman, say, or a diplomatist - but by and large Mei Li was instructed to have me well out of the way before the first guests arrived. Of course, Uncle Philip was one of those always present, and I often endeavoured to be visible as the participants departed so as to catch his eye. If he spotted me, then invariably he would come over with a smile and we would have a little talk. Sometimes, if he had no pressing engagement, I would take him aside to show him the drawings I had done that week, or else we might go and sit together for a while out on the back terrace.

Once everyone had left, the atmosphere in the house would undergo a complete change. My mother's mood would invariably lighten, as though the meeting had swept away every one of her cares. I would hear her singing to herself as she went around the house putting things back in order, and as soon as I did so, I would hurry out into the garden to wait. For I knew that once she had finished tidying, she would come out to find me, and whatever time was left before lunch she would devote entirely to me.

Once I was older, it was during these periods, just after a meeting, that my mother and I went for our walks in Jessfield Park. But when I was six or seven, we tended to stay at home and play a board game, or sometimes even with my toy soldiers. I can still remember a certain routine we developed around this time. In those days, there had been a swing on our lawn not far from the terrace. My mother would emerge from the house, still singing, step on to the grass and sit on the swing. I would be waiting up on my mound at the back of the garden, and come running up to her, pretending to be furious.

‘Get off, Mother! You’ll break it!’ I would jump up and down before the swing, waving my arms about. ‘You’re much too big! You’ll break it!’

And my mother, pretending she could neither see nor hear me, would swing herself higher and higher, all the time continuing to sing at the top of her voice some song like:

‘Daisy, Daisy, Give Me Your Answer Do.’ When all my pleading had failed, I would – the logic of this now eludes me – attempt a succession of headstands on the grass in front of her. Her singing would then become punctuated by gales of laughter, until eventually she would come down from the swing, and we would go off to play with whatever I had prepared for us. Even today, I cannot think about my mother’s meetings without remembering those eagerly anticipated moments that would always follow.

A few years ago, I did spend some days in the Reading Room of the British Museum researching into the arguments that raged over the opium trade in China during those times. As I sifted through many newspaper articles, letters and documents of the day, a number of issues that had mystified me as a child became much clearer. However – and I might as well admit this – my main motive in undertaking such research was the hope that I would come across reports of my mother. After all, as I have said, I had been given to believe as a child that she was a key figure in the anti-opium campaigns. It was something of a disappointment then that I did not once find her name. There were others repeatedly quoted, praised, denigrated, but in all that material I collated, I did not once find my mother. I did though stumble upon several mentions of Uncle Philip. Once, in a letter to the North China Daily News, a Swedish missionary, in the process of condemning a number of European companies, referred to Uncle Philip as 'that admirable beacon of rectitude'. The absence of my mother's name was disappointment enough, but this was a cruel twist indeed, and I abandoned my researches thereafter.

But I have no wish to recall Uncle Philip here just now. There was a time, earlier this evening, when I was convinced I had mentioned his name to Sarah Hemmings during our bus ride this afternoon - even told her one or two basic things about him. But going over yet again all that took place, I am now reasonably sure Uncle Philip did not come up at all - and I must say I am relieved. It may be a foolish way to think, but it has always been my feeling that Uncle Philip will remain a less tangible entity while he exists only in my memory.

I did though tell her a little about Akira this afternoon, and now that I have had a chance to think it over, I do not really regret having done so. I did not, in any case, tell her very much, and she did appear genuinely interested. I have no idea what it was that caused me suddenly to start talking to her of such matters; I certainly had no such intention when I first boarded that bus with her in the Haymarket.

I had been invited by David Corbett, a man I have come vaguely to know, to lunch with him and 'a few friends' at a restaurant in Lower Regent Street. It is a fashionable lunch spot, and Corbett had booked a long table at the rear of the room for a dozen of us. I was pleased to see Sarah among the party - and a little surprised, since I had not been aware she was a friend of Corbett's - but arriving rather late, I was not able to sit within speaking range of her.

It had clouded over by that time, and the waiter had lit for us a brace of candles on our table. One of our party, a fellow called Hegley, thought it a good joke to blow the candles out, and then to summon the waiter back to relight them. He did this at least three times in the space of twenty minutes - whenever he judged the boisterous atmosphere to be sagging - and the others did seem to find this very amusing. From what I could see, Sarah was at this stage enjoying herself, laughing with the rest of them. We had been there for perhaps an hour - a couple of the men had excused themselves to return to their offices - when attention turned to Emma Cameron, a rather intense girl, sitting at Sarah's end of the table. For all I knew, she had already been talking for some time to those nearest her about her problems; but it was at this stage that a lull falling over the rest of the table suddenly made her the focus of the whole party. There followed a half-serious, half-ironic discussion of Emma Cameron's troubled relationship with her mother - which was evidently reaching a new crisis on account of Emma's recent engagement to a Frenchman. All kinds of advice were offered to her. The man called Hegley, for instance, proposed that all mothers - 'and aunts too, naturally' - be kept in a large zoo-like institution to be constructed beside the Serpentine. Others made more helpful comments based on their own experiences, and Emma Cameron, relishing all the attention, kept the topic well stoked with ever more theatrical anecdotes to illustrate the thoroughly exasperating nature of this particular parent. The discussion had been going on for perhaps fifteen minutes when I saw Sarah rise and, mumbling a word into the host's ear, leave the room. The ladies' powder room was located in the lobby area of the restaurant, and the others - those who noticed her exit at all - no doubt assumed that was where she was bound. But I had caught something in her face as she had left, and after a few minutes, I too rose and went out after her.

I found her standing at the entrance of the restaurant, looking out of the windows into Lower Regent Street. She did not notice me come up to her until I touched her arm and asked:

‘Is everything all right?’

She gave a start, and I noticed little traces of tears in her eyes, which she quickly tried to mask with a smile.

‘Oh yes, I’m fine. I felt a little stuffy, that’s all. I’m fine now.’ She gave a little laugh and gazed out searchingly into the street. ‘I’m sorry, it must have looked awfully rude. I really should go back in.’

‘I see no reason why you should if you don’t want to.’

She studied me carefully, then asked: ‘Are they still talking about what they were talking about?’

‘They were when I left.’ Then I added: ‘I suppose neither of us is able to contribute much to a symposium on troublesome mothers.’

She suddenly laughed and wiped away the tears, now no longer trying to hide them from me. ‘No,’ she said, ‘I suppose we’re disqualified.’ Then she smiled again and said: ‘It’s so silly of me. After all, they’re just having a nice lunch.’

‘Are you expecting a car?’ I asked, for she was still looking out earnestly at the traffic.

‘What? Oh no, no. I was just looking.’ Then she said: ‘I was wondering if a bus would come. You see, look, over the street. There’s a stop. My mother and I, we used to spend a lot of time on buses. Just for the pleasure of it. I’m talking about when I was small. If we couldn't get the front seat on the top deck, then we'd just come straight down and wait for another one. And we'd spend hours sometimes, going around London, looking at everything, and talking, and pointing things out to each other. I so used to enjoy it. Don't you ever go on buses, Christopher? You should. You can see so much from the top.'

'I must confess I tend to walk or get a cab. I'm rather afraid of London buses. I'm convinced if I get on one, it'll take me somewhere I don't want to go, and I'll spend the rest of the day trying to find my way back.'

'Shall I tell you something, Christopher?' Her voice had become very quiet. 'It's very silly, but I only realised it recently. It had never occurred to me before. But Mother must already have been in a lot of pain. She wasn't strong enough to do other things with me. That's why we spent so much time on buses. It was something we could still do together.'

'Would you care to ride on a bus now?' I asked.

She looked out again into the street. 'But aren't you very busy?'

'It would be a pleasure. As I say, I'm rather frightened to go on buses alone. Since you're something of a veteran, then this is my opportunity.'

'Very well.' She suddenly beamed. 'I'll show you how you ride on a London bus.'

We eventually boarded not in Lower Regent Street - we did not wish the lunch party to emerge and see us waiting - but in nearby Haymarket. When we climbed to the upper deck, she showed a childish delight in finding her front seat vacant, and we sat there swaying together as the vehicle lumbered its way towards Trafalgar Square.

London looked very grey today, and down on the pavements, the crowds were well prepared with their mackintoshes and umbrellas. I would suppose we spent a half-hour on that bus, perhaps longer. We took in the Strand, Chancery Lane, Clerkenwell. Sometimes we sat looking at the view below us in silence; at other times, we talked, usually of innocuous things. Her mood had lightened considerably since the lunch, and she did not mention her mother again. I am not sure how we got on to the subject, but it was just after a lot of passengers had got off at High Holborn, and we were moving down Gray's Inn Road, that I found myself talking about Akira. I believe at first I did no more than mention him in passing, describing him as a 'childhood friend'. But she must have probed me, for I remember not long afterwards saying to her with a laugh:

'I always think about the time we stole something together.'

'Oh!' she exclaimed. 'So that's it! The great detective has a secret criminal past! I knew this Japanese boy was significant. Do tell me about your robbery.'

'Hardly a robbery. We were ten years old.'

'But it torments your conscience, even still?'

'Not at all. It was just a small thing. We stole something from a servant's room.'

'But how fascinating. And this was in Shanghai?'

I suppose I must then have told her a few further things from the past. I did not reveal anything of any real significance, but after parting with her this afternoon - we eventually got off in New Oxford Street - I was surprised and slightly alarmed that I had told her anything at all. After all, I have not spoken to anyone about the past in all the time I have been in this country, and as I say, I had certainly never intended to start doing so today.

But perhaps something of this sort has been on the cards for some time. For the truth is, over this past year, I have become increasingly preoccupied with my memories, a preoccupation encouraged by the discovery that these memories - of my childhood, of my parents - have lately begun to blur. A number of times recently I have found myself struggling to recall something that only two or three years ago I believed was ingrained in my mind for ever. I have been obliged to accept, in other words, that with each passing year, my life in Shanghai will grow less distinct, until one day all that will remain will be a few muddled images. Even tonight, when I sat down here and tried to gather in some sort of order these things I still remember, I have been struck anew by how hazy so much has grown. To take, for instance, this episode I have just recounted concerning my mother and the health inspector: while I am fairly sure I have remembered its essence accurately enough, turning it over in my mind again, I find myself less certain about some of the details. For one thing, I am no longer sure she actually put to the inspector the actual words: 'How is your conscience able to rest while you owe your existence to such ungodly wealth?' It now seems to me that even in her impassioned state, she would have been aware of the awkwardness of these words, of the fact that they left her quite open to ridicule. I do not believe my mother would ever have lost control of the situation to such a degree. On the other hand, it is possible I attributed these words to her precisely because such a question was one she must have put to herself constantly during our life in Shanghai. The fact that we 'owed our existence' to a company whose activities she had identified as an evil to be scourged must have been a source of true torment for her.

In fact, it is even possible I have remembered incorrectly the context in which she uttered those words; that it was not to the health inspector she put this question, but to my father, on another morning altogether, during that argument in the dining room.

Chapter Five

I do not remember now if the dining-room episode occurred before or after the health inspector's visit. What I recall is that it was raining hard that afternoon, making it gloomy throughout the house, and that I had been sitting in the library, watched over by Mei Li as I went through my arithmetic books.

We called it the 'library', but I suppose it was really just an anteroom whose walls happened to be lined with books. There was just enough space in the middle of the floor for a mahogany table, and it was there I always did my schoolwork, my back to the double doors leading into the dining room. Mei Li, my amah, saw my education as a matter of solemn importance, and even when I had been working for an hour, it never occurred to her, as she stood sternly over me, to lean her weight on the shelf behind her, or else to sit down in the upright chair opposite mine. The servants had long since learnt not to blunder in during these moments of study, and even my parents had accepted they should not disturb us unless absolutely necessary.

It was, then, something of a surprise when my father came striding through the library that afternoon, oblivious of our presence, and went into the dining room, closing the doors firmly behind him. This intrusion was followed within minutes by another from my mother, who also strode past briskly and disappeared into the dining room. During the minutes that followed I could catch, even through the heavy doors, the occasional word or phrase that told me my parents were locked in argument. But frustratingly, whenever I tried to hear a little more, whenever my pencil hovered too long over my sums, there would come Mei Li's inevitable reprimand.

But then - I do not remember quite how this came about - Mei Li was called away, and I was suddenly left alone at the library table. At first I just continued to work, too fearful of what would happen if Mei Li returned and found me out of my chair. But the longer she was gone, the greater grew my urge to hear more clearly the muffled exchanges in the next room. I did finally rise and go to the doors, but even then, I would hurry back to the table every few seconds, convinced I could hear my amah's footsteps. In the end, I managed to remain at the door only by keeping a ruler in my hand, so that if surprised by Mei Li, I could claim to be in the process of measuring the dimensions of the room.

Even so, I managed to hear whole phrases only when my parents forgot themselves and raised their voices. I could make out in my mother's angry voice the same righteous tone she had used that morning to the health inspector. I heard her repeat: 'A disgrace!' a number of times, and she referred often to what she called 'the sinful trade'. At one point she said: 'You're making us all party to it! All of us! It's a disgrace!' My father too sounded angry, though in a defensive, despairing sort of way. He kept saying things like: 'It's not so simple. It's not nearly so simple.' And at one point he shouted:

'It's too bad! I'm not Philip. I'm not made that way. It's too bad, it's just too bad!'

There was something in his voice as he shouted this, a kind of terrible resignation, and I suddenly became furious at Mei Li for having abandoned me in such a situation. And it was perhaps then, as I was standing by those doors, my ruler in my hand, caught between the urge to continue listening and the desire to flee to the sanctuary of my playroom and my toy soldiers, that I heard my mother utter those words:

'Are you not ashamed to be in the service of such a company? How can your conscience rest while you owe your existence to such ungodly wealth?'

I do not remember what occurred after that: whether Mei Li came back; if I was still there in the library when my parents emerged. I do recall, though, that the episode heralded one of the longer periods of silence between my parents - that is to say, one that was maintained for weeks, rather than days. I do not mean, of course, that my parents did not communicate at all during this time, just that all exchanges were kept to the strictly functional.

I was well used to such periods and never concerned myself unduly with them. In any case, it was only in the smallest ways that they ever impinged upon my life. For instance, my father might appear at breakfast with a cheerful: 'Good morning, everyone!' and slap his hands together, only to be met by my mother's frosty glare. On such occasions, my father might try to cover his embarrassment by turning to me and, still in the same cheery tone, asking:

'And what about you, Puffin? Any interesting dreams last night?'

To which I knew from experience I should respond by giving a vague sound and continuing to eat. Otherwise, as I say, I was able to go about my business more or less as usual. But I suppose I must, at least sometimes, have given thought to these matters, for I do have a memory of a particular conversation I had with Akira once when we were playing in his house.

My memory of Akira's house is that, from an architectural standpoint, it was very similar to ours; in fact, I remember my father telling me both houses had been built by the same British firm some twenty years earlier. But the inside of my friend's house was a quite different affair, and the source of some fascination for me. It was not so much the preponderance of Oriental pictures and ornaments - in Shanghai, at that stage in my life, I would have seen nothing unusual in this - but rather his family's eccentric notions regarding the usage of many items of Western furniture. Rugs

I would have expected to see on floors were hung on walls; chairs would be at odd heights to tables; lamps would totter under overly large shades. Most remarkable were the pair of 'replica' Japanese rooms Akira's parents had created at the top of the house. These were small but uncluttered rooms with Japanese tatami mats fitted over the floors, and paper panels fixed to the walls, so that once inside - at least according to Akira - one could not tell one was not in an authentic Japanese house made of wood and paper. I can remember the doors to these rooms being especially curious; on the outer, 'Western' side, they were oak-panelled with shining brass knobs; on the inner, 'Japanese' side, delicate paper with lacquer inlays.

In any case, one sweltering day, Akira and I had been playing in one of these Japanese rooms. He had been trying to teach me a game involving piles of cards with Japanese characters on them. I had managed to pick up the rudiments and we had been playing for several minutes when I suddenly asked him:

'Does your mother sometimes stop talking to your father?'

He looked at me blankly, probably because he had failed to understand me; his English often let him down if I spoke out of context like this. Then, when I repeated my question, he shrugged and said:

'Mother not talk to Father when he at office. Mother not talk to Father when he in toilet!'

With that, he roared with theatrical laughter, rolled on to his back and began kicking his feet in the air. I was thus obliged for the moment to drop the matter. But having raised it, I was determined to get his view, and a few minutes later, brought it up again.

This time he seemed to sense my earnestness, and leaving aside the card game, asked me a number of questions until I had more or less told him the nature of my worries. He then rolled on to his back again, but this time gazed thoughtfully up at the ceiling fan rotating above us. After a few moments he said:

‘I know why they stop. I know why.’ Then turning to me, he said: ‘Christopher. You not enough Englishman.’

When I asked him to explain this, he once more looked at the ceiling and went quiet. I too rolled on to my back and followed his example of staring at the fan. He was lying a little way across the room from me, and when he spoke again, I remember his voice sounded oddly disembodied.

‘It same for me,’ he said. ‘Mother and Father, they stop talk. Because I not enough Japanese.’

As I may have said already, I tended to regard Akira as a worldly authority on many aspects of life, and so I listened to him that day with great care. My parents stopped talking to one another, he told me, whenever they became deeply unhappy with my behaviour - and in my case, this was on account of my not behaving sufficiently like an Englishman. If I thought about it, he said, I would be able to link each of my parents’ silences to some instance of my failing in this way. For his part, he always knew when he had let down his Japanese blood, and it never came as a surprise to him to discover that his parents had ceased talking to one another. When I asked him why they did not scold us in the usual manner when we misbehaved in this way, Akira explained to me that it was not like that; he was talking of offences quite different from the usual misdemeanours for which we might be punished. He was referring to moments that disappointed our parents so deeply they were unable even to scold us.

‘Mother and Father so very very disappoint,’ he said quietly. ‘So they stop talk.’

Then he sat up and pointed to one of the slatted sun-blinds at that moment hanging partially down over a window.

We children, he said, were like the twine that kept the slats held together. A Japanese monk had once told him this. We often failed to realise it, but it was we children who bound not only a family, but the whole world together. If we did not do our part, the slats would fall and scatter over the floor.

I do not remember anything more of our conversation that day, and besides, as I say, I did not spend much time dwelling on such matters. All the same, I remember more than once being tempted to ask my mother about what my friend had said. In the end, I never did so, though I did broach the subject once with Uncle Philip.

Uncle Philip was not a real uncle. He had stayed with my parents as a 'house guest' upon his arrival in Shanghai sometime before my birth, in the days when he was still in the employ of Morganbrook and Byatt. Then, while I was still very young, he had resigned from the company owing to what my mother always described as 'a profound disagreement with his employers over how China should mature'. By the time I was old enough to be aware of him, he was running a philanthropic organisation called The Sacred Tree dedicated to improving conditions in the Chinese areas of the city. He had always been a family friend, but as I have said, became a particularly frequent visitor during the years of my mother's anti-opium campaigns.

I can remember often going with my mother to Philip's office. This was located within the grounds of one of the churches in the city centre - my guess now is that it was the Union Church in Soochow Road. Our carriage would drive right into the grounds and stop beside a large lawn shaded by fruit trees. Here, despite the noises from the city around us, the atmosphere was tranquil, and my mother, stepping out of the carriage, would pause, raise her head and remark:

'The air. It's so much purer here.' Her mood would lighten visibly, and sometimes - if we were a little early - my mother and I would while away some minutes playing games on the grass. If we played tag, chasing one another all around the fruit trees, my mother would often laugh and squeal as excitedly as I did. I remember once, in the middle of one such game, she stopped suddenly on seeing a clergyman emerge from the church. We had then stood quietly on the edge of the lawn and exchanged greetings with him as he had passed. But no sooner had he gone out of our sight than my mother had turned, and stooping right down to me, given a conspiratorial giggle. It is even possible this kind of thing occurred more than once. In any case, I remember being fascinated by the notion of my mother participating in something for which, just like me, she could be 'told off'. And it was perhaps this dimension to these moments of careless play around the churchyard that made them seem always a little special for me.

My memory of Uncle Philip's office is that it was very ramshackle. There were everywhere boxes of all sizes, heaps of papers, even loose drawers, still with their contents, stacked precariously one on another. I would have expected my mother to disapprove of such untidiness, but she only ever talked of Uncle Philip's office being 'cosy' or 'busy'.

He never failed to make a fuss of me on these visits, shaking my hand heartily, sitting me down then engaging me in conversation for several minutes while my mother looked on smiling. Often he would give me a gift, something he would pretend he had had ready and waiting - though I soon came to realise he was presenting me with whatever caught his eye at the time. 'Guess what I've got for you, Puffin!' he would declare, while his gaze travelled the room in search of something suitable. In this way I acquired an extensive collection of office items, which I kept in an old chest in my playroom: an ashtray, an ivory pen stand, a lead weight. There was one occasion when, after announcing he had a present for me, his eye failed to alight on anything at all. There followed an awkward pause, before he sprang up and began wandering about his office, muttering: 'And where did I put it? What on earth have I done with it?' - until finally, perhaps in desperation, he went over to the wall, pulled down a map of the Yangtze region, tearing a corner as he did so, rolled it up and presented it to me.

That time I confided in him, Uncle Philip and I were sitting together in his office, waiting for my mother to come back from somewhere. He had persuaded me to take his own chair behind his desk, while he himself roamed aimlessly around the place. He was making his usual amusing small-talk, and normally he would have had me laughing in no time, but on that occasion - only days after my discussion with Akira - I was not in that sort of mood. Uncle Philip soon saw this and said:

'So, Puffin. We're rather glum today.'

I saw my chance and said: 'Uncle Philip, I was just wondering. How do you suppose one might become more English?'

'More English?' He stopped whatever it was he was doing and looked at me. Then, with a thoughtful expression, he came nearer, pulled a chair up to the desk and sat down.

'Now why would you want to be more English than you are, Puffin?'

'I just thought ... well, I just thought I might.'

'Who says you're not sufficiently English already?'

'No one really.' Then after a second I added: 'But I think perhaps my parents think so.'

'And what do you think, Puffin? Do you think you ought to be more English?'

'I can't tell really, sir.'

'No, I suppose you can't. Well, it's true, out here, you're growing up with a lot of different sorts around you.'

Chinese, French, Germans, Americans, what have you. It'd be no wonder if you grew up a bit of a mongrel.' He gave a short laugh. Then he went on: 'But that's no bad thing. You know what I think, Puffin? I think it would be no bad thing if boys like you all grew up with a bit of everything. We might all treat each other a good deal better then. Be less of these wars for one thing. Oh yes. Perhaps one day, all these conflicts will end, and it won't be because of great statesmen or churches or organisations like this one. It'll be because people have changed. They'll be like you, Puffin. More a mixture. So why not become a mongrel? It's healthy.'

'But if I did, everything might ...' I stopped.

'Everything might what, Puffin?'

'Like that blind there' - I pointed - 'if the twine broke. Everything might scatter.'

Uncle Philip stared at the blind I had indicated. Then he rose, went to the window and touched it gently.

'Everything might scatter. You might be right. I suppose it's something we can't easily get away from. People need to feel they belong. To a nation, to a race. Otherwise, who knows what might happen? This civilisation of ours, perhaps it'll just collapse. And everything scatter, as you put it.' He sighed, as though I had just defeated him in an argument.

'So you want to be more English. Well, well, Puffin. So what are we to do about it?'

'I wondered, if it's all right, sir, if you didn't awfully mind. I wondered if I might copy you sometimes.'

'Copy me?'

'Yes, sir. Just sometimes. Just so that I learn to do things the English way.'

'That's very flattering, old fellow. But don't you think your father's the one to have this great privilege? About as English as they come, I'd say.'

I looked away, and Uncle Philip must immediately have sensed he had said the wrong thing. He came back to his chair and sat down again in front of me.

‘Look,’ he said quietly. ‘I’ll tell you what we’ll do. If you’re ever worried how you should go about things, anything, if you’re worried about the proper way to go about it, then just you come to me and we’ll have a good talk about it. We’ll talk it all through until you know exactly what’s what. Now. Feel better?’

‘Yes, sir. I think I do.’ I managed a smile. ‘Thank you, sir.’

‘Look here, Puffin. You’re a right little horror. You know that, of course. But as little horrors go, you’re a pretty decent specimen. I’m sure your mother and father are very, very proud of you.’

‘Do you really think so, sir?’

‘I do. I really do. So, you feel better?’

With that, he sprang to his feet to resume his wanderings around his office. Reverting to his light-hearted tone, he began some nonsensical story about the lady in the office next door, which soon had me in stitches.

How fond I was of Uncle Philip! And is there any real reason to suppose he was not genuinely fond of me? It is perfectly possible that at that stage, he wished nothing but good for me, that he had no more inkling than I did of the course things would take.

Chapter Six

It was around that same time - that same summer - when certain aspects of Akira's behaviour began seriously to irk me. In particular, there was his endless harping on the achievements of the Japanese. He had always tended to do this, but that summer things seemed to reach obsessive levels. Time and again my friend would bring to a stop some game we were playing just to lecture me on the latest Japanese building being erected in the business district, or the imminent arrival of another Japanese gunboat in the harbour. He would then oblige me to listen to the most minute details and, every few minutes, his claim that Japan had become a 'great, great country just like England'. Most irritating of all were those occasions on which he would try to start arguments about who cried the easiest, the Japanese or the English. If I spoke up at all on behalf of the English, my friend would immediately demand we put things to the test, which meant in practice his putting me in one of his dreadful arm-locks until I either capitulated or gave in to tears.

At the time, I put Akira's obsession with the prowess of his race down to the fact that he was due to start school in Japan that coming autumn. His parents had arranged for him to stay with relatives in Nagasaki, and although he would return to Shanghai during school holidays, we realised we would see a lot less of each other and initially the news had made us both despondent. But as the summer drew on, Akira appeared to convince himself about the superiority of every aspect of life in Japan and became increasingly excited about the prospect of his new school. I in turn grew so weary of his persistent boasting about all things Japanese that by the late summer I was actually looking forward to being rid of him. Indeed, when the day eventually came, and I stood outside his house waving off the motor car taking him to the harbour, I believe I was not at all sorrowful.

Very soon, however, I began to miss him. It was not that I did not have other friends. There were for instance the two English brothers living nearby with whom I played regularly, and of whom I saw much more after Akira's departure. I got on well with them, especially when it was just the three of us. But sometimes we would be joined by their schoolfriends - other boys from Shanghai Public School - and then their behaviour towards me would change, and I would sometimes become the target of certain pranks. I did not mind this at all, of course, since I could see they were all essentially decent sorts intending no real malice. Even at the time, I could see that if within a group of five or six boys, all but one attended the same school, the outsider was bound now and then to become the butt of some harmless banter. What I mean is that I did not think badly of my English friends; but then, all the same, such things did prevent me developing with them the same level of intimacy I had had with Akira, and as the months went on, I suppose I began to miss his company more and more.

But that autumn of Akira's absence was not a particularly unhappy one by any means. I remember it rather as a period when I was often at a loose end, of empty afternoons following one another, much of which has now faded from my mind. Nevertheless, a few small events did occur during that period which I have subsequently come to regard as being of particular significance.

There was, for example, the incident surrounding our trip to the racecourse with Uncle Philip, which I am reasonably sure occurred after one of my mother's Saturday morning meetings. As I may have said already, for all my mother's encouraging me to mingle with her fellow campaigners in the drawing room where they first gathered, I was not permitted into the dining room for the meetings themselves. I remember once asking her if I could attend a meeting, and to my surprise she had given it long consideration. Finally she had said:

‘I’m sorry, Puffin. Neither Lady Andrews nor Mrs Callow appreciates the company of children. It’s a pity. You might well have learnt some important things.’

My father, of course, was not barred from the meetings, but there seemed to exist an understanding that he too should refrain from attending them. It is hard for me now to say which, if either of them, was responsible for this state of affairs; but certainly, there was always an odd atmosphere at breakfast on those Saturdays a meeting was to take place. My mother would not actually mention the meeting itself to my father, but would regard him throughout the meal with an air almost of disgust. For his part, my father would become infected by a forced joviality which would grow throughout the morning right up until when my mother’s guests began to arrive. Uncle Philip was always among the first, and he and my father would chat for a few minutes in the drawing room, laughing a lot. Then as more guests arrived, my mother would come and take Uncle Philip away into a corner, where they would confer solemnly about the coming meeting. It was always at around this point that my father would absent himself, usually by going up to his study.

On that day I am recalling, I remember I heard the visitors starting to leave at the end of the meeting, and went out into the garden to await my mother – who I assumed would, as usual, emerge before long to commandeer my swing, singing all the while in her wonderfully carrying tones. When after a time there was no sign of her, I went into the house to investigate, and coming into the library saw that the doors of the dining room were now ajar; that the meeting had indeed broken up, but that Uncle Philip and my mother were still there, deep in discussion at the table, papers strewn before them. And then my father appeared behind me, no doubt also believing the morning’s business to be over. On hearing the voices from the dining room, he stopped and said to me:

‘Oh, they’re still here.’

‘Just Uncle Philip.’

My father smiled, then drifted past me into the dining room. Through the doors I could see Uncle Philip rising to his feet, and then I could hear the two men laughing loudly together. A moment later my mother emerged looking somewhat annoyed, her documents gathered in her arms.

By then it was past noon. Uncle Philip stayed for lunch and there was more good-humoured laughter. Then, as we were finishing our meal, Uncle Philip made his suggestion: why did we not all go down to the racecourse for the afternoon? My mother thought about this and declared it an excellent idea. My father too said he thought it a fine idea, but he would have to be excused on account of the work awaiting him in his study.

‘But by all means, darling,’ he said, turning to my mother, ‘why don’t you go along with Philip? It’s turning into the most splendid afternoon.’

‘Well, you know, I rather think I might,’ my mother said. ‘A little excitement might do us all some good. Christopher too.’

And at that moment they all looked at me. Although I was then only nine years old, I believe I read the situation with some accuracy. I knew of course that I was being offered a choice: to go out to the racecourse or to stay at home with my father. But I believe I grasped also the deeper implications: if I chose to stay in, then my mother would decline to go to the racecourse solely in Uncle Philip’s company. In other words, the outing depended on my going with them. Moreover I knew – and I did so with a calm certainty – that at that moment my father was desperately wishing us not to go, that for us to do so would cause him huge pain. It was not anything in his manner that suggested this to me, but rather what I had – perhaps unwillingly – absorbed over the preceding weeks and months. Of course, there were many things I did not understand at all in those days, but this much I saw with great clarity: at that instant, my father was entirely depending on me to save the situation.

But perhaps I did not understand enough. For when my mother said: 'Come on, Puffin. Hurry and get your shoes on,' I did so with conspicuous enthusiasm, an enthusiasm I manufactured for show. And I can remember to this day my father seeing us to the front door, shaking hands with Philip, laughing and waving us off as the carriage took my mother, Uncle Philip and me away on our afternoon's outing.

The only other memories to have remained distinct from that autumn also concern my father: namely, those curious instances of his 'boasting'. My father was always modest in his manners and found boastfulness in others embarrassing. This is why it struck me at the time as so odd to hear him talk in the way he did on a number of separate occasions around that time. These were all small instances which caused me only mild surprise, but they have none the less remained in my memory over the years.

There was the moment, for example, when at the dinner table he said quite suddenly to my mother:

'Did I tell you, darling? That fellow came back to see me, that representative from the dock workers. Wanted to thank me for all I'd done for them. Spoke jolly good English too. Of course these Chinese always speak very effusively, these speeches of theirs have all to be taken with a pinch of salt. But you know, dear, I had the distinct impression he meant it. Said I was their "honoured hero". How do you like that? Honoured hero!'

My father laughed, then watched my mother carefully. She went on eating for a moment, then said:

'Yes, darling. You've told me already.'

My father looked a little deflated, but then the next second he smiled cheerfully again and said with another laugh: 'So I have!' Then turning to me, he said: 'But Puffin here hasn't heard it yet. Have you, Puffin? Honoured hero. That's what they're calling your father.'

I cannot remember what any of this was about, and I probably did not much care even at the time. I have remembered the episode only because, as I have said, it was so uncharacteristic of my father to talk of himself in this way.

Another incident of this sort occurred one afternoon my parents and I were going to the Public Gardens to listen to the brass band. We had just stepped out of our carriage at the upper end of the Bund, and my mother and I were gazing across the wide boulevard towards the gateway into the gardens. It was a Sunday afternoon and I remember the pavements on both sides being filled with finely dressed promenaders enjoying the breeze from the harbour. The Bund itself was busy with carriages, motor cars and rickshaws, and my mother and I were preparing to cross it, when my father, having paid our driver, came up behind us and said suddenly and quite loudly:

'You see, darling, they know now at the firm. They know now I'm not one to back down. Bentley knows it, for one. Oh yes, he jolly well knows it now!'

As on that occasion at the dinner table, my mother initially gave no sign of having heard. She took my hand and we made our way across the traffic towards the gardens.

'Does he really?' was all she murmured under her breath as we reached the other side.

But that was not quite the end of the matter. We went into the Public Gardens and for a while, like every other family who went to the gardens on a Sunday afternoon, we strolled around the lawns and flower beds greeting friends and acquaintances, stopping occasionally for a short chat. I would sometimes see boys I knew - from school or from my piano lessons at Mrs Lewis's - but they were, like me, walking beside their parents on their best behaviour, and we would acknowledge one another only shyly, if at all. The brass band would start to play at half past five on the dot, and although everyone knew this, most people would wait until the horns came drifting across the grounds before making a move towards the bandstand.

We were always late to set off, so that the seats would all be taken by the time we arrived. I did not mind this so much, since it was around the bandstand that we children were allowed a looser leash, and I too would sometimes mingle and play there with the other boys. On that particular afternoon - it must have been well into the autumn for I remember the sun already low over the water behind the bandstand - my mother had moved a few paces away to talk with some friends standing nearby, and after several minutes of attending to the music, I asked my father's permission to go over to some American boys I knew playing on the outer fringe of the crowd. He went on gazing at the band and did not answer, so I was about to ask him again, when he said quietly:

'All these people here, Puffin. All these people. Ask them and they'll all profess to have standards. But you'll see as you get older, very few of them really do. Your mother, though, she's different. She never lets herself down. And you know, Puffin, that's why she's finally succeeded. She's made your father a better man. A much better man. Very well, she may be strict, I don't need to tell you that, ha ha! Well, she's been every bit as strict with me as she has with you. And the result is, by golly, I'm a better human being for it. Took a long time, but she managed it. I want you to know this, Puffin, your father is no longer today the same person you saw that time, you know, that time you and Mother burst in on me. You remember that, of course you do. That time I was in my study. I'm sorry you ever had to see your own father like that. Well anyway, that was then. Today, thanks to your mother, I'm someone much much stronger. Someone, I dare say, Puffin, you'll one day be proud of.'

I understood little of what he was saying, and besides, I had the feeling that if my mother - who was only a little way away - caught any of these words, she would be angry. So I did not really respond to my father. I have a feeling I simply asked him again, after a few moments, if I could go over to join my American friends, and that was the end of the matter.

But over the days that followed, I did find myself thinking about this curious speech from my father, and in particular his reference to some occasion when my mother and I had 'burst in' upon him in his study. For a long time, I had no clear idea what he might have been referring to, and I tried in vain to match one recollection or another to his words. Eventually I did settle on one memory from very early in my life, from when I could have been no older than four or five - a memory which even then, when I was nine years old, had already grown hazy in my mind.

My father's study was on the uppermost floor of the house with a commanding view over the rear grounds. I was not usually permitted to enter it, and in general was discouraged from playing anywhere near it. There was, however, a narrow corridor leading from the landing to the study door, along which a row of pictures hung in heavy gilt frames. These were each precise, draughtsman-like paintings of Shanghai harbour seen from the viewpoint of someone standing on the shore at Pootung; that is to say, all the numerous vessels in the harbour were shown with the great buildings of the Bund in the background. The pictures probably dated back at least to the 1880s and my guess is that like many of the ornaments and pictures in the house, they belonged to the company. Now I do not actually remember this myself, but my mother often told me how, when I was very young, she and I would stand in front of these pictures and entertain ourselves giving amusing names to the various vessels in the water. According to my mother, I would quickly be in fits of laughter and would sometimes refuse to abandon the game until we had named every visible vessel. If this were so - if we were really in the habit of laughing boisterously throughout this game of ours - then almost certainly we would not have come up to amuse ourselves in this way while my father was working in his study. But when I thought further about my father's words at the bandstand that day, I began to remember an occasion my mother and I had indeed been standing together up on that attic floor, for all I know playing this game of ours, when she suddenly stopped and became very still.

My first thought was that I was about to be scolded, perhaps for something I had just said which had displeased her. It was not even unheard of for my mother to switch moods abruptly in the midst of a harmonious exchange and scold me for some suddenly remembered misdemeanour committed earlier in the day. But as I fell silent in readiness for just such an explosion, I realised she was listening. Then the next instant she had turned and pushed open with great suddenness the door to my father's study.

I caught a glimpse past my mother's frame of the inside of the room. My abiding image is of my father slumped forward over his bureau, his face covered in perspiration and contorted with frustration. It is possible he was sobbing and it was this sound that had caught my mother's attention. In front of him, all over his desk, there were papers, ledgers, notebooks. I noticed - I believe I followed my mother's gaze - more papers and notebooks on the floor, as though he had hurled them there in a temper fit. He was looking up at us, startled, and then the next moment he said in a voice that rather shocked me:

'We can't do it! We'll never get back! We can't do it! You're asking too much, Diana. It's too much!'

My mother said something to him under her breath, no doubt some reprimand to make him pull himself together. My father did collect himself a little at this point and, glancing past my mother, looked at me for the first time. But almost instantly his face creased again with despair and, turning to my mother, he said again, shaking his head helplessly:

‘We can’t do it, Diana. It’ll be the ruin of us. I’ve looked at everything. We’ll never get back to England. We can’t raise enough. Without the firm, we’re simply stranded.’

Then he seemed to lose control again, and as my mother began to say something else – something in her quiet, angry voice – my father began to shout, not so much at her as at the walls of his study:

‘I won’t do it, Diana! My God, who do you take me for? It’s beyond me, you hear? Beyond me! I can’t do it!’

Possibly at this point my mother closed the door on him and led me away. I have no further memory of the episode. And of course, I cannot be sure of the exact sentiments, let alone the exact words, my father was uttering that day. But this is how, admittedly with some hindsight, I have come to shape that memory.

At the time, it was simply a bewildering experience for me, and although I probably found it interesting that my father should, like me, have moments of crying and shouting, I did not much ask myself what it had all been about. Besides, when I next saw my father he was his normal self again, and for her part my mother never alluded to the incident. If my father had not, years later, made that curious speech beside the bandstand, I would probably never have dredged up this memory at all.

But as I say, apart from these curious little episodes, there is little that seems worth remembering from that autumn and the dull winter that followed it. I was listless for much of that period and was delighted when one afternoon Mei Li quite casually gave me the news that Akira had returned from Japan, that at that very moment, in the drive next door, his luggage was being unloaded off the motor car.

Chapter Seven

Akira, I was delighted to learn, had returned to Shanghai not just for a visit, but for the foreseeable future, with plans to resume at his old school in the North Szechwan Road at the start of the summer term. I cannot remember if the two of us celebrated his return in any special way. I have the impression we simply picked up our friendship where we had left off the previous autumn with minimum fuss. I was quite curious to hear about Akira's experiences in Japan, but he persuaded me it would be childish - somehow beneath us - to discuss such matters, and so we made a show of continuing with our old routines as if nothing had ever interrupted them. I guessed of course that all had not gone well for him in Japan, but did not begin to suspect the half of it until that warm spring day he tore the sleeve of his kimono.

When we played outside, Akira usually dressed much as I did - in shirt, shorts and, on the hotter days, sun hat. But on that particular morning we were playing on the mound at the back of our garden, he was wearing a kimono - not anything special, just one of the garments he often wore around his house. We had been running up and down the mound enacting some drama when he suddenly stopped near the summit and sat down with a frown. I thought he had injured himself but, when I came up to him, saw he was examining a tear on the sleeve of the kimono. He was doing so with the utmost concern, and I believe I said to him something like:

'What's wrong? Your maid or someone will sew that in no time.'

He did not respond - he seemed for the moment to have forgotten my presence entirely - and I realised he was sinking into a deep gloom before my eyes. He went on examining the tear for a few more seconds, then letting down his arm, stared blankly at the earth in front of him as though a great tragedy had just occurred.

‘This is third time,’ he muttered quietly. ‘Third time same week I do bad thing.’

Then as I continued to gaze at him somewhat baffled, he said: ‘Third bad thing. Now mother and father, they make me go back Japan.’

I could not, of course, see how a small tear in an old kimono could bring such consequences, but I was for the moment sufficiently alarmed by this prospect to crouch down beside him and urgently demand an explanation for his words. But I could get little more out of my friend that morning - he grew increasingly sulky and closed - and I seem to remember our parting not on the best of terms. Over the following weeks, however, I gradually discovered what had lain behind his odd behaviour.

From his very first day in Japan, Akira had been thoroughly miserable. Although he never admitted this explicitly, I surmised that he had been mercilessly ostracised for his ‘foreignness’; his manners, his attitudes, his speech, a hundred other things had marked him out as different, and he had been taunted not just by his fellow pupils, but by his teachers and even - he hinted at this more than once - by the relatives in whose house he was staying. In the end, so profound was his unhappiness, his parents had been obliged to bring him home in the middle of a school term.

The thought that he might have to return again to Japan was one that haunted my friend. The fact was his parents missed Japan badly and often talked of the family returning there. With his older sister, Etsuko, not at all averse to living in Japan, Akira realised he was alone in wishing the family to remain in Shanghai; that it was only his strong opposition to the idea that prevented his parents packing their things and sailing for Nagasaki, and he was not at all sure how much longer his preferences could expect to take precedence over those of his sister and parents. Things were very much in the balance, and any displeasure he incurred - any misdemeanour, any falling off of his schoolwork - could tip the scales against him. Hence his supposition that a small tear in a kimono sleeve might easily produce the gravest of consequences.

As it turned out, the torn kimono did not incur his parents' wrath nearly to the extent feared, and certainly nothing momentous came of the matter. But throughout those months following his return, there would come along one little mishap after another to plunge my friend back into his pit of worry and despondency. The most significant of these, I suppose, was the affair concerning Ling Tien and our 'robbery' - the 'crime from my past' which so aroused Sarah's curiosity during our bus ride this afternoon.

Ling Tien had been with Akira's family for as long as they had been in Shanghai. Among my earliest memories of going next door to play are those of the old servant shuffling about the place with his broom. He looked very old, always wore a heavy dark gown even in the summer, a cap and a pigtail. Unlike the other Chinese servants in the neighbourhood, he rarely smiled at children, but then nor did he scowl or shout at us, and had it not been for Akira's attitude to him, it is unlikely I would ever have regarded him as an object of fear. Indeed, I remember I was initially more puzzled than anything by the alarm that would seize Akira whenever the servant came within our vicinity. If for instance Ling Tien was passing in the corridor, my friend would break off whatever we were doing to stand rigidly in a part of the room not visible to the old man and not move again until the danger had passed. In those early days of our friendship, I had yet to become infected by Akira's sense of dread, assuming that it derived from something specific that had occurred between him and Ling Tien. As I say, I was more puzzled than anything, but whenever I asked Akira to explain his behaviour, he simply ignored me. In time I came to appreciate how deeply embarrassed he was by his inability to control his dread of Ling Tien and learnt to say nothing whenever our games were disrupted in this manner.

But then as we grew older, I imagine Akira began to feel the need to justify his fear. By the time we were seven or eight, the sight of Ling Tien would no longer cause my friend to freeze; instead, he would break off whatever he was doing and look at me with a strange grin. Then putting his mouth close to my ear, he would recite in a curious monotone - not unlike that of the monks we sometimes heard chanting at the Boone Road market - the most terrifying revelations concerning the old servant.

I thus learnt of Ling Tien's fearful passion for hands. Akira had once happened to glance down the servants' corridor towards Ling Tien's room on a rare occasion when the old man had left his door ajar, and had seen heaped upon the floor the severed hands of men, women, children, apes. Another time, late at night, Akira had spotted the servant carrying a basket into the house piled with the dismembered little arms of monkeys. We had always to be on our guard, Akira warned me. If we gave him the slightest opportunity, Ling Tien would not hesitate to cut off our hands.

When after a number of such briefings, I enquired as to why Ling Tien was so keen on hands, Akira looked at me carefully, then asked if I could be entrusted with his family's darkest secret. When I assured him I could, he thought a little longer before saying finally:

'Then I tell you, old chap! Terrible reason! Why Ling cut off hands. I tell you!'

Ling Tien, evidently, had discovered a method by which he could turn severed hands into spiders. In his room were many bowls filled with various fluids in which he soaked for several months at a time the many hands he had collected. Slowly the fingers would start to move by themselves - just little twitches at first, then coiling motions; finally dark hairs would grow and Ling Tien would then take them out of the fluids and set them loose, as spiders, all around the neighbourhood. Akira had often heard the old servant creeping out in the dead of night to do just this. My friend had once even seen in the garden, moving through the undergrowth, a mutant Ling had taken prematurely from its solution which did not yet fully resemble a spider and could easily be identified as a severed hand.

Although even at that age I did not entirely believe these stories, they certainly upset me and for some time the mere sight of Ling Tien was enough to set off terrors within me. Indeed, as we grew older, we neither of us quite shook off our horror of Ling Tien. This was something that always nagged at Akira's pride, and around the time we were eight, he seemed to develop a need constantly to challenge these old fears. I often remember him dragging me off to some point in his house where we could spy on Ling Tien sweeping the path or whatever. I did not mind these spying sessions so much, but what I came to dread were those occasions Akira would persistently dare me to go near Ling Tien's room.

Until this point we had kept well clear of that room, especially since Akira had always maintained the fumes from Ling Tien's fluids were liable to hypnotise us and draw us in through the door. But now the notion of going near the room became for my friend something of an obsession. We might be having a conversation about something quite different, and then suddenly that strange grin would appear on his face and he would start to whisper: 'Are you frightened? Christopher, are you frightened?'

He would then oblige me to follow him through his house, through those oddly furnished rooms, to the heavy-beamed arch that marked the start of the servants' quarters. Going under the arch, we would find ourselves standing in a gloomy corridor of bare polished boards, at the far end of which, facing us, was the door of Ling Tien's room.

First, I would only be required to stand at the arch and watch as Akira pushed himself step by step along the corridor until he had covered perhaps half the distance to that awful room. I can still see my friend, his tubby figure stiff with tension, his face, whenever he glanced back at me, shining with perspiration, willing himself a few steps further before turning and running back with his triumphant grin. Then would come all his goading and bullying until I eventually found the nerve to match his feat. For quite a time, as I say, these tests of courage concerning Ling Tien's room came rather to obsess Akira, and took much out of the pleasure of going to play at his house.

For some time yet, though, it was to remain beyond either of us to walk right up to the door, let alone to go through it. By the time we finally entered Ling Tien's room, we were both ten, and it was - although of course I did not know it then - my last year in Shanghai. That was when Akira and I committed our little theft - an impulsive act whose wider repercussions, in our excitement, we failed entirely to anticipate.

We had always known Ling Tien would be going away for six days in early August to visit his home village near Hangchow, and we had talked often about how we would then take the opportunity finally to enter that room. And sure enough, on the first afternoon after Ling Tien's departure, I turned up at Akira's house to find my friend entirely preoccupied with the matter. By this time, I should say, I was in general a much more confident person than even a year earlier, and if I still felt a little of that old dread of Ling Tien, I would certainly not have shown it. In fact, I believe I was much the calmer about the prospect of entering the room - something I am sure my friend noticed and saw as an extra dimension to the challenge.

But as it turned out, throughout that afternoon, Akira's mother was making a dress, which for some reason required her constantly to move from room to room, and Akira declared it too risky even to contemplate our venture. I was certainly not displeased, but I am sure Akira was the one more grateful for the excuse.

The following day, however, was a Saturday and when I arrived at Akira's house towards mid-morning, both his parents had gone out. Akira did not have an amah, as I did, and when we were younger we had often argued over which of us was the more fortunate. He had always taken the position that Japanese children did not need an amah because they were 'braver' than Western children. I had once asked him during one such argument who would see to his needs if his mother was out and he wanted, say, some iced water, or if he cut himself. I remember his telling me Japanese mothers never went out unless the child specifically permitted them to do so - a claim I found hard to believe, since I knew for a fact Japanese ladies met in their circles, much as the European ladies did, at Astor House or Marcell's Tea Room in Szechwan Road. But when he pointed out that in his mother's absence there was the maid to see to his every need, while at the same time he was free to do whatever he pleased with no restrictions at all, I did begin to believe I was the one hard done by. Oddly, I continued to hold this view even though in practice, on those occasions we played at his house when his mother was out, one or another servant was always delegated to watch over our every move. Indeed, especially when we were younger, this would mean some unsmiling figure, no doubt fearing dire consequences should any misfortune befall us, standing within inhibiting proximity while we did our best to play.

Naturally, though, by that summer, we were allowed to move much more freely without supervision. On that morning we entered Ling Tien's room, we had been playing in one of Akira's sparse tatami-floored rooms up on the third floor while an elderly maid - the only other person in the house - occupied herself with some sewing in the room directly below. I remember at one point Akira breaking off from what we were doing, tip-toeing to the balcony and leaning right over the rail, so far I feared he might topple over. Then when he came hurrying back, I noticed the strange grin had appeared on his face. The maid, he reported in a whisper, had as expected fallen asleep.

‘Now we must go in! Are you frightened, Christopher? Are you frightened?’

Akira had suddenly become so tense that for a moment all my old fears concerning Ling Tien came flooding back. But by this point a retreat for either of us was out of the question, and we made our way as quietly as possible down to the servants’ quarters until we were once more standing together in that gloomy corridor with its bare polished boards.

What I recall is that we strode down the corridor with little hesitation until we were all but four or five yards from Ling Tien’s door. Then something made us pause, and for a second neither of us appeared capable of continuing; if at that moment Akira had turned and run, I am sure I would have done the same. But then my friend seemed to find some extra resolve, and holding out his arm to me, said: ‘Come on, old chap! We go together!’

We linked arms and took the final few steps like that. Then Akira pulled back the door and we both peered in.

We saw a small, sparse, tidy room with a well-swept boarded floor. The window was covered by a sun-blind, but the light was leaking in brightly at the edges. There was a faint smell of incense in the air, a shrine in the far corner, a low narrow bed, and a surprisingly grand chest of drawers, beautifully lacquered, with ornate handles hanging on each little drawer.

We stepped inside, and for a few seconds remained still, barely breathing. Then Akira let out a sigh and turned to me with a huge smile, clearly delighted finally to have conquered his old fear. But the next moment his sense of triumph seemed quickly to be replaced by a concern that the room's lack of any obviously sinister features would make him look ridiculous. Before I could say anything, he pointed quickly to the chest of drawers and whispered urgently:

‘There! In there! Careful, careful, old chap! The spiders, they inside there!’

He was hardly convincing and he must have realised it. Nevertheless, for a second or two, an image went through my head of those small drawers opening before our eyes as creatures – at various stages between hand and spider – put out tentative limbs. But now Akira was indicating excitedly a small bottle standing on a low table beside Ling Tien's bed.

‘Lotion!’ he whispered. ‘The magic lotion he uses! There it is!’

I was tempted to pour ridicule over this desperate attempt to preserve a fantasy we had in truth long outgrown, but at that moment I had another sudden vision of the drawers opening, and a residue of my old fear kept me from saying anything. Moreover, I was beginning to grow anxious about a much more likely eventuality: namely, that we would be discovered in that room by the maid or some other unexpected adult. I could not begin to imagine the disgrace that would then follow, the punishments, the long discussions between my parents and Akira's. I could not even think how we might start to explain our behaviour.

Just then Akira quickly stepped forward, grabbed the bottle and clasped it to his chest.

‘Go! Go!’ he hissed, and suddenly we were both gripped by panic. Giggling under our breaths, we rushed out of the room and down the corridor.

Back in the safety of the upstairs room – the maid had remained asleep below – Akira reasserted his claim that the drawers had been filled with severed hands. I could see now he was seriously worried about my ridiculing our long-standing fantasy and somehow I too felt the need to preserve it. I thus said nothing to undermine his claim, nor gave any suggestion that Ling Tien's room had been a let-down or that our courage had been summoned on false pretences. We placed the bottle on a plate in the middle of the floor, then sat down to examine it.

Akira carefully removed the stopper. There was inside a pale liquid with a vague smell of aniseed. To this day I have no idea for what the old servant used this lotion; my guess is that it was some patent medicine he had purchased to combat some chronic condition. In any case, its nondescript appearance served our purpose well. Very carefully we dipped twigs into the bottle and let them drip on to some paper. Akira warned that we should not let even a drop touch our hands lest we wake up the next day with spiders at the end of our arms. Neither of us really believed this, but again, it seemed important for Akira's feelings that we pretend to do so, and thus we went about our task with exaggerated caution.

Finally, Akira replaced the stopper and put away the bottle in the box he kept for his special things, saying that he wished to conduct a few more experiments with the lotion before returning it. All in all, when we parted that morning, we were both well pleased with ourselves.

But when Akira came to my house the following afternoon, I saw immediately some difficulty had arisen; he was very preoccupied and unable to concentrate on anything. Dreading to hear that his parents had somehow found out about our previous day's deeds, I for some time avoided asking what was troubling him. In the end, though, I could bear it no longer and demanded he tell me the worst. Akira, however, denied that his parents suspected anything, then sank once more into his gloom. Only after much more pressure did he finally give in and tell me what had happened.

Finding it impossible to contain his sense of triumph, Akira had revealed to his sister Etsuko what we had done. To his surprise, Etsuko had reacted with horror. I say surprise because Etsuko - who was four years older than us - had never gone along with our view of Ling Tien's sinister nature. But now, on hearing Akira's story, she had glared at him as though she expected him to curl over and die before her eyes. Then she had told Akira we had had the luckiest of escapes; that she personally had known of servants previously employed in the house who had dared do what we had done, and who as a consequence had vanished - their remains discovered weeks later in some alley beyond the Settlement boundaries. Akira had told his sister she was simply trying to frighten him, that he did not for a moment believe her. But clearly he had been shaken, and I too felt a chill pass through me on hearing this 'confirmation' - and from no less an authority than Etsuko - of all our old fears concerning Ling Tien.

It was then I appreciated what was so troubling Akira: someone had to put back the bottle in Ling Tien's room before the old servant's return in three days' time. Yet it was plain to see our bravado of the previous day had all but evaporated, and the prospect of going into that room again now seemed beyond us.

Unable to settle to any of our usual games, we decided to walk to our special spot beside the canal. All the way there, we talked over our problem from every angle. What would happen if we did not return the bottle? Perhaps the lotion was very precious and the police would be called in to investigate. Or perhaps Ling Tien would tell no one of its disappearance, but decide personally to wreak some terrible vengeance on us. I remember we became quite confused about how much we wished to maintain our fantasy about Ling Tien, and to what extent we wanted to consider logically how best to avoid getting into serious trouble. I remember, for instance, our considering at one point the possibility the lotion was a medicine Ling Tien had bought after months of saving his money, and that without it he would become horribly ill; but then in the next breath, without abandoning this last notion, we considered other hypotheses which assumed the lotion to be what we had always said it was.

Our spot by the canal, some fifteen minutes' walk from our homes, was behind some storehouses belonging to the Jardine Matheson Company. We were never sure if we were actually trespassing; to reach it we would go through a gate that was always left open, and cross a concrete yard past some Chinese workers, who would watch us suspiciously, but never impede us. We would then go round the side of a rickety boathouse and along a length of jetty, before stepping down on to our patch of dark hard earth right on the bank of the canal. It was a space only large enough for the two of us to sit side by side facing the water, but even on the hottest days the storehouses behind us ensured we were in the shade, and each time a boat or junk went past, the waters would lap soothingly at our feet. On the opposite bank were more storehouses, but there was, I remember, almost directly across from us, a gap between two buildings through which we could see a road lined with trees. Akira and I often came to the spot, though we were careful never to tell our parents of it for fear they would not trust us to play so near the water's edge.

On that afternoon, once we had sat down, we tried for a while to forget our worries. I remember Akira starting to ask me, as he often did when we came to our spot, if in an emergency I would manage to swim to this or that vessel visible further up the water. But he could not keep it up, and suddenly, to my astonishment, he began to cry.

I had hardly ever seen my friend cry. In fact, today, this is the only recollection I have of him crying. Even when a large piece of mortar fell on to his leg when we were playing behind the American Mission, for all his turning a ghastly white, he did not cry. But that afternoon by the canal, Akira had clearly reached his wits' end.

I remember he had in his hands some piece of damp flaking wood from which, as he sobbed, he broke off bits to hurl into the water. I wanted very much to comfort him, but being at a loss for anything to say, I recall getting up to find more such pieces of wood to break off into pieces and hand to him, as though this were some urgent remedy. Then there was no more wood left for him to throw, and Akira brought his tears under control.

'When parents find out,' he said eventually, 'they be so angry. Then they not let me stay here. Then we all go to Japan.'

I still did not know what to say. Then, staring at a boat going by, he murmured: 'I don't ever want to live in Japan.'

And because this was what I always said when he made this statement, I echoed: 'And I don't ever want to go to England.'

With that, we both fell silent for a few more moments. But as we continued to stare at the water, the one obvious course of action to prevent all these awful repercussions loomed ever larger in my mind, and in the end I simply put it to him that all we had to do was to replace the bottle in time, then all would be well.

Akira did not appear to hear me, so I repeated the point. He continued to ignore me, and it was then I realised how very real his fear of Ling Tien had grown since our adventure the previous day; indeed, I could see it was as great now as it had ever been in our younger days, except of course that Akira was now unable to admit to it. I could see his difficulty and tried hard to think of a way out. In the end, I said quietly:

‘Akira-chan. We’ll do it again together. Just like last time. We’ll join arms again, go in, put the bottle where we found it. If we do it together like that, then we’ll be safe, nothing bad can happen to us. Nothing at all. Then no one will ever find out anything about what we did.’

Akira thought about this. Then he turned and looked at me and I could see deep and solemn gratitude in his face.

‘Tomorrow, in afternoon, three o’clock,’ he said. ‘Mother will go out to park. If maid fall asleep again, then we have chance.’

I assured him the maid was bound to fall asleep again, and repeated that if we went into the room together, there was nothing at all to fear.

‘We do together, old chap!’ he said with a sudden smile and got to his feet.

On the walk back, we finalised our plans. I promised to come to Akira’s house the next day well before his mother’s departure, and as soon as she left, we would go upstairs and wait together, Ling Tien’s bottle ready, for the maid to fall asleep. Akira’s mood lightened considerably, but I remember, as we parted that afternoon, my friend turning to me with an unconvincing nonchalance and warning me not to be late the next day.

The following day was again hot and humid. I have down the years gone over many times everything I can remember of that day, trying to put the various details in some coherent order. I cannot remember a great deal about the first part of the morning. I have a picture of how I said goodbye to my father as he went off to work. I was already outside, loitering around the carriage track waiting for him to emerge. He eventually did so, in a white suit and hat, holding a briefcase and a stick. He squinted and glanced out towards our gateway. Then, as I waited for him to come further towards me, my mother appeared on the doorstep behind him and said something. My father walked back a few steps, exchanged some words with her, smiled, kissed her lightly on the cheek, then came striding out to where I was waiting. That is all I remember of how he left that day. I do not remember now if we shook hands, if he patted my shoulder, if he turned back at the gate for a last wave. My overall recollection is that there was nothing in the manner of his parting that morning to set it apart from the way he had left for work on every other day.

All I remember of the rest of the morning is that I played with my toy soldiers on the rug in my bedroom, my mind forever drifting to the daunting task awaiting us later in the day. I remember my mother going out at some point and that I ate lunch with Mei Li in the kitchen. After lunch, needing to kill time until three o'clock, I walked the short distance along our road to the spot where two large oak trees stood, set back from the road, yet well in front of the nearest garden wall.

Perhaps it was because I was already stoking up my courage, but I succeeded that day in climbing one of the oaks to a new height. Perched triumphantly in its branches, I found I had a view across the hedges and grounds of all the neighbouring houses. I remember I sat up there for some time, the wind on my face, growing ever more anxious about the task ahead. It occurred to me that, apprehensive as I was, Akira's fear of Ling Tien's room was now much the greater, and I would this time have to be the 'leader'. I saw the responsibility this entailed, and resolved to appear as confident as possible when I presented myself at his house. But as I continued to sit there in the tree, there kept occurring to me any number of eventualities that could thwart us: the maid would fail to fall asleep; she might even choose this of all days to clean the corridor outside Ling Tien's room; or else Akira's mother would change her mind and not go out as expected. And then of course, there were the older, less rational fears which, try as I might, I could not quite dispel from my mind.

Eventually I climbed down the oak, wishing to go home for a glass of water and to check the time. As I came in through our gate, I saw two motor cars in the drive. I was mildly curious about these, but by this stage was far too preoccupied to give them much attention. Then as I was crossing the hallway I glanced through the open doors of the drawing room and saw the three men, standing with their hats in their hands, talking with my mother. There was nothing so untoward about this - it was perfectly possible they had come to discuss my mother's campaign - but something in the atmosphere made me pause a moment there in the hall. As I did so, the voices broke off and I saw their faces turn to me. I recognised one of the men to be Mr Simpson, my father's colleague at Byatt's; the other two were strangers. Then my mother came into view as she too leant forward and looked at me. I suppose I might have sensed then that something out of the ordinary was unfolding. In any case, the next moment, I was hurrying off in the direction of the kitchen.

No sooner had I reached the kitchen than I heard footsteps, and my mother came in. I have often tried to recall her face - the exact expression she was wearing - at that moment, but with no success. Perhaps some instinct told me not to look at it. What I do remember is her presence, which seemed looming and large, as though suddenly I were very young again, and the texture of the pale summer frock she was wearing. She said to me in a lowered, but perfectly composed voice:

‘Christopher, the gentlemen with Mr Simpson are from the police. I must finish talking with them. Then I want to talk to you straight afterwards. Will you wait for me in the library?’

I was about to protest, but my mother fixed me with a stare that silenced me.

‘In the library then,’ she said, turning away. ‘I’ll come as soon as I’ve finished with the gentlemen.’

‘Has something happened to Father?’ I asked.

My mother turned back to me. ‘Your father never arrived at the office this morning. But I’m sure there’s a perfectly simple explanation. Wait for me in the library. I won’t be long.’

I followed her out of the kitchen and made my way to the library. There I sat down at my homework table and waited, thinking not about my father, but of Akira and how I was already going to be late for him. I wondered if he would have the courage to return the bottle on his own; even if he did, he would still be very angry with me. I felt at that moment such an urgency about Akira’s situation, I actually contemplated disobeying my mother and simply going off. Meanwhile the discussion in the drawing room seemed to go on interminably. There was a clock on the library wall and I stared at its hands. At one point, I went out into the hall, hoping to catch my mother’s attention and ask her permission to leave, but I found the doors to the drawing room had now been closed. Then, as I was hovering there in the hall, once more thinking about sneaking off, Mei Li appeared and pointed sternly towards the library. Once I had gone back in, she closed the door on me and I could hear her pacing about outside. I seated myself again and went on watching the clock. As the hands passed half past three, I fell into a gloom, full of anger at both my mother and Mei Li.

Then at last I heard the men being shown out. I heard one of them say:

‘We’ll do everything we can, Mrs Banks. We must hope for the best and trust in God.’

I could not hear my mother’s reply.

As soon as the men had gone, I rushed out and asked for permission to go to Akira’s. But my mother, to my fury, completely ignored my request, saying: 'Let's go back into the library.'

Frustrated though I was, I did as bidden, and it was there in the library that she sat me down, crouched before me and told me, very calmly, that my father had been missing since the morning. The police, alerted by his office, were carrying out a search, so far to no avail.

'But he may well turn up by supper time,' she said with a smile.

'Of course he will,' I said in a voice I hoped would convey my annoyance at this great fuss. Then I got off the chair and asked again for permission to leave. But this time I did so with less fervour, for I could see from the clock there was no longer any point in going to Akira's. His mother would have returned; his evening meal would be served before long. I felt a huge resentment that my mother should have kept me in simply to tell me something I had more or less gleaned in the kitchen an hour and a half earlier. When at last she told me I could go, I simply went up to my room, laid my soldiers out on my rug and did my best not to think about Akira or his feelings towards me at that moment. But I kept remembering all that had been said beside the canal, and the look of gratitude he had given me. Moreover, I did not wish Akira to return to Japan any more than he did.

My sullenness stayed with me well into the night, but of course this was interpreted as my reaction to the situation regarding my father. Throughout the evening my mother would say to me things like: 'Let's not get gloomy. There's sure to be a very simple explanation.' And Mei Li was uncharacteristically gentle with me when helping with my bath. But I remember too, as the evening went on, my mother having a number of those 'distant' moments I was to come to know well over the weeks that followed. In fact I believe it was that same night, as I lay in my bed still preoccupied about what to say to Akira when I next saw him, that my mother murmured, looking blankly across the room:

‘Whatever happens, you can be proud of him, Puffin. You can always be proud of what he’s done.’

Chapter Eight

I do not remember much about the days immediately following my father's disappearance, other than that I was often so concerned about Akira - in particular, what I would say when I next saw him - that I could not settle to anything. Nevertheless I found myself continually putting off a visit next door, even contemplating for a while the notion that I might never need face him at all - that his parents, so angered by our misdemeanour, were even at that moment packing their bags for Japan. During these days any sort of loud noise outside would send me rushing upstairs to the front windows, from where I could scrutinise the next-door courtyard for signs of piling luggage.

Then after three or four days had passed, on an overcast morning, I was playing by myself out on the circle of lawn in front of our house when I became conscious of the sounds coming from Akira's side of the fence. I quickly realised that Akira was moving about on his sister's bicycle around his carriage track; I had often enough watched him trying to ride this bicycle, which was far too large for him, and recognised the scraping noises the wheels made as he struggled for balance. At one stage I heard a crash and a yell as he fell off altogether. The possibility occurred to me that Akira had spotted me out playing from his upstairs window and had come out with the bicycle expressly to attract my attention. After several further moments of hesitation - during which Akira continued to crash about on his side - I finally strode out of our gateway, turned and stared into his front garden.

Akira was indeed astride Etsuko's bicycle, absorbed in attempts to execute some circus-like manoeuvre that required taking his hands from the handlebar just as he turned a tight circle. He appeared too absorbed to notice me, and even when I walked up to him, gave no sign of having seen me. Finally I said simply:

‘I’m sorry I couldn’t come the other day.’

Akira gave me a sulky glance, then went back to his manoeuvres. I was about to give him my explanation for having let him down, but for some reason, found I could say nothing more. I stood there watching him for a little longer. Then taking a further step towards him, I said, lowering my voice to a whisper:

‘What happened? Did you put it back?’

My friend gave me a glare that rejected the intimacy implied by my tone, then spun his bicycle round. I felt tears coming, but remembering in time our long-standing feud about whether the English or Japanese cried easiest, I managed to stifle them. I thought again of telling him about my father’s disappearance, and suddenly it seemed a hugely substantial reason not only for my having let him down, but for great self-pity on my part. I pictured the shock and shame that would transform Akira’s face once I uttered the words: ‘I couldn’t come the other day because ... because my father’s been kidnapped!’ - but somehow I could not say it. Instead, I believe I simply turned and ran back to my house.

I did not see Akira for the next few days. Then one afternoon he came to our back door, asking Mei Li for me as usual. I was in the middle of something, but dropped it all and went out to my friend. He greeted me smilingly, and as he led me away to his garden, patted me affectionately on the back. I was of course anxious to discover just what had transpired over the Ling Tien matter, but being even more keen not to re-open wounds, resisted the urge to ask anything about it.

We went to the back of his garden - to the thick shrubs we called our ‘jungle’ - and soon became immersed in one of our dramatic narratives. I have a feeling we acted out scenes from Ivanhoe, which I was reading at that time - or perhaps it was one of Akira's Japanese samurai adventures. In any case, after an hour or so, my friend suddenly stopped and looked oddly at me. Then he said:

‘If you like, we play new game.’

‘A new game?’

‘New game. About Christopher father. If you like.’

I was taken aback and I do not recall what I said next. He came a few steps closer in the long grass and I saw he was looking at me almost tenderly.

‘Yes,’ he said. ‘If you like, we play detective. We search for father. We rescue father.’

I then realised that it was hearing the news about my father – which no doubt had started to do the rounds of the neighbourhood – that had brought Akira back to my door. I understood too that this present proposal was his way of showing his concern and wish to help, and I felt my affection for him welling up. But in the end, I said quite nonchalantly:

‘All right. If you want to play that, we can.’

And that was how it began, what today in my memory feels like an entire era – though in truth it could only have been a period of two months or less – when day after day we invented and played out endless variations on the theme of my father's rescue.

Meanwhile the real investigations into my father's disappearance were continuing. I knew this from the visits we received from the men who held their hats in their hands and talked solemnly to my mother; from the hushed exchanges between my mother and Mei Li when my mother came in, tight-lipped, at the end of an afternoon; and in particular, there was that conversation I had with her at the foot of the staircase.

I have no real memory of what either of us had been doing prior to that moment. I had started to run up the stairs, eager to fetch something from the playroom, when I realised my mother had appeared at the top and was making her way down. She must have been about to go out, for she had on her special beige dress, the one that gave off a peculiar smell like mouldering leaves. I suppose I must have sensed something in her manner, for I stopped where I was on the third or fourth step and waited for her. As she came towards me, she smiled and reached out a hand. She did this while still a number of steps above me, so that I thought for a moment she was wishing me to assist her down the rest of the stairs, the way my father sometimes did when he waited for her at the foot of the staircase. But as it turned out, she simply put her arm around my shoulder and we descended the last steps together. Then she let go of me and walked over towards the hat-stand on the other side of the hall. It was as she did so that she said:

‘Puffin, I know how difficult these last few days have been for you. It must seem as though the whole world’s caving in. Well, it’s been difficult for me too. But you must do as I have. You must keep praying to God and remain hopeful. I hope you are remembering your prayers, aren’t you, Puffin?’

‘Yes, I am,’ I replied, rather off-handedly.

‘It’s a sad fact,’ she went on, ‘that in a city like this, from time to time, people do get kidnapped. In fact it happens rather often, and a lot of the time, I’d go so far as to say most of the time, the people come back perfectly safely. So we have to be patient. Puffin, are you listening to me?’

‘Of course I’m listening.’ I had by this time turned my back to her and was dangling by my arms from the banister post.

‘What we have to appreciate,’ my mother said after a pause, ‘is that the city’s very best detectives have been assigned to the case. I've spoken with them, and they're very optimistic a solution will be found soon.'

'But how long will that be?' I asked sullenly.

'We have to be hopeful. We have to trust the detectives. And it may take a little time, but we must be patient. Then in the end things may well come right, and everything will be just as it was before. We must continue to pray to God and always keep hopeful. Puffin, what are you doing? Did you hear me?'

I did not respond immediately, because I was trying to see how many steps my feet could climb while I continued to cling to the banister post. Then I asked:

'But what if the detectives are too busy? With all the other things they have to solve? Murders and robberies. They can't do everything.'

I could hear my mother coming back a few steps towards me, and when she next spoke, a careful, deliberate tone had entered her voice.

'Puffin, there is no question whatsoever of the detectives being "too busy". Everyone in Shanghai, the most important people in this community are extremely anxious about Father, and very concerned to have the matter cleared up. I mean gentlemen like Mr Forester. And Mr Carmichael. Even the consul-general himself. I know they've made it their personal concern to see Father return safely as soon as possible. So you see, Puffin, there is no chance at all of the detectives giving anything but their utmost. And that's what they're doing, now, at this very moment. Do you realise, Puffin, Inspector Kung himself has been put in charge of this investigation? Yes, that's right: Inspector Kung. So you see, we've every reason to be hopeful.'

This exchange undoubtedly made some impact, for I remember I did not worry nearly so much during the following several days. Even at nights, when my anxieties tended to return, I would often go to sleep thinking of Shanghai's detectives moving all around the city, closing in ever more tightly on the kidnappers. Sometimes, lying in the dark, I found myself weaving quite elaborate dramas before dropping off to sleep, many of which would then serve as material for Akira and me the next day.

I do not mean to imply, incidentally, that during this period Akira and I did not play games quite unconnected with my father; sometimes we could lose ourselves for hours in one of our more traditional fantasies. But whenever my friend sensed I was preoccupied, or that my heart was not in what we were doing, he would say: 'Old chap. We play father rescue game.'

Our narratives concerning my father had, as I say, endless variations, but fairly quickly we established a basic recurring story-line. My father was held captive in a house somewhere beyond the Settlement boundaries. His captors were a gang intent on extorting a huge ransom. Many smaller details evolved quite rapidly until they too became fixtures. It was always the case, for instance, that despite being surrounded by the horrors of the Chinese district, the house in which my father was held was comfortable and clean. In fact, I can still remember how this particular convention came to be established. It was perhaps our second or third time of trying the game, and Akira and I had been taking it in turns to play the role of the legendary Inspector Kung - whose handsome features and dandily worn hat we both knew well from newspaper photographs. We had been quite absorbed in the excitements of our fantasy, when suddenly, at the point when my father first appeared in our story, Akira gestured to me - indicating that I should play him - and said: 'You tied up in chair.'

We had been in full flow but now I stopped.

'No,' I said. 'My father isn't tied up. How can he be tied up all the time?'

Akira, who never liked to be contradicted when unfolding a narrative, repeated impatiently that my father was tied up in a chair and that I should mimic this at the foot of a tree without further delay. I shouted back: 'No!' and stalked off. I did not, however, leave Akira's garden. I remember standing at the spot where his lawn started - where our 'jungle' ended - and staring blankly at a lizard climbing the trunk of an elm. After a moment I heard Akira's footsteps behind me and braced myself for a full-blown argument. But to my surprise, when I turned to him, I saw my friend gazing at me with a conciliatory look. He came closer and said gently:

'You right. Father not tied up. He very comfortable. Kidnappers' house comfortable. Very comfortable.'

After this it was always Akira who took great care to ensure my father's comfort and dignity in all our dramas. The kidnappers always addressed him as though they were his servants, bringing him food, drink and newspapers as soon as he requested them. Accordingly the characters of the kidnappers softened; it turned out they were not evil after all, simply men with starving families. They truly regretted having to take such drastic action, they would explain to my father, but they could not bear to see their children starve to death. What they were doing was wrong, they knew it, but what else were they to do? They had chosen Mr Banks precisely because his kind views towards the plight of the poorer Chinese were well known, and he was likely to understand the inconvenience to which they were putting him. To this, my father - whom I always represented - would sigh sympathetically, but then go on to say that whatever the hardships of life, crime could not be condoned. Besides, inevitably, Inspector Kung would sooner or later come with his men to arrest them, then they would be thrown into prison, perhaps executed. Where would that leave their families? The kidnappers - represented by Akira - would respond by saying that once the police discovered their hideout, they would give themselves up quietly, and wish Mr

Banks well as he rejoined his family. But until then, they were obliged to do their utmost to make their scheme work. They would then ask my father what he required for his dinner, and I would order on his behalf a vast meal of his favourite dishes - roast sirloin, buttered parsnips and poached haddock always among them. As I say, it was Akira rather than myself who tended to be the more insistent on these luxurious aspects, and it was he who added many of the other small but important details: my father's room would have a fine view over the rooftops to the river; the bed would be one his captors had stolen for him from the Palace Hotel, and thus the ultimate in comfort. In time, Akira and I would become the detectives - though sometimes we played ourselves - until in the end, after the chases, fist-fights and gun-battles around the warren-like alleys of the Chinese districts, whatever our variations and elaborations, our narratives would always conclude with a magnificent ceremony held in Jessfield Park, a ceremony that would see us, one after the other, step out on to a specially erected stage - my mother, my father, Akira, Inspector Kung and I - to greet the vast cheering crowds. This was, as I say, our basic story-line, and I suppose, incidentally, it was more or less the one I enacted over and over during those first drizzly days in England, when I filled my empty hours wandering about the ferns near my aunt's cottage, muttering Akira's lines for him under my breath.

It was not until perhaps a month after my father's disappearance that I finally found the nerve to ask Akira what had happened about Ling Tien's bottle. We had been taking a moment's break from our playing, sitting together in the shade of the maple at the top of our mound, drinking the iced water Mei Li had brought out to us in two tea-bowls. To my relief Akira no longer showed any sign of bitterness.

'Etsuko take back bottle,' he said.

His sister had initially been most obliging. But now, whenever she wanted to force Akira to do something, she would threaten to reveal his secret to their parents. Akira though was not unduly troubled by this ploy.

‘She go to room too. So she just as bad as me. She not tell.’

‘So there wasn’t any trouble,’ I said.

‘No trouble, old chap.’

‘So you won’t have to go and live in Japan.’

‘No Japan.’ He turned to me and smiled. ‘I stay Shanghai for ever.’ Then he looked at me solemnly and asked: ‘If father not found. You must go England?’

This startling notion for some reason had never before occurred to me. I thought it over, then said:

‘No. Even if Father isn’t found, we’ll live here for ever. Mother will never want to go back to England. Besides, Mei Li wouldn’t want to go. She’s a Chinese.’

For a moment, Akira went on thinking, staring at the icecubes floating in his bowl. Then he looked up at me and beamed broadly.

‘Old chap!’ he said. ‘We live here together, always!’

‘That’s right,’ I said. ‘We’ll live in Shanghai for ever.’

‘Old chap! Always!’

There was one other small incident from those weeks following my father’s disappearance which I have now come to believe highly significant. I did not always regard it so; in fact, I had more or less forgotten it altogether when a few years ago, quite by chance, something happened which caused me not only to recall it again, but to appreciate for the first time the deeper implications of what I had witnessed that day.

It was during the period shortly after the Mannering case, when I was undertaking some research into the background of those years I spent in Shanghai. I believe I have mentioned this research before, much of which I conducted in the British Museum. I suppose it was, at least in part, my attempt as an adult to grasp the nature of those forces which as a child I could not have had the chance of comprehending. It was also my intention to prepare my ground for the day I began in earnest my investigations into the whole affair concerning my parents - which despite the continuing efforts of the Shanghai police has remained unresolved to this day. It remains, incidentally, my intention to embark on such an investigation in the not-too-distant future. In fact, I am sure I would have done so already had the demands on my time not been so relentless.

In any case, as I say, I spent a good many hours in the British Museum a few years ago gathering material on the history of the opium trade in China, on the affairs of Morganbrook and Byatt, on the complex political situation in Shanghai at that time. I did also, at various points, write off letters to China seeking information unavailable to me in London. So it was that I received one day a yellowed cutting taken from the North China Daily News dated some three years after my departure from Shanghai. My correspondent had sent me an article about changes to trading regulations in the concession ports - which no doubt I had requested - but it was the photograph which happened to be on the reverse side that immediately captured my attention.

I have kept that old newspaper photograph in the drawer of my desk, inside a tin cigar box, and from time to time I take it out and stare at it. It shows three men in a leafy avenue, standing in front of a grand motor car. All three are Chinese. The two on the outside are wearing Western suits with stiff collars, and hold bowler hats and canes. The plump man in the centre is in traditional Chinese dress: a dark gown, cap and pigtail. As with most newspaper photographs of the time, there is a stagy, posed feeling to it, and my correspondent's scissors have cut off perhaps an entire quarter of it to the left. Nevertheless, from the moment my glance first fell on it, the picture - more precisely, the central figure in the dark gown - has been a source of exceptional interest to me.

Alongside this photograph, in my tin cigar box in the drawer, I keep the letter I received from the same correspondent a month or so afterwards in reply to further enquiries. In it, he informs me that the plump man in the gown and cap is Wang Ku, a warlord who at the time of the photograph wielded much power in the Hunan province, employing a motley army of almost three hundred men. Like most of his sort, he lost much of his power after the ascendancy of Chiang Kai-shek, but was rumoured to be still alive and well, languishing in reasonable comfort somewhere in Nanking. Regarding my specific query, my correspondent states that he has been unable to ascertain whether or not Wang Ku ever had any known connections with Morganbrook and Byatt. In his own opinion, however, there is 'no reason to suppose he would not at some point have had dealings with the aforesaid company'. In those days, my correspondent points out, any shipments of opium - or of any other desirable goods - travelling along the Yangtze through Hunan would have been vulnerable to raids from the bandits and pirates who terrorised the region. Only the warlords through whose territories the shipments travelled could offer any sort of effective protection, and a company like Byatt's almost certainly would have gone some way to securing the friendship of such men. At the time of my childhood in Shanghai, Wang Ku, with the power he then commanded, would have been regarded as a particularly desirable ally. My correspondent's letter closes with his apologies for being unable to provide more concrete details.

As I have said, I did not solicit this information from my correspondent until some five or six weeks after discovering the newspaper picture. The reason for my delay was that annoy-ingly, though I was certain I had seen the plump man somewhere in my past, I could not for a long time remember anything about the context in which I had done so. The man was associated for me with some scene of embarrassment or unpleasantness, but beyond that my memory would yield nothing. Then one morning, quite unexpectedly, as I was strolling along Kensington High Street in search of a taxicab, it all suddenly came back to me.

I had not paid much attention to the plump man when he had first arrived at our house. It was after all only two or three weeks after my father's disappearance and any number of strangers had been coming and going: policemen, men from the British consulate, men from Byatt's, ladies who on entering the house and catching sight of my mother would hold out their arms with a cry of anguish. To these latter, I recall, my mother always responded with a self-possessed smile, and walking up to the lady, would pointedly avoid the embrace, saying instead in her most assured tones something like: 'Agnes, how delightful.' She would then take her guest's hands - perhaps still proffered awkwardly in the air - and lead the way into the drawing room.

In any case, as I say, the arrival of the plump Chinese man that day did not much excite my interest. I remember glancing down from my playroom window and seeing him getting out of his motor car. His appearance on that occasion was, I believe, much as it is in my newspaper picture: dark gown, cap, pigtail. I noticed the car was a vast gleaming affair, and that he had two men to assist him as well as his chauffeur, but even this was not so remarkable; in those days following my father's disappearance, a number of very grand visitors had already turned up at the house. I was, though, vaguely struck by the way Uncle Philip, who had been in the house for the past hour or so, marched out to greet the plump man. They exchanged the most effusive greetings - as though they were the dearest friends - then Uncle Philip led the visitor into our house.

I do not remember what I got up to for the next little while. I did remain in the house - though not on account of the plump man, who, as I say, had not much interested me. In fact when I first heard the commotion downstairs, I remember being surprised the visitor was still with us. Rushing back to my playroom window I saw the motor car still on the carriage track, and the three servants who had stayed in the car - who too had heard the disturbance - hastening out of the vehicle with looks of alarm. Then I saw below me the plump man walking quite calmly towards the car, signalling to his men not to worry. The chauffeur held open the door for the plump man and as he was climbing in, my mother came into view. In fact, it had been her voice that had first sent me rushing to the window. I had been trying to convince myself it was just the same voice she used when angry with me or our servants, but by the time my mother's figure appeared below me, her every word now clearly audible, the effort became pointless. There was something about her that had lost control, something I had never seen before, and yet which I at once registered as something I would have to accept in the wake of my father's disappearance.

She was yelling at the plump man, having actually to be restrained by Uncle Philip. My mother was telling the plump man he was a traitor to his own race, that he was an agent of the devil, that she did not want help of his sort, that if he ever returned to our house, she would 'spit on him like the dirty animal he was'.

The plump man took all this very calmly. He signalled to his men to get in the car, and then, as his chauffeur wound the crank, he smiled from his window almost approvingly towards my mother, as though she were uttering the most gracious of farewells. Then the car was gone and Uncle Philip was persuading my mother to come inside.

By the time they came into the hall, my mother had gone silent. I could hear Uncle Philip saying: 'But we have to pursue every possible avenue, don't you see?' His footsteps followed my mother's into the drawing room, the door closed and I heard no more.

Of course, to see my mother behaving in such a way was most disturbing to me. But if she had found shouting at her visitor a liberation after weeks of keeping her feelings on a tight rein, then I too experienced something similar. It was witnessing her outburst that allowed me, after at least two or three weeks, finally to acknowledge the momentous nature of what had happened to us, and this brought with it a tremendous sense of relief.

I will have to admit, incidentally, that I cannot say with complete certainty that the plump Chinese man I saw that day was one and the same as the man in the newspaper photograph - the man now identified as the warlord Wang Ku. All I can say is that from the moment I first set eyes on the photograph, that face - and it was the face, not the gown, cap and pigtail, which of course could have been those of any Chinese gentleman - struck me unmistakably as one I had seen during the days immediately after my father's disappearance. And the more I have turned that particular incident over in my mind, the more convinced I have become that the man in the photograph was the one who visited our house that day. This discovery I believe to be most significant - one that may well help shed light on my parents' present whereabouts, and prove central to those investigations upon which, as I have said, I intend before long to embark.

Chapter Nine

There is a further aspect to this incident I have just described which I hesitate to mention here, uncertain as I am that there is any substance to it. It has to do with Uncle Philip's manner that day as he tried to restrain my mother in front of our house; and again, something in his voice when he said as they came in: 'But we have to pursue every possible avenue, don't you see?' There was nothing at all concrete I could put my finger on, but then a child is sometimes very receptive to these less tangible things. Anyway, my feeling was that there was something definitely odd about Uncle Philip that day. I do not know why, but I got the distinct impression that on this occasion, Uncle Philip was not on 'our side'; that the intimacy he shared with the plump Chinese man was greater than the one he shared with us; even - and quite possibly this was merely my fancy - that he and the plump man exchanged looks as the car drove off. As I say, I cannot point to anything solid to support these impressions, and it is more than possible I am projecting back certain perceptions in the light of what ultimately occurred with Uncle Philip.

Even today, I find it brings me some pain to remember the way my relationship with Uncle Philip concluded. As I have probably made clear, he had become over the years a figure to idolise, so much so that in the first days after my father's disappearance, I remember contemplating the notion that I need not mind so much since Uncle Philip could always take my father's place. Admittedly, this was an idea I found in the end curiously unconvincing, but my point is that Uncle Philip was a special person for me, and it is no wonder at all I should have lowered my guard that day and followed him.

I say 'lowered my guard' because for some time before that final day, I had been keeping watch over my mother with increasing anxiety. Even when she demanded to be left alone, I continued to keep a careful eye over the room she had gone into, and over the doors and windows through which kidnappers might enter. At nights I lay awake listening to her movements around the house, and always kept close to hand my weapon - a stick with a sharpened end Akira had given me.

However, when I think further about this, I have a feeling that deep down, I still did not at that stage truly believe my fears could be realised. Even the fact that I considered a pointed stick an adequate deterrent to kidnappers - that I often fell asleep fantasising I was locked in combat with dozens of intruders coming up our staircase, whom I would fell one by one with my stick - testifies perhaps to the oddly unreal level at which my fears still operated at that time.

For all that, there is no doubting the anxiety I felt for my mother's safety, and my bewilderment that the other adults had taken no steps at all to protect her. I did not like to let my mother out of my sight during this period, and as I say, I would never have lowered my guard on that day had it been anyone other than Uncle Philip.

It was a sunny, windy morning. I remember watching from the playroom windows the leaves blowing in the front yard over the carriage track. Uncle Philip had been downstairs with my mother since shortly after breakfast, and I had been able to relax for a while, believing as I did that nothing could happen to her while he was with her.

Then midway through the morning I heard Uncle Philip calling me. I went out on to the landing and, looking down over the balcony rail, saw my mother and Philip standing in the hall, gazing up at me. For the first time in weeks I sensed something cheerful about them, as though they had just been enjoying a joke. The front door was ajar and a long streak of sunlight was falling across the hall. Uncle Philip said:

‘Look here, Puffin. You’re always saying you want a piano accordion. Well, I intend to buy you one. I spotted an excellent French model in a window in Hankow Road yesterday. Shopkeeper obviously has no idea what it’s worth. I propose the two of us go and look it over. If it takes your fancy, then it’s yours. Good plan?’

This brought me down the staircase at great speed. I jumped the last four steps and circled round the adults, flapping my arms in impersonation of a bird of prey. As I did so, to my delight, I heard my mother laughing – laughing in a way I had not heard her laugh for a while. In fact it is possible it was this very atmosphere – this feeling that things were perhaps starting to return to what they had been – which played a significant part in causing me to ‘lower my guard’. I asked Uncle Philip when we could go, to which he shrugged and said:

‘Why not now? If we leave it, someone else might spot it. Perhaps someone’s buying it at this moment, even as we speak!’

I rushed to the doorway and again my mother laughed. Then she told me I would have to put on proper shoes and a jacket. I remember thinking of protesting about the jacket, but then deciding not to in case the adults changed their minds, not only about the accordion, but also about this whole light-hearted mood we were enjoying.

I waved casually to my mother as Uncle Philip and I set off across the front courtyard. Then several steps on, as I was hurrying towards the waiting carriage, Uncle Philip grasped me by the shoulder, saying: ‘Look! Wave to your mother!’ despite my already having done so. But I thought nothing of it at the time, and turning as bidden, waved once more to my mother’s figure, elegantly upright in the doorway.

For much of the way, the carriage followed the route my mother and I usually took to the city centre. Uncle Philip was quiet on the journey, which surprised me a little, but I had never before been alone with him in a carriage and assumed this was perhaps his normal custom. Whenever I pointed out to him anything we were passing, he would reply cheerfully enough; but the next moment he would be staring silently once more out at the view. The leafy boulevards gave way to the narrow crowded streets, and our driver began to shout at the rickshaws and pedestrians in our path. We passed the little curio shops in Nanking Road, and I remember craning to see the window of the toy shop on the corner of Kwangse Road. I had just begun to anticipate the smell of rotting produce as we approached the vegetable market, when Uncle Philip suddenly rapped his cane to make the carriage stop.

‘From here, we’ll go on foot,’ he said to me. ‘I know a good short cut. It’ll be much quicker.’

This made perfectly good sense. I knew from experience how the little streets off Nanking Road could become so clogged with people that a carriage or motor car would often not move for five, even ten minutes at a time. I thus allowed him to help me down from the carriage with no argument. But it was then, I recall, that I had my first presentiment that something was wrong. Perhaps it was something in Uncle Philip’s touch as he handed me down; perhaps there was something else in his manner. But then he smiled and made some remark I did not catch in the noise around us. He pointed towards a nearby alley and I stayed close behind him as we pushed our way through the good-humoured throng. We moved from bright sun to shade, and then he stopped and turned to me, right there in the midst of the jostling crowd. Placing a hand on my shoulder, he asked:

‘Christopher, do you know where we are now? Can you guess?’

I looked around me. Then pointing towards a stone arch under which crowds were pressing around the vegetable stalls, I replied: ‘Yes. That’s Kiukiang Road through there.’

‘Ah. So you know exactly where we are.’ He gave an odd laugh. ‘You know your way around here very well.’

I nodded and waited, the feeling rising from the pit of my stomach that something of great horror was about to unfold. Perhaps Uncle Philip was about to say something else – perhaps he had planned the whole thing quite differently – but at that moment, as we stood there jostled on all sides, I believe he saw in my face that the game was up. A terrible confusion passed across his features, then he said, barely audibly in the din:

‘Good boy.’

He grasped my shoulder again and let his gaze wander about him. Then he appeared to come to a decision I had already anticipated.

‘Good boy!’ he said, this time more loudly, his voice trembling with emotion. Then he added: ‘I didn’t want you hurt. You understand that? I didn’t want you hurt.’

With that he spun round and vanished into the crowd. I made a half-hearted effort to follow, and after a moment caught sight of his white jacket hurrying through the people. Then he had passed under the arch and out of my view.

For the next few moments I remained standing there in the crowd, trying not to pursue the logic of what had just occurred. Then suddenly I began to move, back in the direction we had just come, to the street in which we had left the carriage. Abandoning all sense of decorum, I forced my way through the crowds, sometimes pushing violently, sometimes squeezing myself through gaps, so that people laughed or called angrily after me. I reached the street to discover of course that the carriage had long since gone on its way. For a few confused seconds I stood in the middle of the street, trying to form in my head a map of my route back home. I then began to run as fast as I could.

I ran down Kiukiang Road, across the hard uneven stones of Yunnan Road, pushed through more crowds along Nanking Road. When at last I reached Bubbling Well Road, my breath was already coming in gasps, but I was encouraged that I now had left only this one long straight road, relatively free of people.

Perhaps it was because I was conscious of the highly private nature of my fears - or perhaps some profound shift in attitude was already taking place within me - but it did not once occur to me to solicit help from any of the adults I passed, or to try and hail a passing carriage or motor car. I set off at a run down that long road, and even though I soon began to pant pathetically, even though I knew my gait must look appalling to an onlooker, even though the heat and exhaustion reduced me at times to little more than walking pace, I believe I did not stop at all. Then at last I was going past the American consul's residence, and then the Robertsons' house. I turned off Bubbling Well Road into our road and a second wind took me the remaining distance to our gate.

I knew as soon as I turned through our gateway - though there was nothing obvious to tell me so - that I was too late, that the thing had finished long ago. I found the front door bolted. I ran to the back door, which opened for me, and ran through the house shouting for some reason not for my mother, but for Mei Li - perhaps even at that stage, I did not wish to acknowledge the implications of shouting for my mother.

The house appeared to be empty. Then as I was standing bewildered in the entrance hall, I heard a giggling sound. It had come from the library, and as I turned and went towards it, I saw through the half-open door Mei Li sitting at my work table. She was sitting very upright and as I appeared in the doorway, she looked at me and made another giggling sound, as if she were enjoying a private joke and trying to suppress her laughter. It dawned on me then that Mei Li was weeping, and I knew, as I had known throughout that punishing run home, that my mother was gone. And a cold fury rose within me towards Mei Li, who for all the fear and respect she had commanded from me over the years, I now realised was an impostor: someone not in the least capable of controlling this bewildering world that was unfolding all around me; a pathetic little woman who had built herself up in my eyes entirely on false pretences, who counted for nothing when the great forces clashed and battled. I stood in the doorway and stared at her with the utmost contempt.

It is now late - a good hour has passed since I set down that last sentence - and yet here I am, still at my desk. I suppose I have been turning over these recollections, some of which I had not brought to the fore of my mind for many years. But I have also been looking ahead, to the day when I eventually return to Shanghai; to all the things Akira and I will do there together. Of course, the city will have undergone many changes. But then I know Akira would like nothing more than to take me around, showing off all his great knowledge of the city's more intimate reaches. He will know just the right places to eat, to drink, to take a walk; the best establishments where we might go after a hard day, to sit and talk late into the night, swapping stories about all that has happened to us since our last meeting.

But I must now get some sleep. There is much work to be done in the morning, and I must catch up on the time lost this afternoon going about London with Sarah on the upper deck of that bus.

PART THREE

London, 12th April 1937

Chapter Ten

Yesterday, by the time young Jennifer returned from her shopping trip with Miss Givens, the light in my study was already murky. This tall narrow house, bought with my inheritance following my aunt's death, overlooks a square which, while moderately prestigious, catches less sun than any of its neighbours. I watched her from the study window, down in the square, going back and forth from the taxicab, lining up shopping bags against the railings, while Miss Givens searched in her purse for the fare. When eventually they came in, I could hear them quarrelling, and though I shouted a greeting from the landing, decided not to go down. Their quarrel seemed trivial - something about what they had and had not bought - but at that moment I was still excited by the morning's letter - and the conclusions to which it had led me - and I did not want my triumphant mood broken.

By the time I came downstairs, they had long ceased their argument, and I found Jennifer roaming around the drawing room with a blindfold over her eyes, hands outstretched before her.

'Hello, Jenny,' I said, as though spotting nothing unusual about her. 'Did you get all you needed for the new term?'

She was drifting dangerously towards the display cabinet, but I resisted the temptation to call out. She stopped just in time, felt with her hands and giggled.

'Oh, Uncle Christopher! Why didn't you warn me?'

'Warn you? About what?'

'I've gone blind! Can't you tell? I'm blind! Look!'

'Ah yes. So you are.'

I left her groping around the furniture and went through to the kitchen, where Miss Givens was unpacking a bag on to the table. She greeted me politely, but made sure I noticed her glance towards the remains of my lunch abandoned at the far end of the table. Since the departure last week of Polly, our maid, Miss Givens has despised any implication that she should even temporarily undertake such duties.

‘Miss Givens,’ I said to her, ‘there’s something I must discuss with you.’ Then looking over my shoulder, I lowered my voice: ‘It’s something that has an important bearing on Jennifer.’

‘Of course, Mr Banks.’

‘In fact, Miss Givens, I wonder if we might step into the conservatory. As I say, it’s a matter of some significance.’

But just at this moment a crashing noise came from the drawing room. Miss Givens, brushing past me, shouted from the doorway:

‘Jennifer, stop that! I told you this would happen!’

‘But I’m blind,’ came the reply. ‘I can’t help it.’

Miss Givens, remembering I had been addressing her, seemed caught in two minds. In the end, she came back and said quietly: ‘Excuse me, Mr Banks. You were saying?’

‘Actually, Miss Givens, I think we’ll be able to speak more freely this evening after Jennifer has gone to bed.’

‘Very well. I shall come and see you then.’

If Miss Givens had any forebodings about what I wished to discuss, she did not at that stage show it. She gave me one of her unrevealing smiles, before going through to her charge in the drawing room.

It is now almost three years ago that I first heard of Jennifer. I had been invited to a supper party by my old schoolfriend, Osbourne, whom I had not seen for a little while. He was still living in those days on the Gloucester Road, and I met for the first time that night the young woman who has since become his wife. Among his other guests that evening was Lady Beaton, the widow of the well-known philanthropist. Perhaps because the guests were all strangers to me - they spent much of the evening telling jokes about people I knew nothing about - I found myself talking rather a lot to Lady Beaton, so much so that I feared at times I was becoming a burden to her. In any case, it was just after the soup had been served that she began to tell me about a sad case she had recently come across in her capacity as treasurer of a charity concerned with the welfare of orphans. A couple had been drowned in a boating accident in Cornwall two years earlier, and their only child, a girl now of ten, was at present living out in Canada with her grandmother. This old lady was evidently in poor health, rarely went out or received callers.

‘When I was over in Toronto last month,’ Lady Beaton told me, ‘I decided to call on them myself. The poor little thing was miserable, she so misses England. And as for the old lady, she can barely look after herself, never mind a young girl.’

‘Will your organisation be able to help her?’

‘I’ll do my best for her. But we have so many cases, you see. And strictly speaking, she isn’t a priority. After all, she does have a roof over her head and her parents have left her reasonably well provided for. The big thing about this sort of work is not to get too personal about it. But having met the poor girl, one can’t help but get involved. She has such a spirit about her, quite unusual, even though she was clearly so unhappy.’

It is possible she told me a few further things about Jennifer as we continued with the meal. I remember listening politely, but saying little. It was only much later, out in the hall, as the guests were leaving, and Osbourne was appealing to us all to stay a little longer, that I took Lady Beaton to one side.

‘I hope you don’t think this inappropriate,’ I said. ‘But this girl you were telling me of earlier. This Jennifer. I’d like to do something to help. In fact, Lady Beaton, I’d be quite prepared to take her in.’

Perhaps I should not hold it against her that her first reaction was to recoil with a look of suspicion. At least, that is how it appeared to me. Eventually she said:

‘That’s very good of you, Mr Banks. I will, if I may, get in touch with you about the matter.’

‘I’m quite serious, Lady Beaton. I recently came into an inheritance, so I’ll be quite able to provide for her.’

‘I’m sure that’s so, Mr Banks. Well, let us speak further about it.’ With that, she turned to some other guests to exchange boisterous farewells.

But Lady Beaton did indeed get in touch with me less than a week later. Possibly she had been making enquiries about my character; perhaps it was simply that she had had time to think things over; in any case, her attitude had quite changed. Over lunch at the Café Royal, and during our subsequent meetings, she could not have been warmer towards me, and Jennifer duly arrived at my new house just four months after the dinner at Osbourne’s apartment.

She was accompanied by a Canadian nurse named Miss Hunter, who departed again a week later, cheerfully kissing the girl on the cheek and reminding her to write to her grandmother. Jennifer considered carefully the choice of three bedrooms I offered her, and decided on the smallest, because, she said, the little wooden ledge running along one wall would be perfect for her ‘collection’. This, I soon discovered, comprised some carefully selected sea-shells, nuts, dried leaves, pebbles and a few other such items she had gathered over the years. She positioned the objects carefully along the ledge and called me in one day to inspect.

‘I’ve given each a name,’ she explained. ‘I realise that’s a silly sort of thing to do, but I do so love them. One day, Uncle Christopher, when I’m not so busy, I’ll tell you all about each of them. Please will you tell Polly to be extra careful when she cleans along here.’

Lady Beaton came to assist me in conducting the interviews for a nanny, but it was Jennifer herself, eavesdropping on proceedings from the next room, who proved the most decisive influence. She would emerge after each candidate had left to deliver a damning verdict. ‘A complete horror,’ she pronounced of one woman. ‘That’s obvious nonsense about her last charge dying of pneumonia. She poisoned her.’ Of another, she said: ‘We can’t possibly have her. Far too nervous.’

Miss Givens struck me during her interview as dull and rather cold, but for some reason it was she who immediately won Jennifer’s approval, and it must be said, in the two and a half years since then she has amply justified Jennifer’s belief in her.

Almost everyone to whom I introduced Jennifer remarked on how self-possessed she appeared for one who had experienced such tragedy. Indeed, she did have a remarkably assured manner, and in particular a capacity to make light of setbacks which might have brought other girls her age to tears. A good example of this was her reaction concerning her trunk.

She had for some weeks after her arrival made repeated references to her trunk that would arrive by sea from Canada. I remember, for instance, her describing to me once in some detail a wooden merry-go-round someone had made for her that was coming in the trunk. On another occasion, when I had complimented her on a particular costume she and Miss Givens had brought back from Selfridge's, she had looked at me solemnly and said: 'And I have a hair-band to match it perfectly. It's coming in my trunk.'

However, I received one day a letter from the shipping company apologising for the loss of the trunk at sea and offering compensation. When I told Jennifer of this, she first simply stared. Then she gave a light laugh and said:

'Well in that case, Miss Givens and I will just have to go on an enormous spending spree.'

When after two or three days she had still shown no sign of distress over her loss, I felt inclined to have a talk with her, and one morning after breakfast, spotting her wandering about in the garden, went out to join her.

It was a crisp, sunny morning. My garden is not large, even by city standards - a green rectangle overlooked by any number of our neighbours - but it is well laid out and has, despite everything, a pleasing sense of sanctuary. When I stepped down on to the lawn, Jennifer was drifting about the garden with a toy horse in her hand, dreamily walking it along the tops of the hedges and bushes. I remember being rather concerned the toy might be harmed by the dew and was on the verge of pointing this out to her. But in the end, as I came up, I said simply:

'That was rotten luck about your things. You've taken it awfully well, but it must have been a terrible shock.'

'Oh ...' She went on moving her horse carelessly. 'It was a bit of a bore. But I can always get more things with the compensation money. Miss Givens said we could go shopping on Tuesday.'

'All the same. Look, I think you're awfully brave. But there's no need, you know, to put up a show, if you see what I mean. If you want to let your guard down a bit, you should do so. I'm not going to let on to anyone, and neither, I'm sure, is Miss Givens.'

‘It’s all right. I’m not upset. After all, they were just things. When you’ve lost your mother and your father, you can’t care so much about things, can you?’ With that, she gave her little laugh.

This is one of the few instances I can now recall of her mentioning her parents. I laughed too, and saying: ‘I suppose not,’ started to walk back to the house. But then I turned to her again and said:

‘You know, Jenny, I’m not sure that’s true. You might say a thing like that to a lot of people and they’d believe you. But you see, I know it’s not true. When I came from Shanghai, the things that came in my trunk, those things, they were important to me. They remain so.’

‘Will you show them to me?’

‘Show them to you? Well, most of it wouldn’t mean anything to you.’

‘But I love Chinese things. I’d like to see them.’

‘Most of it isn’t Chinese as such,’ I said. ‘Well, what I’m trying to say is that for me, my trunk was special. If it had got lost, I’d have been upset.’

She shrugged and put her horse up to her cheek. ‘I was upset. But I’m not any more. You have to look forward in life.’

‘Yes. Whoever told you that is quite right in a way. All right, as you will. Forget your trunk for now. But remember ...’ I trailed off, not knowing what I had intended to say.

‘What?’

‘Oh nothing. Just remember, if there’s anything you want to tell me, or anything that’s troubling you, I’m always here.’

‘All right,’ she said brightly.

As I stepped back up to the house, I glanced behind me and saw she was roaming about the garden once more, moving her horse in dreamy arcs through the air.

I did not make such promises to Jennifer lightly. At that time, it was my intention entirely to fulfil them, and my fondness for Jennifer only grew in the days that followed. And yet here I am today, planning to desert her; for how long, I do not even know. It is, of course, possible I am exaggerating her dependence on me. If all goes well, moreover, I may well be back in London before the next school holidays and she will hardly notice my absence. And yet, I am obliged to admit, as I was to Miss Givens when she asked me flatly last night, that I may be gone a lot longer. It is this very indefiniteness that betrays my priorities, and I have no doubt Jennifer will not be slow to draw her own conclusions. Whatever brave face she puts on it, I know she will see my decision as a betrayal.

It is not easy to explain how things have come to this. What I can say is that it began some years ago - from well before Jennifer's arrival - as a vague feeling I would get from time to time; a feeling that someone or other disapproved of me, and was only just managing to conceal it. Curiously, these moments tended to occur in the company of the very people whom I might have expected to be most appreciative of my achievements. When talking to some statesman at a dinner, say, or to a police officer, or even a client, I would be suddenly surprised by the coldness of a handshake, a curt remark inserted amidst pleasantries, a polite aloofness just where I might have expected gushing gratitude. Initially, whenever such incidents occurred, I would search my memory for some offence I might inadvertently have caused the particular individual; but eventually I was obliged to conclude that such reactions had to do with something more general in people's perceptions of me.

Because what I am talking of here is so nebulous, it is not easy to recall instances to serve as clear illustrations. But I suppose one example is the odd exchange I had last autumn with the police inspector from Exeter in that gloomy lane outside the village of Coring, in Somerset.

It was one of the most dispiriting crimes I have ever investigated. I did not arrive in the village until four days after the bodies of the children had been discovered in the lane, and the constant rainfall had turned the ditch where they had been found into a muddy stream - making the gathering of relevant evidence no simple affair. None the less, by the time I heard the inspector's footsteps approaching, I had formed a fairly clear view of what had occurred.

'A most disturbing business,' I said to him as he came up to me.

'It's sickened me, Mr Banks,' the inspector said. 'Truly sickened me.'

I had been crouching down examining the hedge, but now rose to my feet, and we stood facing one another in the steady drizzle. Then he said:

'You know, sir, just at this moment, I dearly wish I'd become a carpenter. That's what my father wished of me. I really do, sir. Today, after this, I really do.'

'It's awful, I agree. But one mustn't turn away. We have to see to it justice prevails.'

He shook his head forlornly. Then he said: 'I came out here to ask you, sir, if you'd formed a view of this case. Because you see ...' He looked up at the dripping trees above him, then went on with an effort: 'You see, my own investigations do lead me towards a certain conclusion. A conclusion I'm somewhat loath to reach.'

I looked at him gravely and nodded. 'I fear your conclusion is correct,' I said solemnly. 'Four days ago, this looked to be as horrific a crime as one could imagine. But now, it seems the truth is even more ghastly.'

'How can it be, sir?' The inspector had gone very pale.

'How can such a thing be possible? Even after all these years I can't comprehend such ...' He fell silent and turned away from me.

'Unfortunately, I see no other possibility,' I said quietly. 'It is indeed shocking. It's as if we're looking right into the depths of the darkness.'

'Some madman who was passing, something of that order I could have accepted. But this ... I am still loath to believe it.'

'I fear you must,' I said. 'We must accept it. Because it's what happened.'

'You're sure of it, sir?'

'I'm sure of it.'

He was gazing across the neighbouring fields to the row of cottages in the distance.

'At times like these,' I said, 'I can well understand, one gets very discouraged. But if I may say so, it's well you didn't follow your father's advice. Because men of your calibre, inspector, are rare. And those of us whose duty it is to combat evil, we are ... how might I put it? We're like the twine that holds together the slats of a wooden blind. Should we fail to hold strong, then everything will scatter. It's very important, Inspector, that you carry on.'

He remained silent for another moment. Then when he spoke again, I was rather taken aback by the hardness in his voice.

'I'm just a small person, sir. So I'll stay here and do what I can. I'll stay here and do my best to fight the serpent. But it's a beast with many heads. You cut one head off, three more will grow in its place. That's how it seems to me, sir. It's getting worse. It's getting worse every day. What's happened here, these poor little children ...' He turned around and I could now see fury in his face. 'I'm just a small man. If I was a greater man' - and here, without a doubt, he looked accusingly straight into my eyes - 'if I was a greater man, then I tell you, sir, I'd hesitate no longer. I'd go to its heart.'

'Its heart?'

'The heart of the serpent. I'd go to it. Why waste precious time wrestling with its many heads? I'd go this day to where the heart of the serpent lies and slay the thing once and for all before ... before ...'

He appeared to run out of words and simply stood there glaring at me. I do not remember quite what I said in response. Possibly I muttered something like:

'Well, that would be most commendable of you,' and turned away.

Then there was also that incident from last summer, on the occasion I visited the Royal Geographical Society to hear H. L. Mortimer deliver his lecture. It was a very warm evening. The audience of around a hundred was made up of specially invited figures from all walks of life; I recognised, among others, a Liberal peer and a famous Oxford historian. Professor Mortimer spoke for just over an hour, while the lecture hall grew steadily more stuffy. His paper, entitled:

'Does Nazism pose a threat to Christianity?', was in fact a polemic to argue that universal suffrage had severely weakened Britain's hand in international affairs. When questions were invited at the end, a fairly vigorous argument started up around the room, not about Professor Mortimer's ideas, but concerning the German army's move into the Rhineland. There were passionate voices both condoning and condemning the German action, but I was exhausted that night after weeks of intense work, and made no real effort to follow.

Eventually we were ushered out of the hall into a neighbouring room, where refreshments were being served. The room was not nearly large enough, so that by the time I entered - and I was by no means among the last - people were already squeezed uncomfortably up against one another. A picture I have of that evening is of large, aproned women elbowing their way ferociously through the crowd with their trays of sherry, and of greying, bird-like professors talking in pairs, their heads tilted right back to maintain a civilised speaking distance. I felt it was impossible to remain in such an environment, and was pushing my way towards the exit when I felt a touch on my shoulder. I turned to find smiling at me Canon Moorly, a cleric who had been of invaluable service to me on a recent case, and saw nothing for it but to stop and greet him.

‘What a most fascinating evening it’s been,’ he said. ‘It’s given me so much to think about.’

‘Yes, most interesting.’

‘But I must say, Mr Banks, when I saw you there across the room, I did rather hope you’d say something.’

‘I’m afraid I was feeling rather tired this evening. Besides, virtually everyone else in the room seemed to know so much more about the topic.’

‘Oh, nonsense, nonsense.’ He laughed and tapped me on the chest. Then he leant in closer - perhaps someone behind him had pushed him - so that his face was only inches from mine, and said: ‘To be quite truthful, I was a little surprised you didn’t feel compelled to make an intervention. All this talk of a crisis in Europe. You say you were tired; perhaps you were being polite. All the same, I’m surprised you let it go.’

‘Let it go?’

‘What I mean to say, forgive me, is that it’s quite natural for some of these gentlemen here tonight to regard Europe as the centre of the present maelstrom. But you, Mr Banks. Of course, you know the truth. You know that the real heart of our present crisis lies further afield.’

I looked at him carefully, then said: ‘I’m sorry, sir. But I’m not quite sure what you’re getting at.’

‘Oh come, come.’ He was smiling knowingly. ‘You of all people.’

‘Really, sir, I’ve no idea why you think I should have any special knowledge concerning such things. It’s true, I’ve investigated many crimes over the years, and perhaps I’ve built up a general picture of how certain forms of evil manifest themselves. But on the question of how the balance of power might be maintained, how we can contain the violent conflict of aspirations in Europe, on such things I’m afraid I have no large theory as such.’

‘No theory? Perhaps not.’ Canon Moorly went on smiling at me. ‘But you do have, shall we say, a special relationship to what is, in truth, the source of all our current anxieties. Oh come, my dear fellow! You know perfectly well to what I’m referring! You know better than anyone the eye of the storm is to be found not in Europe at all, but in the Far East. In Shanghai, to be exact.’

‘Shanghai,’ I said lamely. ‘Yes, I suppose ... I suppose there are some problems in that city.’

‘Problems indeed. And what was once just a local problem has been allowed to fester and grow. To spread its poison over the years ever further across the world, right through our civilisation. But I hardly need remind you of this.’

‘I think you’ll find, sir,’ I said, no longer trying to hide my irritation, ‘that I’ve worked hard over the years to check the spread of crime and evil wherever it has manifested itself. But of course I've been able to do so only within my own limited sphere. As for what occurs in faraway places, surely, sir, you can hardly expect me to ...'

'Oh come! Really! '

I might well have lost my patience, but just at this point another clergyman came squeezing through the crowd to greet him. Canon Moorly introduced us, but I quickly took the opportunity to slip away.

There were a number of other such incidents which, if they were not quite so overt, nevertheless built up over a period of time to push me steadily in a certain direction. And then of course, there was the encounter with Sarah Hemmings at the Draycoats' wedding.

Chapter Eleven

It is now already over a year ago. I had been sitting near the back of the church - the bride was not expected for several more minutes - when I saw Sarah come in with Sir Cecil Medhurst on the other side of the nave. Certainly, Sir Cecil did not look appreciably older than when I had last seen him on the evening of the Meredith Foundation banquet in his honour; but the many reports that he had been hugely rejuvenated by his marriage to Sarah appeared to be something of an exaggeration. He looked happy enough, none the less, as he gave jovial waves to people he recognised.

I did not speak to Sarah until after the service. I was strolling around the churchyard amidst the chattering guests, and had paused to admire a flower bed, when suddenly she appeared at my side.

‘Now, Christopher,’ she said. ‘You’re virtually the only one here not to have congratulated me on my hat. Celia Matheson made it for me.’

‘It’s splendid. Really very impressive. And how are you?’

It was the first time we had spoken for some time and I believe we chatted politely for a while as we moved slowly around the fringes of the crowd. Then when we paused again, I asked:

‘And Sir Cecil is well? He’s certainly looking very fit.’

‘Oh, he’s on splendid form. Christopher, you can tell me. Were people utterly horrified I married him?’

‘Horrified? Oh no, no. Why should they be?’

‘I mean, about his being so much older. Of course, no one will say so to us. But you tell me. People were horrified, weren’t they?’

‘As far as I was aware, everyone was delighted. Of course, people were surprised. It was all so sudden. But no, I believe everyone was delighted.’

‘Well then, that only proves what I feared. They must have seen me as an old maid. That’s why they weren’t horrified. A few years ago, I’m sure they would have been.’

‘Really ...’

Sarah laughed at my discomfort and touched my arm. ‘Christopher, you’re so sweet. Don’t worry. Don’t worry about it at all.’ Then she added: ‘You know, you must come and visit. Cecil remembers meeting you, at that banquet. He’d love to see you again.’

‘I’d be delighted.’

‘Oh, but it’s probably too late now. We’re going away, you see. Sailing for the Far East in eight days’ time.’

‘Really. Will you be gone for long?’

‘Might be months. Perhaps even years. Still, you must come and see us when we get back.’

I suspect I was a little lost for words at this news. But just at that moment, the bride and groom came into view across the grass, and Sarah said:

‘Don’t they look so handsome together? And they’re so suited.’ For a moment she gazed at them dreamily. Then she said: ‘I was asking them just now what they wished of the future. And Alison said they just want a little cottage in Dorset, from which neither of them need emerge for years and years. Not until there are children, and they’re getting grey hairs and wrinkles. Don’t you think that’s so wonderful? I do so wish it for them. And it's so wonderful, the way they happened to meet just by chance like that.'

She went on gazing at them as though hypnotised. Eventually she came out of her trance, and I believe we spent a few minutes exchanging news of mutual friends. Then others came to join us, and after a while I drifted away.

I was to encounter Sarah once more, later in the day, at the country house hotel overlooking the South Downs where the reception was held. It was towards the end of that afternoon, and the sun was low in the sky. An unusual amount of drink had been consumed by then, and I remember walking through the hotel past groups of dishevelled guests, scattered across sofas and propped uncertainly in alcoves, until coming out on to the windy terrace I spotted Sarah, leaning against the balustrade, looking out over the grounds. I was walking towards her, when I heard a voice behind me, and saw a stout, red-faced man hurrying across the terrace after me. He grasped my arm, then stood there recovering his breath, looking into my face with a serious expression. Then he said:

'Look, I've been watching. I saw what happened, and I saw them earlier too. It's a disgrace, and as the brother of the groom, I want to extend my apologies to you. Those drunken oafs, I don't know who they are. I'm sorry, old chap, it must have been awfully upsetting.'

'Oh, please don't worry,' I said with a laugh. 'I'm not in the least offended. They've had a little to drink and they were just amusing themselves.'

'It's barbaric behaviour. You're a guest, just as they are, and if they can't be civil, they'll have to go.'

'Well really, I think you've got the wrong end of the stick. They didn't mean anything. In any case, I certainly took no offence. A fellow's got to be able to take a little joke sometimes.'

‘But they’ve been at it all afternoon. I saw them earlier, even at the church. This is my brother’s wedding. I won’t have behaviour of this sort. In fact, I’m going to sort the whole thing out here and now. Come with me, old fellow. We’ll see if they still find you so amusing.’

‘No, look, you don’t understand. If anything, I was enjoying the joke just as much as they were.’

‘But I won’t have it! Far too much of this kind of thing goes on these days. They get away with it more and more, but not today. Not at my brother’s wedding. Come on, you come with me.’

He was tugging at my arm and I saw beads of sweat all over his face. I am not sure what I would have done next, but just then, Sarah came strolling up to us, a cocktail in one hand, and said to the red-faced man:

‘Oh, Roderick, you have got the wrong end of the stick. Those are friends of Christopher’s. Besides, Christopher’s the last person you need to protect.’

The red-faced man looked from one to the other of us. Finally he asked Sarah: ‘Are you sure? Because I’ve seen it go on the whole day. Every time this chap goes anywhere near them ...’

‘You worry too much, Roderick. Those are friends of Christopher’s. If he were in the least bit cross with them, you’d soon know all about it. Christopher’s quite capable of dressing them down himself. In fact, Christopher here could have them cowering, or else eating out of his hand, whatever he pleases, in the wink of an eye. So off you go, Roderick. Go off and enjoy yourself.’

The red-faced man regarded me with a new respect, then in his confusion held out his hand. ‘I’m Jamie’s brother,’ he said, as I took it. ‘Pleased to meet you. If I can do anything, well, you come and find me. I’m sorry if there was some misunderstanding. Well, enjoy yourself.’

We watched him lurch back towards the house. Then Sarah said:

‘Come on, Christopher. Why don’t you come and talk to me for a while.’

She took a sip from her glass and strolled off. I followed her across the terrace until we were at the balustrade, looking out over the grounds.

‘Thank you for that,’ I said eventually.

‘Oh, it’s all part of the service. Christopher, what have you been up to all afternoon?’

‘Oh, nothing much. In fact, I was just thinking. About that night a few years ago, that banquet for Sir Cecil. I was wondering if when you met him that night you had any idea you’d one day ...’

‘Oh, Christopher’ - she cut across my words and I realised she was fairly drunk - ‘I’ll tell you, I can tell you. When I met Cecil that night, I found him very charming. But really, I thought nothing more of him. It was only much later, oh, a year later, even more. Oh yes, I’ll tell you, you’re such a dear friend. I was at this supper and people were talking about Mussolini, and some of the men were saying it wasn’t a joke any more, there could well be another war, even worse than the last one. That’s when someone brought up Cecil’s name. Said we needed people like him more than ever at a time like this, and he really shouldn’t have retired, surely he had plenty of steam left yet. Then someone said, he’s the man to undertake the great mission, and someone else said, no, it’s not fair on him, he’s too old, he’s got no close colleagues left, he doesn’t even have a wife now. And that’s when it came to me. I thought, well, even a great man like that, with all his achievements, he needs someone, someone who’ll make the difference. Someone to help him, at the end of his career, to summon up what’s needed for one last great push.’

She fell quiet for a moment, so I said: 'And it would appear Sir Cecil came to see it that way too.'

'I can be persuasive when I wish to be, Christopher. Besides, he says he fell in love with me right from that time he first saw me, at that banquet.'

'How splendid.'

Below us, down on the grass, some way in the distance, several guests were larking about by the pond. I could see one man, his collar sticking out behind his neck, charging at some ducks. Eventually, I said:

'This business of Sir Cecil making a final push. His crowning achievement. What exactly was it you had in mind for him? Is this why you're going away for months?'

Sarah took a deep breath and her gaze became serious and steady. 'Christopher. You must know the answer.'

'If I knew the answer ...'

'Oh, for goodness' sake. We're going to Shanghai, of course.'

It is hard to describe just what I felt when I heard her say this. Perhaps there was still some element of surprise. But more than anything else, I recall a kind of relief; an odd feeling that from the time I had first laid eyes on her all those years ago at the Charingworth Club, a part of me had been waiting for this moment; that in some sense, my whole friendship with Sarah had always been moving towards this one point, and now at last it had arrived. The few words we then went on to exchange had about them a strangely familiar ring, as though we had rehearsed them somewhere many times already.

'Cecil knows the place well,' she was saying. 'He feels he might be able to help sort things out over there and he felt he should go. So go we shall. Next week. Our bags are virtually packed.'

‘Well, then, I wish Sir Cecil, I wish you both, the very best in accomplishing your mission in Shanghai. Are you looking forward to it? I get the impression you are.’

‘Of course I am. Of course I’m looking forward to it. I’ve waited a long time for something like this. I’m so tired of London and ... and all of this’ - she waved back towards the hotel. ‘I wasn’t getting any younger, and sometimes I thought my chance would never come. But here we are, we’re going to Shanghai. Now, Christopher, what’s the matter?’

‘I suppose this might sound rather feeble to you,’ I said. ‘But I’ll say it anyway. You see, it’s always been my intention to return to Shanghai myself. I mean, to ... to solve the problems there. That’s always been my intention.’

For a moment, she went on gazing out at the sunset. Then she turned and smiled at me, and I thought her smile was full of sadness, and tinged with rebuke. She reached out a hand and touched me gently on the cheek, then turned back to the view again.

‘Perhaps Cecil will solve things quickly in Shanghai,’ she said. ‘Perhaps he won’t. In any case, we might be there a long time. So if what you just said is true, Christopher, then it’s quite possible we shall see you out there. Isn’t it?’

‘Yes,’ I said. ‘Indeed.’

I was not to see Sarah Hemmings again before she set sail. If she had every right to rebuke me for my procrastination over the years, then how much more deserving of her disappointment would I be should I now fail to act? For it is self-evident, whatever progress Sir Cecil has made out in Shanghai during the intervening months, a solution is still nowhere in sight. Tensions continue to mount the world over; knowledgeable people liken our civilisation to a haystack at which lighted matches are being hurled. Meanwhile, here I am, still languishing in London. But with the advent of yesterday's letter, it might be said that the last pieces of the jigsaw have come together. Surely the time has finally arrived for me to go out there myself, to Shanghai, to go there and - after all these years - 'slay the serpent', as that decent West Country inspector put it.

But it will be at some cost. Earlier this morning, as yesterday, Jennifer went out shopping - for a few last items she claims are imperative for the new school term. When she left, she appeared excited and happy; she knows nothing yet of my plans, or of the things Miss Givens and I discussed last night.

I asked Miss Givens into the drawing room and had to invite her to sit down three times before she did so. Perhaps she had an inkling of what I wished to say, and felt that to sit with me would amount to some form of collusion. I laid the situation out to her as best I could; tried to make her understand the vast importance of the case; that it was, moreover, one I had been involved with for many, many years. She listened impassively, and then when I paused, asked her simple question: how long would I be gone? I believe then I talked for some time, trying to explain to her why it was impossible to place a clear time frame on a case of this sort. I have a feeling it was she who interrupted me eventually to raise some query, and after that we spent several minutes on the various practical implications of my going away. It was only after we had discussed these matters fairly exhaustively, and she had risen to leave, that I said to her:

'Miss Givens, I'm fully aware that in the short term, even with your best efforts, my absence will bring difficulties for Jennifer. But I wonder if you've considered that in the longer term, it's almost certainly in our best interests, Jenny's and mine, that I pursue the course I've just outlined to you. After all, how will Jennifer ever be able to love and respect a guardian who she knew had turned away from his most solemn duty when the call finally came? Whatever she may wish for now, she'll come to have only contempt for me when she's older. And what good would that do either of us?'

Miss Givens gazed at me steadily, then said: 'You have a point, Mr Banks.' Then she added: 'But she will miss you, Mr Banks, none the less.'

'Yes. Yes, I dare say so. But Miss Givens, don't you see?' I might have raised my voice at this point. 'Don't you see how very urgent things have got? The growing turmoil all over the world? I have to go!'

'Of course, Mr Banks.'

'I'm sorry. I do apologise. I'm somewhat overwrought tonight. All in all, it's been quite a day.'

'Would you like me to tell her?' Miss Givens asked.

I thought about this, then shook my head. 'No, I'll speak to her. I'll speak to her in good time. I'd appreciate it if you said nothing to her until I've seen her.'

I had intended last night to talk to Jennifer some time today. But on further thought, I feel to do so might be premature; it might, moreover, quite unnecessarily sully her current very positive mood concerning her forthcoming school term. It will be better, all in all, to leave the matter for now, and I will be able to go and see her at her school once I have finalised my arrangements. Jennifer is a child of remarkable spirit, and there is no reason to suppose she would be so devastated just on account of my departure.

I cannot help, though, recalling now that winter's day two years ago when I first visited her at St Margaret's. I had been conducting an investigation not far away, and this still being early in her career at the school, I had decided to call to check that all was well.

The school comprises a large manor house surrounded by several acres of grounds. Behind the house, the lawn slopes down to a lake. Perhaps on account of this latter, on each of the four occasions I have visited the school, I have found mist enveloping the place. Geese wander freely, while sullen gardeners tend to the marshy grounds. It is, by and large, a rather austere atmosphere, though the mistresses, in so far as I have seen them, present a warmer face. On that particular day, I remember a certain Miss Nutting, a kindly woman in her fifties, leading me through the chilly corridors. At one point, she paused by an alcove and, lowering her voice, said to me:

‘All things considered, Mr Banks, she’s settling in as well as can be expected. After all, there are bound to be a few difficulties for her at the start, while the other girls still see her as a newcomer. And one or two of them can be a little cruel sometimes. But by next term, that will all be behind her, I’m sure.’

Jennifer was waiting for me in a large, oak-panelled room where a log was smouldering in the fireplace. The mistress left us, and Jennifer smiled rather shyly from where she was standing in front of the mantelpiece.

‘They don’t keep things very warm here,’ I said, rubbing my hands and moving towards the fire.

‘Oh, you should feel how cold it is in our dorm. Icicles on your sheets!’ She giggled.

I sat down in a chair close to the fire, but she remained standing. I had feared she might feel awkward seeing me in this different context, but she soon began to chat quite freely, about her badminton, the girls she liked, the food, which she said was ‘stew, stew, stew’.

‘It’s sometimes difficult,’ I put in at one point, ‘when you’re new. They’re not ... ganging up on you or anything?’

‘Oh no,’ she said. ‘Well, there’s a bit of teasing sometimes, but they mean nothing by it. They’re all nice girls here.’

We had been talking for twenty minutes or so when I rose to my feet and handed her the cardboard box I had brought in my briefcase.

‘Oh, what’s this?’ she exclaimed excitedly.

‘Jenny, it’s not … it’s not a present as such.’

She caught the warning in my voice, and looked at the box in her hands with a sudden wariness. ‘Then what is it?’ she asked.

‘Open it. See for yourself.’

I watched her remove the lid of the box – roughly the size of a shoe box – and stare inside. Her expression, already cautious, did not change at all. Then she reached in a hand and touched something.

‘I’m afraid,’ I said gently, ‘that’s all I could recover. Your trunk, I discovered, wasn’t lost at sea at all, but stolen along with four others from a London depot. I did what I could, but I fear the thieves simply destroyed what they couldn’t sell easily. I could find no trace of the clothes and such. Just these little things.’

She had brought out a bracelet, and was examining it carefully as though checking for blemishes. She put it back, then took out a pair of tiny silver bells and examined them in the same way. Then she put the lid back on the box and looked at me.

‘It was very kind of you, Uncle Christopher,’ she said quietly. ‘And you must be so busy.’

‘It wasn’t any trouble. I’m just sorry I couldn’t recover any more.’

‘It was very kind of you.’

‘Well, I’d better let you get back to your geography lesson. I didn’t come at a very convenient time.’

She did not move, but continued to stand there quietly, gazing at the box in her hands. Then she said:

‘When you’re at school, sometimes, you forget. Just sometimes. You count the days until the holidays like the other girls do, and then you think you’ll see Mother and Papa again.’

Even in these circumstances, it still came as a surprise to hear her mention her parents. I waited for her to say more but she did not; she simply gazed up at me as though she had just put to me a question. In the end, I said:

‘It’s very difficult sometimes, I know. It’s as though your whole world’s collapsed around you. But I’ll say this for you, Jenny. You’re making a marvellous job of putting the pieces together again. You really are. I know it can never be quite the same, but I know you have it in you to go on now and build a happy future for yourself. And I’ll always be here to help you, I want you to know that.’

‘Thank you,’ she said. ‘And thank you for these.’

As far as I recall, that is how our meeting ended that day. We moved beyond the relative warmth of the fire, across the draughty room and out into the corridor, where I watched her walk away back to her class.

That winter’s afternoon two years ago, I had no idea that my words to her were anything other than well founded. When I next visit St Margaret’s, to say goodbye, we may well meet again in that same draughty room, by that same fire. If so, things will be all the harder for me, for there is little chance Jennifer will fail to remember very clearly our last encounter there. But she is an intelligent girl, and whatever her immediate emotions, she may well understand all that I will say to her. She may even grasp, more quickly than did her nanny last night, that when she is older – when this case has become a triumphant memory - she will be truly glad

I rose to the challenge of my responsibilities.

PART FOUR

*Cathay Hotel, Shanghai,
20th September 1937*

Chapter Twelve

Travellers in the Arab countries have often remarked on the way a native will position his face disconcertingly close during conversation. This, of course, is simply a local custom that happens to differ from our own, and any open-minded visitor will before long come to think nothing of it. It has occurred to me that I should try and view in a similar spirit something which, over these three weeks I have been here in Shanghai, has come to be a perennial source of irritation: namely, the way people here seem determined at every opportunity to block one's view. No sooner has one entered a room or stepped out from a car than someone or other will have smilingly placed himself right within one's line of vision, preventing the most basic perusal of one's surroundings. Often as not, the offending person is one's very host or guide of that moment; but should there be any lapse in this quarter, there is never a shortage of bystanders eager to make good the shortcoming. As far as I can ascertain, all the national groups that make up the community here - English, Chinese, French, American, Japanese, Russian - subscribe to this practice with equal zeal, and the inescapable conclusion is that this custom is one that has grown up uniquely here within Shanghai's International Settlement, cutting across all barriers of race and class.

It took me a good few days to put my finger on this local eccentricity, and to appreciate that it was what lay at the root of the disorientation which threatened to overwhelm me for a time upon first arriving here. Now, although I still find myself occasionally annoyed by it, it is not a thing of undue concern. Besides, I have discovered a second, complementary Shanghai practice to make life a little easier: it appears to be quite permissible here to employ surprisingly rough shoves to get people out of one's way.

Though I have not yet found the nerve to take advantage of this licence myself, I have already witnessed on a number of occasions refined ladies at society gatherings giving the most peremptory pushes without provoking as much as a murmur.

When on my second night here I entered the ballroom on the penthouse floor of the Palace Hotel, I had yet to identify either of these curious practices, and consequently found much of that evening undermined by my frustration with what I then took to be the inordinately crowded nature of the International Settlement. Stepping out of the lift, I had barely glimpsed the plush carpet leading into the ballroom - a row of Chinese doormen lined all along it - when one of my hosts for the evening, Mr MacDonald from the British consulate, put his broad frame before me. As we strode on towards the doorway, I noticed the rather charming way each doorman, as we passed, would bow and bring his white-gloved hands up together. But we were hardly past the third man - there were probably six or seven in all - when even this view was obstructed by my other host, a certain Mr Grayson, representing the Shanghai Municipal Council, who stepped up beside me to continue whatever he had been saying during our ascent in the lift. And I had no sooner entered the room in which, according to my two hosts, we were to witness 'the city's smartest cabaret and a gathering of Shanghai's elite' than I found myself in the midst of a drifting crowd. The tall ceilings above me, with their elaborate chandeliers, led me to suppose the dimensions of the room were pretty vast, though for some time I had no way to corroborate this. As I followed my hosts through the throng, I saw large windows all along one side of the room through which, at that moment, the sunset was streaming in. I glimpsed too a stage at the far end, upon which several musicians in white tuxedos were wandering about talking. They, like everyone else, appeared to be waiting for something - perhaps simply for night to fall. In general there was a restlessness, with people pushing and circling one another to no clear purpose.

I almost lost sight of my hosts, but then saw MacDonald beckoning to me, and I eventually found myself sitting down at a small table with a starched white cover to which my companions had pushed their way. From this lower vantage point I could see that in fact a large expanse of floor had been left vacant - presumably for the cabaret - and that almost all present had squeezed themselves into a relatively narrow strip along the glazed side of the room. The table we were sitting at was part of a long row, though when I tried to see how far the row extended, I was once again thwarted. No one was sitting at the tables immediately neighbouring ours, probably because the jostling crowd made it impractical to do so. Indeed, before long, our table came to feel like a tiny boat assailed on all sides by the tides of Shanghai high society. My arrival, moreover, had not gone unnoticed; I could hear murmurs spreading around me conveying the news, and more and more gazes turned our way.

In spite of all this, until things grew quite impossible, I recall trying to continue the conversation I had started with my hosts in the car bringing us to the Palace Hotel. At one point I remember I was saying to MacDonald:

‘I very much appreciate your suggestion, sir. But in truth, I’m happy to pursue my lines of enquiry alone. It’s how I’m accustomed to working.’

‘As you will, old fellow,’ MacDonald said. ‘Just thought I’d mention it. Some of these fellows I’m talking of, they certainly know their way about this city. And the best of them are as good as anything you’ll find at Scotland Yard. Just thought they might save you, all of us, some valuable time.’

‘But you’ll recall my telling you, Mr MacDonald. I left England only once I’d formed a clear view of this case. In other words, my arrival here isn’t a starting point, but the culmination of many years’ work.’

‘In other words,’ Grayson suddenly put in, ‘you’ve come here to us in order to tie up the case once and for all. How marvellous! It’s wonderful news!’

MacDonald gave the Municipal Council man a disdainful glance, then continued as though the latter had not spoken.

‘I don’t mean to cast any doubt upon your abilities, old fellow. Your record speaks for itself, after all. I was only suggesting a little back-up in the way of personnel. Strictly under your command, naturally. Just, you know, to quicken things up. Having only just got here, it mightn’t be so clear how urgent our situation’s become now. It all looks pretty relaxed here, I know. But I rather fear we don’t have a great deal of time left.’

‘I fully appreciate the urgency, Mr MacDonald. But I can only say again, I’ve every reason to believe things will be brought to a satisfactory conclusion in a relatively short time. Provided, that is, I’m allowed to go about my enquiries unhindered.’

‘That’s splendid news!’ Grayson exclaimed, earning another cold look from MacDonald.

For much of the time I had been in his company that day, I had been growing increasingly impatient with MacDonald’s pretence at being nothing more than a consulate official charged with protocol matters. It was not just his inordinate curiosity concerning my plans – or his eagerness to foist ‘assistants’ on me – that gave him away; it was the air of refined duplicity he carried along with his languid, well-bred manners that marked him out so readily as a senior intelligence man. By that point in the evening, I must have grown weary of humouring him in his charade, for I put my request to him as though the truth had been acknowledged between us long before.

‘Since we’re on the question of assistance, Mr MacDonald,’ I said to him, ‘there is in fact something you might be able to do for me that would be of immense help. '

'Try me, old fellow. '

'As I mentioned before, I have a particular interest in what I believe the police forces here are calling the Yellow Snake killings. '

'Oh yes?' I could see a guardedness falling over MacDonald's face. Grayson, on the other hand, seemed not to know to what I was referring, and looked from one to the other of us.

'In fact' - I went on, looking carefully at MacDonald - 'it was when I'd gathered sufficient evidence on these so-called Yellow Snake killings that I made the decision finally to come here. '

'I see. So you're interested in the Yellow Snake business.' MacDonald glanced about the room nonchalantly.

'Nasty affair. But not all that significant, I wouldn't have thought, in terms of the larger picture. '

'On the contrary. I believe it to be highly relevant. '

'I'm so sorry,' Grayson managed finally to put in.

'But just what are these Yellow Snake killings? I've never heard of them. '

'It's what people are calling these communist reprisals,' MacDonald told him. 'Reds murdering relatives of one of their number who's turned informer on them.' Then he said to me: 'We get this happening from time to time. The Reds are savages in such matters. But it's a matter between the Chinese. Chiang Kai-shek's well on top of the Reds and plans to stay that way, Japanese or no Japanese. We try to keep above it, you know. Surprised you're so interested in all that, old fellow. '

'But this particular set of reprisals,' I said, 'these Yellow Snake killings. They've been continuing for a long time. Off and on for the last four years. During which time thirteen people have to date been murdered. '

'You'll know the details better than me, old fellow. But from what I've heard, the reason the reprisals are protracted is that the Reds don't know who their traitor is. They began by slaughtering the wrong people. A little approximate, you see, this Bolshevik vision of justice. Every time they change their ideas about who this Yellow Snake chap might be, they go out and slaughter another family. '

'It would help things greatly, Mr MacDonald, if I were able to speak to this informer. The man referred to as the Yellow Snake. '

MacDonald shrugged. 'That's all between the Chinese, old fellow. None of us even know who this Yellow Snake is. In my view, the Chinese government would do well to announce his identity before more innocent people get mistaken for his relatives. But honestly, old fellow. It's all between the Chinese. Best leave it that way. '

'It's important I get to speak to the informer. '

'Well, since you feel so strongly about it, I'll have a word with a few people. But I can't promise much. This chap seems pretty useful to the government. Chiang's men keep him pretty well under wraps, I'd imagine. '

I had become aware by this point of ever more people pressing in on all sides, eager not just to glimpse me in the flesh, but to overhear something of our conversation. In such circumstances, I could hardly expect MacDonald to talk frankly, and I decided I should abandon the matter for the time being. In fact, I was overcome at that moment by a strong urge to rise and get a little air, but before I could move, Grayson had leant forward with a cheerful smile, saying:

'Mr Banks, I appreciate this might not be the best time. But I wanted just to have a quick word. You see, sir, I've been charged with the happy task of organising the ceremony. That's to say, the welcoming ceremony.'

'Mr Grayson, I don't wish to seem ungrateful, but as Mr MacDonald here just put it, time is rather pressing. And I feel I've been welcomed already with so much lavish hospitality ...'

'No, no, sir' - Grayson laughed nervously - 'I was referring to the welcoming ceremony. I mean, the one welcoming back your parents after their years of captivity.'

This, I admit, rather took me by surprise and perhaps for a second I just stared at him. He let out another nervous laugh and said:

'Of course, it's somewhat jumping ahead, I realise. You've first to do your work. And of course, I don't wish to tempt fate. All the same, you see, we are obliged to prepare. As soon as you announce the solving of the case, everyone will look to us, the Municipal Council, to provide an occasion worthy of such a moment. They'll want a pretty special event, and they'll want it promptly. But you see, sir, to organise something on the scale we're talking of, it's no simple matter. So you see, I wondered if I could put a few very basic options before you. My first question, sir, before anything else, is if you're happy with the choice of Jessfield Park for the ceremony? We will, you see, require substantial space ...'

While Grayson had been speaking, I had become steadily aware of the sound - from somewhere behind the hubbub of the crowd - of distant gunfire. But now Grayson's words were suddenly cut off by a loud boom which shook the room. I looked up in alarm, only to see all around me people smiling, even laughing, their cocktail glasses still in their hands. After a moment, I could discern a movement in the crowd towards the windows, rather as though a cricket match had resumed outside. I decided to seize the opportunity to leave the table, and rising, joined the drift. There were too many people in front of me to see anything, and I was trying to edge my way forward when I became aware that a grey-haired lady by my shoulder was talking to me.

‘Mr Banks,’ she was saying, ‘do you have any idea at all how relieved we all feel now that you’re finally with us? Of course, we didn’t like to show it, but we were getting extremely concerned about, well’ - she gestured towards the sound of gunfire - ‘my husband, he insists the Japanese will never dare attack the International Settlement. But then you know, he says it at least twenty times a day, and that’s hardly reassuring. I tell you, Mr Banks, when news of your impending arrival reached us, that was the first good news we’d had here in months. My husband even stopped repeating that little mantra of his about the Japanese, stopped for at least a few days. Good heavens!’

Another thunderous explosion had rocked the room, provoking a few ironic cheers. I then noticed that a little way in front of me, some French windows had been opened, and people had pushed out on to a balcony.

‘Don’t worry, Mr Banks,’ a young man said, grasping my elbow. ‘There’s no chance of any of that coming over here. Both sides are extremely careful now after Bloody Monday.’

‘But where’s it coming from?’ I asked him.

‘Oh, it’s the Jap warship in the harbour. The shells actually arc over us and land over there across the creek. After dark, it’s quite a sight. Rather like watching shooting stars.’

‘And what if a shell falls short?’

Not only the young man I was talking to, but several others around me laughed at this idea - I thought rather too loudly. Then another voice said:

‘We’ll have to trust the Japs to get it right. After all, if they get sloppy, they’re just as likely to drop one behind their own lines. '

'Mr Banks, would you care for these?'

Someone was holding out a pair of opera glasses. When I took hold of them, it was as if I had given a signal. The crowd parted before me, and I found myself virtually conveyed towards the open French windows.

I stepped out on to a small balcony. I could feel a warm breeze and the sky was a deep pink. I was looking down from a considerable height, and the canal was visible past the next row of buildings. Beyond the water was a mass of shacks and rubble out of which a column of grey smoke was rising into the evening sky.

I put the glasses to my eyes, but the focus was entirely wrong for me and I could see nothing. When I fiddled with the wheel, I found myself gazing on to the canal, where I was faintly surprised to see various boats still going about their normal business right next to the fighting. I picked out one particular boat - a barge-like vessel with a lone oarsman - that was so piled up with crates and bundles it seemed impossible for it to pass under the low canal bridge just beneath me. As I watched, the vessel approached the bridge rapidly, and I was sure I would see at least a crate or two fall from the top of the pile into the water. For the next few seconds, I went on staring through the glasses at the boat, having quite forgotten the fighting. I noted with interest the boatman, who like me was utterly absorbed by the fate of his cargo and oblivious of the war not sixty yards to his right. Then the boat had vanished under the bridge, and when I saw it glide gracefully out the other side, the precarious bundles still intact, I lowered the glasses with a sigh.

I realised a large crowd had been gathering at my back while I had been looking on to the canal. I handed the glasses to someone nearby and said to no one in particular:

‘So that’s the war. Most interesting. Are there many casualties, do you suppose?’

This set off a lot of talking. A voice said: ‘Plenty of death over there in Chapei. But the Japs will have it in a few more days and it’ll go quiet again.’

‘Wouldn’t be so sure,’ someone else said. ‘The Kuomintang’s surprised everyone so far, and my bet is they’ll keep doing so. I’d bet on them holding out a good while yet.’

Then everyone around me seemed to start arguing at once. A few days, a few weeks, what difference did it make? The Chinese would have to surrender sooner or later, so why did they not do so now? To which several voices objected that the conclusion was not nearly so cut and dried. Things were changing by the day, and there were many factors each impinging on the others.

‘And besides,’ someone asked loudly, ‘hasn’t Mr Banks turned up?’

This question, obviously intended to be rhetorical, nevertheless hung oddly in the air, causing a hush to fall and all eyes to turn to me once more. In fact, I got the idea that it was not only the immediate group around the balcony, but the entire ballroom that had fallen into silence and was awaiting my response. It struck me that this was as good a time as any to make an announcement - one that perhaps had been called for from the moment I had entered the room - and clearing my throat, I declared loudly:

‘Ladies and gentlemen. I can well see the situation here has grown rather trying. And I have no wish to raise false expectations at such a time. But let me say that I would not be here now if I were not optimistic about my chances of bringing this case, in the very near future, to a happy conclusion. In fact, ladies and gentlemen, I would say I am more than optimistic. I beg then for your patience over this coming week or so. After that, well, let us see what we have achieved. '

As I uttered these last words, the jazz orchestra suddenly started up within the ballroom. I have no idea if this was simply a coincidence, but in any case the effect was to round off my statement rather nicely. I felt the focus of the room shifting away from me, and saw people starting to return inside. I too made my way back into the room, and as I tried to find our table again - I had for a moment lost my bearings somewhat - I noticed that a troupe of dancing girls had taken the floor.

There were perhaps as many as twenty dancers, many of them 'Eurasians', dressed skimpily in matching outfits with a bird motif. As the dancers proceeded with their floor show, the room seemed to lose all interest in the battle across the water, though the noises were still clearly audible behind the cheery music. It was as though for these people, one entertainment had finished and another had begun. I felt, not for the first time since arriving in Shanghai, a wave of revulsion towards them. It was not simply the fact of their having failed so dismally over the years to rise to the challenge of the case, of their having allowed matters to slip to the present appalling level with all its huge ramifications. What has quietly shocked me, from the moment of my arrival, is the refusal of everyone here to acknowledge their drastic culpability. During this fortnight I have been here, throughout all my dealings with these citizens, high or low, I have not witnessed - not once - anything that could pass for honest shame. Here, in other words, at the heart of the maelstrom threatening to suck in the whole of the civilised world, is a pathetic conspiracy of denial; a denial of responsibility which has turned in on itself and gone sour, manifesting itself in the sort of pompous defensiveness I have encountered so often. And here they now were, the so-called elite of Shanghai, treating with such contempt the suffering of their Chinese neighbours across the canal.

I was moving along the line of backs that had formed to watch the cabaret, trying to contain my sense of disgust, when I realised someone was tugging on my arm and turned to find Sarah.

‘Christopher,’ she said, ‘I’ve been trying to get over to you all evening. Have you no time to say hello to your old friends from home? Look, Cecil’s over there, he’s waving to you.’

It took me a little while to get a view of Sir Cecil through the crowd; he was seated alone at a table in a far corner of the room, and indeed was waving to me. I waved back, then looked at Sarah.

It was our first encounter since my arrival. The impression I received of her that evening was that she seemed very well; the Shanghai sun had removed her customary pallor to some advantage. Moreover, as we exchanged a few friendly words, her manner remained light-hearted and assured. It is only now, after the events of last night, that I find myself thinking over again that first encounter, in an attempt to discover how I could have been so deceived. Perhaps it is only hindsight that makes me recall something overly deliberate in her smile, particularly whenever she mentioned Sir Cecil. And although we exchanged little more than pleasantries, after last night, one phrase she uttered that evening - which even at the time rather puzzled me - has continued to return to me all day.

I had been enquiring how she and Sir Cecil had enjoyed the year they had spent here. She had been assuring me that although Sir Cecil had not achieved the breakthrough he had hoped for, he had none the less done much to earn the gratitude of the community. It was then that I had asked, with nothing much in mind:

‘So then you’ve no immediate plans to leave Shanghai?’

At which Sarah had laughed, cast another gaze towards Sir Cecil's corner, and said: 'No, we're quite settled for now. The Metropole's very comfortable. I don't expect we'll be going anywhere in a hurry. Not unless someone comes to the rescue, that is.'

She had said all this - including this last remark about being rescued - as though telling a joke, and although I did not know exactly what she meant, I had responded with a small laugh to go with hers. We had then, as far as I recall, talked about mutual friends in England until Grayson's arrival effectively put an end to a seemingly uncomplicated conversation.

It is only now, as I say, after last night, that I find myself searching back through my various encounters with Sarah over these three weeks, and it is this one phrase, added as a kind of afterthought to her breezy reply, to which I continue to return.

Chapter Thirteen

I spent most of the afternoon yesterday inside the dark, creaking boathouse where the three bodies had been discovered. The police respected my wish to carry out my investigations undisturbed to the extent that I lost all track of time and hardly noticed the sun setting outside. By the time I crossed the Bund and strolled down Nanking Road, the bright lights had come on and the pavements were filled with the evening crowds. After the long, dispiriting day, I felt the need to unwind a little and made my way to the corner of Nanking and Kiangse Road, to a small club I had been taken to in the days soon after my arrival. There is nothing so special about the place; it is just a quiet basement where most nights a lone French pianist will give melancholy renditions of Bizet or Gershwin. But it meets my needs well enough and I have returned there several times over these weeks. Last night, I spent perhaps an hour at a corner table, eating a little French food and making notes on what I had discovered in the boathouse, while the taxi-dancers swayed with their clients to the music.

I had climbed the staircase back up to the street intending to return to the hotel, when I happened to fall into conversation with the Russian doorman. He is some sort of count, and speaks excellent English learnt, he tells me, from his governess before the Revolution. I have got into the habit of passing a few words with him whenever I visit the club, and was doing so again last night when - I no longer remember what we were discussing - he happened to mention that Sir Cecil and Lady Medhurst had passed by earlier in the evening.

‘I suppose,’ I remarked, ‘they were off home for the night.’

At this, the count thought for a moment, then said: 'Lucky Chance House. Yes, I believe Sir Cecil mentioned they were on their way there.'

It was not an establishment I knew, but the count proceeded without prompting to give me directions, and since it was not far, I set off towards it.

His instructions were clear enough, but I am still uncertain of my way around the side-streets off Nanking Road, and managed to get a little lost. This was not something I minded so much. The atmosphere in that part of the city is not intimidating, even after dark, and although I was accosted by the odd beggar, and at one point a drunken sailor collided with me, I found myself drifting with the night-time crowd in a mood not far from tranquillity. After the depressing work in the boathouse, it was a relief to be amidst these pleasure-seekers of every race and class; to have the smells of food and incense come wafting towards me as I passed each brightly lit doorway.

Last night, too, as I have come increasingly to do of late, I believe I looked about me, scanning the faces in the passing crowd, hoping to spot Akira. For the fact is, I had almost certainly seen my old friend shortly after my arrival in Shanghai - on my second or third night here. It was the night Mr Keswick of Jardine Matheson and some other prominent citizens had decided I should 'taste the night-life'. I was still at that stage in something of a disorientated condition, and was finding the tour of dance-bars and clubs tiresome. We were in the entertainment area of the French Concession - I can see now my hosts were rather enjoying shocking me with some of the more lurid establishments - and we were just emerging from a club when I had seen his face go by in the crowd.

He was one of a group of Japanese men dressed in sharp suits, evidently out on the town. Of course, glimpsed so fleet-ingly - the figures had been virtually silhouettes against a row of lanterns hanging in a doorway - I could not be completely sure it was Akira. Perhaps for this reason, perhaps for some other, I did nothing to attract the attention of my old friend. This might be hard to understand, but I can only say it was so. I suppose I was assuming then there would be many more such opportunities; perhaps I felt that to meet in such a way, by chance, when we each had other companions, was inappropriate - unworthy, even, of the reunion I had anticipated for so long. In any case, I had let the moment pass, and had simply followed Mr Keswick and the others to the awaiting limousine.

Over these past weeks, however, I have had much cause to regret my inaction that evening. For although, even at the busiest times, I have persisted in searching the crowd, in streets or in hotel lobbies, as I have gone about my business, I have yet to spot him again. I am aware I could take active steps to try and locate him; but really, the case must for now take priority. And Shanghai is not such a vast place; we are sure to happen upon one another sooner or later.

But to return to the events of last night. The doorman's directions eventually brought me to a kind of square where a number of little streets intersected and the crowd was thicker than ever. There were people trying to sell things, others trying to beg, while yet others were just standing about talking and watching. A lone rickshaw that had ventured into the throng had become stuck in its midst, and as I passed, the rickshawman was arguing furiously with a bystander. I could see Lucky Chance House on the far corner, and before long was being conducted up a narrow stairway covered in scarlet plush.

I first entered a room the size of an average hotel room, where a dozen Chinese were crowded around a gaming table. When I enquired if Sir Cecil was in the building, two of the staff conferred quickly, then one of them signalled for me to follow.

I was led up another flight of stairs, along a dim corridor, then into a room filled with smoke in which a group of Frenchmen were playing cards. When I shook my head, the man shrugged and beckoned me again. In this way I soon established that the building was a gambling emporium of some size, comprising many smallish rooms, each with some game or other in progress. But I grew exasperated at the way my guide would nod knowingly each time I repeated Sarah or Sir Cecil's name, just to lead me into yet another smoky room where only the wary eyes of strangers would look up at me. In any case, the more I saw of the establishment, the more unlikely it seemed Sir Cecil would bring Sarah into such a place, and I was on the point of giving up when I stepped through a door to find Sir Cecil sitting at a table, staring at a roulette wheel.

There were as many as twenty people present, mostly men. The room was not so smoky as some others, but felt hotter. Sir Cecil was utterly absorbed and gave me only the most cursory of waves before fixing his eyes back on the wheel.

Placed around the periphery of the room were some worn armchairs covered in a reddish material. In one of these, an old Chinese man - in a Western suit and drenched in sweat - was snoring away. The only other chair occupied was in the shadowy corner furthest from the gaming table, where Sarah was resting her head on the heel of a hand, her eyes half-closed.

She gave a start when I sat down beside her. 'Oh, Christopher. What are you doing here?'

'I was just passing by. I'm sorry. I didn't mean to startle you.'

'Just passing by? This place? I don't believe it. You've been pursuing us.'

We were speaking in lowered tones so as not to distract the players at the table. From somewhere in the building, I could hear faintly someone practising a trumpet.

‘I have to confess,’ I said, ‘I did happen to hear you’d come here. And since I was walking past ...’

‘Oh, Christopher, you were lonely.’

‘Hardly. But I’ve had rather a gloomy day, and I felt like unwinding a little, that’s all. Though I must admit, I’d have hesitated if I’d known you were in a place like this.’

‘Don’t be cruel. Cecil and I, we enjoy being low-life. It’s fun. It’s all part of what Shanghai’s about. Now tell me about your gloomy day. You’re looking despondent. No breakthrough yet on your case, I suppose.’

‘No breakthrough, but I’m not despondent. Things are starting to take shape.’

When I then began to describe to her how I had spent over two hours on my hands and knees in a rotting boat in which three decaying corpses had been found, she pulled a face and stopped me.

‘It’s all so ghastly. Someone was saying at the tennis club today, the bodies all had their arms and legs cut off. Is that true?’

‘I’m afraid so.’

She pulled another face. ‘It’s too ghastly for words. But these were Chinese factory workers, weren’t they? Surely, they can’t have much to do with ... with your parents.’

‘Actually, I believe this crime has a very significant bearing on my parents’ case.’

‘Really? They were saying at the tennis club these murders are all part of this Yellow Rat business. They’re saying the victims were the Yellow Rat’s nearest and dearest.’

‘Yellow Snake.’

‘Pardon?’

‘The communist informer. Yellow Snake.’

‘Oh yes. Well anyway, it’s so ghastly. What are the Chinese doing, tearing at each other’s throats at a time like this? You’d think the Reds and the government might put up a united front against the Japanese just for a little while at least.’

‘I suppose hatred between communists and nationalists runs pretty deep.’

‘That’s what Cecil says. Oh, look at him, how can he play like that?’

I followed her gaze and saw that Sir Cecil – who had his back to us – had slumped over to one side, so that most of his weight was on the table. There seemed every possibility of his sliding off the chair altogether.

Sarah looked at me a little awkwardly. Then rising, she went over to him, placed a hand on each of his shoulders, and spoke gently into his ear. Sir Cecil came awake and glanced about him. It is possible that at this point I took my gaze off them for a second, for I am not at all certain about what exactly happened next. I saw Sarah reel back, as though she had been struck, and for a second she seemed about to lose her balance, but then recovered. Sir Cecil, when I scrutinised his back, was sitting upright again, concentrating on the game, and I could not say it was he who had caused Sarah to stumble.

She saw me staring at her, and smiling, came back and sat down beside me again.

‘He’s tired,’ she said. ‘He has so much energy. But at his age, he really needs to rest more.’

‘Do the two of you often come to this place?’

She nodded. 'And a few others very similar. Cecil doesn't much like those big glittering places. He doesn't think it's possible to come out a winner in those places.'

'Do you always accompany him on these expeditions?'

'Someone has to look after him. He's not a young man, you see. Oh, I don't mind it. It's rather exciting. It's what this city's all about really.'

A collective sigh went around the gaming table and the players broke into conversation. I saw Sir Cecil attempt to rise, and only then did I realise how inebriated he was. He slumped back down in the chair, but on a second attempt, managed to rise and come unsteadily towards us. I stood up, expecting to shake hands, but he rested his hand on my shoulder, as much for balance as anything else, saying:

'My dear boy, my dear boy. Delighted to see you.'

'Did you have any luck just now, sir?'

'Luck? Oh no, no. Tonight's been a foul night. Whole wretched week, it's been bad, bad, bad. But you never know. I'll rise up again, ha ha! Rise from the ashes.'

Sarah too was on her feet and put out a hand to support him, but he brushed her off without looking at her. Then he said to me:

'I say. Care for a cocktail? There's a bar downstairs.'

'That's very kind, sir. But I really should be getting back to my hotel. Another hard day tomorrow.'

'Good to see you're working hard. Of course, I came out here to this city wanting to sort things a little myself. But you see' - he bent his face right down to me until it was only an inch or two away - 'too deep for me, my boy. Too deep by far.'

'Cecil, darling, let's go home now.'

‘Home? You call that rat-hole of a hotel home? You have an advantage on me, my dear, being the vagabond that you are. That’s why you don’t mind it.’

‘Let’s go now, darling. I’m tired.’

‘You’re tired. My little vagabond’s tired. Banks, do you have a car outside?’

‘I’m afraid not. But if you like I’ll try and find a taxi.’

‘Taxi? Think you’re in Piccadilly? Suppose you can hail a cab out there? Just as soon cut your throat, these Chinamen.’

‘Cecil, darling, please sit down here while Christopher finds Boris.’ Then she said to me: ‘Our driver should be somewhere not far. Would you mind terribly? Poor Cecil’s a little the worse for wear tonight.’

Doing my best to look good-humoured, I made my way out of the building, making a mental note of how to return to the room. The square outside was as dense as ever with people, but a little further on I could see a street in which rickshaws and motor cars were waiting in rows. I made my way over, and after a while of going from car to car uttering Sir Cecil’s name at chauffeurs of varying nationalities, I eventually got a response.

When I returned to the gambling house, Sarah and Sir Cecil were already outside. She was supporting him with both her hands, but his tall, bent form looked likely to overwhelm her at any second. As I came hurrying up, I could hear him saying:

‘It’s you they don’t like in there, my dear. When I used to frequent this place by myself, they always treated me like royalty. Oh yes, like royalty. Don’t like women of your sort. They only want real ladies or else whores. And you’re neither. So you see, they don't like you one bit. Never had any trouble here until you insisted on tagging along.'

'Come along, darling. Here's Christopher. Well done, Christopher. Look, darling, he's found Boris for us.'

It was not a great distance to the Metropole, but the car could often move at no more than a crawl through the pedestrians and rickshaws. Throughout the journey, Sarah continued to hold Sir Cecil by the arm and shoulder while he drifted in and out of sleep. Whenever he came round, he would try to shake Sarah off, but she would laugh and continue to hold him steady in the lurching vehicle.

It was my turn to assist him as we negotiated the revolving doors of the Metropole, and then the lift, while Sarah exchanged cheerful greetings with the lobby staff. Then we were finally up in the Medhursts' suite and I was able to lower Sir Cecil into an armchair.

I thought he would doze off, but instead he grew suddenly alert again and began asking me some meaningless questions of which I could make neither head nor tail. Then when Sarah emerged from the bathroom with a flannel and began to mop his forehead, he said to me:

'Banks, my boy, you can speak frankly. This wench here. As you see, she's a good few years younger than me. No spring chicken herself, mind you, ha ha! But still, a good few years my junior. Tell me frankly, my boy, do you suppose, in a place like tonight's, where you found us tonight, a place like that, do you suppose a stranger looking at the two of us together ... Well, let's speak frankly! What I'm asking you is, do you suppose people take my wife for a harlot?'

Sarah's expression, as far as I could see it, did not change, though a slight urgency entered her ministrations, as though she hoped the treatment would bring a change of mood. Sir Cecil waved his head in irritation as though avoiding a fly, then said:

‘Come on, my boy. Do speak frankly now.’

‘Now, now, darling,’ Sarah said quietly. ‘You’re being unpleasant.’

‘I’ll tell you a secret, my boy. I’ll tell you a secret. I rather enjoy it. I like people to mistake my wife for a harlot. That’s why I like to frequent places like that one tonight. Get off me! Leave me alone!’ He pushed Sarah aside, then continued: ‘Other reason I go, of course, no doubt you guessed it, I owe a little money. Run up bit of a debt, you know. Nothing I won’t win back, of course.’

‘Darling, Christopher’s been very kind. You mustn’t bore him.’

‘What’s the harlot saying? Hear what she said, my boy? Well, don’t. Don’t listen to her. Don’t listen to trollops, that’s what I say. They’ll lead you astray. Particularly in times of war and conflict. Never listen to a trollop in times of war.’

He climbed to his feet unaided, and for a moment stood swaying before us in the middle of the room, his unfastened collar sticking out from his neck. Then he moved off into the bedroom, closing the door behind him.

Sarah gave me a smile, then went in after him. Had it not been for that smile – or rather, something like an appeal I detected behind it – I would certainly have withdrawn at that point. As it was, I remained in the room, examining absent-mindedly a Chinese bowl on a stand near the entrance. For a time, I could hear Sir Cecil shouting something; then there was silence.

Sarah emerged after perhaps five minutes and looked surprised to find me still there.

‘Is he all right?’ I asked.

‘He’s asleep now. He’ll be fine. I’m sorry you were inconvenienced, Christopher. Hardly what you were seeking when you came looking for us this evening. We'll arrange something to make up. We'll take you out to dinner somewhere. Astor House has good food still.'

She was guiding me out of the room, but I turned at the door and said:

'This sort of thing. Does it happen a lot?'

She gave a sigh. 'Often enough. But you mustn't think I mind. It's just that I do worry sometimes. About his heart, you know. That's why I always go with him now.'

'You look after him well.'

'You mustn't get the wrong impression. Cecil's a dear man. We must take you out to dinner very soon. When you're not busy. But I suppose you're always busy.'

'Is this how Sir Cecil tends to pass all his evenings?'

'Most of them. Some of his days too.'

'Is there anything at all I can do?'

'Anything you can do?' She gave a light laugh. 'Look, Christopher, I'm fine. Really, you mustn't get the wrong impression about Cecil. He's a dear. I ... I do love him so.'

'Well, then, I'll say goodnight.'

She took another step towards me and raised a hand vaguely. I found myself grasping it, but not quite knowing what to do next, kissed the back of it. Then, mumbling another goodnight, I stepped into the corridor.

'You're not to worry about me, Christopher,' she whispered from the door. 'I'm perfectly all right.'

Those were her words to me last night. But today, it is those earlier words of hers, uttered three weeks ago when I first saw her at the ballroom of the Palace Hotel, that return to me with particular pertinence. 'I don't expect we'll be going anywhere in a hurry,' she had said. 'Unless someone comes to the rescue.' What could she have intended by making such a remark to me that evening? As I say, even at the time it puzzled me, and I may well have quizzed her further about it had not Grayson, just at that moment, emerged out of the crowd, looking for me.

PART FIVE

*Cathay Hotel, Shanghai,
29th September 1937*

Chapter Fourteen

I mishandled my meeting this morning with MacDonald at the British consulate, and recalling it tonight only fills me with frustration. The fact is, he had prepared himself well and I had not. Time and again, I allowed him to lead me down false avenues, to waste my energy arguing over things he had decided to concede to me from the start. If anything, I was further forward with him four weeks ago, that evening at the ballroom of the Palace Hotel, when I first put to him this notion of an interview with the Yellow Snake. I had caught MacDonald unawares then, and had at least got him to admit, in so many words, his true role here in Shanghai. This morning, however, I had not obliged him even to relinquish his charade of being simply an official charged with protocol matters.

I suppose I underestimated him. I had thought it simply a matter of going in and reprimanding him for his slow progress in arranging what I had requested. Only now do I see how he laid his traps, realising that once I became annoyed, he would easily get the better of me. It was foolish to show my irritation in the way I did; but these continuous days of intense work have left me tired. And of course, there was the unexpected encounter with Grayson, the Municipal Council man, as I was going up to MacDonald's office. In fact, I would say it was this more than anything else which threw me off balance this morning, to the extent that for much of my subsequent discussion with MacDonald, my mind was actually elsewhere.

I had been kept waiting for several minutes in the little lounge on the second floor of the consulate building. The secretary finally came to inform me MacDonald was ready, and I had crossed the marbled landing and was standing before the lift doors when Grayson came hurrying down the staircase, calling to me.

‘Good morning, Mr Banks! I’m so sorry, perhaps this isn’t the best time.’

‘Good morning, Mr Grayson. As a matter of fact, it isn’t ideal. I was just on my way up to see our friend Mr MacDonald.’

‘Oh well then, I won’t keep you. It’s just that here I was in the building and I heard you were here too.’ His cheerful laugh echoed around the walls.

‘It’s splendid to see you again, Mr Grayson. But just now ...’

‘I won’t keep you a second, sir. But if I may, you see, you’ve been a little difficult to track down recently.’

‘Well, Mr Grayson, if it can be dealt with very briefly.’

‘Oh very briefly. You see, sir, I realise this may seem like jumping ahead, but a certain amount of forward planning is required in these matters. If things aren’t up to scratch at such an important event, if things look even a little shoddy or amateurish ...’

‘Mr Grayson ...’

‘I’m so sorry. I just wished to have your thoughts on a few details concerning the welcome reception. We’ve now settled on Jessfield Park as the venue. We shall erect a marquee with a stage and public address system ... I’m so sorry, I’ll come to the point. Mr Banks, I really wished to discuss with you your own role in the proceedings. Our feeling is that the ceremony should be kept simple. What I had in mind was that perhaps you would say a few words concerning how you went about solving the case. Which vital clues finally led you to your parents, that sort of thing. Just a few words, the crowd would be so delighted. And then at the end of your speech, I thought they might care to come out on to the stage. '

'They, Mr Grayson?'

'Your parents, sir. My idea was that they might come on to the platform, wave, acknowledge the cheers, then withdraw. But of course, this is no more than an idea. I'm sure you'll have some other excellent suggestions ...'

'No, no, Mr Grayson' - I suddenly felt a great weariness coming over me - 'it all sounds splendid, splendid. Now, if that's all. I really must ...'

'Just one other thing, sir. A small matter, but one that might lend a most effective touch if pulled off just so. My idea was that at the moment your parents come out on to the platform, the brass band should strike up. Perhaps something like "Land of Hope and Glory". Some of my colleagues are less keen on this idea, but to my mind ...'

'Mr Grayson, your idea sounds a marvellous one. What's more, I'm exceedingly flattered by your utter confidence in my ability to solve this case. But now, please, I'm keeping Mr MacDonald waiting. '

'Of course. Well, thank you so much for taking the time to talk to me. '

I pressed the button for the lift, and while I stood waiting, Grayson continued to hover. I had actually turned away from him to face the doors, when I heard him say:

'The only other thing I wondered about, Mr Banks. Have you any idea where your parents will be staying on the day of the ceremony? You see, we shall need to ensure they're conveyed to and from the park with minimum bother from the crowds. '

I cannot remember what I said to him in reply. Perhaps the lift doors opened at that moment, and I was able to take my leave of him with nothing more than a cursory response.

But it was this last question which hung in my mind throughout my meeting with MacDonald, and which, as I say, probably did more than anything else to prevent me thinking clearly about the matter in hand. And tonight, again, now that the demands of the day are behind me, I find this same question returning to my mind.

It is not that I have given no thought at all to the matter of where my parents should eventually be accommodated. It is just that it has always seemed to me premature - perhaps even 'tempting fate' - to contemplate such questions while the great complexities of the case have still to be unravelled. I suppose the only occasion over these past weeks when I gave the matter any real thought was on that evening I met up with my old schoolfriend, Anthony Morgan.

It was not long after my arrival here - my third or fourth night. I had known for some time that Morgan was living in Shanghai, but since we had never been especially friendly at St Dunstan's - despite our being in the same class throughout - I had made no special arrangements to meet up with him. But then I received from him a telephone call on the morning of that third day. I could tell he was rather hurt at my failure to get in touch, and eventually found myself agreeing to a rendezvous that evening in a hotel in the French Concession.

It was well after dark when I found him waiting in the dimly lit hotel lounge. I had not laid eyes on him since school and was shocked by how worn and heavy-set he had become. But I tried to keep any such impression out of my voice as we exchanged warm greetings.

'Funny,' he said, patting me on the back. 'Doesn't seem so long ago. And yet in some ways, it feels like another age.'

'It certainly does.'

‘Do you know,’ he went on, ‘I got a letter the other day from Emeric the Dane? Remember him? Emeric the Dane! Hadn’t heard from him in years! Living in Vienna now, it seems. Old Emeric. You remember him?’

‘Yes, of course,’ I said, though I could summon only the vaguest memory of such a boy. ‘Good old Emeric.’

For the next half-hour or so, Morgan chattered on with hardly a break. He had come out to Hong Kong straight after Oxford, then moved to Shanghai eleven years ago after securing a position at Jardine Matheson. Then at one point he broke off his story to say:

‘You wouldn’t believe the God-awful trouble I’ve been having with chauffeurs since all this trouble started. Regular one got killed the first day the Japs started shelling. Found another man, turned out to be a bandit of some sort. Kept having to rush off to perform his gang duties, could never be found when you wanted to go somewhere. Picked me up once at the American Club with blood all over his shirt. Not his own, I soon gathered. Didn’t say a word in apology, typical Chinaman. That was the last straw for me. Then I had two others, couldn’t drive at all. One actually hit a rickshawman, hurt the poor fellow quite badly. Driver I’ve got now’s not much better, so let’s keep fingers crossed he gets us there all right.’

I had no idea what he meant by this last statement, since as far as I could recall we had not agreed to go anywhere else that night. But I did not feel like picking him up on it, and then he had quickly moved on to telling me about the shortages afflicting the hotel. The lounge we were sitting in, he confided, was not always so dimly lit: the war had stopped the supply of light bulbs from the Chapei factories; in some other parts of the hotel, guests were having to wander about through darkness. He pointed out also that at least three members of the dance-band at the far end of the room were not playing their instruments.

‘That’s because they’re really porters. The real musicians have either fled Shanghai or been killed in the fighting. Still, they do a fair impersonation, don’t you think?’

Now that he had pointed it out, I saw that their impersonations were, in fact, poor in the extreme. One man looked utterly bored and was hardly bothering to hold his violin bow near his instrument; another was standing with a clarinet virtually forgotten in his hands, staring in open-mouthed wonder at the real musicians playing around him. It was only when I congratulated Morgan on his intimate knowledge of the hotel that he told me he had in fact been living there for over a month, having judged his apartment in Hongkew ‘too close for comfort’ to the fighting. When I muttered some words of sympathy that he had had to abandon his home, his mood suddenly changed, and for the first time I saw about him a melancholy that brought to mind the unhappy and lonely boy I had known at school.

‘Wasn’t much of a home anyway,’ he said, looking into his cocktail. ‘Just me, a few servants that came and went. Miserable little place really. In some ways, it was just an excuse, the fighting. Gave me a good reason to walk out. It was a miserable little place. All my furniture was Chinese. Couldn’t sit comfortably anywhere. Had a songbird once, but it died. It’s better for me here. Much quicker to my watering holes.’ Then he looked at his watch, drained his glass and said: ‘Well, better not keep them waiting. Car’s outside.’

There was something about Morgan’s manner – a kind of nonchalant urgency – that made it hard to raise any objections. Besides, these were still my early days in the city, when I was in the habit of being taken from function to function by various hosts. I thus followed Morgan out of the building and before long was sitting with him in the back of his car, moving through the lively night-time streets of the French Concession.

Almost immediately, the driver only just avoided an oncoming tram, and I thought this would start Morgan off again on his chauffeur problems. But now he had fallen into an introspective mood, staring silently out of his window at the passing neon and Chinese banners. At one point, when I remarked to him, in an attempt to glean something about the event to which we were going: 'Do you suppose we'll be late?' he glanced at his watch again and replied distractedly: 'They've been waiting for you this long, they won't mind a few more minutes.' Then he added: 'This must feel so odd for you.'

For a while after that we travelled on, speaking little. Once we went down a side-street on both sides of which the pavements were filled with huddled figures. I could see them in the lamplight, sitting, squatting, some curled up asleep on the ground, squeezed one upon the other, so that there was only just enough space down the middle of the street for traffic to pass. They were of every age - I could see babies asleep in mothers' arms - and their belongings were all around them; ragged bundles, bird-cages, the occasional wheelbarrow piled high with possessions. I have now grown used to such sights, but on that evening I stared out of the car in dismay. The faces were mostly Chinese, but as we came towards the end of the street, I saw clusters of European children - Russians, I supposed.

'Refugees from north of the canal,' Morgan said blandly, and turned away. For all his being a refugee himself, he appeared to feel no special empathy with his poorer counterparts. Even when once I thought we had run over a sleeping form, and glanced back in alarm, my companion merely murmured: 'Don't worry. Probably just some old bundle.'

Then after several minutes of silence, he startled me with a laugh. 'Schooldays,' he said. 'All comes back to you. They weren't so bad, I suppose.'

I glanced at him and noticed tears welling in his eyes. Then he said:

‘You know, we should have teamed up. The two miserable loners. That was the thing to do. You and me, we should have teamed up together. Don’t know why we didn’t. We wouldn’t have felt so left out of things if we’d done that.’

I turned to him in astonishment. But his face, caught in the changing light, told me he was somewhere far away.

As I have said, I could remember well enough Anthony Morgan’s being something of a ‘miserable loner’ at school. It was not that he was particularly bullied or teased by the rest of us; rather, as I recall it, it was Morgan himself who from an early stage cast himself in that role. He it was who always chose to walk by himself, lagging several yards behind the main group; who on bright summer days refused to join in the fun, and was to be found instead alone in a room, filling a notebook with doodles. All this I can remember clearly enough. In fact, as soon as I had spotted him that night in the gloomy hotel lounge, what had come instantly to mind was an image of his sulky, solitary walk behind the rest of us as we crossed the quadrangle between the art room and the cloisters. But his assertion that I had likewise been a ‘miserable loner’, one with whom he might have made a matching pair, was such an astounding one, it took me a little while to realise it was simply a piece of self-delusion on Morgan’s part – in all likelihood something he had invented years ago to make more palatable memories of an unhappy period. As I say, this did not occur to me instantly, and thinking about it now I see I may have been a little insensitive in my response. For I remember saying something like:

‘You must have me mixed up with someone else, old fellow. I was always one for mucking in. I dare say you’re thinking of that fellow Bigglesworth. Adrian Bigglesworth. He was certainly a bit of a loner.’

‘Bigglesworth?’ Morgan thought about this, then shook his head. ‘I remember the chap. Rather heavy-set, jug ears? Old Bigglesworth. My, my. But no, I wasn’t thinking of him.’

‘Well, it wasn’t me, old man.’

‘Extraordinary.’ He shook his head again, then turned back to his window.

I too turned away, and for the next little while gazed out at the night-time streets. We were once again moving through a busy entertainment area, and I glanced through the faces in the crowds, hoping to glimpse Akira’s. Then we were in a residential district full of hedges and trees, and before long the driver brought the car to a halt inside the grounds of a large house.

Morgan left the vehicle hurriedly. I too got out - the chauffeur made no effort to assist - and followed him along a gravelled path leading around the side of the house. I suppose I had been expecting a big reception of some sort, but I could now see this was not what awaited us; the house was for the most part dark, and aside from our own car, there was only one other in the courtyard.

Morgan, who was clearly familiar with the house, brought us to a side door flanked by tall shrubs. He opened it without ringing and ushered me inside.

We found ourselves in a spacious hallway lit by candles. Peering before me, I could make out musty-looking scrolls, huge porcelain vases, a lacquered chest of drawers. The smell in the air - of incense mingled with that of excrement - was oddly comforting.

No servant or host appeared. My companion continued to stand beside me, not saying a word. After a time, it occurred to me he was waiting for me to make some comment on our surroundings. So I said:

‘I know little about Chinese artwork. But even to my eye, it’s clear we’re surrounded by some rather fine things.’

Morgan stared at me in astonishment. Then he shrugged and said: ‘I suppose you’re right. Well, let’s go in.’

He led the way further into the house. We were in darkness for several steps, and then I heard voices talking in Mandarin, and saw light coming from a doorway hung with beaded threads. We passed through the beads, then a further set of drapes, into a large warm room lit with candles and lanterns.

What do I remember now of the rest of that evening? It has already grown a little hazy in my mind, but let me try and piece it together as clearly as I can. My first thought on entering that room was that we had disturbed some family celebration. I glimpsed a big table laden with food, and seated around it, eight or nine people. All were Chinese; the youngest – two men in their twenties – were dressed in Western suits, but the rest were in traditional dress. An old lady, seated at one end of the table, was being assisted in her eating by a servant. An elderly gentleman – surprisingly tall and broad for an Oriental – whom I took to be the head of the household, had immediately risen upon our arrival, and now the other males in the company followed his example. But at this stage, my impression of these people remained vague, for very rapidly it was the room itself that had begun to command all my attention.

The ceiling was high and beamed. Beyond the diners, right at the back, was a kind of minstrels’ gallery, from the rail of which hung a brace of paper lanterns. It was this section of the room that had drawn my gaze, and I now continued to stare past the table towards it, hardly hearing my host’s words of welcome. For what was dawning upon me was that the entire rear half of the room in which I was now standing was in fact what used to be the entrance hall of our old Shanghai house.

Obviously some vast restructuring had taken place over the years. I could not, for instance, work out at all how the areas through which Morgan and I had just entered related to our old hall. But the minstrels' gallery at the back clearly corresponded to the balcony at the top of our grand curving staircase.

I drifted forward, and probably remained standing there for some time, gazing up at the gallery, tracing with my eye the route our stairs had once taken. And as I did so, I found an old memory coming back to me, of a period in my childhood when I had made a habit of coming down the long curve of the stairs at huge speed and taking off two or three steps from the bottom - usually while flapping my arms - to land in the depths of a couch positioned just a little way away. My father, whenever he witnessed this, would laugh; but both my mother and Mei Li disapproved. Indeed, my mother, who could never quite explain why this particular practice was wrong, would always threaten to have the couch removed if I persisted with the habit. Then once, when I was around eight, I attempted this feat for the first time in months to discover the couch could no longer take the impact of my increased weight. One end of the frame completely collapsed, and I tumbled on to the floor, utterly shocked. The next instant, though, I had remembered my mother was coming down the stairs behind me, and had braced myself for the most terrible dressing down. But my mother, looming over me, had burst out laughing. 'Look at your face, Puffin!' she had exclaimed. If you could only see your face!'

I had not been hurt at all, but when my mother had continued to laugh - and perhaps because I was still afraid of a scolding - I had begun to make the most of a pain I could feel in my ankle. My mother had then stopped her laughing and had helped me up gently. I remember her then walking me slowly round and round the hall, an arm around my shoulder, saying: 'There now, that's better, isn't it? We'll just walk it off. There now, it's nothing.'

I never was scolded over the incident and a few days later I came in to find the couch had been mended; but although I continued often to jump from the second or third step, I never again attempted a dive into the couch.

I took a few paces around the room, trying to work out the exact spot where the couch would have been. As I did so, I found I could conjure up only the haziest picture of what it had actually looked like - though I could recall quite vividly the feel of its silky fabric.

Then eventually I became conscious of the others in the room, and the fact that they were all watching me with gentle smiles. Morgan and the elderly Chinese man had been conferring quietly. Seeing me turn, Morgan took a step forward, cleared his throat and began the introductions.

He was obviously friendly with the family and reeled off the names without hesitation. As he did so, each of them gave a little bow and smile, touching hands together. Only the old lady at the end of the table, whom Morgan introduced with extra deference, went on gazing at me impassively. The family was called Lin - beyond this, I do not now remember any names - and it was Mr Lin himself, the elderly, bulky gentleman, who from this point took charge.

'I trust, my good sir,' he said in an English only slightly accented, 'that it gives a warm feeling to return here again.'

'Yes, it does.' I gave a little laugh. 'Yes. And it's a little strange also.'

'But that is natural,' Mr Lin said. 'Now please make yourself comfortable. Mr Morgan tells me you have already dined. But as you see, we have prepared food for you. We did not know if you cared for Chinese cuisine. So we borrowed the cook of our English neighbour.'

‘But perhaps Mr Banks isn’t hungry.’

This was said by one of the young men in suits. Then turning to me the latter continued: ‘My grandfather is rather the old-fashioned type. He gets very offended if a guest doesn’t accept every piece of hospitality.’ The young man smiled broadly at the old man. ‘Please don’t let him bully you, Mr Banks.’

‘My grandson believes me to be an old-fashioned Chinese,’ Mr Lin said, coming closer to me, the smile never leaving his face. ‘But the truth is, I am born and bred in Shanghai, here in the International Settlement. My parents were obliged to flee the Empress Dowager’s forces, and take sanctuary here, in the foreigner’s city, and I have grown up a Shanghailanders through and through. My grandson here has no idea what life is like in the real China. He considers me old-fashioned! Ignore him, my dear sir. There is no need to worry about protocol in this house. If you do not wish to eat, then never mind. I will certainly not bully you.’

‘But you’re all so kind,’ I said, perhaps a little distractedly, for in truth I was still trying to work out how the building had been altered.

Then suddenly the old lady said something in Mandarin. The young man who had addressed me before, then said:

‘My grandmother says she thought you would never come. It was such a long wait. But now she’s seen you, she’s very happy you are here.’

Even before he had finished translating, the old lady was talking again. This time, when she finished, the young man remained silent for a moment. He looked at his grandfather as though for guidance, then appeared to come to a decision.

‘You must excuse Grandmother,’ he said. ‘She is sometimes a little eccentric.’

The old lady, perhaps understanding the English, gestured impatiently for a translation. Finally the young man sighed and said:

‘Grandmother says that until you came in this evening, she resented you. That is to say, she was angry that you are to take our home from us.’

I looked at the young man, quite baffled, but now the old lady was talking again.

‘She says that for a long time.’ her grandson translated, ‘she hoped you would stay away. She believed this home belonged to our family now. But tonight, seeing you in person, seeing the emotion in your eyes, she is able to understand. She now feels in her heart that the agreement is correct.’

‘The agreement? But surely ...’

I allowed the words to fade in my mouth. For puzzled as I was, while the young man had been translating his grandmother’s words, I had started to locate some vague recollection concerning some such arrangement regarding the old house and my eventual return to it. But as I say, my memory of it was only a very hazy one, and I sensed that by opening a discussion on the matter I would only embarrass myself. In any case, just at that moment Mr Lin said:

‘I fear we are all being most inconsiderate to Mr Banks. Here we are, making him chatter to us, when in fact he must be longing to look about this house once more.’ Then turning to me with a kindly smile, he said: ‘Come with me, good sir. There will be time enough to talk to everyone later. Come this way and I will show you the house.’

Chapter Fifteen

For the next several minutes, I followed Mr Lin all around the building. Despite his age, my host showed little sign of infirmity; he carried his bulk steadily, if slowly, hardly ever pausing for breath. I pursued his dark gown and whispering slippers up and down narrow stairs, and along back corridors lit often only by a single lantern. He led me through areas that were bare and cobwebbed, past numerous neatly stacked wooden crates of rice wine. Elsewhere the house became sumptuous; there were beautiful screens and wall hangings, clusters of porcelain displayed within alcoves. Every so often, he would open a door, then stand back to let me pass. I entered various kinds of room, but - for some time at least - saw nothing at all familiar to me.

Then finally I stepped through a door and felt something tugging at my memory. It took a few seconds more, but I then recognised with a wave of emotion our old 'library'. It had been greatly altered: the ceiling was much higher, a wall had been knocked through to make the space L-shaped; and where there had once been double doors through into our dining room, there was now a partition against which were stacked more crates of rice wine. But it was unmistakably the same room where as a child I had done much of my homework.

I drifted further into the room, looking all around me. After a while I became aware of Mr Lin regarding me and gave him a self-conscious smile. At which point, he said:

'No doubt much has been changed. Please accept my apologies. But you must understand, over eighteen years, which is how long we have lived here, a few alterations have been inevitable to meet the needs of my household and of my business. And I understand the occupants before us, and those before them, carried out extensive alterations. Most unfortunate, my good sir, but I suppose few could have foreseen that one day you and your parents ...'

He trailed off, perhaps because he thought I was not listening, perhaps because like most Chinese, he was uncomfortable with apologies. I went on gazing about me for a while longer, then asked him:

'So this house, it's no longer owned by Morganbrook and Byatt?'

He looked astonished, then laughed. 'Sir, I am the owner of this house.'

I saw I had insulted him, and said hurriedly: 'Yes, of course. I do beg your pardon.'

'Don't worry, my good sir' - his genial smile had quickly returned - 'it was not an unreasonable question. After all, when you and your dear parents lived here, that was no doubt the situation. But I believe that has long ceased to be. My good sir, if you will only consider how much Shanghai has changed over the years. Everything, everything has changed and changed again. All this' - he sighed and gestured about us - 'by comparison these are small changes. There are parts of this city I once knew so well, places I would walk every day, I now go there and I know not which way to turn. Change, change all the time. And now the Japanese, they wish to make their changes here. The most terrible changes may yet overtake us. But one must not be pessimistic.'

For a moment, we both stood there in silence, continuing to look about us. Then he said quietly:

'My family, of course, will be saddened to leave this house. My father died here. Two grandchildren were born here. But when my wife spoke earlier - and you must forgive her frankness, Mr Banks - she did speak for us all. We will consider it a great honour and privilege to return this house to you and your parents. Now, my good sir, let us continue if we may. '

I believe it was not long after that we climbed a carpeted staircase - one which certainly did not exist in my time - and stepped into a luxuriously furnished bedroom. There were rich fabrics, and lanterns casting a reddish glow.

'My wife's room,' Mr Lin said.

I could see it was a sanctuary, a cosy boudoir where the old lady probably whiled away most of her day. In the warm lantern light, I could make out a card table upon which a number of different sorts of game appeared to be in progress; a writing desk with a column of tiny gold-tasselled drawers running down one side; a large four-poster bed with layers of veil-like drapes. Elsewhere my gaze caught various fine ornaments, and items of amusement whose exact natures I could not guess.

'Madame must like this room,' I said eventually. 'I can see her world here. '

'It suits her. But you mustn't concern yourself on her behalf, my good sir. We will find her another room she will come to love equally. '

He had spoken to reassure me, but something fragile had entered his voice. He now drifted further into the room, over to a dressing table, and became absorbed by some small object there - perhaps a brooch. After several moments, he said quietly:

'She was very beautiful when she was younger. The most beautiful flower, my good sir. You cannot imagine. In this respect, I am like a Westerner in my heart. I have never wanted any wife but her. One wife, quite enough. Of course, I took others. I am Chinese, after all, even if I have lived all my life here in the foreigners' city. I felt obliged to take other wives. But she is the one I truly cared for. The others have all gone now, and she is left. I miss the others, but I'm glad, in my heart I'm glad that in our old age, it is just the two of us again.' For a few seconds, he seemed to forget my presence. Then he turned to me and said: 'This room. I wonder how you will come to use it. Pardon me, this is very impertinent. But do you think this room will be for your own good wife? Of course, I am aware that for many foreigners, however wealthy, husband and wife will share the same room. I wonder then if this room will go to yourself and your good wife. My curiosity, I realise, is most impertinent. But this room is very special for me. It is my hope that you will put it to special use.'

'Yes ...' I looked around it again carefully. Then I said: 'Perhaps not my wife. My wife, you see, to speak frankly ...' I realised that in this talk of a wife, I had had a picture of Sarah in my mind. Covering my embarrassment, I went on quickly: 'What I mean, sir, is I'm not yet married. I have no wife. But I think this room will suit my mother.'

'Ah yes. After all the inconveniences she has had to suffer, this room will be ideal for her. And your father? I wonder, will he share it with her in the Western manner? Please forgive my great intrusion.'

'It's no intrusion, Mr Lin. After all, by letting me in here, it is you who have allowed me great intimacy. You have every right to ask these questions. It's just that this is all rather sudden, and I've not yet had time fully to make my plans ...'

I drifted into silence and went on gazing at the room. Then after a moment, I said to him: 'Mr Lin, I'm afraid this may upset you. But you've been more open and generous than I could ever have expected, and I feel you deserve my honesty. You said yourself just now, how inevitable it is that a house undergoes alteration whenever its occupants change. Well, sir, dear as these rooms are to you, I'm afraid that once my family are again living here, we will carry out our own alterations. This room too, I fear, will change beyond recognition. '

Mr Lin closed his eyes, and there was a heavy silence. I wondered if he would become angry, and for a second regretted being so honest with him. But then when he opened his eyes again, he was regarding me gently.

'Of course,' he said, 'it is quite natural. You will wish to restore this house to just the way it was when you were a boy. That is quite natural. My good sir, I understand it perfectly. '

I thought about this for a moment, then said: 'Well, actually, Mr Lin, we would probably not turn it back exactly to what it was then. For one thing, as I remember it, there were many things we were unhappy about. My mother, for instance, never had her own study. With all her campaign work, a little bureau in the bedroom was never adequate. My father too wanted a little workshop for his woodwork. What I'm saying is that there's no need to turn back the clock just for the sake of it. '

'That is most wise, Mr Banks. And although you have not yet taken a wife, perhaps soon there will come the day when you have the needs of a wife and children to consider. '

'That's certainly possible. Unfortunately, just at present, this question of a wife, in my case, Western customs notwithstanding ...' I became very confused and stopped. But the old man nodded sagely, saying:

'Of course, in matters of the heart, things are never simple.' Then he asked: 'You wish for children, good sir? I wonder how many you will have. '

'As a matter of fact, I already have a child. A young girl. Though she isn't really my daughter as such. She was an orphan and now she's in my care. I do look on her as a daughter. '

I had not thought about Jennifer for some time, and mentioning her like this so unexpectedly caused a powerful feeling to well up within me. Images of her ran through my mind; I thought of her at her school, and wondered how she was, and what she had been doing that day.

I perhaps turned away to hide my emotions. In any case, when I next looked at him, Mr Lin was nodding again.

‘We Chinese are well used to such arrangements,’ he said. ‘Blood is important. But so is household. My father took in an orphan girl and she grew up with us as though she were my sister. I regarded her as such, though I knew always of her origins. When she died, in the cholera epidemic when I was still a young man, I felt as much grief as when my blood sisters passed away.’

‘If I may say so, Mr Lin, it’s a great pleasure to talk to you. It’s rare to find someone so immediately understanding.’

He gave a small bow, bringing his fingertips together before him. ‘When one has lived as long as I have, and through the turmoil of these years, one knows many joys and sadnesses. I hope your adopted daughter will be happy here. I wonder which room you will give her. But of course, forgive me! As you say, you will alter.’

‘In fact, one of the rooms we saw earlier would be ideal for Jennifer. It had a little wooden ledge running along the wall.’

‘She likes such a ledge?’

‘Yes. For her things. And in fact there’s one further person I shall be accommodating here in this house. I suppose she was officially a sort of servant, but in our household she was always much more. Her name is Mei Li.’

‘She was your amah, good sir?’

I nodded. 'She would be older now and I'm sure she'd appreciate a rest from her work. Children can be very taxing. It was always my intention that when she was old, she'd go on living with us here.'

'That is most kind-hearted of you. One so often hears of foreign families who throw out the amah once her charges are grown. Such women are often to be seen ending their days as street beggars.'

I gave a laugh. 'I hardly think that could ever happen to Mei Li. In fact, the very thought is quite absurd. In any case, as I say, she'll be living here with us. As soon as my task is accomplished, I'll turn my mind to locating her. I don't imagine it will be so difficult.'

'And tell me, good sir, will you give her a room in the servants' quarters or with the family?'

'With the family, certainly. My parents might take a dim view of that. But then really, I'm the head of the household now.'

Mr Lin smiled. 'According to your custom, that will certainly be so. For us Chinese, fortunately for me, the old are permitted to go on ruling the house well into their foolish years.'

The old man laughed to himself and turned towards the door. I was about to follow, but just at that moment - quite suddenly and very vividly - I found another memory returning to me. I have thought about it since, and I have no idea why it was that particular recollection rather than any other. It was of an occasion when I was six or seven, when my mother and I had raced each other along a stretch of lawn. I do not know where exactly this was; I would suppose now we were in one of the parks - perhaps Jessfield Park - for I can remember a trellised fence beside where we ran, covered in climbing flowers and creepers. It was a warm day, but not especially sunny. I had impulsively challenged my mother to the race, to some marker a short distance before us, as a way of showing off to her my improved running ability. I had assumed completely that I would outpace her, and that she would then express, in her usual way, her delighted surprise at this latest manifestation of my maturing prowess. But to my annoyance she had kept up with me all the way, laughing as she went, although I was running with all my strength. I do not remember which of us actually 'won', but I still recall my fury at her, and my sense that I had suffered a grave injustice. It was this incident that came back to me that night as I stood in the snugly sheltered atmosphere of Madam Lin's bedroom. Or rather, a fragment of it: a memory of me pushing into the wind with all my might; my mother's laughing presence beside me; the rustling of her skirt, and my rising frustration.

'Sir,' I said to my host, 'I wonder if I may ask you. You say you've lived all your life here in the Settlement. I wonder then if during that time you ever met my mother.'

'I never had the good fortune to meet her in person,' Mr Lin said. 'But of course, I knew of her, and of her great campaign. I admired her, like all decent-minded people. I am sure she is a fine lady. And I've heard it said she is very beautiful.'

'I suppose she might be. One never thinks about whether one's mother is beautiful.'

'Oh, I've heard it said she is the most beautiful Englishwoman in Shanghai.'

'I suppose she might be. But of course, she'll be older now.'

'Certain kinds of beauty never fade. My wife' - he gestured at the room - 'she is as beautiful to me now as the day I married her.'

When he said this, I suddenly felt as though I were intruding, and this time it was I who made the first move to leave.

I do not remember a great deal more about my visit to the house that evening. Perhaps we stayed another hour, talking and eating with the family around the table. In any case, I know I parted from the Lin family on the best of terms. It was during the journey back, however, that Morgan and I rather fell out.

It was probably my fault. I was by that stage tired and somewhat overwrought. We had been travelling through the night for a while in silence, and my mind had perhaps begun to drift back to the immense task before me. For I remember I said to Morgan, quite out of the blue:

‘Look, you’ve been here a few years now. Tell me, have you come across a certain Inspector Kung?’

‘Inspector Kung? Policeman or something?’

‘When I was a child here, Inspector Kung was something of a legend. As a matter of fact, he was the officer originally in charge of my parents’ case.’

To my surprise, I heard Morgan beside me give a guffaw. Then he said:

‘Kung? Old Man Kung? Yes, of course, he used to be a police inspector. Well then, it’s no wonder nothing got sorted out at the time.’

His tone took me aback, and I said rather coldly: ‘In those days, Inspector Kung was the most revered detective in Shanghai, if not the whole of China.’

‘Well, he still has something of a name for himself, I can tell you. Old Man Kung. Well I never.’

‘I’m glad at least to hear he’s still in the city. Do you have any idea where I’d find him?’

‘Simplest way’s just to wander around Frenchtown any night after dark. Bound to come across him sooner or later.

You usually see him in a heap on the pavement. Or if he's been let into some hole of a bar, he'll be snoring away in a dark corner. '

'Are you implying Inspector Kung's become a drunk?'

'Drink. Opium. Usual Chinaman stuff. But he's a character. Tells stories about his glory days and people give him coins. '

'I think you're thinking of the wrong man, old fellow. '

'Don't think so, old chap. Old Man Kung. So he really was a policeman. I always fancied he was making all that up. Most of his stories are preposterous. What's the matter, old fellow?'

'The trouble with you, Morgan, is you keep muddling things. First you muddle up me and Bigglesworth. Now you get Inspector Kung muddled with some worthless ragamuffin. Being out here's got your head all soft, old man. '

'Now look here, pipe down a bit. What I'm telling you, you'll hear from anyone else you care to ask. And I rather take exception to your comments. Nothing soft about my head. '

We may have returned to slightly more civil terms by the time he dropped me off at the Cathay, but our parting was distinctly cold and I have not seen Morgan again since. As for Inspector Kung, it had been my intention after that evening to seek him out without delay, but for whatever reason - perhaps I feared Morgan might have been telling the truth - I have never made it a priority - at least, not until yesterday, when my search through the police archives threw up the inspector's name again in the most dramatic fashion.

This morning, incidentally, when I mentioned Inspector Kung in passing to MacDonald, his reaction was not dissimilar to Morgan's that night, and I suspect here was yet another reason for my impatience with MacDonald as we faced each other in his airless little office overlooking the consulate grounds. All the same, with a little more effort, I know I could have made a much better job of it. My central error this morning was to allow him to goad me into losing my temper. At one point, I fear, I was practically shouting at him.

‘Mr MacDonald, it simply isn’t enough to leave things to what you insist on calling my “powers”! I have no such “powers”! I am a mere mortal, and I can only achieve my goals if I am given the sort of basic assistance that allows me to go about my work. I’ve not asked much of you, sir. Hardly anything at all! And what I’ve asked, I’ve put to you very clearly. I wish to speak to this communist informer. Just speak with him, a short interview will suffice. I made this request to you in the clearest terms. I fail to understand why arrangements still have not been made. Why is that, sir? Why is that? What can possibly be impeding you?’

‘But look here, old fellow, this is hardly a matter for my office. If you wish, I’ll get the police commissioner over to see you. Mind you, even then, you see, I’m not at all sure you’ll get anywhere useful. It’s not they who have the Yellow Snake ...’

‘I fully appreciate it’s the Chinese government who are keeping the Yellow Snake under their protection. That is why I have come to you and not to the police. I’m aware that in a matter of this magnitude, the police are an irrelevance.’

‘I’ll see what I can do, old chap. But you must understand, this isn’t a British colony. We can’t go ordering the Chinese about. But I’ll talk to someone in the appropriate office. Don’t bet on anything happening too quickly though. Chiang Kai-shek’s had informers before, but never one with quite such extensive knowledge of the Reds’ network. Chiang would lose a good few battles with the Japs before allowing anything to happen to this Yellow Snake chap.

As far as Chiang is concerned, you see, the real enemy's not the Japs but the Reds. '

I gave a loud sigh. 'Mr MacDonald, I do not care about Chiang Kai-shek or his priorities. Just now, I have a case to solve, and I would like you to do whatever you can to secure an interview for me with this informer. I am putting it to you personally, and if all my efforts come to nothing because this simple request is not granted, I shan't hesitate to let it be known that it was you I came to ...'

'Now really, old fellow, please! There's no need to take this sort of line! No need at all! We're all friends here. We all wish you to succeed. Take my word for it, we really do. Look here, I've said I'll do all I can. I'll talk to a few people, you know, people in that line of work. I'll talk to them, tell them how strongly you feel. But you have to understand, there's only so much we can do with the Chinese.' Then he leant forward and said confidently: 'You know, you might try the French. They have a lot of little understandings with Chiang. You know, of the off-the-record sort. The kind of thing we wouldn't touch. That's the French for you.'

Perhaps there is something in MacDonald's suggestion. Perhaps I might indeed get some useful help from the French authorities. But frankly, since this morning, I have not given this option much thought. It is clear to me that MacDonald, for reasons which as yet remain unclear, is prevaricating, and that once he has recognised the overwhelming importance of granting my request, he will do whatever is necessary. Unfortunately, it is probable I handled this morning's meeting so incompetently I will have to tackle him one further time. It is not a prospect to which I particularly look forward, but at least the next time my approach will be different, and he will not find it so easy to send me away empty-handed.

PART SIX

Cathay Hotel, Shanghai, 20th October 1937

Chapter Sixteen

I knew we were somewhere in the French Concession, not far from the harbour, but otherwise I had lost my bearings. The chauffeur had for some time been steering us through tiny alleys quite unsuitable for a car, sounding his horn repeatedly to get pedestrians out of our way, and I had begun to feel ridiculous, like a man who has brought a horse into a house. But eventually the car stopped, and the driver, opening my door, pointed out the entrance to the Inn of Morning Happiness.

I was led inside by a thin Chinese man with one eye. What comes back to me today is an overall impression of low ceilings, dark damp wood and the usual smell of sewage. But the establishment seemed clean enough; at one point we stepped around three old women on their knees, diligently scrubbing the floorboards. Somewhere near the rear of the building, we came to a corridor with a long row of doors. I was reminded of stables, or even a prison, but these cubicles, it turned out, contained the inn's guests. The one-eyed man knocked on one of the doors, then opened it before any reply had been given.

I stepped into a small narrow space. There was no window, but the partitions did not go right up to the ceiling - the last foot or so being wire mesh - thus allowing light and air to circulate. For all that, the cubicle was stuffy and dark, and even when the afternoon sun broke brightly outside, it resulted only in the mesh throwing odd patterns over the floor. The figure lying on the bed appeared to be asleep, but then moved his legs when I took up a position in the gap between the bed and the wall. The one-eyed man mumbled something and vanished, the door closing behind him.

Former Inspector Kung looked to be little more than bones. The skin on his face and neck was shrivelled and spotted; his mouth hung open slackly; a bare, stick-like leg was protruding from the coarse blanket, though on his top half I saw he had on a surprisingly white undershirt. He did not at first make any attempt to sit up, and appeared only vaguely to register my presence. And yet he did not seem directly under the sway of opium or alcohol, and eventually, as I continued to state who I was and my purpose in coming to see him, he became more coherent, and began to show signs of courtesy.

‘I’m sorry, sir’ - his English, when it came, was fluent enough - ‘I have no tea.’ He began to mumble something in Mandarin, shuffling his legs about beneath his blanket. Then he appeared to remember himself again and said: ‘Please forgive me. I’m not well. But soon, I will recover my good health.’

‘I sincerely hope so,’ I said. ‘After all, you were one of the finest detectives ever to serve in the SMP.’

‘Really? How kind of you to say so, sir. Yes, perhaps I was a good officer once.’ With a sudden effort, he raised himself, and placed his bare feet gingerly down on to the floor. Perhaps out of modesty, perhaps because he was cold, he kept his blanket gathered around his middle. ‘But in the end,’ he went on, ‘this city defeats you. Every man betrays his friend. You trust someone, and he turns out to be in the pay of a gangster. The government are gangsters too. How is a detective to do his duty in a place like this? I might have a cigarette for you. Would you care for a cigarette?’

‘No, thank you. Sir, let me just say this. When I was a boy, I followed your exploits with great admiration.’

‘When you were a boy?’

‘Yes, sir. The boy next door and I’ - I gave a little laugh - ‘we used to play at being you. You were ... you were our hero.’

‘Is that so?’ The old man shook his head and smiled.

‘Is that so indeed. Well then, I am all the more sorry I cannot offer you anything. No tea. No cigarette.’

‘Actually, sir, you may be able to offer me something much more important. I came to you today because I believe you may be able to provide a vital clue. In the spring of 1915, there was a case you investigated, a shooting incident in a restaurant called Wu Cheng Lou in Foochow Road. Three people died and several more were injured. You arrested the two men responsible. In the police records, the matter is referred to as the Wu Cheng Lou Shooting Incident. It’s many years ago now, I realise, but Inspector Kung, I wonder if you remember this case?’

Behind me, from perhaps two or three rooms away, there came the sound of frantic coughing. Inspector Kung remained deep in thought, then said: ‘I remember the Wu Cheng Lou case very well. It was one of my more satisfying moments. I sometimes think about that case, even these days, lying here in this bed.’

‘Then perhaps you’ll remember that you interrogated a suspect whom you subsequently established was unconnected with the shooting. According to the records, the man’s name was Chiang Wei. You interrogated him concerning the Wu Cheng Lou, but he instead made some other quite unrelated confessions.’

Though his body remained a sagging sack of bones, the old detective’s eyes were now full of life. ‘That’s correct,’ he said. ‘He had nothing to do with the shooting. But he was afraid and he began to talk. He confessed everything. He confessed, I remember, to having been a member of a kidnapping gang some years earlier.’

‘Excellent, sir! That’s just as it’s recorded in the files. Now, Inspector Kung, this is very important. This man gave you some addresses. Addresses of houses the gang had used to hold their captives.’

Inspector Kung had been gazing at the flies buzzing around the wire mesh near the ceiling, but now his eyes turned slowly to where I was standing. 'That is so,' he said quietly. 'But Mr Banks, we had all those houses checked thoroughly. The kidnappings he talked of were years in the past. We found nothing suspicious in those houses.'

'I know, Inspector Kung, you would have done everything duty required of you most thoroughly. But of course, you were investigating the shooting. It would be perfectly natural if you didn't expend your energy on such a side issue. What I'm suggesting is that if powerful people had gone to some lengths to prevent you searching one of those houses, you would perhaps not have persisted.'

The old detective was deep in thought again. He said finally: 'There was one house. I remember now. My men brought me reports. All the other houses, seven of them, I received reports. I remember it troubled me at the time. One last house, no report. My men were being prevented in some way. Yes, I remember wondering about it. A detective's nose. You will know what I mean, sir.'

'And that remaining house. You never did see a report on it.'

'Correct, sir. But as you say, it was not a great priority. You understand, the Wu Cheng Lou was a large matter. It had caused much outrage. The hunt for the killers had gone on for weeks.'

'And I believe it had defeated two of your more senior colleagues.'

Inspector Kung smiled. 'As I have said, it was a most satisfying moment in my career. I came on to the case when others had failed. The city was talking of nothing else. I was able after a few days to apprehend the killers.'

'I read the records. I was filled with admiration.'

But now the old man was staring at me intently. Eventually he said slowly: 'That house. The house my men failed to go to. That house. You are saying ...?'

'Yes. It's my belief that is where my parents are being held.'

'I see.' He fell silent for a time, digesting this colossal idea.

'There's no question of negligence on your part,' I said. 'Let me say again, I read the reports with great admiration. Your men didn't get to the house because they were obstructed by persons in the higher echelons of the police force. People we now know were in the pay of criminal organisations.'

The coughing had started up again. Inspector Kung remained silent for a moment longer, then looked up at me again and said slowly: 'You've come to ask me. You've come to ask if I can help you find this house.'

'Unfortunately, the archives are in chaos. It's a disgrace how things have been run in this city. Papers have been misfiled, others lost altogether. In the end, I decided I'd do better if I came here to you. To ask you, unlikely though it is, if you remember. Something, anything about that house.'

'That house. Let me try to remember.' The old man closed his eyes in concentration, but then after a time, he shook his head. 'The Wu Cheng Lou shooting. It is over twenty years ago. I am sorry. I can remember nothing about this house.'

'Please try and remember something, sir. Do you recall even which district it was in? Whether for instance it was in the International Settlement?'

He thought for another moment, then shook his head again. 'It is a long time ago. And my head, it doesn't work in a normal way. Sometimes I remember nothing, not even of the day before. But I shall try and remember. Perhaps tomorrow, perhaps the next day, I shall wake up and remember something. Mr Banks, I am so sorry. But just now, no, I remember nothing.'

It was evening by the time I returned to the International Settlement. I believe I spent an hour or so in my room, going through my notes once again, trying to put behind me the disappointment of my meeting with the old inspector. I did not go down to supper until after eight, when I took my usual corner table in that splendid dining room. I remember I did not have much of an appetite that evening, and was about to abandon my main course and return to my work when the waiter brought in Sarah's note.

I have it here now. It is no more than a scribble on unlined paper, the upper edge torn off. It is doubtful whether she gave the words much thought; it simply asks me to meet her at once on the half-landing between the third and fourth floors of the hotel. Looking at it again now, its connection with that small incident at Mr Tony Keswick's house a week previously seems all too obvious; that is to say, Sarah probably would not have written the note at all had it not been for what took place between us then. Oddly enough, though, when the waiter first presented it to me, I failed to make any such association, and I sat there for some moments, quite mystified as to why she should summon me in such a way.

I should say here that by this point I had run into her a further three times since the night at Lucky Chance House. On two of these occasions, we had seen each other only fleetingly in the presence of others, and little had passed between us. On the third occasion too - the night of the dinner at the home of Mr Keswick, the chairman of Jardine Matheson - I suppose we were again in a public place, and exchanged barely a word; yet, with hindsight, our encounter there could well be viewed as some sort of important turning point.

I had turned up a little late that evening, and by the time I was shown into Mr Keswick's vast conservatory, upwards of sixty guests were already taking their places at the several tables situated among the foliage and trailing vines. I spotted Sarah on the far side of the room - Sir Cecil was not present - but I could see she too was searching for her seat, and so made no attempt to approach her.

It appears to be a Shanghai custom at such events for guests, as soon as dessert has been served - even before they have had time properly to eat it - to abandon the original seating plan and mingle freely. No doubt then, it was in my mind that once this point came along, I might go over and exchange a few words with Sarah. However, when dessert finally appeared, I was unable to get away from the woman seated beside me, who wished to explain in some detail the political position in Indo-China. Then no sooner had I extricated myself from her than our host stood up to announce that the time had come for 'the turns'. He proceeded to introduce the first performer - a willowy lady who, emerging from a table behind me, went to the front and began to recite an amusing poem, evidently composed by herself.

She was followed by a man who sang unaccompanied a few verses of Gilbert and Sullivan, and I surmised that the majority of those around me had come ready to perform. Guests went up one after another, sometimes in twos and threes; there were madrigals, comic routines. The tone was invariably frivolous, sometimes even bawdy.

Then a large red-faced man - a director of the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank, I learnt later - made his way to the front wearing a kind of tunic over his dinner jacket, and began to read from a scroll a monologue satirising various aspects of Shanghai life. Almost all the references - to individuals, to the bathroom arrangements at particular clubs, to incidents that had occurred on recent paper chases - were entirely lost on me, but very quickly every section of the room became filled with laughter. At this point I looked around for Sarah, and saw her sitting over in a corner amidst a group of ladies, laughing as heartily as any of them. The woman beside her, who clearly had had a fair amount to drink, was roaring with almost indecent abandon.

The red-faced man's performance had been going for perhaps five minutes - during which time the level of hilarity seemed only to rise - when he delivered a particularly effective volley of three or four lines which set the room virtually howling. It was at this point that I happened to glance over once more to Sarah. At first the scene appeared much as it had before: there was Sarah, laughing helplessly amidst her companions. If I went on watching her for several more seconds, it was simply because I was rather surprised that after barely a year, she was already so intimate with Shanghai society to the extent that these obscure jokes could reduce her to such a state. And it was then, as I was gazing at her, pondering this point, that I suddenly realised she was not laughing at all; that she was not, as I had supposed, wiping away tears of laughter, but was in fact weeping. For a moment I went on staring at her, unable quite to credit my eyes. Then, as the uproar continued, I rose quietly and moved through the crowd. After a little manoeuvring, I found myself standing behind her, and now there was no further doubt. Amidst all the gaiety, Sarah was crying uncontrollably.

I had approached from behind, so that when I offered her my handkerchief, she gave a start. Then looking up at me, she fixed me - for perhaps as long as four or five seconds - with a searching gaze in which gratitude was mixed with something like a question. I inclined my head to read better her look, but then she had taken my handkerchief and turned back towards the red-faced man. And when the next burst of laughter seized the room, Sarah, too, with an impressive show of will, let out a laugh, even as she pressed the handkerchief to her eyes.

Conscious that I might draw unwanted attention to her, I then made my way back to my seat, and indeed, did not go near her again that evening other than to exchange rather formal goodnights with her in the entrance hall alongside the many other guests taking their leave of one another.

But I suppose, for a few days afterwards, I entertained a vague expectation of hearing something from her concerning what had occurred. It is, then, a measure of how much I had become engrossed in my investigations that by the time that note was brought to me in the dining room of the Cathay Hotel, I failed to make any connection with the earlier incident, and made my way up the grand staircase, wondering why it was she wished to see me.

What Sarah described as the 'half-landing' is in fact a substantial area strewn with armchairs, occasional tables and potted palms. In the morning particularly, with the great windows open and the ceiling fans whirring, I imagine it is a pleasant enough place for a guest to read a newspaper and take some coffee. At night, though, it has a rather abandoned atmosphere; perhaps owing to the shortages, there is no lighting other than that coming from the staircase, and whatever leaks in through the windows from the Bund down below. On that particular evening, the area was deserted aside from Sarah, whose figure I could see silhouetted against the huge panes, gazing out at the night sky. As I made my way towards her, I knocked into a chair, and the sound made her turn.

'I thought there'd be a moon,' she said. 'But there isn't. There aren't even any shells being fired tonight.'

'Yes. It's been quiet the last few nights.'

'Cecil says the soldiers on both sides are exhausted for now.'

‘I dare say.’

‘Christopher, come over here. It’s all right, I’m not going to do anything to you. But we have to talk more quietly.’

I moved closer till I was beside her. I could now see the Bund below, and the line of lights marking the waterfront promenade.

‘I’ve arranged everything,’ she said quietly. ‘It wasn’t easy, but it’s all done now.’

‘You’ve done what exactly?’

‘Everything. Papers, boats, everything. I can’t stay here any more. I tried my best, and I’m so tired now. I’m going away.’

‘I see. And Cecil. Does he know of your intentions?’

‘It won’t come entirely as a surprise to him. But I suppose it’ll be a shock, all the same. Are you shocked, Christopher?’

‘No, not really. From what I’d observed, I could see something like this might be on the cards. But before you take such a drastic step, are you sure there aren’t …?’

‘Oh, I’ve thought of everything there is to think about it. It’s no good. Even if Cecil were willing to go back to England tomorrow. Besides, he’s lost so much money here. He’s determined not to leave until he’s won it all back.’

‘I can see this trip out here’s rather fallen short of your hopes. I’m sorry.’

‘It’s hardly just the trip out here.’ She gave a laugh, then went quiet. After a moment she said: ‘I tried to love Cecil. I tried very hard. He’s not a bad man. You probably think he is, the way you’ve seen him here. But that’s not how he always was. And I realise a lot of it’s to do with me. What he needed at this stage of his life was a good rest. But then I came along and he felt he had to do a little more. That was my fault. When we came out here, he did try at first, tried awfully hard. But it was beyond him, and I think that's what it was, that's what broke him. Perhaps once I've gone, he'll be able to pull himself together again.'

'But where will you go? Will you return to England?'

'Just now, there's not enough money to return. I'm going to Macao. Then after that, I shall have to see. Anything might happen then. In fact, that's why I wanted to talk with you. Christopher, I'll confess, I'm rather frightened. I don't want to go out there all by myself. I did wonder if you'd go with me.'

'Do you mean go with you to Macao? Go with you tomorrow?'

'Yes. Go with me to Macao tomorrow. We can decide after that where to go next. If you wanted to, we could just drift around the South China Sea for a while. Or we could go to South America, run away like thieves in the night. Wouldn't that be fun?'

I suppose I was surprised when I heard her utter these words; but what I remember now, overwhelming anything else, was an almost tangible sense of relief. Indeed, for a second or two I experienced the sort of giddiness one might when coming suddenly out into the light and fresh air after being trapped a long time in some dark chamber. It was as though this suggestion of hers - which for all I knew she had thrown out on an impulse - carried with it a huge authority, something that brought me a kind of dispensation I had never dared hope for.

Hardly had this feeling swept over me, however, than I suppose another part of me grew quickly alert to the possibility of this being some test she had set for me. For I remember that when I at last responded, it was to say:

‘The difficulty is my work here. I’ll have to finish here first. After all, the whole world’s on the brink of catastrophe. What would people think of me if I abandoned them all at this stage? Come to that, what would you think of me?’

‘Oh, Christopher, we’re both as bad as each other. We’ve got to stop thinking like that. Otherwise there’ll be nothing for either of us, just more of what we’ve had all these years. Just more loneliness, more days with nothing in our lives except some whatever-it-is telling us we haven’t done enough yet. We have to put that all behind us now. Leave your work, Christopher. You’ve spent enough of your life already on all of that. Let’s go away tomorrow, let’s not waste a single day more, let’s go before it’s too late for us.’

‘Too late for what, exactly?’

‘Too late for ... oh, I don’t know. All I know is that I’ve wasted all these years looking for something, a sort of trophy I’d get only if I really, really did enough to deserve it. But I don’t want it any more, I want something else now, something warm and sheltering, something I can turn to, regardless of what I do, regardless of who I become. Something that will just be there, always, like tomorrow’s sky. That’s what I want now, and I think it’s what you should want too. But it will be too late soon. We’ll become too set to change. If we don’t take our chance now, another may never come for either of us. Christopher, what are you doing to that poor plant?’

Indeed, I realised I had been absent-mindedly stripping leaves off a palm standing next to us and depositing them on to the carpet.

‘I’m sorry’ - I let out a laugh - ‘rather destructive.’ Then I said: ‘Even if you’re right, what you were saying just now, even then, it’s not so easy for me. Because, you see, there’s Jennifer.’

When I said this, a vivid image came back to me of the last time she and I had spoken, the time we had said our goodbyes in the pleasant little sitting room at the rear of her school, the sunshine of a gentle English spring afternoon falling across the oak-panelled walls. I suddenly remembered again her face as she first took in what I was saying, the thoughtful nod she gave as she thought it over, and then those quite unexpected words she came out with.

‘You see, there’s Jennifer,’ I said again, aware that I was in danger of drifting off into a daydream. ‘Even now, she’ll be waiting for me.’

‘But I’ve thought of that. I’ve thought about it all very carefully. I just know she and I can be friends. More than friends. The three of us, we could be, well, a little family, just like any other family. I’ve thought about it, Christopher, it could be wonderful for us all. We could send for her, as soon as we’ve settled on a plan. We might even go back to Europe, to Italy, say, and she could join us there. I know I could be a mother to her, Christopher, I’m sure I could.’

I went on thinking quietly for a moment, then said: ‘Very well.’

‘What do you mean, Christopher, “very well”?’

‘I mean, yes, I’ll go with you. I’ll go with you, we’ll do as you say. Yes, you might be right. Jennifer, us, everything, it might turn out well.’

As soon as I said this, I could feel a massive weight lifting off me, so much so that I may well have let out a loud sigh. Sarah, meanwhile, had come another step closer, and for a second gazed deep into my face. I even thought she would kiss me, but she seemed to check herself at the last moment, and said instead:

‘Then listen. Listen carefully, we must do this correctly. Pack no more than one suitcase. And don’t send on any trunks. There'll be some money waiting for us in Macao, so we can buy what we need there. I'll send someone to come and get you, a driver, tomorrow afternoon at half past three. I'll see to it he's someone to be trusted, but all the same, don't tell him anything you don't need to. He'll bring you to where I'll be waiting. Christopher, you look as if something heavy just hit you on the head. You're not going to let me down, are you? '

'No, no. I'll be ready. Half past three tomorrow. Don't worry, I'll ... I'll follow you anywhere, wherever you want to go in the world. '

Perhaps it was simply an impulse; perhaps it was the memory of how we had parted that night we had brought Sir Cecil back from the gaming house; in any case, I suddenly reached forward, grasped one of her hands in both of mine, and kissed it. After that, I believe I looked up, still clutching her hand, uncertain what to do next; it is even possible I let out an awkward giggle. In the end, she freed the hand gently and touched my cheek.

'Thank you, Christopher,' she said quietly. 'Thank you for agreeing. Everything suddenly feels so different. But you'd better go now, before someone sees us here. Go on, off you go. '

Chapter Seventeen

I went to bed that night somewhat preoccupied, but awoke the next morning to find a kind of tranquillity had come over me. It was as though a heavy burden had been removed, and when, as I dressed, I thought again of my new situation, I realised I was rather excited.

Much of that morning has now become a haze to me. What I recall is that I became seized by the idea that I should complete, in the time remaining to me, as many as possible of the tasks I had planned for the next few days; that to do otherwise would be less than conscientious. The obvious illogic of this position somehow failed to trouble me, and after breakfast, I set about my work with much urgency, rushing up and down staircases, and urging my drivers on through the crowded city streets. And although today it makes little sense to me, I have to say I took considerable pride in being able to sit down to lunch a little after two o'clock having more or less fulfilled all I had set out to do.

And yet at the same time, when I look back on that day, I have the overwhelming impression I remained peculiarly detached from my activities. As I hurried around the International Settlement talking with many of the city's most prominent citizens, there was a part of me virtually laughing at the earnest way they tried to answer my questions, at the pathetic way they tried to be of help. For the truth is, the longer I had been in Shanghai, the more I had come to despise the so-called leaders of this community. Almost every day my investigations had revealed yet another piece of negligence, corruption or worse on their part down the years. And yet in all the days since my arrival, I had not come across one instance of honest shame, a single acknowledgement that were it not for the prevarications, the short-sightedness, often the downright dishonesty of those left in charge, the situation would never have reached its present level of crisis. At one point that morning, I found myself at the Shanghai Club, meeting with three eminent members of the 'elite'. And faced anew with their hollow pomposity, their continued denial of their own culpability in the whole sorry affair, I felt an exhilaration at the prospect of ridding my life of such people once and for all. Indeed, at such moments, I felt an utter certainty that I had come to the right decision; that the assumption shared by virtually everyone here - that it was somehow my sole responsibility to resolve the crisis - was not only unfounded, but worthy of the highest contempt. I pictured the astonishment that would soon appear on these same faces at the news of my departure - the outrage and panic that would rapidly follow - and I will admit such thoughts brought me much satisfaction.

Then, as I continued my lunch, I found myself thinking of my last meeting with Jennifer that sunny afternoon at her school: of the two of us, in the prefects' room, sitting awkwardly in our armchairs, the sun playing on the oak panelling, the grass leading down to the lake visible in the windows behind her. She had listened in silence as I had explained, to the best of my ability, the necessity of my going away, the overwhelming importance of the task awaiting me in Shanghai. I had paused at several points, expecting her to ask questions, or at least to make some comment. But each time, she had given a serious nod, and waited for me to continue. In the end, when I realised I had started to repeat myself, I had come to a halt and said to her:

'So, Jenny. What do you have to say?'

I do not know what I had expected. But after gazing at me for another moment with a look devoid of any anger, she had replied:

'Uncle Christopher, I realise I'm not very good at anything. But that's because I'm rather young still. Once I'm older, and it might not be so long now, I'll be able to help you. I'll be able to help you, I promise you I will. So while you're away, would you please remember? Remember that I'm here, in England, and that I'll help you when you come back? '

It was not quite what I had expected, and though often since arriving here I have thought over these words of hers, I am still not sure what she meant to convey to me that day. Was she implying that, for all I had just been saying to her, I was unlikely to succeed in my mission in Shanghai? That I would have to return to England and continue my work for yet many more years? Just as likely, these were simply the words of a confused child, trying hard not to display her upset, and it is pointless to subject them to any sort of scrutiny. For all that, I found myself yet again pondering our last meeting as I sat over my lunch that afternoon in the hotel conservatory.

It was while I was finishing my coffee that the concierge came to tell me I was wanted urgently on the telephone. I was directed to a booth on the landing just outside, and after a little confusion with the operator, heard a voice which was vaguely familiar to me.

'Mr Banks? Mr Banks? Mr Banks, at last I have remembered. '

I remained silent, fearing if I said anything at all I would jeopardise our plans. But then the voice said:

'Mr Banks? Can you hear me? I have remembered something important. About the house we could not search. '

I realised it was Inspector Kung; his voice, though croaky, sounded startlingly rejuvenated.

'Inspector, excuse me. You took me by surprise. Please, tell me what you've remembered. '

‘Mr Banks. Sometimes, you know, when I indulge in a pipe, it helps me remember. Many things I have long forgotten drift before my eyes. So I thought very well, one last time, I shall go back to the pipe. And I remembered something the suspect told us. The house we could not search. It is directly opposite the house of a man called Yeh Chen.’

‘Yeh Chen? Who is that?’

‘I do not know. Many of the poorer people, they do not use street addresses. They talk of landmarks. The house we could not search. It is opposite Yeh Chen’s house.’

‘Yeh Chen. Are you sure that was the name?’

‘Yes, I’m sure. It came back very clearly.’

‘Is that a common name? How many people in Shanghai are likely to have that name?’

‘Fortunately there is one further detail the suspect gave us. This Yeh Chen is a blind man. The house you seek is opposite that of Yeh Chen the blind man. Of course, he may have moved house, or passed away. But if you could discover where this man lived at the time of our investigation ...’

‘Of course, Inspector. Why, this is immensely useful.’

‘I am glad. I thought you would find it so.’

‘Inspector, I cannot thank you enough.’

I had become aware of the time, and when I put down the phone, I did not return to my lunch, but went straight upstairs to my room to pack.

I recall a strange sense of unreality coming over me as I contemplated which items to take away. At one stage, I sat down on the bed and stared out at the sky visible through my window. It struck me as most curious how, only a day earlier, the piece of information I had just received would have constituted something utterly central to my life. But here I was, turning it over casually in my head, and already it felt like something consigned to a past era, something I need not remember if I did not wish to.

I must have completed my packing with time to spare, for when the knock came on my door at half past three precisely, I had been sitting in my chair waiting for a good while. I opened the door to a young Chinese man, perhaps not even twenty, dressed in a gown, his hat in his hand.

‘I am your driver, sir,’ he announced softly. ‘If you have suitcase, I will carry.’

As the young man steered the motor car away from the Cathay Hotel, I stared out at the busy crowds of Nanking Road in the afternoon sunshine, and felt I was watching them from a vast distance. I then settled myself in my seat, content to leave everything in the hands of my driver, who despite his youth appeared assured and competent. I was tempted to ask what his connection was with Sarah, but then remembered her caution about speaking any more than necessary. I thus remained silent, and soon found my thoughts turning to Macao and some photographs I had seen of the place many years ago in the British Museum.

Then after we had been travelling for perhaps ten minutes, I suddenly leant forward to the young man and said:

‘I say, excuse me. This is something of a long shot. But do you happen to know of anyone called Yeh Chen?’

The young man did not take his gaze from the traffic before him and I was about to repeat my question when he said:

‘Yeh Chen. Blind actor?’

‘Yes. Well, I know he’s blind, though I didn’t know he was an actor.’

‘Not famous actor. Yeh Chen. He was actor once, many years ago, when I was boy.’

‘Do you mean ... you know him?’

‘Not know him. But I know who he is. You interest in Yeh Chen, sir?’

‘No, no. Not especially. Someone just happened to mention him to me. It really doesn’t matter.’

I did not say anything else to the young man for the remainder of our journey. We travelled down a baffling series of little alleys and I had quite lost any sense of where we were by the time he pulled up in a quiet back street.

The young man opened my door and gave me my suitcase.

‘That shop,’ he said, pointing. ‘With phonograph.’

Across the street was a small shop with a grimy window, within which indeed a phonograph was displayed. I could see too a sign in English reading: ‘Gramophone Records. Piano Rolls. Manuscripts.’ Glancing up and down the street, I saw that apart from two rickshawmen squatting beside their vehicles and exchanging banter, the young man and I were alone. I picked up the suitcase and was about to cross the street, when something made me say to him:

‘I wonder, could you wait here a little?’

The young man looked puzzled. ‘Lady Medhurst say only to bring you here.’

‘Yes, yes. But I’m asking you now, you see. I’d like you to wait just a little longer, just in case I need your services further. Of course, I may not need you. But you know, just in case. Look here’ - I reached into my jacket and took out some bills - ‘look, I’ll make it worth your while.’

The young man’s face flushed with anger, and he spun away from the money as though I were proffering something quite repulsive. He sullenly got back into the car and slammed his door.

I saw I had made a miscalculation of some sort, but at that moment could not be bothered to worry about it. Besides, for all his anger, the young man had not started up the engine. I stuffed my money back into my jacket, picked up the suitcase again and crossed the street.

Inside, the shop was very cramped. The afternoon sun was streaming in, but somehow only a few dusty patches were lit by it. To one side was an upright piano with discoloured keys, and several gramophone records displayed without their sleeves along the music stand. I could see not only dust but cobwebs on the records. Elsewhere there were odd pieces of thick velvet - they appeared to be off-cuts from theatre curtains - nailed up on the walls, together with photographs of opera singers and dancers. I had perhaps expected Sarah to be standing there, but the only person present was a spindly European with a dark pointed beard sitting behind the counter.

‘Good afternoon,’ he said in a Germanic accent, glancing up from a ledgerbook spread before him. Then looking me up and down carefully, he asked: ‘You are English?’

‘Yes, I am. Good afternoon.’

‘We have some records from England. For example, we have a recording of Mimi Johnson singing “I Only Have Eyes for You”. Would you appreciate?’

Something in the cautious way he had spoken suggested this was the first part of an agreed code. But though I searched my memory for some password or phrase Sarah might have told me, I could remember nothing. In the end, I said:

‘I have no phonograph with me here in Shanghai. But I’m very fond of Mimi Johnson. In fact, I attended a recital of hers in London a few years ago.’

‘Really? Mimi Johnson, yes.’

I got the distinct impression I had puzzled him with the wrong response. So I said: 'Look here, my name is Banks. Christopher Banks.'

'Banks. Mr Banks.' The man said my name neutrally, then said: 'If you appreciate Mimi Johnson, "I Only Have Eyes for You", I shall play it for you. Please.'

He ducked under the counter, and I took the opportunity to look out of the shop window back into the street. The two rickshawmen were still laughing and talking, and I was reassured to see my young man still there in the car. Then just as I was wondering if there had not been some huge misunderstanding, the warm languid sound of a jazz orchestra filled the room. Mimi Johnson began to sing and I remembered how the song had been all the rage in London clubs a few years before.

After a while, I became aware of the spindly man indicating a spot on the rear wall hung with heavy dark drapes. I had not noticed before that there was a doorway there, but when I pushed, I indeed found myself stepping through into an inner room.

Sarah was sitting on a wooden trunk wearing a light coat and hat. A cigarette was burning in her holder and the cupboard-like room was already thick with her smoke. All around us were piles of gramophone records and sheet music stored in an assortment of cardboard boxes and tea-chests. There was no window, but I could see a back door, at that moment slightly ajar, which led outside.

'Well, here I am,' I said. 'I brought just the one suitcase as you insisted. But I see you've three yourself.'

'This bag here's just for Ethelbert. My teddy bear. He's been with me since, well, for ever really. Silly, isn't it?'

'Silly? No, not at all.'

‘When Cecil and I first came here, I made the mistake of putting Ethelbert in with a whole lot of other things. Then when I opened the case, his arm had fallen off. I found it right in a corner, stuck inside a slipper. So this time, give or take a few shawls, he’s got a whole bag all to himself. It is silly.’

‘No, no. I understand perfectly. Ethelbert, yes.’

She carefully put down her cigarette holder and stood up. Then we were kissing - just like, I suppose, a couple on the cinema screen. It was almost exactly as I had always imagined it would be, except there was something oddly inelegant about our embrace, and I tried more than once to adjust my posture; but my right foot was hard against a heavy box and I could not quite negotiate the necessary turn without risking my balance. Then she had taken a step back, breathing deeply, all the time looking into my face.

‘Is everything ready?’ I asked her.

She did not at first reply, and I thought she was about to kiss me again. But in the end, she said simply:

‘Everything’s fine. We just have several more minutes to wait. Then we’ll go out there’ - she indicated the back door - ‘walk down to the jetty and a sampan will take us out to our steamer two miles down the river. After that it’s Macao.’

‘And Cecil, does he have any idea at all?’

‘I didn’t see him all day. He set off for one of his little places straight after breakfast, and I expect he’s still there.’

‘It’s a great shame. Really, someone should tell him to pull himself together.’

‘Well, it’s no longer up to us to do so.’

‘No, I suppose not.’ I let out a sudden laugh. ‘I suppose it’s not up to us to do anything other than what we choose.’

‘That’s right. Christopher, is something wrong?’

‘No, no. I was just trying to ... I just wished ...’

I reached out to her, thinking to initiate another embrace, but she raised a hand, saying:

‘Christopher, I think you should sit down. Don’t worry, there’ll be time to do everything, everything, later.’

‘Yes, yes. I’m sorry.’

‘Once we’re in Macao, we can have a good think about our future. A good think about where would be good for us. And where would be good for Jennifer. We’ll spread all our maps out over the bed, look out of our room on to the sea and argue about it all. Oh, I’m sure we will argue. I’m looking forward even to our arguments. Are you going to sit down? Look, sit here.’

‘I say ... Look, if we have to wait a few minutes, let me just go and do something.’

‘Do something? What exactly?’

‘Just ... just something. Look really, I won’t be gone long, just a few minutes. You see, I just have to ask someone something.’

‘Who? Christopher, I don’t think we should talk to anyone at this point.’

‘That’s not what I mean, exactly. I fully realise the need for caution and so on. No, no, don’t worry. It’s just that young man. The one who you sent, the one who drove me here. I just need to ask him something.’

‘But surely he’s gone.’

‘No, he’s not. He’s still out there. Look, I’ll be straight back.’

I hurried out through the curtain back into the shop, where the spindly man with the beard looked up at me in surprise.

‘You appreciated Mimi Johnson?’ he asked.

‘Yes, yes. Wonderful. I just have to pop out for a second.’

‘May I make it clear, sir, that I am Swiss. There is no impending hostility between your country and mine.’

‘Ah yes. Splendid. I’ll be back in a moment.’

I hurried across the road towards the car. The young man, who had seen me, rolled down his window and smiled politely; there seemed no trace of his earlier temper. Stooping down to him, I said quietly:

‘Look here. This Yeh Chen. Do you have any idea where I might find him?’

‘Yeh Chen? He lives very near here.’

‘Yeh Chen. I’m talking about the blind Yeh Chen.’

‘Yes. Just over there.’

‘His house is over there?’

‘Yes, sir.’

‘Look here, you don’t seem to understand. Are you saying Yeh Chen, the blind Yeh Chen, that his house is just over there?’

‘Yes, sir. You may walk there, but if you wish, I take in car.’

‘Listen to me, this is very important. Do you know how long Yeh Chen has lived in his present house?’

The young man thought, then said: 'He always live there, sir. When I was boy, he live there.'

'Are you sure? Now look, this is most important. Are you sure this is the blind Yeh Chen, and that he's been living there for a long time?'

'I told you, sir. He there when I was small boy. My guess, he live there many, many years.'

I straightened, took a deep breath and thought about the full implications of what I had just heard. Then I leant down again and said: 'I think you should take me there. In the car, I mean. We have to approach this carefully. I'd like you to take me there, but to stop the car a little way away. Somewhere where we can see clearly the house opposite Yeh Chen's house. Do you understand?'

I got into the car and the young man started the engine. He turned the vehicle a full circle, then we took another narrow side-street. As we did so, many thoughts crowded into my mind at once. I wondered if I should tell the young man the significance of the journey we were making, and even considered asking if he was carrying a gun in the car - though in the end I decided such an enquiry might only panic him.

We turned a corner into an alley even narrower than the one before. Then we turned again and came to a halt. I thought for a second we had reached our destination, but then realised what had made us stop. In the alleyway before us was a crowd of young boys trying to control a bewildered water-buffalo. There was some sort of altercation going on between the boys, and as I watched, one of them gave the buffalo a clout on the nose with his stick. I felt a wave of alarm, remembering my mother's warnings throughout my childhood that these animals were as dangerous as any bull when riled. The creature did nothing, however, and the boys continued to argue. The young man sounded the horn several times to no avail, and finally, with a sigh, he began to reverse the vehicle back the way we had come.

We took another alley nearby, but this diversion appeared to confuse my driver, for after a few more turns, he stopped and reversed again, though this time there was no obstruction. At one point, we came out on to a broader rutted mud track with dilapidated wooden shacks all along one side.

‘Please hurry,’ I said. ‘I have very little time.’

Just then a huge crashing sound shook the ground we were travelling along. The young man continued to drive steadily, but looked nervously into the distance.

‘Fighting,’ he said. ‘Fighting started again.’

‘It sounded awfully close,’ I said.

For the next few minutes, we steered around more narrow corners and little wooden houses, blasting the horn to scatter children and dogs. Then the car came to another abrupt halt, and I heard the young man let out an exasperated sound. Looking past him, I saw the way ahead was blocked by a barricade of sandbags and barbed wire.

‘We must go all the way round,’ he said. ‘No other way.’

‘But look, we must be very close now.’

‘Very close, yes. But road blocked, so we must go all the way round. Be patient, sir. We get there soon.’

But a distinct change had entered the young man’s manner. His earlier assurance had faded, and now he struck me as ridiculously young to be driving a car, perhaps no more than fifteen or sixteen. For some time, we travelled through muddy, stinking streets, down more alleys where I thought we would at any moment plunge into the open gutters – but somehow the young man always managed to keep our wheels just clear of the edges. All the while, we could hear the sound of gunfire in the distance, and see people hurrying back to the safety of their houses and shelters. But there were still the children and dogs, seemingly belonging to no one, running everywhere before us, oblivious to any sense of danger. At one point, as we bumped our way across the yard of some small factory, I said:

‘Now look, why don’t you just stop and ask the way?’

‘Be patient, sir.’

‘Be patient? But you’ve no more idea where we’re going than I have.’

‘We get there soon, sir.’

‘What nonsense. Why do you persist in this charade? It’s typical of you Chinese. You’re lost, but you won’t admit it. We’ve been driving now for … well, it seems like an eternity.’

He said nothing, and brought us out on to a mud road that climbed steeply between large heaps of factory refuse. Then came another thunderous crash somewhere alarmingly near, and the young man dropped his speed to a crawl.

‘Sir. I think we go back now.’

‘Go back? Go back where?’

‘Fighting very near. Not safe here.’

‘What do you mean, the fighting’s near?’ Then an idea dawned on me. ‘Are we anywhere near Chapei?’

‘Sir. We in Chapei. We in Chapei some time.’

‘What? You mean we’ve left the Settlement?’

‘We in Chapei now.’

‘But … Good God! We’re actually outside the Settlement? In Chapei? Look here, you’re a fool, you know that? A fool! You told me the house was very near. Now we’re lost. We’re possibly dangerously close to the war zone. And we’ve left the Settlement! You're what I call a proper fool. Do you know why? I'll tell you. You pretend to know far more than you do. You're too proud to admit to your shortcomings. That's my definition of a fool exactly. A right fool! Do you hear me? A right and proper fool! '

He stopped the car. Then he opened his door and without glancing back, walked off.

It took me a moment to calm myself and assess the situation. We were most of the way up a hill, and the car was now in an isolated spot on a mud track surrounded by mounds of broken masonry, twisted wire and what looked like the mangled remains of old bicycle wheels. I could see the young man's figure marching up a footpath over the rim of the hill.

I got out and ran after him. He must have heard me coming, but he neither quickened his pace nor looked back. I caught up and stopped him by grasping his shoulder.

'Look, I'm sorry,' I said, panting a little. 'I apologise. I shouldn't have lost my temper. I apologise, I really do. No excuse for it. But you see, you've no idea what all this means. Now please' - I indicated back to the car - 'let's continue.'

The young man would not look at me. 'No more driving,' he said.

'But look, I've said I'm sorry. Now please, be reasonable.'

'No more driving. Too dangerous here. Fighting very near.'

'But listen, it's very important I get to this house. Very important indeed. Now tell me truthfully, please. Are you lost or do you really know where the house is?'

'I know. I know house. But too dangerous now. Fighting very near.'

As though to support his point, machine-gun fire suddenly echoed around us. It felt reasonably distant, but it was impossible to tell from which direction it was coming, and we both looked about us, feeling suddenly exposed on the hill.

‘I’ll tell you what,’ I said, and took from my pocket my notebook and pencil. ‘I can see you want no further part in all this, and I can understand your viewpoint. And I’m sorry again I was rude to you earlier. But I’d like you to do two more things for me before you go home. First, I’d like you please to write down here the address of Yeh Chen’s house.’

‘No address, sir. There is no address.’

‘Very well, then draw a map. Write down directions. Whatever. Please do it for me. Then after that, I’d like you to drive me to the nearest police station. Of course, that’s what I should have done from the start. I’ll need trained, armed men. Please.’

I gave him the notebook and pencil. Several pages were covered with notes from my enquiries earlier in the day. He turned the tiny pages until he came to a blank one. Then he said:

‘No English. Cannot write English, sir.’

‘Then write in whatever you can. Draw a map. Whatever. Please hurry.’

He appeared now to grasp the importance of what I was asking him to do. He thought carefully for a few seconds, then began to write rapidly. He filled one page, then another. After four or five pages he slotted the pencil back into the spine of the notebook and handed it to me. I glanced through what he had done, but could make no sense of the Chinese script. Nevertheless I said:

‘Thank you. Thank you very much indeed. Now please. Take me to a police station. Then you can go home.’

‘Police station this way, sir.’ He took several further steps in the direction he had been walking. Then from the crest of the hill, he pointed down to the bottom of the slope where, perhaps two hundred yards away, a mass of grey buildings began.

‘Police station there, sir.’

‘There? Which building?’

‘There. With flag.’

‘I see, yes. You’re sure that’s a police station?’

‘Sure, sir. Police station.’

From where we were standing, it certainly looked like a police station. I could see, moreover, that there was little point in trying to drive to it; the car had been left on the other side of the hill, and the track we had just come up was not wide enough for the vehicle; I could see we might easily get lost again trying to find a way around the hill. I put the notebook back into my pocket, and thought about presenting him with some banknotes, before remembering how offended he had been earlier. I therefore said simply:

‘Thank you. You’ve been of great help. I’ll manage by myself from here.’

The young man gave a quick nod of the head - he seemed still to be angry with me - then, turning, went off back down the slope in the direction of the car.

Chapter Eighteen

The police station looked to be abandoned. As I came down the slope, I could see broken windows and one of the entrance doors hanging off its hinges. But when I picked my way through the broken glass and went inside into the station's reception area, I was met by three Chinese men, two of whom pointed rifles at me, while the third brandished a garden spade. One of them - who was wearing a Chinese Army uniform - asked in halting English what I wanted. When I managed to convey who I was, and that I wished to speak with whomever was in charge, the men began to argue among themselves. Eventually the one holding the spade disappeared through into a back room, and the others kept their guns on me while we waited for his return. I took the opportunity to glance about me, and concluded it was unlikely there were any policemen left in the station. Although a few posters and notices remained up, the place looked to have been abandoned some time ago. Cables were dangling off one wall and the back section of the room had been gutted by fire.

After perhaps five minutes, the man with the spade came back. A few more exchanges followed in what I guessed was Shanghai dialect, before finally the soldier gestured that I should go with the man with the spade.

I followed the latter through into a back room, which turned out also to be guarded by armed men. But these stood aside for us, and soon I was going down some rickety stairs into the cellars of the police station.

My recollection is a little hazy now as to how we got down to the bunker. There were perhaps a few more rooms; I remember we walked along a kind of tunnel, stooping to avoid low beams; here too were sentries, and each time we encountered one of their looming black shapes, I was obliged to press myself right into the rough wall in order to squeeze past.

Eventually I was shown inside a windowless room that had been turned into some sort of makeshift military headquarters. It was lit by two bulbs dangling side by side from a central beam. The walls were of exposed brick, and in the wall to my right, there was gouged out a hole large enough for a man to climb through. There was a battered wireless set mounted in the opposite corner, while in the middle of the floor sat a big office desk - which I could see at a glance had been sawn in half, then crudely put back together again with rope and nails. Several upturned wooden boxes constituted the available seating, the only actual chair being occupied by an unconscious man who was tied up to it. He was in a Japanese marines' uniform, and one side of his face was a mass of bruising.

The only other people present were two Chinese Army officers, both on their feet, bent over some chart spread across the desk. They looked up as I entered, then one of them came forward and offered his hand.

'I am Lieutenant Chow. This is Captain Ma. We are both very honoured to have you visit us like this, Mr Banks. Have you come to lend us your moral support?'

'Well, in actual fact, Lieutenant, I came here with a specific request. However, I would hope that once my task is completed, morale will be boosted no end. Yours and everyone else's. But I'll need a little assistance, and this is why I've come to you.'

The lieutenant said something to the captain, who evidently did not understand English; then they both looked at me. Suddenly the unconscious Japanese in the chair vomited down the front of his uniform. We all turned to stare at him; then the lieutenant said:

‘You say you need assistance, Mr Banks. In what form exactly?’

‘I have here some directions, directions to a particular house. It’s imperative I reach this house without any further delay.

The directions are written in Chinese, which I’m unable to read. But you see, even if I could read them, I’d need a guide, someone familiar with this locality.’

‘So you wish for a guide.’

‘Not only that, Lieutenant. I will need four or five good men, more if possible. They will need to be trained and experienced, since this will be a delicate task.’

The lieutenant gave a little laugh; then making his features solemn once more, said: ‘Sir, we are at this moment very short of such men. This base is a crucial part of our defence force. And yet you saw for yourself how thinly it is guarded. In fact, the men you saw on the way in are either wounded, sick or inexperienced volunteers. Every man capable of sustained fighting we have pushed to the front.’

‘I appreciate, Lieutenant, that you’re in a demanding situation. But you have to understand, I’m not talking about just some casual enquiry I wish to make. When I say it’s imperative I reach this house ... Well, Lieutenant, I’ll tell you, there’s no need to keep it a secret. You and Captain Ma here can be the first to know. The house I wish to find, which I know is very near us now, is none other than the one in which my parents are being held. That’s right, Lieutenant! I’m talking about nothing less than the solving of this case after all these years. You see now why I felt my request, even at this busy moment for you, quite warranted.’

The lieutenant’s face remained fixed on mine. The captain asked him something in Mandarin, but the lieutenant did not reply. Then he said to me:

‘We are waiting for some men to return from a mission. Seven went out. We do not know if they will all return. It was my intention that they be sent to another location immediately. But now ... In this instance, I shall take personal responsibility. These men, however many of them may return, will accompany you on your mission.’

I sighed impatiently. ‘I thank you, Lieutenant. But how long will we have to wait for these men? Isn’t it possible for me to take a few of the men standing out there, just for several minutes? After all, the house is somewhere very near here. And you see, I have someone waiting ...’ I suddenly remembered Sarah, and a kind of panic seized me. I took another step forward and said: ‘In fact, Lieutenant, I wonder if I may use your telephone. I really should speak to her.’

‘I’m afraid there is no telephone here, Mr Banks. That is a radio, connected only with our headquarters and our other bases.’

‘Well then, it’s all the more imperative I clear this matter up without delay! You see, sir, there is a lady waiting, even as we speak! May I suggest I take three or four of the men out there guarding this base ...’

‘Mr Banks, please calm yourself. We will do all we can to assist you. But as I have said already, the men outside are not fit for such a mission. They will only jeopardise it. I understand you have waited many years to solve this case. I would counsel you not to act hastily at this juncture.’

There was good sense in the lieutenant’s words. With a sigh, I sat down on one of the upturned tea-chests.

‘The men should not be much longer now.’ said the lieutenant. ‘Mr Banks, may I see these directions you have?’

I was reluctant to let go of my notebook even for a few seconds. But in the end I handed it to the officer, opened at the appropriate pages. He studied the directions for a while, then returned the notebook to me.

‘Mr Banks, I should tell you. This house. It will not be so easy to reach.’

‘But I happen to know, sir, it’s very near here.’

‘It is near, that is true. Nevertheless, it will not be easy. Indeed, Mr Banks, it may even be behind Japanese lines by now.’

‘Japanese lines? Well, I suppose I could always reason with the Japanese. I have no quarrel with them myself.’

‘Sir, if you will come with me. I will show you, while we wait for the men, our exact position.’

For a moment, he spoke rapidly to the captain. He then walked towards a broom cupboard in the corner, flung open its door and stepped inside. It took me a moment to realise I was expected to follow, but then when I tried also to enter the cupboard, I almost walked into the heels of the lieutenant’s boots – which were now directly in front of my face. I heard his voice say from the darkness above:

‘If you will please follow me, Mr Banks. There are forty-eight rungs. It is better you keep at least five rungs below me.’

His feet disappeared. Stepping further into the cupboard, I reached out my hands and found some metal rungs on the brick before me. Far above in the darkness, I could see a little pond of sky. I guessed that we were at the bottom of a chimney, or an observation tower used by the police.

For the first few rungs, I found the going awkward; not only was I nervous of missing my grip in the dark, there was also the worry of the lieutenant slipping and falling down on to me. But eventually the patch of sky grew larger, and then I saw the lieutenant’s figure clambering out above me. In another minute or so, I had joined him.

We were standing up on a high flat roof surrounded on all sides by miles of densely packed rooftops. Away in the distance, perhaps a half-mile to the east, I could see a column of dark smoke rising into the late-afternoon sky.

‘It’s odd,’ I said, looking around me. ‘How do people get about down there? There appear to be no streets.’

‘That is certainly how it looks from up here. But perhaps you will care to look through these.’

He was holding out a pair of binoculars. I raised them to my eyes and spent some time adjusting them until I could see clearly, only to find I was gazing at a chimney stack a few yards in front of me. Eventually, though, I managed to focus on the column of smoke in the distance. The lieutenant’s voice said somewhere close beside me:

‘You are now looking at the warren, Mr Banks. The factory workers live there. I am sure in all the time you were a child here, you never visited the warren.’

‘The warren? No, I don’t think so.’

‘Almost certainly not. Foreigners rarely see such places unless they are missionaries. Or perhaps communists. I am Chinese, but I too, like many of my peers, was never permitted to go near such places. I knew almost nothing about the warren until ’32, the last time we fought the Japanese. You would not believe human beings could live like that. It is like an ants’ nest. Those houses, they were intended for the poorest people. Houses with tiny rooms, row after row, back to back. A warren. If you look carefully, you may see the lanes. Little alleys just wide enough to allow the people to get into their homes. At the back, the houses have no windows at all. The rear rooms are black holes, backing on to the houses behind. Forgive me, I am telling you this for a good reason, as you will see. The rooms were made small, because they were for the poor. There was a time when seven or eight people shared such a room. Then as the years went on, families were forced to make partitions, even within these small rooms, to share the rent with another family. And if they still couldn't pay the landlords, they would partition the room further. I remember seeing tiny black closets divided four times, each with a family in it. You do not believe this, Mr Banks, that human beings can live like this?'

'It does seem unbelievable, but if you've seen these conditions yourself, Lieutenant ...'

'When the fight against the Japanese is over, Mr Banks, I will consider giving my services to the communists. You think that is a dangerous thing to say? There are many officers who would rather fight under the communists than under Chiang.'

I moved the binoculars over the dense mass of shabby roofs. I could see now that many of them were broken through. I could decipher, moreover, the lanes the lieutenant had mentioned, narrow passageways threading here and there into the tenements.

'But this is no shanty town,' the lieutenant's voice was continuing. 'Even if the partitions erected by the tenants are flimsy, the essential structure, the warren itself, is brick. This proved crucial in '32 when the Japanese attacked, and it is proving so to us now.'

'I can see that,' I said. 'A solid warren defended by soldiers. No easy prospect for the Japanese, even with their modern weapons.'

'You are right. The Japanese weaponry, even their training, counts for almost nothing down there. Fighting is reduced to rifles, bayonets, knives, pistols, spades, meat cleavers. The Japanese line, in the past week, has actually been pushed back. You see that smoke, Mr Banks? That point was held by the enemy only last week. But now we have pushed them back.'

‘Are there civilians still living down there?’

‘There are indeed. You may not believe it, but even close to the front, some of the houses in the warren are still occupied. This makes it even harder for the Japanese. They cannot shell indiscriminately. They know the Western powers are watching and they fear ruthlessness will have a cost.’

‘How long can your troops hold out?’

‘Who knows? Chiang Kai-shek may send us reinforcements. Or the Japanese might decide to give up and redeploy, concentrate instead on Nanking or Chunking. It is by no means certain we will not still be victorious. But the fighting recently has cost us dearly. If you will move your field glasses to the left, Mr Banks. Now, do you see that road? Yes? That road is known locally as Pigs’ Alley. It doesn’t look an impressive road, but now it is very important to the outcome. As you see, that is the one road that runs along the edge of the warren. At the moment, our troops have sealed it off, and have managed to keep the Japanese out. If they are able to come down that road, the warren can be penetrated all along the side. There will be no point in our attempting to hold out. We will have been flanked. You asked for men to accompany you to the house where your parents are. The men who will accompany you would otherwise have been deployed defending the barricade at the top of Pigs’ Alley. The last few days, the fighting there has become desperate. Meanwhile, of course, we are having also to hold our line across the warren.’

‘From up here, you wouldn’t think there was so much going on down there.’

‘Indeed. But I can assure you, inside the warren, things are now very bad. I tell you this, Mr Banks, since you are intending to go in there.’

For a moment or two, I went on gazing through the glasses in silence. Then I said: 'Lieutenant, that house, the house where my parents are being held. Will I be able to see it from up here?'

His hand touched my shoulder briefly, though I did not take my eyes from the binoculars.

'Do you see, Mr Banks, the remains of that tower standing to the left? It looks like one of those Easter Island figures. Yes, yes, that's it. If you draw a line from that over to the remains of that large black building to the right, the old textile warehouse, that was, this morning, the line to which our men had beaten back the Japanese. The house where your parents are being held is roughly level with that tall chimney on your left. If you draw a line, very level with it across the warren, until you come to just a little left of where we are now standing. Yes, yes ...'

'You mean near that roof, the one with the eaves pointing up into a kind of arch ...'

'Yes, that's it. Of course, I cannot say with certainty. But according to those directions you showed me, that is roughly where the house is.'

I stared through the field glasses at that particular roof. For some time I could not stop staring, even though I was conscious of keeping the lieutenant from his duties. After a while, it was the lieutenant who said:

'It must feel strange. To think you might be looking at the very house containing your parents.'

'Yes. Yes, it does feel a little strange.'

'Of course, it might not be that house. That was simply a guess on my part. But it will be somewhere very near it. That tall chimney I showed you, Mr Banks. The locals refer to it as the East Furnace. The chimney you can see much closer to us, almost directly in line with the other one, belongs to the West Furnace. Before the fighting, the inhabitants used to burn their refuse at one or other of these places. I would advise you, sir, to use the furnaces as your landmarks once you are within the warren. Otherwise it is hard for a stranger to keep his bearings. Look again carefully at that far chimney, sir. Remember, the house you seek is only a little way away from it, in a direct line due south.'

I finally lowered the binoculars. 'Lieutenant, you've been most kind. I can't tell you how grateful I am to you. In fact, if it won't embarrass you, you will perhaps permit me to mention you by name during the ceremony that will take place at Jessfield Park to commemorate the freeing of my parents.'

'Really, my help has not been so significant. Besides, Mr Banks, you must not assume your task is accomplished. Standing up here, it does not look far away. But inside the warren there is a lot of fighting. Although you are not a combatant, it will still be difficult to move from house to house. And aside from the two furnaces, there are few clear landmarks surviving. Then you must bring your parents out safely. In other words, you still have a daunting task ahead of you. But now, Mr Banks, I suggest we go back down. The men may well have returned by now and be awaiting my orders. And as for you, Mr Banks, you must try and come back before nightfall. It is hellish enough moving about the warren in daylight. At night, it will be like drifting through one's worst nightmares. If you are overtaken by darkness, I would advise you to find some safe place and wait with the men until morning. Only yesterday, two of my men killed each other, they were so disorientated in the dark.'

'I've taken to heart everything you've said, Lieutenant. Well then, let's be going back down.'

Downstairs, Captain Ma was talking to a soldier in a badly torn uniform. The latter did not appear to be wounded, but seemed shocked and upset. The Japanese in the chair was now snoring, as though enjoying a peaceful nap, though I noticed he had vomited some more down the front of his clothes.

The lieutenant conferred quickly with the captain, then questioned the soldier in the torn uniform. Then he turned to me and said:

‘It is bad news. The others have not returned. Two have certainly been killed. The remainder are trapped, although there is a good chance they will yet escape. The enemy has, if only temporarily, made an advance, and it may well be that the house your parents are in is now behind their lines.’

‘Regardless of that, Lieutenant, I still need to proceed, and without any further delay. Look here, if the men you promised me haven’t returned, then perhaps, though I realise it’s a lot to ask, perhaps you’d be good enough to escort me yourself. Honestly, sir, I can’t think of a more suitable person to assist me at this point.’

The lieutenant thought this over with a grave expression. ‘Very well, Mr Banks,’ he said finally. ‘I shall do as you ask. But we must hurry. I should not really leave this post at all. To do so for any length of time could have the most awful consequences.’

He issued rapid instructions to the captain, then opening a drawer in the desk, began placing a number of items into his pockets and belt.

‘It is better you do not carry a rifle, Mr Banks. But do you have a pistol? No? Then take this. It is German and very reliable. You should keep it concealed and if we encounter the enemy, you must not hesitate to declare your neutrality immediately and clearly. Now, if you will follow me.’

Taking a rifle that was leaning against the desk, he strode over to the hole gouged into the opposite wall and nimbly climbed through. I pushed the pistol into my belt, where it was more or less concealed by my jacket, then hurried after him.

Chapter Nineteen

It is only hindsight that makes the first part of that journey appear relatively easy. At the time, as I stumbled after the lieutenant's striding figure, it certainly did not feel that way. My feet quickly began to smart from the rubble-strewn ground, and I found terribly awkward the contortions required to negotiate the holes in each wall.

Of the latter, there seemed an unending number, all of them more or less similar to the one in the cellar command base. Some were smaller, some large enough for two men to squeeze through at the same time; but they had all been gouged out with rough edges, and required a little jump to climb through. Before long I found myself close to exhaustion; no sooner had I clambered through one such hole than I would spot the lieutenant ahead of me, smartly easing his way through the next wall.

Not all the walls were still standing; sometimes we would pick our way through the debris of what must have been three or four houses before encountering another wall. The roofs were almost all smashed, often absent altogether, so that we had plenty of daylight from the sky - though here and there, heavy shadows made it easy to lose one's step. More than once, until I grew more accustomed to the terrain, my foot slipped painfully between two jagged slabs or sank ankle-deep into fragmented rubble.

It was all too easy in such circumstances to forget we were passing through what only several weeks before had been the homes of hundreds of people. In fact, I often had the impression we were moving through not a slum district, but some vast, ruined mansion with endless rooms. Even so, every now and then it would occur to me that in among the wreckage beneath our feet lay cherished heirlooms, children's toys, simple but much-loved items of family life, and I would find myself suddenly overcome with renewed anger towards those who had allowed such a fate to befall so many innocent people. I thought again of those pompous men of the International Settlement, of all the prevarications they must have employed to evade their responsibilities down so many years, and at such moments I felt my fury mount with so much intensity I was on the verge of calling out to the lieutenant to halt, just so I could give vent to it.

The lieutenant did, though, pause at one point of his own accord, and as I caught up with him, said:

‘Mr Banks, please take a good look at this.’ He was indicating a little over to our left, towards a large boiler-like construction which, though covered in masonry dust, had remained more or less intact. ‘This is the West Furnace. If you look up there, you will see the nearer of the two tall chimneys we saw earlier from the roof. The East Furnace is similar in appearance to this, and it will be our next clear landmark. When we reach it, we shall know we are very close to the house.’

I studied the furnace carefully. A chimney of some girth emerged from above its shoulders, and when I took a few steps closer and looked up, I could see the huge chimney going off way up into the sky. I was still staring up at it when I heard my companion say:

‘Please, Mr Banks. We must continue. It is important we complete our task before the sun sets.’

It was several minutes after the West Furnace that the lieutenant’s manner became noticeably more cautious. His tread became deliberate, and at each hole, he would first peer through, his rifle poised, listening intently, before climbing up. I also began to spot more and more stacks of sandbags, or coils of barbed wire, left within reach of the holes. When I first heard the machine-gun, I abruptly froze, believing we were under fire. But then I saw the lieutenant before me still walking, and with a deep breath, went on after him.

Eventually I came through a hole to find myself in a much larger space. In fact, in my exhausted condition, I thought I had entered the bombed remains of one of those grand ballrooms I had been taken to in the Settlement. I then realised we were standing in an area once occupied by several rooms; the partition walls had almost entirely vanished, so that the next good wall was all of twenty-five yards away. There I could see seven or eight soldiers lined up, their faces to the brick. I at first took them for prisoners, but then saw how each man was standing before a small hole through which he had inserted the barrel of his rifle. The lieutenant had already crossed the rubble and was talking to a man crouched behind a machine-gun mounted on a tripod. This machine-gun arrangement was positioned before the largest hole - the one through which we would have to climb to continue our journey. Coming closer, moreover, I saw the perimeters of the hole had been decked with barbed wire, allowing only enough space for the gun barrel to manoeuvre.

I supposed at first the lieutenant was asking the man to remove this obstacle out of our way, but then I saw how tense all those present had become. The man behind the machine-gun, all the time the lieutenant spoke to him, never took his gaze from the hole before him. The other soldiers too, all along the wall, remained still and poised, their attention utterly focused on whatever was on the other side.

Once the alarming implications of this scene had sunk in, I felt inclined to climb back through the previous hole. But then I saw the lieutenant returning towards me and remained where I was.

‘We have some trouble,’ he said. ‘A few hours ago the Japanese managed to push forward a little way. We have now beaten them back again and the line has been re-established where it was this morning. However, it would seem several Japanese soldiers did not retreat with the others, and are now caught behind our line. They are completely cut off and thus very dangerous. My men believe they are at this moment on the other side of that wall.'

'Lieutenant, you're not suggesting, are you, that we delay while this matter sorts itself out?'

'I am afraid we will have to wait, certainly.'

'But for how long?'

'It is hard to predict. These soldiers are trapped, and they will be either captured or killed in the end. But meanwhile they have weapons and are very dangerous.'

'You mean we could wait for hours? Days even?'

'That is possible. It would be very dangerous at this point for the two of us to continue.'

'Lieutenant, I'm surprised at you. I was under the impression that you, an educated man, were fully aware of the urgency of our present undertaking. Surely there's some other route we could take to by-pass these soldiers.'

'There are other routes. But it remains the case that however we proceed, we will be in considerable danger. Unfortunately, sir, I see no alternative but to wait. It is possible the situation will be resolved before long. Excuse me.'

One of the soldiers by the wall had been signalling urgently, and now the lieutenant began to go across the rubble towards him. But just then the machine-gunner let loose a deafening burst of fire, and when he ceased there was an extended scream coming from beyond the wall. The scream began full-throated, then tapered off into a strange high-pitched whimper. It was an eerie sound and I became quite transfixed listening to it. It was only when the lieutenant came rushing back and pulled me down behind some fallen masonry that I realised there were bullets hitting the wall behind me. The men at the next wall were now firing too, and then the machine-gunner let off another burst. The authority of his weapon seemed to silence all the others, and thereafter, for what felt like an inordinate time, the only sound to be heard came from the wounded man beyond the wall. His high-pitched whimpers continued for several moments, then he began to shout something in Japanese over and over; every now and again the voice would rise to a frantic shriek, then die away again to a whimper. This disembodied voice echoed unnervingly around the ruins, but the Chinese soldiers in front of me remained utterly still, their concentration not wavering from what they could see through the wall. Suddenly the machine-gunner turned and vomited on the ground beside him, before immediately turning back to the wire-decked hole in front. From the way he did this, it was not easy to tell if his sickness had to do with nerves, the sounds of the dying man, or simply some stomach complaint.

Then eventually, though their postures hardly changed, the soldiers all perceptibly relaxed. I heard the lieutenant say beside me:

‘So you see now, Mr Banks, that it is no easy matter to proceed from here.’

We had been crouching down on our knees, and I noticed my light flannel suit was now almost entirely covered in dust and grime. I took a few seconds to collect my thoughts before saying:

‘I appreciate the risks. But we must nevertheless continue. Particularly with all this fighting going on, my parents shouldn’t be left in that house a moment longer than necessary. May I suggest we take these men here with us? Then if these Japanese soldiers set upon us, we’d be much the stronger.’

‘As the commanding officer here, I cannot possibly sanction such an idea, Mr Banks. If these men leave their position, the headquarters would become entirely vulnerable.

Besides, I will be putting the men's lives at needless risk.'

I gave a sigh of exasperation. 'I must say, Lieutenant, it was pretty sloppy work on the part of your men to have allowed these Japanese in behind your line. If all your people had been doing their jobs properly, I'm sure such a thing would never have arisen.'

'My men have fought with commendable bravery, Mr Banks. It is hardly their fault that your mission is, for the time being, inconvenienced.'

'What do you mean by that, Lieutenant? What are you implying?'

'Please calm yourself, Mr Banks. I am merely pointing out it is not the fault of my men if ...'

'Then whose fault is it, sir? I realise what you're implying! Oh yes! I know you've been thinking it for some time now. I was wondering when you'd finally come out with it.'

'Sir, I have no idea what ...'

'I know full well what you've been thinking all this time, Lieutenant! I could see it in your eyes. You believe this is all my fault, all this, all of it, all this terrible suffering, this destruction here, I could see it in your face when we were walking through it all just now. But that's because you know nothing, practically nothing, sir, concerning this matter. You may well know a thing or two about fighting, but let me tell you it's quite another thing to solve a complicated case of this kind. You obviously haven't the slightest idea what's involved. Such things take time, sir! A case like this one, it requires great delicacy. I suppose you imagine you can just rush at it with bayonets and rifles, do you? It's taken time, I accept that, but that's in the very nature of a case like this. But I don't know why I bother to say all this. What would you understand about it, a simple soldier?’

‘Mr Banks, there is no need for us to quarrel. I have only the most sincere good wishes for your success. I am simply telling you what is possible ...’

‘I’m getting less and less interested in your idea of what is and isn’t possible, Lieutenant. If I may say so, you’re hardly a good advertisement for the Chinese Army. Do I take it you’re now going back on your word? That you’re unwilling to accompany me beyond this point? I take it that’s so. I’m to be left to carry out this difficult task by myself. Very well, I shall do so! I shall raid the house single-handed!’

‘I think, sir, you should calm yourself before saying anything more ...’

‘And one other thing, sir! You can safely assume I will no longer be mentioning you by name at the Jessfield Park celebration. At least if I do, it will not be in a complimentary light ...’

‘Mr Banks, please, listen to me. If you are determined to continue, despite the danger, then I cannot stop you. But you will undoubtedly be safer alone. With me, you certainly run the risk of being fired upon. You, on the other hand, are a white man in civilian clothes. As long as you are very careful, and announce yourself clearly before any encounter, it is possible you will come to no harm. Of course, I repeat my recommendation that you wait until the situation here is resolved. But then again, as someone myself with ageing parents, I can well understand your feelings of urgency.’

I rose to my feet and brushed off as much dust as I could. ‘Well then, I shall be on my way,’ I said coldly.

‘In that case, Mr Banks, please take this with you.’ He was holding out a small torch. ‘My advice, as before, is to stop and wait if you do not reach your destination by dark.

But I can see from your present attitude you might well be inclined to push on. In which case, you will certainly need the torch. The batteries are not new, so do not use it any more than you need to.'

I dropped the torch into my jacket pocket, then thanked him somewhat grudgingly, already rather regretting my outburst. The dying man had now stopped trying to talk and was just screaming again. I had begun to walk towards the sound, when the lieutenant said:

'You can't go that way, Mr Banks. You will have to move north for a while, then try to navigate yourself back on course later. Come this way, sir.'

For a few minutes, he led me on a path perpendicular to the one we had been taking. In time we came to another wall with a hole gouged out of it.

'You should go this way for at least half a mile before turning east again. You may still meet soldiers, from either side. Remember what I told you. Keep your revolver hidden, and always announce your neutrality. If you encounter any of the inhabitants, ask them to direct you to the East Furnace. I wish you luck, sir, and I regret I cannot assist you further.'

After I had been moving north for several minutes, I noticed the houses becoming less damaged. This did not, however, make my journey any the easier; the roofs being more intact meant I had to make do with a much murkier light - I had decided to save the torch till nightfall - and I would often have to feel my way along a wall for some distance before coming across an opening. There was, for some reason, far more broken glass in this vicinity, and also large areas submerged in stagnant water. I frequently heard the scuttling of large groups of rats, and once trod on a dead dog, but could not hear any sounds of fighting.

It was at around this stage of the journey that I found myself thinking again and again of Jennifer, sitting in the prefects' room on that sunny afternoon we had parted - and in particular, of her face as she had made that curious vow, uttered so earnestly, to 'help me' when she was older. Once, as I groped my way forward, an absurd picture came into my head of the poor child struggling after me through this ghastly terrain, determined to make good her promise, and I suddenly felt a rush of emotion that all but brought tears to my eyes.

Then I came upon a hole in a wall through which I could see only pitch blackness, but from which came the most overwhelming stink of excrement. I knew that to keep on course I should climb through into that room, but I simply could not bear the idea and kept walking. This fastidiousness cost me dear, for I did not find another opening for some time, and thereafter, I had the impression of drifting further and further off my route.

By the time it grew completely dark and I began to use the torch, I was coming across many more signs of habitation. I would often stumble into a barely damaged chest of drawers or shrine, even whole rooms in which the furnishings were hardly disturbed, giving the impression the family had just gone out for the day. But then right next to such places I would discover more rooms utterly destroyed or flooded.

There were, too, more and more stray dogs - scrawny beasts I feared might attack me, but which invariably shrank away growling when I shone my beam at them. Once I came upon three dogs savagely tearing something apart, and drew my pistol, so convinced was I they would come for me; but even these animals meekly watched me pass, as though they had come to respect the carnage a man was capable of wreaking.

I was not so surprised, then, when I came across the first family. I found them in my torch beam, cowering back into a dark corner: several children, three women, an elderly man. Around them were the bundles and utensils of their existence. They stared at me in fear, brandishing makeshift weapons, which they lowered only slightly at my words of reassurance. I tried to enquire if I was anywhere near the East Furnace, but they returned only uncomprehending stares. I came across three or four more such families in the nearby houses - increasingly, I was able to use actual doorways rather than openings in walls - but found them no more responsive.

Then I entered a larger space, the far side of which was bathed in the reddish glow of a lantern. There were a lot of people standing about in the shadows - again, predominantly women and children with a few elderly men among them. I had begun to utter my usual words of reassurance, when I sensed something odd in the atmosphere, and stopping, reached instead for my revolver.

Faces turned to me in the lantern glow. But then almost immediately the gazes returned to the far corner where a dozen or so children had crowded around something down on the ground. Some of the children were poking with sticks at whatever it was, and then I noticed that many of the adults were holding at the ready sharpened spades, choppers and other improvised weapons. It was as though I had disturbed some dark ritual, and my first inclination was to walk on past. Perhaps it was because I heard a noise, or perhaps it was some sixth sense; but I then found myself, revolver still drawn, moving towards the circle of children. The latter seemed reluctant to reveal what they had, but gradually their shadows parted. I then saw in the dim red glow the figure of a Japanese soldier lying quite still on his side. His hands were tied behind his back; his feet too had been bound. His eyes were closed, and I could see a dark patch soaking its way through his uniform under the armpit further from the ground. His face and hair were covered in dust and speckled with blood. For all that, I recognised Akira with no difficulty.

The children had started to gather round again, and one boy prodded Akira's body with a stick. I commanded them to get back, waving my revolver, and eventually the children retreated a little way, all watching carefully.

Akira's eyes remained closed while I looked him over. His uniform was torn away at the back, right down to his raw skin, suggesting he had been dragged along the ground. The wound near his armpit was probably caused by shrapnel. There was a swelling and cut on the back of his head. But he was so covered in grime, and the light was so poor, it was hard to ascertain how serious these injuries were. When I shone the torch on him, heavy shadows fell everywhere, making it even harder to see clearly.

Then, after I had been examining him for a few moments, he opened his eyes.

'Akira!' I said, bringing my face close. 'It's me. Christopher!'

It occurred to me that with the light behind my head, I would appear to him no more than an intimidating silhouette. I thus called his name again, this time turning the torch beam on to my face. It is possible this action only served to make me look like some hideous apparition, for Akira grimaced, then spat contemptuously at me. He could not summon much force and the saliva dribbled down his cheek.

'Akira! It's me! How fortunate to find you like this. Now I can help you.'

He looked at me, then said: 'Let me die.'

'You're not dying, old chap. You've lost some blood, and you've had something of a rough time of it lately. But we'll get you to some proper help and you'll be fine, you'll see.'

'Pig. Pig. '

'Pig? '

'You. Pig. ' Again he spat at me, and again the spittle dribbled out of his mouth without force.

'Akira. Clearly you still don't realise who I am. '

'Let me die. Die like soldier. '

'Akira, it's me. Christopher. '

'I not know. You pig. '

'Listen, let me get these ropes off you. Then you'll feel much better. Then you'll soon come to your senses. '

I glanced over my shoulder, thinking to demand some tool with which to cut his bonds. I then saw that all the people in the room had gathered in a crowd just a little way behind me - many holding weapons of one sort or another - as though posing for a sinister group photograph. I was somewhat taken aback - I had for the moment forgotten about them - and felt for my revolver. But just at that moment, Akira said with a new energy:

'If you cut string, I kill you. You warn, okay, English? '

'What are you talking about? Look, you blockhead, it's me, your friend. I'm going to help you. '

'You pig. Cut string, I kill you. '

'Look, these people here will kill you just as quickly. In any case, your wounds will become infected soon. You have to let me help you. '

Suddenly two of the Chinese women began to shout. One appeared to be addressing me, while the other was shouting to the back of the crowd. For a moment confusion reigned, then a boy of around ten emerged holding a sickle. As he came into the light, I could see a piece of fur - perhaps the remains of a rodent - dangling from the point of the blade. It struck me the boy was holding the sickle with such care so as not to let this offering drop, but then the woman who had shouted at me grabbed the sickle and whatever it was fell to the ground.

'Now look,' I stood up and cried at the crowd. 'You've made a mistake. This is a good man. My friend. Friend.'

The woman shouted again, indicating I should step aside.

'But he's not your enemy,' I went on. 'He's a friend. He's going to help me. Help me to solve the case.'

I raised the revolver and the woman stepped back. Meanwhile, everyone else was talking at once and a child began to cry. Then an old man was pushed to the front, a young girl holding his hand.

'I speak English,' he said.

'Well, thank goodness for that,' I said. 'Kindly tell everyone present that this man here is my friend. That he's going to help me.'

'Him. Japanese soldier. He kill Aunt Yun.'

'I'm sure he didn't. Not him personally.'

'He kill and steal.'

'But not this man. This is Akira. Did anyone see him, this particular man, kill or steal? Go on, ask them.'

Rather reluctantly, the old man turned and muttered something. This provoked more arguing, and another weapon, a sharpened spade, was handed round and grasped by one of the other women at the front.

'Well?' I asked the old man. 'Aren't I right? No one saw Akira personally do any wrong.'

The old man shook his head, perhaps to disagree, perhaps to indicate he had not understood. Behind me, Akira made a noise and I turned to him.

‘Look, you see? It’s just as well I came by. They’ve got you mixed up with some other fellow, and they want to kill you. For God’s sake, do you still not know who I am? Akira! It’s me, Christopher!’

I took my eyes off the crowd, and turning fully to him, shone the torch into my face again. Then when I clicked it off, I saw for the first time the beginnings of recognition on his face.

‘Christopher,’ he said, almost experimentally.
‘Christopher.’

‘Yes, it’s me. Really. It’s been a long time. And not a moment too soon, it would seem.’

‘Christopher. My friend.’

Rising, I looked through the crowd, then gestured to a young boy holding a kitchen knife to come closer. When I took the knife from him, the woman with the sickle moved threateningly towards me, but I raised the revolver and shouted to her to keep her distance. Then kneeling down again beside Akira, I went about cutting his bonds. I had imagined Akira had said ‘string’ because of his limited English, but I now saw he was indeed tied with old twine that yielded easily under the blade.

‘Tell them,’ I said to the old man, as Akira’s hands came free, ‘tell them he’s my friend. And that we’re going to solve the case together. Tell them they’ve made a big mistake. Go on, tell them!’

As I turned my attention to Akira’s feet, I could hear the old man muttering something and arguments starting again in the crowd. Then Akira sat up cautiously and looked at me.

‘My friend Christopher,’ he said. ‘Yes, we friends.’

I sensed the crowd moving in and sprang to my feet. Perhaps in my anxiety for my friend, I shouted in an unnecessarily strident tone: 'Don't any of you come any nearer! I'll shoot, I really will!' Then turning to the old man, I cried: 'Tell them to get back! Tell them to get back if they know what's good for them!'

I do not know what the old man translated. In any case, the effect on the crowd - whose belligerence, I now realised, I had much overestimated - was utter confusion. Half of them appeared to believe I wished them over by the wall to our left, while the remainder assumed I had commanded them to sit down on the ground. They were all of them clearly alarmed by my demeanour, and in their anxiety to comply, were stumbling over one another and shouting in panic.

Akira, realising he had to seize his chance, made an attempt to climb to his feet. I hoisted him up by his arm, and for a moment we stood swaying together unsteadily. I was obliged to tuck the revolver back in my belt to free my other hand, and we then tried a step or two together. A putrid smell was coming from his wound, but pushing this out of my mind, I shouted over my shoulder, no longer caring how many of them understood:

'You'll see soon enough! You'll see you made a mistake!'

'Christopher,' Akira murmured in my ear. 'My friend. Christopher.'

'Look here,' I said to him quietly. 'We have to get away from these people. That doorway in the corner over there. Do you think you can manage it?'

Akira, leaning heavily on my shoulder, looked into the dimness. 'Okay. We go.'

His legs appeared unhurt and he walked reasonably well. But then after six or seven steps together, he stumbled, and for a moment, in our efforts to keep from collapsing in a heap, we must have looked to the onlookers as though we were wrestling one another. But we managed to find a new arrangement, and recommenced our walk. Once, a small boy ran forward to hurl some mud at us, but was immediately hauled back. Then Akira and I were at the doorway - the door itself had disappeared - and staggered through into the next house.

Chapter Twenty

Once we had come through two further walls and there was still no sign of our being pursued, I felt for the first time a kind of exhilaration at being finally reunited with my old friend. I found myself laughing a few times as we staggered on together; then Akira too gave a laugh, and the years seemed to melt away between us.

‘How long has it been, Akira? It’s been such a long time.’

He was moving painfully by my side, but he managed to say: ‘A long time, yes.’

‘You know, I went back. To the old house. I suppose yours is still next door.’

‘Yes. Next door.’

‘Oh, have you been back too? But of course, you’ve been here all the time. You wouldn’t see it as anything so special.’

‘Yes,’ he said again, with some effort. ‘Long time. Next door.’

I brought us to a halt and sat him on the remnants of a wall. Then carefully removing the ragged jacket of his uniform, I examined his wounds again, using the torch and my magnifying glass. I was still unable to ascertain a great deal; I had been afraid that the wound under his arm was gangrenous, but it now struck me the foul smell might be coming from something smeared on his clothes, perhaps from where he had been lying on the ground. On the other hand, I noted that he was alarmingly hot and utterly drenched in sweat.

Removing my jacket, I tore several strips off the lining to use as dressings. Then I did my best to clean the wound with my handkerchief. Though I tried to wipe the pus off as gently as possible, his sharp intakes of breath told me I was causing him pain.

‘I’m sorry, Akira. I’ll try to be less clumsy.’

‘Clumsy,’ he said, as though turning the word over. Then he gave a sudden laugh and said: ‘You help me. Thank you.’

‘Of course I’m helping you. And very soon, we’ll get you proper medical help. Then you’ll be fine in no time. But before we do that, you’ll have to help me. There’s a very urgent task for us first, and you’ll understand better than anyone why it’s so urgent. You see, Akira, I’ve located it at last. The house where my parents are being held. We’re very near it at this moment. You know, old chap, for a time, I was thinking I’d have to go into that house alone. I’d have done it, but really, it would have been an awful risk. Goodness knows how many kidnappers are in there. I’d originally reckoned on getting a few Chinese soldiers to help, but that’s proved impossible. I was even thinking of asking the Japanese to help me. But now, the two of us together, we’ll do it, we’ll manage the thing for sure.’

I was all this time attempting to tie the improvised bandage around his torso and neck in such a way as to maintain some pressure on the wound. Akira watched me carefully, and when I stopped speaking, smiled and said:

‘Yes. I help you. You help me. Good.’

‘But Akira, I have to confess to you. I’ve got myself rather lost. I was doing quite well till shortly before I came across you. But now, I really don’t know which way to go. We have to look out for something called the East Furnace. A large thing with a chimney. I wonder, old chap, do you have any idea where we might find this furnace?’

Akira was continuing to look at me, his chest heaving. When I caught sight of him like that, I was suddenly reminded of those times when we had so often sat together at the top of the mound in our garden, recovering our breath. I was about to mention this to him when he said:

‘I know. I know this place.’

‘You know how to get to the East Furnace? From here?’

He nodded. ‘I fight here, many weeks. Here, I know just like’ - he suddenly grinned - ‘like my home village.’

I smiled too, but the remark had puzzled me. ‘Which home village is this?’ I asked.

‘Home village. Where I born.’

‘You mean the Settlement?’

Akira was quiet for a moment, then said: ‘Okay. Yes. Settlement. International Settlement. My home village.’

‘Yes,’ I said. ‘I suppose it’s my home village too.’

We both began to laugh, and for a few moments we went on giggling and laughing together, perhaps a little uncontrollably. When we had calmed down somewhat, I said:

‘I’ll tell you an odd thing, Akira. I can say this to you. All these years I’ve lived in England, I’ve never really felt at home there. The International Settlement. That will always be my home.’

‘But International Settlement ...’ Akira shook his head. ‘Very fragile. Tomorrow, next day ...’ He waved a hand in the air.

‘I know what you mean,’ I said. ‘And when we were children, it seemed so solid to us. But as you put it just now. It’s our home village. The only one we have.’

I began to put his uniform back on him, taking every care not to hurt him unnecessarily.

‘Is that any better, Akira? I’m sorry I can’t do more for you just now. We’ll get you properly seen to very soon. But now, we’ve important work to do. You tell me where we go.’

Our progress was slow. It was hard for me to keep the torch pointed before us, and we often stumbled in the dark, at great cost to Akira. Indeed, he more than once came close to losing consciousness on that lap of our journey, and his weight around my shoulders grew immense. Nor was I without my own injuries; most annoyingly, my right shoe had split apart, and my foot was badly gashed, causing a searing pain to rise with each step. Sometimes we were so exhausted we could go no more than a dozen steps without stopping again. But we resolved on these occasions not to sit down, and would stand swaying together, gasping for breath, re-adjusting our weights in an attempt to relieve one pain at the expense of another. The rancid smell from his wound grew worse, and the constant scuffling of the rats around us was unnerving, but we did not, at this stage, hear any sounds of fighting.

I did what I could to keep our spirits up, making light-hearted remarks whenever I had the breath. In truth, though, my feelings concerning this reunion were, during those moments, of a complex hue. There was no doubting my huge gratitude at fate’s bringing us together just in time for our great undertaking. But at the same time, a part of me was saddened that our reunion – which I had thought about for so long – should be taking place in such grim circumstances. It was certainly a long way from the scenes I had always conjured up – of the two of us sitting in some comfortable hotel lounge, or perhaps on the veranda of Akira’s house, overlooking a quiet garden, talking and reminiscing for hours on end.

Akira, meanwhile, for all his difficulties, maintained a clear sense of our direction. Frequently he would lead us along some route I feared would finish in a dead end, only for a doorway or opening to appear. From time to time, we came across more inhabitants, some no more than presences we sensed in the darkness; others, gathered around the glow of a lantern or a fire, would stare at Akira with such hostility I feared we would be set upon again. But for the most part we were allowed to pass unmolested, and I once even managed to persuade an old woman to give us drinking water in return for the last banknotes in my pocket.

Then the terrain changed perceptibly. There were no more pockets of domesticity, and the only people we encountered were isolated individuals with abandoned looks in their eyes, muttering or weeping to themselves. Nor were there any more surviving doorways, but only the gouged-out holes of the sort the lieutenant and I had negotiated at the journey's start. Each of these presented us with much difficulty, Akira being unable to climb through - even with me assisting his every move - without inflicting dreadful agonies upon himself.

We had long since given up conversation, and were simply emitting grunts in time to our steps, when suddenly Akira brought us to a halt and raised his head. Then I too could hear a voice, someone shouting orders. It was difficult to say how near it was - perhaps two or three houses away.

‘Japanese?’ I asked in a whisper.

Akira went on listening, then shook his head.

‘Kuomintang. Christopher, we now very close to ... to ...’

‘The front?’

‘Yes, front. We now very close to front. Christopher, this very dangerous.’

‘Is it absolutely necessary to go through this area to reach the house?’

‘Necessary, yes.’

There was a sudden burst of rifle fire, then from further away, the reply of a machine-gun. We instinctively tightened our grasp on one another, but then Akira freed himself and sat down.

‘Christopher,’ he said quietly. ‘We rest now.’

‘But we have to reach the house.’

‘We rest now. Too dangerous to go in fighting zone in darkness. We be killed. Must wait morning.’

I saw the sense in this, and in any case, we were now both too exhausted to go on much further. I also sat down and switched off the torch.

We sat in the dark for some time, the silence broken only by our breathing. Then suddenly the gunfire started again, and for perhaps a minute or two continued ferociously. It ended abruptly; then after another moment of quiet, a strange noise rose through the walls. It was a long, thin sound, like an animal’s call in the wild, but ended in a full-throated cry. Next came shrieking and sobbing, and then the wounded man began to shout out actual phrases. He sounded remarkably like the dying Japanese soldier I had listened to earlier, and in my exhausted state, I assumed this must be the same man; I was on the point of remarking to Akira what a singularly unfortunate time this individual was having, when I realised he was shouting in Mandarin, not Japanese. The realisation that these were two different men rather chilled me. So identical were their pitiful whimpers, the way their screams gave way to desperate entreaties, then returned to screams, that the notion came to me this was what each of us would go through on our way to death – that these terrible noises were as universal as the crying of new-born babies.

After a time, I grew conscious of the fact that should the fighting spill into our room, we were sitting in a completely exposed position. I was about to suggest to Akira we move somewhere more hidden, but then noticed he had fallen asleep. I switched on the torch again and shone it about cautiously.

Even by recent standards, the destruction around us was severe. I could see grenade damage, bullet holes everywhere, smashed brick and timber. There was a dead water-buffalo lying on its side in the middle of the room no more than seven or eight yards from us; it was covered in dust and debris, a horn pointing up to the roof. I went on casting the beam about until I had established all the possible points from which combatants could enter our enclosure. Most importantly, I discovered, on the far side of the room, beyond the buffalo, a little brick alcove, which perhaps had once served as a stove or fireplace. This struck me as being the safest place for us to spend the night. Shaking Akira awake, I put his arm around my neck, and we both rose painfully to our feet.

When we reached the brick alcove, I pushed away some rubble and cleared an area of smooth wooden boards sufficient to allow us both to lie down. I spread out my jacket for Akira and carefully laid him down on his good side. Then I too lay down and waited for sleep.

But exhausted as I was, the continuing cries of the dying man, my fears of being caught in the fighting, and my thoughts of the crucial task before us all kept me from drifting off. Akira too, I could tell, remained awake, and when finally I heard him sitting up, I asked him:

‘How is your wound?’

‘My wound. No trouble, no trouble.’

‘Let me see it again ...’

‘No, no. No trouble. But thank you. You good friend.’

Although we were only inches apart, we could not see each other at all. After a long pause, I heard him say:

‘Christopher. You must learn to speak Japanese.’

‘Yes, I must.’

‘No, I mean now. You learn Japanese now.’

‘Well, quite honestly, old fellow, this is hardly the ideal time to ...’

‘No. You must learn. If Japanese soldier come in while I asleep, you must tell them. Tell them we are friend. You must tell them or they shoot in dark.’

‘Yes. I see your point.’

‘So you learn. In case I asleep. Or I dead.’

‘Now look here, I don’t want any of that nonsense. You’re going to be as fit as a fiddle in no time.’

There was another pause, and I remembered from years ago how Akira would fail to follow me if I used colloquialisms. So I said, quite slowly:

‘You’re going to be perfectly well. Do you understand, Akira? I’ll see to it. You’re going to be well.’

‘Very kind,’ he said. ‘But precaution is best. You must learn to say. In Japanese. If Japanese soldier come. I teach word. You remember.’

He began to say something in his own tongue, but it was much too extended and I stopped him.

‘No, no, I’ll never learn that. Something much shorter. Just to make clear we’re not the enemy.’

He thought a moment, then uttered a phrase only slightly shorter than the previous one. I made an attempt, but almost immediately he said:

‘No, Christopher. Mistake.’

After a few more attempts, I said: ‘Look, it’s no good. Just give me one word. The word for “friend”. I can’t manage anything more tonight.’

'Tomodachi,' he said. 'You say. To-mo-da-chi.'

I repeated this word several times, I thought perfectly accurately, but then realised he was laughing in the darkness. I found myself laughing also, and then, much as we had done earlier, we both began to laugh uncontrollably. We went on laughing for perhaps as long as a full minute, after which I believe I fell asleep quite suddenly.

When I awoke, the earliest dawn light was coming into the room. It was a pale, bluish light, as though just one layer of darkness had been removed. The dying man had now gone silent, and from somewhere came the singing of a bird. I could now see that the roof above us had largely vanished, so that from where I lay, my shoulder hard against the brickwork, there were stars visible in the dawn sky.

A movement caught my eye and I sat up in alarm. I then saw three or four rats moving around the dead water-buffalo, and for a few moments I sat gazing at them. Only then did I turn to look at Akira, dreading what I might find. He was lying beside me quite still, and his colour was very pale, but I saw with relief that he was breathing evenly. I found my magnifying glass and began gently to examine his wound, but succeeded only in waking him.

'It's just me,' I whispered as he sat up slowly and glanced about him. He looked frightened and bewildered, but then he seemed to remember everything, and a look of numb toughness came into his eyes.

'You were dreaming?' I asked.

He nodded. 'Yes. Dreaming.'

'Of a better place than this, I should hope,' I said with a laugh.

'Yes.' He gave a sigh, then added: 'I dream of when I am small boy.'

We were silent for a moment. Then I said:

‘It must have been a rude shock. To come from the world you were dreaming of into this one here.’

He was staring at the buffalo’s head protruding out of the rubble.

‘Yes,’ he said eventually. ‘I dream of when I am young boy. My mother, my father. Young boy.’

‘You remember, Akira. All the games we used to play? On the mound, in our garden? You remember, Akira?’

‘Yes. I remember.’

‘Those are good memories.’

‘Yes. Very good memories.’

‘Those were splendid days,’ I said. ‘We didn’t know it then, of course, just how splendid they were. Children never do, I suppose.’

‘I have child,’ Akira said suddenly. ‘Boy. Five years old.’

‘Really? I’d like to meet him.’

‘I lose photo. Yesterday. Day before. When I wound. I lose photo. Of son.’

‘Now look, old chap, don’t get despondent. You’ll be seeing your son again in no time.’

He continued to stare for some time at the buffalo. A rat made a sudden movement and a cloud of flies rose up, then settled again on the beast.

‘My son. He in Japan.’

‘Oh, you sent him to Japan? That surprises me.’

‘My son. In Japan. If I die, you tell him, please.’

‘Tell him that you died? Sorry, can’t do that. Because you’re not going to die. Not yet anyway.’

‘You tell him. I die for country. Tell him, be good to mother. Protect. And build good world.’ He was now almost whispering, struggling to find his words in English, struggling not to weep. ‘Build good world,’ he said again, moving his hand through the air like a plasterer smoothing a wall. His gaze followed the hand as though in wonder. ‘Yes. Build good world.’

‘When we were boys,’ I said, ‘we lived in a good world. These children, these children we’ve been coming across, what a terrible thing for them to learn so early how ghastly things really are.’

‘My son,’ Akira said. ‘Five years old. In Japan. He know nothing, nothing. He think world is good place. Kind people. His toys. His mother, father.’

‘I suppose we were like that too. But it’s not all downhill, I suppose.’ I was trying hard now to combat the dangerous despondency settling over my friend. ‘After all, when we were children, when things went wrong, there wasn’t much we could do to help put it right. But now we’re adults, now we can. That’s the thing, you see? Look at us, Akira. After all this time, we can finally put things right. Remember, old chap, how we used to play those games? Over and over? How we used to pretend we were detectives searching for my father? Now we’re grown, we can at last put things right.’

Akira did not speak for a long time. Then he said: ‘When my boy. He discover world is not good. I wish ...’ He stopped, either in pain or because he could not find the English. He said something in Japanese, then went on: ‘I wish I with him. To help him. When he discover.’

‘Listen, you great ape,’ I said, ‘this is all far too morose. You’ll see your son again, I’ll see to that. And all this about how good the world looked when we were boys. Well, it's a lot of nonsense in a way. It's just that the adults led us on. One mustn't get too nostalgic for childhood.'

'Nos-tal-gic,' Akira said, as though it were a word he had been struggling to find. Then he said a word in Japanese, perhaps the Japanese for 'nostalgic'. 'Nos-tal-gic. It is good to be nos-tal-gic. Very important.'

'Really, old fellow?'

'Important. Very important. Nostalgic. When we nostalgic, we remember. A world better than this world we discover when we grow. We remember and wish good world come back again. So very important. Just now, I had dream. I was boy. Mother, Father, close to me. In our house.'

He fell silent and continued to gaze across the rubble.

'Akira,' I said, sensing that the longer this talk went on, the greater was some danger I did not wish fully to articulate. 'We should move on. We have much to do.'

As though in reply, there came a burst of machine-gun fire. It was further away than the night before, but we both started.

'Akira,' I said. 'Is it far now to the house? We must try and reach it before the fighting starts again in earnest. How far is it now?'

'Not far. But we go carefully. Chinese soldier very near.'

Our sleep, far from refreshing us, appeared to have made us even more depleted. When we stood up and Akira put his weight on me, the pain which went across my neck and shoulders obliged me to let out a moan. For some time, until our bodies grew accustomed again, walking together proved a torturous ordeal.

Our physical conditions aside, the terrain we traversed that morning was by far the most difficult yet. The damage was so extensive, we would frequently have to halt, unable to find a way through the debris. And while it was undeniably a help to see where we were setting down our feet, all the ghastliness that had been hidden by the darkness was now visible to us, taking a profound toll on our spirits. Amidst the wreckage, we could see blood - sometimes fresh, sometimes weeks old - on the ground, on the walls, splashed across broken furniture. Worse still - and our noses would warn us of their presence long before our eyes - we would come across, with disconcerting regularity, piles of human intestines in various stages of decay. Once when we stopped, I remarked to Akira about this, and he said simply:

‘Bayonet. Soldier always put bayonet in stomach. If you put here’ - he indicated his ribs - ‘bayonet not come out again. So soldier learn. Always stomach.’

‘At least the bodies are gone. At least they do that much.’

We continued to hear occasional gunfire, and each time we did so, I had the feeling we had come a little closer to it. This concerned me, but Akira now seemed surer than ever of our route, and whenever I questioned his decisions, he shook his head impatiently.

By the time we came across the bodies of the two Chinese soldiers, the morning sun was coming down in strong shafts through the broken roofs. We did not pass close enough to examine them properly, but my guess was that they had not been dead for more than a few hours. One was face-down in the rubble; the other had died on his knees, his forehead resting on the brick wall, as though he had been overcome by melancholy.

At one point, my conviction that we were about to walk right into crossfire grew so strong that I stopped Akira, saying:

‘Now look here. What’s your game? Where are you leading us?’

He said nothing, but stood leaning against me, his head bowed, recovering his breath.

‘Do you really know where we’re going? Akira, answer me! Do you know where we’re going?’

He raised his head wearily, then indicated over my shoulder.

I turned - I had to do so slowly, for he was still leaning on me - and saw through a broken section of a wall, no more than a dozen steps away, what was undoubtedly the East Furnace.

I said nothing, but led us over to it. Like its twin, the East Furnace had survived the assaults well. It was covered in dust, but looked virtually in working order. Letting go of Akira - he immediately sat down on some rubble - I went right up to the furnace. As on the last occasion, I could see the chimney above me pointing towards the clouds. I went back to where Akira was sitting and gently touched his good shoulder.

‘Akira, I’m sorry about my tone just now. I want you to know I’m very grateful to you. I could never have found this by myself. Really, Akira, I’m so grateful.’

‘Okay.’ His breath was now a little easier. ‘You help me. I help you. Okay.’

‘But Akira, we must be very near the house now. Let me see. Along there’ - I indicated - ‘the alley runs that way. We have to follow the alley.’

Akira appeared reluctant to get to his feet, but I hoisted him up and we set off again. I began by following what was clearly the narrow alley the lieutenant had pointed out from the rooftop, but in almost no time we found our way completely barred by fallen debris. We climbed through a wall into a nearby house, then proceeded on what I imagined was a parallel course, picking our way through rubble-strewn rooms.

These houses we now found ourselves in were less damaged, and had clearly been more salubrious than those we had lately come through. There were chairs, dressing tables, even some mirrors and vases still intact amidst the wreckage. I was eager to keep going, but Akira's body began to sag badly, and we were obliged to stop again. We sat down on a fallen beam, and it was as we were recovering our breath that my gaze fell upon the hand-painted name-board lying there in the rubble before us.

It had split cleanly along the grain of the wood, but the two pieces were lying there side by side; I could see also part of the lattice-work by which it had once been fixed to the front entrance. It was not by any means the first time we had come across such a thing, but some instinct drew my attention to this particular item. I went over to it and, extricating the two pieces of wood from the masonry, brought them back to where we were sitting.

'Akira,' I said, 'can you read this?' I held the pieces together before him.

He gazed at the script for a while, then said: 'My Chinese, not good. A name. Someone's name.'

'Akira, listen carefully. Look at these characters. You must know something about them. Please, try and read them. It's very important.'

He continued to regard the board, then shook his head.

'Akira, listen,' I said. 'Is it possible this says Yeh Chen? Could that be the name written here?'

'Yeh Chen ...' Akira looked thoughtful. 'Yeh Chen. Yes, possible. This character here ... Yes, possible. This say Yeh Chen.'

'It does? Are you sure?'

‘Not sure. But ... possible. Very possible. Yes’ - he gave a nod - ‘Yeh Chen. I think so.’

I put down the two pieces of the board and made my way carefully over the rubble towards the front of the house we were in. There was a broken gap where the doorway had once been, and looking through it, I could see into the narrow alley running outside. I looked across to the house directly facing me. The frontages to the adjoining properties were badly smashed, but the house I was looking at had survived strangely intact. There were hardly any obvious signs of damage: the shutters on the window, the crude sliding wooden lattice door, even the charm dangling above the doorway, had all remained unscathed. After what we had travelled through, it looked like an apparition from another more civilised world. I stood there staring at it for some time. Then I gestured to Akira.

‘Look, come here,’ I said in a near-whisper. ‘This has to be the house. It can’t be any other.’

Akira did not move, but gave a deep sigh. ‘Christopher. You friend. I like very much.’

‘Keep your voice down. Akira, we’ve arrived. It’s this house. I can feel it now in my bones.’

‘Christopher ...’ With an effort he rose to his feet and came slowly over the ground. When he was beside me, I pointed out the house. The morning sun shining down into the alley was causing bright streaks to fall across its front.

‘There, Akira. There it is.’

He sat down by my feet and gave another sigh. ‘Christopher. My friend. You must think very carefully. It is many years. Many, many years now ...’

‘Isn’t it odd,’ I remarked, ‘how the fighting’s hardly touched that house? The house with my parents inside.’

Uttering these words, I suddenly felt almost overwhelmed. But I collected myself and said: 'Now, Akira, we have to go in. We'll do it together, arm in arm. Just like that other time, going into Ling Tien's room. You remember, Akira?'

'Christopher. My dear friend. You must think very carefully. It is many, many years. My friend, please, you listen. Perhaps mother and father. It is now so many years ...'

'We'll go in now together. Then as soon as we've done what we have to do, we'll get you to proper medical help, I promise. In fact, it's possible there'll be something, some first aid, in that house. At least some clean water, perhaps bandages. My mother will be able to look at your injury, perhaps put on a fresh dressing for you. Don't you worry, you'll be fine in no time.'

'Christopher. You must think very carefully. So many years go by ...'

He fell silent as the door across the alley slid open with a rattle. I had hardly started to fumble for the revolver when the small Chinese girl emerged.

She was perhaps six years old. Her face had a still expression, and was rather pretty. Her hair had been tied carefully into little bunches. Her simple jacket and wide trousers were slightly too large for her.

She looked about her, blinking in the sunlight, then looked our way. Spotting us easily - neither of us had moved - she came towards us with surprising fearlessness. She stopped in the alley just a few yards away, and said something in Mandarin, gesturing back to the house.

'Akira, what's she saying?'

'Not understand. Perhaps she invite us inside.'

'But how can she be involved? Do you suppose she has something to do with the kidnappers? What's she saying?'

‘I think she ask us to help her.’

‘We’ll have to tell her to stand away,’ I said, drawing my revolver. ‘We have to anticipate resistance.’

‘Yes, she ask us to help. She say dog is injured. I think she say dog. My Chinese not good.’

Then as we watched, from somewhere near where her carefully tied hair began, a thin line of blood ran down, over her forehead and down her cheek. The little girl appeared to notice nothing and spoke to us again, gesturing once more back to her house.

‘Yes,’ Akira said. ‘She say dog. Dog is hurt.’

‘Her dog? She’s hurt. Perhaps seriously.’

I took a step towards her, intending to examine her wound. But she interpreted my movement as compliance, and turning, skipped back across the alley towards her door. She slid it open again, looked towards us appealingly, then disappeared inside.

I stood there for a moment hesitating. Then I reached a hand down to my friend.

‘Akira, this is it,’ I said. ‘We must go in. Let’s go in now together.’

Chapter Twenty-one

I tried to keep the revolver poised as we crossed the alley. But Akira's arm was around my neck, and I was having to support so much of his weight, that I imagine our gait as we staggered together into the house was far from authoritative. I was vaguely aware of an ornamental vase standing in the entrance way, and I believe the decoration I had seen dangling from the door frame gave a little chiming sound as we brushed past it. Then I heard the girl's voice speaking and looked about us.

Although the front of the house had remained virtually untouched, the whole of the back half of the room we were in lay in ruin. Thinking about it today, I would suppose a shell had come through the roof, bringing down the upper storey, and destroying the rear of the house, together with the property adjoining it behind. But at that moment I was looking first and foremost for my parents, and I am not sure what exactly I registered. My first giddy thought was that the kidnappers had fled. Then, when I saw the bodies, my terrible fear was that they were those of my mother and father - that the kidnappers had slaughtered them on account of our approach. I have to confess that my next emotion was one of great relief when I saw that the three corpses thrown about the room were all Chinese.

Near the back, over by a wall, was the body of a woman who might have been the young girl's mother. Possibly the blast had thrown her there and she was lying where she had landed. There was a shocked expression on her face. One arm had been torn off at the elbow, and she was now pointing the stump up to the sky, perhaps to indicate the direction from which the shell had come. A few yards away in the debris, an old lady was also gaping up at the hole in the ceiling. One side of her face was charred, but I could see no blood or any obvious mutilation. Finally, closest to where we were standing - he had been obscured at first by a fallen shelf - lay a boy slightly older than the little girl we had followed in. One of his legs had been blown off at the hip, from where surprisingly long entrails, like the decorative tails of a kite, had unfurled over the matting.

‘Dog,’ Akira said beside me.

I stared at him, then followed his gaze. In the centre of the wreckage, not far from the dead boy, the little girl had knelt down beside an injured dog lying on its side and was gently caressing its fur. The dog’s tail moved weakly in response. As we stood watching her, she glanced up and said something, her voice remaining quite calm and steady.

‘What’s she saying, Akira?’

‘I think she say we help dog,’ said Akira. ‘Yes, she say we help dog.’ Then suddenly, he began to giggle helplessly.

The young girl spoke again, this time addressing only me, perhaps having dismissed Akira as a lunatic. Then she brought her face down close to the dog’s and continued to pass her hand gently over its fur.

I took a step towards her, untangling myself from my friend’s arm, and as I did so, Akira crashed over into some broken furniture. I looked back at him in alarm, but he had continued to giggle, and besides, the girl’s pleading had gone on unbroken. Laying my revolver down on something, I went over to her and touched her shoulder.

‘Look here ... All of this’ - I gestured at the carnage, of which she seemed completely oblivious - ‘it’s awfully bad luck. But look, you’ve survived, and really, you’ll see, you’ll make a pretty decent show of it if you just ... if you just keep up your courage ...’ I turned to Akira in irritation and shouted: ‘Akira! Stop that noise! For God’s sake, there’s nothing to laugh about! This poor girl ...’

But the girl had now grasped my sleeve. She spoke again, carefully and slowly, looking into my eyes.

‘Look, really,’ I said, ‘you’re being awfully brave. I swear to you, whoever did all this, whoever did this ghastly thing, they won’t escape justice. You may not know who I am, but as it happens, I’m … well, I’m just the person you want. I’ll see to it they don’t get away. Don’t you worry, I’ll … I’ll …’ I had been fumbling about in my jacket, but I now found my magnifying glass and showed it to her. ‘Look, you see?’

I kicked aside a bird-cage in my path and went over to the mother. Then, perhaps out of habit as much as anything else, I bent down and began to examine her through the glass. Her stump looked peculiarly clean; the bone protruding out of the flesh was a shiny white, almost as though someone had been polishing it.

My memory of these moments is no longer very clear. But I have a feeling it was at this point, just after I stared through the glass at the woman’s stump, that I suddenly straightened and began to search for my parents. I can only say, by way of partial explanation for what ensued, that Akira was still giggling where he had fallen, and that the girl was continuing to make her pleas in the same even, persistent tones. In other words, the atmosphere had become fairly overwrought, and this might account to some extent for the manner in which I went about turning what was left of that little house upside down.

There was a tiny room at the back, completely destroyed by the shelling, and it was here I began my search, pulling up broken floorboards, smashing open with a table leg the doors of an upturned cupboard. I then returned to the main room and began to heave aside the piles of wreckage, smashing with my table leg at anything that failed readily to yield to my kicks and manoeuvres. Eventually, I became aware that Akira had stopped his giggling and was following me about, pulling at my shoulder and saying something in my ear. I ignored him and carried on with my search, not pausing even when I accidentally threw over one of the bodies. Akira continued to pull at my shoulder, and after a time, unable to comprehend why the very person I had counted on to assist me was instead bent on hindering me, I turned to him, shouting something like:

‘Get off me! Get off! If you won’t help, then just go away! Go off into your corner and giggle!’

‘Soldiers!’ he was hissing at me. ‘Soldiers coming!’

‘Get off me! My mother, my father! Where are they? They’re not here! Where are they? Where are they?’

‘Soldiers! Christopher, stop, you must calm! You must calm or we killed! Christopher!’

He was shaking me, his face close to mine. I then realised that indeed there were voices coming from somewhere close by.

I allowed Akira to pull me to the back of the room. The little girl, I noticed, had now fallen silent, and was gently cradling the dog’s head. The animal’s tail was still making the occasional faint movement.

‘Christopher,’ Akira said in an urgent whisper. ‘If soldier Chinese, I must hide.’ He pointed to the corner.

‘Chinese soldier must not find. But if Japanese, you must say word I teach.’

‘I can’t say anything. Look, old fellow, if you’re not willing to help me ...’

‘Christopher! Soldier coming!’

He tottered across the room and disappeared into a cupboard standing at an angle in the corner. The door was sufficiently damaged so that the whole of his shin and a boot were clearly visible through the panel. It was such a pathetic attempt to hide that I began to laugh, and was about to call out that I could still see him, when the soldiers appeared in the doorway.

The first soldier to come in fired his rifle at me, but the bullet hit the wall behind me. He then noticed my raised hands, and the fact that I was a foreign civilian, and shouted something to his comrades, who crowded in behind him. They were Japanese, and the next thing I remember, three or four of them began to argue about me, all the time covering me with their rifles. More soldiers came in and began to search the place. I heard Akira call out from his hiding place something in Japanese, then as soldiers crowded around his cupboard, I saw him emerge. I noticed he did not seem particularly pleased to see them, nor they him. Other men had gathered around the little girl, also arguing what to do. Then an officer entered, the men all stood to attention, and a silence fell over the room.

The officer - a young captain - glanced about the room. His gaze fell on the child, then on me, then settled on Akira, now supported by two soldiers. A conversation ensued in Japanese, in which Akira himself took no part. A resigned expression, with elements of fear, had come into his eyes. He once tried to say something to the captain, but the latter immediately cut him off. There was another quick exchange, then the soldiers began to lead Akira away. The fear was now very evident in his face, but he did not resist.

‘Akira!’ I called after him. ‘Akira, where are they taking you? What’s wrong?’

Akira glanced back and gave me a quick, affectionate smile. Then he was gone, out into the alley, crowded from my view by the soldiers accompanying him.

The young captain was looking at the child. Then he turned to me and said:

‘You Englishman?’

‘Yes.’

‘Pray, sir, what do you do here?’

‘I was ...’ I looked around. ‘I was looking for my parents. My name is Banks, Christopher Banks. I’m a well-known detective. Perhaps you’ve ...’

I did not quite know how to continue, and besides, I realised I had been sobbing for some time, and that this was making a poor impression on the captain. I wiped my face and continued: ‘I came here to find my parents. But they’re not here any more. I’m too late.’

The captain looked around once more at the debris, the corpses, the little girl with the dying dog. Then he said something to the soldier nearest him, never taking his eyes from me. Finally he said to me: ‘Pray, sir, you come with me.’

He made a polite but firm gesture that I should precede him out into the alley. He had not holstered his pistol, but then nor was it aimed at me.

‘This little girl,’ I said. ‘Will you take her somewhere safe?’

He gazed back at me in silence. Then he said: ‘Pray, sir. You leave now.’

I was on the whole looked after decently by the Japanese. They kept me in a little back room within their headquarters – a former fire station – where I was fed and a doctor treated me for several injuries I had barely noticed receiving. My foot was bandaged and I was even provided with a large boot to accommodate it. The soldiers in charge of me spoke no English, and appeared uncertain whether I was a prisoner or a guest, but I was too exhausted to care; I lay on the camp bed they had put up in my back room, and for several hours, drifted in and out of sleep. I was not locked in; in fact, the door to the adjoining office would not close properly, so that whenever I came back to consciousness, I could hear Japanese voices arguing, or else shouting down a telephone, presumably about me. I now suspect I was suffering from a mild fever for much of that period; whatever, as I went in and out of sleep, the events not only of the past few hours, but of the last several weeks, circled around my head. Then gradually, one by one, the cobwebs began to clear, so that by the time I was awoken, towards the late afternoon, by the arrival of Colonel Hasegawa, I found I had an entirely fresh view on all that had been troubling me about the case.

Colonel Hasegawa - a dapper man in his forties - introduced himself politely, saying: 'I am glad to see you are feeling so much better, Mr Banks. I trust these men here have looked after you well. I am pleased to tell you I have come with instructions to escort you to the British consulate. May I suggest we set off at once?'

'Actually, Colonel,' I said, rising gingerly to my feet, 'I would prefer it if you could take me somewhere else. You see, it's rather urgent. I'm not sure of the exact address, but it's not so far from Nanking Road. Perhaps you know it. It's a shop selling gramophone records.'

'You are so eager to purchase gramophone records?'

I could not be bothered to explain, so just said: 'It's important I get there as quickly as possible.'

'Unfortunately, sir, I have instructions to deliver you to the British consulate. I fear we shall cause great inconvenience if I do otherwise.'

I gave a sigh. 'I suppose you're right, Colonel. In any case, now I think about it, I fancy I shall be too late.'

The colonel looked at his wristwatch. 'Yes, I fear you might. But if I may suggest. If we set off straight away, then you will be enjoying your music again with minimum delay.'

We travelled in an open military vehicle driven by the colonel's batman. It was a fine afternoon and the sun was beating down on the ruins of Chapei. We moved slowly, for though much of the debris had been cleared out of our path - there were huge piles of it on the roadside - the road was pitted with craters. Occasionally we would pass down a street with almost no sign of damage; but then we would turn the corner and the houses would be little more than piles of rubble, and every surviving telegraph pole would be standing at an odd angle between tangled cables. Once, as we moved through such an area, I found I could see a fair distance across the flattened ruins, and caught sight of the chimneys from the two furnaces.

'England is a splendid country,' Colonel Hasegawa was saying. 'Calm, dignified. Beautiful green fields. I still dream of it. And your literature. Dickens, Thackeray. Wuthering Heights. I am especially fond of your Dickens.'

'Colonel, excuse me for bringing this up. But when your men found me yesterday, I was with someone. A Japanese soldier. Do you happen to know what became of him?'

'That soldier. I am not certain what became of him.'

'I do wonder where I might find him again.'

'You wish to find him again?' The colonel's face became serious. 'Mr Banks, I would advise you not to concern yourself any more with that soldier.'

'Colonel, has he in your eyes committed some offence?'

'Offence?' He looked at the passing ruins with a gentle smile. 'Almost certainly that soldier gave information to the enemy. It is likely that is how he negotiated his release from captivity. I understand you yourself said in your statement you found him near the Kuomintang lines. That is most suggestive of cowardice and betrayal.'

I was about to protest, but realised it was in neither Akira's nor my interests to fall out with the colonel. After I had been silent for a time, he said:

'It is wise not to become too sentimental.'

His accent, which was otherwise impressive, faltered on this last word, so that it came out as 'sen-chee-men-tol'. It rather grated on me and I turned away without responding. But a moment later he asked in a sympathetic tone:

'This soldier. You had met him somewhere previously?'

'I thought I had. I thought he was a friend of mine from my childhood. But now, I'm not so certain. I'm beginning to see now, many things aren't as I supposed.'

The colonel nodded. 'Our childhood seems so far away now. All this' - he gestured out of the vehicle - 'so much suffering. One of our Japanese poets, a court lady many years ago, wrote of how sad this was. She wrote of how our childhood becomes like a foreign land once we have grown.'

'Well, Colonel, it's hardly a foreign land to me. In many ways, it's where I've continued to live all my life. It's only now I've started to make my journey from it.'

We passed through Japanese checkpoints into Hongkew, the northern district of the Settlement. In this region too there were signs of war damage, as well as those of anxious military preparation. I saw many piles of sandbags, and trucks filled with soldiers. As we approached the canal, the colonel said:

'Like yourself, Mr Banks, I am very fond of music. In particular, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Brahms. Chopin also. The third sonata is marvellous.'

'A cultured man like you, Colonel,' I remarked, 'must regret all this. I mean all this carnage caused by your country's invasion of China.'

I feared he would become angry, but he smiled calmly and said:

‘It is regrettable, I agree. But if Japan is to become a great nation, like yours, Mr Banks, it is necessary. Just as it once was for England.’

We were silent for a few moments. Then he asked:

‘I am sure, yesterday, in Chapei, you saw unpleasant things?’

‘Yes. I certainly did.’

Suddenly he let out a strange laugh, which made me start. ‘Mr Banks,’ he said, ‘do you realise, do you have any idea, of the unpleasantness yet to come?’

‘If you continue to invade China, I am sure ...’

‘Excuse me, sir’ - he was now quite animated - ‘I am not talking merely of China. The entire globe, Mr Banks, the entire globe will before long be engaged in war. What you just saw in Chapei, it is but a small speck of dust compared to what the world must soon witness!’ He said this in a triumphant tone, but then he shook his head sadly. ‘It will be terrible,’ he said quietly. ‘Terrible. You have no idea, sir.’

I do not remember clearly those first hours following my return. But I would suppose my arrival in the grounds of the British consulate, conveyed by a Japanese military vehicle, and looking more or less like a tramp, did little for the morale of an anxious community. I remember vaguely the officials rushing out to meet us, and then, as I was taken into the building, the look on the face of the consul-general as he came hurrying down the stairs. I do not know what his first words to me were, but I do recall my saying to him, perhaps even before any greeting had passed my lips:

‘Mr George, I must ask you to let me see your man MacDonald without delay.’

‘MacDonald? John MacDonald? But why do you wish to talk to him, old fellow? Look, what you need is to rest up. We’ll have a doctor look you over ...’

‘I accept I’m looking a little the worse for wear. Don’t worry, I’ll go and freshen up a bit. But please, have MacDonald ready for me. It’s very important.’

I was shown to a guest room in the consulate building, where I managed a shave and a hot bath despite a whole series of people knocking on my door. One of these was a dour Scottish surgeon who examined me for a good half-hour, convinced I was concealing some serious injury from him. Others came to ask after one or another aspect of my welfare, and I sent at least three of them back with an impatient query concerning MacDonald. I received only vague replies about his not yet having been located; and then, as the evening drew on, exhaustion – or perhaps something the surgeon had given me – sent me off into a deep sleep.

I did not awake until well into the following morning. I had breakfast brought to my room, and changed into some fresh clothes delivered from the Cathay while I had been asleep. I then felt a lot better, and decided I would go and seek out MacDonald then and there.

I thought I could remember the way to MacDonald’s office from our last meeting, but the consulate building was rather deceptive and I was obliged to ask directions from a number of people I encountered. I was still a little lost, making my way down a flight of stairs, when I spotted the figure of Sir Cecil Medhurst standing on the landing below me.

The morning sun was streaming through the tall landing windows, lighting up a large area of grey stone around him. There was no one else on the landing, and Sir Cecil was stooping forward slightly, hands clasped behind his back, gazing down on to the consulate grounds below. I was tempted to retreat back up the stairs, but it was a quiet part of the building, and there was a chance my footsteps would make him look up at any moment. I thus continued my descent, and as I came up to him, he turned as though he had been aware all along of my approach.

‘Hello, old fellow,’ he said. ‘Heard you were back. A bit of a panic when you went missing, I’ll tell you. Feeling better?’

‘Yes. I’m fine, thanks. Just this foot’s a little awkward. Won’t quite fit into my shoe.’

The sun in his face made him look old and tired. He turned back to the window again and peered out; moving alongside him, I too looked out. Below us, three Sikh policemen were hurrying back and forth across the lawn, stacking sandbags into piles.

‘You heard she’s gone?’ Sir Cecil asked.

‘Yes.’

‘Of course, when you went missing at the same time, I jumped to conclusions. So did a few other people, I fancy. That’s why I came along this morning. To offer you my apologies. But they told me you were sleeping. So I was just ... well, just kicking my heels here.’

‘There’s hardly any need for apologies, Sir Cecil.’

‘Oh yes there is. I fancy I went around saying a few things the other evening. You know. Jumping to conclusions. Of course, everyone knows now I was making a fool of myself. But all the same, thought I’d better come along and explain myself.’

Down on the lawn, a Chinese coolie arrived with a wheelbarrow containing more sandbags. The Sikh policemen began unloading them.

‘Did she leave a letter?’ I asked, trying to sound nonchalant.

‘No. But I did receive a cable this morning. She’s in Macao, you know. Says she’s safe and well. Says she’s by herself, and that she’ll be writing soon.’ Then he turned to me and grasped my elbow. ‘Banks, I know you’ll miss her too. In some ways, you know, I’d have preferred it if she’d gone off with you. I know she ... she thought jolly well of you.’

‘It must have come as a big shock,’ I remarked, for want of something to say.

Sir Cecil turned away and for a time went on gazing down at the policemen. Then he said: ‘Wasn’t really, to tell you the truth. No shock at all.’ Then he went on: ‘I always told her she should go, told her she should go and find love, you know, true love. She deserves it, don’t you think? That’s where she’s gone now. Off to find true love. Perhaps she’ll find it too. Out there, on the South China Sea, who knows? Perhaps she’ll meet a traveller, in a port, in a hotel, who knows? She’s become a romantic, you see? I had to let her go.’ There were now tears welling in his eyes.

‘What will you do now, sir?’ I asked gently.

‘What will I do? Who knows? Ought to go home, I expect. I suppose that’s what I’ll do. Go home. Just as soon as I’ve paid off a few debts here, that is.’

I had been conscious of footsteps coming down the stairs behind us, but now they slowed to a halt and we both of us turned. I was rather dismayed to see Grayson, the official from the Municipal Council.

‘Good morning, Mr Banks. Good morning, Sir Cecil. Mr Banks, we’re all so pleased to see you back and safe.’

‘Thank you, Mr Grayson.’ And when he continued simply to stand there on the bottom stair smiling foolishly, I added: 'I trust all the arrangements for the Jessfield Park ceremony are progressing to your satisfaction.'

'Oh yes, yes.' He gave a vague laugh. 'But just now, Mr Banks, I came to find you because I heard you were wishing to speak with Mr MacDonald.'

'Yes, that's right. In fact, I was just on my way to find him.'

'Ah. Well, he won't be in his usual office. If you'd follow me, sir, I'll take you to him now.'

I gave Sir Cecil a gentle squeeze on the shoulder - he had turned back to the window to hide his tears - then followed Grayson with an eager step.

He led me through a deserted section of the building, and then we came to a corridor containing a row of offices. I could hear someone talking on the telephone, and a man who emerged from one of the doors nodded to Grayson. Grayson opened another door and waved for me to go in ahead of him.

I stepped into a small but well-appointed office dominated by a large desk. I stopped at the threshold because there was no one in the room, but Grayson nudged me further in and closed the door. He then walked around the desk, sat down, and gestured towards the empty seat.

'Mr Grayson,' I said, 'I have no time for these foolish pranks.'

'I'm sorry,' Grayson said, 'I know you wished to see MacDonald. But you see, MacDonald's domain is protocol. He discharges his duties very well, but his territory doesn't really extend much further.'

I sighed with impatience, but before I could speak, Grayson went on:

'You see, old chap, when you said you wanted MacDonald, I assumed you wanted me. I'm the fellow you need to speak to. '

I then noticed there was something different about Grayson. His ingratiating air had vanished, and he was watching me steadily over the desk. When he saw understanding dawn in my face, he gestured once more at the chair.

'Please make yourself comfortable, old chap. And I do apologise for having rather dogged you since your arrival here. But you see, I had to make sure you didn't do anything to cause a big stink with the other Powers. Now, let me see, I take it you want a meeting with the Yellow Snake.'

'Yes, Mr Grayson. I wonder if you can arrange such a thing.'

'As it happens, we finally got word while you were away. All parties seem happy now to grant your request.' Then leaning forward, he said to me: 'So, Mr Banks. Do you feel you're closing in?'

'Yes, Mr Grayson. At last, I believe I am.'

So it was that just after eleven o'clock last night, I found myself travelling by car through the elegant residential areas of the French Concession in the company of two officers from the Chinese secret police. We went down avenues lined with trees, past large houses, some entirely hidden behind high walls and hedges. Then we came through gates heavily guarded by men in gowns and hats, and halted in a gravelled courtyard. A dark house, four or five storeys high, stood before us.

Inside, the lights were low, and more guards lurked everywhere in the shadows. As I followed my escorts up the central staircase, I gained the impression the house had until recently belonged to a wealthy European, but had now, for some reason, fallen into the hands of the Chinese authorities; I could see crude notices and schedules pinned up on the walls right alongside exquisite works of Western and Chinese art.

To judge from its decor, the room I was shown into up on the second floor had until recently contained a billiard table. There was now a yawning space in the middle of the room, around which I paced while I waited. After twenty minutes or so, I heard the sound of more cars arriving down in the courtyard, but when I tried to see out of the windows, I found these gave on to the gardens to the side of the house, and I could see nothing at all of the front.

It was perhaps another half-hour before I was finally fetched. I was escorted up another flight of stairs, then along a corridor past more guards. Then my escorts stopped, and one of them pointed to a door several yards before us. I went the last lap alone, and entered what appeared to be a large study. There was thick carpet beneath my feet, and the walls were almost entirely lined with books. At the far end, where heavy drapes had been drawn across the bay windows, was a desk with a chair on either side of it. A reading lamp on the desk created a warm pool of light, but otherwise much of the room was in shadow. As I stood surveying my surroundings, a figure rose from behind the desk and, stepping carefully around it, gestured back to the chair he had vacated.

‘Why don’t you take this seat, Puffin?’ Uncle Philip said to me. ‘You remember, don’t you? You always loved to sit in my chair behind my desk.’

Chapter Twenty-two

Had I not been expecting to see him, it is perfectly possible I would have failed to recognise Uncle Philip. He had put on weight over the years, so that though he was not stout, his neck had thickened and his cheeks were sagging. His hair was wispy and white. But his eyes were calm and humorous in much the way I remembered.

I did not smile as I came towards him; nor did I go behind the desk to the chair he had offered. 'I'll sit here.' I said, stopping beside the other chair.

Uncle Philip shrugged. 'Well, it's not my desk anyway. In fact, I've never set foot in this house before. Something to do with you, this place?'

'I've never been here before either. May I suggest we sit down?'

When we did so, we could see each other clearly for the first time in the light from the desk lamp, and we spent a moment carefully studying one another's features.

'You haven't changed so much, you know, Puffin,' he said. 'Easy to see the boy in you, even now.'

'I'd appreciate you not calling me by that name.'

'Sorry. Rather cheeky, I admit. So here we are, you managed to track me down. I kept refusing to meet you before. But in the end, I suppose I began to want to see you again. Owe you an explanation or two, I expect. But I wasn't sure, you see, how you regarded me. Friend or foe, that sort of thing. But then these days I'm not sure about most people on that score. Do you know, they told me to keep this with me just in case?' He produced a little silver pistol and held it up to the light. 'Can you believe it? They thought you might wish to attack me.'

‘But I see you brought it along just the same.’

‘Oh, but I carry it everywhere. So many people wanting to do me mischief these days. I didn’t really bring it on your account. One of those men standing out there. Perhaps he’s been bribed to burst in here and stab me. Who can tell? That’s the way it’s been for me, I’m afraid. Ever since this Yellow Snake lark started.’

‘Yes. It would seem you’re much given to treachery.’

‘That’s a bit harsh, if you’re implying what I think you’re implying. As far as the communists are concerned, very well, yes, I’ve turned traitor. Even there, it was never my intention, you know. Chiang’s men got hold of me one day and threatened to torture me. I admit, I didn’t fancy that much, didn’t fancy it one bit. But in the end, they did a far cleverer thing. They tricked me into betraying one of my number. And then, you see, that was that. Because as you’ve seen, no one punishes turncoats more savagely than my old comrades. There was no other way for me to stay alive. I had to depend on the government to protect me from my comrades.’

‘According to my investigations,’ I said, ‘a lot of people have lost their lives through you. And not just those you betrayed. There was a time, a year ago, when you allowed the communists to believe the Yellow Snake was another man. Many of his family members, including three children, were killed in the first wave of reprisals.’

‘I don’t consider myself admirable. I’m a coward, and I’ve known it a long time. But I can hardly be held to account for the Reds’ savagery. They’ve proved themselves every bit as vicious as Chiang Kai-shek ever was, and I’ve no respect left for them. But look here, I don’t expect you came to talk about all this.’

‘No, I didn’t.’

‘So, Puffin. I’m sorry. Christopher. So. What shall I tell you? Where shall we begin?’

‘My parents. Where are they?’

‘Your father I’m afraid is dead. Has been for many years. I’m sorry.’

I said nothing and waited. Eventually he said:

‘Tell me, Christopher. What do you believe happened to your father?’

‘Is it any business of yours what I believe? I came here to hear it from you.’

‘Very well. But I was curious to know what you’d worked out for yourself. After all, you’ve made quite a name for yourself for such things.’

This irritated me, but it occurred to me he would be forthcoming only on his own terms. So in the end, I said:

‘My conjecture has been that my father made a stand, a courageous stand, against his own employers concerning the profits from the opium trade of those years. In doing so, I supposed he set himself against enormous interests, and was thus removed.’

Uncle Philip nodded. ‘I’d supposed you believed something like that. Your mother and I discussed carefully what to have you believe. And it was more or less what you’ve just said. So we were successful. The truth, I’m afraid, Puffin, was much more prosaic. Your father ran off one day with his mistress. He lived with her in Hong Kong for a year, a woman called Elizabeth Cornwallis. But Hong Kong is awfully stuffy and British, you know. They were a scandal, and in the end they had to rush off to Malacca or some such place. Then he got typhoid and died, in Singapore. That was two years after he left you. I’m sorry, old fellow, it’s hard to hear all this, I know. But brace yourself. Because I’ve a lot more to tell you before the evening’s out.’

‘You say my mother knew? At the time?’

‘Yes. Not at first, mind you. Not for a good month or so. Your father covered his tracks rather well. Your mother only found out because he wrote to her. She and I were the only ones who ever knew the truth.’

‘But the detectives. How on earth did the detectives fail to discover what he’d done?’

‘The detectives?’ Uncle Philip let out a laugh. ‘Those underpaid, overworked flat-feet? They wouldn’t have found an elephant gone missing in Nanking Road.’ Then when I remained silent, he said: ‘She would have told you eventually. But we wanted to protect you. That’s why we had you believe what you did.’

I had started to feel uncomfortable sitting so close to the desk lamp, but the upright chair did not allow me to sit back. Then after I had maintained my silence another few moments, Uncle Philip said:

‘Let me be fair to your father. It was difficult for him. He always loved your mother, loved her intensely. I’m jolly sure he never stopped loving her right to the end. In some ways, Puffin, that was the trouble. He loved her too much, idealised her. And it was just too much for him, trying to come up to what he saw as her mark. He tried. Oh yes, he tried, and it nearly broke him. He might have just said: “Look here, I can only do so much and that’s it, I’m who I am.” But he adored her. Wanted desperately to make himself good enough for her, and when he found he didn’t have it in him, well, he went off. With someone who didn’t mind him as he was. It’s my belief he just wanted rest. He’d tried so hard for so many years, he just wanted rest. Don’t think so badly of him, Puffin. I don’t believe he ever stopped loving you or your mother.’

‘And my mother? What has become of her?’

Uncle Philip leant forward on his elbows and tilted back his head slightly. ‘How much do you know already about her?' he asked.

The lightness he had earlier contrived to place in his voice had evaporated altogether. He now looked a haunted old man, consumed with self-hatred. He was gazing at me carefully despite his tilted head, and the yellow light from the desk lamp showed white whiskers growing out of his nostrils. From somewhere downstairs, I could hear a phonograph playing Chinese martial music.

'I'm not trying to annoy you,' he said, when I did not answer. 'I don't want to hear myself talking any more about it than I have to. Come on. How much have you found out?'

'I was until recently under the impression both my parents were being held captive in Chapei. So you see, I have not been so clever.'

I waited for him to speak. He remained in his curious posture for a time, then sat back and said:

'You won't remember this. But shortly after your father went away, I came to your house to see your mother. And a certain man came also that day. A Chinese gentleman.'

'You're referring to the warlord, Wang Ku.'

'Ah. Then you haven't been so foolish.'
