I rose and went to the window to see if the blinds could not be made more effective. I opened and shut them a few times, but the slats remained sufficiently separated so that I could always see the lighted windows of the block opposite.

‘No, Ichiro, it’s really nothing to get upset about.’

For a moment, my grandson gave no response. Then I heard his voice say behind me: ‘Oji’s not to worry.’

‘Oh? Now what do you mean by that, Ichiro?’

‘Oji’s not to worry. Because if he worries, he won’t get to sleep. And if old people don’t sleep, they get ill.’

‘I see. Very well then, Ichiro. Oji promises not to worry. But you’re not to be upset either. Because really, there’s nothing to be getting upset about.’

Ichiro remained silent. I opened and closed the blinds again.

‘But then, of course,’ I said, ‘if Ichiro had actually insisted on sake tonight, Oji was ready to step in and see to it he got some. But as it was, I think we were right to let the women have their way this time. It’s not worth getting them upset over such little things.’

‘Sometimes at home,’ Ichiro said, ‘Father wants to do something and Mother tells him it’s not allowed. Sometimes, even Father’s no match for Mother.’

‘Is that so,’ I said, with a laugh.

‘So Oji’s not to worry.’

‘There’s nothing for either of us to worry about, Ichiro.’ I turned away from the window and knelt down again beside his quilt. ‘Now you try and fall asleep.’

‘Is Oji staying the night?’

‘No, Oji’s going back to his own house soon.’

‘Why can’t Oji stay here too?’

‘There’s not enough room here, Ichiro. Oji has a large house all to himself, remember.’

‘Will Oji come to say goodbye at the station tomorrow?’

‘Of course, Ichiro. I’ll do that. And no doubt, you’ll be down to visit again before long.’

‘Oji’s not to worry he couldn’t make Mother give me sake.’

‘You seem to be growing up very fast, Ichiro,’ I said, laughing. ‘You’ll be a fine man when you’re grown. Perhaps you really will be head of Nippon Electrics. Or something just as grand. Now, let’s keep quiet for a while and see if you fall asleep.’

I went on sitting beside him for several more moments, giving quiet replies whenever he spoke. And I believe it was during those moments, as I waited in that darkened room for my grandson to fall asleep, listening to the occasional burst of laughter from the neighbouring room, that I began turning over in my mind the conversation I had had that morning with Setsuko in Kawabe Park. That was probably the first opportunity I had had to do so, and until that point, it had not really occurred to me to be so irritated by Setsuko’s words. But by the time I left my sleeping grandson to rejoin the others in the main room, I believe I had become quite annoyed with my elder daughter, and this no doubt accounts for my saying to Taro, not long after I had sat down:

‘You know, it’s odd when one thinks about it. Your father and I must have been acquainted for over sixteen years, and yet it’s only over this past year we’ve become such good friends.’

‘Indeed,’ said my son-in-law, ‘but I suppose it’s often that way. One always has so many neighbours one does no more than exchange good mornings with. A great pity when you think about it.’

‘But then of course,’ I said, ‘as regards Dr Saito and myself, it wasn’t simply that we were neighbours. Connected as we both were with the art world, we knew of each other by reputation. All the more pity then that your father and I didn’t make more effort to be friends from the beginning. Don’t you think so, Taro?’

As I said this, I gave a quick glance towards Setsuko to make sure she was listening.

‘A great pity indeed,’ Taro said. ‘But at least you had the chance to become friends in the end.’

‘But what I mean, Taro, is that it’s all the more pity since we knew each of other’s reputations in the art world all that time.’

‘Yes, a great pity indeed. One would think the knowledge that a neighbour was also a distinguished colleague would lead to more intimate relations. But then I suppose, what with busy schedules and the next thing, this is too often not the case.’

I glanced with some satisfaction towards Setsuko, but my daughter showed no sign at all of registering the significance of Taro’s words. It is possible, of course, that she was not really attending; my guess, though, is that Setsuko had indeed understood, but was too proud to return my glance, confronted as she was with proof that she had been quite mistaken in making her insinuations that morning in Kawabe Park.

We had been walking down the wide central avenue of the park at an easy pace, admiring the autumnal trees lined on either side of us. We had been comparing our impressions on how Noriko was taking to her new life, and had agreed that to all appearances, she was very happy indeed.

‘It’s all very gratifying,’ I was saying. ‘Her future was becoming a grave worry to me, but now everything looks very good for her. Taro is an admirable man. One could hardly have hoped for a better match. '

'It seems strange to think', Setsuko said with a smile, 'it was only a year ago we were all so worried for her.'

'It's all very gratifying. And you know, Setsuko, I'm grateful to you for your part in it all. You were a great support to your sister when things weren't going so well.'

'On the contrary, I could do so little, being so far away.'

'And of course,' I said, with a laugh, 'it was you who warned me last year. "Precautionary steps" - you remember that, Setsuko? As you see, I didn't ignore your advice.'

'I'm sorry, Father, what advice was this?'

'Now Setsuko, there's no need to be so tactful. I'm quite prepared now to acknowledge there are certain aspects to my career I have no cause to be proud of. Indeed, I acknowledged as much during the negotiations, just as you suggested.'

'I'm sorry, I'm not at all clear what Father is referring to.'

'Noriko hasn't told you about the miai? Well, I made sure that evening there'd be no obstacles to her happiness on account of my career. I dare say I would have done so in any case, but I was nevertheless grateful for your advice last year.'

'Forgive me, Father, but I don't recall offering any advice last year. As for the matter of the miai, however, Noriko has indeed mentioned it to me a number of times.' Indeed, she wrote to me soon after the miai expressing surprise at Father's ... at Father's words about himself.'

'I dare say she was surprised. Noriko always did underestimate her old father. But I'm hardly the sort to allow my own daughter to suffer simply because I'm too proud to face up to things.'

'Noriko told me she was extremely puzzled by Father's behaviour that night. It seems the Saitos were equally puzzled. No one was at all sure what Father meant by it all. Indeed, Suichi also expressed his bewilderment when I read him Noriko's letter.'

'But this is extraordinary,' I said, laughing. 'Why, Setsuko, it was you yourself who pushed me to it last year. It was you who suggested I take "precautionary steps" so that we didn't slip up with the Saitos as we did with the Miyakes. Do you not remember?'

'No doubt I am being most forgetful, but I am afraid I have no recollection of what Father refers to.'

'Now, Setsuko, this is extraordinary.'

Setsuko suddenly stopped walking and exclaimed: 'How wonderful the maples look at this time of year!'

'Indeed,' I said. 'No doubt they'll look even better further into the autumn.'

'So wonderful,' my daughter said, smiling, and we began to walk again. Then she said: 'As a matter of fact, Father, it so happened that last night we were discussing one or two things, and Taro-san happened to mention a conversation he had had with you just last week. A conversation concerning the composer who recently committed suicide.'

'Yukio Naguchi? Ah yes, I remember that conversation. Now let me see, I believe Taro was suggesting the man's suicide was pointless.'

'Taro-san was somewhat concerned Father should be so interested in Mr Naguchi's death. Indeed, it would seem Father was drawing a comparison between Mr Naguchi's career and his own. We all felt concern at this news. In fact, we have all been somewhat concerned lately that Father is not becoming a little downhearted following his retirement. '

I laughed and said: 'You can put your mind at rest, Setsuko. I am not for one moment contemplating taking the sort of action Mr Naguchi did. '

'From what I understand,' she continued, 'Mr Naguchi's songs came to have enormous prevalence at every level of the war effort. There would thus appear to have been some substance to his wish that he should share responsibility along with the politicians and generals. But Father is wrong to even begin thinking in such terms about himself. Father was, after all, a painter. '

'Let me assure you, Setsuko, I wouldn't for a moment consider the sort of action Naguchi took. But then I am not too proud to see that I too was a man of some influence, who used that influence towards a disastrous end. '

My daughter seemed to consider this for a moment. Then she said:

'Forgive me, but it is perhaps important to see things in a proper perspective. Father painted some splendid pictures, and was no doubt most influential amongst other such painters. But Father's work had hardly to do with these larger matters of which we are speaking. Father was simply a painter. He must stop believing he has done some great wrong. '

'Well now, Setsuko, this is very different advice from last year. Then it seemed my career was a great liability. '

'Forgive me, Father, but I can only repeat I do not understand these references to the marriage negotiations last year. Indeed, it is some mystery to me why Father's career should have been of any particular relevance to the negotiations. The Saitos, it would seem, were certainly not concerned and, as we have said, they were very puzzled by Father's behaviour at the miai. '

‘This is quite astonishing, Setsuko. The situation was that Dr Saito and I had been acquainted for a long time. As one of the city’s most eminent art critics, he would have followed my career over the years and have been fully aware of its more regrettable aspects. It was therefore right and proper that I should make my attitude clear at that point in the proceedings. Indeed, I’m quite confident Dr Saito much appreciated my doing so.’

‘Forgive me, but it would appear from what Taro-san has said that Dr Saito was never so familiar with Father’s career. Of course, he always knew Father as a neighbour. But it would seem he was unaware that Father was connected with the art world at all until last year when the negotiations began.’

‘You’re quite wrong, Setsuko,’ I said with a laugh. ‘Dr Saito and I have known about each other for many years. We often used to stop in the street and exchange news about the art world.’

‘No doubt then I am mistaken. Forgive me. But it is nevertheless important to stress that no one has ever considered Father’s past something to view with recrimination. One hopes then that Father will cease to think of himself in terms of men like that unfortunate composer.’

I did not persist in arguing with Setsuko, and I seem to recall we soon moved on to discussing more casual topics. However, there is surely no doubt that my daughter was in error over much of what she asserted that morning. For one thing, it is impossible that Dr Saito could have been ignorant of my reputation as a painter for all those years. And when that evening after supper I contrived to get Taro to confirm this, I did so merely to make the point clear to Setsuko; for there was never any doubt in my mind. I have, for instance, the most vivid recollection of that sunny day some sixteen years ago when Dr Saito first addressed me as I stood adjusting the fence outside my new house. ‘A great honour to have an artist of your stature in our neighbourhood,' he had said, recognizing my name on the gatepost. I remember that meeting quite clearly, and there can be no doubt that Setsuko is mistaken.

JUNE, 1950

After receiving the news of Matsuda's death late yesterday morning, I made myself a light lunch, then went out for a little exercise.

The day was pleasantly warm as I made my way down the hill. On reaching the river, I stepped up on to the Bridge of Hesitation and looked around me. The sky was a clear blue, and a little way down the bank, along where the new apartment blocks began, I could see two small boys playing with fishing poles at the water's edge. I watched them for some moments, turning over in my mind the news about Matsuda.

I had always meant to pay Matsuda further visits since re-establishing contact with him during Noriko's marriage negotiations, but in fact had not managed to get out to Arakawa again until just a month or so ago. I had gone on sheer impulse, having no idea at the time he was so near his end. Perhaps Matsuda would have died a little happier for having shared his thoughts with me that afternoon.

On my arrival at his house, Miss Suzuki had recognized me instantly and shown me in with some excitement. The way she did this seemed to suggest Matsuda had not had many callers since my visit eighteen months earlier.

'He's much stronger than the last time you were here,' she said happily.

I was shown into the reception room and a few moments later, Matsuda came in unaided, dressed in a loose kimono. He was clearly glad to see me again, and for some moments we talked of small matters and of mutual acquaintances. I believe it was not until Miss Suzuki had brought our tea and left again that I remembered to thank Matsuda for his letter of encouragement during my recent illness.

'You appear to have made a good recovery, Ono,' he remarked. 'To look at you, I'd never guess you'd been ill so recently.'

'I'm much better now,' I said. 'I have to be careful not to overexert myself. And I'm obliged to carry this stick around with me. Otherwise I feel as well as I ever did.'

'You disappoint me, Ono. And I thought we could be two old men discussing our ill health together. But here you are and it's just like the last time you came. I have to sit here and envy you your health.'

'Nonsense, Matsuda. You're looking very well.'

'You'll hardly convince me of that, Ono,' he said with a laugh, 'though it's true I've regained a little weight over this past year. But tell me, is Noriko-san happy? I heard her marriage went through successfully. When you last came here, you were very worried for her future.'

'Things have turned out very well. She's now expecting a child in the autumn. After all that worry, things have gone as well as I could ever have hoped for Noriko.'

'A grandchild in the autumn. Now that must be something to look forward to.'

'As a matter of fact,' I said, 'my elder daughter is expecting her second child next month. She's been longing for another child, so it's particularly good news.'

'Indeed, indeed. Two grandchildren to look forward to.' For a moment, he sat there smiling and nodding to himself. Then he said: 'No doubt you remember, Ono, I was always far too busy improving the world to think about marriage. Do you remember those arguments we used to have, just before you and Michiko-san were married?'

We both laughed.

‘Two grandchildren,’ Matsuda said again. ‘Now, there’s something to look forward to.’

‘Indeed. I’ve been most fortunate as regards my daughters.’

‘And tell me, Ono, are you painting these days?’

‘A few watercolours to pass the time. Plants and flowers mostly, just for my own amusement.’

‘I’m glad to hear you’re painting again in any case. When you last came to see me, you seemed to have given up painting for good. You were very disillusioned then.’

‘No doubt I was. I didn’t touch paints for a long time.’

‘Yes, Ono, you seemed very disillusioned.’ Then he looked up at me with a smile and said: ‘But then of course, you wanted so badly to make a grand contribution.’

I returned his smile, saying: ‘But so did you, Matsuda. Your goals were no less grand. It was you, after all, who composed that manifesto for our China crisis campaign. Those were hardly the most modest of aspirations.’

We both laughed again. Then he said:

‘No doubt you’ll remember, Ono, how I used to call you naïve. How I used to tease you for your narrow artist’s perspective. You used to get so angry with me. Well, it seems in the end neither of us had a broad enough view.’

‘I suppose that’s right. But if we’d seen things a little more clearly, then the likes of you and I me, Matsuda – who knows? – we may have done some real good. We had much energy and courage once. Indeed, we must have had plenty of both to conduct something like that New Japan campaign, you remember?’

‘Indeed. There were some powerful forces set against us then. We might easily have lost our nerve. I suppose we must have been very determined, Ono. '

'But then I for one never saw things too clearly. A narrow artist's perspective, as you say. Why, even now, I find it hard to think of the world extending much beyond this city. '

'These days', Matsuda said, 'I find it hard to think of the world extending much beyond my garden. So perhaps you're the one with the wider perspective now, Ono. '

We laughed together once more, then Matsuda took a sip from his teacup.

'But there's no need to blame ourselves unduly,' he said. 'We at least acted on what we believed and did our utmost. It's just that in the end we turned out to be ordinary men. Ordinary men with no special gifts of insight. It was simply our misfortune to have been ordinary men during such times. '

Matsuda's earlier reference to his garden had drawn my attention in that direction. It was a mild spring afternoon, and Miss Suzuki had left a screen partially open, so that from where I sat I could see the sun reflected brightly on the polished boards of the veranda. A soft breeze was coming into the room, and with it a faint odour of smoke. I rose to my feet and went over to the screens.

'The smell of burning still makes me uneasy,' I remarked. 'It's not so long ago it meant bombings and fire.' I went on gazing out on to the garden for a moment, then added: 'Next month, it will be five years already since Michiko died. '

Matsuda remained silent for a while. Then I heard him say behind me:

'These days, a smell of burning usually means a neighbour is clearing his garden. '

Somewhere within the house, a clock began to chime.

‘It’s time to feed the carp,’ Matsuda said. ‘You know, I had to argue with Miss Suzuki for a long time before she would allow me to start feeding the carp again. I used to do it regularly, but then a few months ago, I tripped on one of those stepping stones. I had to argue with her a long time after that.’

Matsuda rose to his feet, and putting on some straw sandals left out on the veranda, we stepped down into the garden. The pond lay amidst sunshine at the far end of the garden and we proceeded with care along the stepping stones that ran across the smooth mounds of moss.

It was while we were standing at the edge of the pond, looking into the thick green water, that a sound made us both glance up. At a point not far from us, a small boy of about four or five was peering over the top of the garden fence, clinging with both arms to the branch of a tree. Matsuda smiled and called out:

‘Ah, good afternoon, Botchan!’

The boy went on staring at us for a moment, then vanished. Matsuda smiled and began to throw feed into the water. ‘Some neighbour’s boy,’ he said. ‘Every day at this time, he climbs up on that tree trunk to watch me come out and feed my fish. But he’s shy and if I try and speak to him he runs away.’ He gave a small laugh to himself. ‘I often wonder why he makes the effort like that every day. There’s nothing much for him to see. Just an old man with a stick, standing by his pond feeding the carp. I wonder what he finds so fascinating in such a scene.’

I looked over to the fence again to where a moment ago the small face had been, and said: ‘Well, today he got a surprise. Today, he saw two old men with sticks, standing by the pond.’

Matsuda laughed happily and went on throwing feed into the water. Two or three splendid carp had come to the surface, their scales glistening in the sunlight.

‘Army officers, politicians, businessmen,’ Matsuda said. ‘They’ve all been blamed for what happened to this country. But as for the likes of us, Ono, our contribution was always marginal. No one cares now what the likes of you and me once did. They look at us and see only two old men with their sticks.’ He smiled at me, then went on feeding the fish. ‘We’re the only ones who care now. The likes of you and me, Ono, when we look back over our lives and see they were flawed, we’re the only ones who care now.’

But even as he uttered such words, there remained something in Matsuda’s manner that afternoon to suggest he was anything but a disillusioned man. And surely there was no reason for him to have died disillusioned. He may indeed have looked back over his life and seen certain flaws, but surely he would have recognized also those aspects he could feel proud of. For, as he pointed out himself, the likes of him and me, we have the satisfaction of knowing that whatever we did, we did at the time in the best of faith. Of course, we took some bold steps and often did things with much single-mindedness; but this is surely preferable to never putting one’s convictions to the test, for lack of will or courage. When one holds convictions deeply enough, there surely comes a point when it is despicable to prevaricate further. I feel confident Matsuda would have thought along these same lines when looking back over his life.

There is a particular moment I often bring to my mind - it was in the May of 1938, just after I had been presented with the Shigeta Foundation Award. By that point in my career I had received various awards and honours, but the Shigeta Foundation Award was in most people’s view a major milestone. In addition, as I recall, we had finished that same week our New Japan campaign, which had proved a great success. The night after the presentation, then, was one of much celebrating. I remember sitting in the Migi-Hidari, surrounded by my pupils and various of my colleagues, being plied with drink, listening to speech after speech in tribute to me. All manner of acquaintances called in to the Migi-Hidari that night to offer their congratulations; I even recall a chief of police I had never met before coming in to pay his respects. But happy as I was that night, the feeling of deep triumph and fulfilment which the award should have brought was curiously missing. In fact, I was not to experience such a feeling until a few days later, when I was out in the hilly countryside of the Wakaba province.

I had not been back to Wakaba for some sixteen years - not since that day I had left Mori-san's villa, determined, but nevertheless fearful that the future held nothing for me. Over the course of those years, though I had broken all formal contacts with Mori-san, I had remained curious of any news concerning my old teacher, and so was fully aware of the steady decline of his reputation in the city. His endeavours to bring European influence into the Utamaro tradition had come to be regarded as fundamentally unpatriotic, and he would be heard of from time to time holding struggling exhibitions at ever less prestigious venues. In fact, I had heard from more than one source that he had begun illustrating popular magazines to maintain his income. At the same time, I could be quite confident Mori-san had followed the course of my career and there was every chance he had heard of my receiving the Shigeta Foundation Award. It was then with a keen awareness of the changes time had brought on us that I stepped off the train at the village station that day.

It was a sunny spring afternoon as I set off towards Mori-san's villa along those hilly paths through the woodland. I went slowly, savouring the experience of that walk I had once known so well. And all the while I turned over in my mind what might occur when I came face to face with Mori-san once more. Perhaps he would receive me as an honoured guest; or perhaps he would be as cold and distant as during my final days at the villa; then again, he might behave towards me in much the way he had always done while I had been his favourite pupil - that is, as though the great changes in our respective status had not occurred. The last of these possibilities struck me as the most likely and I remember considering how I would respond. I would not, I resolved, revert to old habits and address him as 'Sensei'; instead, I would simply address him as though he were a colleague. And if he persisted in failing to acknowledge the position I now occupied, I would say, with a friendly laugh, something to the effect of: 'As you see, Mori-san, I have not been obliged to spend my time illustrating comic books as you once feared.'

In time I found myself at that spot on the high mountain path that gave a fine view of the villa standing amongst trees in the hollow below. I paused a moment to admire that view, as I had often done years before. There was a refreshing wind, and down in the hollow, I could see the trees swaying gently. I wondered to myself if the villa had been renovated, but it was impossible to ascertain from such a distance.

After a while, I seated myself amidst the wild grass growing along the ridge and went on gazing at Mori-san's villa. I had bought some oranges at a stall by the village station, and taking these from my kerchief, I began to eat them one by one. And it was as I sat there, looking down at the villa, enjoying the taste of those fresh oranges, that that deep sense of triumph and satisfaction began to rise within me. It is hard to describe the feeling, for it was quite different from the sort of elation one feels from smaller triumphs - and, as I say, quite different from anything I had experienced during the celebrations at the Migi-Hidari. It was a profound sense of happiness deriving from the conviction that one's efforts have been justified; that the hard work undertaken, the doubts overcome, have all been worthwhile; that one has achieved something of real value and distinction. I did not go any further towards the villa that day - it seemed quite pointless. I simply continued to sit there for an hour or so, in deep contentment, eating my oranges.

It is not, I fancy, a feeling many people will come to experience. The likes of the Tortoise - the likes of Shintaro - they may plod on, competent and inoffensive, but their kind will never know the sort of happiness I felt that day. For their kind do not know what it is to risk everything in the endeavour to rise above the mediocre.

Matsuda, though, was a different case. Although he and I often quarrelled, our approaches to life were identical, and I am confident he would have been able to look back on one or two such moments. Indeed, I am sure he was thinking along these lines when he said to me that last time we spoke, a gentle smile on his face: 'We at least acted on what we believed and did our utmost.' For however one may come in later years to reassess one's achievements, it is always a consolation to know that one's life has contained a moment or two of real satisfaction such as I experienced that day up on that high mountain path.

Yesterday morning, after standing on the Bridge of Hesitation for some moments thinking about Matsuda, I walked on to where our pleasure district used to be. The area has now been rebuilt and has become quite unrecognizable. The narrow little street that once ran through the centre of the district, crowded with people and the cloth banners of the various establishments, has now been replaced by a wide concrete road along which heavy trucks come and go all day. Where Mrs Kawakami's stood, there is now a glass-fronted office building, four storeys high. Neighbouring it are more such large buildings, and during the day, one can see office workers, delivery men, messengers, all moving busily in and out of them. There are no bars now until one reaches Furu-kawa, but here and there, one may recognize a piece of fencing or else a tree, left over from the old days, looking oddly incongruous in its new setting.

Where the Migi-Hidari once stood is now a front yard for a group of offices set back from the road. Some of the senior employees leave their cars in this yard, but it is for the most part a clear space of tarmac with a few young trees planted at various points. At the front of this yard, facing the road, there is a bench of the sort one may find in a park. For whose benefit it has been placed there, I do not know, for I have never seen any of these busy people ever stopping to relax on it. But it is my fancy that the bench occupies a spot very close to where our old table in the Migi-Hidari would have been situated, and I have taken at times to sitting on it. It may well not be a public bench, but then it is close to the pavement, and no one has ever objected to my sitting there. Yesterday morning, with the sun shining pleasantly, I sat down on it again and remained there for a while, observing the activity around me.

It must have been approaching the lunch hour by then, for across the road I could see groups of employees in their bright white shirtsleeves emerging from the glass-fronted building where Mrs Kawakami's used to be. And as I watched, I was struck by how full of optimism and enthusiasm these young people were. At one point, two young men leaving the building stopped to talk with a third who was on his way in. They stood on the doorsteps of that glass-fronted building, laughing together in the sunshine. One young man, whose face I could see most clearly, was laughing in a particularly cheerful manner, with something of the open innocence of a child. Then with a quick gesture, the three colleagues parted and went their ways.

I smiled to myself as I watched these young office workers from my bench. Of course, at times, when I remember those brightly-lit bars and all those people gathered beneath the lamps, laughing a little more boisterously perhaps than those young men yesterday, but with much the same good-heartedness, I feel a certain nostalgia for the past and the district as it used to be. But to see how our city has been rebuilt, how things have recovered so rapidly over these years, fills me with genuine gladness. Our nation, it seems, whatever mistakes it may have made in the past, has now another chance to make a better go of things. One can only wish these young people well.

第一章

反正食人兽不算太坏，只要别去激怒它们。不过事实还是必须接受：不时会有一个家伙，或许是和同类发生了争执，跌跌撞撞闯进某个村庄，发着可怕的怒火，人们叫喊着，挥舞着武器，但它全不理睬，横冲直闯，躲闪不及的都要受伤。或者，不时会有食人兽把某个孩子抓到迷雾里。对于这种灾害，当时的人们只好看得超脱一点。

我无意让人觉得，那时候的英国就只有这些东西，以为当辉煌的文明在世界其他地方蓬勃发展之时，我们这儿的人还刚刚走出铁器时代。假使你能够在乡间漫游，定会遇到有音乐、美食和高超竞技技巧的城堡，或者有饱学之士的修道院。问题是没法到处旅行。就算有一

匹强健的马，天气晴好，一连走上好几天，你也可能看不到绿林中露出城堡或修道院来。你碰到的很可能都是我刚刚描述过的这种村落；而且，除非随身携带食品或衣物作为礼品，或配备令人生畏的武器，否则未必会受到欢迎。很遗憾我描绘了当时我们国家的这么一幅景象，但事实就是这样。

回头说说埃克索和比特丽丝吧。我说过，这对年老的夫妇住在巢穴的外围，住所受自然的侵袭较多，大家晚上聚集的“大室”中烧着火堆，但他们几乎享受不到。以前某个时候，他们也许曾住在火堆附近——和孩子们住在一起的时候。实际上，浮现在埃克索脑海中的正是这个念头。这是黎明前那段空寂的时光，他躺在床上，妻子在身旁酣睡，一种莫名的失落感噬咬着他的心，让他无法再次入睡。

也许，正是因为这个原因，这天夜里，埃克索干脆下了床，悄悄溜到屋外，在巢穴入口旁那条破旧的板凳上坐下，等候着晨曦的来临。这时候是春天，但空气仍然刺骨，虽然埃克索出来的时候，随手拿起了比特丽丝的斗篷披在身上。不过，他一直沉浸在思绪之中，等他意识到冷的时候，天上几乎都没了星星，一片亮光从地平线上蔓延开来，昏暗中传来第一声鸟鸣。

他缓缓站起身，心里后悔在外面待得太久。他身体健康，但上次发烧花了挺长时间才恢复，他可不想又发起热来。现在他能感受到腿部的湿气，不过转身进屋的时候，他感觉很满足：因为几件在记忆中躲藏了许久的事情，今天早晨他终于想起来了。而且，他现在觉得某个重大决定快要在他脑中成形了，一个推迟了太久的决定，所以心里颇为兴奋，急着要与妻子分享。

屋内，巢穴里的通道仍旧漆黑一团，他只好摸索着走过那一小段路，回到住处。巢穴内所谓的“门”，大多不过是个拱廊，算是进入住处的标记。这种开放的布局，村民们不会认为有碍隐私，反而有利于房间保暖，大火堆或巢穴里许可的其他小火堆的暖气能通过通道传来。然而，埃克索和比特丽丝的房间远离火堆，倒有一扇真正的门，一个木头做的大框，上面纵横交错地绑着小树枝、蓟条和藤萝，要把它们撩到一边才能进出，但能挡住寒风。这扇门埃克索宁愿不要，但时日久了，门已经成为令比特丽丝颇感骄傲的物品。回家的时候，他常常发现妻子正在摘掉门上已经枯萎的藤蔓，换上她白天采摘来的新枝。

这天早晨，埃克索把门帘撩开一点点，刚好能让自己进屋，小心翼翼不吵醒妻子。晨曦透过外墙上的细缝渗入屋内。他能隐约看到自

己的手，干草皮铺成的床上，比特丽丝盖着厚厚的毯子，还在沉睡。

他想喊醒妻子。因为心里有个声音告诉他，此时此刻，如果妻子醒着、与他说话，他和那个决定之间无论还有什么阻碍，都会瞬间瓦解。可时候还早，要等一会儿村民们才会起床，开始一天的劳作，于是他在房间角落里那张矮凳上坐下来，身上仍旧紧紧裹着妻子的斗篷。

他心想，不知道今天早上的雾有多重，天光渐亮，也许等会儿能看到雾从墙壁缝隙里渗入房间。接着，他的思绪又飘离了这些事情，回到他此前一直考虑的问题上。他们一直是这么生活的吗，就两个人，住在村子的边缘？抑或以前情况不是这样？刚才，在屋外，他回想起了以前的一些片段：那是个短暂的时刻，他走在巢穴中央长长的过道上，一条胳膊挽着自己的一个孩子，走路时微微弓着身，不是因为像现在这样上了年纪，而是不希望脑袋在昏暗中撞上屋梁。当时孩子可能在跟他说话，讲了什么好笑的事，两人都在大笑。可是现在呢，和之前在外面的时候一样，他脑子里一片模糊，越集中精力，那些片段似乎就越不清晰。也许这一切都是个老傻瓜的想象。也许上帝从来没有赐予他们孩子。

你可能会想，埃克索为什么不去找其他村民帮助他回忆往事呢？但这可能不像你想得这么容易。因为在这个群体中，人们很少谈论过去。我倒不是说这是什么禁忌。我是说，过去消失在一片迷雾之中，就像沼泽地上的雾气一样。这些村民就从没想过要去回想往事——哪怕是刚刚过去的事情。

举个例子吧。有件事已经让埃克索心烦了很长时间：他肯定，不久前村子里有个女人，长长的红色头发——大家认为这个女人对村庄很重要。有人受了伤或生了病，大家就立即去请这个红头发的女人，她有高超的治疗技能。可是，现在哪儿也找不到这个女人，好像也没人去想这是怎么回事，她不在了，都没人表示遗憾。有天上午，埃克索和三个邻居一起挖开霜冻的土地时，提起过这件事情，从他们的反应来看，他们是真的不明白他在说什么。其中一位还停下手中的农活，努力回想，但最后还是摇了摇头。“肯定是很久很久以前的事情，”他说。

一天晚上，他跟比特丽丝提起这事。“我也不记得这个女人，”比特丽丝说。“也许你是出于自己的需要，想出了这么个女的，埃克索，虽然你身旁已经有个妻子了，腰板比你自已还直呢。”

这是去年秋天什么时候的事情，当时周围一片黑暗，两人并肩躺在床上，听着外面雨打房屋的声音。

“我的公主，这么多年你的确一点儿也没老，”埃克索说道。
“但这个女人不是我想象出来的，只要花点时间想一想，你自己也会记起来。一个月前，她就在我们家门口，友好地问我们，需不需要她带点什么东西来。你肯定还记得吧。”

“可她为什么要给我们带东西呢？她是我们的亲戚吗？”

“我想不是亲戚，公主。她就是好心帮忙。你肯定记得吧。她常到门口来，问我们冷不冷、饿不饿。”

“埃克索，我想问的是，她为什么要单单把我们挑出来，要帮我们的忙？”

“当时我也感到疑惑，公主。我还记得，当时我想，这个女人专门照顾病人，可我们两人和村里其他人一样健康啊。难道有消息说要发瘟疫了，所以她来看看我们？可结果呢，没有瘟疫，她就是好心帮忙。现在我们谈起了她，我就能回想起更多事情了。她就站在那儿，跟我们说，孩子们骂我们，不用去理会。就这样。后来我们就没见过她了。”

“埃克索啊，这个红头发的女人是您凭空想出来的，而且她还是个傻瓜，竟然去担心几个孩子的游戏。”

“我当时正是这么想的，公主。孩子们哪能伤害到我们呢，不过是外面天气不好，他们找点乐子而已。我跟她说，我们根本就没想过这事，可她终究还是好心。现在我想起来了，她还说，我们晚上没有蜡烛，是个遗憾。”

“如果这家伙同情我们没有蜡烛的话，”比特丽丝说道，“那她至少弄对了一件事情。这是对我们的侮辱，我们的手和其他人一样稳，却禁止我们在这样的晚上用蜡烛。别人的屋子里点着蜡烛，他们喝多了苹果酒，都醉得不省人事，要不就是一大堆孩子乱跑。他们拿的是我们的蜡烛，现在你就在我身边，埃克索，可我却几乎看不见你的身体。”

“公主啊，这不是有意要侮辱我们。事情一直就是这样罢了，没别的。”

“对了，拿走我们蜡烛这件事，不是只有你想出来的这个女人觉得奇怪。昨天，也许是前天吧，我在河边，从那些女人旁边经过，她们以为我走远了，听不见她们说话，但我肯定我听得明白，她们说，像我们这样正直的夫妻，每天晚上只能摸黑坐着，真是件不光彩的事情。所以呢，这样想的可不仅仅只有你想象出来的这个女人。”

“我的公主，我不是一直跟你说嘛，这不是我想象出来的女人。一个月前，这儿所有人都认识她，都讲她的好话。可现在每个人，包括你，都不记得有过这么个人，这是怎么回事呢？”

这个春天的早晨，埃克索回想着这段谈话，觉得自己几乎可以承认，关于红头发女人的事情，是自己弄错了。他毕竟上了年纪，偶尔会犯糊涂。但是，让人困惑的类似情景还有很多，红头发女人不过是其中一个而已。让人丧气的是，他一下子想不起来那么多的例子，但例子数不胜数，这一点他确信无疑。比如，跟玛塔有关的那件事情。

在这慌乱之中，两名牧羊人从山坡上值勤归来，回到“大室”中，挨着火堆烤火。这时候，其中一位牧羊人说，头天他们看到一只金鹰在头顶盘旋，一圈、两圈，然后又绕了一圈。绝对没错，他说，那就是金鹰。消息很快在巢穴中传开去，不久火堆四周便围了一群人，听牧羊人讲故事。连埃克索也匆忙赶了过来，因为金鹰在这个地区出现，可是真正的新闻。金鹰有很多能力，其中一项是能够吓走狼群，据说在别的地方，因为这些大鸟，狼已经全部消失了。

一开始，人们迫切地盘问两位牧羊人，要他们一遍又一遍地重复这个故事。接着听众慢慢开始怀疑起来。有人指出，此前有多次类似的说法，可最后都没有依据。另一个人说，这两个牧羊人头一年春天讲过一模一样的故事，可后来再也没有人见到过他们说的金鹰。两位牧羊人愤怒地说，之前没有报告过，不久人群分成两派，一派站在牧羊人那边，一派则自称记得头一年发生过类似的情况。

“孩子啊，你可真是个奇怪的家伙，”玛塔蹦蹦跳跳走上来时，埃克索对她说。“你难道不害怕黑暗吗？不怕狼和食人兽？”

“噢，我害怕它们啊，先生，”她笑着说道。“可我知道怎么躲开它们。希望我父母没找我。上个星期我真被揍得够呛。”

“找你？他们当然找你了。整个村子不都在找你吗？听听里面的吵闹声吧。那都是为了你啊，孩子。”

玛塔笑出声来，说道：“行了吧，先生！他们没有想我，我知道。我也能听到，他们可不是为我吵。”

她一说，埃克索就想起来，女孩的话当然是对的：里面的声音根本不是为她争吵，他们吵的完全是另外一件事情。他朝通道那边侧侧身，听得清楚一些，里面的声音大起来，他不时能听到只言片语，于是慢慢回想起牧羊人和金鹰的事情。他正在想是不是该跟玛塔解释一下，玛塔却突然从他身旁跳过去，进了屋。

他跟在后面，也进了屋，以为她一出现，大家肯定会感到欣慰、高兴。而且说实话，他心里也想过，和她一起走进来，自己多少也能得到一点儿功劳。可是，他们走进“大室”的时候，村民们还在聚精会神地争论着牧羊人的事情，只有几个人朝他们这边望了一眼。玛塔的母亲倒是从人群里跑出来，还跟她说了句话：“你在这儿啊！别这样乱跑！要跟你说多少次？”然后她的注意力又回到火堆旁的争论上去了。这时候玛塔冲埃克索做了个鬼脸，好像是说：“你看，我说的没错吧？”然后她消失在暗处，找她的伙伴去了。

屋里已经亮多了。他们俩的屋子在巢穴的外围，朝外开了一扇小窗，不过窗户太高，要站到板凳上才能望到外面。这时候窗户上盖了一块布，但清晨的第一缕阳光还是从一个角透进来，在比特丽丝静卧之处的上方形成一道光柱。埃克索看到，光柱里似乎有一只虫子，在

之前坐在外面的凳子上等待天亮的时候，他曾努力回想，自己和比特丽丝当初是怎么谈起出远门的念头的。当时他想，他能回忆起某个晚上两人就在这间屋里谈过一次，可是现在呢，看着蜘蛛在手掌边缘跑了一圈，落在泥土地面上，他突然感到很确定：第一次提及这个话题，就是穿黑色破布的陌生人经过村庄的那一天。

那是个灰蒙蒙的上午——难道已经是去年十一月的事情了？——埃克索正沿着河边一条垂柳匝地的小路大步往前走。他从地里回来，匆匆忙忙赶回巢穴，可能是回去拿工具，或是工头下了新的命令。这时，右边的灌木丛里突然传来一阵响亮的人声，他停下脚步。他第一个念头是来了食人兽，迅速在周围搜寻石头或木棒。随即他意识到，说话的声音——都是女的——虽然愤怒、激动，却没有食人兽袭击时的那种恐慌。不过，他还是坚定地穿过一排刺柏丛，来到一片空地上，看见五个女人紧紧站在一起——谈不上青春年少，不过也都是生儿育女的年纪。她们背对着他，仍然在冲远处的什么东西叫喊着。他都快要走到跟前了，其中一个女人才惊讶地注意到了他，接着其他女人也都转过身来，有些傲慢地打量着他。

“哎呀呀，”其中一位说道。“是巧合吧，也许不仅仅是巧合呢。她丈夫来啦，也许能让她明白点儿。”

最先看到他的那个女人说：“我们让你妻子不要去，可她不听。她坚持要给那个陌生人送吃的，那很可能是个魔鬼，要不就是乔装改扮的什么妖精。”

“我妻子有危险吗？女士们，请你们把事情讲清楚。”

“有个奇怪的女人，一上午都在我们这儿晃来晃去，”另一个女人说。“头发披到背上，穿着黑色破布做的斗篷。她自称是撒克逊

人，可穿着和我们见过的撒克逊人都不一样。我们在河岸上洗东西的时候，她打算从我们身后悄悄爬上来，不过我们及时发现，把她赶走了。但她一直回来，有时候好像因为什么事情很伤心，有时候又找我们要吃的。现在我们觉得，先生啊，那时候她一直在冲你妻子施咒，因为比特丽丝一定要往魔鬼那儿跑，今天上午就已经两次了，我们只好拽住她的胳膊。现在她把我们都赶开，跑到老刺树那儿去了，现在魔鬼就坐在那儿等着呢。先生，我们尽力拦她，可她身上肯定有魔鬼的力量，像你妻子这么瘦、这么老的女人，不可能有那么大力气。”

“老刺树……”

“她刚刚才出发，先生。可那一定是魔鬼，你要是去追她的话，要当心啊，别摔跤，要是被毒蓟草划伤，可好不了。”

埃克索努力不在这些女人面前流露出自己的厌烦。他礼貌地说，“非常感谢，女士们。我现在去看看我妻子要干什么。告辞。”

“老刺树”指的是一棵真正的山楂树，似乎直接长在一处高坡的岩石上，离巢穴只有几步之遥；不过，在我们的村民们看来，老刺树也是一个看美景的好去处。如果天气晴朗，风也不大，那可是打发时光的好地方。从脚下到河边的土地一览无余，能一直看到河湾和更远处的沼泽。星期天，孩子们常常在盘根错节的树根间玩耍，有时候还敢从高坡那头直接跳下去——那实际上只是个缓坡，孩子们不会受伤，只会像木桶一样顺着草坡滚下去。但是，如果是这样的上午，大人孩子都忙自己的事情，那儿就没人了，因此，埃克索穿过迷雾上坡时，看到只有两个女人，并不感到奇怪。两人的身形映在背后白色的天空上，几乎成了剪影。那个陌生人坐在那儿，背靠着岩石，穿着果然奇怪。至少从远处看，她的斗篷是用很多块布片缝起来的，在风里呼呼扇动，让她看起来像一只要飞起来的大鸟。比特丽丝在她身旁——还站着，低着头——显得娇小脆弱。两人正在急切地交谈，看到埃克索从坡下走来，两人停止了谈话，看着他。比特丽丝来到高坡的边缘朝下喊：

“就在那儿停下来，丈夫，不要往前走了！我过来。但你不要爬上来打扰这位可怜的女士，现在她总算能歇歇脚、吃点昨天的面包了。”

埃克索按妻子的要求等着，不久看到妻子沿着长长的田间道路，来到他站立的地方。她径直来到他跟前，用低低的声音说话，显然是担心他们的谈话会随风飘进陌生人的耳朵：

“那些愚蠢的女人让你来找我的吗，丈夫？我在她们那个年纪的时候，我敢肯定，充满恐惧和愚蠢信仰的是那些年纪大的，她们以为每块石头上都有魔咒，每只野猫都是邪恶的鬼魂。可现在我自己上了年纪，却发现相信这些的都是年轻人，好像他们从不知道主已经允诺一直与我们同在一样。看看那可怜的陌生人，你自己看看她，又疲劳又孤单，她在树林里、田野上游荡了四天，没有哪个村子让她逗留。这还是基督徒的地方呐，却把她当作魔鬼，或许当作麻风病人，虽然她皮肤上没什么痕迹。好啦，我的丈夫，我要给这个女人一点儿安慰，把身上这点儿可怜的食物给她，希望你不是来阻拦我的。”

“我可不会这么说，公主，因为我亲眼看到，你说的是真的。甚至到这儿之前，我就在想，我们都不会好心接待一位陌生人了，真是件羞耻的事情。”

“那么，我的丈夫，你就忙你的事情去吧，他们肯定又要抱怨你干活太慢了，而且马上又要教孩子们编排我们俩。”

“没人说过我干活慢，我的公主。你从哪儿听到这话的？我从没听谁抱怨过，我还能干重活儿，不比年轻二十岁的人差。”

“我的丈夫，我只是开个玩笑。没错，没有人抱怨你干活不好。”

“孩子们骂我们，跟我干活儿快慢没有关系，而且他们的父母太愚蠢，或者酒喝得太多了，没教他们文明礼貌、尊重别人。”

“别激动，丈夫。我跟你说了，我是开玩笑的，以后不会这么说了。刚才那个陌生人在跟我说事情，我很感兴趣，你可能也会感兴趣。不过我先要听她讲完，所以我再次请你去忙你自己的事情，让我听她说话，尽量给她一些安慰。”

“我刚才跟你说话也许太严厉了，很抱歉，公主。”

可比特丽丝已经转过身去，正沿着坡路往上走，要回到老刺树和那个斗篷呼呼扇动的人那儿。

过了一会儿，埃克索此事已了，该回到地里干活了。他冒着让其他工友们生气的风险，绕了点路，又从老刺树旁经过。因为，实际情况是，虽然他和妻子一样，瞧不起那些女人生性多疑，但他心里无法消除顾虑，觉得这个陌生人多少有些危险，让比特丽丝单独和那个女人在一起，他一直心中不安。看见妻子的身形，他松了口气。她一个人站在高坡的岩石前面，望着天空，似乎沉浸在思绪之中，他冲她喊

了一声，她这才注意到他。看着她下坡，比以前更加缓慢，他心里又一次想到，最近她的步伐好像有点不一样。倒不是一瘸一拐，而是似乎身上有什么部位隐隐作痛。她走到近前，他问道，她那位奇怪的同伴怎么啦，比特丽丝简洁地回答：“她走了。”

“她该感谢你的好心吧，公主。你和她谈了很久吗？”

“很久，她有很多事情要说。”

“她说的话让你烦恼了，我的公主，我能看出来。也许那些女人说得对，还是避开她比较好。”

“她没让我烦恼，埃克索。不过她让我思考。”

“你的情绪很奇怪。你确定她消失之前没给你上魔咒？”

“丈夫啊，你爬上坡到刺树那儿去，就能看到她在路上，刚刚才动身。她希望山那边的人们会更热情一些。”

“那好吧，既然你没什么事儿，我就走啦，我的公主。你行了善，上帝会高兴的，你一直就这么好心。”

可是，这一次，他妻子似乎不愿意放他走。她抓住他的胳膊，好像临时要借助他稳住身子，然后把脑袋靠在他胸前。他一只手本能地抬起来，抚摸她被风吹乱的头发。他低头看了她一眼，惊讶地发现她的眼睛仍旧睁得大大的。

“你的情绪很奇怪，真的，”他说。“陌生人都跟你说了什么？”

她脑袋又在他胸前靠了一会儿。然后她直起身子，放开了他。
“现在想起来啊，埃克索，你一直说的话可能还真有些道理。大家都在忘记昨天和前天的事情，真是奇怪啊。像是我们都得了什么毛病一样。”

“我以前就说过嘛，公主。比如那个红头发的女人……”

“别管红头发的女人了，埃克索。是我们没记住的其他事情。”说这话的时候，她望着远方的重重迷雾，可现在她却直愣愣地看着他，他看到她眼里充满忧伤与渴望。就在那时——他肯定——她对他说：“埃克索，我知道，你很早以前就下定决心反对这件事了。但现在该重新考虑了。我们必须出门一趟，不能耽搁。”

“出门，公主？出门干什么呢？”

“到我们儿子的村庄去。丈夫啊，我俩都知道，那并不远。就算我们走得慢，最多几天也就到了，大平原再往东一点儿。何况春天很快就到了。”

“我们当然可以出趟门，公主。是不是刚才那个陌生人说的什么话让你想起来了呢？”

“我想这件事很长时间了，埃克索，不过刚才那个可怜的女人说了些话，的确让我希望不要再耽搁了。儿子在他的村庄里等着我们。我们还要让他等多久呢？”

“等春天来了，公主，我们一定要考虑出门的事。可你为什么说，是我一直不希望这么做呢？”

“埃克索，这件事情我们俩以前是怎么谈的，我已经不太记得了。只记得你总是反对的，虽然我很渴望去。”

“好吧，我的公主，等手头没活儿了，邻居们也不会骂我们磨蹭，我们再来谈这件事吧。现在我该走了。很快我们会继续商量这件事的。”

然而，在接下来的几天内，他们虽然提到过出门的想法，却从没好好商量过。因为他们发现，一提起这个话题，两人就有一种奇怪的、不舒服的感觉，于是和其他多年的夫妻一样，两人慢慢达成了默契，尽可能避开这个话题。我说的是“尽可能”，因为有时似乎有谈的必要——你甚至可以说，有这个冲动——两人中有一个无法克服。但两人在这种情况下的谈话，不可避免地都在支吾其词或情绪失控中很快结束。那一次，埃克索直截了当地问妻子，那个陌生的女人那天在老刺树下跟她说了什么，比特丽丝的脸上立即笼罩了阴云，有一下子似乎眼泪都快出来了。此后，埃克索就小心翼翼，避免提到那个陌生人。

过了一段时间，埃克索已经记不起来最初怎么谈起了出门的事情，也不记得当时两人都是怎么想的。但是这天早晨，天亮前的那个寒冷时刻，他坐在外面，至少一部分记忆变得清晰起来，他回想起了很多事情：红头发的女人、玛塔、披黑色破布斗篷的陌生人，还有我们在此不必关心的很多往事。他还清晰地记起了几周前的那个星期天发生的事情，那天他们夺走了比特丽丝的蜡烛。

对这些村民来说，星期天是休息的日子，至少不需要到田地里干活。但牲口仍要照料，有很多事情等着去做，禁止一切可能称为劳作

的事情是不可能的，牧师也接受了这一点。那个星期天，早晨埃克索补好靴子，然后走出屋子，来到春日的阳光下，看到邻居们全在巢穴外面，一些坐在草地上，另一些坐在小凳子或木头上，谈着，笑着，干着活儿。孩子们到处玩，有两个人在草坪上制作车轮，一帮孩子围着他们看。这一年里，这是第一个天气晴好、可以进行这种户外活动的星期天，因此有种节日般的气氛。埃克索站在巢穴入口处，目光越过村民们，望着远处的平地变成了下行的缓坡，与沼泽相连。这时候，他能看见迷雾又升了起来，心想，到下午，大家又要裹在灰色的蒙蒙雨雾中了。

站了一会儿，他意识到，牧羊草场篱笆那边，发生了一阵骚乱。一开始他没当回事，可随后他耳朵捕捉到了随风飘来的声音，立即紧张起来。埃克索上了年纪，视力已经不太行了，非常恼人，但他的耳朵仍然可靠，从篱笆边的人群发出的混乱叫嚷声中，他辨别出了比特丽丝的声音，比平时高，似乎很伤心。

现在想来，埃克索觉得，当时妻子似乎满脸欣慰，而不是别的模样。比特丽丝倒不是觉得，他来一切就会万事大吉；但他一出现，事情对她来说就完全不同了。她盯着他，不仅面露欣慰，还有几乎恳求的表情，接着将她一直小心守护着的物品递到他跟前。

“这是我们的，埃克索！我们再也不用在黑暗中坐着了。快拿好，我的丈夫，这是我们的！”

她递到他跟前的，是一根多少有些变形的粗短蜡烛。铁匠的遗孀又一次想把蜡烛夺走，但比特丽丝把伸过来的那只手打开了。

“拿着，丈夫！那边那个孩子——小诺拉，她今天上午自己做的，做好就给我了，她觉得我们肯定不愿意再这么过夜了。”

这话引起了新一轮的叫喊声，有些人大笑起来。但比特丽丝仍旧盯着埃克索，脸上充满信任和恳求。今天清晨，他坐在巢穴外面的凳

子上等待天明时，最先回想起来的的就是当时她脸上的那副模样。这个场景不过是三个星期前的事情，后来他怎么就忘了呢？为什么后来他从没想起过，到今天才回忆起来呢？

他伸出了一只手，却没能拿到蜡烛——人群挡住了他，无法靠近——当时他充满信心地大声说：“不要担心，公主。你不要担心。”就在说的时候，他已经意识到这话很空洞，所以看到人群安静下来，连铁匠的遗孀都退了一步，他感到非常惊讶。随即他发现，人群的反应不是因为他的话，而是因为牧师从他身后走了过来。

“在主日里，这是闹什么呢？”牧师从埃克索身旁大步走过，瞪着一言不发的人群。“啊？”

“先生，是因为比特丽丝女士，”铁匠的遗孀说。“她弄来了一根蜡烛。”

比特丽丝的脸上又罩了一层霜，但牧师看着她的时候，她并没有避开他的目光。

“我能看出来，这话是真的，比特丽丝女士，”牧师说道。“你应该没忘记吧，议事会有决定，你和你丈夫不得在室内使用蜡烛。”

“先生，我们俩一辈子都没有打翻过蜡烛。我们不愿意整晚整晚都在黑暗中坐着。”

“已经决定了，你们必须遵守，除非议事会另做决定。”

埃克索看到她的眼里闪着怒火。“这是纯粹的恶毒。恶毒。”这话她说得很轻，几乎是喃喃自语，但说话时眼睛直愣愣地盯着牧师。

“拿走她的蜡烛，”牧师说。“照我说的办。把蜡烛拿走。”

几只手向她伸过来，在埃克索看来，她似乎没有完全明白牧师的意思。因为她站在拥挤的人群中间，眼神迷茫，手里还紧紧抓着蜡烛，似乎出于某种她已经忘记的本能。然后她再次恐慌起来，又把蜡烛朝埃克索这边递，她的身体踉跄了一下，但手势却没变。人们挤到她身上，但她并没有摔倒，重新站稳之后，她又一次把蜡烛递给他。他想去接，可另一只手一把抢走了蜡烛，接着传来了牧师低沉的声音：

“够了！让比特丽丝女士安静一下，谁也不许对她恶言恶语。她上了年纪，不明白自己做的事情。我说，够了！这种行为，不符合主日。”

埃克索终于能接近她，把她抱在怀里，人群渐渐散开。回想那一刻，埃克索觉得当时两人就这样紧贴在一起站了很久，她的头靠在他胸前，就像那个陌生女人来的那天一样，好像她只是累了，需要喘口气。他一直抱着她，牧师再次让大家散开。最后他们终于分开了，两人看看四周，发现已经没有其他人了，只有他们两个，站在牧羊草场上栓的木门旁边。

“这有什么关系呢，公主？”他说道。“我们要蜡烛做什么呢？没有蜡烛在屋子里活动，我们都习惯了。不管有没有蜡烛，我们两人说说话不都是很开心的吗？”

他仔细打量着她。她显得神情恍惚，倒不是特别伤心。

“对不起啊，埃克索，”她说。“蜡烛没了。我应该保密，不让其他人知道。可小姑娘给我蜡烛的时候，我太高兴了，还是她自己专门给我们做的呢。现在蜡烛没了。没关系。”

“完全没有关系，公主。”

“埃克索，他们认为我们俩是一对傻瓜。”

她向前迈了一步，又把头搁在他胸前。就是在这个时候，她说起了儿子。她头在他怀里，声音不清晰，一开始他还以为听错了。

“我们的儿子啊，埃克索。你记得我们的儿子吗？他们刚才推我的时候，我想起了我们的儿子。一个强壮、正直的男子汉。我们为什么要留在这个地方？我们到儿子的村庄去吧。他会保护我们，保证没人欺负我们。都这么多年过去了，埃克索，你心里的主意就不能改吗？你还认为我们不能去？”

她对着他的胸口轻柔地说着这些话，许多记忆的片段浮现在埃克索的脑海里，往事纷至沓来，他感觉都快晕了。他松开手，往后退了一步，担心自己站立不稳，妻子也跟着摔跤。

“你这说的是什么话呢，公主？以前是我阻止我们去儿子的村庄吗？”

“当然是你啊，埃克索。当然是你。”

“公主，我为什么要反对去呢？”

“我一直都认为你是反对的，丈夫。可是，哎呀，埃克索，你有没有质疑，我现在记不清楚了。今天天气不错，可我们为什么要在外面站着呢？”

比特丽丝似乎又有些恍惚。她盯着他的脸，又看看周围，望望和煦的阳光，邻居们又开始关注他们俩了。

“我们回屋子里坐着吧，”过了一会儿，她说道。“就我们俩单独待一会儿。天气很好，没错，可我太累了。我们进屋去吧。”

“没错，公主。避开这阳光，坐下来，休息一会儿。你很快就会觉得好一些。”

巢穴各处，其他人开始起床了。牧羊人肯定早就出去了，可他一直沉浸在思绪中，没听到牧羊人出门的声音。在屋子的另一边，比特丽丝发出了喃喃的声音，好像要开口唱歌一样，然后在毯子下面翻了个身。埃克索察觉到了这些动静，静静地走过来，轻轻地在床边坐下，等着。

比特丽丝翻过身来，仰面躺着，懵懵懂懂睁开眼睛，看着埃克索。

“早上好啊，丈夫，”她终于开口说道。“很高兴我睡觉的时候，精灵们没把你抓走。”

“公主，我有事要跟你谈。”

比特丽丝仍旧凝视着他，眼睛还是半睁半闭。然后她起身坐好，早先照亮蜘蛛的那束光，现在落在她脸上。她灰色的头发蓬松散乱，垂在肩膀上，但埃克索看到她在晨光中的这副模样，心里觉得很高兴。

“你想谈什么呢，埃克索，都等不及让我揉揉眼睛醒醒神儿？”

“公主，我们以前谈过可以出趟门。你看，现在春天到了，也许是该出发了。”

“出发，埃克索？什么时候出发？”

“能走就马上走。我们只需要离开几天。我们走了，村子里没有关系。我们去跟牧师说一下。”

“我们要去见儿子，埃克索？”

“是啊。去见我们的儿子。”

外面，鸟儿们已在欢唱。比特丽丝目光转向窗户，看着透过布照进来的阳光。

“有些日子里，我能清楚地想起他来，”她说。“可是，过了一天，我的记忆就好像蒙了一层雾。不过，我们的儿子是个善良的男子汉，这我能肯定。”

“公主啊，他现在为什么不和我们在一起了呢？”

“我不知道，埃克索。也许他和长老们吵了架，不走不行吧。我问过大家，这儿没人记得他。但他肯定没做过什么丢脸的事情，这我能肯定。你自己什么都不记得了吗，埃克索？”

“刚才在外面，安安静静的，我尽量去回忆，想起了很多事情。可现在我想不起儿子来，不记得他的脸或者声音，虽然有时候我想我能够看到他小时候的样子，有一次我牵着他的手在河岸上走，还有一次他在哭，我过去安慰他。但是，今天他是什么模样，在哪里住，他自己是不是也有儿子了，我统统不记得。公主啊，我还希望你能记得多一些呢。”

“他是我们的儿子，”比特丽丝说。“所以就算记不清楚，我也能感觉到他的一些事情。而且我知道，他希望我们离开这个地方，和他一起过，让他保护我们。”

“他是我们生的，当然会希望我们和他一起生活。”

“说是这么说，埃克索啊，我还是会想念这个地方的。我们俩这间小屋，这个村子。离开一辈子生活的村庄可不容易呢。”

“公主，没人逼我们鲁莽行事。刚才等太阳起山的时候，我在想，我们需要出趟门，到儿子的村庄去，和他谈谈。就算我们是他的父母，也不能在某个天气晴朗的日子里突然冒出来，要求住在他的村子里。”

“你说得对，丈夫。”

“公主啊，还有一件事让我担心。也许像你说的那样，那个村子走几天就到了。可我们上哪儿去找呢？”

比特丽丝沉默了，眼睛凝视着面前的空气，肩膀随呼吸轻轻晃动。“我相信我们会知道路的，埃克索，”过了一会儿，她开口说道。“现在我们还不知道他究竟住在哪个村子，但是和其他女人把我们的蜂蜜和锡拿出去交易的时候，我肯定常常路过附近的村庄。我闭着眼睛都能走到大平原，还有那个撒克逊村子，从我们经常歇脚的地 方再往前去一点儿就是。儿子的村庄，再往前走一点儿应该就到了，所以找到他的村子不会很麻烦。埃克索，我们真的马上就去吗？”

“是的，公主。我们今天就开始准备。”

第二章

然而，出发之前，他们还有不少事情要处理。在这样的村子里，旅行必备的很多东西——毯子、水壶、火绒——都是公共财物，要和邻居们商量好了才能使用。而且，埃克索与比特丽丝虽然上了年纪，也有每天的工作份额，不能未经大家同意就直接出门。等他们终于做好了出门的准备，天气变了，又耽搁了下来。既然晴朗的日子肯定马上就要来到，为什么还要在雾、雨和严寒中冒险呢？

不过，他们最后还是动身了，拿着手杖、背着行囊。那是个晴朗的早晨，天上飘着淡淡的白云，风很大。埃克索本来希望天一亮就出发——他知道天气不会差——但比特丽丝坚持要等到太阳再高一点。她说，第一天，他们要在那个撒克逊村庄过夜，一天走到那儿很容易，他们的首要任务是，尽可能在中午的时候穿过大平原的一角，那儿的黑暗力量那时候很可能在睡觉。

他们有一段时间没有一起走远路了，埃克索有点担心妻子的体力。一个小时之后，他放心了：比特丽丝步伐慢——他又一次注意到，她走路的时候身体有点倾斜，好像什么地方疼似的——但她一直向前走，脸迎着开阔地上的风，遇到蓟丛矮树也不畏惧。上坡的时候，或者遇到泥地，脚陷下去要花大力气才能拔出来，她马上就会慢下来，但仍然坚持往前走。

出发前的那些日子里，比特丽丝越来越自信，相信自己能够回忆起路线，至少到撒克逊村庄的路没问题，多年来她经常和其他女人一起到那儿去。可是，等到巢穴上那嶙峋的山峦从视野中消失，他们穿过了沼泽尽头的山谷，她开始有点疑惑了。在分岔路口，或者面对一片大风呼啸的田地，她就要停下来，站很长时间，打量着前方的土地，眼神中不免有些恐慌。

“别担心，公主，”这时候埃克索就会说，“别担心，慢慢来。”

“可是，埃克索啊，”她会转过脸，对他说，“我们不能慢啊。中午之前穿过大平原才安全。”

“我们会到那儿的，公主。你不要急，慢慢来。”

我在这儿不妨说一下，那时候在开阔地上找路，比现在要难得多，不仅仅是因为缺乏可靠的罗盘和地图。今天，我们有篱笆，将乡村方便地划分成田地、道路和草场，可那时候没有篱笆，旅行者看到的自然景观往往没什么特别之处，往哪儿走都是一样的。远处地平线上矗立的一排大石头，小溪的某处弯道，山谷的起伏形状——只能靠这些线索才能找到路。而且一旦走错路，往往有致命的后果。更不要说在恶劣天气中丢掉性命了：走上歧路，意味着遭受攻击的巨大危险——人、兽、鬼——躲在远离大路的阴暗之中。

你可能会惊讶于一件事：这对老夫妇平时有那么多话要说，走路的时候却很少交谈。在那个时候，摔伤脚踝、破皮感染，都可能威胁到生命，所以大家都知道，走路的时候必须小心翼翼、全神贯注。你可能也会注意到，遇到窄路两人不能并肩而行，走在前面的总是比特丽丝，不是埃克索。你也许会感到惊讶，因为遇到可能有危险的领域，男人先走似乎是很自然的事情——当然，遇到林地或者可能有狼或熊的地方，他们会默默地交换位置。但是，大多时候，埃克索总是让妻子走在前面，原因是，他们可能遇到的每一个凶魔恶鬼，据说都是从队伍的尾部发起攻击的——我想，类似于老虎跟踪羚羊群后部的某只羊。这样的例子很多：一位旅行者回头去看走在后面的同伴，却发现人已经消失了，毫无踪迹。比特丽丝担心发生这样的事，所以不时要问一声：“你还在吗，埃克索？”他总是答道：“在这儿呢，公主。”

中午之前他们就到了大平原边上。埃克索建议继续走，穿过危险地带，但比特丽丝非常坚定，一定要等到中午。他们在通向原野的一道山梁顶上找了块石头坐下来，手杖插在地里，两人认真地观察着手杖的影子越来越短。

“太阳不错，埃克索，”她说。“而且我从没听说过有谁在原野的这个角落里遭遇过什么邪恶的事情。但是，还是等到正午吧，那时候魔鬼恐怕都懒得睁眼看我们。”

“就按你说的办，公主，我们等一等。而且，你说得对，这毕竟是大平原，虽然这个角落还算太平。”

他们就这样坐着，俯瞰着下方的原野，几乎不讲话。有一下子，比特丽丝说了一句：

“埃克索，等我们见到儿子，他肯定会坚持要我们住到他的村子里。虽然邻居们有时候会笑话我们上了年纪，可都这么多年了，离开

他们会不会感觉很奇怪？”

“还没决定呢，公主。这些事情，等我们见到儿子了，都跟他谈谈。”埃克索又凝视着下面的大平原。过了一会儿，他摇摇头，轻声说道：“奇怪，他的事我此刻一点儿也记不起来。”

“我刚才想，我昨晚梦到过他，”比特丽丝说。“站在一口井旁边，身体朝一边侧了一点点，在喊什么人。之前或之后的事情，现在都不记得了。”

“至少你看到过他，公主，虽然只是梦里。他是什么样子呢？”

“一张坚毅、英俊的脸，这我还记得。但是眼睛的颜色啦，脸形啦，现在都没印象了。”

“他的脸，我现在一点儿也想不起来，”埃克索说。“肯定都是因为这迷雾。很多事情我很高兴自己不记得，可这样的事情不让我们记住，真是件残酷的事情。”

她往他身边靠了靠，头枕在他肩上。大风吹打着他们，她的斗篷有点儿松了。埃克索用手臂挽住她，拉好斗篷，把她紧紧裹住。

“我敢说，我们俩总有一个人很快会想起来，”他说。

“我们努力想吧，埃克索。两人都努力。这就好像我们把一块宝石放错了地方，找不到了。但只要努力，我们肯定会找到的。”

“肯定会，公主。你看，影子快没啦。我们该下去了。”

比特丽丝直起身子，开始在行囊里找东西。“在这儿，我们要带着这个。”

她把东西递给他，看起来像两颗光滑的鹅卵石，但他仔细一看，发现每块石头上面都刻着复杂的图案。

“两颗都放进腰带里，埃克索，小心一点，刻图案的那一面要朝外面。能帮助我主耶稣保佑我们平安。我这儿还有。”

“我只带一颗就够了，公主。”

“不，埃克索，我们平分吧。我记得有条路从那儿一直下去，除非雨水把路冲坏了，否则比之前走过的很多地方都好走。但是，有个地方我们要特别小心。埃克索，你在听我说话吗？那条路从埋葬巨人的地方经过，就是那个地方。不知道的话，那就是一座普通的小山丘，我会告诉你的，你看到我示意，就不要走那条路了，从小山丘旁

边绕过去，到另一边之后再回到路上。不管是不是正午，从那样的坟墓上踩过去，都对我们没好处。你听明白我说的话没有，埃克索？”

“别担心，公主，我听得明白。”

“还有，不用我提醒你了吧：路上要是看到陌生人，或者旁边有人喊我们，或者某个可怜的动物掉进了陷阱，或者在沟里受了伤，任何吸引你注意力的类似事情，你一句话都不要说，也不要停下脚步。”

“我可不是傻瓜，公主。”

“那好吧，埃克索，我们该走了。”

正如比特丽丝所说，他们在大平原上只要走一小段路。他们走的那条路有时有些泥泞，但路一直看得到，而且总有阳光。一开始是下坡，随后慢慢攀升，最后来到一条高高的山梁上，两边都是沼地。正午烈日当头，所以风虽然猛烈，倒也能消解酷热。地上到处长满了石楠和荆豆，都高不过膝盖，偶尔会看到一棵树——孤零零、干巴巴的样子，被无尽的大风压弯了身体。然后他们右边出现了一道山谷，让他们想起大平原的力量和神秘，提醒他们现在走的只是其中一个小小的角落。

两人走路时相距很近，埃克索几乎紧贴着妻子的脚后跟。尽管如此，穿越大平原的过程中，比特丽丝每走五六步就要问一遍，就像连续祷告一样：“你还在吗，埃克索？”他就回答：“还在呢，公主。”除了这种仪式性的问答之外，两人都不说话。到达埋葬巨人的山丘时，比特丽丝打了个紧急的手势，两人离开道路，走进石楠地里，仍旧语调平稳地一问一答，好像是要骗过偷听的魔鬼似的。埃克索一直留意着，看看有没有快速飘过的迷雾，或者天上会不会突然暗下来，但都没有，于是两人经过了大平原。上坡时，两人经过一片鸟儿欢唱的小树林，比特丽丝没说话，但他能看出来，她的体态放松了，两人的一问一答也结束了。

他们在一条小溪边休息，在溪里洗了脚，吃了面包，拿水壶装满水。从这儿开始，他们要走一条长长的、沉陷下去的大道，是罗马时代留下来的，两边有榆树和橡树，走起来容易得多，但要保持警觉，因为他们肯定会遇到其他的行路人。果然，头一个小时里，他们就遇到了对面走来的路人——一个女人带着两个孩子；一个赶驴的男孩；两名演戏的，急匆匆要赶上自己的戏班。每次他们都停下脚步，互相问好，不过有一次，他们听到车轮和马蹄的声音，跑到路旁的沟里躲

了起来，后来发现其实也没有危险——赶马车的是个撒克逊农夫，车上堆了高高的柴火。

半下午的时候，天上开始积起云来，好像风暴即将来临。他们在一棵大橡树下休息，背对着路，来往的人看不见他们。他们面前是一片开阔地，一览无余，所以天气一变，他们立即注意到了。

“别担心，公主，”埃克索说。“我们在这棵树下待着，不会淋到雨，等雨停出太阳了再走。”

可比特丽丝站起身来，身体向前倾着，抬起一只手遮挡眼睛。“埃克索，我能看到路前面就拐了弯。离那个老宅子不远了。和其他女人来的时候，我去过一次。宅子都废了，不过那时候屋顶还是好的。”

“风暴开始之前，能赶到那儿吗，公主？”

“现在走的话，就能赶到。”

“那就快点吧。没必要浑身淋湿，搭上性命。现在看来，这棵树遮不了雨，全是洞，我都能看到头顶的天空啦。”

比特丽丝记错了，废弃的宅子实际上没有那么近。当第一阵雨滴落下，头顶的天空暗下来时，两人还在一条又窄又长的小路上艰难地走，路上长满了齐腰的荨麻，要用手杖拨开才能通过。虽然大路上能清楚地看到废弃的宅子，在小路上却看不见，被杂树灌木挡住了，所以两人看到宅子突然出现在眼前，倒吃了一惊，也松了口气。

在罗马人统治的时代，这也许是幢辉煌的宅子，但现在只剩下一小部分，其余的都坍塌了。一度气派非凡的地板暴露在风吹日晒之下，到处都是水坑，地砖破损，缝隙里长满了杂草。残垣断壁，有的地方只有膝盖那么高，依稀能看出以前的房间布局。一道石头拱门通向尚未坍塌的建筑内部，埃克索和比特丽丝小心翼翼地走过去，在门槛前停下脚步，倾听了一会儿。最后埃克索喊道：“里面有人吗？”没人回答，他又说：“两个上了年纪的不列颠人，找个地方避避风暴。我们没有恶意。”

仍然没人回答，于是他们穿过拱门，走过一段阴暗的过道，以前这儿应该是个走廊。两人步入一片灰色的亮光中，来到一个宽敞的房间，有一堵墙全塌了。隔壁的房间整个儿消失了，杂树乱草密密匝

匝，径直漫到了房间地板的边缘。但是，三堵矗立的墙围起了一块遮风挡雨的地方，屋顶没有破损。曾经雪白的墙壁，如今肮脏不堪。靠墙有两个暗黑的人影，一坐一站，相距较远。

一块跌落下来的砖头上，坐着一个身形瘦小的女人，像只鸟一样，显然上了年纪——比埃克索和比特丽丝还老——披着黑色斗篷，兜帽推到脑后，现出一张苍老的面孔。她双目深陷，几乎看不到；背部并没有完全靠在身后的墙上。她怀里有什么东西在动，埃克索看到那是只兔子，被一双瘦骨嶙峋的手紧紧抓着。

同一堵墙的墙根下，有一个瘦削的男人，身材异常高大，站得远远的，好像是要在能够避雨的前提下，尽可能离老妇人远一些。他穿着一件厚厚的长外套——牧羊人在寒冷的冬天守夜时穿的那种，外套下面露出小腿来，却是光着的。脚上穿着的，是渔夫们穿的那种鞋子，埃克索经常看到。这人看来年纪不大，但头顶已经秃了，光亮亮的，只有脑袋两侧有两丛黑色的头发。他僵硬地站着，背对着房间，一只手扶着面前的墙，好像在认真倾听墙那边的声音一样。埃克索与比特丽丝走进来的时候，他回头望了一眼，但没说话。老妇人也在默默地盯着他们。埃克索说了句“愿你们平安”，那两人才动起来。高个子男人说，“再进来一点儿吧，朋友们，要不就淋湿啦。”

果然，这时候云破天开，大雨顺着屋顶破损的地方流下来，溅落在两位来访者的脚边。埃克索谢过他，领着妻子走到墙边，在那两人中间选了块地方。他帮比特丽丝取下行囊，然后又把自己的行囊放到地上。

四个人就这样待着，风暴更加猛烈，一道闪电照亮了屋内。高个子男人和老妇人奇怪的僵硬姿势似乎给埃克索和比特丽丝上了魔咒，他们两人也一动不动，一句话都没说，好像他们看到了一幅画，迈步走进画里，于是只好变成了画中人。

风暴的势头过去，大雨连绵而下，那个鸟一般的老妇人终于开了口。她一只手紧紧抓着兔子，另一只手抚摸着，说道：

“兄弟姊妹，愿上帝与你们同在。请你们原谅我没有早点打招呼，刚才看到你们来，我非常惊讶。不过还是欢迎你们。风暴没来之前，可是出门的好天气。但这种天气来得快，也去得快。你们的行程不会耽搁太久的，休息一会儿反而更好。两位这是要上哪儿去呢？”

“我们要上儿子的村里去，”埃克索说，“他等着迎接我们呢。不过，我们希望天黑之前能到一个撒克逊村庄，晚上要在那儿过

夜。”

“撒克逊人做事有点儿野，”那老妇人说道。“不过，看到行路的，他们比我们自己人还要热情。两位，坐下来吧。后面那段木头是干的，我经常坐那上面，很舒服。”

埃克索和比特丽丝听从她的建议，坐了下来，雨仍旧在哗哗地下，大家又沉默了一会儿。这时老妇人那边似乎有动静，埃克索转脸去看。她在用力拽兔子的耳朵，兔子拼命挣扎，她那只手却像鹰爪一样死死抓住。就在埃克索看着的时候，老妇人一只手突然拿出一把生了锈的大刀子来，放到兔子的咽喉上。比特丽丝吓了一跳，埃克索这才意识到，他们脚下，乃至整个破损的地板上，到处都有一块块的黑色，原来竟是血迹，在常春藤的气味和潮湿石块的霉味中，还夹杂着杀戮留下的气息，微弱却依稀可辨。

把刀放到兔子咽喉上之后，老妇人又不动了。埃克索发现，她深陷的眼睛正盯着另一头的那个高个子男人，好像在等他发出信号一样。但那个男人仍然保持着原来的僵硬姿势，额头几乎都快碰到墙了。他要么没注意到老妇人，要么就是一心不予理睬。

“好心的太太啊，”埃克索说，“要是必须杀，您就杀了这兔子吧。干干净净拧断脖子。或者找块石头，一下子砸死。”

“要是我有这个力气就好啦，阁下，可我没力气啊。我只有把刀，刃口还算锋利，没别的。”

“那我很乐意帮助您。不必用您的刀子。”埃克索站起身来，伸出一只手，但老妇人没有任何放开兔子的动作。她一动不动，刀子仍旧放在兔子的咽喉上，目光凝视着房间对面的那个男人。

高个子男人终于转过身来，面对着大家。“朋友们，”他说，“刚才看你们进来，我也很吃惊，但现在我很高兴。因为我看得出来，你们是好心人，所以我请求你们，在等待风暴过去的时候，听听我的困难。我是个普通的船夫，把旅人渡过汹涌的水域。这工作干活时间长，如果等候的人多，我就没什么觉睡，每扳一下桨，胳膊就疼，但这些我都不在意。无论刮风下雨，还是日头毒辣，我都要干活。但我劲头还算足，我可以盼着休息的日子。因为我们有几个船夫，每人都能轮流休息，不过每一轮要干好几个星期。休息的日子里，我们每个人都有特别的地方要去，朋友们，这儿就是我的地方。我曾是个无忧无虑的孩子，在这幢宅子里长大。宅子和以前不一样了，但对我来说，这儿有宝贵的记忆，我到这儿来，只求能够安安静静地享受我的

船夫说完后，大家沉默了一会儿。埃克索后来记得，当时他隐隐有回答的冲动，但同时又觉得这个人是在梦里跟自己说话，没有真正的义务要回答他。比特丽丝似乎也不觉得必须回答，因为她眼睛还盯着老妇人，这时候老妇人已经把刀从兔子咽喉上拿开，用刀刃的边缘抚摸着兔子的毛，那样子几乎充满爱意。最后比特丽丝说话了。

“我请求您，夫人，让我丈夫帮您杀死兔子吧。在这样的地方，没有必要流血，又没有盆接住。那会给这位诚实的船夫带来厄运，还有您自己，以及到这儿来休息的所有过路人。把刀收起来吧，换个地方仁慈地杀死这只兔子也就是了。他是个卖力的船夫，您这样戏弄他有什么好处呢？”

“公主，我们还是先不要急着跟这位女士说重话，”埃克索轻声说道。“我们还不知道他们之间发生了什么事。这位船夫似乎很诚实，可话又说回来，这位女士到这儿来这么做，可能也有正当理由。”

“先生，您说的太对了，”老妇人说。“我这辈子也没多少日子了，这样打发有什么趣味吗？我倒宁愿走得远远的，和自己的丈夫在一起，正是因为这个船夫，我才和丈夫分开。先生，我丈夫可是个明智、谨慎的人，那次旅行，我们计划了很久，多少年都谈着它、梦着它。最后总算做好了准备，需要的东西都备齐了，我们上了路，几天后找到了那个海湾，渡过去就到了岛上。我们等着船夫，不久就看到了他的船。真是走霉运啊，来的就是那个人。你看看他个子多高。他站在船上，手里拿着长桨，背后就是天空，就像演戏的人踩高跷一样。我和丈夫站在石头上，他来到跟前，把船系好。他骗了我们，到今天我都不明白他是怎么做到的。我们太信任他了。岛近在眼前，这个船夫带走了我丈夫，却把我丢在岸上等着，我们在一起四十多年

“那只兔子本来是给我自己当晚餐的，”船夫的声音从房间那边传来。“我同情她，才给了她。就是好心帮个忙。”

“先生，你们的事情我们都不知道，”比特丽丝说。“但是，骗这位女士，把她丢在岸上，听起来的确很残酷。你为什么要做这种事情呢？”

“我好心的女士，这位老太太说的，可不是一般的岛。这么多年来，我们这些船夫渡了好多人过去，现在岛上的田地树林里该有几百人了吧。可那是个奇怪的地方，人一到岛上，就只能孤单地在草地上、树林里行走，看不见其他人。偶尔，如果晚上有月亮，或者风暴即将来临，也许能感觉到其他人的存在。但大多日子里，对每个旅行者来说，他都是岛上唯一的居民。我倒愿意把这位太太渡过去，可等她明白不能和丈夫在一起，她就说不愿意孤单地过，所以不上岛了。我听从了她的决定——我必须这么做啊——让她自己走了。兔子呢，我说过，只是好心才给她的。你们看看，她是怎么答谢的。”

“这个船夫嘴巴会讲，”老妇人说。“你们是外面来的，可他还是敢骗你们。他会让你们相信，岛上每个人都是孤魂野鬼，可实际上不是这样。我和丈夫很多年做梦都想去的，难道会是那种地方？实际情况是，很多夫妻都被允许渡海，到岛上一起生活。很多人手挽着手，在树林里和安静的沙滩上散步。我和丈夫知道。我们小的时候就

知道了。两位好心人啊，你们在记忆里找一找，现在就能想起来，我说的是真的。在岸边等的时候，我们哪里知道，划船过来的，竟会是一个这么残酷的船夫。”

“她说的话，只有一部分是真的，”船夫说。“偶尔会有一对夫妇，获得允许一起上岛，但这种情况很少。需要两人之间，有罕见的深爱紧紧相连。偶尔会有，这我不否认，所以如果遇到夫妻，甚至是还没有结婚的情人，要我们渡过去，我们就有责任仔细盘问他们。判断两人之间的爱是不是深到可以一起过去，这是我们的责任。这位女士不愿意承认，但她和她丈夫之间的爱就是太弱了。让她先扪心自问，然后再来说我那天的判断对不对。”

“夫人，”比特丽丝说。“您怎么说？”

老妇人不说话。她低着头，气呼呼地继续用刀摩擦着兔子的皮毛。

“夫人，”埃克索说，“雨一停，我们就要上路啦。为什么不和我们一起离开这儿呢？我们很愿意和您一起走一段路。我们可以聊聊天，您想谈什么就谈什么。让这位好心的船夫待在这儿，安安静静享受一下吧，趁房子还没有全部倒塌。这样坐着，有什么好处呢？如果您愿意，在我们分手之前，我可以干干净净地把兔子杀了。您看怎么样？”

老妇人没回答，也没有表示她听到了埃克索的话。过了一会儿，她慢慢站起身来，兔子紧紧抓在胸前，迈步朝房间坍塌的那边走过去，她个子很矮，斗篷在地上拖着。屋顶上有水溅落在她身上，可她似乎并不在意。她走到房间远端，望了望外面的雨和侵入房间地面的野草，然后慢慢弯下腰，把兔子放在脚下。兔子一开始没有动，可能是因为害怕身体僵硬了，然后便没入了草丛里。

老妇人小心翼翼地直起身子。转身的时候，她似乎在看着船夫——她眼睛深陷得厉害，所以很难确定是不是看他——然后说道：“这两位陌生人让我没了胃口。但是，胃口会回来的，我肯定。”

说完，她提起斗篷的边，缓缓踏入草丛，就像慢慢走进水坑一样。雨打在她身上，她把斗篷的帽子又往上拉了拉，然后迈步走进了荨麻丛。

“再等一会儿，我们和您一起走，”埃克索在她身后喊道。但他感觉到比特丽丝的手搭在自己的胳膊上，听她低声说道：“别管她的

闲事，埃克索。让她走吧。”

稍后，埃克索走到老妇人迈步出去的地方，心里还有点儿期待在什么地方看到她，也许被灌木丛挡住了，没法继续走。但他没看到她的踪迹。

“谢谢啦，朋友们，”船夫在她身后说。“至少今天我也许可以安静一会儿，想想我小时候的事儿。”

“我们马上也会走开啦，船夫，”埃克索说。“雨停下来就走。”

“不要急，朋友们。你们讲了公道话，我很感谢。”

埃克索继续盯着外面的雨。他听见妻子在身后说：“先生，这以前肯定是个气派的宅子吧。”

“噢，是的，好心的女士。小的时候，我可不知道宅子有多气派，因为我没见过别的地方。有漂亮的画和珠宝，还有智慧而善良的仆人。那边过去，还有个宴会大厅呢。”

“先生，看到现在这幅光景，心里不好受吧。”

“房子还在这儿，我就很感激，好心的女士。这房子经历过战争年月，差不多的宅子，很多都烧掉了，现在不过是一两个土堆而已，上面长满了野草和石楠。”

这时埃克索听到比特丽丝在身后走了过来，感觉到她一只手放在自己肩膀上。“怎么啦，埃克索？”她低声问道。“你有心事，我看得出来。”

“没什么，公主。就是这儿的废墟而已。有一下子好像是我在这儿回忆往事一样。”

“什么样的往事呢，埃克索？”

“不知道啊，公主。这人提到战争和烧毁的房子，好像我也想起了什么事情。我认识你之前的事情，应该是。”

“还有我们俩不认识的时候吗，埃克索？有时候我感觉我们俩从生下来就一直在一起。”

“我也觉得是这样，公主。我只是一时发傻，这是个奇怪的地方。”

她若有所思地看着他。然后她捏了一下他的手，轻轻地说：“这的确是个奇怪的地方，可能比淋雨更糟糕。我想走了，埃克索。说不定那个女人要回来，或者发生更糟糕的事情。”

埃克索点点头。然后他转过脸，对着房间那边喊道：“好啦，船夫，看来雨要停了，我们该上路啦。谢谢你让我们躲雨。”

听到这话，船夫什么也没说，可是他们背行囊的时候，他却走过来帮忙，把他们的手杖递了过来。“旅途平安，朋友们，”他说。“希望你们见到儿子的时候，他平安健康。”

他们又表示感谢，两人要穿过拱门时，比特丽丝突然停下脚步回头看。

“既然我们要走了，先生，”她说，“也许再也见不着了，我能不能请你回答我一个小问题。”

船夫站在墙边原来的位置，认真地看着她。

“先生，你之前说过，”比特丽丝继续说道，“你有责任盘问等待渡海的夫妻。你说，需要核查一下，看看他们之间是否有深爱，能够到岛上一起生活。先生，我想问的就是这个。你要怎么盘问，才能核查清楚呢？”

船夫似乎犹豫了一下。随后他说道：“老实说，好心的女士，我不该谈这些事情。我们今天甚至都不该见面，因为机缘巧合，我们才相遇了，我并不感到遗憾。你们两位都是好心人，还帮我说了话，我很感谢。所以我尽量回答你吧。你说得对，我有责任盘问所有渡海上岛的人。如果像你所说的那样，碰到的是一对夫妻，又自称深爱着对方，那我就必须让他们说出最珍贵的记忆。我先问一个，再问另外一个。两人要分开回答。这样，他们关系的实质就会显露出来。”

“但是，先生，”比特丽丝问，“要看出人们心里的事情，不是很难吗？外表很容易让人上当。”

“好心的女士，这倒是真的。不过，我们这些船夫多年来见过很多人，要看穿骗人的外表，不需要花很久。而且，旅行的人谈起最珍贵的记忆，是不可能掩饰真相的。一对夫妻也许自称有爱的纽带，但我们船夫看到的可能是憎恶、愤怒甚至仇恨。又或许是一大片荒芜。有时候是对孤独的畏惧，没有别的。持久的爱，多年不变——这个我们就见得很少了。真要是见到了，我们只会高高兴兴地把他们渡过去。好心的女士啊，我已经说得太多啦。”

“谢谢你，船夫。就当满足了一下一个老太婆的好奇心吧。现在我们告辞，不打扰你啦。”

“祝你们旅途平安。”

他们回到之前走过的那条蕨草及膝、荨麻丛生的小道。风暴过后路很滑，尽管他们急着远离宅子，脚下还是非常小心。等他们最后回到沉陷下去的罗马大道，雨还没有停，两人看到一棵大树，便躲到了树下。

“你湿透了吗，公主？”

“不用担心，埃克索。这外套还起点作用。你怎么样？”

“没事，太阳一出来就干了。”

他们放下行囊，靠在树干上缓口气。过了一会儿，比特丽丝轻声说：

“埃克索，我害怕。”

“为什么呢，我的公主，怎么啦？你现在不会有什么事啦。”

“还记得那个奇怪的女人吗，穿着破布做的斗篷？那天你看着我们在老刺树那儿谈话的。她看起来也许像个流浪的疯子，可她跟我讲的故事，和刚才那位老太太说的有很多相同的地方。她丈夫也是被一名船夫带走的，她被留在岸上。她孤孤单单，一边哭一边从海湾往回走，发现自己来到一个深谷的边缘，眼前的路、身后的路，都能看得一清二楚，路上都是像她一样哭哭啼啼的人。听她这样说，当时我还不那么害怕，埃克索，我心里想，这和我们没有关系。可她接着说，这块土地中了魔咒，被遗忘的迷雾笼罩住了，这事我们俩也经常谈到。然后她问我，‘如果记不住你们共享的过去，你和你丈夫怎么能证明对彼此的爱呢？’后来我一直想着这件事情。有时候一想到就觉得害怕。”

“公主啊，有什么好担心的呢？我们又不打算到那种岛上去，也不愿意去。”

“话是这么说，埃克索。万一我们还没机会考虑去那种地方，我们之间的爱就枯萎了呢？”

“你说的什么话，我的公主？我们的爱怎么会枯萎呢？和年轻时候傻傻的热恋相比，现在我们的爱不是更深吗？”

“可是，埃克索啊，我们都不记得那些日子。后来很多年的事情，也都记不住了。我们不记得我们之间的激烈争吵，还有我们珍惜的那些快乐时光。我们连儿子都不记得，也不知道他为什么离开了我们。”

“我们还可以恢复那些记忆，公主。而且，无论我记得什么、忘记什么，我对你的心都会是一样的。你的感受不也是这样吗，公主？”

“是啊，埃克索。可是，我又想，我们心里的感受，会不会像今天这雨滴一样呢？天上的雨早就停了，不过树上浸满了水，所以还有些雨滴落在我们身上。我在想，没有了记忆，就没有了源头，我们的爱会不会慢慢枯萎、死亡。”

“上帝不会允许这种事情发生，公主。”这话他说得很轻，几乎是喃喃自语，因为他自己也感觉到，一股莫名的恐惧在心里涌上来。

“在老刺树说话那天，”比特丽丝继续说道，“那个奇怪的女人要我抓紧时间。她说，我们要想尽办法，把我们在一起的事情都回想起来，不论好事坏事。现在呢，我们走的时候，那个船夫给的回答，我意料到了，也正是我害怕的。我们现在这个样子，埃克索，能有什么机会呢？如果有那么个人问我们最珍贵的记忆的话？埃克索，我真害怕。”

“好啦，公主，没什么好害怕的。我们的记忆没有永久丢失，不过是被这邪恶的迷雾放到什么地方找不到了。我们会找到的，哪怕是一件事一件事去想。我们出门，不就是为了这个吗？等我们看到儿子，很多事情肯定就会想起来。”

“希望如此吧。船夫的话让我更加害怕了。”

“忘记他吧，公主。他的船，还有他的岛，对我们有什么用处呢？你说的对，外面雨停了，我们别待在树下了，走出去干得还要快一些。我们上路吧，不去想这些烦心事儿了。”

第三章

埃克索和比特丽丝从山坡下来，两人停下脚步喘气的时候，看到的应该就是这幅景象。太阳快从山谷那边落下去了，比特丽丝的眼睛更好，所以还是走在前面，身体向前倾着，比埃克索快一两步，周围的草和蒲公英和她腰一般高。

“我看到四个人守着大门，不，五个，”她说道。“我想他们手里拿着长矛。上次和其他女人一起来的时候，只有一个看门人，带着两条狗。”

“公主啊，你确定他们会欢迎我们吗？”

“别担心，埃克索，他们现在对我已经很熟悉了。而且，这儿有个长老是不列颠人，虽然不是同一个部族，但大家都把他当成有智慧的领袖。他会给我们一个安全的地方过夜。不过呢，埃克索，我觉得好像出什么事情了，心里有些不踏实。噢，又来了一个拿长矛的，带着一群凶恶的狗。”

“谁知道撒克逊人在干什么，”埃克索说。“我们还不如找别的地方过夜呢。”

“天就快黑啦，埃克索，而且长矛可不是用来对付我们的。还有啊，村子里有个女人，我打算去见一下，她很懂医药，比我们村子里谁都强。”

埃克索等着她继续往下说，可她只是望着远处，于是他问：“那你为什么要去找懂医药的人呢，公主？”

“我有时候感觉有点不舒服。这个女人可能知道怎么治。”

“什么样的不舒服啊，公主？哪里不舒服？”

“没什么大不了的。我也是因为要到这儿找地方过夜，所以才想起来。”

“可是什么地方呢，公主？哪里痛？”

“哦……”她没有转身，一只手按在腰间，就在肋部下方，然后笑了起来。“真的没什么大不了的。你看，今天走这么多路，都看不出来有什么事。”

“的确一点儿也看不出来，公主，倒是我一直要停下来休息。”

“我就这么说嘛，埃克索。所以没什么好担心的。”

“一点儿也看不出来。实际上，公主啊，你和只有你一半年纪的那些女人一样健康。不过，如果这儿有人能帮你解除疼痛，那么去看看能有什么坏处呢？”

“我刚就这么说嘛，埃克索。我带了一点锡，换药。”

“谁愿意身上有地方痛呢？我们都有这种情况，只要有办法，也都想治好。只要这个女人在这儿，守卫们又放我们进去，那我们一定要去。”

他们走过壕沟上的桥时，天快黑了，大门两边都点起了火把。守卫们高大魁梧，但看到他们来，却面露恐慌。

“等一下，埃克索，”比特丽丝低声说。“我一个人去跟他们说说。”

“别靠近他们的长矛啊，公主。狗看起来倒还安静，那些撒克逊人好像都吓傻了。”

“你都是个老头子了，埃克索，如果他们害怕的是你，我马上就告诉他们这是个错误。”

她大胆地朝他们走过去。大家围住她，一边听她说，一边不时朝埃克索狐疑地看着。随后其中一个人冲他喊，说的是撒克逊语，让他

走到火把跟前，大概是要看看他是不是年轻人假扮的。然后他们又和比特丽丝说了几句话，就让他们俩过去了。

从远处看，这个村庄是两圈整洁有序的房子，但一走上村子里的小路，埃克索惊讶地发现，这儿成了混乱的迷宫。天色这会儿是快黑了，没错，可他跟在比特丽丝后面，看不出这地方有任何逻辑或规律。建筑物会突然从他眼前冒出来，挡住去路，他们只好走旁边那些令人疑惑的小胡同。这时候他们比在外面走大路时还要小心：之前下了暴雨，路上都是泥坑水洼；而且撒克逊人好像满不在乎地听凭各种各样的东西丢在路中间，甚至还有石块。但是，让埃克索最难受的，是那种难闻的气味，随着他们的脚步或强或弱，但一直都在。和当时的人们一样，他已经习惯了人畜粪便的气味，但这种气味要难闻得多。很快，他就发现了气味的来源：整个村子的人都把一堆堆的腐肉放在房子前面或道路旁边，作为给各种神祇的供奉。有一下子气味特别浓烈，埃克索转身去看，一幢小房子的屋檐下挂着一个黑色的东西，上面有一大堆苍蝇，苍蝇嗡一声飞走，那东西的形状顿时就不一样了。随后，他们又看到一群孩子拽着一头猪的耳朵；狗、牛、驴子，到处乱晃，没人看管。路上遇到的几个人，要么默默地盯着他们，要么快速消失在门或窗户后面。

“今晚这里有点奇怪，”比特丽丝低声说。“一般他们会坐在房子前面，或者围个圈，又说又笑。孩子们该跟在我们身后，问上一百个问题，不知道该骂我们，还是该当我们是朋友。今天奇怪，都很安静，这让我觉得不踏实。”

“我们有没有走错路，公主，这是朝他们让我们过夜的地方走吗？”

“本来我想先去找那个女人，看看有没有药。但看现在这个样子，我们最好还是直接到那幢破旧的长屋里去吧，别遇上什么事儿。”

“那位女药师，住得离这儿远吗？”

“我记得就在这附近。”

“那我们去看看她在不在吧。你身上的痛是小事情，我们都知道，但如果能治好，干吗还让它痛呢。”

“等到明天上午也来得及，埃克索。这是小事情，要不是说起来，我都不觉得痛。”

“话是这么说，公主，但是既然来了，为什么不去看看这位聪明的女士呢？”

“你要是特别希望去，那我们就去吧，埃克索。我倒愿意明天上午再说，或者下次经过这儿的时候再来。”

两人说着话，一拐弯来到一个地方，好像是村庄的广场。广场中央烧着明亮的篝火，在火光的照耀下，能看到周围坐满了人——撒克逊人，有老有少，还有小婴儿，抱在父母的怀里。埃克索首先想到的是，他们闯进了异教徒的仪式。但是，等他们停下脚步仔细看了看，埃克索才发现人们的注意力没有集中点。他能看到的那些人神情严肃，也许心里感到害怕。人们说话声音都很低，人群中弥漫着一种焦虑的气氛。一条狗冲埃克索和比特丽丝叫了一声，随即被黑暗中的人赶走了。有些人注意到了他们，眼神空洞地看了一会儿，然后就不去管了。

“谁知道他们这是担心什么事情，埃克索，”比特丽丝说。“要不是女药师就在附近，我倒宁愿走开。让我来看看还能不能找到去她家的路。”

他们朝右边一排小房子走去，这时他们意识到，黑暗中还有很多人，在默默地看着篝火周围的人。比特丽丝停下脚步，跟一个站在自家门口的女人说话，埃克索随即意识到，她就是那个女药师。他在黑暗中看不清楚，但依稀能辨别出一个脊背挺直的中年女人，个子很高，手里抓着一块披巾，紧紧裹住肩头。她和比特丽丝继续低声交谈着，不时望望人群，又看看埃克索。最后，那个女人打个手势，让他们进屋，但比特丽丝走到埃克索跟前，轻声说道：

“让我跟她单独谈谈，埃克索。帮我把行囊拿下来，在外面等我吧。”

“我不能和你一起去吗，我的公主，虽然我听不懂这撒克逊话？”

“这是女人的事情，丈夫。让我单独和她谈，她说要把我这副老身子骨好好检查检查。”

“对不起啦，公主。我刚才没想清楚。让我把行囊拿下来，我就在外面等着，多久都行。”

两个女人进屋后，埃克索感到浑身疲乏，尤其是肩膀和腿。他取下自己的行囊，靠在身后的土墙上，看着人群。焦躁的情绪越来越

浓：有些人从周围的黑暗中大步走出来，加入人群中，还有人匆匆忙忙从火堆旁离开，过一会儿又匆匆回来。火光照亮一些面孔，轮廓异常分明，另一些面孔则隐藏在暗处，可过了一会儿，埃克索发现，原来所有人都在焦虑地等待，等着什么人或什么事情从火堆左侧的木柱大厅里现身。这幢建筑很可能是撒克逊人聚会的地方，里面可能也烧着篝火，因为窗户里光亮摇曳，一明一暗。

这个人的姿态，他移动和站立的样子，使他和周围的人大相径庭。“虽然这个人想假装成普通的撒克逊人，”埃克索心想，“但他的的确确是名武士。也许还是一名一旦起意，便能掀起狂澜的武士。”

大厅里出来的另外两个人紧张地跟在他身后，武士往人群中走一点，他们俩就想办法跟在他身边，像孩子担心被父母丢下一样。这两个人也很年轻，都佩着剑，每人手里还抓着一根长矛，但两人显然不太习惯使用武器。而且，他们畏畏缩缩，身形僵硬，其他村民冲他们说鼓励的话，他们也没有反应。人们用手拍他们的后背、捏他们的肩膀，但他们的目光躲躲闪闪，神情慌张。

“长头发的是个陌生人，比我们早到一两个小时，”比特丽丝的声音在他耳边说道。“撒克逊人，不过来自很远的地方。东方的沼泽地，他这么说的，他最近在那儿和海上来的强盗打过仗。”

之前，埃克索已经意识到，两位女人的声音越来越清晰。他转过身，看见比特丽丝和屋子的女主人已经出来了，站在门边，就在他身后。女药师用撒克逊语轻声说了一会儿，然后比特丽丝在他耳畔说道：

“小男孩是死是活，他们知道吗？”

“他们什么都不知道，但他们还是会到河边去。第一队人马胆战心惊地回来之后，长老们无论怎么催促，再也没人有胆子加入第二次远征。可这时候来了好运，这个陌生人进了村，他的马伤了脚，要找个地方过夜。他今天才认识小男孩和他家人，但他宣布说，愿意帮村子的忙。和他一起去的，是男孩另外两个叔叔，看看他们的样子，我看帮不上武士的忙，可能还会碍手碍脚。你看，埃克索，他们害怕得要命。”

“我能看出来，公主。但他们这么害怕却依然决定去，还是很勇敢。我们不该今天晚上来给村子添麻烦。现在好像还有人在哭，看来今天晚上还有事啊。”

女药师似乎能听懂埃克索的意思，因为她又说话了，用的是本族语言，然后比特丽丝说，“她说现在直接去长屋，天亮之前都不要露

面了。她说，在这样的夜晚，要是我们在村里走来走去的话，人们怎么对待我们，可真难说得很。”

“我正是这么想的，公主。那我们就听这位好心女士的话吧。你还记得路吧。”

可就在这时候，众人突然吵嚷起来，然后吵闹声变成了欢呼声，人群又动了起来，好像在努力地变换形状，然后开始前行，武士和两个同伴走在中央。有人开始低声吟唱，很快在黑暗中观看的人也加入进来——包括那位女药师。行进的队伍朝这边走来，明亮的篝火留在身后，但队伍里有几支火把，所以埃克索能隐约看到几张脸，有的恐惧，有的激动。每次火把照亮武士的时候，他的表情都很镇定。他朝左右两边看着，向鼓励他的人们致意，一只手又放在剑柄上。他们经过埃克索和比特丽丝身旁，从一排房子中间走过，看不见了，但过了一會兒，仍然能听到远处的吟唱声。

埃克索和比特丽丝呆立不动，也许是被这种气氛吓住了。然后比特丽丝开始问女药师，到长屋怎么走最好，在埃克索看来，两个女人随即开始谈论到某个其他地方的路了，因为她们打着手势，指着远处村庄上方的山峦。

等整个村庄安静下来，他们才动身到过夜的地方去。在黑暗中找路更加困难了，角落里偶有点着的火把，投下黑影重重，只会增加混乱。他们走的路，和人群行进的方向相反，经过的房子里都是漆黑的，没有明显的生命迹象。

“走慢点，公主，”埃克索低声说。“我们俩要是在地上摔一跤，恐怕没有人来帮忙。”

“埃克索，我想我们又迷路了。我们回到刚才拐弯的地方吧，我肯定能找到路。”

过了一会儿，路变直了，他们发现路旁就是在山上曾看到的防御围篱。那尖尖的木桩在他们上方，比夜晚的天空还要黑。两人往前走的时候，埃克索能听到头顶上方有窃窃私语声。接着他看见了其他人，都在上面，沿着防御墙有规律地排列着，从围篱上方盯着外面黑暗的荒野。他还没来得及告诉比特丽丝他发现的情况，就听到背后传来急匆匆的脚步声，他们加快了脚步，可这时候旁边已经有个移动的火把，他们身前人影晃动。一开始，埃克索以为碰到了从对面来的一帮村民，但随即发现自己和比特丽丝已被团团围住。不同年龄和体形的撒克逊人挤了上来，有些拿着长矛，有些挥舞着锄头、镰刀等工

具。几个声音同时跟他们讲话，好像还有更多人陆续赶来。埃克索感到火把的热度扑面而来，他把比特丽丝抱得紧一点，目光凝视周围，看能不能找出带头的人，但没找到。而且，每张面孔都神色慌张，他意识到，任何鲁莽动作，都可能导致灾难。一个眼神疯狂的年轻人已经哆哆嗦嗦把刀举在空中，埃克索把比特丽丝拉过来，离刀锋远点儿，脑子里回想着他会说的那几句撒克逊话。他什么都没想起来，只好发出几声安慰的声音，就像对付一匹不听话的马那样。

“算啦，埃克索，”比特丽丝低声说。“他们不会感谢你给他们唱催眠曲的。”她用撒克逊语先跟一个人讲话，然后又对另一个人讲，但气氛并没有改善。人们开始叫喊、争辩，一条狗拽着绳子，从队列里窜出来，冲他们恶狠狠地叫。

突然，周围紧张的人们一下子松懈下来。他们的声音低下去，最后只能听到一个声音，在不远处愤怒地叫喊。声音越来越近，人群分开，一个身材粗短、身形扭曲的人拄着一根粗拐杖，拖着脚步走到火把的光亮下。

他年纪很大，虽然脊梁挺得比较直，脖子和脑袋却以奇怪的角度从肩上伸出来。但是，所有在场的人似乎都服从他的权威——连那条狗都不叫了，躲进了黑暗中。埃克索对撒克逊语所知有限，但他仍能听出来，这个身形扭曲的人勃然大怒，倒不仅仅是因为村民们对陌生人不友好：他在批评他们擅自离开哨岗。火光下的脸孔都神情沮丧，虽然仍旧疑惑。接着，长者的声音更高、更愤怒了，人们似乎也慢慢想起了什么事情，一个一个悄悄回到了黑暗中。等到最后一个人也已经离开，周围响起攀爬梯子的声音，这个身形扭曲的老人仍在背后责骂不休。

最后，他转身面对埃克索和比特丽丝，用他们的语言说话，而且不带一点儿口音。“他们怎么连这都忘记了呢，而且刚才还亲眼看着那位武士带着他们的两个兄弟出发，去做他们自己没有勇气做的事情？他们的记忆这么糟糕，是因为羞愧吗，还是仅仅因为害怕？”

“他们的确很害怕，艾弗，”比特丽丝说。“刚才就算脚边落下一只蜘蛛，也会让他们互相厮打起来。你派来欢迎我们的队伍，可不怎么样啊。”

“我向你道歉，比特丽丝夫人。也向你道歉，先生。一般情况下，他们是不会这样对待你们的，不过你们也看到了，这是个充满恐惧的夜晚。”

“我们要到长屋去，这会儿迷路啦，艾弗，”比特丽丝说。“你帮我们指个路，我们就很感激啦。刚才发生这样的事情，我和丈夫都很想待在屋里休息。”

“朋友们，我倒希望你们能在长屋受到友好的招待，但这样的晚上，我的邻居们会干什么，倒很难说。你和你好心的丈夫愿意到我自己家里过夜吗？那要省心得多，不会有人打扰。”

“我们很高兴接受你的善意，先生，”埃克索插了一句。“我和妻子都很需要休息。”

“那请跟我来吧，朋友们。在后面跟紧点儿，到家之前不要大声说话。”

他们在黑暗中跟着艾弗，来到一幢房子前，这屋舍结构上和其他房子差不多，但要大一些，而且是独立的。他们穿过低矮的门廊进了屋，空气里充满着木柴的烟味儿，让埃克索胸口发紧，但他觉得这气味温暖友好。屋子中央焖烧着堆火，周围有编织毯、动物皮和橡木、白蜡木做的家具。埃克索从行囊里拿毯子，比特丽丝一下子坐到一把能摇动的座椅上，松了口气。艾弗还站在门口，似乎心事重重。

“你们刚才的遭遇，”他说，“我想想都觉得羞愧。”

“我们都不要去想这件事啦，先生，”埃克索说。“你已经对我们够友好啦。而且晚上来的时候，我们也亲眼看到了那些勇敢的人出发，去完成危险的任务。所以我们非常理解村子里的恐慌气氛，有些人做些傻事，也是正常的。”

“既然你们两位陌生人都记得我们的麻烦，那些傻瓜怎么这么快就忘记了呢？命令连孩子都听得懂，就是要求他们不惜代价守住围篱上的岗位，这关系到全村人的安全，何况如果我们的英雄们被妖怪追到门边，他们还需要帮忙呢。瞧瞧他们都在干什么？两个陌生人走过，他们就扑过来，像发疯的狼一样，站岗的命令都忘光了，也不记得为什么要站岗。要不是这地方经常发生这种奇怪的遗忘症，我都要怀疑自己脑子是不是出了问题。”

“我们那儿也是一样的，先生，”埃克索说。“邻居忘记事情的情况，我和妻子见过很多次。”

“这倒有意思了，先生。我还担心这种病只在我们这儿传播呢。周围的人都忘记了，常常只有我一个人还有些记忆，是因为我老了，还是因为我是个不列颠人，住在撒克逊人当中？”

“我们发现情况也是这样，先生。我们自己也受到了这迷雾的影响——我和妻子一直称之为迷雾——但年轻人的情况似乎更严重。先生，你找到解释了吗？”

“我听到过很多说法，朋友，大多是撒克逊人的迷信。但去年冬天，有个陌生人到这边来，说了一些话，我越想越觉得有道理。咦，这是怎么回事？”艾弗一直待在门边，手里拄着拐杖，这时突然转过身去，对一个体形扭曲的人来说，这个动作异常敏捷。“原谅你们的主人，朋友们。可能是我们的勇士们回来啦。你们最好待在这里，不要露面。”

他走之后，埃克索和比特丽丝沉默了一会儿，两人坐在各自的椅子上，闭着眼睛，感谢这休息的机会。然后比特丽丝低声说道：

“你觉得艾弗刚才想说什么呢，埃克索？”

“哪件事情，公主？”

“他在谈迷雾啊，还有迷雾的原因。”

“就是他听过的一个传言。我们一定要请他说清楚。他是个可敬的人。他一直和撒克逊人住在一起吗？”

“据我所知，很久以前他娶了个撒克逊女人，后来就一直住在这儿。那个女人怎么样，我没听说过。埃克索，要是能找到迷雾的原因，那不是件很好的事情吗？”

“真是件好事，但究竟能有什么好处，我还不知道。”

“你怎么能这么说呢，埃克索？你怎么能说这么狠心的话呢？”

“怎么啦，公主？出什么事情啦？”埃克索从椅子上坐起来，望着妻子。“我只是说，找到了原因，也不能让迷雾消失，无论是从这儿还是从我们自己的地方。”

“只要有机会了解这迷雾，就可能对我们意义非凡。你怎么能这么轻描淡写地说呢，埃克索？”

“对不起，公主，我不是有意要这么说的。我心里刚才在想别的事。”

“我们可是今天才从船夫那儿听到消息的，你怎么还能想别的事呢？”

“别的事，公主，比如：那些勇士们有没有回来，孩子有没有受伤。还有，这村子的守卫们人心惶惶，大门也不牢固，那些魔鬼今晚会不会攻进来报复。要想的事情很多，管不了迷雾或者那个奇怪船夫的迷信话。”

“没必要讲狠话，埃克索。我可不希望吵架。”

“请原谅，公主。肯定是这儿的气氛影响了我。”

可是，比特丽丝已经眼泪汪汪了。“没必要说话这么凶嘛，”她几乎是喃喃自语。

埃克索站起身来，走到她的摇椅旁，微微蹲下，把她紧紧抱在胸前。“对不起啊，公主，”他说。“我们离开这个地方之前，一定能和艾弗谈谈迷雾的事。”两人就这样抱了一会儿，他又接着说道：“说实话，公主，我刚才心里倒在想一件具体的事情。”

“什么事啊，埃克索？”

“我在想，你身上的痛，女药师是怎么说的。”

“她说没关系，上了年纪很正常。”

“我就这么说嘛，公主。我不是说过不用担心吗？”

“我可没担心，丈夫。是你坚持要今天晚上去见那个女人的。”

“见见她也很好啊，就算我们以前担心你身上的痛，现在也不用担心啦。”

她从他怀里轻轻挣脱出来，靠到摇椅上。“埃克索，”她说，“女药师提到了一位老僧侣，她说比她懂得更多。他帮助过这个村里很多人，这个叫乔纳斯的僧侣。他的修道院离这儿有一天的路程，沿着上山的路向东。”

“沿着上山的路向东。”埃克索迈步朝门那边走去，望着外面的黑夜。门是开的，艾弗离开的时候没有关。“公主啊，我在想，我们明天也可以走高地上的那条路，和走低地上那条穿过树林的路差不多。”

“那条路不好走，埃克索。要爬山。至少要多花一天，儿子还在焦虑地等着我们呢。”

“没错。可是，走了这么远，不去看看这位睿智的僧侣，好像很可惜。”

“女药师以为我们要去那个方向，所以这么说说而已。我跟她说，不走山路到儿子的村庄更方便，她也认为没这个必要了，就是身上痛，老年人都有的，没有其他毛病。”

埃克索目光穿过门廊，继续盯着外面的黑夜。“公主啊，我们回头再考虑一下。现在艾弗回来啦，看起来不太高兴。”

艾弗大步走进来，喘着粗气，坐在一把堆满兽皮的宽大椅子上，随手将拐杖喀嗒一声丢在脚下。“一个年轻的傻瓜说，看见一个魔鬼从围篱外面爬上来，探头探脑朝里面望。大混乱啊，这个不用我说了，我只好组织一队人去看看是不是真的。他指的那个地方除了夜晚的天空，什么也没有，可他还是说魔鬼就在那儿看着我们，其他人都缩到我后面，像孩子一样，还拿着锄头和长矛。然后那个傻瓜承认守夜的时候睡着了，梦见了魔鬼，可即使这样，他们急忙回到各自的岗位了吗？他们都吓得不敢动，我只好发誓说，要把他们揍成烂泥，让他们家人都认不得。”他环顾四周，仍旧喘着粗气。“原谅你们的主人吧，朋友们。今晚要是能睡的话，我就睡里面那间屋，你们在这儿尽量让自己舒服一点儿吧，反正能为你们提供的也很少。”

“恰恰相反，先生，”埃克索说，“你为我们提供了非常舒适的住处，我们很感谢。很遗憾你刚才出去，没有听到更好的消息。”

“我们必须等，也许要到半夜，甚至黎明。朋友们，你们要到哪儿去呢？”

“我们明天出发往东走，先生，到儿子的村庄去，他急着见我们呢。不过，这件事情，你也许能帮点忙。我和妻子刚才正在讨论该走哪条路。我们听说有个睿智的僧侣，名叫乔纳斯，住在山上的修道院里，要走山路去，我们有件小事情请教他。”

“乔纳斯当然很有名望，不过我没有亲眼见过他。一定要去见见他，不过要小心，到修道院的路可不好走。大半天都要爬山。等山路走完，你们要注意，不要迷路，那地方就是魁瑞格的地盘。”

“魁瑞格，那条母龙吗？我很久没听人谈到过她了。这里的人现在还很害怕她吗？”

“她现在几乎不下山了，”艾弗说。“一时兴起也许会攻击路过的行人，但是算在她头上的事情，可能是野兽或土匪干的。依我看，带来威胁的不是魁瑞格做的事，而是她还一直存在。只要她还活着，还能自由行动，各种各样的邪恶就会在我们的土地上滋生，像瘟疫一

样。比如今晚给我们带来灾难的魔鬼。它们是哪来的呢？这可不是普通的食人兽。这儿谁也没见过类似的东西。它们为什么要到这儿来呢，为什么要到我们的河岸上安营？魁瑞格现在很少现身，但很多黑暗的力量都来自于她，这么多年她还没被人杀死，真是个耻辱。”

“可是，艾弗，”比特丽丝说，“谁愿意去挑战这么个怪兽呢？无论怎么说，魁瑞格可是条极其凶猛的龙，又躲藏在很难去的山里。”

“艾弗，之前你谈到过迷雾。说你听人说起过它的原因，后来你有事走了，没来得及说下去。现在我们很希望听你谈谈这件事。”

“对啦，迷雾。可真是个好名字。比特丽丝夫人，我们听说的话，谁知道是不是真的呢？我想，刚才我说过，去年有个陌生人骑马经过，在这儿过夜。他是从东边沼泽来的，和今天这位勇敢的客人一样，不过说话的口音很难懂。我请他在这个旧房子里休息，和你们一样，晚上我们谈了很多事情，也谈到了迷雾，你们用的这个名称倒很贴切。他对我们这个奇怪的毛病非常感兴趣，一遍一遍提了很多问题。然后他提了一个说法，我当时没在意，但后来一直在考虑。陌生人认为，可能是上帝本人忘记了我们过去的很多事情——遥远的事情，当天的事情。如果一件事情上帝不记得，我们这些凡人怎么可能还记得呢？”

比特丽丝瞪大眼睛看着他。“这种事情有可能吗，艾弗？我们大家都是主的孩子。我们做过的事情，发生在我们身上的事情，上帝真会忘记吗？”

“这正是我问过的问题，比特丽丝夫人，陌生人没有回答。但从那以后，我就一直在想他的话。也许这也是个不错的说法，可以解释

你们所说的迷雾。现在，请你们原谅，朋友们，我要抽空休息一会儿啦。”

埃克索意识到，比特丽丝在摇他的肩膀。他不知道两人睡了多久：天还是黑的，但外面人声嘈杂，他听见艾弗的声音从上方传来：

“让我们祈祷吧，希望是好消息，不是我们的末日。”等埃克索坐起来，主人已经走了，比特丽丝说道：“快点，埃克索，是好消息还是坏消息，我们马上就知道了。”

埃克索睡眠惺忪，一只手挽住妻子的胳膊，两人踉踉跄跄走入黑夜。外面点亮了更多的火把，有些从围篱上照下来，所以路看得比以前更加清楚。人们来来往往，狗在吠叫，孩子们在哭。接下来一切似乎自动有了秩序，埃克索和比特丽丝发现自己置身于一个队伍之中，大家都在朝一个方向赶。队伍突然停下来，埃克索惊讶地发现，他们已经到了中央的广场——显然，从艾弗家到这儿，不是只有他们之前走过的那条道，还有一条更直的路。篝火熊熊，烧得比以前更旺，以至于有一刻埃克索以为，村民们停住脚步，是因为靠近火的地方太热了。他从人们的头顶望过去，发现那位武士已经回来了。他镇定地站在篝火的左边，身体一侧被火光照亮，另一侧在黑暗中。埃克索发现，他被火光照亮的那一侧脸上有细小的血点，好像他刚从血雾中穿过一样。他的长发仍旧系着，但松了一点儿，看起来湿漉漉的。他的衣服上全是泥巴，也许还有血，出发时漫不经心搭在一侧肩上的披风，有几处地方现在已经破了。但这个人似乎并没有受伤，正在和村中三位长老轻声说话，艾弗也在其中。埃克索还看到，武士的臂弯里托着什么东西。

与此同时，人们开始吟唱，一开始声音很轻，然后越来越大，最后武士转过身去，向人群致意，没有一点儿粗鲁骄横的样子。他开始对人们讲话，尽管声音够响，大家都能听到，但给人的印象是，他在用低沉、亲密的语调谈论严肃的话题。

听众们安静下来，努力去听他说的每个字，不久人们便张大了嘴巴，要么表示赞许，要么感到震惊。有一下，他朝身旁的一个地方做了个手势，埃克索第一次看到，和武士一起出发的那两个人正坐在地上，也在火光照亮的光圈之内。他们看起来好像是从高处跌落了下来，现在还头晕目眩，站不起身来。人们开始为这两人吟唱，但他们似乎没注意到，眼睛仍旧空洞地瞪着前方。

然后武士又转脸看着人群，说了句话，吟唱声消退下去。他向前跨了一步，离篝火更近，一只手抓住他一直带着的那个东西，举到空中。

埃克索看到，那似乎是个动物的脑袋，脖子很粗，从咽喉下方切下来。黑色的卷毛从头顶挂下来，披在脸部周围，那张脸没有五官、怪诞可怖：本来应该有眼睛、鼻子和嘴巴的地方，只有长着很多小疙瘩的肉，像鹅的瘤一样，脸颊上有几丛绒毛一样的毛发。人群里发出一声惊叫，埃克索感觉到大家在往后退。这时候他才意识到，大家看到的不是脑袋，而是一个大得异常的人形怪物的肩臂部位。武士举起战利品时，抓着的是二头肌附近的残根，肩膀那头朝着最上方，这时埃克索看到，这一块东西被剑从身体上砍下，他原来以为是一缕缕毛发的东西，实际上是肌腱从伤口里钻了出来，挂在外面。

过了一会儿，武士把战利品放下来，丢在脚下，好像他无法充分表达对怪物躯体的鄙视一样。人们又一次缩回去，然后又挤上前，吟唱声再次响起，但这次马上就停止了，因为武士又开始讲话。埃克索一句也听不懂，但能明显感觉到周围人们的紧张、激动。比特丽丝在他耳边说：

“两头怪物，都被我们的英雄杀死了。一个受了致命伤，逃进了树林，肯定活不过今天晚上。另一个坚持战斗，被武士切了一块下来，你看就在地上，偿还了它的罪行。那魔鬼拖着剩下的身体，跑到湖里想止住疼痛，在黑色的湖水里沉下去了。那个孩子，埃克索，看到那边那个孩子了吗？”

在光亮的边缘，一小群女人围着一个坐在石头上的少年。他身材瘦削，有黑色的头发，身上裹着毯子。他身高已经接近成人了，但你能感觉到，毯子下面裹着的身体细细长长，仍然是个少年。一个女人拿来了一只木桶，正帮他洗掉脸上和脖子上的污垢，但他似乎浑然不觉。他的眼睛一直盯着前方武士的后背，偶尔歪一下脑袋，似乎想绕过武士的腿，看一眼地上那个东西。

看到这个得救的孩子还活着，而且显然没受重伤，埃克索没觉得欣慰或高兴，反倒隐约有些不安，这让他自己十分惊讶。一开始，他以为这和小男孩本人的奇怪模样有关，但随即他发现了问题所在：小男孩的安危刚刚还是所有人关注的焦点，现在大家对待他的样子却有些不对劲。这里头有种谨慎的沉默，近乎冷漠，让埃克索想起自己村子里关于小女孩玛塔的那件事情，他怀疑这个男孩是不是也和玛塔一样，正在被大家遗忘。可是，这儿的情况显然不是这样。现在大家甚

至开始指着小男孩了，照顾他的女人们回瞪着人群，似乎是要保护他。

“我听不明白他们在说什么，埃克索，”比特丽丝在他耳边说。

“这个孩子能安全回来已是万幸了，想想他那双稚嫩的眼睛刚才见过的事情，可以说他平静得让人惊讶，但是有些人却在为孩子的事情争吵。”

武士仍旧在对人们说话，语气里有恳求的意味。听起来好像他在指责什么人，埃克索能感觉到人们的情绪发生了变化。钦佩与感激逐渐变成了其他情感，周围的人声音渐渐高起来，声音里有疑惑甚至恐惧。武士又说话了，声音严厉，同时指着身后的男孩。这时艾弗走进光亮之中，站到武士身旁，开始说话，一部分人更加直接地表示抗议。埃克索身后有个声音喊了起来，顿时四下里一片喧哗。艾弗提高了声音，人们安静了一会儿，但叫喊声立即又恢复了，黑暗中开始有人推搡。

“哎呀，埃克索，快，我们快点走！”比特丽丝对着他耳朵大声喊道。“这地方我们不能待了。”

埃克索用胳膊搂住她的肩膀，推开人群往外走，他心里一动，又回头望了一眼。那个男孩没动地方，仍然瞪大眼睛看着武士的后背，显然没有察觉到眼前的混乱。照顾他的那个女人已经退在一旁，眼神疑惑，看看男孩，又看看人群。比特丽丝拉了一下他的胳膊。“埃克索，快点，带我们离开吧。我担心我们会受到伤害。”

全村的人肯定都到广场上去了，因为回艾弗家的路上，他们没遇到人。直到看到了房子，埃克索才开口问道：“刚才都说些什么呢，公主？”

“我一点把握也没有，埃克索。大家一起说话，我一下子弄不明白。一场争吵，关于那个得救的孩子，有人发脾气。我们还是先离开吧，发生了什么事，以后慢慢会弄清楚的。”

第二天上午埃克索醒来的时候，一道道阳光照进了房间。他躺在地上，不过他身下铺着软垫子，身上盖着暖和的毯子——这样的安排，比他平日里奢华得多——他现在感觉身体休息得很好。而且，他心情很不错，因为醒来的时候，他脑子里留下了愉快的回忆。

比特丽丝在他身旁动了动，但眼睛还是闭的，呼吸也很均匀。和往常醒来的时候一样，埃克索看着她，等着心里慢慢涌起一股柔情。很快和他预料的一样，他心里感到平安喜乐，但今天还夹杂着一丝悲伤。这种感觉让他惊讶，他一只手轻轻抚摸着妻子肩头，仿佛这个动作能够驱走阴影一样。

他听到外面有吵闹声，但不是晚上把他吵醒的那种声音，而是一个普通的上午，人们在各自干着自己的活儿。他想起来，自己和比特丽丝睡得太晚了，但他忍住没去喊醒比特丽丝，而是继续凝视着她。最后，他小心翼翼地起身，走到木头门边，把门推开一点儿。这扇门——应该是真正的“门”，有木头铰链——发出吱呀的声音，强烈的阳光从缝隙里照进来，可比特丽丝还没醒。现在，埃克索有点儿担心，他回到她躺的地方，在她一旁蹲下，这个动作让他感到膝盖僵硬。最后，他妻子终于睁开了眼睛，仰脸看着他。

“我们该起床啦，公主，”他心里感到宽慰，但没有流露出来。“村子里的人都在干活啦，我们的主人早就走了。”

“那你该早点喊醒我，埃克索。”

“你看起来很平静，昨天很累，我想你该多睡一会儿。我这样想是对的，现在你看起来像年轻姑娘一样鲜嫩呢。”

“这一大早就开始说胡话了。我们都不知道晚上发生了什么。从外面的声音来看，他们还没有自相残杀、全部死光嘛。那是孩子们的声音，我听到了，狗听起来也吃饱了，很开心。埃克索，这儿有水洗脸吗？”

两人尽量把自己收拾得整洁一点，过了一会儿——艾弗还没有回来——他们走到清新、明媚的阳光下，想找点儿吃的。在埃克索眼里，现在的村庄要和善得多。那些圆形的棚屋晚上显得乱七八糟，现在却整整齐齐排列在眼前，投下相似的影子，排成一条穿过村庄的齐整大道。男人女人来来往往，拿着工具或洗衣桶，身后跟着一群群孩子。狗还和昨天晚上一样多，但似乎更加温驯。只有一头驴子在水井前方的阳光下愉悦地排便，才让埃克索想起头天晚上进村时看到的混乱。他们经过的时候，甚至还有人点头简单地打招呼，但没有人和他们讲话。

走了不远，他们看到艾弗和那位武士站在一起，在前面的街道上，身形相差悬殊，头凑在一起讨论着。埃克索和比特丽丝走上前来，艾弗往后退了一步，不好意思地笑了笑。

“我不希望太早把你们吵醒，”他对他们说。“可我是个糟糕的主人，你们两位肯定都饿坏了吧。请跟我到长屋去，我保证让你们吃饱。不过首先呢，朋友们，来见见我们昨晚的英雄。你们会发现，维斯坦先生听懂我们的话没问题。”

埃克索转身面对着武士，点了点头。“我和妻子感到荣幸，能遇见如此勇敢大度、本领出众的人。你昨晚的行动非常了不起。”

“我的行动没什么特殊的，先生，不要再谈我的本领啦。”和以前一样，武士的声音很柔和，眼睛周围荡漾着笑意。“我昨晚运气好，而且，有勇敢的伙伴们协助。”

“他说的伙伴们，”艾弗说，“忙着尿裤子，根本没加入战斗。是他一个人杀死了妖魔。”

“说真的，先生，别提这件事了。”武士这话是对艾弗说的，但他现在凝视着埃克索，好像埃克索脸上有什么标记，让他十分着迷一样。

“先生，我们的语言，你说得非常好，”埃克索说。对方的凝视让他吃了一惊。

武士继续打量着埃克索，然后才回过神来，笑了。“原谅我，先生。有一下子我以为……不过请你原谅我吧。我的血统是正宗的撒克逊人，但我是在离这儿不远的地方长大的，常和不列颠人在一起。所以我不仅会讲自己的话，也学会了你们的语言。这段时间我有些生疏了，因为我住在遥远的东方沼地，那地方能听到很多奇怪的话，但没有你们的语言。所以要请你原谅我的错误。”

“哪里哪里，先生，”埃克索说。“旁人几乎听不出这不是你的本族语。实际上，昨天晚上我注意到你佩剑的方式，和一般撒克逊人相比，位置更高，离手更近，走路的时候手能轻易落在剑柄上。如果我说这种方式更像不列颠人，希望你不要介意。”

维斯坦又笑了。“我的撒克逊伙伴们不仅一直嘲笑我佩剑的方式，还笑话我挥剑的样子。不过，你也看到，我的剑术是不列颠人教的，我想不到还有谁能教得更好。这帮助我渡过了很多危险，昨天晚上也一样。请原谅我的鲁莽，先生，不过我看到，你也不是本地人。你的部族是在西边吗？”

“我们是从隔壁的部族来的，先生。一天的路程而已。”

“那么，也许你以前在更西边的地方住过？”

“先生，正如我刚才所说，我是从隔壁的部族来的。”

“请原谅我不够礼貌。我来到西边这么远的地方，发现自己越来越想念小时候的地方了，不过我知道那儿离这里还有不少路。我发现到哪儿似乎都能看到记忆中的熟悉面孔。你和你好心的妻子今天上午要回家吗？”

“不，先生，我们往东边走，去儿子的村庄，希望两天内能赶到。”

“哦。你就是走穿过树林的那条路了。”

“先生，实际上我们打算走高地上的那条路，从山区经过，那儿的修道院里有个睿智的人，我们希望能够拜见他。”

“是这样啊？”维斯坦若有所思地点点头，又一次仔细打量起埃克索来。“我听人说，那要爬很陡的山啊。”

“我的客人们还没吃早餐呢，”艾弗插了一句。“请原谅我们，维斯坦阁下，我要领他们去长屋啦。然后如果可以的话，先生，我想继续我们刚才的讨论。”他放低声音，继续用撒克逊语说话，维斯坦则点头相应。接着，艾弗转脸看着埃克索和比特丽丝，然后摇摇头，沉重地说：“尽管这个人昨晚付出了巨大努力，我们的麻烦远没有结束呢。请跟我来吧，朋友们，你们肯定饿坏了。”

艾弗在前面走，一瘸一拐地，每一步都要用拐杖拄地。他似乎心事重重，没注意到在熙来攘往的小巷里，客人们已经落在后面。有一下子，艾弗在前面好几步远，埃克索对比特丽丝说：“那位武士是个可敬的人物，你觉得呢，公主？”

“毫无疑问，”她低声回答。“可是，他盯着你看的样子很奇怪呀，埃克索。”

没有时间继续谈话了，因为艾弗终于发现可能把客人们丢了，于是在一个拐角处停了下来。

不久，他们来到一个洒满阳光的庭院，鹅在院子里走来走去。院子一分为二，中间有一条人工小溪——地上挖出来的一道水渠，渠里水不深，但流得急。小溪最宽的地方，有一座简单的小桥，用两块石板搭成，一个大孩子正蹲在石板上洗衣服。埃克索觉得这个场景近乎田园风光，他想停下来好好欣赏一番，可艾弗一直大步向前，朝着那

幢低矮的建筑走去，建筑位于院子的远端，与院子同宽，屋顶盖着厚厚的茅草。

一走进去，你很可能会觉得，长屋和你在某些情况下亲眼见过的那种乡村食堂差不多。屋里有一排排的长桌和板凳，一端是厨房和提供食物的区域。和现代设施的主要差别是，这儿到处都是干草：头顶、脚下都有草，桌面上也有，不过不是有意为之——长屋里经常有风，草被刮得到处都是。这样的上午，就在我们的客人们坐下来准备吃早饭时，阳光从小小的窗户里照进来，你会发现就连空气里都飘着细小的干草粒。

他们到的时候，长屋里没人，但艾弗进了厨房区，一会儿功夫，便有两位年长的妇女出来，拿着面包、蜂蜜、饼干、罐装的牛奶和水。随后艾弗也跟着出来了，拿着一盘鸡块，埃克索和比特丽丝心怀感激地狼吞虎咽起来。

一开始，他们吃着东西，没有讲话，这时候才意识到自己有多饿。艾弗在对面坐下，继续思考着，眼神迷茫、心事重重。过了好一会儿，比特丽丝说道：

“艾弗，这些撒克逊人是你的一个大负担。你也许希望回到自己的部族里去吧，虽然那个男孩已平安回来，食人兽也都杀死了。”

“那可不是食人兽，夫人，和这个地方以前见过的东西都不一样。它们不再在村庄大门外面游荡了，一桩让人害怕的大事可算是了结了。那个男孩可就是另外一回事了。他虽然回来了，安全却谈不上。”艾弗的身体从桌子那边探过来，他压低了声音，尽管周围没有其他入。“你说得对，比特丽丝夫人，和这些野蛮人住在一起，我自己也觉得奇怪。还不如住在老鼠洞里。那位勇敢的陌生人会怎么看我们呢，昨晚他还帮了我们大忙？”

“怎么啦，先生，发生什么事啦？”埃克索问道。“昨晚我们也在火堆边，感觉到要发生激烈的争吵，我们就走了，现在还不知道后来发生了什么事。”

“你们躲起来是对的，朋友们。这些异教徒昨晚都激动得很，相互争吵，几乎要抠出对方的眼珠子。如果他们发现人群中有两个不列颠陌生人，接下来会干什么呢？我都不敢想。男孩埃德温平安回来了，但是，村子里开始庆祝的时候，女人们就在他身上发现了一个小伤口。我亲自看过，其他长老也看过。胸部下方有一个痕迹，和孩子摔跤跌伤差不多。可是那些女人，还是他的亲戚呢，却说那是被咬出

来的伤口，今天上午整个村子都这么说了。为了安全起见，我只好把孩子锁在棚子里，就是这样，他的同伴、他的家人，仍然在门口扔石头，叫喊着要把他拉出去杀掉。”

“但这怎么可能呢，艾弗？”比特丽丝问。“又是迷雾的原因吗，让他们忘记了孩子最近的可怕遭遇？”

“是这样就好啦，夫人。这次他们好像什么都记得清清楚楚。异教徒的眼光，超越不了他们的迷信。他们相信，小男孩既然被魔鬼咬了，很快就会变成魔鬼，在村庄内为非作歹。他们害怕他，维斯坦阁下昨晚将他从一场厄运中救出，但如果他留下来，恐怕还会遭遇更可怕的厄运呢。”

“先生，”埃克索说，“这儿肯定还有明智的人，让大家听听道理吧。”

“就算有，数量也太少了，就算我们能够命令大家节制一两天，不久无知者就会占上风。”

“那能怎么办呢，先生？”

“那位武士也和你们一样担心，我们俩一早上都在讨论。我提议，他骑马离开的时候，把男孩带走——这当然有点强人所难——然后把他丢在某个遥远的村庄里，这样他还有开始新生活的机会。这个人为了我们，刚刚冒了生命危险，这么快就提出这样的要求，让我心里感到深深的愧疚，可我想不出还有什么别的办法。维斯坦正在考虑我的提议，不过他要为国王办事，因为马受伤，以及昨晚的麻烦，已经耽搁了。实际上，我现在该去看看孩子是不是安全，然后去问问武士有没有做决定。”艾弗站起身来，拿起拐杖。“动身之前，来告别吧，朋友们。你们听了这些事情，希望快点离开这里，头也不回，我能理解。”

* * *

埃克索看着艾弗走出门廊，大步穿过洒满阳光的庭院，走了。“坏消息啊，公主，”他说。

“是啊，埃克索，不过和我们没关系。我们不要在这里逗留了。今天要走山路呢。”

食物和牛奶非常新鲜，他们默默地吃了一会儿。然后比特丽丝说：

“你觉得有道理吗，埃克索？艾弗昨晚关于迷雾的话，说是上帝自己让我们忘记的。”

“我不知道对这话该怎么看，公主。”

“埃克索，今天早上我有个想法，就是刚刚醒过来的时候。”

“是什么想法呢，公主？”

“就是一时的想法。也许我们做过什么事，惹上帝发怒了。也许他不是发怒，而是感到耻辱。”

“真是个奇怪的想法，公主。可如果真是你说的这样，那他为什么不惩罚我们呢？为什么把我们变得跟傻瓜一样，连一个小时之前发生的事情都会忘掉？”

“也许上帝为我们感到耻辱，或者是我们做了什么事，以至于他希望自己能够忘记。像陌生人跟艾弗说的那样，如果上帝不想记住，那我们记不住也就不奇怪了。”

“我们究竟可能做过什么事情，让上帝感到如此耻辱呢？”

“我不知道，埃克索。但肯定不是你和我做过的什么事情，因为上帝一直眷爱我们。如果我们向他祈祷，请求他至少记住几件对我们最宝贵的事情，谁知道呢，说不定他能听到，满足我们的愿望。”

外面传来一阵笑声。埃克索微微侧着脑袋，看到院子里有一群孩子，在小溪上的石板桥上玩平衡木游戏。就在他看的时候，其中一个发出一声尖叫，掉进了水里。

“谁知道呢，公主，”他说。“也许山上那位睿智的僧侣会给我们解释。不过，既然我们谈到了今天早晨醒来的事情，我当时也有个想法，或许和你的念头差不多时候吧。是个记忆，简单的记忆，但我已经很高兴了。”

“哦，埃克索，那是什么记忆呢？”

“我记得我们俩正经过一个市场，或者是个节日庆典。我们在一个村庄里，但不是我们自己的村子，你穿着那件有帽子的浅绿色斗篷。”

“那肯定是个梦，丈夫啊，要么就是很久以前的事。我没有绿斗篷。”

“没错，公主，我说的就是很久以前。是个夏天，但我们所在的那个地方有寒冷的风，你把那件绿色斗篷穿在身上，但没戴帽子。一个市场，或者是个节日庆典。村庄在山坡上，刚进去的地方有羊圈，里面有山羊。”

“那我们在那儿干什么呢，埃克索？”

“我们就手挽着手走路，然后有个陌生人，村子里的，突然挡住我们的路。他看了你一眼，眼睛瞪得大大的，好像看见了女神一样。你还记得吗，公主？一个年轻人，不过我想那时候我们也很年轻。他说他从没见过这么漂亮的女人。然后他伸出手来，碰了碰你的胳膊。你还有印象吗，公主？”

“我有点想起来了，不过还不太清晰。我想你说的是个喝醉酒的人吧。”

“也许有点儿醉吧，公主，我不知道。我刚说过，那是个庆祝的日子。反正他看到了你，感到很震惊。说你的美是他的眼睛从没有见过的。”

“那真是很久以前了！那天你不是妒忌了吗，和那人吵了一架，我们差点被赶出了村子？”

“这我可没想起来，公主。我想到的那一次，你穿着绿斗篷，是个节庆的日子，还是这个陌生人，看到我是你的保护人，就转身对我说，她是我见过的最美的人，你呢，我的朋友，一定要好好照顾她。他是这么说的。”

“我有点想起来了，我肯定你妒忌得和他吵了一架。”

“我怎么会做那种事呢？现在想起陌生人的话，我还感到很骄傲呢。他见过的最美的人。而且他让我把你照顾得好好的。”

“就算你当时感到骄傲，埃克索，你肯定也妒忌了。你不是去挑战他了吗，虽然他喝醉了酒？”

“我记得不是这样的，公主。也许我只是假装妒忌，开个玩笑而已。但我应该知道，那个人没有恶意。今天早上我醒来的时候就想起了这件事，虽然过去了很多年。”

“既然你记得是这样，埃克索，那就让它保持这样吧。有了这迷雾，任何记忆都是宝贵的，我们还是紧紧抓住比较好。”

“我在想，那件斗篷后来怎么样了。你一直穿得很好。”

“那是件斗篷，埃克索，和别的斗篷一样，这么多年肯定穿破啦。”

“我们不是丢在哪儿了吗？也许丢在某块有阳光的石头上？”

“这件事我倒想起来了。而且当时我为丢斗篷的事狠狠责怪过你。”

“我想你是责怪过我，公主，不过我现在想不起来那有什么道理。”

“噢，埃克索，无论有没有迷雾，我们能想起几件事情来，就够令人安慰啦。也许上帝已经听到了我们的话，正抓紧帮助我们回忆呢。”

“我们还会记得更多，公主，只要我们用心。到那时候，就算哪一天我们愿意去听某个狡猾的船夫的瞎话，他也骗不到我们啦。我们现在还是吃完早饭吧。太阳很高了，我们要走山路，别太晚了。”

他们往回走，到艾弗的房子去，刚刚经过头天晚上差点被人攻击的地方，就听到有人从上面向下喊。他们四处张望，在高高的防御墙上发现了维斯坦，蹲在一个瞭望台上。

“很高兴看到你们还在这儿，朋友们，”武士朝下面喊道。

“还在这儿，”埃克索朝围篱走了几步，喊道。“不过正急着赶路呢。你呢，先生？你今天要在这儿休息吗？”

“我马上也要离开。不过，先生，如果能冒昧同你说几句话，那我就太感激啦。我承诺不会耽误你太久。”

埃克索和比特丽丝相互看了一眼，然后她低声说，“你愿意就跟他谈谈吧，埃克索。我回到艾弗家里，准备上路的东西。”

埃克索点点头，然后转脸对着维斯坦喊道：“好啊，先生。你要我上来吗？”

“随便你吧，先生。我倒很愿意下来，不过上午阳光明媚，这儿的景色能振奋精神呢。如果你不嫌爬梯子麻烦的话，我想请你上来看。”

“去看看他想干什么，埃克索，”比特丽丝低声说。“但是你要小心一点，我说的可不仅仅是梯子。”

他小心翼翼一级一级上了梯子，来到武士跟前，武士伸出一只手表示欢迎。埃克索在窄窄的平台上站稳了，然后低头往下望，比特丽丝还在下面看着。他轻快地挥挥手，她这才有些不太情愿地迈步朝艾弗的房子走去——他站在高处，能清楚地看到那幢房子。他一直看着她，过了一会儿才转过脸来，目光越过围篱上沿，望着远处。

“你看，我没有撒谎吧，阁下，”两人肩并肩迎风站着，维斯坦说道。“眼睛能看到的，都非常壮观。”

那天上午他们眼前的风景，和今天英国乡村房子的高窗前看到的景观，可能不会有很大差别。这两个人应该能看到，他们的右边是渐次而下的谷坡，每隔一段距离就有绿色的山脊，他们的左边是对面的谷坡，长满了松树，应该显得更朦胧一些，因为更远，与地平线上群山的轮廓融为一体。他们的正前方，则是一望无垠的谷底，一条河流在谷底蜿蜒，直到尽头，更远处则是无边无际的沼泽地，布满一块块的池塘和湖泊。水边应该有榆树和柳树，还有浓密的林地，那时候应该会给人们带来不祥的感觉。河的右岸，在阳光和阴影的交汇处，能看到一处早已废弃的村庄。

“昨天，我骑马从那个山坡下来的，”维斯坦说，“我的马不需要催促，自己奔跑起来，好像就是为了开心。我们穿过田野、河流和湖泊，我的精神好极了。真是件奇怪的事情，好像我回到了以前熟悉的场景一样，虽然就我所知，我从没到过这个地方。会不会我走过这条道，不过那时候还是小男孩，不记得路，却能记住这些景观？这儿的树和高沼地，还有天空，好像能唤醒沉睡的记忆。”

埃克索说，“有可能这块地方和西方你出生的地方有很多相似之处。”

“肯定是这样，先生。在东方的沼泽地，我们没有什么山可言，树和草也没有我们眼前这样的颜色。可是，我的马正是在高兴地奔跑时弄坏了蹄铁，今天早上这里的好心人又给它装了一副，但我要骑得慢一点，因为一只蹄子擦伤了。先生，实际情况是，我请你上来，可不光是要欣赏田园风景，而是要避开闲杂的耳目。我想，男孩埃德温的遭遇，你已经听说了吧？”

“艾弗阁下跟我们说过，我们认为在你勇敢地介入之后发生这样的事情，真是坏消息。”

“你可能也知道，长老们认为男孩在这里的处境凶多吉少，所以求我今天把他带走。他们让我把他丢在某个遥远的村庄，跟人家编个理由，就说孩子是在路上找到的，没吃东西，又迷了路。我很愿意这样做，但我担心，这个计划救不了他。消息很快就会传出去，下个月，明年，男孩会发现今天的麻烦又来了，那时候情况会更加糟糕，因为他来的时间不长，又不知道他属于哪个部族。你能明白这种情况吗，先生？”

“你的担心很有道理，维斯坦阁下。”

武士刚才说话时，一直凝视着面前的风景。风把一缕头发吹到了脸上，他伸手把头发拨开。这时候，他似乎突然在埃克索的面孔上看到了什么东西，一下子竟忘记了自己正在说什么。他歪着脑袋，认真地看着埃克索。然后他低低地笑了一声，说道：

“原谅我，先生。我刚刚想到了别的事情。还是回到我说的话吧。昨天晚上之前，我对这个男孩一无所知，但在每一个新的可怕事件面前，他都镇定应对，给我留下了深刻印象。昨晚，我的同伴们出发时虽然都很勇敢，走近妖魔营地时却被恐惧压倒了。这个男孩虽然在妖魔手里待了好几个小时，举止却镇定自若，让我非常惊讶。想到这个男孩的厄运现在几乎已成定局，我感到十分痛苦。因此我一直在想办法，如果你和你好心的妻子肯伸出援手，也许问题还能解决。”

“我们很愿意尽力而为，先生。先让我听听你的想法吧。”

“长老们让我把孩子带到某个遥远的村庄，毫无疑问他们说的是某个撒克逊人的村庄。但正是在撒克逊人的村庄里，男孩才永远不会安全，因为撒克逊人都有关于男孩伤口的迷信。但是，如果把他留给不列颠人，就算故事传到那儿，也不会有危险，因为不列颠人知道这是胡说八道。他很强壮，我刚才说过，他也非常勇敢，虽然话很少。无论到哪个地方，他立即就会成为有用的好帮手。先生，之前你说过的，你要往东走，到你儿子的村庄去。我想那正是我们要找的那种信奉基督教的村庄。如果你和你的妻子帮他说说话，也许还能得到你儿子的支持，这件事就肯定能有好的结果。当然，如果我送过去，那些好心的人可能也会收留孩子，但我是个陌生人，会引起恐惧和怀疑。而且，我到这儿来，是有任务在身，不能到东边那么远。”

“这么说，”埃克索说，“你是建议我和妻子把孩子从这儿带走。”

“这正是我的建议，先生。但是，我虽然有任务在身，至少可以一起走一段路。你说过打算走山路。我会很高兴陪着你们和男孩，至少到山的那一边。有我陪伴会很无聊，不过，大家都知道山里面有危险，我的剑可能会对你们有用。你们的行李也可以让马来驮，她一条腿不方便，不过驮行李不会有意见的。你看怎么样，阁下？”

“我看这是个绝好的计划。我和妻子听到男孩的困境都很难过，如果能帮助他解决，我们会很高兴。你的话很有智慧，先生。显然，现在他和不列颠人一起最安全。我相信我儿子的村庄会善待他，我儿子在村庄里也是个受人尊敬的人物，几乎也算是长老了，就是年纪小一点。我知道，他会为男孩说话的，保证让他受到欢迎。”

“我非常欣慰。我去把我们的计划告诉艾弗阁下，想办法悄悄把孩子从谷仓带走。你和你妻子马上就能动身吗？”

“我妻子这时候正在准备路上的东西呢。”

“那么，就请你们在南门等着。我马上带我的马和男孩埃德温过来。先生，非常感谢你帮忙克服困难。很高兴未来一两天能和你们同行。”

第四章

他这辈子都没从那么高那么远的地方看自己的村庄，这景象让他惊讶。面对午后雾气中的风景，他下意识地动着手指头，仿佛那是个东西，他一伸手就可以抓到。那位老太太刚才焦虑地看着他爬树，现在她仍然在树脚下，冲上面喊，让他不要再爬了。但埃德温没理睬，因为他比任何人都更了解树。武士命令他放哨，他就小心挑选了这棵榆树，他知道这棵树虽然病恹恹的，却蕴含着力量，会欢迎他。而且，这儿是观察那座桥的最佳地点，还能看到通向桥的那条山路，现在他能清楚地看到三名士兵在和骑马的人说话。骑马的人已经下了马，抓着焦躁不安的的马的缰绳，正和士兵们激烈争论。

他了解树——而这棵榆树就像斯特法。把他扛走吧，丢到树林里烂掉。大一点的孩子们总是这么说斯特法。“没法干活的老瘸子不都该这样吗？”但埃德温看到的是斯特法的本来面目：一位老武士，身体里仍然隐藏着力量，见识甚至比长老们还要高。村子里只有斯特法见过战场——他的两条腿就是在战场上伤的——因此，反过来，斯特法也能够认出埃德温的本来面目。有些男孩子比他力气大，可能会把他按到地上、打他，并以此为乐。但只有埃德温拥有武士的灵魂，其他人没有。

“我观察过你，”老斯特法有一次对他说，“在暴风雨一样的拳头之下，你的眼睛仍然镇定，好像要记住每一拳。这样的眼睛，只有最好的武士冷漠地穿过激烈的战场时，我才见过。不久的将来，你会成为令人生畏的人物。”

现在，这已经开始了。这正在成为事实，就像斯特法预料的一样。

一阵大风吹过，树摇晃起来，埃德温换了一下手，抓住另一根树枝，再次努力回想早上发生的事情。他阿姨的脸扭曲变形，都认不出来了。她一直在尖叫着诅咒他，但艾弗长老没让她讲完，把她从谷仓门口推开，同时也挡住了埃德温的视线，让他看不见她。他阿姨对他一直不错，不过，就算她现在要诅咒他，他也不在乎。不久前，她还想让埃德温喊她“母亲”，可他从没喊过。因为他知道，他真正的母亲在路上。他真正的母亲不会那样冲他尖叫，还要艾弗长老把她拉走。今天早上，在谷仓里，他听到了真正的母亲的声音。

艾弗长老把他推了进去，里面漆黑一片，接着门关上了，他阿姨那张扭曲的脸——所有那些脸——都消失了。一开始，马车只是谷仓中央一团巨大的黑影。慢慢地，他看出了马车的形状，他伸出手，木头摸上去腐烂潮湿。外面，那些声音又开始叫嚷起来，然后又是噼里啪啦的声音，先零零散散，随后连续几声，伴随着木头破裂的声音，谷仓里似乎不那么黑了。

他知道，噪音是石头砸在薄板墙上发出来的，但他不予理会，注意力集中在面前的马车上。马车有多久没使用了？为什么歪歪倒倒地立在那里？如果没有用，为什么要保留在谷仓里呢？

这时候，他听见了她的声音：一开始很难辨别，因为外面很吵闹，还有石头砸墙的声音，但后来慢慢清晰起来。“这算不了什么，埃德温，”她说，“这算不了什么。你可以轻松地承受。”

“但是，长老们不一定能一直挡住他们，”他朝黑暗中说道。他的声音极低，一只手还在抚摸着马车的一侧。

“这算不了什么，埃德温。根本算不了什么。”

“石头可能会把这薄墙砸穿。”

“不要担心，埃德温。你难道不知道吗？石头是由你控制的。你看，你面前是什么？”

“一辆破烂的旧马车。”

“噢，这就对啦。围着马车走，埃德温。围着马车一圈一圈走，因为你是骡子，系在大转轮上。一圈一圈走，埃德温。你转，大转轮才会转，你转，石头才会不停地来。一圈一圈围着马车转，埃德温。一圈一圈围着马车转。”

“为什么我要转轮子呢，母亲？”就在他说话的时候，他的脚已经开始围着马车走了。

“因为你是骡子，埃德温。一圈一圈转吧。你听到了那尖锐的破裂声。你不转轮子，那声音就无法继续。转啊，埃德温，一圈一圈转。围着马车一圈一圈转。”

于是他听从她的命令，手放在马车挡板的上方，双手交替，以保持冲劲。他就这样转了多少圈？一百？两百？他不停地看到，一个角落里有一个神秘的土堆；另一个角落里，窄窄一线阳光落在谷仓的地板上，有一只死乌鸦侧身躺着，羽毛仍旧完好。在微弱的光亮中，这

两个东西——土堆和死乌鸦——也一圈一圈地转。有一次，他大声问道：“我阿姨真的诅咒我了吗？”但没有回答，他想母亲是不是已经走了。可随后她的声音又回来了：“尽你的职责，埃德温。你是骡子。不要停。你控制着一切。如果你停下来，那些声音也会停。那为什么要害怕它们呢？”

有时候，他绕着马车连续转三四圈，也听不到一声尖锐的噼啪。随后，好像是要补足一样，一下子会传来好几声噼啪，外面的叫喊声也会上升到新的高度。

“你在哪里，母亲？”他问过一次。“你还在路上吗？”

没有回答。过了几圈之后，她说，“我本来会给你兄弟姐妹，埃德温，给你很多兄弟姐妹。可现在你只有一个人了。所以要为我找到你的力量。你已经十二岁，差不多成人了。你一个人要抵得上四五个强壮的儿子。找到你的力量吧，来救我。”

又一阵风摇动榆树，埃德温心想，他藏身的这个谷仓是不是狼群进村那天大家躲藏的地方？老斯特法经常跟他讲这个故事。

“孩子啊，你那时候还很小，可能都不记得。狼大白天就来了，三只，若无其事地直接走进了村子。”这时斯特法的声音会充满鄙夷。“全村人都害怕得躲藏起来。有些男人在外面的地里，这是真的。但村里还有很多。他们躲在打谷的谷仓里。不光是妇女和孩子，男人们也躲起来了。他们说，那些狼有奇怪的眼睛。最好还是不要去惹它们。所以狼群想干什么就干什么。它们咬死了母鸡。吃掉了山羊。而这时候全村人都躲起来了。有些躲在自己家里。大多躲在谷仓里。我是个跛子，他们把我丢在原地，坐在手推车上，这双烂腿伸在外面，就在明德里德夫人家外面那条沟旁边。狼朝我走过来。来吃了我吧，我说，我可不会因为一头狼而躲进谷仓。但狼群没理会我，我看着它们从身旁走过，皮毛几乎都擦到了这双没用的腿。它们想干什么就干什么，它们走了很久，那些勇敢的男人才从躲藏的地方爬出来。大白天来了三头狼，这儿却没有一个男人敢站出来。”

围着马车转圈的时候，他想到了斯特法的故事。“你还在路上吗，母亲？”他又问了一次，但同样没有回答。他的腿开始累了，而且他真的不愿意再看到那个土堆和那只死乌鸦，最后她终于说道：

“够啦，埃德温。你干得很卖力。现在，如果你愿意，召唤你的武士吧。把这事了结了。”

听到这话，埃德温感到宽慰，但他继续围着马车转圈。他知道，召唤维斯坦，需要巨大的努力。和头天晚上一样，他必须从内心深处发愿。

但他还是找到了力量，他一旦相信武士已在路上，便立即慢下了脚步——就算是骡子，一天快结束时也会赶得慢一些，他满意地发现，噼啪声越来越少了。等安静了好一阵子，他才停下来，靠在马车边上，慢慢调匀呼吸。接着，谷仓的门开了，武士站在耀眼的阳光里。

维斯坦走进来，没有随手关门，似乎是要表示他的鄙视，无论门外最近聚集过什么样的敌对力量。门开着，谷仓里便有一大块方形的阳光，埃德温看看周围，黑暗中很突兀的马车，这时候显得破烂得可怜。维斯坦当时就直接喊他“年轻的战友”了吗？埃德温不太确定，但他还记得武士领着自己走进那块阳光里，拉起他的衬衫，查看伤口。然后维斯坦直起身，回过头仔细看看身后，低声说道：

“我年轻的朋友，你遵守昨晚的承诺了吗？关于你的伤口？”

“是的，先生。我正是按你的话去做的。”

“你没告诉任何人，包括你好心的阿姨？”

“我没告诉任何人，先生。尽管他们相信那是食人兽的咬痕，并且因此恨我。”

“年轻的战友，让他们继续这样相信吧。如果他们知道你的伤口是怎么来的，那可要糟糕十倍。”

“那和你一起去的我那两个叔叔怎么办，先生？难道他们不知道真相吗？”

“你的叔叔们虽然勇敢，但当时很不舒服，没有进营地。所以只要我们两人保守秘密就行了，等伤口愈合，任何人都没必要怀疑了。尽量保持伤口干净，白天或晚上都不要抓。明白吗？”

“我明白，先生。”

早些时候，他们两人在爬山，埃德温停下来等候两位上了年纪的不列颠人时，曾努力回想与伤口有关的情况。当时他站在矮小的石楠丛里，拉着维斯坦那匹马的缰绳，脑子里没有清晰的印象。但是，现在埃德温在树上，看着桥上细小的人影，回想起了那潮湿的空气和那黑暗，回想起了小木笼子上盖的熊皮的强烈气味，以及笼子颠簸时小

甲虫落在头上和肩上的感觉。他想起自己调整姿势，抓住面前摇摇晃晃的栅栏，以免笼子在地上拖的时候，自己被甩来甩去。然后一切又安静下来，他等着熊皮被拿开，等着新鲜的空气涌到他四周，等着借助火堆的光亮看一眼夜晚。这种情况当天晚上已经发生两次，因此他并不是特别害怕。他还记得其他事情：食人兽的臭味，还有那个邪恶的小东西往笼子松动的木柱上撞，迫使埃德温尽可能往后靠。

那个小东西动作很快，很难看清楚。他当时觉得，它形状和大小像个小公鸡，但没有喙和羽毛。它用牙齿和爪子攻击，而且一直发出粗哑尖锐的叫声。埃德温相信，木头柱子能够挡住牙齿和爪子，但那个小东西的尾巴不时会碰巧打到笼子上，那笼子就显得脆弱多了。幸好，这东西还小——埃德温猜测应该还处在幼年期——似乎并不知道它的尾巴有很大力量。

当时，小东西的攻击似乎没完没了，但现在埃德温觉得，实际上时间并不长，后来那个小东西就被用绳子拽走了。然后熊皮砰一声落下来，一切又漆黑一片，他又得抓住木柱，因为笼子被拖到另一个地方。

这样的情况，他经历过几遍？只有两三次吗？还是有十次，甚至十二次？尽管当时的情况糟糕，但是第一次之后他也许就睡着了，后面被小东西攻击，都是梦到的。

最后一次，熊皮很长时间都没有取下来。他等待着，听着那东西粗厉的叫声，有时候很远，有时候近得多，还有食人兽互相讲话时的咕哝声，他知道这次情况会不一样。正是在那焦虑等待的时刻，他请求有人拯救他。他是从灵魂深处提出这个请求的，因此几乎就等于祈祷，等这请求在他脑子里成形，他立即觉得能达成所愿。

那一刻，笼子开始颤抖，埃德温意识到，笼子整个前面的部分，包括防护栅栏，都被拉到了一边。这让他往回缩了缩，与此同时，熊皮被拉下来，那凶恶的东西冲他猛扑过来。他坐在那儿，本能地抬起脚踢出去，但那东西非常灵巧，埃德温只好用拳头和胳膊乱打。有一下子，他以为那东西已经抓住了自己，还瞬间闭上了眼睛，可等他再次睁开眼睛，却发现对手只在空气中乱抓，拴它的绳子正在往后拽。只有在类似的少数情况下，他才能清楚地看到那东西的模样，发现之前的印象还算准确：那东西看上去像一只被拔了毛的鸡，不过头长得像蛇。它又冲埃德温来了，他只好再次努力把它打开。接着，突然之间，笼子的前部又回到原位，熊皮又将他罩在黑暗之中。后来，他身

体扭曲地挤在小笼子里，才感觉到左侧肋下疼痛，也感觉到那儿湿漉漉、黏糊糊的。

埃德温再次调整了一下他在树上的落脚点，右手伸下去轻轻摸了摸伤口。疼痛已经不厉害了。爬上来的时候，粗糙的衬衫有时候会摩擦伤口，痛得他直咧嘴，但如果像现在这样不动，伤口几乎没什么感觉。那天上午在谷仓里，武士在门口检查伤口时，那里看起来也不过是一簇细小的洞而已。伤口很浅——没他以前受过的很多次伤严重。然而，由于人们相信这是食人兽的咬痕，才引起了这么多麻烦。当时要是他更加坚定地面对那个东西，也许根本就不会受伤。

但他知道，面对考验，他并没有做出耻辱的事。他从没害怕得大声叫喊，也没有祈求食人兽发发慈悲。那个小东西开始冲过来的时候，他吓了一跳，但后来他都抬着头，与它对抗。实际上，他临危不乱、思路清晰，还能发现这个小东西处在幼年期，因此完全有可能让它感到害怕，就像我们可以让一条任性的狗心生畏惧一样。所以他一直睁着眼睛，努力瞪着它、吓退它。他知道，他真正的母亲会因为这件事而为他感到特别骄傲。没错，现在他想起来，那东西一开始的突袭结束之后，攻击就慢慢不怎么凶狠了，反而是埃德温渐渐控制着战斗。他再次回想那东西在空气中乱抓的情形，现在看来那似乎不是要继续战斗，而是被绳子勒住了喉咙，惊慌失措。实际上，食人兽很可能认为埃德温是打斗的胜利者，所以这个做法才被终止了。

“我观察过你，孩子，”老斯特法说过。“你有某种罕见的东西。有一天，你会找到人教你本领，与你的武士灵魂匹配的本领。那时候你会真正成为令人畏惧的人物。你不会躲在谷仓里，听凭狼在村庄里大摇大摆地走。”

现在这一切都实现了。武士选择了他们，他们要一起去完成一项任务。可他们的任务是什么呢？维斯坦没有讲清楚，只说他远在东方沼泽的国王现在正等着听任务完成的消息。为什么和这两个年老的不列颠人一起上路呢？他们到每个路口都要休息。

埃德温向下方凝视着他们。他们现在正和武士热烈地讨论着。老太太已经不再劝说他从树上下来了，三人在两棵大松树的掩护下，看着桥上的士兵。埃德温在树上，看到骑马的那位又上了马，正朝空中打着手势。然后，三位士兵似乎从他跟前走开了，骑马的人调转马头，离开桥，又下山回去了。

他又想起了阿姨扭曲的面孔。她已经开始尖叫着诅咒他了，但那现在都不要紧了。因为他和武士在一起，他也在路上，就像他真正的母亲一样。他们也许能碰上她，谁知道呢？看到他站在那儿，和武士肩并肩，她一定会感到骄傲。和她一起的男人们一定会颤抖。

第五章

大半个上午，这队人都在艰难地爬山，然后发现一条湍急的河流挡住了去路。于是他们回头下山，穿过一片雾气弥漫的林地，寻找山间的主路，他们推测，主路上应该有过河的桥。

他们的推测是对的，路上有桥，但看到桥上的士兵之后，他们决定在松树下面休息，等那些人离开。因为一开始士兵们似乎不是驻扎在那儿的，只是在瀑布边让人和马休息一会儿。时间慢慢过去，士兵们没有继续前进的迹象。他们会轮流趴下来，从桥上伸手够水，洒在脸上；或者背靠木头栏杆坐着，玩色子。后来，第四个人骑着马来了，其他人站起身来，听他指示。

埃克索、比特丽丝和武士没有埃德温在树上那么好的视野，但他们藏在树后，也都看到了发生的事情。看见骑手又骑马走开，三人交换了一下眼色。

“他们可能还要待很久，”维斯坦说。“可你们都急着赶到修道院去。”

“先生，我们最好天黑前赶到，”埃克索说。“我们听说母龙魁瑞格在这个地方游荡，天黑以后只有傻瓜才会待在户外。你认为他们是什么样的士兵呢？”

“这么远的地方很难看清，先生，我对本地装束毫不了解。不过我猜他们应该是不列颠人，忠于布雷纳斯爵爷。也许该请比特丽丝夫人指点一下。”

“我眼睛不行，路太远了，”比特丽丝说。“不过，我想你是对的，维斯坦阁下。他们穿着黑色的军装，我常常看到布雷纳斯爵爷的手下是这副打扮。”

“我们没什么好躲的，”埃克索说。“可以解释一下，他们会让我们过去的，不会找麻烦。”

“我相信是这样。”武士说完，沉默了一会儿，眼睛望着桥。士兵们又坐了下来，好像在接着玩游戏。“但是，”武士继续说道，“如果我们要在他们的监视之下过桥，请允许我提个建议。埃克索阁下，你和比特丽丝先走，和那些人好好谈谈。这个男孩可以牵着马在

后面跟着，我和他并肩走，我会下巴像傻瓜一样耷拉下来，眼神散乱。你们一定要告诉士兵们，我是个哑巴，脑子有点傻，男孩和我是兄弟，别人欠你们钱，所以把我们兄弟俩借给你抵债。我把剑和腰带藏到马背行李最里面。万一他们发现，你们要说是你们的。”

“这样演戏真的有必要吗，维斯坦阁下？”比特丽丝问道。“那些士兵虽然态度常常很粗鲁，但我们以前见过很多，都没什么麻烦。”

“那是当然，夫人。但带着武器的人一旦远离指挥官，便是很难信任的。我呢，是个陌生人，他们也许认为嘲笑或挑衅一下很有趣。我们把男孩从树上喊下来，按照我的提议做吧。”

他们从树林里出来，离桥还有不少路，但士兵们马上发现了他们，都站起身来。

“维斯坦阁下，”比特丽丝低声说，“我担心这事恐怕没这么顺利。你身上还是有某种东西，能让人看出你是名武士，无论你脸上的表情多么愚蠢。”

“我演戏可不熟练，夫人。如果你能帮助我改善伪装，我会很乐意听从你的意见。”

“是你走路的步伐，先生，”比特丽丝说。“你走路的样子像武士。先小步走几步，然后迈一大步，就像你随时都会打个趔趄一样。”

“这是很好的建议，夫人，谢谢你。现在我不说话了，否则他们就知道我不是哑巴。埃克索阁下，请用机智的话语，让这些家伙放我们过去吧。”

他们离桥越来越近，水冲下岩石，从三位等待着的士兵脚下流过，水声越来越响，在埃克索听来，似乎是不祥的预兆。他在前面带路，听着身后马蹄踩在苔藓地上的声音，等来到士兵近前，他便让大家停下。

士兵们没穿锁子甲，没戴头盔，穿着相同的黑色套袍，肩带从右肩斜挎到左臀，明白无误地宣示着他们的身份。他们的剑暂时没有出鞘，但两名士兵手放在剑柄上。一个矮小、粗壮，肌肉结实；另一个是年轻人，比埃德温大不了多少，身材也不高。两人都理着短平头。

相比之下，第三位士兵个子很高，留着灰白的长发，梳理得很整齐，披到肩膀上，头上箍着一根黑色的绳子，将头发拢到脑后。不仅外貌，他连姿态也与其他士兵明显不同。其他人僵硬地站在桥头挡住去路，他却在后面，隔着几步远，懒洋洋地靠在一根桥柱上，双手抱胸，好像晚上在篝火旁听故事一样。

那位粗壮的士兵向前迈了一步，所以埃克索先对他说话。“你们好，各位。我们没有恶意，只想平平安安过桥。”

粗壮的士兵没有回答。他脸上疑惑不定，瞪着埃克索，既慌乱又鄙夷。他回头看了一眼身后的年轻士兵，没得到什么示意，于是又转过脸盯着埃克索。

埃克索意识到，这里头可能有误会：士兵们在等候另外一拨人，还没意识到自己弄错了。于是他说道：“先生，我们就是普通的农夫，要到儿子的村庄去。”

粗壮的士兵这时定了定神，回答埃克索的话，声音太大了点儿。“农夫，和你一起走路的是什么人？看长相是撒克逊人。”

“这兄弟俩刚刚归我们管理，我们要想办法训练呢。不过，你们看，这个还只是个孩子，另一个是有点傻的哑巴，看来他们也帮不上我们什么忙。”

埃克索说话的时候，那个头发灰白的高个子士兵好像突然想起了什么事一样，站直了身子，侧着脑袋，一副聚精会神的样子。同时，粗壮的士兵愤怒地盯着埃克索和比特丽丝身后。然后，他大步从两人身旁走过，仔细打量另外这两个人，一只手仍旧按在剑柄上。埃德温拉着马，茫然地看着走过来的士兵。维斯坦却一个人咯咯地笑着，眼珠乱转，嘴张得大大的。

粗壮的士兵看看这个，又看看那个，好像要寻找线索。然后，他好像再也无法克制自己的烦躁，一把抓住维斯坦的头发，愤怒地拽着。“没人给你剪头发吗，撒克逊人？”他对着武士的耳朵喊道，然后又拽他的头发，似乎是要维斯坦跪下来。维斯坦踉跄了一下，不过没有摔跤，同时发出了可怜的呜咽声。

“他不会说话，先生，”比特丽丝说。“你能看出来，他是个傻子。对他手脚重一点，他倒无所谓，但大家都知道他有犟脾气，我们还没来得及驯服呢。”

妻子说话的时候，埃克索感觉到身后有细微的动静，于是转身看着仍在桥上的两位士兵。他看到头发灰白的高个子士兵已经举起了一只手臂。他的手指快要做出指点的动作，却突然松弛下来，成了个没有意义的姿势。最后，他这条手臂全放下来了，但他的眼睛还在不满地看着。埃克索看着这一切，突然觉得能够理解头发灰白的士兵刚刚经历的内心感受，甚至有似曾相识之感：愤怒的批评都快到嘴边了，只是他及时想起来，他并没有正式的授权去指责这位粗壮的同事。埃克索肯定，自己在什么地方曾有过几乎相同的经历，不过他努力把这个念头抛开，用缓和的语气说道：

“先生们，你们肯定有公务要忙，对不起耽误了你们的时间。如果你让我们过桥，我们很快就不会给你们添麻烦啦。”

但粗壮的士兵还在折磨维斯坦。“跟我要犟脾气，可不明智啊，”他吼叫道。“让他耍脾气，看看有什么代价！”

最后，他总算放开了维斯坦，大步回到自己在桥上的位置。他什么也没说，满面怒容，像个生气的人，却完全忘了自己为什么要生气。

水流的声音似乎只是增加了气氛的紧张感。埃克索心想，如果他转过身，带着大家回到树林，不知道士兵们会怎么样。就在这时候，头发灰白的士兵走上前来，和另外两个人并排，第一次开口说道：

“大叔，桥上有几块木板断了。我们站在这儿，也许就是因为这个，为了提醒像你们这样的好人过桥小心，要不就跟着水流滚下山去了。”

“那你真是好心，先生。我们会小心过桥的。”

“你那边那匹马，大叔，刚才朝这边走的时候，我看到有点跛。”

“一条腿伤了，先生，我们希望不太严重，不过你能看到，我们不骑。”

“这些木板被水溅多了，烂了，所以我们才在这儿，不过我的战友们认为，我们到这儿来可能还有别的任务。所以我要问你一下，大叔，你和你好心的妻子路上看到陌生人了吗？”

“先生，在这儿我们自己就是陌生人，”比特丽丝说道，“所以就算看到陌生人，也不能马上认出来。不过，我们在路上走了两天，

没看到什么特别的情况。”

头发灰白的士兵注意到了比特丽丝，眼睛似乎柔和起来，露出了笑意。“夫人，你这么大年纪的女人，要到儿子的村庄，可走了不少路啊。你和他一起住在那儿，不是很好吗，让他每天能够照顾你的生活？何必让你这样走，路上遇到危险又没人保护？”

“我希望你说得对，先生，等我们见到他，我和丈夫会跟他谈谈。可是，我们很久没见他了，心里不免有些疑虑，不知道他会怎样对待我们。”

头发灰白的士兵继续和善地打量着她。“夫人，”他说，“也许你什么也不用担心。我自己也离父亲母亲很远，很久没见他们了。也许以前曾讲过什么狠话，谁知道呢？但是，如果他们明天来找我，像你们现在这样，跋涉了很远的路程，那我一定会满心欢喜地迎接他们，这你们不会怀疑吧？我不知道你儿子是什么样的人，夫人，不过我敢打赌他和我也没什么大区别，他一看到你们，肯定就会流出幸福的泪水。”

“能这样说，先生，你真是好心，”比特丽丝说。“我想你说得对，我和丈夫也常常这样说，但是听别人说出来，还是一位远离家乡的儿子，真是令人欣慰。”

“平平安安上路吧，夫人。如果你们碰巧在路上遇到我的母亲和父亲从另外那个方向过来，请跟他们说点好心的话，让他们继续赶路，因为他们肯定会不虚此行。”头发灰白的士兵站在一旁，让他们过去。“请记住有些木板不牢固。大叔，最好你自己牵马过去。孩子或傻子可干不了这件事。”

粗壮的士兵一直不满地看着，这时似乎也服从了同事身上那股天然的权威。他转过身，背对着所有人，闷闷不乐地靠在栏杆上看水。年轻的士兵犹豫了一下，然后走过来，站在头发灰白的人身边，两人礼貌地点点头，埃克索又一次感谢他们，牵过马，不让马的眼睛看下面的急流，然后过了桥。

等士兵和桥都消失在视野中，维斯坦停下来，建议大家离开主路，走一条向上通往树林的小路。

“我对树林里的路有很好的直觉，”他说。“我觉得走这条路，能少绕一个大弯。而且，这条路上经常有士兵和强盗，我们离开更加安全。”

随后一段时间，武士在前面带路；他找了根棍子，拨开荆棘灌木。紧随其后的是埃德温，他拉着马笼头，不时低声和马说话。等埃克索和比特丽丝从后面跟上来，路已经好走多了。不过，这条捷径——如果算是捷径的话——越来越难走，周围的树越来越密，荆棘丛生、树根交错，每一步都要小心。一如既往，他们走路的时候都不说话，不过有一下子，埃克索和比特丽丝已经落后了不少，比特丽丝回头喊道：“你在那儿吗，埃克索？”

“还在呢，公主。”没错，埃克索就在她身后几步远。“别担心，没听说这儿的树林有什么特别的危险，离大平原也很远。”

“埃克索，我刚才在想。我们这位武士演戏可不差啊。他的伪装可能连我都会上当，那个野蛮的家伙拽他的头发，他都没有露出马脚。”

“没错，他演得很好。”

“埃克索，我刚才在想。我们要离开村庄很长时间。有很多庄稼要种，篱笆和大门需要修理，他们竟然让我们走了，你不觉得奇怪吗？你觉得他们会抱怨我们在需要咱俩的时候走了吗？”

“毫无疑问，公主，他们会想念我们的。但我们离开时间不长，牧师也理解我们希望看到儿子。”

“我希望是这样，埃克索。我可不希望他们说，我们在最需要的时候离开了。”

“总有人会这么说的，不过大部分人会理解我们的需要，换作他们，也会这么做。”

他们默默地继续走了一会儿。然后比特丽丝又说道：“你还在那儿吗，埃克索？”

“还在，公主。”

“他们那样是不对的。拿走我们的蜡烛。”

“现在谁在乎呢，公主？而且夏天就快到了。”

“这事我有点记忆了，埃克索。我在想，我身上痛，一开始也许就是因为没有蜡烛。”

“你在说什么呢，公主？这怎么可能呢？”

“我想，也许是因为晚上黑。”

“那儿有棵李子树，走过去小心一点。这儿可不能摔跤。”

“我会小心的，埃克索，你也小心点。”

“你身上痛，为什么会是因为晚上黑呢，公主？”

“去年冬天据说我们村子附近有个小精灵，埃克索，你还记得吗？我们自己没看见过，可他们说这个小精灵喜欢黑暗。我们长时间待在黑暗中，我在想小精灵也许到我们这儿来了，只是我们不知道，就在我们的屋子里，给我带来了这个麻烦。”

“如果它到我们这儿来了，无论屋子是不是黑的，我们应该都会知道，公主。就算漆黑一团，我们应该也能听到它在动，或者发出叹息声。”

“现在既然谈到，埃克索，我想起来了，去年冬天我晚上醒过来，你在旁边睡得很沉，我肯定屋子里有奇怪的声响，把我吵醒了。”

“可能是老鼠之类的东西，公主。”

“不是那种声音，我想我听到这声音也不止一次。现在想一想，我身上大概也就是从那时候开始痛的。”

“哦，如果是小精灵，那又怎么样呢，公主？你身上的痛不过是个小麻烦，这个家伙只是玩闹，没有恶意，类似于有一次某个捣蛋的孩子把老鼠头放在伊尼德夫人的编织篮里，就是为了看她吓得到处乱跑。”

“你这话说得对，埃克索。只是玩闹，没有恶意。我想你是对的。不过呢，丈夫……”她住了口，慢慢从两棵紧贴在一起的老树干中间走过去。然后她说道：“不过呢，等我们回家，我晚上要点蜡烛。我不想让那个小精灵或者别的东西给我们带来更大的麻烦。”

“我们会想办法的，不要担心，公主。我们一回去，就和牧师谈谈。但修道院的僧侣会给你明智的建议，治好你身上的痛，这点小麻烦也就没有啦。”

“这我知道，埃克索。这件事我也不是很担心。”

维斯坦说，他走的路要少绕一个大弯。很难判断他说得对不对，无论如何，中午刚过，他们就走出了树林，回到了主路上。路上有车轮轧出的沟痕，有的地方有水坑，但他们可以走得更自在了，过了一会儿，路面就更干、更平了。温暖的阳光从低垂的树枝间洒下来，他们心情很好。

然后维斯坦又让大家停下来，指着他们面前的地面。“我们前面不远，有一名孤身一人的骑手，”他说。他们没走多久，便看到前路旁有一块空地，有新鲜的脚印通过。他们交换个眼色，小心翼翼地向前走。

等到走近了，他们发现空地很大：也许以前更加繁华的日子里，有人曾打算在这儿建房子，周围再开辟一片果园。从主路通到这儿的小径，虽然杂草丛生，却挖得很用心，小径的尽头处是个巨大的圆形区域，头顶上方没有遮蔽，除了中央一棵茂盛的大橡树。从他们站立的地方，能看到一个人坐在树荫下，背靠着树干。这时他们看到的是他的侧影，似乎穿着盔甲：两条覆盖着铁甲的腿僵硬地在草地上伸着，像孩子一样。那张脸被橡树叶挡住了，看不清楚，不过他们能看到他没戴头盔。一匹上了鞍的马在一旁满足地吃草。

“来人通报身份！”那人从树下喊道。“若是强盗和小偷，我将站起身来持剑相迎。”

“回答他，埃克索，”维斯坦低声说道。“我们看看他是干什么的。”

“我们就是普通的路人，先生，”埃克索喊道。“我们只希望平安路过。”

“你们有几个人？那是马的声音吗？”

“一匹跛脚的马，先生。人有四个。我和我妻子是不列颠老人，带着一个还没长胡子的男孩，还有一个有点傻的哑巴，是他们的撒克逊亲戚最近给我们的。”

“那就到我这儿来吧，朋友们。我有面包可以分享，你们一定渴望休息，我也渴望有你们做个伴。”

“我们该到他那儿去吗，埃克索？”比特丽丝问。

“我看去吧，”埃克索还没回答，维斯坦便说道。“他对我们没危险，听起来像年纪不小了。同样，我们还是像之前那样表演。我再假装下巴耷拉着，眼睛傻兮兮的。”

“但这个人有盔甲、有武器，先生，”比特丽丝说。“你的武器放在马背上，与毯子和蜜罐放在一起，你确定这算是准备好了吗？”

“我的剑藏起来，不引人注目比较好，夫人。需要的时候，我会很快找到的。让年轻人埃德温拉着缰绳，不要让马离我太远。”

“过来吧，朋友们！”陌生人喊道，并没有调整那僵硬的姿势。
“你们不会有什么麻烦！我是位骑士，也是不列颠人。带着武器，没错，但是你们走近点，就能看到我只是个上了年纪的老傻子。我带着剑、穿着盔甲，只是出于对我的国王的义务，就是受人爱戴的伟大的亚瑟王，现在已经上天堂很多年了，我几乎也有这么长时间没有愤怒地拔剑啦。那是我的老战马霍拉斯，你们看就在那儿。他一直要承受这金属盔甲的负担。看看他，腿也弯了，背也塌了。唉，我知道，每次我骑上去，他有多受罪。但是他心肠可好呢，我的霍拉斯，我知道他宁愿这样。我们就这样旅行，全副盔甲，以我们伟大国王的名义，一直就这样，直到我们俩都挪不动脚为止。来吧，朋友们，不要害怕我！”

他们转弯进入空地，大家走近橡树时，埃克索看到，这位骑士的确不是令人畏惧的人物。他看起来非常高，但埃克索觉得那盔甲下的身体肯定十分瘦削，虽说还挺结实。他的盔甲磨损上锈了，尽管他肯定花了最大的气力予以保护。他的短袍本来是白色的，现在打满了一层层的补丁。盔甲上伸出来的那张脸和善慈祥，长满了皱纹；脑袋上光秃秃的，只有几缕长长的白头发轻轻飘着。他坐在地上不动，双腿叉开，或许会让人觉得可怜，不过这时候阳光从头顶的树枝间洒落下来，在他身上画出光亮和阴影交替的图案，让他看上去如登王座、气象威严。

“可怜的霍拉斯今天没吃早饭，因为我们是在石头地上醒来的。然后我又一直急着赶路，我承认，我脾气不太好。我不肯让他停下来。他的脚步越来越慢，但他的把戏，我早已经熟悉了，绝不会让他得逞。我知道你不累！我跟他说，然后轻轻踢了他一下。他跟我玩的这些把戏，朋友们，我可不能容忍。但他走得越来越慢，我呢，是个心肠软的傻子，虽然知道他心里其实在笑呢，还是舍不得他，我说，

好吧，霍拉斯，别走了，你去吃草吧。所以你们看，我就在这儿啦，又当了一回傻瓜。到我这儿来吧，朋友们。”他伸出手，盔甲吱吱作响，从身前草地上的一个包袱里拿出一块面包。“这是刚烤出来的，经过一家磨坊的时候，人家给我的，还不到一个小时呢。来吧，朋友们，到我旁边坐坐，我们一起吃。”

埃克索扶着比特丽丝的胳膊，让她坐到橡树盘结的树根上，然后他自己在妻子和老骑士中间坐下来。后背一靠上那生苔藓的树皮，他顿时感到舒服多了，会唱歌的鸟儿在树上窸窣窸窣，面包传过来，又软又新鲜。比特丽丝的头靠在他肩膀上，她胸口起伏了一阵子，然后也开始大口吃起来。

但维斯坦没有坐下来。他咯咯笑着，用各种方法向老骑士充分展示了自己的愚蠢，然后晃到了长满长草的地方，和牵着马的埃德温站在一起。比特丽丝吃完了面包，身体向前倾着，开始与陌生人说话。

“先生，我没有及时与你打招呼，请你务必原谅，”她说。“我们可不是经常能看见骑士的，想到能与骑士见面，我有些惶恐。希望你没有不高兴。”

“一点儿也没有，夫人，有你们陪着我非常高兴。你们还有很远的路要走吗？”

“我们儿子的村子还要走一天，我们希望拜见这山中修道院里一位睿智的僧侣，所以走的是山路。”

“啊，那些神圣的神父们。我肯定他们会好好招待你们。去年春天他们帮了霍拉斯一个大忙，他一只蹄子化了脓，我还担心他活不了了呢。我自己呢，几年前摔过一跤，休息期间也得到了他们的关照。但是，如果你们是要请人治疗这个哑巴的话，我恐怕只有上帝自己才能让他开口说话。”

骑士说这话时，朝维斯坦看了一眼，却发现维斯坦正朝他走来，脸上那愚蠢的模样消失了。

“先生，那就请允许我给你个意外吧，”他说。“我可以说话啦。”

老骑士吃了一惊，然后扭过身去，身上的盔甲吱吱作响，两眼瞪着埃克索，似乎在质问。

“骑士阁下，请不要责怪我的朋友们，”维斯坦说。“是我请求他们这么做的。但现在既然不用害怕你了，我就不要这伪装了。请你原谅。”

“我倒不在意，先生，”老骑士说，“在这个世界上还是小心一点好。但你告诉我，你是什么人，让我也不用害怕你。”

“我名叫维斯坦，先生，从东方的沼泽地来的，受我的国王差遣，到这个地方来。”

“啊。那离家真很远啦。”

“离家很远，先生，这些道路对我来说应该很陌生，可每个路口，我都觉得好像遥远的记忆复活了。”

“先生，那肯定是因为你以前来过。”

“肯定是这样，我听人说过，我不是在沼泽地生的，而是在从这儿往西的某个地方。那能够遇到你就更是幸运了，先生，我想你是高文骑士吧，也是从西边那儿来的，都知道你经常在这块地方。”

“没错，我就是高文，那位曾以巨大智慧与公正统治这片土地的国王——伟大的亚瑟王——是我的舅舅，我在西方待了很多年，不过这些日子里，我和霍拉斯是走到哪儿算哪儿。”

“如果我的时间自由，那我宁愿今天就往西走，呼吸那个地方的空气。但我要完成任务，快点赶回去报告。不过，能够遇到伟大的亚瑟王的骑士，真的非常荣幸，何况还是他的外甥呢。我虽然是个撒克逊人，却非常敬重他的大名。”

“很高兴听你这么说，先生。”

“高文爵士，我既然神奇地恢复了说话的能力，那我就想问你一个小问题。”

“随便问吧。”

“现在坐在你身边的这位先生，是好心的埃克索阁下，他是位农夫，来自一个信奉基督教的村庄，离这儿两天的路程。年纪和你差不多。高文爵士，现在我请问你，你转过头来仔细看看他。你以前见过他的脸吗，哪怕是很久以前？”

“我的天哪，维斯坦阁下！”埃克索以为比特丽丝已经睡着了，可这时她却再次坐直了身子。“你为什么要这么问？”

“我没有恶意，夫人。高文爵士是从西边来的，我猜他以前也许见过你丈夫。这能有什么坏处呢？”

“维斯坦阁下，”埃克索说，“我们第一次见面之后，我看你就不时奇怪地看着我，我也想知道原因。你究竟认为我是谁呢？”

维斯坦之前站在那儿，低头面对着三个并肩坐在橡树下的人，这时他蹲下来，屁股坐在脚后跟上。他这样做，或许是要显得谦和一些，但在埃克索看来，这位武士几乎就是要更加仔细地查看他的容貌。

“我们暂且请高文爵士照我的请求做吧，”维斯坦说，“只需要他稍稍转一下头。如果你愿意，可以看成是孩子气的游戏。我请求你，先生，看看你身边这个人，告诉我们以前有没有见过他。”

高文爵士低声一笑，身体向前倾。他一副急着找乐子的模样，好像有人请他玩游戏一样。但是，他一凝视埃克索的脸，立即就露出了惊讶的表情——甚至是震惊。埃克索本能地转过脸去，与此同时，老骑士的身体又使劲靠回到树干上。

“怎么样，先生？”维斯坦饶有兴趣地看着，问道。

“我想我和这位先生之前没有见过，”高文爵士说。

“你确定吗？时间能改变相貌啊。”

“维斯坦阁下，”比特丽丝插了句话，“你在我丈夫脸上要找什么呢？为什么要这位好心的骑士做这件事，大家都不过刚刚才认识他？”

“请原谅，夫人。这块地方唤醒了记忆，都像焦躁不安的麻雀，我知道它们随时可能飞到风里去。我这一天都觉得，你丈夫的脸会唤醒某个重要的记忆。我真诚地希望你们两人安全经过这荒山野路，但是说实话吧，我提出与你们同行，也是有原因的。”

“可是，我丈夫一直住在这附近，你怎么可能在西方见过他呢？”

“不要管它了，公主。维斯坦阁下把我当成他以前认识的什么人。”

“肯定是这样，朋友们！”高文爵士说。“我和霍拉斯常常认错脸，以为是过去某个人。霍拉斯，你看那位，我这样说。路上，在我们前面，那就是我们的老朋友蒂迪尔，我们还以为他在巴顿山之战中

死了呢。等走近一看，霍拉斯会哼一声，好像是说，高文呐，你真是个老糊涂，这个人年纪很小，都够当他孙子啦，而且长得一点儿也不像！”

“维斯坦阁下，”比特丽丝说，“请告诉我。我丈夫让你想到的那个人，你小的时候爱他吗？还是害怕他？”

“现在，最好还是别说了，公主。”

但是，维斯坦屁股坐在脚后跟上，身体轻轻晃动，眼睛却一直盯着埃克索。“夫人，我相信那是我爱的人。因为今天早晨我们见面的时候，我的心高兴得都要跳出来了。然而，不久前……”他默默地看着埃克索，那眼神似乎在做梦一般。接着，这位武士突然脸一沉，站起来，转过身去。“我无法回答你，比特丽丝夫人，因为我也不了解我自己。本来我以为，与你们同行，一些记忆就会苏醒，但现在还没有。高文爵士，你身体还好吧？”

没错，这时候高文的身体已经向前耷拉下去。听了这话，他直起身，叹了口气。“还好，谢谢你关心。不过，我和霍拉斯很多个晚上没有柔软的床，没有遮风挡雨的地方，我们两个都累啦。没别的事情。”他抬起一只手，抚摸着额头上一处地方，不过在埃克索看来，他真正的目的也许是要挡住视线，不想看到身旁那张脸。

“维斯坦阁下，”埃克索说，“既然我们现在坦诚地交谈，那么，也许我可以来问问一些事情。你说，你到这方土地，是受你的国王所差。既然如此，在一个和平已久的地方旅行，为什么如此急迫地伪装自己呢？如果我妻子和那个可怜的男孩要与你同行，我们就希望知道同伴的真实身份，知道他可能有什么样的朋友和敌人。”

“你的话有道理，先生。正如你所说，这块土地安定和平。但我只是个撒克逊人，要穿过不列颠人统治的领域，而且这附近的统治者是布雷纳斯爵爷，他的士兵四处巡查，征收谷物和牲口。我不希望因为误解而引起争吵。所以，我就需要伪装，先生，这样我们大家都更加安全。”

“也许你说得对，维斯坦阁下，”埃克索说，“但是，刚才我在桥上看到，布雷纳斯爵爷的士兵似乎不是在随意打发时间，而是有任务，驻守在桥上，要不是迷雾笼罩在他们心头，他们也许会更仔细地盘查你。先生，你有没有可能在与布雷纳斯爵爷为敌？”

有一刻，维斯坦似乎陷入了沉思，眼睛看着一根盘结的树根，那树根从橡树的树干伸出，经过他站立的地方，然后慢慢钻入地下。最后，他又回过神来，这次在草茬子上坐下。

“那好吧，先生，”他说，“我就都说出来。在你和这位好骑士面前，也没有关系。我们东方的人听到传言，说这块土地上，我们的撒克逊同胞正遭受不列颠人的欺凌。我的国王为他的族人担心，就派我前来查探真实的情况。我来就是为了这件事，先生，马脚受伤的时候，我正在和平地履行我的职责。”

“先生，我很理解你所处的位置，”高文说。“我和霍拉斯常去撒克逊人掌管的地方，也感到有必要小心行事。这种时候我倒宁愿丢掉盔甲，让人以为是个普通的农夫。可是，我们要是把这盔甲丢在什么地方，以后怎么还能找到呢？而且，虽然亚瑟已经离世多年，我们难道没有责任骄傲地佩戴他的徽记，让所有人都看到吗？于是我们就大胆往前走，我很高兴地告诉你们，大家看到我是亚瑟王的骑士，对我们都很友好。”

“高文爵士，你在这附近受到欢迎，这毫不奇怪，”维斯坦说。“但是，那些地方的人们曾把亚瑟当作可怕的敌人，情况真的也是一样的吗？”

“先生，我和霍拉斯发现我们国王的名字到处都受到欢迎，也包括你提到的那些地方。因为亚瑟对被他们打败的人宽容大度，他们很快就爱上了他，把他当作自己人。”

一种焦虑与不安已经在埃克索心中萦绕了有一会儿了——至少从大家提到亚瑟的名字后，他就一直有这种感觉。这时候他听着维斯坦和老骑士的谈话，终于回想起了一些片段。能记起来的不多，不过有点儿东西能够抓住、能够思考，这让他感到欣慰。他想起自己站在一顶帐篷里面，那是一顶大帐篷，军队在战场附近搭建的那种。那是晚上，点着一根大蜡烛，烛光摇曳，外面的风鼓动着帐篷四壁。帐篷里还有其他人。或许有好几个人，但他记不起他们的面孔。他，埃克索，心里正在为什么事情生气，但他明白，隐藏自己的怒火很重要，至少不能马上发作。

“维斯坦阁下，”比特丽丝在他身旁说道，“我来跟你说，在我们自己的村子里，有几户撒克逊人家很受尊重。你自己也看到了我们今天离开的那个撒克逊村庄。那些人过得兴旺，虽然有时候要在妖魔

手里遭点儿罪，比如你勇敢杀死的那些，但那可不是不列颠人干的。”

“这位好心的女士说的是真话，”高文爵士说。“我们爱着的亚瑟在这儿给不列颠人和撒克逊人带来了持久的和平，虽然我们仍能听到遥远的地方发生战争的消息，但我们这儿，大家长期以来都是朋友和亲人。”

“我所见到的一切，与你的话一致，”维斯坦说，“我也急着带一份令人高兴的报告回去，虽然我还要看看山那边的地方。高文爵士，我不知道以后还有没有机会向如此智慧的人提问，那么请允许我现在就问吧。你们伟大的国王用了什么神奇的本领，治愈了这片土地上的战争创伤，以至于今天在这儿旅行的人，几乎看不到任何伤疤或阴影？”

“这个问题值得你问，先生。我的回答是，我的舅舅作为统治者，从不认为自己比上帝更伟大，总是祈求指引。所以，被他征服的人，和与他并肩战斗的人一样，看到了他的公正，希望他当他们的国王。”

“尽管如此，先生，一个人孩子昨天被人屠杀，今天却称对方为兄弟，这难道不是奇怪的事情吗？而这似乎正是亚瑟完成的伟绩。”

“维斯坦阁下，你刚才的话触及了这件事情的核心。你说屠杀孩子。但亚瑟总是告诫我们放过卷入战乱的无辜者。还有，先生，他还命令我们尽最大努力去拯救和保护所有女人、孩子和老人，无论是不列颠人还是撒克逊人。虽然战事激烈，这些行动却打下了相互信任的基础。”

“你的话听起来很有道理，但对我来说，这似乎仍是个难以索解的奇迹，”维斯坦说。“埃克索阁下，你不觉得亚瑟统一这个国家是件神奇的事情吗？”

“维斯坦阁下，我再说一次，”比特丽丝喊道，“你把我丈夫当成什么人了？先生，他对战争一无所知！”

可是，突然之间，她的话没人听了。埃德温刚才晃到了路上，这时叫喊起来，紧接着传来急促的马蹄声，由远而近。埃克索后来回想起来，觉得维斯坦当时是真的全神贯注，忙着对过去做一些奇怪的猜测，因为骑马的人进入空地时，这位警觉的武士几乎都没站起身来。只见那人以高超的技巧让马放慢速度，小跑着朝大橡树而来。

埃克索立即认出了骑马的人，就是那位头发灰白的高个子士兵，在桥上曾礼貌地对比特丽丝说过话。他脸上仍带着淡淡的笑意，但走过来的时候剑已经拔出，不过剑尖朝下，剑柄贴在马鞍边上。就在马再跨几步就会撞到树上的时候，他勒住缰绳。“你好，高文爵士，”他说，同时微微点了点头。

老骑士坐在那儿，鄙夷地看着他。“你这是什么意思，先生，到这儿来拔剑？”

“请原谅我，高文爵士。我只想问一问和你同行的这几个人。”他低头看着维斯坦，维斯坦下巴又耷拉下来，正一个人咯咯傻笑。那士兵眼睛没离开维斯坦，口里喊道：“小男孩，那匹马不要再靠近了！”没错，在他身后，埃德温正牵着维斯坦的马慢慢走过来。“听我的话，孩子！放开缰绳，过来到我面前站好，和你的傻哥哥一起。我在等着呢，孩子。”

埃克索注意到了这一切，他钦佩士兵的战术技巧，也惊讶于其复杂含义。以前某个时候，埃克索也曾催马向前，以与另一位同行骑手并辔而行，这个动作幅度很小，但实际上非常重要。那天他在干什么呢？他们两个人，他自己和另外那位骑手，一直在马背上等待，眼睛望着辽阔的灰色原野。此前，同伴的马一直在前面，因为埃克索记得马尾巴在他眼前摇晃、抖动，当时他心里想，这是因为动物的本能呢，还是因为空阔的土地上刮着狂风？

埃克索抛开这些令人困惑的念头，慢慢起身，然后帮助妻子也站起来。高文爵士仍旧坐着，像是粘在了橡树脚下，愤怒地看着新来的

人。随后他低声对埃克索说，“先生，扶我站起来。”

埃克索和比特丽丝一起动手，各扶住一条胳膊，才让老骑士站起身来。不过，等他全副盔甲，站直了身子，挺起胸膛，可真是一副威风凛凛的模样。但高文爵士只是闷闷不乐地瞪着那位士兵，仅此而已，最后埃克索先开口说话。

“你为什么要这样对待我们呢，先生？我们不过是普通的路人。你刚在瀑布旁边盘问过我们，还不到一个小时，你就不记得了吗？”

“大叔，我清楚地记得你，”灰白头发的士兵说。“尽管刚才见面的时候，我们这些守桥的人遇到了一种奇怪的魔咒，以至于我们都忘记了守桥的目的。现在，我站岗结束，打算骑马到营地，才突然想了起来。后来我想到了你，大叔，以及你们这些人如何溜了过去，就掉转马头，追了上来。孩子！不要晃来晃去，听到没！待在你傻哥哥身边！”

埃德温闷闷不乐地回到维斯坦身边，眼睛望着武士，似乎是要问他的意见。武士仍旧傻笑着，但没发出声音，口水从一边嘴角挂下来。他眼珠乱转、东张西望，不过埃克索猜想，实际上武士是在仔细测算他和马之间有多远，还有对手的位置，他得出的结论很可能和埃克索一样。

“高文爵士，”埃克索低声说。“要是现在出事情，我请求你帮我保护我的好妻子。”

“那将是我的荣耀，先生。放心吧。”

埃克索点头表示感谢，这时灰白头发的士兵正从马上下来。埃克索又一次发现，自己非常钦佩他下马的技巧，等他站在维斯坦和男孩面前时，他和两人之间的距离和角度刚刚好；而且，他持剑的方法不会累着胳膊，他的马则能挡住身后的突袭。

“大叔，我告诉你，上次见面的时候我们忘了什么事情。我们之前刚收到消息，一名撒克逊武士离开了附近一个村庄，还带了一名受伤的男孩。”士兵冲埃德温点点头。“和那边那个男孩年纪差不多。好啦，大叔，我不知道你和这位好心的女士与这件事有什么关系。我要找的只是这个撒克逊人和他带的男孩。老老实实说话，你就不会受到伤害。”

“这儿没有什么武士，先生。我们和你没什么争执，和布雷纳斯爵爷也没有纠葛，我想你的主人是他吧。”

“大叔，你知道你这说的是什么话吗？帮我们的敌人遮掩，你就要对我们负责任，无论你年纪多大。和你同行的是什么人——这个哑巴和这个男孩？”

“我已经说过了，先生，他们是欠债的人给我们的，代替谷物和锡块。他们要干一年的活，帮他们家还债。”

“你肯定没弄错吗，大叔？”

“我不知道你们要找谁，先生，但肯定不会是这两个可怜的撒克逊人。你把时间花在我们身上，而你的敌人却在别的地方逍遥自在。”

士兵考虑着这句话——埃克索的声音有意想不到的权威——他的样子开始有些犹豫了。“高文爵士，”他问。“对于这些人，你了解多少？”

“我和霍拉斯在这儿休息，他们从这儿经过，和我们碰上了。我相信他们是老实人。”

士兵又一次仔细看着维斯坦的面孔。“一个不会说话的傻子，是吗？”他向前走了两步，举起剑，剑尖对着维斯坦的喉咙。“但他一定像我们一样害怕死亡吧。”

埃克索看得出来，士兵第一次犯了个错误。他离对手太近了，现在维斯坦有可能突然行动，在士兵的剑刺出之前，抓住他握剑的那条胳膊，尽管这样做仍然有很大危险。然而，维斯坦继续咯咯笑着，又冲身旁的埃德温傻笑。但是，这次士兵的行为，似乎引起了高文爵士的愤怒。

“先生，一个小时前我还不认识他们，”他喊道。“但我可不会眼睁睁看着他们受人欺负。”

“高文爵士，这和你没有关系。我希望你能够保持沉默。”

“先生，你好大的胆子，敢对亚瑟王的骑士这么说话？”

“这个傻子，”士兵继续说话，完全不理睬高文爵士，“会不会是乔装改扮的武士？他手头没有武器，也就没什么区别。无论他是武士还是傻子，我的剑都够锋利。”

“他好大的胆子！”高文爵士自言自语道。

灰白头发的士兵也许突然意识到了自己的错误，往后退了两步，回到了之前站的地方，手里剑的位置也低下来，放到了腰部。“孩子，”他说，“往前走，到我这儿来。”

“他只说撒克逊话，先生，又是个害羞的孩子，”埃克索说。

“大叔，他不需要说话。只要拉起衣服，我们就知道他是不是和武士一起离开村庄的那个男孩。孩子，再走近一步。”

埃德温走到近前，士兵不拿剑的那只手伸了过来。埃德温想把他推开，两人扭打了一会儿，但随即男孩的上衣被拉起来，埃克索看到，他肋骨下方有一个肿块，周围一圈小点，那是干了的血迹。比特丽丝和高文一人一边，都探着身子去看个仔细，但士兵自己不愿意将目光从维斯坦身上移开。过了好长时间，他决定看看伤口，那就必须快速把脑袋转过来，就在这一刻，埃德温发出一声尖锐、刺耳的叫声——不能算是喊叫，那声音倒让埃克索想起一只绝望的狐狸。士兵愣了一下，埃德温抓住这个机会挣脱开来。这时候，埃克索才意识到，刚才的声音不是男孩发出的，而是维斯坦；武士的马之前在懒洋洋地啃草皮，听到这声音，突然转过头，朝他们冲过来。

比特丽丝不自觉地低声叫喊出来，埃克索一条胳膊揽住她，把她搂在身边。他另一侧的高文爵士嗯了一声，似乎是对维斯坦的动作表示赞赏。老骑士一只脚踩着凸起的橡树根，一只手搭在膝盖上，兴致勃勃地观看着。

现在，灰白头发的士兵背对着他们：当然，这也是没办法，因为他现在必须面对维斯坦。埃克索惊讶地看到，这位士兵刚才那么娴熟、那么镇定，现在已经有些不知所措了。他朝他的马望去——马受了惊，已经跑到远处了——似乎是想恢复信心，然后他举起剑，双手

紧握着剑柄，剑尖略微高出肩膀。埃克索知道，这个姿势欠考虑，只会让胳膊上的肌肉疲乏。相比之下，维斯坦显得镇定，几乎有些漫不经心，就和头天晚上他们一开始看到他动身离开村庄时一样。他慢慢朝士兵走去，在他跟前几步远的地方停下来，一只手拿着剑，剑的位置很低。

“高文爵士，”士兵说话的语调不一样了，“我听见你在我背后走动。你是否和我站在一起，共同对付这个敌人？”

“我站在这儿保护这对好心的夫妇，先生。除此之外，这场争议和我没有关系，你刚才也这么说过。这位武士也许是你的敌人，但目前还不是我的敌人。”

“这人是撒克逊武士，高文爵士，到我们这儿来捣乱。帮助我面对他吧。我当然渴望履行职责，但如果他就是我们要找的人，那无论从哪个方面讲，他都是个可怕的家伙。”

“我有什么理由因为他是个陌生人就拿起武器对付他呢？先生，是你粗鲁地闯进了这个宁静的地方。”

一阵沉默。然后，士兵对维斯坦说：“你要一直不说话吗，先生？现在我们俩面对面，你也该露出真实面目了吧！”

“我名叫维斯坦，先生，是从东方来的武士。你的布雷纳斯爵爷好像要对我不利，究竟是为了什么，我并不知道，我只是和平地旅行，执行国王的任务。我相信你要伤害那个无辜的男孩，我既然看到了，现在就必须阻止你。”

“高文爵士，”士兵喊道，“我再一次请求你，请你帮助你的不列颠同胞。如果这人是维斯坦的话，据说已经有五十多名海寇死在他一个人手里啦。”

“先生，如果五十名凶悍的海寇都被他杀死了，多一个虚弱的老骑士，结果又会有什么不同呢？”

“我请求你，高文爵士，不要开玩笑。这是个无法无天的家伙，随时都会动手。从他眼睛里，我能看出来。告诉你，他可是到这儿来捣乱的。”

“我捣了什么乱，你说说看，”维斯坦说。“我和平地在你们国家旅行，包里只有一把剑，那是用来对付野兽和土匪的。如果你能说出我的罪行，现在就说吧，动手之前我愿意先听听你的指责。”

“先生，我不知道你究竟捣了什么乱，但布雷纳斯爵爷要除掉你，我相信他。”

“这么说，你说不出我做了什么坏事，却急匆匆地追上来要杀我。”

“高文爵士，我请求你帮助我！他虽然凶悍，我们两个人，加上谨慎的策略，也许可以打败他。”

“先生，我要提醒你，我是亚瑟王的骑士，不是你们布雷纳斯爵爷的走卒。我不会因为谣传或者对方是外国人，就对陌生人动武。在我看来，你拿不出对付他的充足理由。”

“那你是逼我说了，先生。这个消息，是布雷纳斯爵爷自己允许我听的，虽然这样的机密，像我这样职位低的人没有权利知道。这个人到我们国家，是要杀死巨龙魁瑞格。他来这儿，就是这个目的！”

“杀死魁瑞格？”高文爵士似乎真的给搞糊涂了。他从树下大步走过来，瞪着维斯坦，好像是第一次看到他一样。“这是真的吗，先生？”

“我不希望对亚瑟王的骑士撒谎，那就让我直截了当宣布吧。除了之前我说过的职责之外，我的国王还让我杀死那条在这个国家游荡的母龙。但是，这个任务有什么好反对的呢？那是条凶猛的龙，威胁到所有人。士兵，你告诉我，为什么因为这个任务，我就成了你的敌人呢？”

“杀死魁瑞格？！你是真的要杀死魁瑞格？！”高文爵士叫了起来。“可是，先生，这可是我的任务！你难道不知道吗？这是亚瑟王亲自授予我的任务！”

“高文爵士，这件事我们回头再谈。让我先对付这位士兵，我和朋友们本来打算和平地经过这儿，他却要把我们当成敌人。”

“高文爵士，如果你不来助我，恐怕这就是我的末日了！我恳求你啦，先生，想想布雷纳斯爵爷对亚瑟王的敬爱与怀念，拿起武器对付这个撒克逊人！”

“维斯坦阁下，杀死魁瑞格，是我的任务！我和霍拉斯已经制订了详尽的计划，要把她引出来，我们不要别人帮助！”

“先生，放下你的剑，”维斯坦对士兵说，“我还可以放过你。否则，你就要当场丧命了。”

士兵犹豫了片刻，然后说道：“之前我以为自己很强大，一个人就能对付你，但现在我看得出来，先生，那是愚蠢的想法。我狂妄自大，可能会因此受惩罚。但是，我绝不会像个懦夫一样放下武器。”

“你的国王有什么权利，”高文爵士喊道，“命令你从另一个国家跑来，篡夺亚瑟王骑士的任务？”

“请原谅，高文爵士，但是你要杀死魁瑞格已经很多年了，小孩子都长成了大人。如果我能够给这个国家帮个忙，解除这个苦难，为什么要生气呢？”

“为什么生气，先生？你根本不知道你在干什么！你以为杀魁瑞格是件容易的事？她不仅凶猛，还聪明着呢！过去这几年，大家几乎都没听说过她的事情了，一旦你鲁莽行事，只会激怒她，整个国家都跟着遭罪。先生，这件事需要巧妙地处理，否则灾难就会降到全国无辜民众的头上！我和霍拉斯等了这么久，你以为就没有原因么？一步走错，就会有严重后果啊，先生！”

“那就帮助我吧，高文爵士，”士兵喊道，他已经不去遮掩内心的恐惧了。“我们一起解除这个威胁！”

高文爵士疑惑地看着士兵，好像一下子忘了自己是谁一样。然后他语调更为平和地说：“我不会帮助你，先生。我不是你主人的朋友，因为我害怕他有邪恶动机。我也害怕你会伤害这儿的其他人，无论我们陷入了什么阴谋，他们都是无辜的。”

“高文爵士，现在我的生死存于一线，像落入蜘蛛网的苍蝇。我最后一次求助于你，虽然这件事情我并不完全明白，但我求你考虑一下，如果不是给我们添乱，那他到这个国家来干什么呢？”

“先生，他到这儿来的任务，他已经解释清楚了。虽然他计划草率、让我生气，但我不能因为这一点，就拿起武器和你一起对付他。”

“战斗吧，士兵，”维斯坦用近乎和解的口吻说道，“战斗吧，把这事给了结了。”

“维斯坦阁下，”比特丽丝突然说道，“让这位士兵放下剑，骑马离开，会有什么坏处吗？之前在桥上他跟我说话很和气，他可能不是坏人。”

“如果我按你说的做，比特丽丝夫人，他会把我们的消息告诉别人，肯定很快就会带着三十名士兵回来，甚至更多。那时候恐怕就不会有什么仁慈了。而且，请你注意，他要伤害那个男孩。”

“也许他愿意发个誓，不会出卖我们。”

“你的仁慈让我感动，夫人，”灰白头发的士兵接过话头，但眼睛仍旧盯着维斯坦。“但我不是恶棍，不会卑鄙地利用别人的好心。撒克逊人说得没错。放我走，我就会像他说的那样做，因为这是职责所在，我没有别的选择。但我感谢你说了这些好话，如果这是我生命最后的时刻，那么我离开这个世界时，心里也会因为你的话而更加平静。”

“还有，先生，”比特丽丝说，“你之前提出的关于你父母的请求，我并没有忘记。那时候你是开玩笑的，我知道，而且我们也不大可能碰到他们。但是，如果我们真的碰上了，我会让他们知道，你一直热切渴望与他们相见。”

“我再次感谢你，夫人。但这时候我不能让这种念头令自己心软。这个人名气很响，但在这场决斗中，命运仍然有可能眷顾我，到那时候，你也许会后悔曾为我发善心。”

“很有可能，”比特丽丝说着，叹了口气。“那么，维斯坦阁下，你要为我们尽力啊。我要转过脸去，杀人我可不喜欢。小先生埃德温最好也不要看，请你跟他说一下，我相信只有你下命令他才会当回事。”

“请原谅，夫人，”维斯坦说，“但我宁愿让男孩亲眼看着事情的进程，我那么大的时候，他们常常让我看。我知道他亲眼目睹武士们的战斗时不会退缩畏惧。”这时他用撒克逊语说了几句话，埃德温刚才在不远处独自站着，这时走到树旁，站到埃克索和比特丽丝身边。他目光警觉，似乎从不眨眼。

埃克索能听到灰发士兵的呼吸声，现在声音更响了，因为每次呼气，他都会发出一声低吼。向前冲时，他将剑高高举过头顶，这种攻击方式看起来简单草率，甚至是自寻死路；但是，到维斯坦跟前的那一刹那，他突然改变了路线，做出向左进攻的假动作，剑也放下来，和臀部一般高。埃克索心中一阵怜悯的刺痛，意识到这灰发士兵自己也明白，如果战斗持续，他根本没什么机会，所以把一切都压在这个近乎绝望的策略上。但维斯坦已经预料到了，或许他的本能使他足以察觉。撒克逊人侧身避开，拔出剑横着迎上冲过来的士兵，动作干净

利落。士兵发出一声像水桶丢到井里撞击水面的声音，然后俯身跌倒在地。高文爵士低声祈祷，比特丽丝问：“现在结束了吗，埃克索？”

“结束了，公主。”

埃德温盯着倒在地上的人，表情和之前几乎没有变化。埃克索顺着男孩的目光望去，看到草丛里一条被倒地的士兵惊动的蛇正从他的身体下方滑出来。蛇是黑色的，但有黄色、白色的斑点，它灵巧地爬过去，慢慢露出整个身体，这时埃克索闻到了一股人的内脏的浓烈气息。他本能地搂着比特丽丝往旁边跨了一步，以免那东西跑到他们脚下。但那东西仍旧朝他们这边滑过来，遇到一丛蓟草时一分为二，像溪水遇到岩石分流一样，然后又合二为一，继续越滑越近。

“走远点，公主，”埃克索一边说，一边带着她走开。“结束了，这样也好。这个人要伤害我们，尽管原因还不清楚。”

“埃克索阁下，让我尽量来跟你说明白是怎么回事吧，”维斯坦说道。他刚刚在地上擦剑，现在站起身，朝他们走过来。“没错，在这个国家，我们的撒克逊同胞与你们和谐相处。但我们在家里听到消息，说布雷纳斯爵爷要征服这片土地，据为己有，然后向居住在这儿的所有撒克逊人开战。”

“我也听到了同样的消息，先生，”高文爵士说。“这可怜虫，此刻像鳟鱼一样被开了膛，刚才我不肯站到他那一边，这也是个原因。我担心布雷纳斯爵爷要破坏亚瑟王缔造的伟大和平。”

“我们在家里还听说了别的，先生，”维斯坦说。“说布雷纳斯的城堡里有一位危险的客人。一个挪威人，据说有驯龙的本领。我的国王担心布雷纳斯爵爷要抓住魁瑞格，放到军队里帮他打仗。这条母龙要是上了战场，那可是个凶猛的士兵啊，真要那样的话，布雷纳斯肯定会有所企图。所以国王派我来杀死这条龙，以免她的凶残发泄到所有反对布雷纳斯爵爷的人头上。高文爵士，你似乎很震惊，但我说的都是实话。”

“先生，如果我很震惊，那是因为你说的话还真有些依据。我年轻的时候，有一次我要面对对方军队里的一条龙，那可是个可怕的东西。我的战友们之前都渴望胜利，那一刻看到龙的样子，都吓得不能动弹，论力气和机智，那条龙还比不上魁瑞格一半。如果魁瑞格成了布雷纳斯爵爷的仆役，那她肯定会挑起新的战争。可我希望没人能驯

服这条凶悍的龙。”他停下来，朝倒地的士兵那边望望，又摇了摇头。

维斯坦大步走到埃德温站立的地方，抓住他一条胳膊，慢慢领着他朝尸体走去。两人肩并肩在尸体旁站了一会儿，维斯坦低声说着话，不时用手指着，又盯着埃德温的脸，查看他的反应。有一下，埃克索看见维斯坦的指头在空中划出一条线，他可能在跟男孩解释剑刃的运动路线。在此过程中，埃德温一直眼神空洞地盯着倒在地上的

人。

这时高文爵士来到埃克索身边，说道：“这个安静的地方，肯定是上帝赐给所有疲惫旅行者的礼物，现在被血污染了，真让人伤心啊。我们尽快把这个人埋了吧，不久别的人就会到这边来，我把他的马带到布雷纳斯爵爷的兵营去，跟他们说，我遇到他的时候，他被强盗攻击了，并且把坟墓的位置告诉他的朋友们。与此同时，先生——”他转脸对维斯坦说道——“我敦促你立即回到东方。不要去想魁瑞格了，你放心吧，听到今天的这些情况之后，我和霍拉斯会加倍努力，把她杀死。来吧，朋友们，我们将这个人入土，让他平静地回归造物主吧。”

第二部

第六章

埃克索疲惫不堪，却无法入睡。僧侣们为他提供了一个楼上的房间，不需要抵御从泥土里冒上来的寒气，这令人宽慰，但是，在高出地面的楼上，他总是不太睡得着。哪怕是在谷仓或马厩里过夜，他爬上梯子，往往也难以入睡，担心着身体下方那个巨大的空洞。今晚他睡不着，也许是因为上方的黑暗中有鸟。现在，鸟儿基本上都沉寂下来，但不时会传来一阵窸窣窸窣的声响，或者是翅膀拍打的声音，他心里就想着要双臂抱住沉睡的比特丽丝，不让空中飘下来的难闻的羽毛落到她的身上。

当天早些时候，他们刚进入房间时，鸟就在那儿。那时候，他已经感觉到，这些乌鸦、黑鸫、林鸽，都在椽子上低头看着他们，不是吗？还是他的记忆被后来的事件篡改了？

或许，睡不着觉是因为维斯坦一直在叮叮当当砍柴，那声音现在仍旧在修道院里回荡。比特丽丝很快就睡着了，没受这声音影响；房间中央有个黑影，他知道那是桌子，之前他们在那儿吃饭的，桌子那边，在房间的另一头，埃德温也已经入睡，发出了低低的鼾声。但是，就他所知，维斯坦根本没睡。这位武士一直坐在远处的角落里，等最后一位僧侣离开了下面的院子，他才起身，消失在夜色中。现在他又来了——尽管乔纳斯神父警告过——又在劈柴火。

僧侣们开完会后出了会场，过了很久才渐渐散去。有几次埃克索快睡着了，却被下面说话的声音吵醒了。有时候有四五个人的声音，都压得很低，往往带着愤怒或恐惧。现在，已经有一段时间没听到说话的声音了，可就在埃克索又一次慢慢进入梦乡时，他心里总觉得房间窗户下方还有僧侣，不止几个，而是几十个，穿着袍子，默默地站在月光下，听着维斯坦劈柴的声音在修道院中回响。

之前，下午的阳光洒满房间的时候，埃克索曾朝窗户外面看过，似乎修道院的所有人都在那儿——四十多名僧侣——三五成群在院子里等候。人群里有一种偷偷摸摸的氛围，好像他们都不希望谈话被别人听到，哪怕是他们自己人。埃克索看到，有些僧侣看对方的眼神中有敌意。他们穿的修士长袍都是同样的褐色布料，有的缺顶帽子，有的缺条袖子。他们似乎急着到对面那幢大石头建筑里面去，但有什么事情耽搁了，大家显然都很焦躁。

埃克索朝下方的院子里望了一会儿，这时传来一阵喧闹声，他身体探出窗外，朝正下方望去。他看到了建筑的外墙，白色的石头在阳光下显得发黄，外墙上凿有楼梯，从地面一直通到他跟前。楼梯半腰上有一位僧侣——埃克索能看到他的头顶——手里拿着托盘，上面放着食物和一罐牛奶。那人停下了脚步，以调整托盘的位置，埃克索看着他的动作，心里很紧张，他知道楼梯年深日久，磨得高低不平，外侧没有栏杆，人要紧贴着墙壁攀爬，否则一不小心，就会一头栽到下面的硬鹅卵石上。不仅如此，正在上楼的这位僧侣好像腿有些跛，可是他继续往上爬，很慢，但很稳。

埃克索走到门边，打算接过他手中的托盘，但这位僧侣——他们很快就知道他是布莱恩神父——坚持要自己把托盘放到桌上，还说：“你是我们的客人，那就让我来招待客人吧。”

那时候维斯坦和男孩已经走了，也许空气中已经回响起了他们劈柴的声音。因此就只有他和比特丽丝肩并肩，在木头桌子旁坐下来，心怀感激地享用着面包、水果和牛奶。他们用餐时，布莱恩神父高兴地说着话，有时候好像梦呓一般，谈以前的客人、附近小河里能抓到的鱼，以及去年冬天死前一直和他们生活在一起的一条野狗。布莱恩神父上了年纪，但精力不错，有时候他从桌旁站起身来，拖着那条坏腿在房间里走来走去，嘴里不停地说着话，还不时到窗户前看看下面的同事。

与此同时，在他们头顶上方，那些鸟一直在屋顶下面来回穿梭，偶尔会有羽毛飘下来，落在牛奶上。埃克索本打算把鸟赶走，但他担心僧侣们也许喜欢这些鸟，所以没赶。后来，外面的楼梯上传来急促的脚步声，一个身材高大的僧侣，留着黑胡子，满面通红，闯进了房间，让埃克索吃了一惊。

“魔鬼！魔鬼！”僧侣仰面瞪着椽子，喊道。“我要把它们浸在血里！”

新来的僧侣拿着一个草袋子，这时他伸手进去，掏出一块石头，朝鸟群中扔去。“魔鬼！该死的魔鬼，魔鬼，魔鬼！”

第一块石头刚弹回地面，他又扔出第二块石头，接着是第三块。石头落地的地方离桌子有些距离，但比特丽丝已经用双臂抱住了脑袋，埃克索站起来，朝留着黑胡子的僧侣走去。但布莱恩神父先到，他抓住那人的两条胳膊，说道：

“伊拉斯谟兄弟，我求你啦！住手吧，安静一下！”

这时候，鸟儿发出尖叫声，四散乱飞，留胡子的僧侣高声喊道：“我知道它们！我知道它们！”

“安静下来，兄弟！”

“你不要拦着我，神父！它们是魔鬼派来的！”

“伊拉斯谟，它们也有可能是上帝派来的。我们还不知道啊。”

“我知道它们是魔鬼！看看它们的眼睛！如果是上帝派来的，怎么会用那样的眼睛看着我们呢？”

“伊拉斯谟，你安静一下。我们这儿还有客人。”

听到这话，留胡子的僧侣注意到了埃克索和比特丽丝。他愤怒地瞪着他们俩，然后对布莱恩神父说：“为什么这个时候带客人到这儿来？他们到这儿来干什么？”

“他们不过是路过的老实人，兄弟，我们很高兴招待他们，这是我们的传统。”

“布莱恩神父，你把我们的事情告诉陌生人，真是个傻瓜！你看，他们在监视我们！”

“他们没监视任何人，对我们的问题也没有兴趣。他们自己的问题够多了，我相信。”

突然，留胡子的僧侣又拿出一块石头，准备扔出去，不过布莱恩神父及时拦住了。“回去吧，伊拉斯谟，把袋子放下来。好啦，袋子留给我吧。你这样拿着袋子跑来跑去，是不行的。”

留胡子的僧侣甩开布莱恩神父，急切地把袋子抓在胸前。布莱恩神父听凭他获得这小小的胜利，带着他来到门口，就在他转脸怒视着屋顶时，轻轻地把他推到楼梯上。

“下去吧，伊拉斯谟。下面的人想你啦。回去吧，小心不要摔跤。”

那名僧侣终于走了。布莱恩神父回到房间里，一只手挥舞着，赶走空气中飘着的羽毛。

“我给两位道歉了。他是个好人，但这种生活已经不适合他了。请坐吧，安安静静把东西吃完。”

“不过呢，神父，”比特丽丝说，“那人说我们在不方便的时候打扰了你们，也许他说得对。我们绝对不想增加你们这儿的负担，乔纳斯神父的智慧大家都知道，只要你让我们快点儿请教他一下，我们马上就走。我们能见他吗，有没有消息？”

布莱恩神父摇摇头。“和我之前告诉你的一样，夫人。乔纳斯身体不好，院长下了严令，除非院长亲自许可，否则谁也不要去打搅他。我知道你们急着见乔纳斯，费了不少气力才到这儿，所以你们到了之后，我就一直在想办法跟院长说一下。但是，你们也看到了，这时候很忙，刚刚又来了一位重要人物，要见院长，我们的会议又推迟了。我们大家在等着呢，院长却回到书房里和客人谈话去了。”

比特丽丝一直站在窗前，看着留胡子的僧侣顺着石阶走下去，这时她手指着外面，说道：“好心的神父啊，那是院长回来了吗？”

埃克索走到她身旁，看见一个瘦削的身形，神态威严，迈着大步走到院子中央。僧侣们停止谈话，纷纷朝他那儿聚拢过去。

“啊，没错，是院长回来了。现在，请你们安静地把东西吃完吧。乔纳斯的事情呢，耐心一点，恐怕要到会议结束，我才能告诉你们院长的决定。但我不会忘记，放心吧，还会帮你们说话。”

武士用斧头劈柴的声音，那时候肯定就在院子里回响，和现在一样。实际上，埃克索仍能清晰地回忆起来，当时他一边看着僧侣们列队进入对面的建筑，一边心里疑惑：从传来的声音看，这是一个人劈柴，还是两个人呢？因为第一声劈柴的声音刚传来，紧接着又响起了第二声，很难判断后者是劈柴发出的声音，还是前一声的回声。现在，埃克索在黑暗中躺着，回想这件事情，他相信当时埃德温也在那儿，一斧子一斧子跟着维斯坦劈柴。男孩很可能已经很会砍柴了。当天早些时候，在他们到修道院之前，男孩曾用随手找到的两块扁石头飞快地挖坑，让大家都很惊讶。

那时候埃克索已经停下来休息了，武士让他保存体力，因为等会儿还要爬山到修道院去。所以他站到士兵仍在流血的尸体旁边，以免在树枝上聚集的鸟儿下来糟蹋。埃克索记得，维斯坦一直用士兵的剑挖坟墓，还说他不愿意用自己的剑挖，以免弄钝了剑刃。但高文爵士却说，“无论士兵的主人有什么阴谋，士兵自己死得很有尊严，骑士的剑给他挖坑安葬，正是得其所哉。”不过，这两人都停了下来，惊讶地看着埃德温用原始工具挖得飞快。随后，两人继续干活的时候，维斯坦说道：

“高文爵士，我担心布雷纳斯爵爷不会相信这个说法。”

“他会相信的，先生，”高文爵士一边继续挖坑，一边回答。

“我们两人关系有点儿冷淡，但他把我当做老实的傻子，编不出这样的奇怪故事。我甚至还可以跟他们说，士兵在我怀里流血而死的时候，还一直在谈论强盗呢。你可能认为，说这种谎话是一桩严重的罪行，但我知道，上帝会仁慈地看待这件事的，难道这不也是为了避免更多流血吗？先生，我会让布雷纳斯相信我的。不过，你仍旧有危险，应该早点回去。”

“高文爵士，我在这儿的任务一完成，就立即赶回去，绝不耽搁。如果我的马脚没有痊愈的话，我甚至可能拿它换另一匹马——到东方的沼泽地，可要骑很长时间呢。不过，那样做我会难过的，她可是一匹难得的马。”

“确实难得！我的霍拉斯，哎呀，已经没那么灵巧啦，但很多次紧要关头，他都在我身边，就像你的这匹母马刚刚赶到你身边一样。真是匹难得的马，失去她，你会伤心的。但话说回来，速度很关键，所以你还是上路吧，别管你的任务了。我和霍拉斯会对付那条母龙的，所以你没有理由还念念不忘她了。不管怎么说，我刚才抽空好好想了一下，布雷纳斯要让魁瑞格帮他作战，我看他不会成功。那是个最凶悍、最难驯服的家伙，说喷火就喷火，不管是布雷纳斯的敌人，还是她自己的队伍。这本身就是个荒谬的想法，先生。不要去想了，赶紧在被敌人包围之前回家吧。”维斯坦继续挖坑，没有回答，高文爵士又问：“这件事你可以答应吗，维斯坦阁下？”

“答应什么，高文爵士？”

“答应你不再去想母龙的事，赶紧回家。”

“你似乎急着要我答应嘛。”

“我不仅要考虑你的安全，先生，我还要考虑其他人的。如果你激怒魁瑞格，她会伤害那些人的。还有，和你一起旅行的这些人怎么办？”

“没错，这些朋友的安全让我担心。我会和他们同行，一直到修道院，我可不能把他们丢在这偏僻的路上，没人保护。然后呢，我们就该分道扬镳啦。”

“那么，到了修道院之后，你就要回家吧。”

“等我准备好回家了，自然会回的，骑士阁下。”

死者内脏发出的气味，让埃克索往后退了几步，这时他发现，这样看高文爵士更加清楚。骑士站在齐腰深的坑里，额头上大汗淋漓，也许因为这个原因，他脸上的表情不像平常那么和善。他正怒气冲冲地看着维斯坦，而维斯坦呢，似乎浑然不觉，在继续挖坑。

士兵的死，让比特丽丝心情沮丧。其他人把坑越挖越深，她慢慢走回到那棵大橡树下，又在树荫里坐了下来，头一直低着。埃克索本想去和她坐在一起，要不是那群乌鸦，他肯定去了。现在，他在黑暗中躺着，也开始为这位被杀的士兵感到难过。他想起士兵在那座小桥上对他们以礼相待，对比特丽丝讲话时轻声细语。埃克索又想起来，刚进入路边那块空地时，士兵将马的位置控制得非常精准。当时，这件事还让埃克索想起了什么往事；现在，夜晚万籁俱寂，他记起高沼地起起伏伏，天空低垂，一群羊从石楠间穿过。

对方慢慢走近，他看到四个人虽然年纪不算老，却都瘦弱憔悴。他心中一沉，因为他知道，这些人的虚弱模样只会刺激同伴，让他更加野蛮。埃克索等待着，四个人到了几乎可以打招呼致意的距离，他立即催马向前，小心地赶到哈维坐骑的一侧，他知道牧羊人和大部分羊肯定要从这边经过。他特别让自己的马落后一头，以便同伴能够维持优越感。但是，如果哈维挥动马鞭，或者拿起挂在马鞍上的棒子，对牧羊人发起突然攻击，那么埃克索正好挡在中间。同时，这一举动从表面上看，是亲密友好的表示，何况哈维也没有这么缜密的心思，不会去怀疑背后的真正动机。的确，埃克索还记得，他骑马上去的时

候，同伴还漫不经心地点了点头，然后又转过脸去，神情抑郁地望着茫茫荒野。

迎面走来的牧羊人让埃克索特别担心，这是因为几天前在一个撒克逊村庄里发生了一件事情。那是个天气晴朗的上午，当时埃克索和村民们一样大吃一惊。事先毫无征兆，哈维突然催马向前，疯狂地殴打等待从井中汲水的人们。那次哈维用的是鞭子还是棒子？在荒野上骑马的那天，埃克索曾试图回想这一细节。如果哈维选择用鞭子打路过的牧羊人，那范围要大一些，胳膊也更省力些；他甚至可能冒险，将鞭子从埃克索的马头上方挥过去。但是，如果哈维选择用棒子的话，鉴于埃克索现在的位置，他就必须催马到埃克索前方，再拨转马头，然后才能攻击。对他的同伴来说，那样的举动就太刻意了：哈维这个人，喜欢让暴力行为看起来像兴致所至、不费气力。

他精心的举动有没有拯救那些牧羊人呢，他想不起来了。他朦朦胧胧地记得，绵羊从他们身旁若无其事地经过，但他脑海中关于牧羊人的记忆，和村民们挨打的场景混到了一起。那天上午，他们两人到那个村子里去干什么呢？埃克索记得有愤怒的叫喊、孩子的哭泣和仇恨的表情，记得他自己也很生气，与其说是发哈维的火，倒不如说是憎恨把他和这么个同伴安排到一起的人。他们的使命如果完成，将会是一项了不起的成就，至高无上、前所未有的，上帝都会认为，使命完成的时刻，人类离他更近了。然而，和这么个野蛮的东西捆绑在一起，埃克索能做成什么事呢？

“那不可能是迷迭香，先生，”他想起比特丽丝急切地这样对他说。他蹲着，一只膝盖跪在地上，因为那天天气很好，地上是干的。

比特丽丝肯定一直站在他身后，因为他还记得，他用双手分开地上的杂草时，她的影子就落在他面前的地面上。“那不可能是迷迭香，先生。谁见过有这样黄色花朵的迷迭香呢？”

“那就是我把名字搞错了，姑娘，”埃克索说道。“但是，我肯定这花很常见，不会有什么害处。”

“可你真的很懂植物吗，先生？这儿野生的东西，我母亲都教过我，但我们眼前的这种东西，我却不熟悉。”

“那么，它也许是刚刚从异乡来到这里的一种植物。为什么这么紧张呢，姑娘？”

“我很紧张，先生，是因为这有可能是我从小就害怕的一种野草。”

“为什么要害怕野草呢，除非有毒，那你不该碰它就好啦。但是，你呀，自己拿手去摸，现在还要我也去摸！”

“哎呀，没有毒，先生！至少没有你说的那种毒。但是，我母亲有一次详细地描述过一种植物，她警告说，年轻女孩子在石楠丛里看到这种植物，就会遭遇厄运。”

“什么样的厄运呢，姑娘？”

“我没胆子跟你说，先生。”

但是，就在她说这话的时候，这位年轻女人——比特丽丝那天就是个年轻女人——已经在他身旁蹲下来，两人的胳膊碰了一下，她迎着他的目光，充满信任地微微一笑。

“如果看到它就要遭厄运的话，”埃克索说，“让我从路上跑过来，就为了看一眼，又是出于什么好心呢？”

“哎呀，你又不会遭厄运，先生！只是说没结婚的女孩子。还有另外一种植物，肯定会给你这样的男人带来厄运。”

“那你最好跟我说说另外那种植物是什么样的，让我心里对它有些害怕，就像你害怕这种植物一样。”

“你就拿我开心吧，先生。有一天啊，你要摔个跟斗，发现那种草就在你鼻子旁边呢。到那时候，你就知道这是不是好笑的事情了。”

他仍旧记得手伸进石楠丛里的感觉，记得风从头顶的树枝间刮过，记得身边那位年轻的女人。那是不是他们第一次谈话呢？至少那时候他们肯定认识对方；比特丽丝肯定不会对一个完全不认识的人如此信任吧。

砍柴的声音刚才停了一会儿，现在又开始了，埃克索这才想起来，武士也许整个晚上都要待在外面。就算在战斗中，维斯坦也显得镇定、谨慎，但是头天晚上和今天白天的压力，可能累积在他身上，他需要通过干活缓解一下。尽管如此，他的行为还是很奇怪。乔纳斯神父说得很清楚，不要再去砍柴，可他呢，又去砍了，何况天已经这么黑了。之前，他们刚到的时候，武士这么做似乎是出于礼貌。不过，埃克索发现，就算是那时候，维斯坦要去砍柴，也有他自己的原因。

“柴火棚位置很好，”武士解释说。“我和男孩干活的时候，能清楚地看到周围的事情。更妙的是，我们把柴火送到需要的地方，就可以随意走动，查看周围环境，尽管有几扇门关着，我们进不去。”

说话的时候，两人在修道院的高墙旁边，俯瞰着周围的树林。那时候僧侣们早已去开会了，四下里很安静。此前不久，比特丽丝在房间里打盹睡着了，埃克索出了门，在半下午的阳光下溜达，他沿着破损的台阶爬上去，维斯坦正在上面，低头望着地上厚厚的树叶。

“可为什么要这么麻烦呢，维斯坦阁下？”埃克索问他。“难道你怀疑这些好心的僧侣？”

武士一只手举在额前，遮住眼睛，说道：“之前我们沿那条路上山的时候，我只想找个角落躺下来，做做美梦。但现在我们到了这儿，我总觉得这地方对我们有危险。”

“维斯坦阁下，你肯定是累了，所以才疑虑重重。这儿能有什么事让你不安心呢？”

“目前还没有确切的事情。可是，你想想啊。之前我到马厩去看我的马，听到后面的马棚里有声音。是这样的，先生，另外那个马棚和我这里隔着墙，但我能听到那边还有一匹马；我们刚到的时候，我牵马进去，那里可没有别的马。后来我走到另外一边，发现马棚的门关着，门上挂着一只大锁，没钥匙可进不去。”

“这件事能有很多解释，维斯坦阁下，未必有危险。那匹马也许之前在外面吃草，后来才牵进来。”

“这事我跟一名僧侣提过，他们这儿是不养马的，他们不希望用这种方法减轻负担。看来我们来之后，还有别的人来过，这个人不想让人知道他在这儿。”

“你这一说，维斯坦阁下，我倒想起来，布莱恩神父提到过，说有一名重要的客人来见院长，所以他们的大会才推迟了。我们不知道这儿发生了什么事，但这件事十有八九和我们没有任何关系。”

维斯坦若有所思地点点头。“也许你说得对，埃克索阁下。睡一会儿也许能打消我的疑心。不过，我还是派小男孩出去了，让他多逛逛，和成年人相比，说他天生好奇，人家更容易相信吧。刚才，他回来报告说，他在那块地方听到有人呻吟，那儿，”维斯坦转过身，用手指了指，“就是人有病痛时发出的声音。小先生埃德温跟着声音悄悄进了屋，发现有个房间门是关的，门外有血迹，有的时间久了，有的是新鲜的。”

“奇怪是奇怪，不过某个僧侣倒霉，遇到了意外，也算不得什么了不起的事情，也许是在这台阶上摔了一跤。”

“先生，我承认，我并没有确切的依据怀疑这儿有问题。也许是出于武士的本能吧，我真希望我腰带上挂着剑，不用再假装成农夫了。我感到担心，或许是因为这些墙壁在悄悄跟我说着以前的事情。”

“这是什么意思呢，先生？”

“这个地方不久之前肯定不是什么修道院，而是个山顶要塞，而且建造得很好，为的是抵御敌人。我们爬上山的那条累人的路，你还记得吧？绕来绕去，好像就是要让我们用尽气力一样？现在你往下看，先生，你看那些路上方的防御工事。以前守军就从那儿用弓箭、石头和滚烫的水来对付入侵者。那时候，如果能到达大门口，就算是了不起的事情了。”

“我看到了。那要爬上来可真不容易。”

“还有呢，埃克索阁下，我敢打赌，这要塞以前肯定是在撒克逊人手里，因为我看到了我同族人的很多记号，也许你看不到。你看那儿——”维斯坦指着下面一个铺着鹅卵石的院子，院子四周有围墙——“我猜，就在那儿，以前有第二道大门，比第一道更加坚固，但从那条路爬上来的入侵者却看不见。他们只看到第一道门，于是拼命攻打，但其实那是我们撒克逊人说的水闸门，就像控制河水的水闸一

样。守军可以先计算好，有意把一部分敌人放进来，然后关上水闸门，把后面跟上来的敌人挡在外面。这时候，放进来的敌人就在两道门之间，被孤立了，就在那个地方。他们人数不够，会再次受到来自上面的攻击。先将他们杀光，然后再放下一拨人进来。你明白这个道理了吧，先生。今天，这是个和平而虔诚的地方，但用不着太费力，你就能看到流血和恐怖。”

“你观察得很好，维斯坦阁下，你教我看到的東西，让我震惊。”

“我也可以打赌，这儿曾有过撒克逊家庭，从很远的地方逃过来的，到这个要塞里寻求庇护。女人、孩子、伤员、老人、病人。你看那边，之前僧侣们聚集的那个院子。以前，除了极度虚弱的人之外，所有人都会出来，在那儿站着，亲眼看着入侵者在两道门之间哀嚎，像落入陷阱的老鼠一样。”

“先生，这我就没法相信了。他们肯定会在下面什么地方躲起来，祈祷上帝救他们脱难。”

“只有最胆小的才会这么做。大部分人都站在那个院子里，甚至爬上来，就是我们现在站的地方，宁愿冒着被箭或矛伤到的风险，也要享受享受下面敌人的痛苦模样。”

埃克索摇着头。“你说的那些人，肯定不会因为流血而感到快乐吧，哪怕流血的是敌人。”

“恰恰相反，先生。我说的那些人走过了一条残暴之路，亲眼见过自己的孩子和亲人残肢断臂、惨遭蹂躏。他们经历了漫长的苦难，一路上死神就在身后，不过数步之遥，最终才到达这个地方，找到了他们的避难所。这时候来了一支入侵的军队，人数众多。要塞或许能支撑几天，甚至一两个星期。但他们知道，他们终将面对自己的末日。他们知道，现在抱在怀里的婴儿，不久将成为血淋淋的玩具，在这鹅卵石上被踢来踢去。他们知道，因为他们已经见过，他们是从那儿逃出来的。他们见过敌人烧杀劫掠，见过已经受伤、即将死去的年轻女孩，惨遭敌人轮奸。他们知道这迟早要来，所以必须珍惜要塞被围的头几天，这时候敌人要为后来的猖狂先付出代价。埃克索阁下，换句话说，对那些无法复仇的人来说，这是提前享受复仇之乐。所以啊，先生，我才会说，我的那些撒克逊同胞会站在这儿，鼓掌欢呼，敌人死得越惨，他们就会越高兴。”

“我无法相信，先生。尚未做出的行径怎么可能激起如此之深的恨呢？曾在此避难的那些好心的人们，应该到最后一刻还坚守着希望，看到有人受苦，无论敌人还是朋友，肯定都会感到怜悯、震惊。”

“你年纪比我大不少，埃克索阁下，但说到流血的事情，恐怕我是老人，你是青年。我见过年长的女人和年幼的孩子，脸上写着深仇大恨，像深不见底的海，有时候我自己也会感觉到那样的仇恨。”

“这我无法接受，先生，而且，我们谈的是一段野蛮的过去，希望它一去不复返。感谢上帝，我们的争论永远不需要拿到现实中检验。”

武士用奇怪的眼光看着埃克索。他似乎想说什么，然后改变了主意。他转身去看身后的那些石头建筑，说：“之前我抱着一大堆柴火，在这一带走动，在每个拐弯的地方，我都看到了过去的痕迹，真令人着迷。实际上啊，先生，就算第二道门被攻破，这个要塞也还有很多陷阱等着敌人，有些设计得非常狡猾。这儿的僧侣根本不知道自己每天经过的是什么地方。不过，这个就不多说啦。既然我们俩这会儿安安静静在一起，埃克索阁下，我要为之前曾让你不快道歉，请你原谅。我是说，我不该盘问那位好心的骑士关于你的情况。”

“这事就不要去想啦，先生。就算你的做法让我和我妻子感到意外，也谈不上冒犯。你把我当成别人了，很常见的错误。”

“那我谢谢你的理解。我把你当成了另外一个人，那人的脸我永远不会忘记，虽然最后一次看到他的时候，我还是个小孩。”

“那是在西方吧。”

“没错，先生，在我被带走之前。我说的那个人不是武士，但佩着剑，骑一匹漂亮的种马。他常到我们村子里来，我们这些男孩子只见过农民和船夫，所以对我们来说，他可是个神奇的人物。”

“没错。这一点我能理解。”

“我还记得，他到村子的任何地方，我们都跟着，不过总有些羞怯，不敢跟得太近。有时候他很急，跟长老们说话，或者召唤大家到广场上集合。有时候他悠闲地逛着，跟这个说说话，跟那个聊聊天，好像要打发时光似的。他不怎么懂我们的话，不过我们的村子在河边，河上有船来来往往，村里很多人都会说他的语言，所以他从不缺

少伙伴。有时候他会回头看看我们，脸上带着微笑，但我们那时候还小，他一回头，我们就四下里散开，躲藏起来。”

“我们的语言，你学得那么好，就是在这个村子里？”

“不是，那是后来的事。我被抓走之后。”

“被抓走，维斯坦阁下？”

“士兵们把我从村子里抓走，从很小开始训练，一直到今天成为武士。抓走我的是不列颠人，所以我很快学会了像他们那样讲话，像他们那样战斗。那是很久以前了，事情在脑海里变成了奇怪的样子。今天在那个村庄里，我第一次看到你，也许是因为早晨的光亮吧，我觉得自己又成了那个小男孩，羞怯地看着那个伟大的人物，他的披风在风中飘舞，他从村中走过，像猪群和牛群中的狮子。我猜这可能是因为微笑时一侧嘴角的样子，或者你与陌生人微微点头打招呼的方式。不过，现在我知道了，是我搞错了，你不可能是那个人。这事就不说了。你好心的妻子怎么样啦，先生？没累坏吧，我希望？”

“她算是喘了口气啦，谢谢你关心，不过我刚让她再休息一会儿。反正我们还要等僧侣们开完会，等院长允许我们去见那位睿智的乔纳斯医生。”

“真是一位坚强的女士，先生。她能一路走到这儿，毫无怨言，我很钦佩。啊，小男孩又回来啦。”

“你看他捂着伤口，维斯坦阁下。我们也要带他去见乔纳斯神父。”

维斯坦似乎没听见这句话。他离开墙边，走下几级台阶迎接埃德温，两人脑袋碰在一起，低声交谈了一会儿。男孩的样子有些激动，武士则皱着眉头听着，不时点点头。埃克索也走下来，维斯坦轻声说：

“小先生埃德温发现了一件奇怪的事情，我们最好去亲眼看看。让他带路，我们跟着，不过走路时要摆出无所事事的样子，说不定那边那位老僧侣是有意留下来监视我们的。”

没错，一位孤零零的僧侣，正在扫院子。他们走到近前，埃克索发现他嘴里喃喃自语，沉浸在自己的世界里。埃德温带着大家穿过院子，进入两幢建筑中间的狭窄过道，那位僧侣几乎都没抬眼朝他们这边看。他们从过道里走出来，前面是个高低不平的斜坡，稀稀落落长

着草，沿着一排不过一人高的枯树，有一条小路，通到修道院外面。在黄昏的天空下，众人跟在埃德温身后，维斯坦低声说：

“我很喜欢这个男孩。埃克索阁下，我们可以调整原来的计划，不一定要把他留在你儿子的村子里。让他在我身边多待一段时间，对我来说很合适。”

“先生，听你这么说，我感到不安。”

“为什么呢？他可不太向往挖冻土、喂猪食的生活。”

“可是，在你身边，他会做什么呢？”

“等我的使命完成了，我就带他回东方沼地去。”

“你打算让他到那儿干什么呢，先生？天天跟挪威人作战？”

“你皱着眉头，先生，但这个男孩性情特殊。他能成为优秀的武士。嘘，我们看看他发现了什么。”

路旁有三间木头棚屋，都破旧不堪，每间看上去似乎都要靠旁边的那间支撑着。潮湿的地面上有车轮的痕迹，埃德温停下来指给大家看。然后他带着众人到了最远的那间棚屋。

棚屋没有门，一大块屋顶破了，能看到天空。他们一进来，几只鸟慌乱地飞走了，埃克索看到，在这个阴森森、空荡荡的地方，有一辆制作粗糙的马车——也许是僧侣们自己做的——两只车轮陷在泥里。引人注意的是，马车车厢的顶上，有一个巨大的笼子。埃克索走到近前，发现笼子本身是铁的，后背上有一根粗木柱，将笼子牢牢固定在下面的木板上。木柱上挂满了铁链镣铐，在脑袋那么高的地方还有个东西，好像是个黑色的铁面具，不过眼睛的地方没有洞，只在嘴巴处开了个小孔。车上以及车子周围，落满了羽毛和粪便。埃德温拉开笼子的门，又把门推来推去，铰链发出吱吱呀呀的声音。他又开始激动地说了起来，维斯坦的目光在棚子里搜索着，不时冲埃德温点点头。

“真奇怪，”埃克索说道，“这些僧侣竟然需要这么个东西。毫无疑问，这是某种礼拜仪式上用的。”

武士迈步围着马车走，小心翼翼避开脚下的泥坑。“我以前见过一次类似的东西，”他说。“你可能以为，这个设备是让关在笼子里的人经受自然的严酷考验。但是，看看吧，这些栅栏之间的缝隙很大，我的肩膀都能过去。这儿，你们看，这些羽毛上沾了血，都硬

了，粘在铁笼子上。所以，人锁在这里，是送给山上的鸟的。他被这些镣铐锁住，根本没法赶走那些饥饿的鸟。这个铁面具看起来很可怕，其实是仁慈的体现，因为戴上面具，至少眼睛不会被啄瞎。”

“也许有什么更加温和的用途吧，”埃克索说道，但埃德温又开始说话了，维斯坦转过头，望着棚子外面。

“男孩说，他跟着车轮的痕迹走，到了附近悬崖边上的一个地方，”武士过了好久，才开口说道。“他说，那儿的地上车辙很深，表明马车经常停在那个地方。换句话说，这些迹象都证明我的猜测是对的，而且我也能看出来，这辆车不久前还被拉出去过。”

“我不明白这是什么意思，维斯坦阁下，但我承认，现在我开始和你一样感到不安了。这个东西让我脊背发凉，让我想回到妻子身边。”

“那我们就回去吧，先生。不要再待在这儿了。”

他们走出棚屋，埃德温又一次在前面领路。他突然停了下来。在前方昏暗的暮色中，埃克索看到一个穿僧袍的身影，站在长草之中，离他们不远。

“我看就是刚才扫院子的那个僧侣，”武士对埃克索说。

“他看见我们了吗？”

“我认为他看到我们了，也知道我们看到了他。可他仍旧站在那儿一动不动，像棵树一样。好吧，我们过去。”

僧侣站在路旁一个地方，草有他膝盖那么高。他们走近时，他仍旧一动不动，只有袍子和长长的白头发随风飘动。他身材瘦削，简直瘦骨嶙峋，两只鼓起来的眼睛空洞无神地瞪着他们。

“你在看着我们，先生，”维斯坦停下脚步，说道，“你知道我们刚才发现了什么。所以呢，也许你可以告诉我们，那个东西是拿来干什么的。”

僧侣一言不发，用手指了指修道院。

“也许他起过誓，不能言语，”埃克索说。“或者像你最近假装的那样，是个哑巴，维斯坦阁下。”

僧侣走出草丛，来到路上。他奇怪的眼睛依次凝视着大家，然后他又指了指修道院，便迈步出发了。大家跟在他身后，只保持着很短

的距离，僧侣不停地回过头来看看他们。

现在，在黄昏的天空下，修道院的建筑成了黑影。他们走近时，僧侣停下脚步，食指放到嘴唇上，然后更加谨慎地向前走。他似乎很担心被人看到，要避开中央的院子。他领着大家走过建筑背后的狭窄过道，泥地上要么坑坑洼洼，要么是陡坡。有一次，他们要低着头，贴着一堵墙走，头顶上传来了僧侣们开会的声音。一片混乱之中，有个声音在叫喊，接着另一个声音——可能是院长——让大家保持秩序。众人没有时间停留，不久他们在一个拱廊下陆续聚齐，穿过拱廊就是主庭院。僧侣急切地打着手势，让大家尽可能安静、尽可能快地过去。

实际上，他们并不需要从点着火把的院子中央经过，只要沿着一条石柱回廊的阴影，从庭院的一个角落穿过去。僧侣又停下了脚步，埃克索悄声对他说：

“好心的先生啊，你肯定是要带我们到什么地方去，那我请你允许我带上我妻子，丢下她一个人，我心中不安。”

僧侣立即转过头来，牢牢盯着埃克索，然后摇摇头，用手指着昏暗处。这时候，埃克索才发现，比特丽丝就站在回廊远处的一个通道口上。他心中一宽，挥了挥手，大家都朝她那边走去，僧侣们的会场中响起一阵愤怒的声音，从他们身后传来。

“你怎么样啊，公主？”比特丽丝已经伸出手来，他伸手握住。

“安安静静地休息呢，埃克索，这位不说话的僧侣突然出现在我面前，我还以为他是幽灵。但他急着带我们去什么地方，我们最好跟上。”

僧侣又做了那个让大家噤声的动作，然后打手势让大家继续走。比特丽丝站在门槛边等着，大家相继从她跟前走过，进了通道。

通道变得像隧道一样，和他们家乡的巢穴村差不多，小壁龛里的灯摇曳不定，无法驱散黑暗。比特丽丝挽着埃克索的胳膊，埃克索则把一只手伸在前面。有一下子他们又回到了户外，穿过一个泥泞的院子，两侧是耕耘过的一块块田地，然后进入了另一幢低矮的石头建筑。这儿通道更宽，灯火也更亮，僧侣似乎终于放松了下来。他喘了口气，又一次打量着大家，然后打手势让他们等着，自己走进一道拱门，消失了。过了一会儿，僧侣出来，带大家往里走。里面一个虚弱

的声音说道，“进来吧，客人们。这个房间招待客人过于简陋，但欢迎你们。”

* * *

埃克索一边等着睡意降临，一边又回想起他们四个人和那位沉默的僧侣一起，挤进了那个小小的房间。床边点着一根蜡烛，他感到比特丽丝往后缩了一下，因为她看到了躺在床上那个人。然后她吸了口气，朝房间里面又迈了两步。屋里几乎挤不下，但很快大家就围着床找到了自己的位置，武士和男孩待在最远处的角落里。埃克索的后背紧贴着冰冷的石头墙，比特丽丝就站在他跟前，紧靠在他身上，好像这样心里踏实一点一样——她都快要挤到病床上去了。隐约有呕吐和小便的气味。那位沉默的僧侣正围着床上的人忙活，帮助他坐起身来。

房间的主人头发雪白，年纪很大了。他身材高大，不久之前应该精神很好，但现在坐起来这么简单的事情，似乎都给他带来很多痛苦。他起身的时候，一条粗糙的毯子滑下来，露出睡衣，上面有一块块血迹。但是，让比特丽丝缩回去的，是床头昏暗的烛光下这个人的脖子和脸。他下巴一侧有个肿块，由深紫色慢慢变成了黄色，所以他的脑袋要稍微歪着。肿块中间裂开，上面覆盖着脓和凝固的血。脸上，从颧骨下方到下颌，有一个洞，口腔内部和牙龈都露了出来。这个人要微笑一下，恐怕非常困难，不过，等他坐起来、安顿好，他还是笑了笑。

“欢迎，欢迎。我是乔纳斯，我知道你们走了很远的路要来见我。我亲爱的客人们，不要这么怜悯地看着我。这伤口也有段时间了，已经不像以前那么痛啦。”

“乔纳斯神父，”比特丽丝说，“我们现在明白了，为什么你善良的院长不愿意让陌生人来打扰你。我们本想等待他许可，不过这位善良的僧侣把我们带过来了。”

“尼尼安是我最信任的朋友，虽然他发过静默的誓言，但是我们完全明白对方的心意。你们来了之后，他一直观察你们每个人，经常向我报告。院长还毫不知情，但我想我们该见面了。”

“可是，神父，你怎么会受这样的伤呢？”比特丽丝问。“你可是个出了名的善良、睿智之人啊。”

“这个话题我们就不谈了，夫人，因为我力气虚弱，不能长时间说话。我知道你们两人——你以及这位勇敢的男孩——都需要我看看。让我先看看男孩吧，我知道他身上有伤。小伙子，靠近点，到有光的地方来。”

他声音轻柔，但有种自然的威严。埃德温正打算迈步过去，维斯坦却伸出手，抓住了男孩的胳膊。也许是因为摇曳的烛光，或者是因为武士颤抖的影子落在他身后的墙上，有一刻埃克索觉得，维斯坦盯着那位受伤的僧侣，目光特别凶狠，甚至充满仇恨。武士把男孩拉回到墙边，自己向前迈了一步，似乎是要挡住对方的进攻。

“有什么问题吗，牧羊人？”乔纳斯神父问。“你担心我伤口的毒会传给你的兄弟吗？我并不需要用手去碰他。让他靠近点，我用眼睛就可以查看他的伤口。”

“男孩的伤口是干净的，”维斯坦说。“这位好心的女人才需要你的帮助。”

“维斯坦阁下，”比特丽丝说，“你怎么能说这种话？干净的伤口也随时都会发炎，这你肯定很清楚吧。这个男孩必须听听这位睿智僧侣的指引。”

维斯坦似乎没听见比特丽丝的话，仍旧瞪着床上的僧侣。乔纳斯神父也打量着武士，好像他是个非常有趣的物件一样。过了一会儿，乔纳斯神父说：

“对一个普通的牧羊人来说，你站的样子，可真够大胆啊。”

“那肯定是因为我的职业习惯。放羊的人要站很久，提防夜晚聚集的狼。”

“当然是这样啦。我还想，牧羊人还要做出快速判断，听到黑暗中的声响，要知道那是危险，还是朋友到访。快速准确做出决定的能力肯定关系重大。”

“听到树枝折断的声音，或者看到黑暗中的人影，只有愚蠢的牧羊人才会以为那是同伴前来帮忙。我们放羊的都很谨慎，还有啊，先生，我们刚刚亲眼见到了你们谷仓里的器具。”

“哦。我就想你迟早要谈到这件事的。牧羊人，你怎么看这一发现？”

“它让我感到愤怒。”

“愤怒？”乔纳斯神父说这话用了不少力气，好像他自己突然感到愤怒了一样。“为什么让你感到愤怒呢？”

“那好吧，先生，如果我说的不对，你尽管告诉我。我的猜测是，这儿有个传统：僧侣们轮流到那个笼子里去，让野鸟啄食身体，希望这样能够补偿这个国家早已犯下却未受惩罚的罪行。连我眼前这恶心的伤口，也是这样造成的，据我所知，虔诚的感觉会减轻你们的痛苦。但是，我要说，看到你的伤口，我并不感到同情。给最邪恶的行为罩上面纱，先生，怎么就可以称之为忏悔呢？难道你们基督教的神，用自我施加的痛苦和几句祈祷词，就能轻易收买了吗？正义未曾伸张，难道他一点儿也不关心？”

“牧羊人，我们侍奉的，是一位仁慈之神，你是个异教徒，也许难以理解。无论罪行多重，向这样的神祈求宽恕，都算不得愚蠢。我主的仁慈是无限的。”

“无限仁慈的神有什么用呢，先生？你嘲笑我是异教徒，可我们祖祖辈辈信奉的众神，明确宣布他们的规则，我们一旦破坏他们的律法，即受到严厉惩罚。你们基督徒信奉的仁慈之神，许可人们满足贪欲，觊觎土地和鲜血，他们知道，几句祈祷的话加上一点儿忏悔，就能换回宽恕和祝福。”

“你说得没错，牧羊人，在这个修道院里，仍然有人相信这种事情。但我向你保证，我和尼尼安很久以前就放弃了这种妄想，而且我们并不孤单。我们知道，上帝的仁慈不可滥用，然而我很多修道的弟兄，包括院长，目前还不能接受这一点。他们仍然相信，那个笼子，再加上经常祈祷，就够了。但这些黑乌鸦、黑老鸱，是上帝发怒的兆头。以前没有过。去年冬天，我们当中最强健的弟兄，都被风吹得流泪，但那时候的鸟儿不过是调皮的孩子，嘴巴只会造成微小的伤害。抖抖锁链，或者叫一声，它们就不敢靠近。但是，现在一种新的鸟来了，体型更大，胆子更大，眼睛里有愤怒。它们带着不动声色的怒火，撕扯我们的身体，不管我们如何挣扎或叫喊。过去这几个月，我们已经失去了三位亲爱的朋友，还有很多受了重伤。这些肯定是预兆吧。”

维斯坦的模样缓和了一些，但他一直坚定地站在男孩身前。“你是说，”他问道，“这个修道院里有我的朋友？”

“没错，牧羊人，在这个房间里。在其他地方，我们仍有不同意见，此时此刻，他们正在激烈争论下一步该怎么办。院长会坚持说，

我们该一如既往。和我们观点相同的人会说，该停止了。我们沿着这条路走，不会获得宽恕。我们必须揭开隐藏的事情，直面过去。但是，恐怕这样的声音不多，也不会占上风。牧羊人，现在你信任我了吗，愿意让我看看男孩的伤口吗？”

维斯坦站着不动，但过了一会儿，他让到一边，示意埃德温过去。不说话的僧侣立即扶着乔纳斯神父，让他坐得更直一点——两位僧侣突然都忙碌起来——然后他抓起床边的烛台，把埃德温拉到近前，不耐烦地撩起男孩的衣衫，给乔纳斯神父看。似乎过了很久，两位僧侣一直看着男孩的伤口——尼尼安将那一团光亮移来移去——好像那是一池水，里面包含着一个小小的世界。最后，两位僧侣交换了一个眼神，在埃克索看来，那似乎是表示大功告成，但紧接着乔纳斯神父身体颤抖着，又倒回到枕头上，表情近乎无奈，甚至是悲伤。尼尼安急忙放下蜡烛去照顾他，埃德温则悄悄回到黑暗中，站在维斯坦身旁。

“乔纳斯神父，”比特丽丝说，“你看过了小男孩的伤口，告诉我们伤口干净吗，能不能自行愈合。”

乔纳斯神父闭着眼睛，仍旧在喘着粗气，不过他平静地说：“我相信，只要他小心，伤口能自行愈合。他离开之前，尼尼安神父会为他准备好药膏。”

“神父，”比特丽丝继续说，“你和维斯坦阁下的谈话，我不能完全理解。但我很感兴趣。”

“是吗，夫人？”乔纳斯神父仍在喘气，但他睁开了眼睛，看着她。

“昨天晚上，在山下的一个村庄里，”比特丽丝说，“我和一位精通医药的女士谈过。她很了解我的病，但是，我一问起她这迷雾是怎么回事，为什么我们会眨眼便忘记一个小时之前的事，就像忘记多年前某个上午的事一样，她就坦白说，她根本不知道这是怎么回事，也不知是何人所为。不过，她说如果有睿智的人知道，那就肯定是你了，就是住在山上修道院里的乔纳斯神父。所以，我和丈夫就到这儿来了，尽管到儿子的村庄去，这条路更难走，而且他还在那儿焦急地等着呢。我希望你能给我们说说这迷雾，我和埃克索用什么办法可以摆脱。也许我是个愚蠢的女人，但我觉得，你和维斯坦阁下张口闭口牧羊人，实际上说的就是这迷雾，过去的事情我们忘记了不少，你们

也很担心。所以，请允许我问问你，也问问维斯坦阁下。为什么迷雾会降临到我们头上，你们两人知道吗？”

乔纳斯神父和维斯坦互相看了一眼。然后维斯坦低声说：

“比特丽丝夫人，那是因为魁瑞格，在这山间游荡的那条龙。你说的迷雾，就是她引起的。但这儿的僧侣们庇护她，而且庇护了很多年。现在我就敢打赌，他们要是知道了我的身份，肯定会派人来杀我。”

“乔纳斯神父，这是真的吗？”比特丽丝问。“迷雾是那条母龙造出来的？”

僧侣似乎走了一下神，然后他转脸对比特丽丝说：“牧羊人说的是真话，夫人。是魁瑞格的气息填满了这片土地，夺去了我们的记忆。”

“埃克索，你听到了吗？迷雾是那条母龙造成的！维斯坦阁下，或者其他，甚至是路上遇到的那位老骑士，只要有人能杀掉它，那我们的记忆就可以恢复啦！埃克索，你怎么这么安静呢？”

没错，埃克索刚才陷入了沉思，他听见了妻子的话，注意到了她的激动情绪，但他只朝她伸出了一只手，并没有别的表示。他还没开口，乔纳斯神父对维斯坦说道：

“牧羊人，既然你知道有危险，为什么还在此逗留？为什么不带着这位男孩上路呢？”

“男孩需要休息，我也一样。”

“但你没有休息啊，牧羊人。你在劈柴，像恶狼一样晃来晃去。”

“我们来的时候，你们的柴火不多了。这山里晚上又很冷。”

“还有别的事让我疑惑，牧羊人。布雷纳斯爵爷为什么要抓你？他的士兵在全国追查你，有很多天了。去年，有个从东方来的人要找魁瑞格，布雷纳斯认为那可能是你，就派人出来追查。他们到山上来询问你的踪迹。牧羊人，你和布雷纳斯是什么关系？”

“我们还是小伙子的时候就认识，那时我俩比这位男孩还小呢。”

“你到这个国家来是有任务的，牧羊人。为什么要去算旧账，给自己找麻烦呢？我跟你说，你带上这个男孩走吧，僧侣们会议结束之前就走。”

“既然布雷纳斯爵爷如此看重，今晚就来找我，那我就应该站在这儿，与他会面。”

“维斯坦阁下，”比特丽丝说，“我不知道你和布雷纳斯爵爷之间是怎么回事。但是，如果你的使命是杀死大龙魁瑞格，那么我请求你，不要为别的事情分心。算账以后还有时间。”

“这位夫人说得对，牧羊人。劈柴的目的，恐怕我也知道。听我们的话吧，先生。这个男孩给了你一个独一无二的机会，以后可能就没有这样的机会了。带上他，走吧。”

维斯坦若有所思地看着乔纳斯神父，然后礼貌地点点头。“今天见到你我很高兴，神父。如果之前我对你不够尊重，那我向你道歉。但现在请允许我和这个男孩向你告别。我知道比特丽丝夫人还需要你看一看，她是个勇敢而善良的女人。我请你留些力气给她看病。感谢你的忠告，告辞了。”

埃克索躺在黑暗中，一边期盼着睡神降临，一边努力回想，当时在乔纳斯神父的小房间里，为什么自己大多时候都没怎么说话。总该有什么原因。比特丽丝发现了迷雾的源头，兴高采烈地转过脸来跟他说，但他仍旧没说话，只是伸出手去握住了她的手。当时某种强烈而奇怪的情感在他胸中翻腾，几乎让他如临梦境，尽管周围的人说的每个字都清清楚楚传入了他耳中。他感觉好像站在冬天河面上的一艘船里，在浓雾中眺望，心里知道大雾随时会分开，露出前方陆地的清晰轮廓来。而且，当时他有一种恐惧感，与此同时却又感到好奇——或者是种比好奇更强烈、更阴暗的感觉——他心里坚定地告诉自己：

“无论前方是什么，让我看看，让我看看。”

这话他当时真的说出来了么？也许吧，而且就在那一刻，比特丽丝兴奋地转脸对他喊道：“埃克索，你听见了吗？迷雾是那条母龙造成的！”

维斯坦和男孩离开了乔纳斯神父的房间，之后发生的事情，他记不清楚。那位不说话的僧侣尼尼安肯定也一起走了，可能要给男孩拿治伤口的膏药，也可能就是领着他们出去，不让别人发现。反正最后只有他和比特丽丝留在乔纳斯神父身边，神父虽然受了伤，非常疲劳，还是给妻子做了仔细的检查。他没让她脱衣服——这让埃克索放

了心——当时的情况他记得很模糊，不过他脑海里留下了一幅画面：乔纳斯把耳朵贴在比特丽丝的腰部，闭着眼睛、聚精会神，好像能听到身体里发出的微弱信号一样。埃克索也记得，僧侣眨着眼睛，问了比特丽丝一连串的问题。喝水后感到恶心吗？脖子后面痛过吗？还有些问题埃克索记不住了，不过每个问题，比特丽丝的回答都是否定的，她说的“不”越多，埃克索就越高兴。只有一次，乔纳斯问她小便里有没有血，她回答说是，有时候有，埃克索紧张起来。但僧侣只是点了点头，好像这是意料之中的正常现象一样，然后就接着问下一个问题了。后来检查是怎么结束的呢？他记得乔纳斯微笑着说：“看来你可以安心去找你儿子了。”埃克索自己说，“你看，公主，我就说没什么事嘛。”然后僧侣小心翼翼地慢慢躺下去，在床上喘气休息。尼尼安不在，埃克索赶紧跑过去，用水罐把僧侣的杯子加满水。他把杯子送到病人嘴边，看到小小的血珠从他下嘴唇上滑落，在水中散开。然后乔纳斯神父抬眼看着比特丽丝，说道：

“夫人，你称作迷雾的这个东西——现在知道了它背后的真相，你好像很高兴。”

“真的高兴，神父，因为现在我们有方向了。”

“小心一点，这是个有人迫切守护的秘密，虽然现在公开也许更好。”

“是不是秘密，也不是我要小心的事情，神父，我高兴的是，埃克索和我既然知道了，现在行动就有了依据。”

“可是，好心的夫人啊，你这么确定不要这迷雾吗？有些事情藏起来，不放在心里，难道不是更好吗？”

“对有些人来说也许是这样，神父，但对我们不是。我和埃克索都希望再次拥有我们共同度过的美好时光。被人夺走那些记忆的感觉就像一个小偷晚上进来，拿走了我们最宝贵的东西。”

“可迷雾笼罩着所有的记忆啊，好的坏的都包括。不是吗，夫人？”

“我们也愿意让坏的记忆回来，哪怕会让我们哭泣，或者气得发抖。因为，那不就是我们共同度过的一生吗？”

“这么说，夫人，你不怕坏的记忆？”

“有什么可怕的呢，神父？我和埃克索现在对对方的感情，说明我们走过的路虽然被迷雾遮住，但是一路上不会有危险。这就像一个结局幸福的故事，连孩子都知道，过去经历的曲折不必害怕。无论我们这一生是什么样子，我和埃克索会一起回忆，因为这是我们两人都很珍视的。”

肯定有一只鸟从房间屋顶下飞过。那声音吓了他一跳，埃克索这才意识到，刚才有一下他是真的睡着了。他还意识到，劈柴的声音停了，周围安静下来。武士回到他们的房间了吗？埃克索什么也没听到。隔着桌子的黑影，在房间另一头埃德温睡觉的地方，似乎也没有别人。乔纳斯神父给比特丽丝做完检查、问过问题，然后又说了什么呢？是的，她回答说，她小便里有过血，可他只是笑笑，又问了别的事情。埃克索说，你看，公主，我就说没什么事嘛。乔纳斯神父笑了，他受了伤，很疲惫，可他还是说，你可以安心去找你儿子了。但是，这些问题，比特丽丝都不害怕。他知道，比特丽丝害怕的是船夫的问题，比乔纳斯神父的问题更难回答，所以知道迷雾的根源之后，她才那么高兴。埃克索，你听见了吗？她兴高采烈。埃克索，你听见了吗？她说道，脸上容光焕发。

第七章

一只手在推埃克索，可等他坐起来，那人影已经到了房间另一头，正弯着腰低声对埃德温说，“快点，孩子，快点！不要发出声音！”身旁的比特丽丝已经醒了，冰冷的空气让他惊颤。埃克索摇摇晃晃站起身来，然后弯腰抓住妻子的双手。

还是深夜，但外面有人叫喊，下面的院子里肯定点了火把，因为窗户对面的墙上有一块块光亮。喊醒他们的僧侣把睡意朦胧的男孩拉到他们这边来，他的脸还在黑暗中，可埃克索已经认出了那一瘸一拐的步态是布莱恩神父的。

“朋友们，我会想办法救你们，”布莱恩神父的声音仍然很低。“但你们动作要快点，按我说的做。来了士兵，二十个，甚至有三十，要抓你们。他们已经围住了年纪大一点的那位撒克逊兄弟，但他很敏捷，牵着他们团团转，给你们创造逃跑的机会。不要动，孩子，待在我身边！”埃德温要朝窗户旁边走，但布莱恩神父伸手抓住了他的胳膊。“我要带你们去个安全的地方，但我们先得离开这房间，不能让人看见。士兵们在下面的广场上来回巡逻，但他们眼睛都望着塔上，那个撒克逊人还在塔上坚持着呢。如果上帝眷顾，他们也许不会注意到我们走下外面的台阶，那最困难的一关就算过去了。但是，不要发出声响，否则他们就会朝这边看，下台阶要小心，不要绊着。我先下去，等我打手势，你们就跟上。不，夫人，你的行囊只能留在这里。保住性命就不错了！”

他们缩在门边，听着布莱恩神父下楼的脚步声，他走得极慢，对大家简直是煎熬。最后，埃克索小心翼翼朝门外望去，看见火把在院子较远的那一边移动；他还没来得及仔细看看是怎么回事，布莱恩神父先吸引了他的注意力，他就站在正下方，拼命打着手势。

楼梯顺着墙壁一路斜下，台阶大多在黑暗中，只有接近地面的地方有块亮光，一轮满月明晃晃地照在上面。

“在我后面跟紧点儿，公主，”埃克索说道。“别看院子那边，眼睛一直盯着下一步落脚的地方，否则摔下去可够呛，而且下面都是敌人。把我刚讲的话告诉男孩，我们出发吧。”

埃克索虽然发了指令，自己下楼的时候却忍不住朝院子那边望。院子较远的那一侧有一座圆柱形的石塔，俯瞰僧侣们之前开会的那幢建筑，士兵聚集在石塔周围，明亮的火把晃动着，队伍中似乎有些混乱。埃克索下了一半台阶的时候，两名士兵突然离开队伍，往广场这边跑，他觉得这下子肯定要被发现。不过，那两名士兵从一个门里进去，消失了；埃克索心里谢天谢地，领着比特丽丝和埃德温进入回廊的阴影之中，布莱恩神父在那儿等着。

他们跟在僧侣后面，沿着狭窄的通道走，其中有些通道，静默的尼尼安神父之前可能带他们走过。路上常常漆黑一片，向导拖着一只脚，发出簌簌声，大家只能跟着这声音走。然后他们来到一个房间，一部分屋顶已经塌了。月光洒进来，照着一堆堆的木头箱子和破旧家具。埃克索闻到了霉菌和死水潭的气味。

“振作一点，朋友们，”布莱恩神父说，这次他不再压低声音了。他到了房间一个角落里，正在把东西搬开。“你们快安全啦。”

“神父，”埃克索说，“感谢你救了我们，但请你告诉我们发生了什么事。”

布莱恩神父继续清理那个角落，眼睛也没抬，口中回答道：“先生，这对我们也是个谜。他们今晚不请自来，拥进大门，拥进我们家里，好像这是他们的地方一样。他们说，要抓刚到的这两个撒克逊年轻人，没提到你和你妻子，但我不相信他们会友好地对待你们。这个男孩呢，他们显然是想要他的命，就像他们现在追杀他哥哥一样。你们先要脱离危险，以后有时间慢慢去寻思这些士兵的行为。”

“我们是今天早晨才认识维斯坦阁下的，”比特丽丝说，“但是，在他面临着可怕命运的时候，我们自行逃走，心里感到不安。”

“士兵们还是有可能追上来的，夫人，因为我们身后的门都没有上锁。如果那个人勇敢地为大家争取逃跑的时间，甚至要牺牲自己的性命，那么你们应该心怀感激去抓住这个机会。这道暗门下面，有条隧道，是古时候挖的。顺着隧道，可以从地下走到树林里，你们从树林里出来，追赶你们的人就被甩远了。先生，请你帮我抬一下，太重了，我两只手不够。”

两人一起动手，也花了不少力气才把门拉开，门在他们面前立起来，露出一个方形的黑洞。

“让男孩先下去，”僧侣说，“我们很多年没用这条通道了，谁知道台阶有没有塌掉。他脚下灵活，摔一跤不会太严重。”

但埃德温跟比特丽丝说了些什么，比特丽丝对大家说：“埃德温阁下要去帮助维斯坦阁下。”

“公主，跟他说，我们从通道里逃出去，就是帮维斯坦的忙。随便你怎么跟他说，但是要说服他快点来。”

比特丽丝跟男孩说话的时候，男孩身上似乎发生了什么变化。他一直盯着地板上那个洞，月光反射在他眼睛里，那一刻在埃克索看来，男孩的眼睛里有种奇怪的东西，好像他慢慢进入了魔咒之中一样。比特丽丝还在说话，埃德温便迈步朝暗门走去，没有回头看大家，直接进了那个黑洞，消失了。他的脚步声渐渐远去，埃克索拉住比特丽丝的手，说道：

“我们也下去吧，公主。跟紧点儿啊。”

通向地下的台阶很平缓——扁平的石块嵌在泥土中——踩上去也比较牢固。头顶的暗门开着，有一些光亮，他们能看到一点前方的路。但是，就在埃克索转身对布莱恩神父说话的时候，暗门关上了，传来轰隆一声巨响，如同雷鸣。

三人都停下脚步，站在那儿一动不动。空气不像埃克索想象的那样污浊；实际上，他似乎还能感觉到一点儿微风。埃德温在前面什么地方开口说话，比特丽丝低声回答。然后她轻声说道：

“男孩问，为什么布莱恩神父在后面把门给关上了。我跟他讲，他很可能是急着把洞口藏起来，也许现在那些士兵已经进了房间。可是啊，埃克索，这事我也觉得有些奇怪。你听，那肯定是他吧，在搬东西把门压住？神父自己说，通道很多年没人走了，如果前面有泥土或者水挡路，我们回去怎么开门呢？门那么重，现在上面又压了东西？”

“是有些奇怪。但修道院里来了士兵，这一点确定无疑，我们刚才不是都看到了吗？我看我们也没别的选择了，只能继续往前走，希望这条路能安全地通到树林。告诉男孩继续往前走，但是要慢一点，一只手要一直扶着这长满青苔的墙，我担心前面只会越来越暗。”

但是，他们再往前走，发现有一线微弱的光，有时甚至还能分辨出彼此的轮廓。脚下不时会有水坑，吓人一跳，而且在这段路上，埃克索不止一次感觉头顶上有声音，但埃德温和比特丽丝都没什么反

应，他也就当作是自己想象出来的，不去理睬了。后来埃德温突然停下脚步，埃克索差点都撞到了他身上。他感到身后的比特丽丝捏紧了他的手，有一刻，他们就这样静静地在黑暗中站着。比特丽丝贴得更紧了，他的脖子能感觉到她的气息，她用极低的声音说：“你听到了没，埃克索？”

“听到什么，公主？”

埃德温用手碰碰他，以示警告，他们又沉默下来。最后，比特丽丝对着他的耳朵说：“这里面有什么东西，埃克索。”

“也许是只蝙蝠，公主。或者老鼠。”

“不是，埃克索。我现在能听到。是人的呼吸声。”

埃克索再次倾听。这时候传来一个尖锐的声音，是敲打发出的声响，重复了三次，四次，就在他们前面。一道亮光闪过，接着亮起一团微弱的火焰，火光下现出一个坐在地上的人影，随即又是一片黑暗。

“不要害怕，朋友们，”一个声音说。“是高文啊，亚瑟王的骑士。等这火绒点起来，我们就能看清楚对方啦。”

又是一通击打火石的声音，最后一根蜡烛终于亮起来，火焰慢慢稳定。

高文爵士坐在一个黑黑的土堆上。这个座位显然不太理想，因为他身体角度奇怪，像个随时会滚下来的巨大玩偶。他手里的蜡烛光影摇曳，照亮了他的脸和上半身，他在喘着粗气。和往常一样，他穿着盔甲，剑出了鞘，斜插在脚下的土里。他目光凶狠地瞪着大家，蜡烛从一张脸照到另一张脸。

“看来你们都到了，”他终于开口说道。“我放心了。”

“你吓了我们一跳，高文爵士，”埃克索说。“你躲在这儿，要干什么？”

“我下来有一会儿了，在你们前面走，朋友们。我带着剑，穿着盔甲，个子又高，走得跌跌撞撞，还要低着头，所以走不快，你们就发现我啦。”

“你这不算解释啊，先生。你为什么在我们前面走？”

“保护你们啊，先生！那些僧侣欺骗了你们，这令人难过，但是真的。这下面有一头野兽，他们想让你们在野兽嘴里送命。令人高兴的是，不是每个僧侣都这么想。尼尼安，那个不讲话的，把我领到这下面来，没被人发现，我要带着你们到安全的地方。”

“你这消息真让人回不过神来，高文爵士，”埃克索说。“不过，你先给我们说说这头野兽吧。是什么样的兽呢？我们现在站在这儿，有没有危险？”

“做有危险的打算吧，先生。僧侣们如果不想你们碰到野兽，是不会让你们下来的。这就是他们用的办法。他们是信基督的人，不能用剑，甚至也不能下毒。他们希望谁死，就让谁下来，过一两天，他们就会忘记做过这件事。啊，没错，这就是他们的办法，尤其是院长。到星期天，他甚至还会相信，是他救了你们，否则你们就被士兵抓走了。这隧道里潜伏的野兽干了什么，他就算想起来，也不会承认，甚至还会说这是上帝的意愿。好啦，今晚一位亚瑟王的骑士在前面开路，我们看看上帝的意愿是什么。”

“高文爵士，”比特丽丝问，“你是说，那些僧侣要我们死？”

“夫人，他们当然希望这个男孩死。我试图让他们明白，这没有必要，甚至还庄重地发了誓，带他远离这个国家，但都不行，他们不听我的话！就算维斯坦阁下被捕或被杀，他们也不愿意冒险放走男孩，因为说不定哪天又会来个什么人，要找这个男孩。我说，我带他走得远远的，但他们担心以后的事情，所以要他死。本来他们也许会饶了你和你丈夫的性命，但他们做的事，你们肯定会看到。如果我提前知道这一切，还会不会到这个修道院来呢？谁知道啊？这似乎是我的职责吧，是不是呢？可他们要这样对付一个男孩，还有一对虔诚、无辜的夫妻，这我可不答应！幸运的是，不是所有僧侣都这么想，你们知道，尼尼安，那位不说话的僧侣，是他带着我悄悄下来的。我打算在你们前面走得更远一些，但这身盔甲，还有这麻烦的大个头——这么多年，这个大个头让我诅咒过多少次！一个人长这么高，有什么好处呢？能摘到挂在高处的梨子，可是一支箭射来，从矮一点的人头顶飞过去，却差点要了我的命。我看威胁我性命的箭，不比我摘的梨子少！”

“高文爵士，”埃克索说，“你说住在这下面的兽，究竟是什么东西？”

“我从没见过，先生，只知道有些人被僧侣们送下来，被它咬死了。”

“一个凡人拿一把剑，能杀死它吗？”

“你说什么呢，先生？我是个凡人，这我不否认，可我是个训练有素的骑士啊，年轻的时候跟随伟大的亚瑟很多年，他教我要快乐地面对一切挑战，哪怕恐惧渗入骨髓，因为就算我们是凡人，趁着还活在这人世，就该绽放光彩，让上帝看到！先生，和所有与亚瑟并肩作战的人一样，我对付过魔鬼妖怪，也对付过最阴险的人，哪怕在最激烈的战斗之中，也总是效仿我伟大的国王。你这是什么意思呢，先生？你怎么敢这么说？你那时候在场吗？我可在场啊，先生，现在盯着你的这双眼睛，当时可什么都见过！可是，又怎么样呢，又怎样呢，朋友们，这事以后什么时候再讨论吧。原谅我，我们有别的事要做，当然有啦。你刚才问什么来着，先生？哎呀，对啦，这头兽，没错，我知道它很凶猛，但不是什么魔鬼精灵，这把剑足以杀死它。”

“可是，高文爵士，”比特丽丝说，“现在我们知道了一些情况，你还认为我们该沿着隧道继续往前走吗？”

“我们有什么办法呢，夫人？如果我没弄错的话，退路已经封起来了，我们回不去，但那扇门却随时会打开，把一批士兵放进隧道。没有别的办法，只能往前走，路上只有一头野兽，我们很快就能到树林，把追赶你们的人甩得远远的，因为尼尼安跟我说过，这条隧道是通的，没有损坏。所以，在蜡烛熄灭之前，我们还是动身吧，只有这条道啦。”

“我们该相信他吗，埃克索？”比特丽丝问。她毫不遮掩，不在乎高文爵士也能听到。“我脑子有点乱，也不愿意相信好心的布莱恩神父会背叛我们。可这位骑士说的话也有道理。”

“我们跟他走吧，公主。高文爵士，我们感谢你花这么大功夫。请带领我们到安全的地方吧，希望这头野兽已经睡着，或者潜到其他地方去了。”

“恐怕我们没那么好运吧。走吧，朋友们，我们要勇敢地往前走。”老骑士慢慢站起身来，拿蜡烛的那只手伸到前面。“埃克索阁下，也许你能帮我们拿着蜡烛，因为我需要两只手，随时准备用剑。”

他们往隧道深处走，高文爵士在最前面，埃克索拿着蜡烛跟着，比特丽丝在后面拉着埃克索的手，埃德温在最后。没别的办法，只能排成单列，因为隧道还是很窄，上面挂着苔藓，露出粗壮的树根，顶部越来越低，最后连比特丽丝都要弯着腰走路。埃克索尽量举高蜡烛，但这时隧道里的风大了，他经常要把蜡烛放下来，用另一只手罩住火焰。不过高文爵士没有一句怨言，他的身影在大家前方，举剑过肩，似乎一直就保持着这个样子。比特丽丝突然叫了一声，拉住了埃克索的胳膊。

“什么事，公主？”

“噢，埃克索，停下来！我的脚刚才碰到了什么东西，但你的蜡烛移得太快了。”

“那有什么关系，公主？我们还要继续走。”

“埃克索，我觉得那是个孩子！我的脚碰了一下，我看了一眼，然后你的蜡烛就移走了。哎呀，我相信那是个死了很久的孩子！”

“好啦，公主，别难过。你在哪儿看到的？”

“走吧，走吧，朋友们，”高文爵士在黑暗中说道。“这地方的很多东西，最好还是不要看。”

比特丽丝似乎没听见骑士的话。“在那边，埃克索。蜡烛往那边照。就是那儿，埃克索，往那地上照，我可不敢再看那可怜的脸！”

高文爵士建议大家不要看，但他自己还是折回来，埃德温也来到了比特丽丝身边。埃克索弓着腰，拿着蜡烛到处照，看到了潮湿的泥土、树根以及石块。接着火光下出现了一只大蝙蝠，伸展双翅，仰面躺着，好像在安睡。蝙蝠的毛看起来又湿又黏，面孔像猪，没有毛发，伸展的翅膀上的凹陷处，已经积了水。要不是胸口上有些特殊，这东西真像是在睡觉。埃克索把蜡烛移得更近一些，大家都瞪大了眼睛：蝙蝠身前有个圆洞，从胸口下方一直到肚子，包括两侧胸腔的一部分。伤口特别整齐，好像有人在一只脆苹果上咬了一口。

“这样的伤口，可能是谁干的呢？”埃克索问。

蜡烛可能是移得太快了，烛火晃了一下，灭了。

“别担心，朋友们，”高文爵士说。“我会再找到火绒的。”

“我不是跟你说过吗，埃克索？”听声音，比特丽丝好像都要哭出来了。“脚一碰到，我就知道那是个孩子。”

“你说什么呢，公主？那不是孩子。你说什么呢？”

“这可怜的孩子发生什么事了呢？他的父母呢？”

“公主，那就是个蝙蝠，黑暗的地方经常有这种东西。”

“哎呀，埃克索，那是个孩子，我肯定！”

“蜡烛灭了，公主，否则我可以再给你看一下。就是个蝙蝠，不是别的，不过我自己倒想看看蝙蝠下面是什么东西。高文爵士，你注意到蝙蝠躺的地方了吗？”

“我不明白你说什么，先生。”

“我觉得那东西好像是躺在骨头堆上，我好像看到了一两个头骨，只能是人的骨头。”

“先生，你这是说什么呢？”高文的声音不经意间高了起来。
“什么头骨？我可没看到头骨，先生！只有一只倒霉的蝙蝠！”

这时比特丽丝在默默地抽泣，埃克索直起身去抱她。

“那不是孩子，公主，”他更加轻柔地说。“不要难过。”

“死得孤零零的。他父母在哪儿呢，埃克索？”

“你这是说什么呢，先生？头骨？我可没看到头骨！就是有几根老骨头，那又怎么样？又怎么样啊，有什么好大惊小怪的？我们不是在地下吗？但我没看到骨头堆，我不知道你这是说什么，埃克索阁下。那时候你在场吗？你站在伟大的亚瑟身边吗？我要骄傲地说，我在啊，先生，他是个又勇猛又仁慈的统帅。是啊，没错，是我去跟院长说的，让他留意维斯坦阁下的身份和动机，可我有什么办法？修道的人心会这么黑，难道我能猜到？你的说法根本没有依据，先生！这是对所有曾与伟大的亚瑟王并肩战斗的人的侮辱！这里没有什么骨头堆！现在我不是要救你们吗？”

“高文爵士，你的声音太高了，谁知道那些士兵这时候在哪儿呢。”

“我知道了情况，还能怎么办，先生？没错，我骑马到这儿来，和院长说了话，可我怎么知道他的心有这么黑呢？还有那个好人，可怜的乔纳斯，肝都被鸟啄过，恐怕活不久了，可院长却活得好好的，皮都没给鸟碰过……”

高文爵士住了口，隧道更深处传来一个声音，打断了他的话。声音的远近很难判断，但那肯定是野兽的叫声；听起来像狼嚎，不过也有点儿像熊发出的低吼声。叫声延续的时间很短，但足以让埃克索一把拉过比特丽丝，高文爵士快速从地上拔起剑。他们站在那儿，一句话也不说，等着那声音再次响起。过了一会儿，没有声音传来，高文爵士突然笑了，他没发出什么声响，却笑得几乎喘不过气来。他还在笑的时候，比特丽丝在埃克索耳边说：“我们离开这个地方吧，丈夫。我不愿意再想起这个孤零零的坟地。”

高文爵士不笑了。他说道：“也许我们刚才听到了野兽的叫声，但我们没有选择，只能继续前进。好啦，朋友们，让我们结束争吵。我们很快就能把蜡烛点起来，不过我们先摸黑走一会儿，以免蜡烛把野兽马上引来。看，这儿有一点点光，可以走路。来吧，朋友们，不要再争吵了。我的剑准备好了，我们继续前进。”

隧道更加曲折，大家也更加小心，每到拐弯的地方都害怕会冒出什么东西。但他们没遇到什么，也没有听到之前的野兽叫声。然后隧道突然下降，走过一段长长的陡坡后，他们来到一间很大的地下房间。

大家都停下来喘口气，打量周围的新环境。他们脑袋贴着隧道顶部的泥土走了那么长时间，看到这儿屋顶很高、材料坚固，都感到欣慰。等高文爵士再次点亮蜡烛，埃克索意识到，这似乎是个陵墓，四周的墙上有壁画和罗马字母的痕迹。他们前面有两根结实的柱子，形成一道门，通向另一个大小相仿的房间，房间门口有一块明亮的月光。看不出来月光来自哪里——也许两根柱子上的拱门背后有个通风口，这时机缘巧合，月光刚好能从那儿射进来，照亮了柱子上的霉菌青苔，以及另外那个房间的一部分。乍一看，房间地板上似乎铺着碎石，但埃克索很快发现，那其实是厚厚的一层骨头。这时候他才意识到，自己脚下也是破碎的骸骨，两个房间的地面上全是骨头。

“这肯定是个古老的墓地，”他大声说。“埋葬的人真不少啊。”

“墓地，”高文爵士喃喃地说，“没错，是个墓地。”他刚才一手拿剑，一手拿蜡烛，绕着房间缓缓走了一圈。现在他正朝拱门走去，在第二个房间前面，他突然停了下来，好像被那明亮的月光镇住了一样。他把剑插到地上，埃克索看着他的剪影靠在剑上，手里的蜡烛上下移动着，颇有些厌倦的模样。

“我们不用吵啦，埃克索阁下。这都是人的头骨，我不否认。这儿一条胳膊，那儿一条腿，现在都是骨头啦。一个古老的墓地。也许是吧。先生，我敢说我们整个国家都是这样。翠绿的山谷。春天里怡人的小灌木丛。可是，你往土里挖，雏菊毛茛下面，就是死者的尸骨。先生，我说的不仅仅是举行了基督教葬礼的那些人。我们的土地下面，埋着过去屠杀留下的遗骸。我和霍拉斯啊，我们已经厌倦了。厌倦了，也都老了。”

“高文爵士，”埃克索说，“我们这儿只有一把剑。我请你不要沮丧，也不要忘记野兽就在附近。”

“我没有忘记野兽，先生。我只是在考虑我们面前的这道门。你抬头看看，看见没？”高文爵士举起蜡烛，照着拱门下沿，那儿似乎有一排矛头，对着地面。

“一道闸门，”埃克索说。

“没错，先生。这道门可没那么老。比我们俩都年轻，我敢打赌。有人把闸门打开了，希望我们进去。你看那边，那是拉住闸门的绳索。还有那边，那是滑轮。有人经常到这儿来，开门关门，也许是喂野兽。”高文爵士朝一根柱子走去，脚下踩着骨头，发出咯吱咯吱的声音。“如果我砍断这根绳索，闸门肯定会落下来，挡住我们出去的路。但如果野兽在那边，这闸门就能把它挡住。这是那个撒克逊男孩发出的声音吗，还是偷偷进来了什么精灵？”

正是埃德温。他回到黑暗中，唱了起来；一开始声音很轻，埃克索以为他只是在安抚紧张情绪，但随后他的声音越来越高。那似乎是首舒缓的摇篮曲，唱的时候，他脸对着墙，身体轻轻摇晃着。

“这男孩像着了魔似的，”高文爵士说。“别管他，现在我们要做决定，埃克索阁下。我们该继续走吗？还是该砍断绳索，无论门那边有什么东西，至少可以挡一阵子？”

“先生，依我看，我们砍断绳索吧。想开门的时候，我们肯定还能打开。等门放下来，我们先看看要对付的是什么东西。”

“明智的建议，先生。我就按你说的办。”

高文爵士把蜡烛递给埃克索，向前迈了一步，举起剑，砍在柱子上，发出金属撞击石头的声音，大门的下半部分晃了晃，但没有落下来。高文爵士叹了口气，有点儿不好意思。然后他重新站好位置，再次举起剑，又砍了一下。

这一次，啪嗒一声，大门轰隆隆落下，在月光下扬起一片灰尘。那声音惊天动地——埃德温突然停止了歌唱——埃克索瞪大眼睛，盯着面前的铁栅栏，看那边会出现什么东西。但没有野兽的迹象，过了一会儿，大家都松了口气。

他们现在被困住了，但是闸门落下，大家都感到一阵轻松，四个人开始在陵墓里四处走动。高文爵士把剑插入剑鞘，走到闸门前，轻轻摸了摸栅栏。

“好铁，”他说。“货真价实的东西。”

比特丽丝之前安静了很长时间。这时她走到埃克索跟前，把脑袋贴在他胸口。他一条胳膊把她揽住，发现她脸上都是眼泪。

“好啦，公主，”他说，“振作一点。我们很快就能出去呼吸夜晚的空气啦。”

“这些头骨，埃克索。这么多！这头野兽真的能杀死这么多人？”

她声音不大，可高文爵士转过头来说：“你这是什么意思，夫人？难道是说人是我杀的？”他的声音很疲惫，没有之前在隧道里说话时的怒气，但有一种特别强烈的情绪。“你说，这么多头骨。可我们不是在地下吗？你这是什么意思呢？一名亚瑟王的骑士，能杀得了这么多？”他转过身，对着闸门，一根指头从上到下摸着一根铁条。

“过去，很多年前，我在梦里看到自己杀敌人。那是在梦里，很久以前的事了。敌人呢，有好几百，也许和这儿的人数差不多。我就一直拼杀、拼杀。不过是个愚蠢的梦，但我现在还能想起来。”他叹了口气，然后看看比特丽丝。“我都不知道该怎么回答你，夫人。我以为这样做，会令上帝喜悦。我怎么能猜到，这些卑鄙的僧侣竟然心黑到这个地步？我和霍拉斯到修道院时，太阳还没落山，你们也刚到不久，因为那时候我想，我必须尽快告诉院长。后来我发现他要对付你们，就假装出得意的样子。我跟他告别，他们都以为我走了，实际上我把霍拉斯丢在树林里，趁着夜色又走上了山。感谢上帝，不是所有僧侣都那么想。我知道好心的乔纳斯会接待我。我从他那儿知道了院长的计划，就让尼尼安悄悄带我到这儿来，等着你们。该死，这男孩又来了！”

没错，埃德温又在唱歌了，这次他没之前那么大声，但姿势很奇怪。他身体向前倾着，两手握成拳头，放在太阳穴上，在黑暗中走来走去，步伐很慢，像一个人在扮演动物跳舞。

“最近发生了很多事情，他肯定承受不了，”埃克索说。“他表现得非常坚韧，已经很了不起了，我们一离开这儿，一定要好好照顾他。高文爵士，你跟我们说说，那些僧侣为什么要杀死这样一个无辜少年呢？”

“先生，无论我怎么争辩，院长都要杀掉这个男孩。所以我才把霍拉斯丢在树林里，回到了……”

“高文爵士，请你解释。这和他身上的食人兽伤口有没有关系？那些可都是有学识的基督徒啊。”

“男孩身上没有食人兽咬的伤口。那个伤口是龙咬的。昨天，那个士兵拉起他衣服的时候，我当场就看出来了。他怎么遇上了龙，这谁知道呢？但那肯定是龙咬的，现在他的血液里会充满欲望，要去找条母龙。同样，附近任何母龙只要闻到他的气息，也会来找他。所以维斯坦阁下才会急于保护他，先生。他认为埃德温阁下能带他找到魁瑞格。出于同样的原因，这些僧侣和士兵要杀死他。你们看，这男孩更疯了！”

“那这些头骨呢，先生，”比特丽丝突然问骑士。“为什么有这么多？都是孩子吗？有些很小，都能放到你手掌里。”

“公主，不要难过了。这是个墓地而已。”

“你这是什么意思，夫人？婴儿的头骨？我斗过男人、魔鬼和龙。但是屠杀婴儿？夫人，你怎么敢这么说！”

突然，仍在唱歌的埃德温从他们身旁挤过去，跑到闸门边，紧紧贴在栅栏上。

“回来，孩子，”高文爵士抓住他的肩膀，说道。“这儿有危险。还有，不要唱歌了！”

埃德温双手紧抓着栅栏，和老骑士拉扯了一会儿。随后，两人分开，都从闸门前往后退。比特丽丝靠在埃克索胸前，发出一声低呼，但这时埃克索的视线被埃德温和高文爵士挡住了。接着，那头野兽出现在月光之下，埃克索能看得更清楚了。

“上帝保佑我们，”比特丽丝说。“这东西就是从大平原上直接跑过来的，连空气都变冷了。”

“不要担心，公主。它打不破铁栅栏。”

高文爵士的剑立即拔了出来，他低声笑了。“没我担心的那么糟糕，”他说，忍不住又笑了几声。

“够糟糕了吧，先生，”埃克索说。“看起来它能够一个一个把我们给吞了。”

他们所看到的，很像一只剥了皮的大动物：肌肉和关节上，紧紧裹着一层不透明的膜，像翻过来的羊肚。野兽现在裹在月光下，大小与外形看起来都像一头公牛，但它的脑袋很特殊，像狼，颜色要深一些——尽管给人的感觉是被火烧过之后的焦黑色，而不是自然的黑色毛发或皮肉。它的嘴巴很大，眼睛像蛇。

高文爵士仍旧一个人笑着。“从那个阴暗的隧道里走出来，我连最奇怪的东西都想象到了，早做好了准备。先生，有一次啊，我在杜玛姆沼泽上见到的狼，脑袋像可怕的老巫婆一样！在库尔维奇山，见过双头食人兽，战斗中发出吼叫时，能朝你喷血！这东西嘛，也不过是条生气的狗而已。”

“但它却拦住了我们获得自由的路，高文爵士。”

“没错，它的确挡了路。所以，我们可以瞪着它，过一个小时士兵们就会从隧道里追上来。或者打开闸门，与它战斗。”

“高文爵士，我倒觉得这是个比疯狗更加凶狠的敌人。我请你不要大意。”

“我是个老头子，先生，已经很多年没有愤怒地拔剑了。但我仍旧是个受过良好训练的骑士，只要这头野兽不是来自另一个世界，我就会占上风。”

“你看，埃克索，”比特丽丝说，“它的眼睛一直跟着埃德温阁下。”

奇怪的是，埃德温现在很平静，他一直在试探性地走着，先朝左边，然后是右边，总是要回头看看那头野兽，而野兽的目光从未离开过他。

“狗急着要这个男孩哪，”高文爵士若有所思地说。“也许这个妖怪身体里有龙的卵。”

“不管是什么妖怪，”埃克索说，“它在等着我们的下一步行动，耐心不同寻常啊。”

“那么，我来提个办法，朋友们，”高文爵士说。“我讨厌利用这个男孩，像绑个小山羊引诱狼一样。但他似乎是个勇敢的少年，在这儿走来走去，没有武器，同样有危险。让他拿着蜡烛，到房间后面去站着。你呢，埃克索阁下，可以想办法再打开闸门，可能还需要你好心的妻子帮忙，门一开，野兽就能过来。我猜它会直接朝男孩冲过去。我知道它冲过去的路线，就站在这儿，在它经过的时候劈死它。你同意这个计划吗，先生？”

“这个计划很疯狂。但我也担心士兵们很快就会发现隧道。我们试一下吧，先生，我和妻子会尽力的，哪怕我们俩要一起吊到绳子上，也要把门打开。公主啊，你跟埃德温阁下解释一下我们的计划，看他愿不愿意。”

可是，埃德温似乎不用听任何人讲，就已经明白了高文爵士的策略。男孩从骑士手里接过蜡烛，斟酌好距离，在骨头堆上走了十步，回到了黑暗之中。他转过身来，面前的蜡烛几乎毫不颤动，一双亮闪闪的眼睛紧紧盯着栅栏后的野兽。

“那就快点，公主，”埃克索说。“爬到我背上，抓住绳头。晃来晃去的那个，看见了吧。”

一开始，他们俩差点一起滚倒在地。随后两人扶着柱子站稳了，又摸索了一会儿，他听见她说，“我抓住啦，埃克索。让我下来，绳子也会跟着下来。把我抓住啊，要不然我就一下子跌下来了。”

“高文爵士，”埃克索低声喊道。“你准备好了吗，先生？”

“准备好了。”

“要是野兽从你身边跑过去，那这个勇敢的男孩就死定啦。”

“这我知道，先生。不会让它跑过去的。”

“慢慢放我下来，埃克索。如果我抓着绳子吊在半空中，你就把我拉下来。”

埃克索放开比特丽丝，有一下子她悬挂在空中，她身体的重量不够，拉不起闸门。随后埃克索抓住了她双手附近的另一段绳子，两人一起向下拉。一开始没什么动静，接着有什么东西动了，闸门颤抖着升了起来。埃克索继续拉，他看不见门，于是喊道：“够高了吗，先生？”

停顿了一会儿，高文爵士的声音传回来。“这条狗正等着我们呢，中间没有障碍啦。”

埃克索扭过身体，头从柱子旁边探出去，刚好看到那野兽向前跳了出来。老骑士的脸在月光下，看起来他似乎惊呆了。他挥动宝剑，但太晚了，那野兽从他身边经过，径直朝埃德温冲去。

男孩瞪大了眼睛，但手里的蜡烛没有掉下来。他朝旁边跨了一步，让野兽过去，几乎像是礼貌谦让。让埃克索惊讶的是，那野兽真的就过去了，继续朝他们刚走出来的黑暗隧道中跑去。

“我拉着门，”埃克索喊道。“到门里去，逃命吧！”

但是，无论是他身旁的比特丽丝，还是已经放下剑的高文爵士，似乎都没听到。那可怕的野兽刚从埃德温身边冲过去，肯定随时都会回来，可他好像毫不关心。男孩拿着蜡烛，来到老骑士站的地方，两人一起瞪大眼睛看着地上。

“把门放下来吧，埃克索阁下，”高文爵士没有抬头。“我们等一下再拉起来。”

埃克索发现，老骑士和男孩正认真观察着地上正在动的什么东西。他放下闸门，这时比特丽丝说：

“是个可怕的东西，埃克索，我就没必要去看了。你想看就去吧，然后告诉我。”

“野兽不是跑进隧道了吗，公主？”

“一部分吧，我听见它的脚步停了下来。好啦，埃克索，去吧，看看骑士脚下的另外那一部分。”

埃克索走了过去，高文爵士和埃德温都吓了一跳，好像恍惚中突然被人摇醒一样。然后两人让到一旁，埃克索看见了月光下野兽的脑袋。

“嘴巴就是动个不停，”高文爵士不安地说。“我想拿出剑来再劈它几下，又担心那是亵渎，会给我们带来更多厄运。希望它停下来不要动就好了。”

的确，很难相信这砍下的脑袋不是个活东西。野兽的头侧面着地，能看到一只眼睛，仍旧亮闪闪的，像海里的动物那样。上下颌有节奏地动着，似乎有罕见的力气，舌头因此在嘴巴里一起一落，好像是活的。

“我们都要感谢你，高文爵士，”埃克索说。

“不过是一条狗罢了，先生，就是更糟糕的东西，我也乐意奉陪。不过，这个撒克逊男孩勇气罕见呐，我很高兴帮了他一点儿忙。但我们现在要快点走了，而且还要小心，谁知道上面在发生什么事呢，说不定房间那边还有头野兽。”

这时他们在一根柱子后面发现了一个摇柄，把绳子系上去，很快就轻松地拉起了闸门。大家让野兽的脑袋留在原来的地方，从闸门下穿过，高文爵士又一次举着剑走在前面，埃德温走在最后。

陵墓的第二个房间，显然是野兽的巢穴：古老的骨头之中，有新近的羊和鹿的骨架，还有一些骨架是黑色的，气味难闻，他们无法辨认。随后他们又必须弯着腰、屏着气，走过一条曲折的通道。他们没有遇到野兽，最后终于听到了鸟鸣声。远处出现一块光亮，不久大家来到一片树林中，四下里晨曦初亮。

埃克索有点恍惚，两棵大树之间有一堆树根，他拉着比特丽丝的手，扶她坐到树根上。一开始比特丽丝气喘吁吁，没法开口，过了一会儿，她抬起头来，说道：

“我这旁边还有地方，丈夫。如果我们现在安全了，那就坐下来，一起看看最后的星星吧。谢天谢地，我们俩都没事，那邪恶的隧道总算走出来了。”接着她说：“埃德温阁下呢，埃克索？我没看到他。”

在清晨的微光中，埃克索四下张望，看到高文爵士就在附近，在晨光的映衬下显出剪影，脑袋低着，一只手扶着树干，正在调匀呼吸。可男孩却不见踪影。

“刚才还在我们后面，”埃克索说。“我们走出隧道的时候，我听见他喊了一声。”

“我看着他加快速度走了，先生，”高文爵士说道。他没有转身，仍旧气喘吁吁的。“他不像我们这些老人，不用靠在橡树上喘个不停。我猜他是急着回到修道院去救维斯坦。”

“你没想过拦住他吗，先生？他这急匆匆地去，肯定有很大危险，维斯坦阁下这时候已经被杀或者被抓啦。”

“你想要我干什么呢，先生？我能做的都做了。躲在那个连空气都没有的地方。那头野兽之前吞噬了很多勇敢的人，我把它杀了。可

是，到头来，那个男孩却跑回到了修道院！难道要我穿着这沉重的盔甲，带着剑，跟在后面追？我都累垮了，先生。累垮啦。现在我的职责是什么？我要歇一下，好好想想。如果亚瑟在，会让我干什么呢？”

“高文爵士，”比特丽丝问，“我们该不该认为，是你最先去告诉院长，说维斯坦阁下的真实身份是东方来的撒克逊武士？”

“为什么又要提这件事呢，夫人？我不是带着你们到安全的地方了吗？踩过那么多头骨，才步入这美好的清晨？那么多。不用低头看，每踩一脚，都能听到咔嚓声。死了多少，先生？一百？一千？你数过吗，埃克索阁下？莫非你不在场，先生？”他仍旧是树边的一个剪影，他的话有时候听不清楚，鸟儿们已经开始了清晨的合唱。

“无论今晚发生了什么，”埃克索说，“我们都该好好感谢你，高文爵士。显然，你的勇气和本领都不减当年。不过，我也有个问题要问你。”

“放过我吧，先生，够了。这山坡上长满了树，我怎么能去追一个灵巧的年轻人呢？我已经垮掉啦，先生，不仅仅是喘不上气。”

“高文爵士，很久以前我们曾是战友，是不是？”

“放过我吧，先生。我今晚尽了我的职责。难道还不够吗？现在，我必须去找我可怜的霍拉斯了，我把他拴在一根树枝上，不让他乱跑，要是狼或熊来攻击他怎么办？”

“这迷雾遮住了我的过去，”埃克索说。“但最近我发现，我慢慢想起了某个任务，一项重要的任务，交给我去完成的。是不是一项法律呢？让所有人更接近上帝的伟大法律？高文爵士，看到你，听你谈起亚瑟，我想起了一些遗忘已久的事情。”

“我可怜的霍拉斯啊，先生，那么厌恶夜晚的树林。猫头鹰或狐狸一叫，他都会吓得够呛，尽管面对箭雨他毫不畏缩。我要去找他了，也提醒一下你们两位好人，不要在这儿休息太久。忘掉那两个撒克逊年轻人吧。现在多想想在村里等着你们的宝贝儿子。依我看，你们现在毯子和食物都没了，最好快点上路。和货船的船夫讲句好话，你们就能搭船顺水而下。不要在这儿停留，谁知道士兵们什么时候到这儿来？朋友们，上帝保佑你们。”

一阵沙沙的声响，几声咚咚的脚步声，高文爵士的身形消失在黑暗的树林中。过了一会儿，比特丽丝说道：

“我们没跟他道别，埃克索，我感觉很糟糕。可是，他跟我们的告别很奇怪啊，也很突然。”

“我也这么想，公主。但他给我们的建议也许很明智。我们该快点去找儿子，不去管最近碰到的那些伙伴。我有点担心可怜的埃德温阁下，但既然他急着回修道院去，我们能帮上什么忙呢？”

“我们再休息一会儿吧，埃克索。很快我们就上路，就我们俩，去找艘货船加快速度也很不错。儿子肯定在担心，我们怎么还没到。”

第八章

那名年轻的僧侣是个身形瘦削、面色憔悴的皮克特人，能流利地说埃德温的语言。有个年纪差不多的人陪着，他显然很高兴。两人在清晨的雾霭中走着，一开始，他兴致勃勃地说个不停。但是，进入树林之后，年轻僧侣就默不作声，埃德温甚至想，自己是不是什么地方得罪了这位领路人。更有可能的是，树林中藏匿着东西，僧侣担心会引起它们的注意；在悦耳的鸟鸣声中，不时传来奇怪的吱吱声和沙沙声。埃德温又一次问道：“我哥哥的伤口不致命吧？”这次他不是为了放心，而是为了打破沉默。但对方的回答简短，似乎不耐烦。

“乔纳斯神父说没事。他最明智。”

这么说，维斯坦受伤不会很重。他肯定是不久前走这同一条路下山的，那时候天还没亮。他要靠在领路人的胳膊上吗？或者他还能够骑马，可能由一名僧侣牵着缰绳？

“把男孩领到山下箍桶匠的屋里。不要让人看见你离开修道院。”根据年轻僧侣的说法，乔纳斯神父是这么吩咐的。看来埃德温很快就能和武士团聚，但他能期待什么样的欢迎呢？第一次遇到挑战，他就让维斯坦失望了。埃德温没能在战斗一开始时就赶到他身旁，而是跑进了那条长长的隧道。但他母亲不在那下面，最后隧道的出口终于出现，在遥远的前方，黑暗中如同月亮，这时候梦的阴云才从他心头散去，他回过神来，想起发生的事，感到非常震惊。

至少，他走入清晨的寒冷空气之后，是尽了力的。他几乎是一路跑回到了山上的修道院，遇到最陡的坡才会慢下来。有时候，他要穿过密林，感觉走错了路，但随后树木变稀，修道院又出现在灰色的天空之下。于是他接着往上爬，到大门的时候，双腿酸痛、气喘吁吁。

大门旁的那扇小门没锁，他打起精神，偷偷摸摸溜了进去。山路走了一半的时候，他就意识到了烟味儿，这时候烟熏得他胸口疼，忍不住要大声咳嗽。他知道，这时候去移干草车，肯定太迟了，顿时感到心里空荡荡的，没有着落。但他还是把这种感觉放到了一边，继续朝里面走。

一开始，他没有碰到僧侣，也没遇上士兵。他沿着高墙走，脑袋低着，以免被远处某扇窗户里的人看到，这时他看到下面大门内的小

院子里，挤满了士兵们的马。马鞍没下，四周都是高墙，所以马儿都在焦虑地转圈，地方很小，有时候会互相撞上。他继续朝僧侣的住处走去，换作别的孩子，肯定就直接跑到中央的院子里去了，他却心思周密，想了一下修道院的布局之后，他走了一条绕弯子的路，利用了他记忆中的那些隐秘路径。就是快到目的地的时候，他还是要躲在一根石柱后面，先小心翼翼地看看周围。

中央的院子简直认不出来了。三个人穿着僧袍，懒洋洋地扫着地，在他看的时候，又来了一个人，拿着桶往鹅卵石上泼水，躲在一旁的几只乌鸦受了惊吓，飞走了。地面上零零散散撒了干草和沙，他注意到有几个人形的东西，用麻布盖着，他猜可能是尸体。他知道维斯坦曾在那儿负隅抗敌的古老石塔，这时依然巍巍耸立，但连塔也发生了变化：塔身很多地方成了焦黑色，尤其是入门的拱廊和每一扇窄窗的周围。在埃德温看来，整个石塔似乎一下子缩小了。他从柱子后面伸长脖子，想确定一下，麻布覆盖的人形周围那一摊摊潮湿的地方，究竟是血还是水，这时一双瘦骨嶙峋的手从背后抓住了他的肩膀。

他扭过身子，发现尼尼安神父——那个不说话的僧侣——正盯着自己的眼睛。埃德温没有喊叫，而是指着尸体，低声说道：“维斯坦阁下，我的撒克逊兄弟。他也躺在那儿？”

沉默的僧侣似乎能听懂他的话，用力摇了摇头。他抬起一根手指，放在嘴唇上，但就在做这个熟悉的动作时，他仍在瞪着埃德温的脸，似乎是要警告对方。然后，尼尼安偷眼望了望四周，把埃德温拉走了。

“我们能确定吗，武士，”头一天他曾问维斯坦，“那些当兵的真的会来？谁会告诉他们，我们在这儿呢？这些僧侣显然都相信，我们不过是牧羊人。”

“谁知道呢，孩子。也许没人会来打扰我们吧。但是，我觉得有个人可能会说出我们的行踪，此时此刻，说不定好心的布雷纳斯正在发命令呢。用心检查，年轻的战友。不列颠人喜欢往干草垛里插木条，把草分成一份份的。从上到下，我们都需要不掺杂物的干草。”

当时，他和维斯坦在古老石塔后面的谷仓里。武士这下子不去劈柴了，却又急不可耐地要把马棚后面储藏的干草搬过来，堆到那辆摇摇晃晃的推车上。他们动手干这件事的时候，他又不时让埃德温爬上

草垛，用棒子往里捅。武士站在地上认真看着，有时候会让他到某个地方重新捅一遍，或者命令他把腿伸进某个具体的位置，越深越好。

“这些修道的人有些马虎大意，”维斯坦解释道。“也许会把铁锹或草叉丢在干草堆里。如果是这样的话，把东西拿出来可是帮他们的忙，这儿工具不多。”

当时武士没有透露准备干草的目的，但埃德温立即知道，这与眼前的冲突有关，所以等干草摞好了，他问了个关于士兵的问题。

“谁会背叛我们呢，武士？僧侣们没怀疑我们。他们忙着神圣的争辩，几乎都不看我们。”

“也许吧，孩子。那儿也捅一捅。就那儿。”

“武士，有没有可能那对年老的夫妇会背叛我们？他们显然很傻、很老实。”

“尽管他们是不列颠人，我却不担心他们会背叛。但是，孩子，你要以为他们傻，那就错了。至少，埃克索阁下是个有城府的人。”

“武士，我们为什么跟他们一起走呢？他们总是拖慢我们。”

“他们拖慢我们，没错，很快我们就会分手。但今天早晨我们出发的时候，我很希望有埃克索阁下的陪伴。也许我还希望他能多陪一会儿。我说过，他是个有城府的人。我和他也许还有更多事情可以讨论。但是，我们还是专心做好眼前的事情吧。我们要把车子装得稳稳当当的。我们需要不掺杂物的干草。那儿不能有木头或铁。孩子，你看我要指望你呢。”

可埃德温却让他失望了。他怎么会睡了那么久呢？躺下来本身就是个错误。他就该直挺挺地坐在角落里，偶尔闭闭眼睛，像维斯坦那样，一听到声音立即就能站起身来。可他呢，像个婴儿一样，喝了老太太递来的一杯牛奶，就在房间那一头沉睡不醒。

他真正的母亲在梦里喊他了吗？也许是这个原因，他才睡了那么久，被跛脚的僧侣叫醒之后，他没有冲到武士身旁，而是跟在其他人后面，进了那条奇怪的长隧道，好像他仍旧在梦境深处一样。

那毫无疑问是他母亲的声音，同一个声音在谷仓里也曾向他呼喊。“埃德温，为了我，找到力量吧。找到力量，来救我。来救我。来救我。”与头天早晨相比，这时的声音里有一种急迫感。还有别

的：站在打开的暗门前、盯着通向黑暗的台阶时，他曾感到有东西在拉他，力气很大，让他头晕目眩，几乎要呕吐。

年轻的僧侣用手杖挡住李树的枝桠，等待埃德温走到前面去。这时候他终于说话了，不过声音很低。

“抄小路。我们很快就能看到箍桶匠小屋的屋顶。”

他们走出树林，眼前大地开阔，斜斜没入退却的迷雾之中，但埃德温仍然能够听见，附近蕨丛中有东西在动，并发出啾啾声。他想起了夏末那个霞光灿烂的傍晚，他和那位女孩谈过话。

那天，一开始他没看见池塘，因为池塘很小，隐藏在灯芯草中。一片颜色鲜艳的昆虫在他面前飞了起来，一般情况下，他会关注昆虫，但这次水边传来的声音吸引了他的注意力。动物落入了陷阱？声音又来了，夹在鸟鸣声和风声之中。这声音有个规律：一阵剧烈的摩擦声，好像在挣扎，然后是寂静。不久，又传来摩擦声。他小心翼翼地走到近前，听见了吃力的呼吸声。然后，他眼前就出现了那个女孩。

她仰面躺在野草中，身体扭到了一边。她比他要大几岁，十五或十六，她的眼睛盯着他，毫无惧色。他打量了一会儿才意识到，她姿势奇怪，是因为她双手被绑住了，压在身体下面。四周有一片地方，野草是平的，那是她挣扎时靠腿的力量滑动身体碾压出来的。她穿着布罩衣，在腰间系住，衣服一侧已经变了颜色——或许是浸泡了水，她的腿肤色特别黑，两条腿上都有蓟草划出来的新鲜伤痕。

他想，这可能是个鬼魂或精灵，但她开口说话时，却没有回声。

“你想要干什么？你为什么要来？”

埃德温定定神，说道：“你要是愿意，我可以帮你。”

“这些绳结不难解。他们就是绑得比平时紧一点。”

这时候他才注意到，她脸上、脖子上全是汗。连说话的时候，她双手仍在背后不停地挣扎着。

“你受伤了吗？”他问。

“没有。但一只甲壳虫刚落在我膝盖上，趴在那儿咬了我一口。现在肿起来了。我能看出来，你自己还是个孩子，帮不了我。没关系，我自己能行。”

她绷紧了脸，扭动着，将身体从地面抬起了一点点，但她的眼睛一直盯着他。他看着，呆住了，以为她那双手随时会从身后拿出来。但是，她泄了气，身体松软下来，躺在草上，嘴里大口喘着气，眼睛愤怒地盯着他。

“我可以帮忙，”埃德温说。“我擅长解绳结。”

“你还是个孩子。”

“不是。我都快十二了。”

“他们很快就会回来。如果他们发现你解开了绳子，会打你的。”

“他们是大人吗？”

“他们自己以为是，但其实不过是男孩子。不过，比你大点儿，而且有三个。要是打你一顿，他们肯定会很高兴。他们会把你的脑袋搥到那边的泥水里，直到你晕过去。我看他们以前干过。”

“他们是村子里的吗？”

“村子？”她鄙夷地看着他。“你的村子？我们每天都经过不同的村子。我们才不会管你的村子呢！他们可能很快就会回来，那你就麻烦了。”

“我不害怕。如果你愿意，我可以帮你脱身。”

“我总是自己脱身。”她又扭动起来。

“他们为什么要绑住你？”

“为什么？我想是为了看吧。看我想办法脱身。现在他们走了，偷吃的去了。”然后她说：“我还以为你们这些村民整天都要干活呢。你母亲为什么让你到处乱逛？”

“我得到了允许，因为今天我一个人已经完成了三个角。”然后他又说道：“我真正的母亲已经不在这个村子里了。”

“她去哪儿啦？”

“我不知道。她是被人抓走的。我现在和阿姨住。”

“我像你这么大，还是孩子的时候，”她说，“也住在一个村子里。现在我到处旅行。”

“和谁一起旅行呢？”

“噢……和他们。我们经常经过这条路。我记得他们以前在这个地方绑过我，把我丢在这儿，就是同一个地方，去年春天的时候。”

“我来把你放开，”他突然说。“如果他们回来，我也不怕他们。”

但是，有什么东西拦住了他。他本来以为她的眼睛会避开，身体要调整一下，因为他要走过来了。但她却一直瞪大眼睛看着他，与此同时，她的双手仍在背后挣扎着。她发出一声长长的叹息声，这时他才意识到，她刚才一直屏着呼吸，时间挺长。

“我一般是能解开的，”她说。“如果你不在，我现在都已经解开了。”

“他们绑你，是不想让你逃走吗？”

“逃走？我能逃到哪里？我和他们旅行呢。”然后她说，“你到我这儿来干吗？为什么不去帮助你母亲？”

“我母亲？”他是真的吃了一惊。“我母亲为什么要我去帮她？”

“你说她是被抓走的，不是吗？”

“是啊，但那是很久以前的事。她现在很开心。”

“她怎么能开心呢？你不是说她在旅行吗？难道你不觉得她想有人来帮助她吗？”

“她就是在旅行。她不会要我去……”

“她不会要你去，因为以前你还是个孩子。可你现在都快是个男人了。”她不说话了，弓起背，又一次攒足了力气挣扎。然后她又松软下来。“有时候，”她说，“他们回来，我还没有解开，他们也不来解。他们就看，一句话也不说，一直到我自己解开绳子，双手挣脱出来。他们就一直坐在那儿看哪、看哪，裤裆里那魔鬼角也一直变大。他们要是说话，我会觉得好一点儿。但他们就一直瞪着眼睛看啊、看啊，一句话也不说。”然后她又说：“看到你的时候，我以为你也会这么做。我以为你会坐下来，睁大眼睛看着，不说话。”

“要我帮你解吗？我不怕他们，而且我擅长解绳子。”

“你还是个孩子。”眼泪突然流出来了。事情发生得太快，而且她脸上没有情绪改变的迹象，所以埃德温一开始以为那只是汗水。随即他意识到，那是眼泪，她半仰着脸，所以眼泪流得很奇怪，经过鼻梁，然后从另一边的脸颊上流下去。在这过程中，她眼睛一直盯着他。她的眼泪让他疑惑，他当时就愣了。

“那来吧，”她说。她第一次侧过身体，目光也侧过去，看着水里的芦苇。

埃德温匆忙上来，像发现了机会的小偷一样，蹲在草地上开始解绳结。绳子又细又粗糙，无情地勒进了她的手腕；两只手掌叠在一起，相比之下，显得又小又脆弱。一开始，绳结解不开，他强迫自己镇定下来，仔细观察绳子缠绕的路径。然后他又试了一次，一个绳结解开了。这下他更加自信，继续解其他的绳结，不时看一眼那柔软的手掌，像一对温驯的小动物一样等待着。

他把绳子拉开之后，她转过身来，坐在他面前，两人之间的距离突然近得有些尴尬。他发现，她不像大多数人那样发出干粪便的气味：她的味道，像用湿柴生出来的火。

“如果他们回来，”她轻声说，“会把你拖过芦苇，然后把你淹个半死。你最好走。回到你的村子。”她试探着伸出一只手来——似乎还不太确定现在这只手能不能动——在他胸口推了一把。“走吧。快。”

“我不怕他们。”

“你是不怕。但他们还是会那么干。你帮了我，但你现在必须走了。走吧。快。”

太阳落山之前，他回来了，她躺过的地方，草还是平的，但看不到她留下的其他痕迹。不过，那地方感觉安静得出奇，他在草丛里坐了一会儿，看芦苇在风里摇摆。

女孩的事，他从没告诉过别人，包括他的阿姨——她当时就会下结论说女孩是个魔鬼——也没告诉其他男孩子。但在随后的几个星期里，他脑海里常常突然出现她鲜活的样子；有时候是在晚上，在他的梦里；更多是在白天，在他挖地或帮忙修房顶的时候，然后他两腿之间的魔鬼角就会变大。最后魔鬼角会退回去，留给他一种羞耻感，然后他又会想起女孩的话：“你到我这儿来干吗？为什么不去帮助你母亲？”

可他怎么去找母亲呢？女孩自己说过，他“还是个孩子”。但话又说回来，她也说他很快就会成为男人。他一想起这些话，就会重新体验一遍羞耻感，但前面的路该怎么走，他一直看不清。

然而，维斯坦推开谷仓门的那一刻，这一切都变了。那一刻，刺眼的光射进来，维斯坦宣布，他——埃德温——被选中参与这一使命。现在，他们两个人，埃德温和武士，要穿越这个国家，不久他们必然会与她相遇。到那时候，与她一起旅行的那些人就要颤抖。

可是，引领他离开的，真的是她的声音吗？难道不是对士兵们的畏惧？一条小溪沿山坡而下，溪边有一条几乎没人走过的路，他跟在年轻僧侣后面，脑海里想起了这些问题。被人喊起来，从窗户里看到士兵们围着古老的石塔乱跑，他确定当时没有惊慌失措吗？现在，仔细考虑之后，他确信当时心里并未感到恐惧。之前，白天的时候，武士领着他进入石塔，两人谈了话，那时候埃德温也只觉得很想和维斯坦并肩战斗，对付即将到来的敌人。

从他们来到修道院之后，维斯坦就念念不忘石塔。埃德温还记得，他们在柴火棚里劈柴的时候，维斯坦不时抬头望着石塔。他们推着车到处送柴火时，有两次都特别绕道，就为了从塔边经过。所以后来的那一幕也就不奇怪了：僧侣们一进去开会，中央的院子里没人了，武士立即把斧头靠在柴堆上，说：“等一会儿吧，小战友，这位又高又老的朋友一直盯着我们，我们去看个仔细。我觉得，我们到哪儿，它都一直看着，我们到现在还没去拜访它，它生气了。”

他们穿过低矮的拱廊，进入又冷又暗的石塔内部。武士对他说：“小心啊。你以为进了塔，可你看看脚下。”

埃德温低下头，看到眼前似乎有条壕沟，围着圆形的石墙形成一个圆圈。沟太宽了，跳不过去，两块木板搭成一个简单的桥，只有从桥上走，才能到达塔中央的夯土地面。他迈步走上木板，眼睛望着黑漆漆的桥下，武士在他身后说：

“注意到了吧，年轻的战友，那下面没有水。如果你径直奔下去，我敢说，那也不过你腰那么深。奇怪，你不觉得吗？为什么在里面挖条壕沟？这样的小塔，为什么要壕沟？能有什么用呢？”维斯坦从木板上走过来，用脚后跟试了试塔中央的地面，然后继续说道：

“古人建这个塔，也许是用来屠杀动物的。也许这儿就是以前的屠宰场。动物杀死之后，没有用的东西，他们就直接推进旁边的沟里。你觉得呢，孩子？”

“有可能，武士，”埃德温说。“但是，要把牲口领过那么窄的木板，可不是容易的事情。”

“也许以前这儿有更好的桥，”维斯坦说。“很结实，一头牛都能站上去。领过桥之后，如果牲口猜到了自己的命运，或者第一击没能让牲口跪下来，那么这样的布置就能保证牲口不会轻易逃掉。想象一下，动物扭过头，想冲出去，却发现四面都是沟。一座小桥急切之间是很难找到的。以前这儿是个屠宰场，看来这个想法不算傻。跟我说说，孩子，你抬头看看，能发现什么？”

埃德温望着高高的头顶上那一圈天空，说道：“顶上是开口的，武士。像烟囱一样。”

“这话很有意思。你再说一遍。”

“像个烟囱，武士。”

“你认为是怎么回事呢？”

“如果古代的人用这个地方来屠宰，武士，那么他们应该在我们现在站的地方生火。他们也许能剥骨头、烤肉，烟可以直接飘出去。”

“有可能，孩子，就像你说的那样。以前这儿曾发生过什么事，恐怕这些基督教僧侣一点儿也不知道吧？我猜，这些先生们到塔里来，是因为这里偏僻、安静。你看这环形的墙有多厚。我们进来的时候，乌鸦在乱叫，但一点儿声音也透不出去。还有，光从上面那样射进来。肯定会让僧侣们想起上帝的荣光。你说呢，孩子？”

“没错，那些先生们可以进来祈祷，武士。不过，要跪下来，这地上可太湿了。”

“也许他们是站着祈祷的，他们不可能猜到，这儿曾经是屠杀和焚烧的场所。孩子，上面你还看到了什么？”

“没了，先生。”

“没了？”

“只有台阶，先生。”

“对啦，台阶。你跟我说说台阶。”

“一圈一圈的，顺着环形的墙走。一直延伸到顶上的天空。”

“观察得很好。现在，你听仔细了。”维斯坦走近了点儿，压低了声音。“这个地方，不仅是这座古塔，而是整个地方，今天大家称作修道院的整个地方，以前是我们的撒克逊祖先在战争时期修建的要塞，我敢打赌。所以有很多聪明的陷阱，来迎接入侵的不列颠人。”武士走到一旁，一边看着壕沟，一边绕着圈慢慢走。最后他又抬头向上望，说道：“把这儿想象成要塞，孩子。过了很多天，要塞被攻破了，敌人拥进来。每个院子里，每堵墙壁上，都在搏斗。现在，你想象这个场景。我们的两个撒克逊兄弟，在外面的院子里，抵挡着一大群不列颠人。他们勇敢地战斗，但敌人太多，我们的英雄们必须撤退。我们假设他们退到这儿，就退到这座古塔里。他们跳过小桥，转过身来，就在这儿面对敌人。不列颠人信心更足了。他们把我们的兄弟逼入了死角。他们拿着剑和斧头逼近，冲过桥，来杀我们的英雄。我们勇敢的兄弟砍倒前面几个，但很快就要继续撤退。孩子，你看那边。他们沿着墙上盘旋的台阶撤退。更多的不列颠人跨过壕沟，最后我们站的地方都挤满了人。但是，不列颠人数量多，却不能发挥优势。因为我们勇敢的兄弟两人并肩，站在台阶上作战，入侵者一次只能上去两个人。我们的英雄本领高强，他们必须步步撤退，越撤越高，但入侵者却不能以数量压倒他们。不列颠人一倒下，后面的就跟上来，然后又倒下。但是，我们的兄弟肯定会累。他们越撤越高，入侵者在台阶上步步紧逼。这可怎么办呢？怎么办，埃德温？我们的族人最后胆怯了吗？他们转过身，跑上最后几圈台阶，偶尔才会回身打几斗几下。这肯定完了。不列颠人胜利在握。站在下面看的那些人笑了，像饥饿的人看见了大餐。但是，你仔细看着，孩子。看到什么了？我们的撒克逊兄弟走近头顶那片光晕一样的天空，你看到什么啦？”维斯坦抓住埃德温的肩膀，调整他的位置，指着天上的出口。

“说啊，孩子。你看到什么了？”

“我们的兄弟设了一个陷阱，先生。他们往上撤退，就是为了把不列颠人引过来，像把蚂蚁引到蜜罐里一样。”

“说得好，孩子！那么，陷阱是怎么设的呢？”

埃德温想了想，说道：“在台阶抵达最高点的地方，武士，我看到了，从这儿看好像是个壁龛。或者是个门道？”

“很好。那你认为那里藏着什么东西呢？”

“会不会藏着十几名我们最优秀的武士？然后他们和我们两位兄弟一起，一路杀下来，一直杀到下面的不列颠人当中。”

“再想想，孩子。”

“那，一头凶猛的熊，武士。或者一头狮子。”

“孩子，你上次见到狮子是什么时候？”

“是火，武士。壁龛后面是火。”

“说得好，孩子。那么久远的事情，我们难以确定。但我敢打赌，上面藏的就是火。那个小壁龛，站在下面几乎看不到，里面藏着一根火把，也许有两三根，点亮了，在那堵墙后面。剩下的，你来跟我说吧，孩子。”

“我们的兄弟们把火把扔下来。”

“什么，扔到敌人头上？”

“不是，武士。扔到壕沟里。”

“壕沟？里面全是水？”

“不是，武士。壕沟里全是木柴。像我们卖力劈的那种木柴。”

“就是这样，孩子。月亮上来之前，我们还要多劈点柴。我们还要弄很多干草呢。像个烟囱，孩子，你说的。你说得对。我们现在就站在烟囱里。我们的祖先造塔，就是为了这个目的。否则这儿要塔干什么呢？站在外面的墙上，和站在塔顶，视野是一样的。但是你想想，孩子，一根火把扔进这道所谓的壕沟里。然后又扔进一根。之前我们在周围看的时候，我看到塔背上离地面很近的地方有好几个口子。也就是说，像今天晚上这样的强东风，会把火苗扇得更高。不列颠人怎么能逃出这地狱的火海呢？四周是坚固的墙，只有一个窄窄的桥通向自由，而整道壕沟都大火熊熊。不过，孩子，我们离开这个地方吧。我们猜出了这么多秘密，这座古塔可能会不高兴。”

维斯坦转身准备过桥，但埃德温还在盯着塔顶看。

“但是，武士，”他说。“我们那两个勇敢的兄弟。他们也要和敌人一起，在火里烧死吗？”

“就算烧死了，难道不是很辉煌、很划算的事情吗？不过，也许不会到那一步。在下面的热浪升上来时，我们的两个兄弟也许能冲到洞开的塔顶边上，然后从上面跳下去。他们能这么做吗，孩子？虽然他们没有翅膀？”

“他们没有翅膀，”埃德温说，“但他们的战友可能推了一辆车在塔后面。车上装满了厚厚的干草。”

“有可能，孩子。谁知道古时候这儿发生了什么事呢？现在，我们不要再做梦啦，还去劈点柴火吧。夏天到来之前，这些好心的僧侣还要熬过很多个寒冷的夜晚呢。”

在战斗中，没有时间进行复杂的信息交换。飞快地看一眼，挥一下手臂，在吵闹声中喊一句话：真正的武士靠这些，就能够传递自己的想法。那天下午在塔里，维斯坦带着这样的气度说明自己的想法，而埃德温让他彻底失望。

可是，武士是不是期望太高？连老斯特法也只说过埃德温的巨大潜力，只说一旦他学会了武士之道，前途不可限量。维斯坦对他的训练还没结束呢，埃德温怎么能表现出那样的默契？现在武士似乎是受了伤，但这肯定不是埃德温一个人的错吧。

年轻的僧侣在溪边停下来，脱下鞋子。“我们在这儿过河，”他说。“桥还在小溪下游，而且那儿土地开阔，没什么遮挡。隔座山，从山顶上都可能看到我们。”然后他指着埃德温的鞋子，说道：“你的鞋好像做工很不错啊。你自己做的吗？”

“鲍德温阁下给我做的。他是村里技术最高的鞋匠，不过每到月圆的时候，他都要发狂。”

“脱下来。泡了水肯定就毁了。你看见垫脚石了吗？头再低一点，尽量往水面以下看。那儿，看到了没？那就是我们的路。眼睛一直看着路，就不会掉进水里。”

和之前一样，年轻僧侣的语气又有些不礼貌。有没有可能，他们出发之后，他利用路上的时间，心里慢慢想明白了，知道了埃德温在事情中的角色？刚开始的时候，年轻僧侣不仅态度更加热情，而且话很多，几乎停不下来。

他们在乔纳斯神父房间外面那条阴冷的走廊里见面，之前埃德温在外面等了一会儿，里面有几个人在争论，声音很低，但都很激动。埃德温不知道接下来他们会说什么，心里慢慢害怕起来，令他宽慰的是，他们没喊他进房间，却有一名年轻僧侣走了出来，脸上笑容灿烂。

“他们选了我当你的向导，”他喜气洋洋地用埃德温的语言说。“乔纳斯神父说，我们要马上出发，悄悄出去，不能让人看到。勇敢

点，我年轻的兄弟，很快你就到你哥哥身边啦。”

年轻僧侣走路的样子很奇怪，他整个人缩起来，像很冷一样，两只手都藏在袍子里，埃德温跟着他下山，心里想，他是不是天生就没有胳膊。等两人离开修道院，进入安全地带，年轻僧侣放慢脚步，与埃德温并肩，这时他从袍子里伸出一条又瘦又长的胳膊，用力搂住了埃德温的肩膀。

“你都已经逃走了，这样跑回来很傻。听到这事，乔纳斯神父很生气。但是，你看看你，现在又安全地离开啦，运气好的话，还没人知道你回来过呢。不过，这都是什么事啊！你哥哥总是这么喜欢吵架吗？还是某个士兵经过的时候，狠狠地羞辱过他？也许等你到他床边，我的小兄弟，你可以问问他，事情是怎么开始的，我们可都搞不清楚前因后果。如果是他冒犯了士兵，那他的话肯定是非常难听，因为来见院长要干什么，那帮人统统忘记了，大家都跟疯了一样，要惩罚你哥哥的胆大妄为。我自己是被他们的喊叫声吵醒的，虽然我的房间离院子很远。我紧张地跑到那儿，什么也做不了，只能和其他僧侣一起，无助地站在那儿，惊讶地看着事情发生。不久他们告诉我，你哥哥跑进了那座古塔，以躲避愤怒的士兵，士兵们跟在后面也冲了进去，要把他撕成碎片，后来你哥哥好像奋力和他们打了起来。还势均力敌呢，真让人觉得意外，士兵有三十多人，他不过是个放羊的撒克逊人。我们在外面，以为随时都会看到他的大卸八块，血淋淋地被人抬出来，可实际上呢，倒是士兵们一个接一个惊慌失措地从塔里跑出来，有的踉踉跄跄，抬着受伤的战友。我们简直不相信自己的眼睛！我们都祈祷争执快点结束，无论原来谁侮辱了谁，这样的暴力肯定都不好。可打斗却一直进行，后来啊，小兄弟，可怕的故事就发生啦。谁知道呢，说不定上帝看到自己的神圣建筑里发生这样恶劣的争执，生气了，伸出手指来降了天火？也可能是哪个士兵，拿着火把跑来跑去，摔了一跤，铸成了大错。多可怕啊！突然之间，塔就烧着了！谁能想到，一座潮湿的古塔竟然这么能烧？可塔真的燃起了熊熊大火，布雷纳斯的手下和你哥哥都困在里面。他们要是立即抛开双方的争执，尽可能快地跑出来，那倒还好，但我猜他们肯定是想扑灭大火，等到发现四下里全是火海，就已经来不及了。真是场极其可怕的故事，几个人跑出来，倒在地上扭动挣扎，最后也都死了。但是，小兄弟，奇迹中的奇迹是，你哥哥竟然逃出来了！尼尼安神父发现他在黑暗中乱走，有点迷糊，受了伤，但还活着，而这时候其他人还在看着大火熊熊的古塔，为里面的人祈祷。你哥哥活下来了，乔纳斯神父亲自给他治了伤，只有我们几个人知道这件事，乔纳斯神父让我们严格

保密，连院长也不能说。他担心如果消息传出去，布雷纳斯爵爷会派更多士兵过来复仇，实际上大多士兵死于事故，不是你哥哥杀的，但这一点他可不管。你一个字也不要说出去，对你有好处，至少要等到你们俩远远离开这个国家。乔纳斯神父很生气，你竟然冒着生命危险回到修道院，但他也很高兴，因为让你和哥哥团聚就更容易了。‘他们必须一起离开这个国家，’他说。乔纳斯神父真是最善良的人，就算被那些鸟啄成重伤，他仍然是我们当中最有智慧的。我敢说，你哥哥这条命可多亏了他和尼尼安神父。”

但是，他说这些话，是之前的事情。现在，年轻的僧侣疏远了，两只手又紧紧缩回到袍子里。埃德温跟在他身后过河，眼睛尽量看清楚激流之下的石头。这时他想到，他应该向武士坦白一切，跟他说母亲的事，说她在召唤。如果他诚恳、坦白地把一切从头解释清楚，维斯坦也许能够理解，再给他一次机会。

想到这儿，埃德温心情有些好转。他一手拎着一只鞋子，轻快地跳向下一块石头。

第三部

高文的第一次浮想

那些讨厌的寡妇。上帝把她们放在我面前，放在这山路上，有什么用意呢？他想考验我的谦卑吗？他看着我救了那对柔弱的夫妻，还有那个受伤的男孩，看着我杀死一条魔鬼一样的狗，在沾满露水的树叶上还没睡到一个小时，又要起身，牵挂着我还没有完成任务，我和霍拉斯又要出发，不是下山找个遮风挡雨的村子，而是又要在灰色的天空下，走一条陡峭的山路，难道这一切还不够吗？但是，他还是让那些寡妇挡着我的路，毫无疑问，我做得也不错，客客气气地跟她们说话。她们说了些侮辱人的蠢话，用土块砸霍拉斯的后腿——好像霍拉斯会惊慌失措，难看地撒腿乱跑一样——我呢，几乎都没有回头看她们，而是对着霍拉斯的耳朵说话，提醒他我们必须承受这样的考验，因为在那遥远的山巅，在风暴云聚集的地方，还有一场更严峻的考验等着我们。而且，那些衣衫破烂、饱经风霜的妇人，以前也都是清纯的少女，有些容貌美丽、举止优雅，或者至少清新活泼——在男人眼里，这一点并不逊于美丽与优雅。她不也是这样吗？我有时候会想起她来，在抑郁的秋天，眼前大地一望无垠，空阔、孤寂，骑马一天都走不到头。她不是什么美人，但我觉得够让人欢喜了。我只看过她一眼，年轻的时候，我那时候跟她说过话没有呢？可她有时候会回到我脑海里，我相信我睡觉的时候她也来过，因为我一觉醒来，梦境渐渐远去，我却常常还有一种神秘的满足感。

我有点不开心，但我还是走过去，双手轻轻抱住他的脖子，把头贴在他的鬃毛上歇了一会儿。他这个主人心狠着呢，这我知道。我知道他累了，可还是逼他继续走；他什么错误也没犯，可我还要骂他。还有这一大堆铁家伙，我穿着累，他驮着也累。我们还要一起走多久呢？我轻轻拍着他，说：“我们很快就能找到一个友好的村子，你就能吃顿早餐，比你刚才吃的好。”

我强忍住怒火，要求她们解释。有一个比其他人稍微礼貌一点儿，她走上前来。“原谅我们，骑士。我们在这天空下流浪很多天了，看到你大胆地骑着马往我们这边走，我们就忍不住要你听听我们的悲痛。”

“夫人，”我对她说，“也许我看起来年老体弱。但我仍然是伟大的亚瑟的骑士。如果你们告诉我有什么麻烦，我将很高兴尽力帮助。”

让我疑惑不解的是，那些女人——包括那个懂礼貌的——都讽刺地大笑起来，然后一个声音说：“你要是很早以前履行了职责，杀死了母龙，那我们就不必这么痛苦地流浪啦。”

这让我震惊，我喊道：“你们知道什么？魁瑞格，你们知道什么？”但我及时意识到，必须克制。于是我平静地说：“请解释一下，女士们，是什么迫使你们在路上流浪？”人群后面有个干涩的声音说，“你问我们为什么流浪，骑士，我很高兴跟你说说。那个船夫问我问题，我的爱人已经在船里了，正伸手扶我上船呢，可这时候我发现，我最宝贵的记忆都被夺走了。当时我不知道，但现在我知道了，偷走我记忆的贼，就是魁瑞格的呼吸，你很久以前就该杀死她。”

“这你怎么知道呢，夫人？”我质问道。我没法隐藏内心的惊恐。这样一个流浪者，怎么可能知道如此严守的秘密呢？那个礼貌的女人奇怪地笑了笑，说道：“我们是寡妇，骑士。现在能瞒住我们的事情不多了。”

这时候我才感觉到霍拉斯颤抖了一下，我听见自己问，“女士们，你们是什么？是人还是鬼？”她们又一次大笑起来，那嘲讽的声音让霍拉斯不安地挪动着一只蹄子。我轻轻拍着他，说：“女士们，你们为什么笑？这个问题很傻吗？”人群后面那个嘶哑的声音说道：“看他有多害怕！现在他害怕我们，就像害怕龙一样！”

“女士，这是什么废话？”我更加用力地喊道，霍拉斯却违背我的意愿，往后退了一步，我使劲拉缰绳才让他稳住。“我不害怕龙。虽然魁瑞格很凶悍，但是我这辈子也面对过更加邪恶的东西。如果说我没有早点杀死她，那是因为她非常狡猾，躲在那些高山的岩石里面。你谴责我，女士，但是现在我们还听得到魁瑞格的风声吗？有段时间，人们只知道她每个月至少都要攻击一个村庄，但是我们已经很久没有听说过类似的事情了吧，小男孩都长成了大人。她知道被我盯住了，所以不敢出来，只躲在那些山里。”

我还在说话的时候，有个女人掀开她的破斗篷，一团泥土砸在霍拉斯的脖子上。我无法忍受，对霍拉斯说，我们得走。我们的使命，这些老娘儿们能知道什么？我催他向前走，奇怪的是，他一动不动，我只好用力踢他，他这才迈步。幸好那些黑色的人影在我们前面分开，我又一次抬眼去看远方的山峰。想到那荒凉的高山，我的心沉了下来。我想，就算是这些不知天高地厚的老太婆陪着我，也比那刺骨的风好。但是，那些女人似乎是要提醒我，这样的感受是错误的，竟然在我身后齐声唱了起来，我感到有更多泥巴朝我们这儿飞。她们唱的是什么呢？她们敢喊“懦夫”吗？我真想转过身去，发泄怒火，但及时忍住了。懦夫，懦夫。她们知道什么？她们在场吗？很久以前的

那一天，我们出发去面对魁瑞格，那时候她们在场吗？那时候她们会说我是懦夫吗，或者我们五个人中随便哪一个？那是个伟大的任务，最后只有三个人回来了。任务完成之后，女士们，我几乎都没休息，不是又急忙赶到山谷边，兑现了我对那位年轻姑娘的承诺吗？

厄德拉，她后来跟我说了她的名字。她不是什么美人，穿的也是最简单的衣服，但和我有时候梦到的另外那一位一样，她脸上红霞灿烂，让我心动。我看见她在路边，双手拿着锄头。她刚刚才成为女人，身材娇小柔弱。我要去完成那项艰难的任务，但是，看到这样天真的人儿，独自游荡，离我刚抛在身后的恐怖之地又那么近，我无法从她身旁骑马而过，不予理睬。

“回来，姑娘，”我骑在公马上向下喊道，那时候还没有霍拉斯呢，连我自己都很年轻。“你这是犯了什么傻，要往那边走？这山谷里正在打仗，难道你不知道吗？”

“我很清楚，先生，”她说，毫不胆怯地看着我。“我已经走了很远的路，很快我就要到山谷里去，加入战斗。”

“你是受了精灵的蛊惑吗，姑娘？我刚从谷底来，久经沙场的武士都害怕得呕吐不止。我都不愿意你从远处听到一丁点儿回声。为什么扛那么大一个锄头呢？”

“我认识一个撒克逊领主，就在下面的山谷里，我全心全意祈祷，希望他没死，希望上帝保护好他。他对我亲爱的母亲和姐妹们做了那样的事情，我一定要他死在我手里，我扛锄头就是为了这个。这把锄头能刨冬天早晨的冻土，同样也能刨这个撒克逊人的骨头。”

这时候我只好下马，抓住她的胳膊，虽然她想挣脱开。如果她今天还活着——厄德拉，她后来跟我说了她的名字——应该和你们的年纪差不多，女士们。她甚至有可能刚才就在你们当中，谁知道呢？不算了不起的美人，但和另外那位一样，她的天真打动了我的心。“让我去，先生！”她喊道。我回答说：“你不能进入山谷。站在边上看一眼你都会晕倒。”“我不是懦夫，先生，”她喊道。“让我去！”我们就那样站在路边，像两个吵架的孩子，为了让她安静下来，我只好说：

“姑娘，我不知道该怎么打消你的念头。但是，你想一想，你一个人去找那个人报仇，能有多大机会呢？如果我帮助你，你的机会就会增加很多倍。所以你要耐心一些，到阴凉的地方坐一会儿。你看那边，到那棵接骨木下面坐着，等我回来。我去和四位战友一起完成一

项任务，很危险，但时间不会很长。如果我死了，你还能看到我再次从这里经过，绑在这同一匹马的马鞍上，那你就知道，我无法履行我的承诺了。否则，我发誓一定会回来，我们一起下去，实现你复仇的梦想。耐心点，姑娘，我相信你的所求是正当的，既然这样，上帝一定会让这位领主活着，等我们去找他。”

这是懦夫的话吗，女士们，就在那天说的，就在我骑马去对付魁瑞格那天？任务完成了，我知道自己侥幸活了下来——我们五个人，有两个没回来——便立即往回赶，虽然我很疲惫，我要回到山谷边缘，回到那棵接骨木下，姑娘还在那儿等着，双手抱着锄头。她跳了起来，再次看到她，又让我心动。我又一次试图说服她不要去，因为我害怕看到她进入山谷，她却愤怒地说：“先生，难道你是骗人的？你不履行对我的承诺？”于是我把她放到马鞍上——她拉着缰绳，怀里还抱着锄头——我在前面步行，领着马和姑娘往山谷里走。她脸色变白了吗，当我们刚听到那喧闹声的时候？还是当我们在战场外围遇到被人紧紧追赶、走投无路的撒克逊人的时候？那些筋疲力尽的武士，从我们前面爬过，伤口的血一路洒在地上，她畏缩了吗？她眼里有泪花，我看见她的锄头在抖动，但她没有扭过头去。她的眼睛忙个不停，在血淋淋的战场上前后左右搜索。然后我自己上了马，把她放在我身前，好像她是只温驯的羊羔一样，我们一起骑马进了战场最深处。那时候我有过怯懦之色吗？我挥舞着剑，用盾牌遮挡她，骑着马东奔西突，直到最后两人都摔在泥浆里？她马上站起身来，找回了锄头，开始在一堆堆残肢断臂之间辟出一条路来。我们耳里全是奇怪的叫喊声，但她似乎没有听到，就像一位信奉基督教的正经好姑娘，只管自己走路，不理睬粗俗男人们的下流叫喊。我那时候年轻，脚下灵活，拿着剑在她周围跑来跑去，砍倒所有想伤害她的人，用盾牌遮挡不时飞过来的箭。最后，她终于看到了她要找的人，然而，我们好像漂浮在惊涛骇浪中一样，虽然岛屿就在眼前，却总被浪推开，无法靠近。我们两人那天就是这样。我战斗着、砍杀着，保护着她，但是过了很久我们才来到那人跟前，而且有三个人专门守卫着他。我把盾牌交给那姑娘，说：“挡好自己，他就快是你的了。”我以一对三，也知道他们都是本领很高的武士，但我还是一个一个打败了他们，最后我直接面对她恨之入骨的那位撒克逊领主。他在血流成河的战场上走，腿上全是血，但我能看出来，他不是武士，我把他打倒，他躺在地上喘着气，腿已经没用了，眼睛充满仇恨地瞪着天空。这时候她来了，站到他跟前，盾牌丢在一边，她的眼神让我脊背发凉，超过那可怕战场上的一切。然后她的锄头下来了，不是抡起胳膊甩下来，而是轻轻地锄一下，接着是第二下，好像她是在地里刨庄稼一样。我看不

“为什么毫不遮挡地站着呢，先生？”我对他说。“剑还在鞘里？至少从地上捡个盾牌吧，把自己遮起来。”

但他目光悠远，仿佛在一个花香扑鼻的清晨，站在雏菊盛开的草地上。“如果上帝决定引一支箭到这边来，”他说，“我也不会去拦。高文爵士，很高兴看到你平安无事。你是刚到吗，还是一开始就在这儿？”

这话说的，好像我们俩是在夏季集市上聊天一样，我不得不又一次喊道：“遮挡一下，先生！战场上还有很多敌人。”他仍旧像看风景一样，我想起了他的问题，说道：“战斗开始的时候我就在，后来亚瑟选了我和其他四个人去完成一项有重要意义的任务。我刚刚才回来。”

这话总算引起了他的注意。“有重要意义的任务？顺利吗？”

“伤心的是，我们失去了两位战友，但任务完成了，梅林很满意。”

“梅林阁下，”他说。“那个老人家也许是智者，但他让我不寒而栗。”然后他又看了看周围，说道，“很遗憾你失去了朋友。今天，将会有更多的人离去。”

“但胜利肯定属于我们，”我说。“这些该死的撒克逊人。为什么要这样继续打下去呢？只有死神才会感谢他们拼命。”

“我相信，他们这样做，完全是因为对我们的愤怒和仇恨，”他说。“因为这时候他们肯定已经获得了消息，知道我们对留在他们村里的那些无辜的人做过什么。我自己刚从那儿回来，那些撒克逊士兵怎么可能不知道这消息呢？”

“你说的是什么消息，埃克索阁下？”

“我们正式允诺不伤害他们的妇女、儿童和老人，所以他们留在村子里，没人保护。但是，现在他们都被我们的人杀了，包括最小的婴儿。如果有人刚刚对我们干过这种事，我们的仇恨能消除吗？难道我们不会像他们这样拼死战斗，每一道伤口都是一个慰藉？”

“为什么老谈这件事呢，埃克索阁下？今天，我们胜利在握，而且会名垂后世。”

“我为什么老谈这件事？先生，我以亚瑟的名义，与这些村庄友好相处。有个村子里，大家说我是和平骑士。今天，我看着我们的十几个士兵长驱直入，毫无怜悯之心，唯一能抵抗他们的，是一帮还没我们肩膀那么高的男孩子。”

“听到这消息，我很难过。但我再次敦促你，先生，至少捡起一面盾牌吧。”

“我经过的每一个村庄都是这样，而我们的人还为此洋洋得意。”

“不要责怪自己，先生，也不要责怪我舅舅。你曾宣扬的那伟大法律，在其生效之时，是一件真正了不起的事情。这么多年来，多少无辜的不列颠人和撒克逊人，因为这部法律而保住了性命？法律后来没能维持下去，但那并不是你的错。”

“可他们直到今天仍然相信我们的协议。一开始他们只有畏惧和仇恨，是我赢得了他们的信任。我们今天的所作所为，让我成了骗子和刽子手，亚瑟的胜利，我一点儿也不感到高兴。”

“你说这种胡话是想干什么呢，先生？如果你这要是背叛，那我们不要耽搁，现在就来见个分晓吧！”

“我不会去伤害你舅舅，先生。可是，高文爵士，用这么大的代价赢来的胜利，你怎么能这么高兴呢？”

“埃克索阁下，今天下令对那些撒克逊村庄动手时，我舅舅肯定心情沉重，他不知道除此之外，还有什么别的方法获得持久的和平。想想吧，先生。你怜悯的那些撒克逊男孩，很快就会成为武士，迫不及待地要为今天丧生的父亲报仇。那些小女孩的子宫里很快会生长出更多的武士，这屠杀的魔咒永远不会破解。你看看复仇的欲望有多么强烈！你现在就看，看看这位漂亮的姑娘，我自己护送过来的，你看她还没停手呢！然而，今天的伟大胜利，就是个难得的机会。我们也许能一劳永逸地破解这个邪恶的魔咒，而一位伟大的君王应当果断行

动、抓住机会。埃克索阁下，希望这一天名垂青史，从今往后我们的土地能获得多年的和平。”

“我不明白你的意思，先生。今天我们的确杀了无数撒克逊人，无论是武士还是婴儿，但是穿过这片土地，那边还有更多的撒克逊人。他们从东方来，坐船登上我们的海岸，每天都在建起新的村庄。这仇恨的循环根本没有打破，先生，反而因为今天的屠杀而更加牢固。现在我去见你舅舅了，汇报我看到的情况。他相信上帝会微笑着看待今天的行为吗？我去看看他脸上的表情就知道了。”

屠杀婴儿的刽子手。这就是我们那天干的事？那我护送的那位呢，后来她怎么样了？刚才她也在你们当中吗，女士们？我骑马去履行职责，为什么要这样围住我？让一个老人安安静静地去吧。屠杀婴儿的刽子手。但我当时不在场啊，就算在，我和一位伟大的君王争辩，能有什么作用？他还是我舅舅呢。那时候我不过是个年轻的骑士，而且，这么多年过去了，事实不是证明他是正确的吗？你们不是在和平之中慢慢变老的吗？那就让我们上路吧，不要在背后侮辱我们。‘无辜者保护法’真是一部了不起的律法，让人更亲近上帝——亚瑟自己总是这么说，抑或是埃克索阁下说的？那时候我们称他为埃克索勒姆或者埃克索勒斯，可现在他叫埃克索，还有个好妻子。为什么要奚落我呢，女士们？你们悲伤，是我的错吗？我的日子就快到了，我不会回头，像你们那样在大地上流浪。我将心满意足去见船夫，踏上他那艘摇晃的小船，水在四周拍打着，耳朵里传来他划桨的声音，我也许能睡一会儿。我将由熟睡而半醒，看见太阳落在水面，岸越来越远，然后又打盹，回到梦境，直到船夫的声音再次将我轻轻唤醒。如果他要提问——有人说他会这样——那我就诚实回答，我有什么好隐藏的呢？我没有妻子，虽然有时候我渴望有。但我是个好骑士，将自己的职责执行到底。我就这么说吧，他会明白我没有撒谎。我也不会在意他。那温柔的落日，他从船的一边走到另一边，影子落在我身上。但是，这一切还要等一等。今天，我和霍拉斯要在这灰色的天空下上山，爬上那荒凉的山坡，攀上下一座山峰，因为我们的事情还没完成，魁瑞格在等着我们。

第十章

他从未想过要欺骗武士。好像是欺骗自行悄悄降在原野上，将两人裹在其中。

箍桶匠的小屋似乎建在一道深沟里，茅草屋顶离地面很近，埃德温低下头进去的时候，感觉像是爬进了一个洞。他预料到屋里会很黑，但那令人窒息的闷热——以及木头发出的浓烟——让他措手不及，他咳嗽起来，用这种方式通知屋里的人他到了。

“看到你平安无事，我很高兴，年轻的战友。”

维斯坦的声音从暗火那边的黑暗中传来，接着埃德温在一张铺着草皮的床上分辨出了武士的身形。

“你受伤严重吗，武士？”

维斯坦坐起来，慢慢挪到火光下，埃德温看见他的脸、脖子和肩膀上全是汗。但伸向火堆的那双手却颤抖着，好像很冷一样。

“伤口是小事。但伤口引起了发热。之前更加严重，我都不记得是怎么到这儿的了。好心的僧侣们说，他们把我绑在马背上，我猜我大概一直在喃喃不休吧，就像在树林里扮演咧着嘴的傻瓜时一样。你怎么样呢，战友？我相信，除了之前那个伤口之外，你没有别的伤了吧。”

“我非常好，武士，但此刻站在你面前却很羞愧。我可不是你的好战友，你战斗的时候我在睡觉。骂我吧，把我赶走，那也是我应得的惩罚。”

“不用这么急，埃德温阁下。如果说你昨天晚上让我失望了，我马上就会告诉你，怎么弥补你对我的亏欠。”

武士小心翼翼地把双脚挪到泥土地面上，弯下腰来，朝火里扔了一根木柴。埃德温发现，他左臂上紧紧地缠着绷带，一边脸上有一大片瘀伤，一只眼睛几乎没法睁开。

“没错，”维斯坦说，“当时我从熊熊燃烧的塔顶往下看，我们精心准备的推车却不在那儿，我的确想骂你。从高塔上跳下，摔到石头地上？我已经被热浪裹住了。我听着下面敌人痛苦的叫声，我问自

己，就算我们一起化为灰烬，我们能合得来吗？在夜空下独自摔下去，是不是更好？但是，我还没拿定主意，那辆车竟然来了，是我自己的马拉来的，由一名僧侣牵着缰绳。我不去管这名僧侣是敌是友，立即从烟囱口上跳了下去。我们之前的工作做得很好，我的战友，我整个人都扎了进去，好像车上的干草是水一样，但草里并没有什么东西把我刺穿。醒来的时候，我躺在餐桌上，对乔纳斯神父忠心耿耿的一些僧侣在周围照顾我，好像我是他们的晚餐一样。那时候，我肯定烧发得很厉害了，不知道是因为受了伤，还是因为被火烤的，他们说只好把我嘴巴堵住，以免我胡言乱语，然后把我送到山下安全的地方。但是，如果众神眷顾，这烧很快就会过去，那我们就出发，完成我们的任务。”

“武士，我仍然很羞愧。就是醒来之后，看到士兵围住了塔，我仍然让精灵迷了心窍，跟在那些不列颠老人后面逃出了修道院。我祈求你现在骂我吧，或者打我，但你刚才说了，我还可以弥补昨天晚上的耻辱行为。告诉我怎么弥补，武士，无论你给我什么任务，我都马上去完成。”

就在他说这话的时候，母亲已经在召唤他，她的声音在这小茅屋里回响，以至于埃德温都不确定，这些话究竟有没有说出来。不过，他应该说出来了，因为他听到维斯坦说：

“你以为我选了你，只是因为你的勇气吗，年轻的战友？你有非常出色的精神，如果我们能完成这项任务，全身而退，我会让你学习本领，使你成为真正的武士。但是，你现在只是一块粗铁，还算不得刀刃。埃德温阁下，我选择你，首先是因为我看到你有猎人的禀赋，与你的武士精神匹配。两者都有，可真是很罕见的事情。”

“这怎么可能呢，武士？我对打猎一无所知。”

“一头喝母乳的小狼，能够在荒野里捕捉到猎物的气息。我相信这是天生的禀赋。等我发烧好了，我们再往山里面走，我敢打赌，你会发现天空本身将向你低语，告诉你选择哪条路，才能让我们站到母龙的巢穴跟前。”

“武士，恐怕你的信任放错了地方，最后没法兑现。我们家族没人拥有这种技能，也没人说过我可能有。斯特法看出我有武士的灵魂，但他也没提到过这种能力。”

“那好吧，年轻的战友，那就让我一个人相信你的能力吧。我绝不会说你自夸有这个本事。等我发烧好了，我们立即出发，到东边的

山里去。大家都说魁瑞格的巢穴在那儿，每到路口，我就会跟着你的脚步走。”

欺骗，就是在这个时候开始的。他此前没有欺骗的打算，现在也不喜欢。然而，欺骗悄悄来到两人之间，像个小妖精，从黑暗的角落迈步出场。他母亲仍在召唤。“为我找到你的力量吧，埃德温。你几乎长大成人了。找到你的力量，来救我。”他希望安慰母亲，也渴望挽回武士对自己的印象，于是说道：

“真奇怪，武士。你这一说起来，我就已经感觉到母龙的吸引力啦。不像是气息，更像是风里的某种味道。我们该马上就走，因为我是不是能一直感觉到，谁也说不清楚。”

他说这话的时候，脑海中快速闪过一幕幕场景：那些人围成半圆静静地坐着，看着他母亲试图挣脱束缚，他走进营地，让那些人大吃一惊。这时候他们都该是成年人了，很可能留着胡子、腆着肚子，再也不是那天大摇大摆走进村庄的那群身材挺拔的小青年了。都是壮实、粗鄙的男人，他们伸手去拿斧头，看到埃德温身后跟着的武士，眼睛里会流露出恐惧。

可他怎么能欺骗武士呢？这是他的老师，又是他最崇拜的人。而维斯坦却点着头，满意地说：“我一见到你就知道啦，埃德温阁下。在河边把你从食人兽那儿救回来的时候就知道了。”他将进入他们的营地。他将释放母亲。那些壮实的男人将被杀掉，或许会让他们逃入山间的雾霭之中。然后呢？他们要匆忙赶去完成一项紧急任务，同时埃德温必须解释，他为什么要欺骗武士。

或许是为了让自己尽量不去想这些念头——因为他感觉到，现在已经没有退路了——他说道：“武士，我有个问题想问你。不过也许你会觉得不礼貌。”

维斯坦又躺了下去，没入了黑暗中。现在，埃德温只能看到一只裸露的膝盖，缓慢地摇来摇去。

“问吧，小战友。”

“我在寻思啊，武士，本来我们可以逃离修道院，早半天去找魁瑞格的，你和布雷纳斯爵爷之间是不是有什么特别的仇恨，所以你才留下来与他的士兵战斗？你连任务都暂时放到一边，肯定有什么重要的理由吧。”

接下来的沉默很长，以至于埃德温以为，武士在令人窒息的空气中晕过去了。但是，那只膝盖仍旧在缓缓晃动，当他的声音终于从黑暗中传来时，发烧引起的微微颤抖似乎已经消失了。

“我没有借口，小战友。我只能承认自己很傻，而且好心的神父还刚提醒过我不要忘记职责呢！你看，你师傅的意志力多么脆弱。不过，我首先是一名武士，面对战斗，如果我明知道能够打赢，要我逃走可不容易。你说得对，说不定我们本可以现在就站在母龙的巢穴旁，喊她出来迎接。但我知道他们是布雷纳斯的人，也许他自己还会来，不留下来与他们会面，我可做不到。”

“那我猜得没错，武士。你和布雷纳斯爵爷之间有什么旧仇。”

“没有真正的仇恨。我们小的时候就认识，和你现在差不多大。那是在西方的一个遥远国家，我们住在一个守卫森严的要塞里，二十多个男孩，从早到晚接受训练，要成为不列颠军队中的武士。我慢慢喜欢上了那些伙伴，他们都很优秀，我们像兄弟一样生活在一起。大家都很好，只有布雷纳斯例外，他是爵爷的儿子，不屑于和我们打成一片。但他经常和我们一起训练，他的本领很弱，可是如果我们要与他用木剑格斗，或者在沙坑里摔跤，我们都必须让他赢。爵爷的儿子如果不能取得辉煌的胜利，那我们大家都要受罚。你能想象吗，小战友？我们那时候都是骄傲的少年，可每天都要让那么弱的对手征服我们，那是什么感受？更糟糕的是，我们假装被打败的时候，布雷纳斯还很喜欢羞辱对手。踩住我们的脖子，或者在我们已经躺倒在地的时候再踢上几脚，他都很高兴。我的战友，想想我们当时是什么感受吧！”

“我能理解，武士。”

“但是，今天我有理由感谢布雷纳斯爵爷，因为他让我避免了可悲的命运。我刚才说过，埃德温阁下，我已经爱上了要塞里的伙伴们，把他们当成兄弟，虽然他们是不列颠人，我是撒克逊人。”

“可是，武士啊，你和他们一起长大，一起面对艰巨的任务，爱上他们有什么可耻的吗？”

“当然可耻，孩子。现在连想起以前对他们的感情，我都会感到耻辱。是布雷纳斯让我明白了这个错误。可能是因为我的本领技巧比较出色吧，他喜欢选我当格斗对手，最厉害的羞辱手段，都要留着，用在我身上。他很快发现我是撒克逊人，于是以此为理由，让我的所有伙伴都来反对我。连以前和我最亲密的伙伴，也加入了反对我的行

列，在我的食物里吐口水，或者在寒冷的冬天早晨，在我们一边担心教官生气一边急匆匆赶往训练场时，把我的衣服藏起来。那时候布雷纳斯给我上了一堂重要的课，我明白了，像兄弟一样去爱不列颠人，是一件耻辱的事情，于是我下定决心离开要塞，虽然在要塞之外，我没有亲人、没有朋友。”

维斯坦停了一会儿，粗重的喘气声从火堆那边传过来。

“那么，在你离开之前，武士，你找布雷纳斯爵爷报仇了吗？”

“我的战友，你来判断一下，我这算不算报了仇，我自己还没拿定主意呢。根据要塞的规定，我们这些学徒一天训练结束，晚饭后有一个小时的时间，可以自由活动。我们会在院子里生个火，围坐在周围，像其他男孩子一样聊天、开玩笑。当然，布雷纳斯不和我们一起，他有专门的地方，但是那天晚上，我看见他从一旁走过，不知道是干什么。我起身离开人群，伙伴们并没有生疑。和别的要塞一样，那儿也有很多秘密通道，我都很熟悉。不久，我来到一个没人守卫的角落，城垛的黑影落在地面上。布雷纳斯优哉游哉朝我这边走来，一个人，我从黑暗中现身，他停下脚步，惊恐地看着我。他立即明白，这绝不是偶然碰上，而且他平日里的力量都失效了。真是奇怪的事啊，埃德温阁下，这位平时趾高气扬的爵爷，一下子变成了婴儿，在我面前害怕得简直要尿裤子。我真想跟他说：‘我的爵爷，我看到你的剑背在身后。你知道你的剑术比我们高明得多，拔出剑来和我比一比，你肯定不会胆怯吧。’但我没说这种话，因为如果我在那个黑暗的角落里伤了他，那我还能逃出要塞开始新的生活吗？我什么都没说，就默默地站在他身前，让时间在我们两人之间慢慢过去，因为我希望这一刻永生难忘。他往后退缩，之所以没有大喊救命，是因为残存的一点儿自尊告诉他，如果喊出来，那肯定一辈子都得忍受羞辱。我们都没有跟对方说话。等时间差不多了，我就走了，你看，埃德温阁下，我们之间没发生什么事，也可以说什么都发生了。我知道，我当天晚上就应该离开了，那不是战争时期，守卫并不严。我悄悄避开卫兵们，也没跟人告别，很快我就来到了外面的月光之下，孤零零一个少年，离开了我亲爱的伙伴们，我的亲人们很久以前就被杀了，只有依靠自己的勇气和新近学到的本领才能继续走下去。”

“武士，布雷纳斯今天还要抓你，是害怕你报以前的仇吗？”

“谁知道哪些魔鬼在那个傻瓜耳朵里说悄悄话？现在他是个了不起的爵爷啦，在这个国家和邻国声威显赫，但他一直害怕有撒克逊人从东方来，从他的地盘上经过。他是不是一遍遍重温那天晚上的场

景，以至于恐惧在他身上生了根，像肚子里盘了一条大虫子呢？或者母龙的气息让他忘了害怕我的原因，恐惧感却因为没有原因反而更加可怕？有个从东方沼泽来的撒克逊武士，我很熟悉，去年在这个国家和平旅行，被杀了。不过，我仍然要感谢布雷纳斯爵爷给我的教训，否则我现在还把不列颠人当作兄弟呢。小战友，你怎么啦？你两只脚动来动去，好像我这儿发烧传给你了一样。”

看来，他的焦虑没有隐藏好，但维斯坦肯定不会怀疑自己骗了他吧。有没有可能武士也能听见他母亲的声音？刚才武士说话的时候，她一直在呼喊。“你没有力量来救我吗，埃德温？难道你还是太小了？你不到我这儿来吗，埃德温？那天你不是答应我一定要来吗？”

“对不起，武士。猎人的本能让我有些急躁，因为我担心那气味会消失，外面太阳快起山了。”

“等我能爬上马背，我们立即出发。再给我一点儿时间吧，战友，如果我发烧，剑都举不起来，我们俩怎么能面对母龙这么凶悍的对手呢？”

第十一章

他渴望有一块阳光，让比特丽丝暖和起来。可是，虽然对面的河岸沐浴在早晨的阳光之中，他们这边却又暗又冷。他们俩走路的时候，埃克索能感觉到她渐渐朝自己身上靠过来，颤抖得越来越厉害。他正准备提议再休息一次，这时他们看到了柳树后面的屋顶，伸到了水面之上。

他们花了不少工夫，才走下那道泥泞的山坡，来到船屋跟前。他们迈步走进低矮的门廊，里面几乎漆黑一片，河水近在咫尺，在脚下拍打着，让比特丽丝颤抖得更厉害。他们踏着潮湿的木板，继续往里走。透过屋顶上挂下来的长草，他们看到了远处的灯芯草丛，还有一大片河水。接着，一个男人的身影从左侧的黑暗中站起来，说道：“朋友们，你们是什么人啊？”

“愿上帝与你同在，先生，”埃克索说。“很抱歉，可能吵醒你了。我们就是两个疲惫的路人，想到下游我们儿子的村庄去。”

那人走到亮处，打量着他们。他是个身材魁梧的中年人，留着胡子，身上披着几层兽皮。最后，他开口问话，语气倒也友好。

“这位女士病了？”

“她只是累了，先生，不过剩下的路走不动了。我们在想，不知道你有没有货船或者小筏子，可以载我们一程。我们只能靠你发发善心了，最近遇到了不幸的事情，我们的行囊都没了，本来能用来答谢你的锡块也丢了。先生，我能看出来，你这儿下水的只有一条船。如果你允许我们用这条船的话，所有交予我们看管的货物，我们一定保证安全。”

船夫看看那艘在棚顶下轻轻摇晃的船，然后又看看埃克索。“这条船要下河，还要等一等呢，朋友，我在等同伴运麦子过来，装到船上。看来你们两人都很累，最近又遇上了不幸的事情。那么，请你们听听我的主意吧。朋友们，你们看那儿。看到那些筐子了吧。”

“筐子，先生？”

“它们也许看起来不结实，但在水里浮得好，能承受你们的重量，不过得一人坐一只筐子。我们常常用筐子装整袋整袋的麦子，有

时候甚至还装屠宰好的猪，绑在船后面，就是河上风浪大，也很安全。今天，你们看，河上很平静，所以不用担心。”

“你真是好心，先生。不过，你没有大一点的筐子，能装下我们两个人吗？”

“你们得一人坐一只，朋友们，否则可能会落水。但我很愿意把两只筐子绑到一起，你们坐进去，和一只筐子差不多。如果看到河这边有一个矮一点儿的船屋，那么你们就到啦，请你们把筐子系好，丢在那儿。”

“埃克索，”比特丽丝低声说，“我们不要分开。我们还是一起步行吧，慢一点也没关系。”

“公主啊，我们已经走不了啦。我们两人都需要取暖、吃东西，顺着这条河走，我们很快就能到儿子那儿啦。”

“拜托啦，埃克索。我不想分开。”

“可这位好心人说，要把两只筐子绑在一起，就像我们手挽着手一样。”接着，他转身对船夫说：“我非常感激，先生。我们就按照你的建议办。请帮忙把筐子绑紧一点，水流再急，也不会把我们分开。”

“朋友，水流得急不危险，流得慢才危险。筐子容易在岸边的野草里缠住，那就走不动了。不过，我会借你一根粗棍子，用来推筐子，所以你们不用害怕。”

船夫走到小码头的边上，拿着绳子开始忙活起来。比特丽丝低声说：

“埃克索，不要让我们分开。”

“我们不会分开，公主。你看他绳结打得多牢，我们会一直在一起。”

“水流会把我们分开，埃克索，别去管这个人跟我们说的话。”

“我们会没事的，公主，很快就能到儿子的村里。”

船夫在喊他们，他们小心翼翼踩着几块小石头走下去，两只筐子在水中一上一下，船夫用一根长竿把筐子稳住。“里面铺好了兽皮，”他说，“你们几乎感觉不到河上的冷气。”

埃克索发现蹲下来身上很疼，但他还是一直双手扶着比特丽丝，直到她在第一个筐子里蹲下来，安全地坐好。

“不要站起来啊，公主，要不然筐子就危险了。”

“你自己不进来吗，埃克索？”

“现在就进来，就在你旁边。你看，这位好心人把我们俩紧紧绑在一起啦。”

“别丢下我一个人，埃克索。”

但是，她一边说着，一边似乎已经定下心来，在筐子里躺好，像个即将入睡的孩子。

“好心的先生，”埃克索说。“你看，我妻子冷得发抖。你有没有东西，可以借给她盖一盖？”

船夫也在看着比特丽丝，她侧身蜷缩着，闭上了眼睛。突然，船夫脱下身上的一件兽皮衣服，弯下腰，把衣服盖在她身上。她似乎没有注意——眼睛仍然是闭的——于是埃克索代妻子向他表示感谢。

“不客气，朋友。把所有东西都留在矮船屋那儿就行了。”他用长竿将他们推到河中心。“坐低点儿，棍子放在手边，防止野草。”

河面上冷得刺骨。破碎的冰块东一片西一片，不过他们的两个筐子能轻松通过，有时候还会轻轻碰一下。筐子的外形和船差不多，有船头船尾，不过容易打转，所以有时候埃克索一抬眼，又能望到上游岸边的船屋。

他们身边长草摇曳，晨曦从草间漫过来；正如船夫所说，河水平稳地流淌着，无风无浪。不过，埃克索仍旧一直望着比特丽丝的筐子，筐子里似乎全被兽皮衣服塞满了，只能看到一小撮头发，让人知道她还在里面。有一次他喊道：“公主，我们马上就能到啦，”她没有回答，于是他伸出手，把她的筐子拉近一点儿。

“公主，你在睡觉吗？”

“埃克索，你还在那儿？”

“当然啦，我在这儿。”

“埃克索。我还以为，可能你又离开我了呢。”

“我为什么要离开你呢，公主？而且那个人把我们俩的筐子紧紧绑在一起啊。”

“我不知道这是做梦还是回忆。可我刚才看到，我自己深夜站在我们的屋子里。那是很久以前，我身上紧紧裹着那件獾皮斗篷，是你好心做的，送给我当礼物。我就那样站着，还在我们以前住的屋子，不是现在那间，因为墙上从左到右编着山毛榉枝条，我看着一只毛毛虫沿着墙慢慢爬，心里想，夜这么深了，这只毛毛虫为什么不睡觉呢。”

“别管毛毛虫啦，你自己为什么半夜不睡觉，盯着墙看呢？”

“我想啊，埃克索，我站在那儿，是因为你走了，离开我了。也许那人给我盖的这件兽皮衣服，让我想起了以前那件，因为站在墙边的时候，我把那件衣服抓得紧紧的，那件你用獾皮给我做的衣服，后来在那场大火里烧掉了。我看着毛毛虫，问它为什么不睡觉，那样一个小动物知道白天和黑夜的分别吗？不过，我相信真正的原因是你走了，埃克索。”

“一个离奇的梦，公主，可能还要发烧呢。但我们很快就能烤上暖和的火啦。”

“你还在那儿吗，埃克索？”

“当然啦，我在这儿，船屋已经早就看不见啦。”

“那天晚上你不在我身边，埃克索。还有我们宝贝的儿子。他一两天前走的，他说等你回来的时候，他不愿意在家里。所以就只有我一个人，在我们原来的屋子里，深更半夜。但那时候我们还有蜡烛，所以我能看见那只毛毛虫。”

“你说的可真是个离奇的梦，公主，肯定是发烧受凉引起的。我真希望太阳别这么慢悠悠的，早点出来才好。”

“你说的对，埃克索。这儿很冷，盖着兽皮也冷。”

“我愿意把你抱在怀里暖和一下，可在这河上没办法。”

“埃克索。我们自己的儿子是不是某一天生气离开了我们，我们关上门，让他永远都不要回来？”

“公主，我看到前面水里有什么东西，也许是艘船，卡在芦苇丛里了。”

“你漂远了，埃克索。说话我都快听不见了。”

“我就在你身边，公主。”

他矮着身子坐在筐子里，双腿朝前伸着，这时候他两手扶着筐子的边缘，小心翼翼换成了蹲的姿势。

“现在看得更清楚了。是艘小船，卡在芦苇丛里了，在前面河岸拐弯的地方。正好在我们的路上，我们要小心，要不然也会卡住。”

“埃克索，不要离开我。”

“我就在你身边，公主。不过，我得抓住这根棍子，要避开这草丛。”

现在筐子越来越慢，朝河岸拐弯处那泥浆一样的河水里漂去。埃克索把棍子伸进河水，发现一下子就碰到了河底，他想把筐子往河中心推，但是棍子似乎被河底吸住了，没法用力气。这时，长满深草的田野上，天已经亮了，他看清楚了两只筐子四周都缠着厚厚的水草，好像要把他们牢牢绑在这片静止的泥水中一样。那艘船就在他们跟前，他们极其缓慢地漂过去，埃克索伸出棍子抵住船尾，两人的筐子停了下来。

“丈夫，这是另外那个船屋吗？”

“还没到。”埃克索抬眼望望另一边正在流动的河水。“很抱歉，公主。我们卡在芦苇丛里了。不过我们前面有艘桨划的小船，如果还没坏的话，后面的路我们可以自己划船。”埃克索再次将棍子伸进水里，慢慢把筐子撑到小船附近。

他们位置较低，抬头仰望，船显得很高大，埃克索能清楚地看到粗糙、破旧的木板，以及船舷上缘的底部，那上面挂着一排细小的冰柱，像蜡烛油一样。他把棍子插在水中，在筐子里小心翼翼站起身来，朝小船中望去。

船首有一片橘色的光，他仔细一看，才发现堆在船板上的那一堆破旧衣服，原来是位上了年纪的女人。她衣服比较特殊——是由很多黑色的小布片拼缀而成的，而且脸上满是污垢，让埃克索一时没认出来。她坐的姿势也很奇怪，脑袋朝一边歪着，几乎碰到了船舱的地板。这个女人的衣服似乎让他想起了什么，这时她睁开了眼睛，看着他。

“陌生人啊，救救我，”她人没动，嘴里低声说道。

“你生病了吗，夫人？”

“我一只胳膊不能动了，否则我就站起来划桨了。救救我，陌生人。”

“你在跟谁说话呢，埃克索？”比特丽丝的声音从身后传来。
“小心啊，会不会是魔鬼？”

“就是个可怜的女人而已，可能比我们年纪还大，在船里受了伤。”

“不要忘了我，埃克索。”

“忘了你？我怎么会忘了你呢，公主？”

“这迷雾让我们忘记了很多东西。为什么不会让我们忘记对方呢？”

“那种事永远不会发生，公主。现在，我要帮这个可怜的女人啦，如果运气好的话，也许我们三个人都能坐她的船到下游去。”

“陌生人，我听见你说的话了。非常欢迎你们乘我的船。不过先帮帮我吧，我摔了跤，受伤了。”

“埃克索，不要把我丢在这儿。不要忘了我。”

“我就是到我们身边这艘船上去一下，公主。我要帮一帮这位可怜的陌生人。”

冷气让他四肢僵硬，爬上船的时候，他差点跌倒，不过他及时稳住了身子，四下里看看。

船看上去简单结实，没有明显的漏水痕迹。靠近船尾的地方堆着货物，但埃克索没怎么注意，因为那个女人又说话了。早晨的阳光仍旧照在她身上，他能看出来，她的眼睛盯着自己脚下，目光非常专注——以至于他自己也忍不住低头看看。他没注意到什么特别的东西，于是小心跨过船的龙骨，继续朝她走去。

“陌生人。我看得出来，你年纪不小了，但你还有力气。摆一副凶狠的模样给它们看。摆一副凶狠的模样，把它们吓走。”

“来吧，夫人。你能坐起来吗？”他这样问，是因为她奇怪的姿势让他担心，她松散的灰白头发披下来，都碰到了潮湿的地板。

“来，我来帮你。尽量坐起来一点儿。”

他弯下身子，手碰到了她，这时一把上锈的刀从她手里掉下来，落在地板上。与此同时，什么小动物从她那堆衣服里窜出来，匆匆忙忙跑进了黑暗中。

“那些老鼠给你添麻烦了吗，夫人？”

“到处都是，陌生人。听我的，摆副凶狠的模样给它们看。”

这时候他才想起来，刚才她不是看他的脚，而是看他脚后面的什么东西，在船的尾部。他转过身，阳光斜射过来，照得他眼花，无法看清楚那儿有什么东西在动。

“是老鼠吗，夫人？”

“它们怕你，陌生人。有一下子也怕我，但最后一点一点耗尽了我的气力。要不是你来，这时候它们肯定全在我身上了。”

“等一等，夫人。”

他举起一只手遮着太阳，迈步朝船尾走去，眼睛盯着黑暗中那一堆东西。缠在一起的网，一条堆成一团的水淋淋的毯子，一件类似于锄头的长柄工具横放在湿毯子上。还有一个没有盖子的木箱——渔夫用这种箱子来装抓到的鱼，以保持新鲜。他朝里面一看，却发现箱子里装的不是鱼，而是剥了皮的兔子，数量不少，密密匝匝堆着，细小的腿好像都缠在一起一样。就在他看着的时候，那一大堆肌肉、手肘、脚踝突然动了起来。埃克索往后退了一步，同时看到一只眼睛睁开了，接着又一只也睁开了。后面有声响，他转过身去，船的另一边仍然沐浴在橘色光亮之中，老太太缩在船头，浑身上下爬满了小妖精，多得数不清。初看之下，她似乎颇为享受，那些又瘦又小的家伙在她的破衣服里、脸上、肩膀上跑来跑去，好像都急着表达对她的喜爱。这时候越来越多的小精灵从河里冒出来，纷纷往船上爬。

埃克索弯腰去拿那件长柄工具，但他也被一种静谧感包裹住了，发现自己从乱糟糟的渔网中抽出工具时，悠闲自在得出奇。他知道越来越多的精灵从水里冒出来——多少已经上船了呢？三十？四十？——它们的声音合在一起，在他听来，好像是孩子们在远处玩耍。他并非完全心不在焉，还知道把那个长柄工具举起来——是把锄头，肯定没错，朝上的那一端不是有上了锈的刃口吗？抑或是又一个精灵趴在上面？——然后挥下来，砸在正朝船边上爬的那些小手指、小膝盖上。接着，又挥了第二下，这次砸向有剥皮兔子的那只箱子，更多精灵正从里面往外跑。不过，他一直算不得什么剑客，他所擅长的是外

“别管她，陌生人。把她交给我们。别管她，陌生人。”

埃克索再次挥动锄头，锄头在空气中划过，好像划过浓稠的水，不过还是命中了目标，有几只被打散了，但更多的又赶了过来。

“把她交给我们，陌生人，”老太太又说道。这次埃克索突然想到，说话的人指的不是生命垂危的陌生人，而是比特丽丝。恐惧感扎进他心里，像深不见底的洞，他转头去看芦苇丛中妻子乘坐的那只筐子，发现筐子周围的水中纷纷扰扰，尽是手臂和肩膀。同时，一大群精灵从一侧往他自己乘坐的筐子上爬，差点把筐子掀翻，幸好筐子里已经有很多精灵，起到了压舱的作用。但是，它们爬上来，只是为了由此进入旁边的筐子。埃克索看见其他精灵正聚集到比特丽丝盖的兽皮上，他喊了一声，从船舷爬出去，落在水里。水比他想象的更深，直到腰部，但他只是打了个冷颤，便立即发出一声武士的吼叫，那声音似乎来自遥远的记忆。他把锄头高高举在头顶，摇摇晃晃朝筐子走去。精灵在拉他的衣服，而且水感觉像蜜一样稠，他一锄头砸在自己的筐子上，武器在空中划过的速度慢得让人心急，但一旦落下，精灵纷纷落水，比他想象的还多。接下来的一锄头，产生了更大的破坏——这次锄头的刃口肯定是朝外的，那被他砸飞到阳光之中的，难道不是带血的肉吗？然而，比特丽丝仍然遥不可及。她怡然自得地在水上漂着，精灵在她周围越积越多，有的来自陆地，从河岸的草丛中拥出来。有些甚至黏附在他的锄头上，他手一松，让锄头落在水里。突然之间，他只希望能赶到比特丽丝身边。

他踩着泥巴涉水而行，穿过野草，穿过折断的香蒲丛，但比特丽丝显得更加遥远。接着又传来了陌生人的声音。这时埃克索在水里，位置较低，看不见她，但他能想象出老太太的样子，清清楚楚印在脑海里，令人惊讶：她瘫倒在自己的船上，早晨的阳光照着，精灵们在她身上自由自在、到处乱跑，这时她的话传入他耳中：

“别管她，陌生人。把她交给我们。”

“诅咒你，”埃克索一边咬牙骂着，一边艰难地往前走。“我绝不会丢开她，绝不会。”

“你可是个明智的人啊，陌生人。你很早就知道，她的病已经没救啦。你到时候怎么能承受呢，那即将发生在她身上的事情？你希望这一天快快到来吗？好让你看着最爱的人痛苦地抽搐，而你除了在她耳边说几句好话，毫无其他办法？把她交给我们吧，我们会减轻她的痛苦，和之前我们为很多人做的一样。”

“诅咒你！我不会把她交给你们！”

“把她交给我们，我们保证，她将不再感到疼痛。我们将在河水中把她洗净，岁月的痕迹会从她身上消退，她就像在一场愉快的梦里。要留着她干什么呢，先生？除了动物被杀那样的痛苦，你还能给她什么呢？”

“我不会理你的。走开。离她远点。”

他把双手紧紧握在一起，两条胳膊伸直形成一根棍棒，摆过来，又摆过去，在水中开出一条路，最后终于来到比特丽丝跟前，她还在筐子里沉沉地睡着。精灵在她盖的兽皮上聚集，他用手一个个把它们拉下来、甩开。

“你为什么不把她留给我们？你这样可不是对她好。”

他在水里推着筐子往岸上走，河底渐高，筐子搁浅在湿泥上，周围是野草和香蒲。他弯下腰，双手把妻子从筐子里抱出来。幸好，她多少苏醒了一些，知道抱住他的脖子。两人踉踉跄跄往前走，先上了岸，然后又走了一会儿，来到田野上。埃克索感觉脚下的地面又干又硬，这才把妻子放下来，两人坐在草丛里，他喘着气，她则慢慢清醒过来。

“埃克索，我们这是到了什么地方？”

“公主，你感觉怎么样？我们必须离开这个地方。我来背着你。”

“埃克索，你身上都湿透啦！你掉进水里了吗？”

“这是个邪恶的地方，公主，我们必须马上离开。我很愿意背着你，年轻的时候我们俩傻兮兮的，春天暖和的日子里，我就是这样背着你玩儿的。”

“我们要离开这条河吗？高文爵士说得对啊，我们顺着河走，要快一些。这地方看起来很高，我们可没爬过这么高的山呢。”

“我们没别的办法，公主。我们必须离这儿远远的。来吧，我来背着你。来吧，公主，扶住我的肩膀。”

第十二章

埃德温听到武士的声音在下面喊，要他爬得慢一些，但他不予理会。维斯坦太慢了，而且似乎不明白当前情况的紧迫性。两人山崖还没爬到一半时，他曾问埃德温：“年轻的战友啊，刚从我们头顶飞过的，是一头鹰吗？”那究竟是什么，有什么关系呢？武士发了烧，所以脆弱了，身体上、意志上都脆弱了。

再爬一会儿就到了，至少他就翻过了山崖，能站到结实的地面上。那他就能奔跑了——他多么渴望奔跑啊！——可朝哪儿跑呢？这一下子，他们的目的地好像从脑海中飘走了一样。何况，还有更重要的事情要跟维斯坦说：他欺骗过维斯坦，现在差不多是坦白的时候了。他们把那匹筋疲力尽的母马系在山路旁一株小灌木上，然后开始爬山，那时候他就下定了决心，等到了山顶，就把一切和盘托出。可现在他就快到那儿了，脑海中却空空如也，思绪纷乱，像一团团烟雾。

他攀过最后几块岩石，起身站在悬崖的边缘。眼前的土地空旷荒凉，缓缓向上与地平线上灰白的山峰相连。附近有一块块的石楠地和野草地，不过成人的脚踝那么高。奇怪的是，在不远不近的某个地方，似乎有一片树林，树木葱翠，在大风中静静地立着。难道是某位神仙一时兴起，从密林中抓出一小撮来，放在这块荒凉的土地上？

埃德温气喘吁吁，但还是发力向前跑去。那片树林，肯定就是他该去的地方，一到那儿，他什么都会记起来。维斯坦的声音又在身后什么地方叫喊——武士肯定也爬上了崖顶——但埃德温不回头，跑得更快了。他要到那树林之中才开始坦白。在大树的遮掩之下，他会记得更清楚，两人谈话时也不会有呼啸的大风。

大地突然立起，迎面而来，撞得他差点儿闭过气去。这来得太突然，他头晕目眩，只能在地上躺一会儿，等他想跳起来的时候，背后却有个柔软而有力的东西摁住了他。这时他意识到，维斯坦用膝盖抵住了自己的后背，正在捆绑自己的双手。

“之前你问我们为什么带绳子，”维斯坦说。“现在你看多有作用。”

埃德温想起了两人在山下路上的谈话。他急着开始上山，看见武士小心翼翼地把东西从马鞍上放进两只口袋，他觉得很不耐烦。

“我们要快点儿，武士！要这些东西有什么用呢？”

“来，背着这个，战友。母龙已经够厉害了，我们犯不着又冻又饿，把自己弄垮，帮她的忙。”

“可气味会消失的！我们要绳子有什么用呢？”

“小战友，我们也许用得上啊，那时候要找，树枝上可长不出绳子来。”

现在，绳子不仅绑住了他的手，还缠住了他的腰，等他最后站起来，身后已经被绳子拽住，很难再向前走。

“武士，你不再是我的朋友和老师了吗？”

“都是，而且还是你的保护人。从现在开始，你可不能走得那么急啦。”

他发现自己并不在意绳子。受绳子所限，他只能像骡子那样走路，这让他想起了不久之前，他不得不扮演骡子的角色，围着马车不停地转圈。现在他又成了那头骡子吗，虽然被绳子拽着，却仍旧固执地往山坡上走？

他走着、走着，偶尔一口气能迈出好几步，然后绳子就把他拉停了。他耳朵里有一个声音——熟悉的声音——一半是歌唱，半是吟诵，那是一首童谣，他从小就很熟悉。这声音令人又舒心又担忧，而且他发现，如果一边拽绳子，一边跟着唱，那声音就不再那么令人心烦。于是他就跟着唱，一开始声音很低，然后他嗓子逐渐放开，迎风而歌：“谁打翻了麦酒杯？谁砍断了龙的尾？谁把蛇留在桶内？是你的表兄艾德尼？”还有一些词他记不起来了，但让他惊讶的是，他只要跟着那声音吟唱，正确的歌词就会自动出来。

树林很近了，武士又一次把他拉住。

“慢点儿啊，小战友。进入这片奇怪的树林，光靠勇气是不够的。你看那边。这么高的山上有松树倒也没什么，但是旁边的难道不是橡树和榆树吗？”

“别去管这儿长着什么树啦，武士，也别管天空上飞的是什么鸟！我们剩下的时间很少，要快点！”

他们进了树林，脚下的地变了：有柔软的苔藓、荨麻甚至蕨类。头顶树叶浓密，像屋顶一样，所以他们在半明半暗之中走了一会儿。但是，这却不是真正意义上的森林，因为不久他们就看到一处空地，上方露出圆形的天空来。埃德温想，如果这真是某位神祇的杰作，那么他肯定想用树来隐藏前方的什么东西。他愤怒地拉着绳子，说道：

“磨蹭什么呢，武士？难道你是害怕了吗？”

“看看这个地方，小战友。你猎人的本能看来发挥了作用。我们前方肯定就是龙的巢穴。”

“我们两人中，我才是猎人，武士。我告诉你，那空地里没有龙。我们要快点从旁边过去，然后继续向前，还有更多路要走呢！”

“你的伤口，小战友。让我看看，伤口是不是还那么干净。”

“别管我的伤口啦！我告诉你，这气味会消失的！松开绳子，武士。就算你不跑，我也要继续跑！”

这次，维斯坦放开了他，埃德温从蓟草和交错的树根上跑过去。他绊了几跤，因为他被绑着，不能伸出手去保持平衡。不过，到达空地的时候，他并没有受伤。他在空地边缘停下脚步，看着眼前的景象。

空地中央有个池塘。水面冻住了，如果有人很勇敢或很愚蠢的话，可以在上面走，二十来步就能到对岸。冰面平滑如镜，只在靠近对岸的地方，一棵死树树干中空，从上面冒出来。岸上，离枯树不远的地方，有一只巨大的食人兽，手肘和膝盖着地，蹲在水边，脑袋全部没在水中。也许这野兽正在喝水——或者在找水面下方的什么东西——后来水突然结冰，把他冻在里面了。如果不注意看，那食人兽像具无头尸体，爬到池塘边喝水的时候被人砍掉了脑袋。

池塘上方那块天空，将奇怪的光射在那食人兽身上，埃德温盯着它看了一会儿，简直觉得这食人兽会活过来，突然抬起一张可怖、涨红的脸。然后，他吃惊地发现，池塘右手边远处，还有一头野兽，姿势一模一样。那儿还有！——第三只，就在他面前不远，在这边的岸上，身体被蕨类遮住了一部分。

一般情况下，食人兽只会让他感到厌恶，但这些食人兽，以及那令人伤心的离奇姿势，让埃德温感到有些同情。是什么让它们遭遇了

这种命运呢？他迈步朝它们走去，可身上的绳子又拉紧了，维斯坦的声音就在身后：

“战友，你仍然不承认这是龙的巢穴吗？”

“不是这儿，武士。我们要继续往前走。”

“可这地方在跟我说话呢。就算不是巢穴，难道不是她来喝水洗澡的地方吗？”

“我看这个地方受到了诅咒，武士，不该在这儿跟她战斗。在这儿我们只会遭到厄运。你看看那些可怜的美食人兽。简直和你那天晚上杀死的魔鬼一样大。”

“你在说什么呢，孩子？”

“你没看到吗？你看，那儿！还有那儿！”

“埃德温阁下，你太疲惫了，我之前就担心这事。我们休息一会儿吧。就算这个地方阴森森的，至少可以避避风。”

“你怎么能想到休息呢，武士？这些可怜的家伙不就是这么倒霉的吗，在这中了魔咒的地方待得太久了？它们这可是在发出危险信号啊，武士，你要留意！”

“我只需要留意一个危险信号，那就是让你休息，可不能让你把自己的心脏给跑炸了。”

他感到被人向后拽，后背撞上了一棵树。然后武士围着他转圈，他胸部和肩部被绳子捆住，几乎一点儿也动不了。

“这棵树可没害你，小战友。”武士一只手轻轻地搭在他肩膀上。“干吗要这样浪费力气，把树拔起来呢？依我看，你还是安静下来休息休息吧，让我来仔细看看这地方。”

他看着维斯坦小心地穿过荨麻丛，朝池塘走去。到了水边，武士先来回慢慢走了几趟，眼睛盯着地面，有时候如果发现了特别的东西，还会蹲下来查看。然后他直起身子，似乎陷入了长时间的冥想之中，目光越过树梢，落在池塘的对岸。在埃德温看来，武士现在近乎成了一个剪影，背景是冰封的水面。他为什么都不去看那些美食人兽呢？

维斯坦身体一动，突然之间手里已经多了把剑，拿剑的胳膊伸着，在空气中纹丝不动。然后剑又回到了鞘中，武士转过身来，迈步

往回走。

“我们可不是最早到这儿来的，”他说。“过去一小时内，有其他人来过这儿，而且不是那条母龙。埃德温阁下，你平静了一些，我很高兴。”

“武士，我有事情要向你坦白。一说出来，你也许当场就要把我杀掉，哪怕我现在绑在这棵树上。”

“说吧，孩子，不要害怕我。”

“武士，你说我有猎人的天赋，在你说那话的时候，我感觉到一股强烈的力量吸引着我，于是就让你相信，我鼻子里闻到了魁瑞格的气息。但是，我一直在骗你。”

维斯坦走过来，站到他跟前。

“接着说，战友。”

“我没法接着说，武士。”

“你应该更加害怕自己的沉默，而不是我的愤怒。说！”

“我说不了，武士。我们俩刚开始爬山的时候，我知道该怎么跟你说。可是现在……我究竟对你隐瞒了什么，我都不太确定了。”

“是那条母龙的气息，没别的了。它以前对你没什么影响，可现在已经控制你了。我们离它很近了，这是个明确的信号。”

“我担心，这个受诅咒的池塘让我着了魔，武士，可能也让你着了魔，让你心满意足地晃来晃去，都懒得看那些被淹死的食人兽。不过，我知道我有事情该向你坦白，就是想不起来是什么事，要是能想起来就好了。”

“只要带我找到母龙的巢穴，无论你跟我撒过什么小谎，我都可以原谅。”

“可问题就在这里啊，武士。我们拼命赶路，马累得心脏都差点炸了，然后又爬上了这座陡峭的山，可我压根儿就没带你去找母龙。”

维斯坦靠得那么近，埃德温都能感觉到他的呼吸。

“那你带着我，埃德温阁下，是要上哪儿呢？”

“是我母亲，武士，现在我想起来了。我阿姨不是我母亲。我真正的母亲被抓走了，那时候我还是个小孩，但我看在眼里。我答应过她，总有一天我会带她回来。现在我快成人了，还有你在身边，就是那些人看到我们也会颤抖的。我骗了你，武士，但是请你理解我的感受，既然我们离她这么近了，就帮帮我吧。”

“你母亲。你是说她在这附近？”

“是的，武士。但不在这儿。不是这个受诅咒的地方。”

“抓走她的那些人，你还有印象吗？”

“他们样子很凶恶，武士，而且好像是杀人的老手。那天，村里谁也不敢站出来。”

“撒克逊人还是不列颠人？”

“是不列颠人，武士。三个人，斯特法说他们不久之前肯定当过兵，因为他能看出来，他们身上有士兵的样子。我还不到五岁，否则我就要为她战斗。”

“我自己的母亲也是被抓走的，小战友，所以我很理解你的想法。而且，被抓的时候，我也是个没有力量的孩子。那是战争年月，我很傻，我看过那些家伙杀死、绞死了很多人，所以看到他们对我母亲笑，我还以为他们会善待她，对她好。也许你也是这样吧，埃德温阁下，你那时候还小，还不了解男人。”

“我母亲是和平时被抓走的，武士，所以没有遭遇大的伤害。她一直在各个国家之间到处游荡，这种日子也许不算差。可她一直想回到我身边，而且和她一起游荡的那些人，有时候很残酷。武士，接受我的坦白吧，回头再来惩罚我，现在请你帮助我面对抓我母亲的人，她已经等了我很多年了。”

维斯坦用奇怪的目光瞪着他。他似乎张口要说什么，却摇了摇头，往旁边走开几步，简直像做错了事一样。埃德温从没见过武士这副模样，很吃惊地看着。

“我可以原谅你这次的欺骗，埃德温阁下，”维斯坦终于转过脸来，开口说道。“也原谅你可能说过的其他小谎话。而且，我很快就会把你从树上解开，无论你带我去见什么敌人，我们两人都一起去。但是，作为条件，我要你答应我一件事。”

“说吧，武士。”

“如果我死了，你还活着，那么你要答应我这件事。答应我，你要在心里仇恨不列颠人。”

“这是什么意思呢，武士？哪些不列颠人？”

“小战友，是所有的不列颠人。包括对你友好的那些人。”

“我不明白，武士。与我分享面包的不列颠人，我也要仇恨吗？如果有人救了我的命呢，比如最近救了我的高文爵士？”

“有些不列颠人似乎值得我们尊敬甚至爱戴，这一点我最了解。但是，与个人的感受相比，现在有更大的事情要我们承担。屠杀我们族人的，是亚瑟领导的不列颠人。抓走你母亲和我母亲的，是不列颠人。我们有义务去仇恨每一个不列颠男人、女人和孩子。所以你要答应我。如果我在传授你本领之前就倒下去，你答应我，要保护好你心中的仇恨。如果这火变弱或者可能熄灭，那你要小心照料，让火焰再燃烧起来。这你能答应吗，埃德温阁下？”

“很好，武士，我答应。可是现在我听见了母亲的召唤，我们在这个阴暗的地方也待了很久了。”

“那么，我们去找她吧。但你要要有心理准备，也许我们太迟了，不一定救得了她。”

“这是什么意思呢，武士？那怎么可能呢，她现在还在召唤我呢。”

“那我们就抓紧时间去吧。记住一件事情就行了，小战友。救援未必来得及，但报仇的机会多得是。让我再听一遍你的承诺。答应我，你要一直仇恨不列颠人，直到你受伤倒下，或者年老死去。”

“我很高兴地再次承诺，武士。把我从树上解下来吧，现在我能清楚地感觉到我们该走哪条路了。”

第十三章

埃克索能看出来，那只山羊在这山里过得悠闲自在。山风很大，而且羊的左边两条腿位置高，右边两条腿位置低，但它统统不理睬，正开心地啃着草皮和石楠。这羊力气很大——上山的时候，埃克索已经领教了——他和比特丽丝需要休息，要找个地方把羊拴牢，也很不容易。最后他发现了一个死树根，从山坡的地面上突出来，于是把绳子仔细拴在树根上。

从他们现在坐的地方，能清楚地看到山羊。那两块大岩石相互依靠着，像一对老夫妻，他们还没爬上来的时候就已经看到了，不过埃克索并不想到岩石那儿休息，他希望能提前找个地方避避风。山坡上光秃秃的，什么也没有，他们只好继续坚持，沿着窄窄的山路往上爬，山风猛烈，那头羊也和山风一样任性。等他们最后来到这两块岩石旁，才发现这似乎是上帝为他们准备好的避难所，周围大风呼号，他们却只感觉到空气微微拂动。不过，两人还是紧紧依偎着，好像是害怕头顶的岩石一样。

“埃克索，这整片旷野还在我们下方啊。我们不是顺着那条河下去的吗？”

“没走多远，后来上了岸，公主。”

“现在我们又爬上了山。”

“没错，公主。上山究竟有多难，恐怕那个小姑娘没跟我们说。”

“这是肯定的，埃克索，她说得好像散步一样轻松。但谁又能责怪她呢？还是个孩子，却比同龄人多出那么多操心事。埃克索，你看那边。下面那个山谷里，看见他们了吗？”

埃克索抬起一只手挡住阳光，使劲朝他妻子指的方向看，但最后他还是摇了摇头。“公主，我的眼睛没你好。下面一座座山连着，一个山谷接着一个山谷，但我看不到什么特殊的東西。”

“那边，埃克索，顺着我的指头看。那不是一排士兵吗？”

“现在我看到了，没错。但他们不在动吧。”

“在动啊，埃克索，可能是士兵，走路排着长队。”

“我眼睛不好，公主，我看一点儿也没动。就算是士兵，离我们那么远，也不会给我们添麻烦。我更担心西边的风暴云啊，要说添麻烦，那比远处的士兵可要快得多。”

“你说得对，丈夫，不知道我们还要走多远的路。那个小姑娘没说实话，她一直说像散步一样轻松。可我们能责怪她吗？她父母不在，还要操心弟弟们呢。她让我们来做这件事，肯定也是被逼无奈，没别的办法了。”

“我看得更清楚了，公主，云后面露出来了一点儿太阳。那不是士兵，也不是人，是一排鸟。”

“真是傻话，埃克索。如果是鸟，我们从这儿怎么能看得见呢？”

“公主，它们没你想的那么远。黑色的鸟，排成一排坐着，山里的鸟是这样。”

“那么，我们看的时候，怎么没有一只鸟飞起来呢？”

“等会儿也许就有鸟飞起来了，公主。至少我呢，是不会责怪那个小姑娘的，她的处境不是也很艰难吗？我们刚看到她的时候，浑身都是湿的，冻得发抖，要不是她帮忙，我们还不知道怎么样呢？而且啊，公主，我记得，急着要把这山羊牵到巨人冢的，可不止她一个人呢。你刚才不也是同样焦急吗？还不到一个小时。”

“我现在还很焦急，埃克索。杀掉魁瑞格，这迷雾就没了，难道不是好事吗？只不过刚才我看着山羊那样悠闲地啃草皮，很难相信这样一个傻家伙，竟然能够对付巨大的母龙。”

之前他们初次看到那个石头小屋的时候，那只山羊也和现在一样，正心满意足地啃着草。小屋隐藏在一道隐隐耸现的山崖脚下的阴暗处，很容易错过，比特丽丝指给埃克索看，埃克索还以为那是个入口，里面是居住区，和家乡的房子差不多，是山腰上挖出来的。他们走近之后，才发现那是个独立的房子，墙和屋顶都是一块块的深灰色岩石。水从高处淌下来，像一条细线，落在崖壁前，聚在离石屋不远的的一个池子里，然后顺着坡地流走。石屋前方不远处，有一个很小的牧场，用篱笆围着，被初升的太阳照得明晃晃的，整个牧场里只有一只山羊。它和往常一样正忙着吃草，看到埃克索和比特丽丝，惊讶地瞪大眼睛看着。

不过，孩子们还没注意到他们。女孩和她两个弟弟站在一条沟的边上，背对着他们，正全神贯注看着脚下什么东西。有一次，其中一个小男孩朝沟里扔了什么东西，女孩一急，拉住他的胳膊往后拽。

“他们这是在干什么呢，埃克索？”比特丽丝说。“看起来像是调皮捣蛋，可最小的那个太小啦，一不小心会滚下去。”

他们从山羊旁经过，孩子们还没注意到，埃克索尽量轻柔地喊了一声：“愿上帝与你们同在。”三个孩子都警觉地转过身来。

三人脸上都有内疚的表情，佐证了比特丽丝的想法，他们可能在顽皮。女孩比两个男孩要高出一头，她迅速缓过神来，脸带微笑。

“老人家！欢迎你们！昨天晚上我们还祈祷呢，请上帝让你们来，看看，你们这就来了！欢迎，欢迎！”

她踩着水汪汪的草地走过来，两个弟弟在后面跟着。

“你认错人啦，孩子，”埃克索说。“我们就是两个迷路的行人，又冷又累，刚刚在河里被野精灵攻击，衣服全湿了。能不能喊一声你的母亲或父亲，允许我们取取暖，借个火烤烤衣服？”

“我们没弄错，先生！昨晚我们向上帝耶稣祈祷，现在你们就到啦！请吧，老人家，到屋里来，火都生好了。”

“但是，你的父母呢，孩子？”比特丽丝问。“我们虽然很疲惫，但也不愿意闯进人家，要等房子的女主人或男主人召唤才能进门吧。”

“现在就我们三个人啦，夫人，所以你可以称呼我为房子的女主人！请进去，取取暖吧。梁上挂的袋子里有食物，火旁边有木柴。进去吧，老人家，我们先不打扰你们休息了，我们要看着山羊。”

“我们感谢你的好意，孩子，”埃克索说。“但请你告诉我们，最近的村庄离这儿远吗？”

女孩脸上掠过一层阴云，她看了看已经在两旁站好的弟弟。然后，她再次微笑道：“先生，我们这是住在很高的山上。离其他村子都很远，所以请你们留在我们这儿，享受我们提供的火和食物吧。你们肯定很累了，我也能看出来，这风吹得你们发抖。所以呢，离开的话，就不要再说了。进屋去休息吧，老人家，我们已经等了你们很久了！”

“那沟里面有什么东西，让你们这么关心啊？”比特丽丝突然问。

“噢，没什么，夫人！什么也没有！你看你们还站在风里，衣服都是湿的！难道你们不愿意接受我们的招待，不愿意到我们的火边休息吗？你们看，火堆的烟都从屋顶上冒出来了呢！”

* * *

“那儿！”埃克索从岩石上起身，用手指着。“一只鸟飞上天啦。我不是跟你说过嘛，公主，那是鸟排成了一排。它在空中越飞越高，看见没？”

比特丽丝刚才也站起来了，这时她往外迈了一步，走出两块岩石形成的避难所，埃克索看到风立即把她的衣服吹了起来。

“没错，是一只鸟，”她说。“但不是从那一排里面飞出来的。也许你还没看到我手指的东西，埃克索。我说的是那儿，在更远的那道山梁上，那些黑色的东西，几乎都贴着天空。”

“我能看见，公主。别站在风里，回来吧。”

“无论是不是士兵，他们都在慢慢移动。那只鸟不是从那儿飞起来的。”

“别站在风里，公主，坐下来吧。我们要尽量留些力气。谁知道我们还要拉着这只羊走多远呢？”

比特丽丝回到栖身的地方，把从孩子们那儿借来的斗篷裹得紧紧的。她再次挨着丈夫坐下来，说道：“埃克索，你真的相信吗？有那么多了不起的骑士、武士，倒是我们这对没有气力的老夫妻，在自家村子里连蜡烛都不许点，竟然能杀死这条母龙？靠这头脾气倔犟的山羊帮我们就够啦？”

“谁知道是不是这样呢，公主。也许这都是那个小姑娘的痴心妄想，没有根据。但我们感谢她的热情招待，按她说的做也是应该的。也许她说得对，谁知道呢，说不定这样能杀了魁瑞格呢。”

“埃克索，你跟我说说。如果母龙真被杀死了，这迷雾也散了，我们会记起很多事来。埃克索啊，你有没有害怕过呢？”

“你自己不是说过了吗，公主？我们一起的日子，就像一个结局美好的故事，无论这过程中有什么曲折。”

“我之前说过这话，埃克索。可是，现在我们真的可能亲手杀死魁瑞格了，我还是有点儿害怕迷雾会散掉。你也是这样吗，埃克索？”

“也许是吧，公主。也许我一直就有些担心。但我最害怕你之前说过的话。就是我们在火堆旁休息的时候说的。”

“我那时候说什么啦，埃克索？”

“你不记得啦，公主？”

“我们是不是愚蠢地争吵啦？我现在不记得了，只知道当时又冷又累，大脑都不转了。”

“既然你不记得了，公主，那就这样忘了这事吧。”

“可是，埃克索，自从离开孩子们以后，我就有种感觉。好像你在疏远我，我们一起走路的时候都是这样，可不仅仅是因为那头难拉的山羊。我现在不记得了，会不会是因为我们之前吵架了呢？”

“我可不是有意要疏远你，公主。请原谅。如果不是因为山羊拽来拽去的话，那肯定是因为我在想我们俩说过的什么傻话。相信我，还是忘记了好。”

* * *

他把房间中央的火烧旺，小屋里的其他地方都暗下来。埃克索把衣服一件一件拿到火堆旁烘干，比特丽丝垫着几块小毯子，在一旁安稳地睡着。可是，突然之间，她坐起身来，四周张望着。

“火太热了吗，公主？”

有一下子，她脸上仍然很迷茫，然后她又疲惫地躺在毯子上。不过，她眼睛仍然睁着，埃克索正打算再问一遍，她却低声说道：

“丈夫啊，我是在想很久以前的一个晚上。你走了，留下我一个人在床上，心里不知道你还会不会回来。”

“公主，虽然我们躲开了河上那些精灵，但我担心你身上的咒还没完全解除，所以才会做这些梦。”

“不是梦，丈夫。就是记忆中的一两件事情又回想起来了。那个晚上特别黑，我就在那儿，一个人在床上，我心里清楚，你去找更年轻、更漂亮的女人去了。”

“你还不相信我吗，公主？这都是那些精灵，还在我们俩之间捣蛋。”

“也许你说得对，埃克索。就算那真是记忆，也是很久以前了。不过呢……”她没说话了，埃克索以为她又打盹睡着了。可她又接着说道：“不过呢，丈夫，那些回忆让我不敢亲近你。等我们休息好了，再次上路的时候，让我走在前面一点儿，你在后面。我们就这样走吧，丈夫，因为我将不欢迎你在我身旁。”

听到这话，一开始他没说什么。然后他把衣服从火边拿开，放下来，转头看着她。她的眼睛又闭上了，但他肯定她没有睡着。过了很久，埃克索终于能说出话来，不过声音很轻。

“那将是最令我伤心的事，公主。当地面够宽时，却和你分开走路——我们以前总是一起走的。”

比特丽丝似乎并没有听到，功夫不大，她的呼吸变得悠长均匀。他穿上刚烘好的衣服，在一块毯子上躺下来，离他妻子不远，但没有碰到她。他从骨子里感到疲惫，然而他又一次看到那些精灵在他面前的河水中挤作一团，还有他在空中挥下的锄头，落在它们中间，他想起了那像孩子们在远处玩耍一般的声音，想起了自己如何打斗，简直像个武士一样，声音里充满愤怒。现在呢，她说了这话。他脑海里浮现出一幅画面，清晰、逼真：他和比特丽丝走在山路上，头顶是空阔的灰色天空，她走在前面，离他有几步远，他心里涌起一股深深的凄凉感。他们就那样走着，一对老夫妻，低着头，隔着五六步的距离。

醒来的时候，他发现火已经熄了，火堆冒着烟，比特丽丝站在那儿，隔着石头间的一道小缝向外望，这样的屋子，石头间的缝隙也就成了窗户。他又想起了两人最近的谈话，可比特丽丝转过身来，一块三角形的阳光照在她的脸上，她兴高采烈地说道：

“刚才看到外面日头高了，埃克索啊，我打算喊醒你。可我一直想着你在河里泡了那么久，恐怕还要多休息，不是打个盹就可行的。”

他没有回答，她这才问道：“怎么啦，埃克索？为什么这样看着我？”

“我感到欣慰、高兴，才一直盯着你，公主。”

“我感觉好多啦，埃克索。休息一下就好了。”

“这我现在能看出来。那么，我们就快点上路吧，你说的，我们睡觉的时候，日头已经高啦。”

“我一直在看那几个孩子，埃克索。这时候还站在那条沟旁边呢，和我们刚到的时候一样。下面有什么东西把他们吸引住了，我敢打赌，肯定是在顽皮，因为他们经常往后面看，好像担心被大人发现挨批评一样。他们的亲人都上哪儿去了呢，埃克索？”

“那不干我们的事，而且他们好像也能吃饱穿暖。我们去告别，然后上路吧。”

“埃克索，我和你之前争吵了吗？我感觉我们俩之间好像有点事儿。”

“没什么不能放下的，公主。不过也许等会儿我们就会谈起来，谁知道呢？我们还是赶紧动身吧，否则等会儿又要又冷又饿啦。”

他们走进清冷的阳光下，埃克索看到草上结着一块块的冰，天空辽阔，重峦叠嶂，绵延到天际。山羊在那边的围栏里吃东西，脚边有一只满是泥浆、倒扣的桶。

三个孩子仍然在沟边，朝沟里望着，背对着小屋，似乎在争吵。女孩最先发觉埃克索和比特丽丝，人还没有完全转过身来，脸上已经绽出灿烂的微笑。

“亲爱的老人家！”她拉着弟弟，迅速从沟边离开。“我们家很简陋，希望你们休息得还算舒服！”

“的确很舒服，孩子，我们非常感激。现在我们休息好了，可以动身啦。你们的家人呢，为什么把你们丢下不管？”

女孩和站在她两边的弟弟们互相看了看。然后，她有些犹豫地说道：“我们自己过，先生，”说着用两条胳膊分别挽住了两个弟弟。

“沟里有什么东西，你们那么关心？”比特丽丝问。

“是我们的山羊，夫人。那是我们最好的羊呢，可是死了。”

“山羊怎么死了呢，孩子？”埃克索轻声问。“那边那一只看起来很好嘛。”

孩子们又互相看了看，眼神来去之间似乎做好了决定。

“你去看看吧，先生，”说着，女孩放开两个弟弟，迈步让到一边。

他朝沟边走去，比特丽丝与他并肩走着。走了一半，埃克索停下来，低声说道：“公主啊，让我一个人先去吧。”

“难道你以为死山羊我以前都没见过，埃克索？”

“虽然见过，公主啊，你还是在这儿等一下。”

沟有一人深。这时候太阳几乎直射进沟里，里面有什么，应该很容易看清楚；但是，阳光却形成了重重晦暗难辨的阴影，有水洼的地方结了冰，冰面上光影交错、令人眩晕。那山羊原来似乎非常大，现在却碎成很多块，散落在各处。那儿一条后腿，这儿是脖子和脑袋——脸上的表情似乎颇为平静。过了一会儿，他才辨认出山羊柔软的腹部，向上袒露着，黑色的泥浆中慢慢显出一只大手来，按在山羊的肚子上。这时候埃克索才意识到，一开始他以为那只是一只死山羊，但实际上大部分属于另外一个东西，与山羊缠在一起。那边突起的部分是它的肩膀；那儿是僵硬的膝盖。接着，他发现有动静，这才意识到沟里那个东西是活的。

“你看见什么啦，埃克索？”

“不要上前，公主。这可不是让你开心的东西。我猜是个可怜的食人兽吧，要死了，但一时又死不了，也许这些孩子犯傻，扔了个山羊给它，以为它吃点东西就能好起来。”

就在他说话的时候，一个没有毛发的大脑袋在泥浆中慢慢旋转，一只眼睛瞪得大大的，也跟着转动。然后泥浆快速下陷，形成一个漩涡，那个脑袋不见了。

“我们没有喂食人兽，先生，”女孩在他身后说。“我们知道决不能给食人兽喂食物，它们来了，我们就该躲进屋子关好门。这个食人兽来了，我们就是这么做的，先生，我们从窗户里看着它拉倒篱笆，抓走了我们最好的羊。然后它就坐在那儿，先生，就是你站的地方，两条腿挂在沟边，像小婴儿那样，开心地吃着山羊，生吃的，食人兽都这样。我们知道不能开门，太阳都快下山了，那个食人兽还在吃我们的山羊，但我们能看出来，它越来越虚弱。最后它终于站起身来，手里拿着剩下的山羊，然后它就摔倒了，先是跪着，接着就侧着身子倒下去。再后来呢，它就滚进沟里了，还拿着山羊呢，在沟里待两天了，还没死。”

“我们走远一点儿吧，孩子，”埃克索说。“你和你弟弟最好别看。可是，这可怜的食人兽怎么会病成这样呢？难道你家的山羊生病

了？”

“不是生病了，先生，是有毒！我们按照布朗温教的方法，喂了它整整一个多礼拜。每天喂六次叶子。”

“你为什么要这么做呢，孩子？”

“哎呀，先生，让山羊有毒，给母龙吃啊。这可怜的美食人兽又不知道，所以把自己给毒了。但这不是我们的错，先生，因为它本来就不该抢东西！”

“等一下，孩子，”埃克索说。“你是说你们是有意这么喂羊的，让它身上带毒？”

“为母龙准备的毒，先生，但布朗温说，不会伤害我们。你看，我们怎么知道这毒会伤害美食人兽呢？不是我们的错，先生，我们也没有恶意！”

“孩子啊，谁也不会责怪你们。不过，请你告诉我，你们为什么想要毒死魁瑞格呢？你们说的母龙就是它吧。”

“哎呀，先生！我们早上晚上都祈祷，有时候白天也祈祷。今天早上你们来的时候，我们就知道，上帝派你们来了。拜托啦，你们就是来帮助我们的，是吧！我们不过是可怜的孩子，被我们的父母遗忘了！我们就只剩下这只羊了，你们能把羊带过去吗，沿着那条路牵上山，到巨人冢去？路很容易走的，先生，来回要不了半天，我不能丢下这两个小的，要不然我就自己去了。我们喂这只羊的方法，和被美食人兽吃掉的那只一样，这只还多吃了三天叶子呢。先生，你只要把羊牵到巨人冢，拴好丢在那儿，让母龙来吃就行了，而且路很好走，像散步一样轻松。答应我们吧，老人家，因为除此之外，我们担心再也没有别的办法能让我们亲爱的父母回来了。”

“你总算谈到父母了，”比特丽丝说。“要怎么做，才能让父母回到你们身边呢？”

“我们刚才不是说过了吗，夫人？你们只要把山羊带上山，丢在巨人冢就行了，大家都知道经常有人留食物在那儿给母龙。然后呢，谁知道，她会消失吧，就像那可怜的美食人兽一样，吃山羊之前，那美食人兽看起来可是很强壮的！以前我们一直害怕布朗温，因为她会巫术，但是她看到我们就住在这儿，父母把我们给忘记了，就同情我们。所以，老人家，请你们帮助我们，谁知道以后什么时候有人会来

这儿呢？就算有士兵或者陌生人经过，我们也害怕露面，但你们就是我们求上帝耶稣派来的人。”

“可是，这个世界，你们这样的小孩子知道什么呢，”埃克索问，“竟会相信一只有毒的山羊就能把你们的父母带回到身边？”

“这是布朗温跟我们说的，先生，虽然她是个可怕的老太太，但是她从不撒谎。她说，我们的父母把我们忘了，是因为那条母龙住在这里。我们经常调皮，让母亲生气，但是布朗温说，她只要一记起我们，就会急忙赶来，一个一个抱住我们，就像这样。”女孩突然做出把小孩抱在胸前的样子，眼睛闭着，轻轻摇晃了一会儿。然后，她睁开眼睛，继续说道：“但是，现在母龙下了咒，让我们的父母把我们忘了，所以他们不会回家。布朗温说，受母龙诅咒的不仅仅是我们，而是所有人，它消失得越早越好。所以呢，先生啊，我们就卖力干活，两只羊都完全按她说的那样喂，一天喂六次。拜托答应我们的请求吧，否则我们就永远也见不到母亲和父亲啦。我们只请求你们，把山羊带到巨人冢拴好就行了，然后你们想去哪儿就去哪儿。”

比特丽丝正准备讲话，但埃克索抢先说道：“对不起啊，孩子。我们也希望能帮忙，但爬那么高，到山里去，我们已经不行啦。我们老啦，你也看得出来，又在路上走了好多天，没力气啦。我们也没办法，只好快点上路，以免又遇到不幸的事情。”

“可是，先生啊，是上帝亲自把你们送到我们面前的！而且路很短，很轻松，从这儿开始没有一个陡坡。”

“亲爱的孩子啊，”埃克索说，“我们心里都向着你，到下一个村庄，我们就请人帮忙。但是我们太虚弱了，你让我们做的事情，我们做不了，肯定还会有人从这儿经过，愿意帮你把羊牵过去。我们这些老人可不行，但我们会祈祷你们父母归来，祈祷上帝保佑，让你们永远平安无事。”

“不要走，老人家！食人兽中了毒，不是我们的错。”

埃克索拉着妻子的胳膊，转身离开孩子们。两人经过山羊圈的时候，他才回头看，孩子们仍旧站在那儿，三人排成一排，默默地看着，身后就是直插云霄的崖壁。埃克索挥挥手表示鼓励，但他心里感到有些羞愧——也许还有遥远记忆的痕迹，一次类似的告别——于是加快了脚步。

他们没走多远——泥泞的地面刚开始下降，眼前出现了宽阔的谷地——比特丽丝拉拉他的胳膊，让他慢下来。

“丈夫啊，刚才孩子们在场，我不想绕开你跟他们说话，”她说。“可是，我们真的没能力帮他们做这件事吗？”

“他们目前没有危险，公主，我们有我们的事情。你身上的痛怎么样啦？”

“我身上的痛没有加重。埃克索，看看那些孩子，我们走了，他们还一直看着，我们在他们眼里都变成小点了吧。我们至少可以在这块石头这儿歇一下，再谈谈这件事吧？我们不要不加考虑就急忙离开。”

“不要回头看他们，公主，那样只会勾起他们的希望。我们不能回去，也不去牵羊，我们要往下走，到这个山谷里，烤烤火，吃点好心的陌生人给的食物。”

“可是，埃克索，想想他们的请求吧。”比特丽丝这时让两人停下了脚步。“我们还有可能碰上这样的机会吗？想一想！我们碰巧到了这个地方，离魁瑞格的巢穴这么近。那些孩子又有一头有毒的山羊，虽然我们又老又弱，但有了山羊，说不定我们两个人就能杀死母龙呢！想一想吧，埃克索！如果魁瑞格死了，迷雾很快就会散掉。也许那些孩子说得对，也许真的是上帝把我们领到了这儿，谁知道呢？”

埃克索又沉默了一会儿，努力克制回头看那座石屋的冲动。“山羊能不能伤害到魁瑞格，还很难说呢，”他开口说道。“一头倒霉的食人兽是一回事。这头母龙，可是个连军队都能打散的家伙。我们这样一对老傻瓜，晃到离她巢穴那么近的地方，恐怕不明智吧？”

“我们不用去面对她，埃克索，只要拴好山羊，然后快点走。魁瑞格可能要过好几天才会到那个地方，到那时候，我们已经安全地到了儿子的村庄啦。埃克索，我俩在一起这么久的记忆，难道我们都不想要回来吗？难道我们要变得像某个晚上一起遮风避雨的陌生人？来吧，丈夫，你点个头吧，我们回去，照孩子们的请求做。”

* * *

就这样，他们到了这儿，越爬越高，山风也越来越大。两块岩石能临时遮挡一下，可他们不能一直待在这儿。埃克索又开始怀疑，自

已让了步，答应做这件事，也许是个愚蠢的决定。

“公主啊，”最后他说道，“假如我们真的做了这件事。假如上帝眷顾，我们成功了，杀死了母龙。那我希望你能答应我一件事。”

现在她挨在他身边坐着，不过眼睛仍旧望着远方那一排细小的身影。

“答应什么呢，埃克索？”

“是这样的，公主。如果魁瑞格真的死了，迷雾开始消散。如果记忆恢复，你发现我曾经让你多次失望。或者你想起我做过不好的事情，再来看我，看到的已经不是现在你眼中的这同一个人了。那么，请你至少答应我。请你答应我，公主，你不会忘记这一刻你心里对我的感情。如果迷雾消退，只会将我们两人分开，那记忆恢复又有什么好处呢？这你能答应我吗，公主？答应我，无论迷雾消散之后你看到的是个什么样的人，你要永远记着这一刻你心里对我的感情。”

“我答应你，埃克索，要做到也不难。”

“公主啊，听你这么说，我感到无比宽慰，都无法用语言表达了。”

“你的情绪很奇怪啊，埃克索。但是，谁知道巨人冢还有多远呢？我们不要再坐在这两块石头下面耽误时间啦。我们离开的时候，那些孩子很焦虑，他们还等着我们回去呢。”

高文的第二次浮想

这该死的风。我们这是要遇到风暴吗？是风是雨，霍拉斯都不会在意，只是现在坐在他身上的，是个陌生人，不是他的老主人。“就是个疲惫的女人，”我告诉他，“比我更需要骑马。所以你好好驮着她吧。”可她还在这儿干什么呢？她有多么虚弱，难道埃克索阁下看不出来吗？带她到这苦寒的高上来，难道他疯了吗？可她自己要往前走，和他一样倔强，无论我怎么说，他们都不回头。所以，我只好踉踉跄跄地步行，一只手扶着霍拉斯的鞍子，拖着这上锈的盔甲。

“我们以前对女士不都很有礼貌吗？”我低声对霍拉斯说。“难道我们自己走自己的路，丢下这对拉着羊的老夫妻不管？”

一开始，我看到他们在山下，显得很渺小，还以为是那两个人来了呢。“你看山下，霍拉斯，”我说。“他们都已经碰头啦。他们都已经来啦，好像和布雷纳斯的人打了一架，那家伙一点儿也没受伤。”霍拉斯呢，朝我这边若有所思地看了一眼，好像是问：“那么，高文啊，这是我们最后一次一起爬这陡坡了吗？”我没有回答，只是轻轻摸摸他的脖子，可我心里想，“那武士是个年轻而可怕的家伙。不过，也许我斗得过他呢，谁知道？他打倒布雷纳斯的手下时，我就看出来。换作别人是看不出来的，但我看出来。左侧有个小破绽，聪明的对手可以抓住。”

但是，如果亚瑟在，现在会希望我怎么做呢？他的影子仍旧笼罩着这块土地，也包围着我。他会让我蹲伏下来，像野兽一样等待猎物吗？可这些山光秃秃的，能藏到哪儿呢？只有风，能把一个人遮住吗？也许，我该找个悬崖，守在上面朝他们扔石头？那可不是亚瑟王骑士的风范。我宁愿公开露面，迎上去，再游说一次试试看。“回去吧，先生。你不仅给你自己和年轻的伙伴带来了危险，还危及到了这个国家所有善良的人们。让一个了解魁瑞格的人来对付魁瑞格。你都看见啦，我这已经准备去杀她了。”但是，类似的请求，他之前并没有理会，现在为什么还要听呢？毕竟他已经到了附近，还有那个被咬过的男孩给他领路，直奔魁瑞格的老巢。救那个男孩，是不是个错误？但是院长真让我震惊，我知道上帝会因此感谢我。

“他们的路线准确无误，好像有地图一样，”我对霍拉斯说。“那我们该在哪儿等呢？我们该在哪儿面对他们呢？”

那片小树林。我想起来了。奇怪的是，那儿的树长得很茂盛，其他地方都被风刮得光溜溜的。小树林容得下一名骑士和他的坐骑。我不会像土匪一样突然跳出来，但是，为什么要提前一个小时就让对方看到我们呢？

于是我轻轻踢了霍拉斯一下，现在他对此已经没什么反应了，我们穿过了最高的山脊，那儿地面平坦、没有坡度，四面都是冽冽寒风。好不容易到了那树林中，我们俩都谢天谢地，不过那些树长得可真奇怪，让人怀疑是不是梅林亲自在这儿下了咒。梅林阁下真是个人物啊！有一度我以为他给死神都下了咒，可是，现在连梅林也上路啦。他现在住在天堂呢，还是地狱？埃克索阁下也许认为梅林是魔鬼的仆人，但是他却常常用他的本领，去做让上帝微笑的事。也不要说他没有勇气。很多次他和我们并肩战斗，面对飞矢和乱斧。这能算是梅林的树林吧，长在这儿就为了一个目的：让我有一天能在此歇息，等待那个人，阻止他破坏我们那天成就的伟大事业。我们五个人，两个死在母龙手中，然而梅林阁下站在我们身边，在魁瑞格尾巴的扫击范围内镇定地走着，否则他的功夫怎么能施展呢？

我和霍拉斯到的时候，树林里安静平和。甚至还有一两只鸟在树上唱着歌，虽然头顶上的树枝动个不停，但下面却安安静静，如同平和的春天；在这儿，一个老人终于可以定定神，慢慢理一理脑海里的思绪，而不会满脑子念头像暴风骤雨一样！我和霍拉斯上一次到这树林里来，该是好几年前了吧。地上的野草都长疯了，荨麻叶本来不过小孩手掌摊开那么大，现在却足以把一个成年人裹上两层。我把霍拉斯丢在一个开阔一点的地方，让他去找点儿吃的，自己到浓密的枝叶下走了一会儿。我为什么不歇息在这儿呢，靠着这棵漂亮的橡树？等他们来到这个地方——他们一定会来的，到那时候，我和他要会面啦，武士对武士。

我穿过巨大的荨麻——我穿着这咯吱作响的金属盔甲，难道是为了这个目的？让小腿不被这柔软的刺扎伤？——最后，我到了那片空地，还有那个池塘，头顶上露出了灰色的天空。周围有三棵大树，但每棵树都从腰间裂开，上半截栽在水里。我们上次来的时候，这些树还站得直挺挺的吧？被雷电击中了吗？或者是树太老了，渴望池塘的滋养？它们离水那么近，却又喝不到？现在，它们想怎么喝就能怎么喝啦，山上的鸟在它们破裂的树干上做了窝。我就要在这样的地方面对那个撒克逊人吗？如果被他打败，我也许还剩点儿力气，能爬到水边。就算那冰不拦着我，我也不愿意滚进水里，穿着这盔甲泡在水里发胀可不是开心的事情；还有霍拉斯呢，他会不会想念主人，小心翼翼

翼跨过盘根错节的树根，把我的尸体拖上来？不过，我见过战场上的战友们，受伤了躺在那儿，渴望喝水；也亲眼见过一些人爬到河边或湖边，尽管这样做让他们备感痛苦。有没有某种大秘密，只有将死的人才知道？我的老战友，比埃尔阁下，那天躺在那座山的红土上，就渴望有水。我的葫芦里还有点水，我对他说，不是，他要的是湖或者河。但我们离得太远了，我说。“我诅咒你，高文，”他叫道。“这是我最后的心愿，你都不答应我，我们还是战友，一起打过那么多仗呢！”“可这母龙把你都撕成两半了，”我对他说。“如果要带你去水边的话，我就要在这夏天的日头下走，一条胳膊夹住你的一半身体，否则到不了那种地方。”可他对我说，“高文啊，我心里不会迎接死亡，除非你把我放在水边，我要听着水轻轻拍打的声音，慢慢闭上眼睛。”他一定要这么做，也不去管我们的任务有没有完成，他为此牺牲值不值得。我弯下腰去抱他的时候，他才问：“还有谁活下来了？”我告诉他，米勒斯阁下牺牲了，但有三个活着，还有梅林阁下。可他还是不问任务有没有完成，只是不停地谈河啊湖啊，甚至还谈起了大海，我别的也做不了，只知道这是我的老战友，一位勇士，和我一样，被亚瑟选中来执行这项伟大的任务，虽然山谷里正在开战。他忘记自己的职责了吗？我把他抱起来，他喊得惊天动地，这时候才明白哪怕走几小步，都要付出巨大代价，我们就那样，站在红色的山上，在夏天的烈日下，就是骑马到最近的河也要一个小时。我把他放下来，那时候他嘴里只谈大海啦。他眼睛已经闭上了，我把葫芦里的水洒在他脸上，他感谢我，那样子让我觉得，在他心里，他已经站在了岸边。“结果我的，是剑哪，还是斧子？”他问。我说：“你这是说什么呢，战友？是母龙的尾巴打中了你，但是我们的任务完成了，你带着尊严与荣耀离开。”“母龙，”他说。“母龙怎么啦？”“除了一根之外，所有的矛全扎在她肋部，”我说，“现在她睡着了。”可他又忘了我们的任务，开始谈起大海来，说他小时候就有一条船，晚上如果平静，他父亲就带他到大海深处。

她，僧侣们的阴谋没有得逞。她怎么敢那么说呢？现在她坐在我的马鞍上，骑着我亲爱的战马，我和霍拉斯在一起的旅程，谁知道今后还有没有呢？

有一下子，我们以为这就是我们的最后一程，但我们搞错了，把这对好心的夫妻当成了其他人，所以我们又安安静静地多走了一会儿。不过，我一边牵着霍拉斯的缰绳，一边还要回头望，因为他们肯定会来，虽然我们领先了不少路。埃克索阁下在我身边走，因为那只羊，他走得不稳。他猜到了我为什么经常往回看吗？“高文爵士，我们以前不是战友吗？”走出隧道那天清晨，我听他这么问，我让他去找条船，顺河而下。可他还在这儿，仍然在山里，还带着他好心的妻子。我不愿与他目光相对。我们俩都老了，都为年月所遮盖，就像草遮盖着我们曾经战斗过、屠杀过的大地。你想干什么呢，先生？你带着这只羊是怎么回事？

“回去吧，朋友们，”他们在树林里碰到我的时候，我说。“你们这样上了年纪的人，不该朝这儿走。你看看，好心的夫人还捂着腰呢。从这儿到巨人冢，至少还有一英里，只有小石头可以藏身，还得低着头蜷缩在后面。趁你们还有力气，回去吧，我保证把羊带到冢上拴好。”但是，两人都半信半疑地看着我，埃克索阁下拉着羊不放。头顶的树枝瑟瑟作响，他妻子坐在一棵橡树的树根上，眼睛望着池塘，以及那几棵俯身水面的断树。我轻声说：“这路不适合你的好妻子，先生。为什么不接受我的建议，顺着河走，离开山里呢？”“我们必须把羊牵到我们承诺的地方，”埃克索阁下说。“我们答应过一个孩子。”说这话的时候，他有没有奇怪地看着我呢？还是我做梦？

“我和霍拉斯可以把羊送去，”我说。“这任务交给我们，你不放心吗？这羊就算被魁瑞格一口吞下去，我也不相信能把她怎么样，也许能耽搁她一会儿，给我制造个机会。所以呢，把这羊给我们吧，你们回头下山，要不你们两人走着走着，说不定就要摔倒啦。”

他们走到一旁的树丛中，避开我，我能听到他们压低了声音在说话，但听不见说的是什么。然后埃克索阁下走到我跟前，说：“我妻子再休息一会儿，然后我们就继续走，先生，到巨人冢去。”我明白再争辩已经没有用了，而且我自己也急着上路，维斯坦阁下和他那个被咬的孩子在后面还有多远，谁知道呢？

第四部

第十五章

你们有些人会有隆重的纪念碑，让活着的人记住你们受的罪。有些人只会有粗糙的木头十字架或者彩色石块，其他的人呢，就只能藏匿在历史的阴影中。无论如何，你们都是一个古老进程的一部分，所以当初立巨人冢，有可能就是为了纪念这个地方很久以前发生过的类似悲剧——年轻的无辜者在战争中遭到屠杀。除此之外，很难想到立此巨冢的其他原因。如果建在低一点的地方，我们的祖先也许是为了纪念一场胜利或一位国王。但是，为什么要选一个这么高、这么远的地方，把沉重的大石头堆得比一个人还高呢？

我敢肯定，埃克索疲惫地走上山坡时，同样也为这个问题感到疑惑。那个小姑娘第一次提到巨人冢时，他想到的是一个东西立在大土堆上。但这个石冢却在山坡上突然出现，周围没有任何其他东西提醒人们它的存在。不过，山羊似乎立即意识到这是个特殊的地方，石冢刚一出现，像一根黑色的手指指向天空时，它就马上疯狂地挣扎起来。“它明白自己的命，”高文爵士说道。他拉着马往山上走，比特丽丝坐在马背上。

现在呢，山羊似乎忘记了之前的恐惧，正心满意足地啃着草。

“有没有可能是因为魁瑞格的气息，对人和山羊都能起作用？”

问这话的是比特丽丝，她正用双手抓着拴羊的绳子。埃克索这下子把羊交给她，自己正用石头把一根木桩砸进土里，拴羊的绳子绑在木桩上。

“谁知道啊，公主。但是如果上帝真关心山羊的话，那就该快点把母龙引来，否则这可怜的东西孤零零地要等很久啊。”

“如果羊先死了，埃克索，你觉得母龙会吃死动物身上不新鲜的肉吗？”

“母龙喜欢什么肉，谁知道呢？不过这里有些草，公主，虽然不怎么样，但能让山羊活一阵子。”

“你看那儿，埃克索。我们两人都累了，我还以为骑士会帮忙呢。可他已经忘记了他平常的礼貌。”

的确如此，到了石冢之后，高文爵士就异常沉默。“这就是你们要找的地方，”他几乎有些生气地说，然后就转身走开了。现在，他背对着他们站着，盯着天上的云。

“高文爵士，”埃克索停下手头的活儿，喊道。“你能帮忙拉着这头羊吗？我可怜的妻子已经拉不动了。”

老骑士没有反应，埃克索以为他没听见，正准备再说一遍，高文却突然转过身来，脸上庄重得可怕，以至于他们两人都瞪大了眼睛。

“我看到他们在下面，”老骑士说。“现在，谁也拦不住他们啦。”

“你看到谁了呢，先生？”埃克索问。骑士没有说话，他又问：“是士兵吗？之前我们看到过，很远的地平线上有个长长的队伍，但我们以为他们是朝另一边走，离我们越来越远。”

“我说的是你最近的伙伴们，先生。昨天我们见面的时候，你和他们一起走的。他们从下面的树林里出来了，现在谁能拦住他们呢？有一下子，我还希望那只是两名黑寡妇，离开了那个该死的队伍。但那只是天上的云耍的把戏，是他们俩，没错。”

“这么说，维斯坦阁下还是从修道院里逃了出来，”埃克索说。

“是逃出来了，先生。现在他来了，也拉着绳子，绑的不是山羊，而是那个给他当向导的撒克逊男孩。”

最后，高文爵士终于注意到比特丽丝正在拼命拽住山羊，赶紧从悬崖边上赶过来，抓住了绳子。但比特丽丝并没有放手，有一下子，好像她和骑士两人在争夺这只羊。过了一会儿，两人都站稳了，都抓着绳子，老骑士在比特丽丝前方，隔着一两步的距离。

“我们的朋友也看见我们了吗，高文爵士？”埃克索问道，转身继续干活。

“我敢打赌，武士眼睛很尖，现在就能看到我们站在高处，背后就是天空，正在和山羊拔河比力气呢！”他笑了一声，但声音中仍然有一丝忧郁。“是的，”他又说道。“我想他能清楚地看到我们。”

“那他就会和我们联手，”比特丽丝说，“一起杀死母龙。”

高文爵士不安地轮流打量着他们俩。然后他说道：“埃克索阁下，你现在仍然相信这一点？”

“相信什么，高文爵士？”

“在这个偏僻的地方相聚，我们俩是战友？”

“请把意思说清楚，骑士阁下。”

高文牵着羊来到埃克索跪着的地方，他没察觉到比特丽丝在后面跟着，手里还抓着绳子的另一端。

“埃克索阁下，我们多年前不就已经分道扬镳了吗？我仍然跟着亚瑟，而你呢……”这时候，他似乎意识到比特丽丝在身后，于是他转过身，礼貌地鞠了个躬。“亲爱的女士，我请你放开绳子，休息吧。我不会让羊跑掉的。到那边的石冢旁坐下来。至少可以挡一挡风。”

“谢谢你，高文爵士，”比特丽丝说。“那我就把羊交给你啦，它对我们可很宝贵啊。”

她迈步朝石冢走去，身体前倾、肩膀缩着，以抵挡大风，那样子让埃克索隐隐约约回想起了什么往事。这在他心中激起了特殊的情感，还没来得及压制，就已经让他备感意外，甚至感到震惊，因为他一方面强烈渴望立即走到她身边，为她遮风挡雨，另一方面却又清晰地感受到了愤怒与怨恨。她说起过，某一个漫长的夜晚，她独自一人，因为他不在而备受煎熬。然而，有没有可能，他自己也曾有过某个同样痛苦的夜晚，甚至几个这样的夜晚？比特丽丝在石冢前停下来，对着那些石块低下头，好像道歉一样，这时他感到记忆更加清晰，愤怒也更加强烈了，一种恐惧感袭来，让他转过脸去不再看她。这时候他才注意到，高文爵士也在凝望着比特丽丝，眼里露出温柔的神情，似乎陷入了沉思。随后骑士回过神来，靠到埃克索身旁，弯下腰来，似乎是要排除一切被比特丽丝听到的可能。

“你选的道路也许更加神圣，谁又敢说不是呢？”他说道。“丢开战争与和平的大事。丢开那条让人更亲近上帝的好法律。永远丢开亚瑟，一心去……”他又朝比特丽丝那边望了一眼，她仍旧站着，为了避开大风，额头几乎都要碰到那些堆砌起来的石块了。“一心去陪伴你的好妻子，先生。我注意到了，她在你身边走着，像一个温暖的影子。我当初也该这样做吗？可是，上帝将我们引上了不同的道路。我有职责。哈哈！现在我害怕他吗？不怕，先生，从没怕过。我对你没有任何指责。你帮助推行的那条伟大律法被撕碎了，沾满了血！但是，有一段时间，那法律的确生了效。撕碎了，沾满了血！现在谁为这事责怪我们呢？我害怕年轻吗？单凭年轻就能打败对手吗？让他来

吧，让他来。这一点你记住，先生！那一天我亲眼见到了你，你说耳朵里有孩子和婴儿的哭声。我也听到啦，先生，可是那与医生帐篷里传出来的病人的哭声，有什么不同吗？治疗虽然带来痛苦，却能让一个人保住性命。但是，这一点我承认。有些日子里，我也希望有个温暖的影子跟着我。现在我一转身，还希望能看到一个呢。地上的每个动物、天上的每只鸟，不都渴望有温柔的伴侣吗？有那么一两个，为了她们，我倒愿意舍弃大好年华。我现在为什么要怕他？我斗过长着獠牙的挪威人，鼻子像驯鹿一样——那不是面具！给你，先生，把你的山羊拴好吧。你还要把那根桩砸多深啊？你这是要拴山羊还是拴狮子？”

高文把绳子递给埃克索，大步走开了，一直走到大地边缘似乎与天空相接的地方，才停下脚步。埃克索单膝跪在草上，把绳子紧紧绕在木桩的槽口上，然后又一次望着妻子。她站在石冢旁，和之前差不多，她那姿势又让他心中一动，但让他欣慰的是，之前那种怨恨的感觉，这次没有了。相反，他感到一股极其强烈的冲动，要去保护她，不仅是要遮挡猛烈的风，而且是要挡住另一种又大又暗，正在他们周围聚集的东西。他站起身，急忙朝她走去。

“羊拴牢了，公主，”他说。“等你准备好了，我们就沿着这山坡离开吧。对孩子们和我们自己承诺的任务，不是已经完成了吗？”

“噢，埃克索，我不想回到那树林里去。”

“你说什么呢，公主？”

“埃克索，你没到池塘边，你在忙着和这位骑士说话。你没朝那冰冷的水里看。”

“风太大，公主，你是累了。”

“我看见他们的脸仰着，好像躺在床上睡觉一样。”

“谁啊，公主？”

“那些婴儿，就在水面之下不远。一开始我以为他们在微笑，有些在招手，等走近一看，才发现他们躺在那儿，一动不动。”

“这就是你刚才靠着树休息时做的一个梦。我记得看到你睡着啦，当时心里还觉得宽慰呢，尽管我在和老骑士谈话。”

“我真的看见了他们，埃克索。在绿色的水草里。我们不要回到树林去，因为我肯定，那儿有恶魔。”

高文爵士凝视着山下，一条胳膊已经举在空中，这时他并没有转身，但嘴里喊了起来，声音随着风传过来。“他们很快就到了！正急匆匆上坡。”

“我们到他那儿去吧，公主，但你把斗篷裹紧点。我真是傻，不该带你走这么远，但我们很快又能找到遮风的地方。不过，我们先看看这好心的骑士究竟在担心什么。”

他们走过去的时候，那只山羊在拉绳子，不过木桩并没有动。埃克索很想看看山下来的人离这儿还有多远，可这时老骑士转身朝他们走过来，在离山羊不远的地方，三人都停下了脚步。

“高文爵士，”埃克索说，“我妻子身体虚弱，必须回去找个地方休息，吃点东西。我们能像上山的时候一样，让你的马驮着她吗？”

“你这提的是什么要求？太过分啦，先生！在梅林的树林中见面的时候，我不是告诉你们不要再往山上爬了吗？是你们两人坚持要到这儿来。”

“也许我们是傻，先生，但我们是怀着一个目标的，如果我们自个儿下山的话，你必须答应我们，不要把山羊放掉，把羊拉上山可花了我们很多气力。”

“把羊放掉？我为什么要在乎你的羊呢，先生？那个撒克逊武士很快就要来了，他可不是等闲之辈！去吧，不相信的话自己去看看！我为什么要在乎你的羊呢？埃克索阁下，看到你在我面前，让我想起了那个晚上。风也很猛，和现在一样。你呢，当着亚瑟的面骂他，而我们其他人都低着头站着！把你打倒的任务，谁愿意接受呢？我们每个人都避开国王的眼睛，害怕他以目光示意，下令将你打倒，虽然你没带武器。可是，你看啊，先生，亚瑟是位伟大的国王，这又多了一项证明！你当着他最优秀的骑士的面咒骂他，可他却温和地回答你的话。你还记得吧，先生？”

“我一点儿也不记得，高文爵士。你们那条母龙的气息，把这一切全挡住了。”

“我像其他人一样低着头，眼睛看着脚，心里却担心你的头随时可能会从我脚旁滚过！可是，亚瑟却温和地与你说话！你一点儿都想不起来了？那天晚上的风几乎和现在一样猛烈，我们的帐篷随时会飞到黑暗的天空中。可是，亚瑟却用温和的言语来回应咒骂。他感谢你

的贡献。感谢你的友谊。他要求我们记住你的荣耀。你大怒离开，冲进狂风暴雨之中，先生，我自己则低声跟你告了别。你没有听见，因为我说得很轻，但那也是真诚的告别，而且这样做的也不止我一个。我们多少也都理解你的愤怒，先生，虽然你犯了大错，不该咒骂亚瑟，还是在他取得伟大胜利的日子！现在你说魁瑞格的气息挡住了记忆，或者只是因为上了年纪，甚至是这足以将最明智的僧侣变成傻瓜的山风？”

“我不在乎那些记忆，高文爵士。今天我要找的记忆，是我妻子提到的另外一个风雨交加的夜晚。”

“我给了你一个真诚的告别，先生，让我坦白吧，你骂亚瑟的时候，也说出了我一部分心里话。因为你帮助推行的是一项伟大的约定，而且遵守了很多年。因为这项约定，哪怕是在战斗的前夕，所有的人不都睡得更好吗，无论基督徒还是异教徒？作战的时候知道我们的无辜老幼在村子里很安全？可是呢，先生，战争没有结束啊。以前我们为土地、为上帝而战，现在我们又作战，为死去的战友们报仇，而那些人本身也是在复仇之中被杀害的。什么时候才能结束呢？婴儿长成大人，只知道年年打仗。而你的伟大法律已经遭到破坏……”

“高文爵士，那天之前，双方没有人破坏过法律，”埃克索说。“破坏法律是亵渎神明的事情。”

“啊，现在你记起来了！”

“我的记忆是，上帝被背叛了，先生。如果迷雾把我的记忆全部带走，我也不感到遗憾。”

“有一阵子，埃克索阁下，我也希望这样。但很快我就理解了一位真正伟大的国王的战略。因为战争终于停止了，难道不是吗，先生？那天之后，我们不一直处于和平之中吗？”

“不要再提醒我了，高文爵士。我并不领情。让我看着和亲爱的妻子一起度过的日子吧，她在我身旁发抖呢。你不愿意把马借给我们吗，先生？至少到我们见面的那个树林。我们会把马安全地留在那儿等着你。”

“噢，埃克索，我不愿意回到树林！为什么一定要我们现在离开，下山到那个地方去呢？丈夫啊，你是不是仍然害怕迷雾消散，尽管我对你作了承诺？”

“我的马，先生？你这是暗示说，我已经用不着我的霍拉斯了？这你说得太轻率啦，先生！我可不害怕他，尽管他年轻，占了便宜！”

“我没有暗示什么，高文爵士，只请求你这匹好马帮忙，驮我妻子下山休息……”

“我的马，先生？你要坚持把他的眼睛蒙起来，不让他看着主人倒下？那是匹战马，先生！可不是在毛茛丛里撒欢的小矮马！战马啊，先生，无论上帝旨意如何，让我倒下还是获胜，他都敢看！”

“如果我妻子只能由我自己背下山的话，骑士阁下，那就这样吧。我还以为你能让我们用一下你的马，至少到树林那么多路……”

“我要待在这儿，埃克索，别管这残酷的山风了，如果维斯坦阁下马上要来，我们就留下来，看看能活过今天的，是他还是母龙。丈夫啊，难道你还是不愿意这迷雾消退吗？”

“我以前见过很多次啦，先生！急不可待的年轻人，被经验丰富的老家伙打倒。很多次啦！”

“先生，我再次请求你回想一下你的绅士风度。这风把我妻子的气力都耗尽了。”

“我已经向你发过誓了，就在今天早上，无论迷雾消散之后出现什么情况，我都不会忘记我今天心里对你的感情，丈夫啊，难道这还不够吗？”

“难道你无法理解一位伟大国王的行动吗，先生？我们只能看着，只能赞赏。一位伟大的国王，像上帝本人一样，必须做出令常人畏缩的行动！你以为我的眼睛就看不见吗？路上看到一两朵娇柔的花儿，我难道就不想放在胸口？难道床上就只能让这身铁衣裳给我作伴？谁说我是个懦夫，先生？谁说我屠杀婴儿？那天你上哪儿去啦？和我们一起吗？我的头盔！我丢在树林里啦！可现在要头盔有什么用呢？这身盔甲我都想脱掉，只是这盔甲下面的身体，像只剥了皮的狐狸，我担心你们看到了会笑话！”

有一下子，三个人都在相互叫喊，大风呼号，成了与他们抗衡的第四个声音，但现在埃克索突然意识到，高文和妻子都已经住了口，盯着他身后看。他一转身，看见武士和那名撒克逊男孩站在悬崖边上，高文爵士之前也曾站在同一地点，若有所思地眺望着远方。这时天上阴云密布，所以在埃克索看来，这两位似乎是驾着云凌空而降

的。他们的剪影，看起来特别像一幅定格的图画：武士双手紧紧拉着缰绳，像驾驶战车一样；男孩身体向前倾着，与地面形成一定角度，双臂向前伸展，似乎是为了平衡身体。风里传来了一个新的声音，接着埃克索听见高文说：“啊！这孩子又唱起来了！你就不能让他停下来吗，先生？”

维斯坦笑了一声，两个身影都动了起来，男孩在前面拉着，两人走了过来。

“很抱歉，”武士说道。“我只能想出这个办法来阻止他，否则他要踩着石头一路跳过来，把自己折腾死为止。”

“这男孩是怎么了，埃克索？”比特丽丝在他耳边说道，听到她声音里又恢复了往日的温柔亲密，埃克索心生感激。“那条狗出现之前，他就是这个样子。”

“他一定要唱得这么难听吗？”高文爵士又对武士说。“我倒想打他几耳光，但是恐怕他都感觉不到！”

武士越走越近，又笑了起来，然后他高兴地看了一眼埃克索和比特丽丝。“我的朋友们，这可没想到啊。我还以为这时候你们早到儿子的村庄了。怎么到这个偏僻的地方来了呢？”

“和你一样，维斯坦阁下。这条母龙夺走了我们宝贵的记忆，我们渴望看到她的末日。你看，先生，我们带来了一头有毒的山羊，让它帮我们达成心愿。”

维斯坦打量着山羊，然后摇了摇头。“朋友们，我们要面对的，肯定是个庞大而狡猾的家伙。恐怕你们的山羊对她没什么作用，最多打一两个嗝而已。”

“把羊牵到这儿来，可花了我们不少力气，维斯坦阁下，”比特丽丝说，“尽管上山的时候又遇到了这位好心的骑士，得到了他的帮助。但是在这儿看到你，我很高兴，因为看来我们不用完全指望这头山羊啦。”

但是，这时候埃德温的歌声让大家很难听见对方的话，而且他在拼命拉绳子，目标显然是下一道山坡坡顶的某个地方。维斯坦狠狠拉了一下绳子，然后说道：

“埃德温阁下似乎急于赶到那边山上去。高文爵士，那山里有什么？我看到石头叠在一起，好像是要隐藏一个坑洞或巢穴啊。”

“为什么问我呢，先生？”高文爵士说。“问你年轻的同伴吧，他也许连歌都可以不唱了呢！”

“我用绳子拉着他，先生，但我没法控制他——简直和发疯的小妖精一样。”

“维斯坦阁下，”埃克索说，“我们都有责任不让这个男孩受到伤害。在这么高的地方，我们要仔细盯着他。”

“说得好，先生。如果可以的话，我就把他绑在你拴山羊的那根木桩上。”

武士牵着埃德温，来到埃克索钉的木桩旁，蹲下身子，开始把捆男孩的绳子系上去。的确，在埃克索看来，维斯坦这件事似乎做得特别仔细，每个结紧不紧，埃克索的木桩是否牢靠，都要反复测试。同时，男孩自己仍旧对周围浑然不觉。他多少安静了一些，但目光一直盯着坡顶的岩石，而且仍旧在安静而执拗地拽着绳子。他的歌声远没有刚才那么尖锐，但有一种绝不放弃的味道，让埃克索想起疲惫的士兵唱着歌以继续行军。山羊呢，在绳子许可的范围内，已经走到了最远的地方，不过眼睛仍然在傻傻地盯着前方，好像很感兴趣一样。

至于高文爵士，他一直仔细地观察着维斯坦的每一个动作，而且——在埃克索看来——他的眼睛里慢慢露出了某种狡黠的神色。撒克逊武士专心做着手头的事情，骑士则悄悄走到近前，拔出剑，插在泥土里，然后将两条胳膊放在宽大的剑柄上，让剑支撑着身体。现在，他保持着这个姿势，正在观察维斯坦，埃克索想到，他也许在回忆关于武士的各种细节：身高、攻击范围、小腿的力量、绑着绷带的左臂。

维斯坦满意地系好了绳子，站起身来，转身面对着高文爵士。两人互相看着，短短一瞬间，他们眼神中有种奇怪的焦虑感，随后维斯坦便热情地笑了。

“这个习惯呢，就能看出不列颠人和撒克逊人的不同了，”他用手指着，说道。“你看那儿，先生。你的剑拔出来了，你用它来支撑身体，好像那是椅子或板凳之类的东西。虽然教我的是不列颠人，但对任何撒克逊武士来说，这都是个奇怪的做法。”

“活到我这把风烛残年吧，先生，你就知道是不是那么奇怪了！这是和平年代，我想一把好剑能起点作用总是高兴的吧，哪怕是用来给主人歇歇这把老骨头。有什么奇怪的呢，先生？”

“可是，高文爵士，你仔细看看，剑都插进土里了。对我们撒克逊人来说，剑的刃口是连睡觉都要关心的事情。我们甚至都不让刃口接触到空气，担心它失去哪怕一丁点儿锋刃。”

“是这样吗？锋利的剑刃很重要，维斯坦阁下，这我不打算争辩。不过，也不是什么都靠剑刃吧？好的步伐，可靠的战略，镇定自若的勇气。还要有那么一点儿野路子，让人难以捉摸。先生，这些才是决定竞技的要素。还要相信获胜是上帝的旨意。所以呢，还是让老人家歇歇脚吧。而且，剑插在剑鞘里，有时候不是来不及拔吗？我在很多战场上都是这么站着喘气的，心里很踏实，因为我的剑已经拔出来了，随时可以出击，绝不会等我要用它的时候，它却揉着眼睛，迷迷糊糊地问我，这是下午呢，还是早晨啊。”

“看来我们撒克逊人对剑更狠心一些。因为我们根本不许它睡觉，哪怕在黑暗的剑鞘中休息时也不许睡。看看我自己的剑吧，先生。它很了解我的脾气。它知道，一旦呼吸了空气，很快就会碰上皮肉和骨头。”

“看来是风俗不同吧，先生。这让我想起以前认识的一个撒克逊人，一个不错的家伙，我和他在一个寒冷的夜晚搜集柴火。我忙着用剑砍一棵死树，而他就在我旁边，只用双手，有时候用块钝石头。‘你忘记你的剑了吗，我的朋友？’我问他。‘为什么要空手，像头有利爪的熊呢？’但他不听我的。当时我以为他疯了，现在呢，你让我明白道理啦。就是活到我这么大年纪，还是有功课要学习啊！”

两人都笑了笑，然后维斯坦说：

“高文爵士，站在我这边的也许不仅仅是风俗。他们总是教我，哪怕在我的剑刃穿过对手身体时，我的脑子里也必须为接下来的那一剑做准备。如果我的剑刃不够锋利，先生，剑的运行哪怕只慢一丁点儿，碰上骨头时顿了一下，或者在对手缠结的内脏中耽搁了，那么我的下一剑必然会慢，胜负也许就在这一瞬间。”

“你说得对，先生。我相信我是年纪大了，而且多年没有打仗，才这么粗心。从现在开始我要以你为榜样，可是我的膝盖因为爬山没了力气，求你给我这份小小的安慰吧。”

“当然啦，先生，你舒服就行。看见你这么休息，我想起了这一点而已。”

突然，埃德温停止歌唱，开始叫喊起来。他一遍一遍喊着相同的话，埃克索转过脸，低声问身旁的比特丽丝：“他说什么呢，公主？”

“他说，那山上有什么土匪的营地。要我们都跟他去。”

维斯坦和高文两人瞪大眼睛看着这男孩，神色都有些尴尬。埃德温一边喊叫，一边拽着绳子，过了一会儿，他安静下来，瘫软在地上，好像马上就要哭出来似的。时间过得很慢，大家很久都没说话，只有大风呼号。

“高文爵士，”最后埃克索说道。“现在我们都看着你啦，先生。我们之间就不要遮遮掩掩了。你是母龙的守护人，不是吗？”

“是的，先生。”高文神色傲慢，轮流盯着大家，包括埃德温。“她的守护人，最近也是她唯一的朋友。僧侣们喂了她很多年，和你们一样，把动物拴在这个地方。但是现在他们自己吵了起来，魁瑞格察觉到了他们的背叛。不过她知道，我依然忠心耿耿。”

“那么，高文爵士，”维斯坦说，“你能不能告诉大家，我们现在站的地方，就在这母龙附近吗？”

“她就在附近，先生。你能找到这儿来，很不容易，尽管你运气好，碰到了这个男孩给你当向导。”

埃德温已经站起身，又开始唱起来，不过声音很低，像吟诵经文一样。

“埃德温阁下以后可能运气更好呢，”武士说。“因为我有直觉，这个学生很快就会超过他可怜的老师，总有一天会和他的同胞做出了不起的事情。也许和你们的亚瑟王差不多呢。”

“先生，你说什么？就这个像傻子一样又拉绳子又唱歌的男孩？”

“高文爵士，”比特丽丝插了一句，“能说的话，就跟我这个疲惫的老太太说说吧。你是位优秀的骑士，还是伟大的亚瑟王的外甥，怎么成了母龙的守护人呢？”

“夫人，也许维斯坦阁下很想解释这件事。”

“恰恰相反，我和比特丽丝夫人一样，很想听听你的说法。不过，以后还有时间。首先，我们要解决一个问题。我该放开埃德温阁

下，看看他往哪儿跑吗？还是你，高文爵士，领我们去魁瑞格的巢穴？”

男孩正在挣扎，高文爵士瞪大眼睛看着，眼神空洞，然后他叹了口气。“把他留在这儿吧，”他语气沉重地说。“我来带路。”他挺直了身子，从地上拔起剑来，小心地插回剑鞘。

“我谢谢你啦，先生，”维斯坦说。“我们不让这孩子涉险，我很感谢。不过，现在就算没有向导，我或许也能猜出路来。我们要去的地方，就是下一道山坡顶上那些石头那儿，是不是啊？”

高文爵士又叹了口气，望了一眼埃克索，好像是在求助一样，然后又伤心地摇了摇头。“非常对，先生，”他说。“那些石头围成一圈，中间是个坑，可不是小坑哪，有采石场那么大。你们会发现魁瑞格在那儿睡觉。维斯坦阁下，如果你真想要斗它，那就必须爬到坑下面去。现在我问你，先生，你真打算做这么疯狂的事情吗？”

“先生，我走了这么远的路来，就是为了做这件事。”

“维斯坦阁下，”比特丽丝说，“我这个老太太要插句嘴，请你原谅。你刚才嘲笑我们的山羊，但你现在面临的是一场大战。如果这位骑士不愿帮助你，至少允许我们把山羊牵上这最后的山坡，然后把它赶进坑里去。如果你要一个人与母龙战斗的话，中毒的母龙行动总是要慢一点。”

“谢谢你，夫人，你的建议非常周到。不过，我也许会利用她正在睡觉的机会，下毒这种武器我就不想使用了。何况我现在也没什么耐心，不想再等半天或者更久，看看母龙吃了晚餐之后会不会生病。”

“那我们就做个了结吧，”高文爵士说。“来吧，先生，我来带路。”然后他对埃克索和比特丽丝说：“在山下等着吧，朋友们，在石冢旁边避避风。你们不用等很久的。”

“可是，高文爵士，”比特丽丝说，“我和丈夫用尽了气力才走了这么远。我们愿意和你一起走完这最后的山坡，如果没什么危险的话。”

高文爵士又一次无奈地摇摇头。“那我们就一起走吧，朋友们。我敢说你们不会受到伤害，而且你们在场，我自己也轻松一些。走吧，朋友们，到魁瑞格的巢穴去，说话声音轻一点啊，不要把她惊醒。”

* * *

他们沿着下一条道往上走，山风没那么猛烈了，尽管大家都觉得离天空更近，几乎触手可及。骑士和武士大步走在前面，像两位老伙伴一起散步，不久他们俩和这对老夫妻之间就拉开了距离。

“这是傻事，公主，”两人走着，埃克索说道。“我们跟着他们走干什么呢？谁知道前面还有什么危险？我们回去吧，和那个小男孩一起等着。”

但比特丽丝仍然坚定地向前走。“我希望我们继续走，”她说。“来吧，埃克索，抓住我的手，帮助我不要泄气。因为现在我在想，最担心迷雾消散的人应该是我，不是你。刚才站在那堆石头那儿，我想起来了，丈夫啊，我曾对你做过不好的事情。想起那些事情可能回到我们脑海中，你看看，你握的这只手都在颤抖！到时候你会对我说什么呢？你会不会转身就走，把我丢在这荒山上？这勇敢的武士现在就在我们前面走，我心里有个声音，希望他倒下去，但是我不愿意我们躲躲藏藏。是的，不愿意，埃克索，你不也这样想吗？我们一起走过的路，无论阴云密布还是阳光明媚，我们都坦坦荡荡地面对吧！如果这位武士真要在母龙自己的巢穴里与她战斗，让我们尽力帮他提升斗志吧。有危险的时候喊一声，或者在对手发起猛烈攻击的时候提醒一下，说不定结果就不一样了。”

埃克索任凭她絮絮叨叨，一边走路一边心不在焉地听着，因为他又意识到，在遥远的记忆边缘藏着什么事情：一个风雨交加的夜晚，一次深深的伤害，一种孤独感在他面前裂开，如同深不见底的海水。孤身一人在屋里站着，无法入睡，手里拿着一根点亮的小蜡烛——那个人真的是他，而不是比特丽丝吗？

“我们的儿子后来怎么啦，公主？”他突然问道，随即感觉她的手抓紧了。“他真的在村里等我们吗？会不会我们在全中国找上一年都没有他的踪影？”

“这我也想过，但我不敢说出来。现在还是别说了吧，埃克索，人家会听到的。”

的确，高文爵士和维斯坦已经停了下来，在前面的路上等着，看来两人正在愉快地交谈。埃克索走上来，听见高文爵士正笑着说道：

“我说实话吧，维斯坦阁下，我希望这时候魁瑞格的气息夺走你的记忆，让你忘记为什么和我走在一起。我就等着你问，我这是要把

你领到哪儿呢？可是，从你的眼睛和步伐上看，你可一点儿也没忘记啊！”

维斯坦微笑着。“我有抵抗奇怪魔咒的天赋，先生，我相信国王把这件任务交给我，正是因为这个原因。在东方的沼泽地，我们从没有过像魁瑞格那样的家伙，但是有神奇魔力的动物，我们却知道很多，大家发现我的战友们晕倒了，在梦里游荡，我却不怎么受影响。我想国王选择我，这是唯一的原因吧。我国内的所有战友，几乎都比你身边走的这位更加优秀。”

“这让人很难相信，维斯坦阁下！传言和现场观察，都证明你有罕见的本领。”

“这你过奖啦，先生。昨天，我不得不在你的注视之下打倒那名士兵，我小小的造诣，在你这样才能卓越的人眼里算不了什么，我心里很清楚。打败一名胆怯的卫兵够了，但要获得你的赞赏，恐怕还差得远呢。”

“这真是胡说，先生！你是个了不起的人物，这种话就不要再说了！好啦，朋友们”——高文转过脸来看看着埃克索和比特丽丝——“现在路不远啦。我们趁她还在睡觉，继续走吧。”

他们默默地继续走路。这次埃克索和比特丽丝没有落后，高文和维斯坦似乎被某种庄重的氛围包裹，在前面走路时一步一顿，如同参加重大礼仪。而且地面平缓下来，有点像高原，走起来也不那么累。他们在下面谈论过的那些石块，现在就矗立在前方。他们逐渐走近，埃克索看到，路边有个小山丘，石块在山丘顶部大致排列成半圆形。他还看到一排小石头，像阶梯一样，一直向上通到山丘顶部，看来那上面肯定是个很深的坑。他们现在所到的地方，周围的草或黑或焦，四下里本来就没有树或灌木，这时更增添了荒凉衰败的气氛。到了那粗糙的石头台阶下面，高文让大家停下来，面色郑重地对维斯坦说道：

“先生，你就不最后再考虑一下放弃这个危险的计划吗？为什么不现在回头，去找你那位绑在木桩上的孤儿呢？这时候风里还有他的声音呢。”

武士回头望望他们走过的路，然后又看着高文爵士。“你知道的，先生。我无法回头。带我去看龙吧。”

老骑士若有所思地点点头，好像维斯坦刚刚随口发表了一个非常有趣的观点一样。

“好吧，朋友们，”他说。“那你们不要大声说话，我们吵醒她干什么呢？”

高文爵士在前面带路，爬上山丘，快到那圈岩石的时候，他打了个手势，让大家停下。他小心翼翼地探头张望，过了一会儿，他招手让他们上来，低声说：“站到这儿来，朋友们，你们能看得很清楚。”

埃克索扶着妻子站到身旁一块突出的地方，然后俯身到岩石上看。下面的坑比他想象的更宽、更浅——不像是真正从地上挖出来的，更像一个干枯的水塘。大半个坑被暗淡的阳光照着，似乎全是灰色的石头和沙砾——到边缘兀然变成了焦黑的草——因此除了龙之外，眼睛能看见的唯一的活东西，是一片孤零零的山楂树丛，从坑内深处正中央的那块石头里冒出来，非常惹眼。

至于龙呢，一开始几乎很难判断是死是活。她俯身卧着，脑袋扭在一边，四肢伸开，这姿势让人觉得是具尸体，被人从高处扔进了坑里。实际上，要确定这是条龙，都要花点时间：她瘦弱不堪，看起来更像个虫子一样的爬行动物，习惯了水里的生活，却阴差阳错爬上了岸，现在正脱水呢。她的皮肤本该油滑光亮，有着青铜一样的色泽，现在却白得发黄，让人想起某种鱼的肚子。残剩的翅膀不过是一层层耷拉着的皮，不仔细看的话，会以为是龙身体两侧堆积的树叶。龙的脑袋扭向与灰色砾石相对的那一侧，所以埃克索只能看到一只眼睛，上面有海龟那样的眼皮罩着，无精打采地一睁一闭，遵循着某种内在节奏。这一动作，加上脊背的微微起伏，是魁瑞格仍旧活着的仅有迹象。

“这真的是她吗，埃克索？”比特丽丝低声说。“这可怜的东西，不过是一条有点肉的细绳子罢了，真是她？”

“可是，公主啊，你看那儿，”高文的声音从他们身后传来。“只要她还有气息，她的影响就还在。”

“她生病了吗，或者已经中毒了？”埃克索问。

“她就是老了，先生，就像我们所有人都会老一样。但她还在呼吸，所以梅林的办法仍然有效。”

“这事我开始有点儿想起来了，”埃克索说。“我记得这是梅林的办法，而且是个阴险的办法。”

“阴险，先生？”高文说。“为什么阴险呢？这是唯一的办法。那场战斗还没有真正获胜，我就和四位好战友骑马出发，去驯服这个家伙，那时候她又凶猛又暴躁，驯服之后，梅林才能够在她的气息里种下这伟大的魔咒。他也许是个阴险的人，但这件事他遵从的不仅是亚瑟的命令，还有上帝的旨意。如果没有这条母龙的气息，和平会来吗？先生，看看我们现在的生活！老仇敌变成了兄弟，每个村都是。维斯坦阁下，你看到这儿的情况之后，就没有说过话。我再问一次。难道你不能让这可怜的家伙寿终正寝吗？她的气息不如以前，但即使现在也仍然有魔力。想想吧，先生，一旦这呼吸停止，这片土地上沉睡多年的东西将被唤醒！是啊，我们屠杀了很多，这我承认，也不去管什么强者弱者。上帝也许不会冲我们微笑，但我们让这片土地免于战争。离开这儿吧，先生，我求你啦。我们信奉的神也许不一样，但你的神肯定也和我的一样，会保佑这条龙吧。”

维斯坦转过脸，目光从坑中落到老骑士身上。

“希望过错被人遗忘，犯错者逍遥法外，这是什么样的神呢，先生？”

“你问得好，维斯坦阁下，我知道我的神为我们那天的行为感到不安。但事情过去很久了，死者安息于地下，地上早已覆盖着怡人的绿草。年轻一代对他们一无所知。我求你离开这个地方，让魁瑞格的作用再发挥一段时间。她还能活一两个季节吧，最多了。可是，那么长时间也许就足以让旧伤口永远愈合，让永久的和平降临在我们中间。你看她多么希望活下去，先生！发发慈悲，离开这个地方吧。让这个国家在遗忘中平复。”

“愚蠢啊，先生。蛆虫越活越肥，旧伤口怎么可能愈合？和平建立在屠杀与魔法师的骗术之上，怎么能够持久？我明白这是你虔诚的渴望，渴望你那些恐怖的往事像尘土一样消于无形。但是，它们却在泥土中蛰伏，像死者的白骨一样，等着人们发掘。高文爵士，我的答复没有更改。我必须到下面的坑里去。”

高文爵士庄重地点点头。“我理解，先生。”

“那么我要反过来请求你了，骑士阁下。你愿意把这个地方留给我，回到现在正在山下等着的那匹忠实的老马那儿去吗？”

“你知道我做不到，维斯坦阁下。”

“我也是这么想的。那好吧。”

维斯坦从埃克索和比特丽丝身边走过，走下粗糙的台阶。他又一次到了山丘脚下，四下里看看，然后说话了，声音与原来完全不同：

“高文爵士，这儿的泥土看起来很奇怪。是不是母龙在精力旺盛的时候喷火烧成这个样子的？还是这儿经常遭受雷击，新草长出来之前，地上被焚烧过？”

高文跟着他也下了山丘，这时他走下台阶，两人四下里随便逛了一会儿，像同伴在寻找搭帐篷的地方一样。

“这事儿我也弄不明白，维斯坦阁下，”高文说道。“就算年轻的时候，她也一直在上面，我想地面应该不是魁瑞格烧焦的。也许一直就是这样，我们把她移到这儿放进巢穴的时候，就是这样的。”高文跺跺脚，用脚后跟试一试地面。“不过，地面很不错啊，先生。”

“是啊。”维斯坦背对着高文，也在用脚测试地面。

“不过，也许还不够宽？”骑士说道。“你看那条边到了悬崖上。人在这儿倒下，肯定能在友好的土地上安息，但他的血也许会很快流过烧焦的草地，从那边淌到崖下去。我可不是说你的啊，先生，但我可不希望自己的内脏挂在崖壁上，像白色的海鸥粪便一样！”

两人都大笑起来，接着维斯坦说：

“这是不必要的担心，先生。你看，那边悬崖前的地面要略微高一些。至于另外那一边嘛，距离很远，而且还要先经过一大片干渴的泥土呢。”

“观察很细致。那好吧，这个地方不错！”高文爵士仰头看着埃克索和比特丽丝，他们俩仍旧站在那块突出的地方，不过现在都背对着坑。“埃克索阁下，”他兴冲冲地喊道，“你一直是个外交高手。现在，你还愿意用你的雄辩之术，让我们两人像朋友一样离开这个地方吗？”

“对不起，高文爵士。你多次帮助我们，我们感谢你。但是，我们到这儿来，是要看着魁瑞格死，如果你要守护她，那我和我妻子就不能帮你说话了。在这件事情上，我们站在维斯坦阁下一边。”

“这我明白了，先生。那么，至少让我提个要求。我并不害怕面前这个人。但是，如果倒下去的是我，你们能不能把我的好霍拉斯带

下山去？他肯定会欢迎两个好心的不列颠人骑在背上。你们也许会以为，他可能会哼哼唧唧发牢骚，但你们两人对他来说不会太重。带着我亲爱的霍拉斯离开这里，等你们用不上他了，给他找块上好的绿草地，让他一边尽情地吃，一边想想过去的事情吧。你们可以帮我这个忙吗，朋友？”

“我们将很高兴帮忙，先生，而且你的马还是我们的救星呢，这下山的路可不容易。”

“说起这件事，先生。”高文这时候已经到了山丘脚下。“之前我曾劝你们利用那条河，我现在再说一次。让霍拉斯驮着你们下山，你们一到河边，就找艘船往东走。马鞍里有锡块和金币，可以支付船费。”

“我们感谢你，先生。你慷慨大方，令我们感动。”

“但是，高文爵士，”比特丽丝说。“如果你的马驮我们两人下山，那么你倒下去之后，尸体怎么下山呢？你太好心了，忘记考虑自己的尸体啦。把你埋葬在这么个孤零零的地方，我们会很难过的。”

有一刻，老骑士的面色变得庄重起来，几乎有些悲怆。但是，那张脸上随即绽出笑容来，他说：“好啦，夫人。我还指望能获胜呢，我们就不要讨论怎么埋葬了吧！反正现在对我来说，这座山也不见得比其他地方更加孤单，就算这场战斗不顺利，我还担心我的鬼魂在低地上要看着不想看的场景呢。所以不要谈论尸体啦，夫人！维斯坦阁下，如果运气不在你那边，你有没有什么事要请这两位朋友帮忙呢？”

“和你一样，先生，我也宁愿不去考虑失败。然而，你虽然年纪大了，却是个令人生畏的对手，这一点只有大傻瓜才会否认。所以我也要麻烦这对好心的夫妻，请你们帮个忙。如果我不在了，请你们把埃德温阁下送到一个好心的村子里去，并请转告他，我把他看作我最优秀的徒弟。”

“我们答应你，先生，”埃克索说。“我们会为他找到最好的村子，尽管他身上带着特殊的伤，前途不容乐观。”

“说得好。这提醒了我，我应该更加努力，不能在这次较量中倒下。好啦，高文爵士，我们可以开始了吧？”

“还有一个请求，”老骑士说，“这次是向你提的，维斯坦阁下。这事我提起来有些不好意思，因为与刚才我们愉快讨论的话题有

关。先生，我说的是拔剑的问题。我年纪大了，要把这件旧武器从剑鞘里拔出来，我发现要花很长时间，愚蠢得很。如果我们两人面对面，剑都不拔的话，恐怕我就只能供你戏耍了，我知道你拔剑有多快。哎呀，先生，我还在跳来跳去，一边咒骂一边不停地拽这个铁家伙，而你却优哉游哉，心里想是该砍下我的脑袋呢，还是该唱首颂歌慢慢等着！不过，如果我们同意先各自把剑拔出来……哎呀，这可真让我难为情，先生！”

“不用再说了，高文爵士。靠拔剑快占对手便宜的武士，我看也没什么了不起。我们就听你的建议，先把剑拔出来再斗吧。”

“谢谢你，先生。作为回报，虽然我看你的胳膊绑了绷带，但我发誓绝不占这个便宜。”

“我很感谢，先生，虽然这只是个小伤。”

“那好吧，先生。承蒙俯允。”

老骑士拔出了剑——真的花了不少时间——将剑插在地上，像他之前在巨人冢时那样。但这次他没有靠在剑上，而是站在那儿，上上下下打量着这件武器，似乎既喜爱又厌倦。然后他双手握住剑，举在空中——高文的姿势，有一种无上的威仪。

“我要转过脸去了，埃克索，”比特丽丝说。“结束了跟我说，最好干净利落，不要受长罪。”

一开始，两人都将剑尖朝下，这样胳膊不会疲惫。埃克索身在高处，能清楚地看到两个人的位置：在最多五步开外的地方，维斯坦的身体略略向左斜，并非直接面对着对手。这样的姿势，两人保持了一会儿，然后维斯坦向右边缓缓跨了三步，所以从表面上看，他朝外的那侧肩膀已不在剑所能保护的范围之内。但是，要利用这一点，高文就必须快速拉近两人的距离。骑士盯着武士，目光中含有指责的意味，同时也跟着小心迈步向右边移动，埃克索看在眼里，并不感到奇怪。与此同时，维斯坦改变了双手握剑的位置，埃克索不太确定高文是否注意到了这一变化——维斯坦的身体有可能挡住了骑士的视线。但现在高文也在改变握剑姿势，让剑的重量从右臂落到左臂。然后两人保持着新的姿势，在不知情的旁观者眼里，他们两人的姿势、距离，可能与之前完全一样。但是，埃克索能感觉到，新的位置有不一样的含义。他已经很久没有如此细致地观察战斗了，但仍然有一种沮丧的感觉，好像眼前发生的一切，自己所能看到的，连一半都不到。

不过，他知道，两人之间的角斗已经到了关键时刻；不可能这样一直持续下去，很快其中一方就必须出击。

比特丽丝贴在他身上。“他是母龙的守护人，”她说，“可他对我们很好。要不是他，谁知道我们这时候在哪儿呢，埃克索，看着他倒下去，我很难过。”

他把比特丽丝抱紧。过了一会儿，他放开她，向下爬了一点儿，能更清楚地看看躺在地上的高文。维斯坦说得对：地面在悬崖边上略微隆起，血流到那儿便聚集起来，不会洒下崖壁。他看在眼里，感到无比凄凉，但与此同时，他也觉得——虽然只是一种隐隐约约的感受——心中某种强烈的愤怒，埋藏已久，现在终于平息了。

“了不起啊，先生，”埃克索朝下面喊道。“现在，你和母龙之间没有阻碍啦。”

维斯坦一直低头看着倒在地上的骑士，这时他走到山丘脚下，步伐缓慢，多少有些摇晃，他抬头向上望着，脸上神情迷茫，如在梦中。

“很久以前，”他说，“我就学会了在战斗中不畏惧死神。但是，面对这位骑士的时候，我想我听到了死神的脚步声，在我身后轻轻传来。他年纪很大，但差点占了上风。”

这时候，武士似乎意识到，自己手里还拿着剑，他似乎打算把剑插进山丘脚下的松软泥土里，但在最后一刻住了手，剑尖几乎都碰到泥土了。他直起身子，说道：“这时候把剑擦干净干什么？为什么不让骑士的血和母龙的血合在一起呢？”

他沿着山丘一侧走上来，脚步仍然不稳，像喝醉了酒。他从他们两人身旁走过，靠着一块石头探出身体，眼睛盯着下面的坑，肩膀随着呼吸起伏。

“维斯坦阁下，”比特丽丝轻声说。“我们现在都急于看你杀死魁瑞格。不过，结束之后，你能埋葬这位可怜的骑士吗？我丈夫很疲惫，还要留点儿力气赶路呢。”

“亚瑟令人憎恨，他是亚瑟的亲戚，”维斯坦转脸对她说，“不过，我也不会把他的尸体丢给乌鸦。放心吧，夫人，我会照顾他，甚至可能把他葬到这坑里，让他与守护了很久的龙待在一起。”

“那就快点，先生，”比特丽丝说，“结束任务吧。龙虽然很虚弱，但不杀了它，我们心里就不踏实。”

然而，维斯坦似乎听不见她的话了，因为他正盯着埃克索，脸上有种悠远的神情。

“你没事吧，先生？”埃克索开口问道。

“埃克索阁下，”武士说，“我们以后也许就不会见面了。所以请允许我最后再问一次。有个温和的不列颠人，我小时候就认识，像智慧的王子一样经过我们的村庄，让人们梦想着各种办法，使无辜者免受战争的灾祸，那个人是你吗？如果你还记得，我请求你在我们分手之前告诉我。”

“就算我是那个人，先生，今天我也只能透过这条龙的气息，才能看到他，我看到的是个做着梦的傻瓜，但他的用心是善良的，还要亲眼看着庄重的誓言毁于残酷的屠杀。在撒克逊村庄中传播协议的，还有其他人；但是，如果你能多少回忆起我的面孔，又何必去假设那是旁人呢？”

“先生，我们刚见面的时候，我想到过，但不能确定。感谢你坦诚相告。”

“那么，也请你对我坦言，因为从昨天见面开始，这件事就在我心里记挂着，说实话，也许在此之前我早就想着这事了。你想起来的这个人，维斯坦阁下，你想找他报仇吗？”

“你在说什么呢，丈夫？”比特丽丝挤到前面来，站在埃克索和武士之间。“你和这位武士之间，能有什么争执呢？如果有，那他得先把我打倒。”

“公主啊，维斯坦阁下谈的是我很久以前蜕去的一层皮，那时候我们还没见面呢。我曾希望那层皮丢在被人遗忘的路上，早就碎成齏粉。”然后又对维斯坦说：“你怎么说呢，先生？你的剑上仍然滴着血。如果你渴望的是复仇，那这件事很容易，不过我请求你保护我亲爱的妻子，她在这儿为我发抖呢。”

“我曾远远地倾慕着那个人，后来，有时候我的确希望他遭到残酷惩罚，为他在背叛中所起的作用负责。但是，今天我看到，他当初的行为并非欺诈，他对自己的同胞和我的族人都怀有善意。如果我再遇到他，先生，我会请他和平地离开，虽然我知道，现在和平不会持久了。现在请让一让吧，朋友们，让我下去完成我的任务。”

在下方的坑中，龙的位置、姿势仍然和原来一样：就算魁瑞格的感官在警告她，附近来了陌生人——尤其是沿着陡峭的坑壁下来的那个人——从外表上也看不出任何迹象。她脊骨的一起一伏，也许比原来更明显一点？那眼睛一睁一闭，是不是也比原来急一些？埃克索不确定。但是，就在盯着下面那条龙的时候，他想到一个念头：那片山楂树丛——坑里除了母龙之外的唯一活物——已经成了母龙的巨大慰藉，此时此刻，她在心里仍然想爬过去。埃克索知道，这个念头有些异想天开，可是他越看越觉得有道理。否则这样的地方怎么能长出一片孤零零的树丛呢？难道不是梅林自己让树长在这儿，给母龙做个伴儿的吗？

维斯坦继续往下走，剑没有插入剑鞘。他的目光一直没有离开躺在地上的龙，好像她会突然起身，变成一个可怕的魔鬼一样。有一下他脚下没站稳，把剑插到地里，以免背部着地一直往下滑。石头和沙砾沿着土坡纷纷落下，但魁瑞格仍然没有反应。

接着，维斯坦安全地到了地面。他擦擦额头，望望上面的埃克索和比特丽丝，然后朝母龙走去，在几步开外的地方停下来。他举起剑，开始检查剑刃，发现刃口上有一条条的血迹，他似乎吃了一惊。维斯坦一动不动，就保持着这个样子，以至于埃克索心里想，自从取胜之后，武士就有一种奇怪的情绪，难道因此一时忘了自己到坑里的目的了？

但是，与之前和老骑士战斗时一样，维斯坦突然开始向前移动。他没有跑，而是快步走，人从龙的身体上越过，但步伐并没有紊乱，然后他加快了脚步，好像急着赶到坑的另一侧一样。但是，在此过程中，他的剑划了一道又急又低的弧线，埃克索看见母龙的脑袋飞到空中，滚了几下，最后在石头地上停住不动了。不过，脑袋并没有在地上停多久，汹涌的血液先在脑袋两侧分开流过，随后脑袋便浮了起来，在坑底快速漂过去，到山楂树丛那儿停了下来，卡住不动了，喉咙朝上向着天空。这场景让埃克索想起了高文在地道里砍下来的那条狗怪的脑袋，心中又感到一阵凄凉。他强迫自己扭过头去，不看母龙，而去看维斯坦的身形：他一直在走，从没停下脚步。这时候武士一边避开漫延的血池，一边绕路回来，到了坑边，开始往上爬，手里的剑仍然没有放回剑鞘。

“结束了，埃克索，”比特丽丝说。

“是的，公主。不过，我还有个问题想问武士。”

* * *

维斯坦从坑里爬出来，花了很长时间，令人感到意外。最后，他终于来到两人面前，显得垂头丧气，一点儿凯旋的模样也没有。他一言不发，在坑口边缘的黑色地面上坐下，终于把手里的剑深深插进土里。他眼神空洞，但他没有看坑里，而是望着远处，望着天上的云和淡灰色的山峦。

过了一会儿，比特丽丝走过去，轻轻碰了碰他的胳膊。“我们感谢你这一举动，维斯坦阁下，”她说。“这块土地上还有很多人，如果在场的话，也会感谢你。为什么这么沮丧呢？”

“沮丧？没关系，夫人，我的精神很快就会好起来。就是这下子……”维斯坦转过脸去，又一次凝视着天边的云。然后他说道：

“也许我和你们不列颠人相处太久了。鄙视你们当中的懦弱者，钦佩、热爱你们当中的优秀者，而且从我很小的时候起，就一直是这样。现在我坐在这儿发抖，不是因为疲惫，而是因为想起了我自己亲手做过的事情。我必须快点狠下心来，否则就只能成为国王的软弱武士，不能在以后的事情中尽力。”

“你这说的是什么呢，先生？”比特丽丝问。“现在还有什么别的任务等着你吗？”

“等着我的是公正与复仇，夫人。两者都耽搁很久了，所以很快就会到来。可是，现在时候快到了，我发现自己心里却颤抖起来，像个姑娘一样。这只能是因为我在你们当中待得太久了。”

“你之前对我说过的话，先生，”埃克索说，“我也不是没有留意。你说，你会希望我在和平中离开，虽然和平不会持久了。当时我就想，你这是什么意思呢，连你下坑的时候我还在想。现在你可以给我们解释解释吗？”

“看得出来，埃克索阁下，你已经开始明白了。我的国王派我来杀死这条母龙，不仅是为了纪念很久以前被屠杀的同胞。你开始明白了，先生，这条龙一死，就为即将到来的征服铺平了道路。”

“征服，先生？”埃克索靠到他身边。“这怎么可能呢，维斯坦阁下？难道你们的撒克逊军队壮大了，增加了很多海外的兄弟？或者是你们的武士异常勇猛，所以打算征服和平已久的土地？”

“没错，我们的军队在数量上还很单薄，连东方的沼泽地也不例外。但是，你看看这片土地。每个山谷、每条河流，现在都有撒克逊人的村庄，每个村庄都有强壮的汉子和即将长大的男孩。我们的军队横扫西方之时，这些村庄的人会壮大我们的力量。”

“你说这话，大概是刚才取得了胜利，昏了头吧，维斯坦阁下，”比特丽丝说。“这怎么可能呢？你自己亲眼看到了，这儿的每个村庄，你的同胞和我的同胞都生活在一起。从小就爱着的邻居，他们怎么可能去下手呢？”

“夫人，你看看你丈夫的脸。我坐在这儿，好像面前有让人无法睁眼的强光一样，为什么呢？你丈夫已经开始明白了。”

“没错，公主，武士的话让我不寒而栗。我和你希望魁瑞格死掉，我们只想着自己的宝贵记忆。可是，多少古老的仇恨将在这块土地上复活，谁又知道呢？我们只好希望上帝能找到办法，维系两族之间的纽带，可习俗与猜忌一直让我们难以团结。如果对土地和征服的新欲望，被巧舌之輩嫁接到古老的怨恨之上，谁知道会带来什么灾祸呢？”

“惧怕就对啦，先生，”维斯坦说。“巨人，以前埋在地下，现在动起来啦。他肯定很快就会起来，到那时候，我们之间的友好纽带，就会像小女孩用细细的花茎打的结一样，脆弱不堪。人们会在夜间烧掉邻居的房子。清晨将孩子们吊死在树上。河水发臭，河上漂着泡了很多天的肿胀尸体。我们的军队一面推进，一面会因为愤怒和复仇的渴望而继续壮大。对你们不列颠人来说，那将是向你们滚去的一个大火球。你们要么逃跑，要么毁灭。一个个国家会相继沦陷，这儿会成为一块全新的土地，撒克逊人的土地，没有痕迹表明你们曾在这儿生活过，除了一两群无人照看的绵羊，在山里游荡。”

“他说得对吗，埃克索？他肯定是头脑发热，才这么说的吧？”

“他有可能说错了，公主，但这不是头脑发热。母龙死了，亚瑟的影子也会慢慢消失。”然后他对维斯坦说：“我感到欣慰，先生，你描述的这些可怕景象，至少你自己没有引以为乐。”

“如果我能够的话，埃克索阁下，我会引以为乐的，因为那将是正当的复仇。但是，我在你们当中生活得太久，变得软弱了，就算我努力，心中也有个声音反对这仇恨的火焰。这是个弱点，让我感到羞耻，但我很快会用我亲手训练出来的人代替我的位置，他的意志比我要纯粹得多。”

“你说的是埃德温阁下，先生？”

“是的，现在母龙被杀，对他的影响也就没了，我敢说他很快就会更加镇定。那个男孩有真正的武士精神，这样的人很少。其余的他很快就能学会，我会锻炼他的心，不允许他像我这样，被柔弱的情感侵入。在我们未来的事业中，他将毫不留情。”

“维斯坦阁下，”比特丽丝说，“我还是不知道，你这究竟是不是头脑发热的疯话。但我和我丈夫体力越来越弱，我们必须回到下面去找地方休息了。你能记住你的承诺，好好埋葬这位好心的骑士吗？”

“我承诺，夫人，不过我担心那些鸟现在就找到了他。好朋友们，你们提前获得了警告，有足够的时间逃走。坐上骑士的马，快点离开这儿吧。如果一定要去，那就去找你们儿子的村庄吧，但最多逗留一两天，在我们的军队到来之前，谁知道村子里什么时候会烧起战火呢？你们的儿子如果不肯听从你们的警告，那就丢下他，尽可能往西边跑。你们还有可能跑在屠杀前头。现在就去吧，找到骑士的马。如果你们发现埃德温阁下镇定多了，奇怪的烧退去了，那就把他放开，让他上来找我。他未来要经历大风大浪，我希望他看看这个地方，看看倒下的骑士和死掉的母龙，统统在他脚下。而且，现在我想起来了，他能用一两块石头挖坟呢！好啦，快点走吧，好心的朋友们，就此别过。”

第十六章

那头山羊一直在埃德温脑袋旁边的草地上踩着，已经有一会儿了。为什么它一定要靠得这么近呢？虽然他们两个绑在同一根木桩上，但是互不相扰的地方还是有的吧。

埃德温本来可以站起身来，把山羊赶走，但他感觉太累了。刚才疲惫感突然袭来，势不可挡，以至于他一头栽倒在地，一侧脸颊贴在草上。他迷迷糊糊快睡着了，脑海里却突然闪过一个念头：母亲已经走了，于是又被惊醒过来。他身体没动，眼睛也一直闭着，但他对着地面说：“母亲。我们来啦。就是现在要耽搁一会儿。”

没有回答，他感觉到巨大的空虚在心里漫延开来。后来他一直半睡半醒，期间曾向她呼喊了好几次，回答他的只有沉寂。现在，这头山羊却在啃噬他耳朵旁边的草。

“原谅我，母亲，”他轻声对着土地说。“他们绑住了我。我无法脱身。”

上方有人的声音。这时他才意识到，周围脚步声不是山羊发出的。有人在解开他的双手，绳子从身体下面抽出去。一只温柔的手托起他的头，他睁开眼睛，看见那位老太太——比特丽丝夫人——正低头看着自己。他发现身上的绑绳已经解开，便站了起来。

一条腿的膝盖疼得厉害，一阵风吹得他摇摇晃晃，但他还能保持平衡。他看看周围：灰色的天空，绵延的大地，下一座山顶上的岩石。不久前，那些岩石对他至关重要，可现在她走了，这一点毋庸置疑。他想起了武士说过的话：救援未必来得及，但报仇的机会多得是。如果真是这样，那么，抓走他母亲的那些人，定要付出高昂的代价。

没有维斯坦的踪迹。只有那对年长的夫妻在这儿，但埃德温也感到欣慰。他们站在他面前，关切地盯着他。看到好心的比特丽丝夫人，他感觉突然要哭出来一样。但是，埃德温意识到，她好像在说什么话——和维斯坦有关，于是努力去听。

她的撒克逊话不太好懂，风似乎把她的话带走了。最后，他打断她的话，问道：“维斯坦阁下倒下了吗？”

她住了口，但没有作答。他又重复了一遍，提高嗓门盖过了风的声音，这时比特丽丝才使劲摇了摇头，说道：

“你没听到我的话吗，埃德温阁下？我告诉你，维斯坦阁下没事，顺那条路上去，他在那儿等你。”

这消息让他备感欣慰，他撒腿就跑，但随即发现自己头晕目眩，还没到路上就只好停了下来。他站稳了，然后回头望，看见那对年老的夫妻已经朝这边走了几步。这时埃德温注意到，他们非常虚弱。在风中，两人站在一起，互相依靠着，与他第一次见到他们的时候相比，显得老了许多。他们还有力气下山吗？现在他们正望着他，表情很奇怪，在他们身后，那头山羊也安静下来了，正瞪大眼睛看着他。埃德温心里闪过一个奇怪的念头：这一刻自己从头到脚全是血，所以大家都盯着他。他低头一看，衣服上有泥巴和草，除此之外，他没发现什么特别的。

那位老头子突然喊了什么话。是不列颠人的语言，埃德温听不懂。是警告吗？还是要求？接着比特丽丝夫人的声音从风中传来。

“埃德温阁下！我们两人都求你一件事。以后的日子里，记住我们啊。记住我们，记住你还是个男孩的时候，我们之间的友谊。”

听到这话的时候，埃德温想起了另外一件事：他对武士的承诺；仇恨所有不列颠人的义务。不过，维斯坦肯定没打算把这对好心的夫妇也包括在内吧。埃克索阁下呢，正颤巍巍地将一只手举到空中。这是要告别呢，还是打算拦住他？

埃德温转过身去，这次他奔跑的时候，虽然风从一侧猛烈地吹着，他的身体并没有让他失望。他的母亲已经走了，很可能永远也不会回来了，但武士还在，正等着他。路越来越陡，膝盖也越来越疼，但他继续奔跑着。

第十七章

我在松树下躲雨，他们在暴风雨中骑马而来。这种天气，可不适合年纪这么大的夫妇，那匹马也同样疲惫不堪。老头子是不是担心，再多走一步，马的心脏就会受不了？否则，离最近的树也只有二十来步了，为什么要在泥浆中停下来呢？不过，马在滂沱大雨中耐心地站着，等着老头子把她扶下来。就算是图画里的人物，动作也不可能这么慢吧？“来吧，朋友们，”我冲他们喊道。“快点，来躲一躲。”

两人都没听到。也许是雨水的嘶嘶声，堵住了他们的耳朵？或者是因为他们上了年纪？我又喊了一声，这次老头子四下里望望，总算看见了我。她终于从马上滑下来，他张臂接住，虽然她又瘦又小，但我看他也没什么力气了，未必抱得动她。所以我离开避雨的地方，老头子转过脸，看见我踩着泥水在草地上跑，吃了一惊。不过他还是接受了我的帮助，因为他自己不是马上就要瘫倒了吗？他妻子的胳膊还搂着他的脖子呢。我从他手里把她接过来，急忙跑到树下，她的分量对我来说毫不费力。我听见老头子在我后面喘着气。妻子给陌生人抱着，也许他有些担心。于是我将她轻轻放下来，表示我是好心帮忙，没有别的意思。我把她的头靠在柔软的树皮上，上面遮蔽得很严实，偶尔有一两滴雨落在她身边。

老头子在她身旁蹲下来，说着鼓励的话，我走到一旁，不想干扰他们的亲密举动。我原来避雨的地方在树林和开阔地交界处，我回到那儿，看着滂沱大雨横扫过高沼地。这么大的雨，找个地方躲一躲，谁能怪罪我呢？耽搁的路程，我能轻松赶上，还能更好地迎接后面几个星期的连续劳作。我听见他们在我身后谈话，可我能怎么办呢？难道为了避开他们的喃喃交谈，我要站到雨里去？

“公主啊，你这是发烧了说胡话。”

“不，不是的，埃克索，”她说。“是回想起来的，还有别的呢。我们之前怎么会忘了呢？我们的儿子现在住在一座岛上。到了一个隐秘的小海湾，就能看到岛，现在肯定离我们不远了。”

“怎么会这样呢，公主？”

“你没有听见吗，埃克索？我现在都能听见呢。我们这不是到了大海附近吗？”

“只是下雨，公主。也许是条河。”

“以前我们被迷雾罩着，埃克索，所以忘记了，但现在记忆开始清晰了。附近有座岛，我们的儿子在那儿等着。埃克索，你没有听见大海的声音吗？”

“公主啊，是你发烧了。我们很快就能找到地方休息，你又会好起来的。”

“问问这位陌生人吧，埃克索。这地方他比我们熟悉。问他附近有没有海湾。”

“公主啊，他就是个帮助我们的好心人。在这种事情上他怎么会有特别的智慧呢？”

“问问他，埃克索。能有什么坏处呢？”

我该继续沉默吗？我该怎么办？我转过身，说道：“先生，这位好心的女士是对的。”老头子吃了一惊，眼神中流露出恐惧。我心里有点儿希望再次沉默，转过身，去看那匹在雨中屹立不动的老马。可是，我既然已经开口了，就必须说下去。我伸手一指，越过他们蜷缩之处，指向后方。

“那儿有条道，在那些树中间，一直走，就到了女士所说的海湾。岸边大多是鹅卵石，不过，如果潮水低，比如现在这时候，石头就会让位于沙子。好心的女士，你说的没错。往海里去路不远，有一座小岛。”

他们默默地看着我，她疲惫而开心，他则愈加恐惧。他们就一直不说话吗？还是想要我继续说？

“我看了天，”我说。“雨很快就会停，傍晚会放晴。如果你们希望我划船送你们上岛，我很愿意效劳。”

“埃克索，我说吧！”

“那么你是船夫吗，先生？”老头子严肃地问。“我们以前有没有在哪儿见过？”

“没错，我是船夫，”我告诉他。“我们有没有见过，我记不得了，我每天要划船很长时间，送很多人。”

老头子看上去更加害怕了，他蹲在妻子身旁，把她紧紧抱住。我觉得最好还是换个话题，于是说道：

“你的马还在雨里站着呢。虽然没有拴，也没什么阻拦他到附近的树下去。”

“那是匹老战马，先生。”老头子很高兴不谈海湾的事情，所以急切地回答道。“他仍然遵守纪律，虽然他的主人已经不在。我们马上就去照顾他，我们最近答应过他勇敢的主人。不过我刚才在担心我亲爱的妻子。先生，你知道哪儿能找到休息的地方，生个火给她取暖吗？”

我不能撒谎，而且我有自己的职责。“巧得很，”我回答，“海湾上就有个休息的小地方。是我自己搭的，用树枝和破布盖了个简单的屋顶。不到一个小时前，我留了个火堆在旁边，应该还可以重新点着。”

他犹豫着，小心查看我脸上的表情。老妇人现在闭上了眼睛，头靠在他肩膀上。他说，“船夫，我妻子刚才说那些话，是因为发烧了。我们不需要什么岛。最好我们还是在这些友好的树下躲躲雨，等雨停了，我们就继续赶路。”

“埃克索，你在说什么呢？”女人睁开眼睛，说道。“我们的儿子等待的时间还不够长吗？让这位好心的船夫带我们去海湾。”

老头子仍在犹豫，但他能感觉到妻子在怀里发抖，他望着我，眼里充满着绝望的祈求。

“如果你愿意，”我说，“我可以抱着这位好心的女士，到海湾去的一路上就能轻松一些。”

“我自己来抱她，先生，”他说，像是打了败仗却仍然一身傲气。“如果她自己不能走过去，那就让我用臂膀抱她过去。”

该怎么回答这句话呢？毕竟现在丈夫几乎和妻子一样虚弱。

“海湾不远，”我轻声说。“但下去的路很陡，坑坑洼洼，还有盘根错节的树根。请允许我来抱她，先生。这是最安全的。只要路上好走，你就一直在我旁边。行啦，等雨停了，我们就快点下去，你看这位好心的女士都冷得发抖。”

不久，雨停了，我抱着她走下山，老头子在后面踉踉跄跄地跟着，等我们来到海边的时候，黑色的云朵好像被一只手不耐烦地推到了天空的一侧。红色的晚霞洒满海滨，裹着雾气的太阳正缓缓向海平面落去，我的船在海浪里摇摆着。我再次表现了我的温柔，将她放到

干兽皮和树枝铺成的粗糙垫子上，头靠着一块长满苔藓的石头。我还没来得及迈步走开，他就跑过来手忙脚乱地照顾妻子。

“看那边，”我在沉睡的火堆旁蹲下来，说道。“岛在那儿。”

老妇人略微偏一下头，就能看到大海，她低声叫了出来。他则必须在坚硬的鹅卵石上转过身子才能看见。他瞪大眼睛望着海面，不时流露出疑惑的神情。

“那儿，朋友，”我说。“看那边。在海岸和地平线中间的地方。”

“我的眼睛不太好，”他说。“对啦，我想现在我看到了。那是树冠吗？还是高高低低的岩石？”

“那应该是树，朋友，因为那座岛是个温和的地方。”说话的时候，我一直在折小树枝，照顾火堆。他们两人都望着海上的岛，我跪下来，吹火堆的余烬，地上的石头硌得我骨头都疼。这个男人和这个女人，难道不是自愿到这儿来的吗？让他们决定自己的路吧，我心里想。

“现在感觉到暖和一点儿了吗，公主？”他叫道。“很快你就能好起来啦。”

“我看到岛了，埃克索，”她说。我打扰了他们的亲密一刻，可又有什么办法呢？“我们的儿子就在那儿等着。这件事情我们以前竟然忘了，真奇怪。”

他嘟囔了一句，算是回答，我看见他又开始心神不宁。“当然啦，公主，”他说，“我们还没决定吧。我们真的要渡海到那个地方去吗？而且，我们也没办法付船费，锡块和金币都丢在马背上了。”

我该沉默吗？“那没有关系，朋友们，”我说。“你们欠我的，我很愿意回头再到马鞍里拿。那匹马不会走远的。”有些人可能会说这是狡猾，但我说这话，只是出于好心，我很清楚以后再也不会碰到那匹马了。他们继续低声交谈，我一直背对着他们，照顾火堆。我又哪里希望打扰他们呢？可是，她却提高了声音，话也说得比之前更加清晰。

“船夫，”她说。“我曾听过一个传说，也许在我还是孩子的时候吧。说是有个岛，树木葱葱、溪水潺潺，但是那个地方有一些奇怪的特点。很多人渡海上了岛，但是，对在岛上居住的每个人来说，好

像他是一个人在岛上行走，他的邻居，他既看不见也听不见。我们面前的这座岛是这样的吗，先生？”

我继续折着小树枝，小心地放在火苗周围。“好女士啊，符合你描述的岛，我知道好几个呢。这座岛是不是，谁知道啊？”

这是个回避问题的回答，也让她胆子更大。“我还听说了，船夫，”她说，“有些时候，那些奇怪的影响会不起作用。某些旅行者能够获得豁免。我听的这消息对吗，先生？”

“亲爱的女士，”我说，“我只是个普通的船夫。这些问题，可不是我能谈论的。不过，既然这儿没有别人，让我补充一点儿吧。我听人说过，某些时候，或许是风暴之中，就像刚才过去的那场风暴，又或许是夏天某个月圆的夜晚，岛上的人可能感觉到其他人和他一起在风中移动。这可能就是你以前听说过的情况，好心的女士。”

“不，船夫，”她说，“还有别的。我听说，一个男人和一个女人一起过了一辈子，爱的纽带异常牢固，就可以到岛上去，不会孤零零地在岛上游荡。我听说他们就可以享受互相陪伴之乐，和以前那么多年一样。我听说的这件事是真的吗，船夫？”

“我再说一遍吧，好心的女士啊。我只是个船夫，任务是把想过去的人渡过去。我只能谈我每天劳作中看到的事情。”

“可是，现在这里只有你能指引我们，船夫。所以我要问你，先生。如果你现在把我和我丈夫渡过去，我们能不分开，而是像现在这样手挽着手在岛上走吗？”

“那好吧，好心的女士。我跟你坦诚地说吧。你和你丈夫这样的夫妻，我们这些船夫很少遇到。你们骑着马在雨里走的时候，我就看出来，你们极其罕见地爱着对方。所以，毫无疑问，你们会得到许可，能一起住到岛上。这你可以放心。”

“你的话让我非常高兴，船夫，”她说，身体上的一根弦似乎松了下来。接着她说：“谁知道呢？在风暴中，或者平静的月圆之夜，我和埃克索也许还能看见儿子就在身边呢。说不定还能与他说一两句话。”

火堆现在烧得很平稳，于是我站起身来。“看那儿，”我指着海上，说道。“船就在浅水中。不过，我把桨藏在附近一个山洞，放在一个有小鱼的水潭里。朋友们，现在我去取船桨，我走之后，你们两

人可以无拘无束地谈话，不用顾忌我在旁边啦。如果你们希望坐船上岛，那就做个最终的决定吧。我先离开一下。”

但是，她却没那么轻易放过我。“船夫啊，你走之前，再说句话，”她说。“告诉我们，你回来的时候，在答应渡我们上岛之前，是不是打算轮流问我们问题。因为我听人说过，船夫用这种方法，找出那些能在岛上一起生活的不同寻常的夫妻。”

他们都盯着我，黄昏的光落在两人脸上，我看见他的脸上满是猜疑。我看着她的眼睛，没看他。

“好心的女士啊，”我说，“我感谢你的提醒。之前很匆忙，把按照传统应该做的事情给忘了。就是像你所说的那样，不过对你们俩这样做，只是出于惯例。我说过，一开始我就看出来，罕见的恩爱把你们这对夫妻连在一起。好啦，朋友们，我要走啦，时间不多了。做好决定等我回来吧。”

于是我离开他们，走过黄昏下的海滨，海浪的声音越来越响，脚下的石头慢慢变成了潮湿的沙子。每次我一回头，看到的都是同一幅景象，不过每次都要小一点儿：白头发的老人，蹲在他的女人面前，庄重地交谈着。她靠在石头上，被遮住了，几乎看不到，只能看见她说话时有一只手一起一伏。一对恩爱的夫妻，但我有我的职责，我继续朝洞里走，去拿我的船桨。

扛着船桨回来的时候，我先从他们的眼睛里看出了他们的决定，然后才听见他说道：“我们请你送我们上岛，船夫。”

“那么，我们快点上船吧，我已经耽搁啦。”说着，我转过身，似乎是要朝海那边跑。但是，我随即又转身回来，说，“哎呀，还要等等。我们先必须走一走这愚蠢的形式。好吧，朋友们，请听我说。好心的先生，请你现在起身，离我们远一点儿。等你听不见了，我就和你温柔的妻子说几句话。她坐在那儿就行了，不用动。过一会儿，无论你站在海滩上什么地方，我都会去找你。我们很快就能谈完，然后回到这儿，带着好心的女士一起上船。”

他瞪大眼睛看着我，现在他的半颗心希望能够信任我。最后他说道：“很好，船夫。我就到这海滩上逛一会儿。”又对他的女人说，“我们就分开一下子，公主。”

“不用担心，埃克索，”她说。“我体力恢复了不少，在这位好心人的保护下很安全。”

他走开了，慢慢走到海湾东边崖壁的巨大阴影下。鸟群在他面前散开，但很快又飞回来，继续像刚才一样在海草和石头上啄食。他走得有些一瘸一拐，背弯着，一副快要被打败的样子，但我能看出来，他体内仍有小小的火苗。

女人坐在我面前，抬头微微一笑。我问什么呢？

“不要害怕我的问题，好心的女士，”我说。这时候我希望附近有一堵长长的墙，跟她谈话的时候，我的脸可以对着墙，但是附近没有墙，只有傍晚的轻风，落日的余晖照在我脸上。我把袍子拉到膝盖上，在她面前蹲下，我看见她丈夫这么做过。

“我不害怕你的问题，船夫，”她轻声说。“因为我知道心里对他是什么感受。你想问什么，就问吧。我的回答会是诚实的，只会证明一个结果。”

我问了一两个问题，常见的问题，这种事情难道我做得还少吗？为了鼓励她，表示我很认真，我不时会再问一个问题。但这几乎没有必要，因为她很放松。她娓娓道来，有时候会闭上眼睛，声音一直清晰、平稳。我仔细听着，这是我的职责，但我的目光却越过海滩，望着那位疲惫老人的身影，此刻他正焦急地在小岩石间来回踱步。

这时我想起来，其他地方还有事情等着我呢，于是我打断了她的回忆，说道：“我谢谢你了，好心的女士。现在让我快点去找你的丈夫吧。”

他肯定已经开始信任我了，否则为什么要走到离妻子那么远的地方呢？他听见我的脚步声，转过身来，好像刚从梦中醒来。霞光落在他身上，我看见他的脸上不再充满疑虑，而是笼罩着深深的悲伤，眼睛里还闪着泪花。

“怎么样啊，先生？”他低声问。

“聆听你的女士说话是件快事，”我回答。风开始大起来，但他语气轻柔，所以我也放低了声音。“现在呀，朋友，我们简短一点吧，这样我们就能快点动身啦。”

“你随便问吧，先生。”

“朋友，我没有什么让人为难的问题。你好心的妻子刚才回忆说，有一天你们俩拿着从市场上买回来的鸡蛋。她说，她抱着一筐子

鸡蛋，你在她身边，一路上一直盯着筐子，担心她走路的时候鸡蛋会撞破。她回忆起那一幕，感到很幸福。”

“我也一样，船夫，”他微笑着看了我一眼。“我担心鸡蛋，因为前一次到市场去的时候，她绊了一下，打破了一两个。路很短，但那天我们俩都很愉快。”

“和她回忆的情况一样，”我说。“那好吧，我们不要再浪费时间了，因为这次谈话只是出于惯例。我们去把好心的女士带到船上吧。”

我在前面带路，打算回到小棚子那儿找他妻子，但他却慢吞吞的，我也只好跟着慢下来。

“别担心风浪，朋友，”我以为他担心的是这个。“海湾很安全，从这儿到岛上不会有什么风险。”

“我很信任你的判断，船夫。”

“是这样的，朋友，”我又说道。路走得慢，那干吗不利用这个机会再说话呢？“刚才如果我们有时间的话，也许我还可以问一个问题。现在既然我们俩一起朝那边走，我告诉你这个问题是什么，你愿意听吗？”

“当然啦，船夫。”

“我打算问你，你们这么多年在一起，有没有什么记忆，让你感到特别痛苦？就这个问题。”

“这算作问答的一部分吗，先生？”

“噢，当然不是啦，”我说。“那早已经结束啦。同样的问题，之前我也问过你好心的妻子，所以这不过是我感到好奇罢了。你不要回答啦，朋友，我也不介意。你看那边。”我指着路过的一块岩石。

“那上面可不仅仅是些贝壳啊。如果有时间，我可以让你看看怎么从岩石上把它们撬下来，轻轻松松做一顿晚餐。我经常把它们放到火堆上烤。”

“船夫啊，”他庄重地说道，脚步更慢了。“如果你希望我回答，那我就来回答你的问题。我不确定她是怎么回答的，因为即使像我们这样的夫妻，也有很多事情不对彼此说。而且，之前有一条母龙，她的气息污染了空气，我们的记忆，无论美好还是阴暗，都被她夺走了。但是，母龙今天被杀死了，很多事情开始在我脑海中清晰起

来。你问有什么记忆带来特别的痛苦。我没有别的可说，船夫，那肯定是我们的儿子。我们最后见他的时候，他都快成人了，但他脸上还没长出胡子，就离开了我们。之前发生过争吵，他离开，也只是到附近的村庄去，我以为他过几天就会回来。”

“你妻子也是这么说的，朋友，”我说。“而且，她说儿子离开，是她的错。”

“如果她认为前面的事情是她的错，那么后面的事情，我就要负很大责任了。因为有短短的一段时间，她曾对我不忠，这是真的。船夫啊，可能是我做了什么事，把她赶到了另一个人的怀抱里。或者是因为我该说的没说、该做的没做？现在，那都是很遥远的事情了，像一只鸟飞过，成为天空上的一个小点。但我们的儿子亲眼见过那怨恨的一幕，那时他年纪不大不小，既不像孩子那样能用好话哄骗，又不像成人那样明白人心的复杂。他离开之时，发誓说再也不回来，我和她重归于好之后，他仍然没回家。”

“这件事你妻子跟我说过。不久之后消息传来，说你们的儿子被肆虐全国的瘟疫夺走了。朋友，我自己在那一场瘟疫中失去了父母，我记得很清楚。但是，为什么要因此自责呢？那是上帝或魔鬼降下的瘟疫，你能有什么责任？”

“船夫啊，我禁止她到他的坟上去。真是件残酷的事情。她希望我们一起去看看他安息的地方，但是我不允许。现在，很多年过去了，但我们前几天才动身去找他，那时候母龙的迷雾已经夺走了我们的记忆，我们都不清楚自己要找什么。”

“啊，原来是这样，”我说。“这件事，你的妻子可没好意思说。那么，是你阻拦了她去看儿子的坟。”

“我做了件残酷的事，先生。那可是更加阴暗的背叛，甚于妻子一两个月的小小不忠。”

“你不仅阻止妻子到儿子的安息之所哀悼，甚至连自己也不去，先生，你当时这么做，是想获得什么呢？”

“获得？什么也获得不了，船夫。那就是愚蠢和自傲。或者是人心之中潜伏着的其他什么东西。也许是渴望惩罚，先生。我在口头和行动上都主张宽恕，但内心中封锁多年的某个小角落却渴望复仇。那是件卑微而阴暗的事情，对不起她，也对不起我儿子。”

“朋友，我感谢你告诉我这件事，”我对他说。“也许说出来更好。虽然这次谈话不会影响我的职责，现在我们就是两个伙伴聊天，但我承认，之前我心里有一点点顾忌，觉得该听到的，还没有全部听到。现在，我将毫无顾虑、心情舒畅地送你们过去。不过，请你告诉我，朋友，是什么让你改变那么多年的决心，最后决定出门呢？有人说过什么吗？还是突然就改变了想法？毕竟人心和我们面前这海浪和天空一样难以索解啊。”

“船夫，这我自己也不清楚。现在，我觉得让我改变主意的，不是某一件事情，是我们多年一起生活，让我慢慢改变了。也许没有别的原因了，船夫。伤口愈合很慢，但终究还是愈合了。不久前有一天早晨，晨曦初现，带来了今年春天最早的迹象，我看着妻子，她还在睡，虽然阳光已经照亮了我们的房间。我知道，最后一片黑暗已经离我而去。于是我们就这样出门了，先生。现在我妻子回忆说，我们的儿子在我们之前渡海上了岛，因此他的坟墓应该在岛上，在树林之中，或者在宁静的海滨。船夫，我已经对你坦诚相告，希望不会动摇你之前对我们的看法。我想，有些人听了我的话，可能会认为我们的爱有瑕疵，破裂了。但是，一对老夫妻的恩爱缓缓前行，上帝会知道的，他明白黑色的阴影是整体的一部分。”

“不要担心，朋友。你对我说的话，只让我想起你和妻子骑着疲惫的马在雨中走来的场景。好啦，先生，不用再说了，谁知道下一场风暴会不会来呢。我们快点到她那儿去，抱她上船吧。”

她靠着岩石坐着，睡着了，脸上露出满足的神情，身旁的火堆冒着烟。

“这次我自己来抱她，船夫，”他说。“我感觉力气恢复了。”

我能让他这么做吗？那可不会减轻我的任务。“这石头上可不好走啊，朋友，”我说。“你抱着她，如果摔一跤，那后果该有多严重呢？这种事我已经习惯了，她可不是第一个需要抱上船的人。你可以在我们旁边走，如果愿意，还能跟她讲话。记得她抱着鸡蛋，你在旁边忧心忡忡地走吗？就像那样吧。”

他脸上又露出恐惧之色。不过他轻声回答道：“好吧，船夫。按你说的办。”

他在我身旁走着，一边低声说些鼓励她的话。我步子迈得太快了吗？因为他现在落到后面了，抱她走进海水的时候，我感觉他一只手死死抓着我的后背。但是，这可不是停留的地方，因为码头藏在冰冷

的水面之下，我的脚必须找准位置。我踩到水下的石头上，海水又变浅了，在脚下涌动。我上了船，我怀里抱着她，但船身几乎没有倾斜。船尾的垫子淋了雨，已经湿了。我踢开上面几层湿透了的垫子，把她轻轻放下来。我让她自己慢慢坐起来，头就靠在船舷下方，然后到柜子里找毯子，帮她挡一挡海风。

我把毯子裹在她身上的时候，感觉到他爬上了船，地板随着他的脚步晃动。“朋友，”我说，“你看，海里浪越来越大了。这是条很小的船。我一次只能载一个人，不敢多载。”

这时候我能清楚地看出他内心的火，因为火苗都快从他眼里喷出来了。“我还以为我们都说好了呢，船夫，”他说，“我和妻子不能分开，要一起上岛。我不是已经说了很多遍吗？你问问题不也是为了这个目的吗？”

“请不要误会，朋友，”我说。“我只是说坐船渡海的实际操作问题。你们两人会一起住在岛上，手挽着手，和你们以前一样，这一点毫无疑问。如果在某个阴凉的地方找到你儿子的墓地，你可以考虑在周围放些野花，岛上有，你能找到。林地里有紫铃石楠，说不定还有金盏花呢。但是，今天渡海，我请你回到海滩上再等一会儿。我会保证好心的女士在对岸舒舒服服的，因为我知道船靠岸后不远处有个地方，三块古老的岩石面对面，像老朋友一样。我让她先在那儿待着，有石头遮风挡雨，还能看见海，然后我就尽快回来接你。但是，现在请你离开，回到岸上再等一会儿。”

落日的红光照在他身上，或许那仍旧是他眼睛里的火？“我妻子坐在船上，我就不会从这条船上下去，先生。划桨送我们过去吧，遵守你的诺言。还是要我自己来划桨？”

“桨在我手里，先生，决定船里能坐多少人，仍然是我的职责。虽然我们友好相待，但是，你难道怀疑这里头有什么见不得人的把戏吗？难道你担心我不回来接你？”

“我对你没有任何指责，先生。可是，关于船夫和他们的行事方式，有很多传闻。我无意冒犯，只是求你现在渡我们两个过去，不要再犹豫了。”

“船夫，”身后传来她的声音，我转过头去，刚好看到她一只手在空气中摸索着，好像是要找出我的位置一样，尽管她的眼睛还是闭的。“船夫。请你离开一下。让我和丈夫单独说会儿话。”

我敢把船丢给他们吗？可是，她现在肯定要帮我讲话。我双手牢牢握着桨，迈步从他身边走过，下了船，走进水里。海水涨到了我的膝盖，浸湿了袍子的下摆。船系得很牢，桨又在我手上。还能捣什么鬼呢？但我还是不敢走得太远，我眼睛望着海岸，站在那儿像石头一样一动不动，可我发现自己又一次闯入了他们的亲密时刻。隔着海浪轻轻拍打的声音，我听见了他们的谈话。

“他走开了吗，埃克索？”

“他在水里站着，公主。他不愿意离开船，我敢说，他也不会给我们很长时间。”

“埃克索，这不是和船夫吵架的时候。我们今天能碰上他，就算很幸运了。碰上了一个对我们印象很好的船夫。”

“可是，我们常听人说起他们狡猾的把戏，难道不是吗，公主？”

“我信任他，埃克索。他会说话算话的。”

“你怎么这么确定呢，公主？”

“我知道，埃克索。他是个好人，不会让我们失望。按照他说的做吧，到岸上等着他回来。他很快就会回来接你。我们就这么办，埃克索，否则我担心他给我们的特殊优待，恐怕又会失去。他答应我们在岛上能在一起，就算在一辈子都很恩爱的人当中，能享受这种优待的肯定也寥寥无几。为什么不愿意等一会儿，而要拿这么大的奖赏冒险呢？不要和他争吵，否则，谁知道我们下次会碰上什么样的野蛮人呢？埃克索，请你与他握手言和吧。这时候我都担心他会生气，怕他改变主意呢。埃克索，你还在那儿吗？”

“我还在你跟前，公主。我们竟然在谈论分开上岛，这难道是真的吗？”

“也就是一会儿，丈夫。现在他在干什么？”

“还一动不动站在那儿，用他长长的后背和闪亮的脑袋对着我们。公主啊，你真的相信我们能信任这个人吗？”

“我相信，埃克索。”

“你刚才与他谈过话。谈得开心吗？”

“谈得很开心，丈夫。你不也一样吗？”

“我想是吧，公主。”

海湾上的日落。背后的沉默。我敢回到他们那儿吗？

“告诉我，公主，”我听见他说。“这迷雾消退了，你高兴吗？”

“也许这件事会给这块土地带来可怕的后果。但对我们来说，消退得正是时候。”

“我一直在想啊，公主。如果迷雾没有剥夺我们的记忆，这么多年来，我们的爱是不是不会如此牢固？也许有了迷雾，旧伤才得以愈合。”

“现在这又有什么关系呢，埃克索？和船夫握手言和吧，让他把我们渡过去。既然他会先送一个，然后送另一个，为什么要和他吵呢？埃克索，你说呢？”

“好吧，公主。我按你说的做。”

“那就离开我，回到岸上去吧。”

“我会照办的，公主。”

“那你还耽搁什么呢，丈夫？你以为船夫就不会不耐烦吗？”

“好吧，公主。不过，让我再抱你一次吧。”

他们在拥抱吗，即使我把她裹得像个婴儿一样？即使他必须跪下来，在坚硬的船板上把身体扭曲成奇怪的形状？我想他们真的拥抱了，只要他们没开口说话，我就不敢转身。我怀里抱着桨，轻轻摇晃的水里，有船桨投下的影子吗？还需要多久？最后，终于又听到了他们的声音。

“我们到岛上再继续谈吧，公主，”他说。

“我们就到岛上谈，埃克索。迷雾一散，我们要说的话会很多。船夫还站在水里吗？”

“是的，公主。我现在就去，和他握手言和。”

“那就再见啦，埃克索。”

“再见啦，我唯一的挚爱。”

我听见他涉水过来。他打算跟我说句话吗？刚才他说要握手言和。可是，我转过脸，他却并没有朝我这边看，只是望着陆地，还有海滩上的落日。我也没有去看他的眼睛。他从我旁边经过，没有回头看。在海滩上等着我吧，朋友，我低声说，但他没听见，继续涉水而去。

PART I

Chapter One

You would have searched a long time for the sort of winding lane or tranquil meadow for which England later became celebrated. There were instead miles of desolate, uncultivated land; here and there rough-hewn paths over craggy hills or bleak moorland. Most of the roads left by the Romans would by then have become broken or overgrown, often fading into wilderness. Icy fogs hung over rivers and marshes, serving all too well the ogres that were then still native to this land. The people who lived nearby - one wonders what desperation led them to settle in such gloomy spots - might well have feared these creatures, whose panting breaths could be heard long before their deformed figures emerged from the mist. But such monsters were not cause for astonishment. People then would have regarded them as everyday hazards, and in those days there was so much else to worry about. How to get food out of the hard ground; how not to run out of firewood; how to stop the sickness that could kill a dozen pigs in a single day and produce green rashes on the cheeks of children.

In any case, ogres were not so bad provided one did not provoke them. One had to accept that every so often, perhaps following some obscure dispute in their ranks, a creature would come blundering into a village in a terrible rage, and despite shouts and brandishings of weapons, rampage about injuring anyone slow to move out of its path. Or that every so often, an ogre might carry off a child into the mist. The people of the day had to be philosophical about such outrages.

In one such area on the edge of a vast bog, in the shadow of some jagged hills, lived an elderly couple, Axl and Beatrice. Perhaps these were not their exact or full names, but for ease, this is how we will refer to them. I would say this couple lived an isolated life, but in those days few were 'isolated' in any sense we would understand. For warmth and protection, the villagers lived in shelters, many of them dug deep into the hillside, connecting one to the other by underground passages and covered corridors. Our elderly couple lived within one such sprawling warren -

'building' would be too grand a word - with roughly sixty other villagers. If you came out of their warren and walked for twenty minutes around the hill, you would have reached the next settlement, and to your eyes, this one would have seemed identical to the first. But to the inhabitants themselves, there would have been many distinguishing details of which they would have been proud or ashamed.

I have no wish to give the impression that this was all there was to the Britain of those days; that at a time when magnificent civilisations flourished elsewhere in the world, we were here not much beyond the Iron Age. Had you been able to roam the countryside at will, you might well have discovered castles containing music, fine food, athletic excellence; or monasteries with inhabitants steeped in learning. But there is no getting around it. Even on a strong horse, in good weather, you could have ridden for days without spotting any castle or monastery looming out of the greenery. Mostly you would have found communities like the one I have just described, and unless you had with you gifts of food or clothing, or were ferociously armed, you would not have been sure of a welcome. I am sorry to paint such a picture of our country at that time, but there you are.

To return to Axl and Beatrice. As I said, this elderly couple lived on the outer fringes of the warren, where their shelter was less protected from the elements and hardly benefited from the fire in the Great Chamber where everyone congregated at night. Perhaps there had been a time when they had lived closer to the fire; a time when they had lived with their children. In fact, it was just such an idea that would drift into Axl's mind as he lay in his bed during the empty hours before dawn, his wife soundly asleep beside him, and then a sense of some unnamed loss would gnaw at his heart, preventing him from returning to sleep.

Perhaps that was why, on this particular morning, Axl had abandoned his bed altogether and slipped quietly outside to sit on the old warped bench beside the entrance to the warren in wait for the first signs of daylight. It was spring, but the air still felt bitter, even with Beatrice's cloak, which he had taken on his way out and wrapped around himself. Yet he had become so absorbed in his thoughts that by the time he realised how cold he was, the stars had all but gone, a glow was spreading on the horizon, and the first notes of birdsong were emerging from the dimness.

He rose slowly to his feet, regretting having stayed out so long. He was in good health, but it had taken a while to shake off his last fever and he did not wish it to return. Now he could feel the damp in his legs, but as he turned to go back inside, he was well satisfied: for he had this morning succeeded in remembering a number of things that had eluded him for some time. Moreover, he now sensed he was about to come to some momentous decision - one that had been put off far too long - and felt an excitement within him which he was eager to share with his wife.

Inside, the passageways of the warren were still in complete darkness, and he was obliged to feel his way the short distance back to the door of his chamber. Many of the 'doorways' within the warren were simple archways to mark the threshold to a chamber. The open nature of this arrangement would not have struck the villagers as compromising their privacy, but allowed rooms to benefit from any warmth coming down the corridors from the great fire or the smaller fires permitted within the warren. Axl and Beatrice's room, however, being too far from any fire had something we might recognise as an actual door; a large wooden frame criss-crossed with small branches, vines and thistles which someone going in and out would each time have to lift to one side, but which shut out the chilly draughts. Axl would happily have done without this door, but it had over time become an object of considerable pride to Beatrice. He had often returned to find his wife pulling off withered pieces from the construct and replacing them with fresh cuttings she had gathered during the day.

This morning, Axl moved the barrier just enough to let himself in, taking care to make as little noise as possible. Here, the early dawn light was leaking into the room through the small chinks of their outer wall. He could see his hand dimly before him, and on the turf bed, Beatrice's form still sound asleep under the thick blankets.

He was tempted to wake his wife. For a part of him felt sure that if, at this moment, she were awake and talking to him, whatever last barriers remained between him and his decision would finally crumble. But it was some time yet until the community roused itself and the day's work began, so he settled himself on the low stool in the corner of the chamber, his wife's cloak still tight around him.

He wondered how thick the mist would be that morning, and if, as the dark faded, he would see it had seeped through the cracks right into their chamber. But then his thoughts drifted away from such matters, back to what had been preoccupying him. Had they always lived like this, just the two of them, at the periphery of the community? Or had things once been quite different? Earlier, outside, some fragments of a remembrance had come back to him: a small moment when he was walking down the long central corridor of the warren, his arm around one of his own children, his gait a little crouched not on account of age as it might be now, but simply because he wished to avoid hitting his head on the beams in the murky light. Possibly the child had just been speaking to him, saying something amusing, and they were both of them laughing. But now, as earlier outside, nothing would quite settle in his mind, and the more he concentrated, the fainter the fragments seemed to grow. Perhaps these were just an elderly fool's imaginings. Perhaps it was that God had never given them children.

You may wonder why Axl did not turn to his fellow villagers for assistance in recalling the past, but this was not as easy as you might suppose. For in this community the past was rarely discussed. I do not mean that it was taboo. I mean that it had somehow faded into a mist as dense as that which hung over the marshes. It simply did not occur to these villagers to think about the past - even the recent one.

To take an instance, one that had bothered Axl for some time: He was sure that not so long ago, there had been in their midst a woman with long red hair - a woman regarded as crucial to their village. Whenever anyone injured themselves or fell sick, it had been this red-haired woman, so skilled at healing, who was immediately sent for. Yet now this same woman was no longer to be found anywhere, and no one seemed to wonder what had occurred, or even to express regret at her absence. When one morning Axl had mentioned the matter to three neighbours while working with them to break up the frosted field, their response told him that they genuinely had no idea what he was talking about. One of them had even paused in his work in an effort to remember, but had ended by shaking his head. 'Must have been a long time ago,' he had said.

'Neither have I any memory of such a woman,' Beatrice had said to him when he had brought up the matter with her one night. 'Perhaps you dreamt her up for your own needs, Axl, even though you've a wife here beside you and with a back straighter than yours.'

This had been some time the previous autumn, and they had been lying side by side on their bed in the pitch black, listening to the rain beating against their shelter.

'It's true you've hardly aged at all down the years, princess,' Axl had said. 'But the woman was no dream, and you'd remember her yourself if you spared a moment to think about it. There she was at our door only a month ago, a kindly soul asking if there was anything she might bring us. Surely you remember. '

'But why was she wishing to bring us anything at all? Was she a kin to us? '

'I don't believe she was, princess. She was just being kind. Surely you remember. She was often at the door asking if we weren't cold or hungry. '

'What I'm asking, Axl, is what business was it of hers to single us out for her kindness? '

'I wondered myself at the time, princess. I remember thinking here's a woman given to tending the sick, and yet here's the two of us both as healthy as any in the village. Is there perhaps talk of a plague on the way and she's here to look us over? But it turns out there's no plague and she's just being kind. Now we're talking about her there's even more comes back to me. She was standing there telling us not to mind the children calling us names. That was it. Then we never saw her again. '

'Not only is this red-haired woman a dream from your mind, Axl, she's a fool to be worrying herself about a few children and their games. '

'Just what I thought at the time, princess. What harm can children do us and they just passing the time of day when the weather's too dreary outside. I told her how we hadn't given it a second thought, but she meant kindly all the same. And then I remember her saying it was a pity we had to spend our nights without a candle. '

'If this creature pitied us our lack of a candle,' Beatrice had said, 'she had one thing right at least. It's an insult, forbidding us a candle through nights like these and our hands as steady as any of them. While there's others with candles in their chamber, senseless each night from cider, or else with children running wild. Yet it's our candle they've taken, and now I can hardly see your outline, Axl, though you're right beside me.'

'There's no insult intended, princess. It's just the way things have always been done and that's all there is to it.'

'Well it's not just your dream woman thinks it strange we should have our candle taken from us. Yesterday or was it the day before, I was at the river and walking past the women and I'm sure I heard them saying, when they supposed I'd gone out of hearing, how it was a disgrace an upright couple like us having to sit in the dark each night. So your dream woman's not alone in thinking what she does.'

'She's no dream woman I keep telling you, princess. Everyone here knew her a month ago and had a good word for her. What can it be makes everyone, yourself included, forget she ever lived?'

Recalling the conversation now on this spring's morning, Axl felt almost ready to admit he had been mistaken about the red-haired woman. He was after all an ageing man and prone to occasional confusion. And yet, this instance of the red-haired woman had been merely one of a steady run of such puzzling episodes. Frustratingly, he could not at this moment think of so many examples, but they had been numerous, of that there was no doubt. There had been, for instance, the incident concerning Marta.

This was a little girl of nine or ten who had always had a reputation for fearlessness. All the hair-raising tales of what could happen to wandering children seemed not to dampen her sense of adventure. So the evening when, with less than an hour of daylight remaining, the mist coming in and the wolves audible on the hillside, the word went around that Marta was missing, everyone had stopped what they were doing in alarm. For the next little while, voices called her name all around the warren and footsteps rushed up and down its corridors as villagers searched every sleeping chamber, the storage burrows, the cavities beneath the rafters, any hiding place a child might go to amuse herself.

Then in the midst of this panic, two shepherds returning from their shift on the hills came into the Great Chamber and began warming themselves by the fire. As they did so, one of them announced how the day before they had watched a wren-eagle circle above their heads, once, twice, then a third time. There was no mistake, he said, it had been a wren-eagle. Word quickly went around the warren and soon a crowd had gathered around the fire to listen to the shepherds. Even Axl had hurried to join them, for the appearance of a wren-eagle in their country was news indeed. Among the many powers attributed to the wren-eagle was the ability to frighten away wolves, and elsewhere in the land, it was said, wolves had vanished altogether on account of these birds.

At first the shepherds were questioned eagerly and made to repeat their story over and over. Then steadily a scepticism began to spread among the listeners. There had been many similar claims, someone pointed out, and each time they had proved unfounded. Someone else stated that these same two shepherds had only the previous spring brought back an identical story, and yet no further sightings had followed. The shepherds angrily denied bringing any such previous report, and soon the crowd was dividing between those taking the shepherds' side and those claiming some memory of the alleged episode the previous year.

As the quarrel grew heated, Axl found coming over him that familiar nagging sense that something was not right, and removing himself from the shouting and jostling, went outside to stare at the darkening sky and the mist rolling over the ground. And after a while, fragments began to piece themselves together in his mind, of the missing Marta, of the danger, of how not long ago everyone had been searching for her. But already these recollections were growing confused, in much the way a dream does in the seconds after waking, and it was only with a supreme act of concentration that Axl held onto the thought of little Marta at all while voices behind him continued to argue about the wren-eagle. Then, as he was standing there like that, he heard the sound of a girl singing to herself and saw Marta emerge before him out of the mist.

‘You’re a strange one, child,’ Axl said as she came skipping up to him. ‘Aren’t you afraid of the dark? Of the wolves or the ogres?’

‘Oh, I’m afraid of them, sir,’ she said with a smile. ‘But I know how to hide from them. I hope my parents haven’t been asking for me. I got such a hiding last week.’

‘Asking for you? Of course they’ve been asking for you. Isn’t the whole village searching for you? Listen to that uproar inside. That’s all for you, child.’

Marta laughed and said: ‘Oh stop it, sir! I know they’ve not missed me. And I can hear, that’s not me they’re shouting about.’

When she said this, it occurred to Axl that sure enough the girl was right: the voices inside were not arguing about her at all, but about some other matter altogether. He leaned towards the doorway to hear better, and as he caught the odd phrase amidst the raised voices, it began to come back to him, about the shepherds and the wren-eagle. He was wondering if he should explain something of this to Marta when she suddenly skipped past him and went inside.

He followed her in, anticipating the relief and joy her appearance would cause. And to be frank, it had occurred to him that by coming in with her, he would get a little of the credit for her safe return. But as they entered the Great Chamber the villagers were still so engrossed in their quarrel over the shepherds only a few of them even bothered to look their way. Marta’s mother did come away from the crowd long enough to say to the child: ‘So here you are! Don’t you be wandering off that way! How often must I tell you?’ before turning her attention back to the arguments raging around the fire. At this, Marta gave Axl a grin as though to say: ‘See what I told you?’ and vanished into the shadows in search of her companions.

The room had grown significantly lighter. Their chamber, being on the outer fringe, had a small window to the outside, though it was too high to gaze out of without standing on a stool. It was at this moment covered with a cloth, but now an early ray of sun was penetrating from one corner, casting a beam over where Beatrice was sleeping. Axl could see, caught in this ray, what looked like an insect hovering in the air just above his wife’s head. He then realised it was a spider, suspended by its invisible vertical thread, and even as he watched, it started on its smooth descent. Rising noiselessly, Axl crossed the small room and swept his hand through the space above his sleeping wife, catching the spider within his palm. Then he stood there a moment looking down at her. There was a peacefulness on her sleeping face he rarely saw now when she was awake, and the sudden rush of happiness the sight brought him took him by surprise. He knew then he had made up his mind, and he wanted again to awaken her, just so he might break to her his news. But he saw the selfishness of such an action – and besides, how could he be so sure of her response? In the end he went back quietly to his stool, and as he seated himself again, remembered the spider and opened his hand gently.

When earlier he had been sitting on the bench outside waiting for the first light, he had tried to recall how he and Beatrice had first come to discuss the idea of their journey. He had thought then he had located a particular conversation they had had one night in this same chamber, but now, as he watched the spider run round the edge of his hand and onto the earthen floor, it struck him with certainty that the first mention of the subject had come that day the stranger in dark rags had passed through the village.

It had been a grey morning - was it as long ago now as last November? - and Axl had been striding beside the river along a footpath overhung with willows. He was hurrying back to the warren from the fields, perhaps to fetch a tool or receive new instructions from a foreman. In any case, he was stopped by a burst of raised voices from beyond the bushes to his right. His first thought was of ogres, and he searched quickly around for a rock or stick. Then he realised the voices - all of women - though angry and excited, lacked the panic that accompanied ogre attacks. He nevertheless pushed his way determinedly through a hedge of juniper shrubs and stumbled into a clearing, where he saw five women - not in their first youth, but still of child-bearing age - standing closely together. Their backs were turned to him and they went on shouting at something in the distance. He was almost up to them before one of the women noticed him with a start, but then the others turned and regarded him almost with insolence.

‘Well, well,’ said one. ‘Perhaps it’s chance or something more. But here’s the husband and hopefully he’ll drive sense into her.’

The woman who had seen him first said: ‘We told your wife not to go but she wouldn’t listen. She’s insisting she’ll take food to the stranger though she’s most likely a demon or else some elf disguised.’

‘Is my wife in danger? Ladies, please explain yourselves.’

‘There’s a strange woman been wandering around us all morning,’ another said. ‘Hair down her back and a cloak of black rags. She claimed to be a Saxon but she’s not dressed like any Saxon we ever met. She tried to creep up behind us on the riverbank when we were attending to the laundry, but we saw her in good time and chased her away. But she kept returning, acting like she was heart-broken for something, other times asking us for food. We reckon she was all the while aiming her spell straight towards your wife, sir, for twice this morning already we had to hold Beatrice back by the arms, so intent was she on going to the demon. And now she's fought us all off and gone up to the old thorn where even now the demon's sitting waiting for her. We held her all we could, sir, but it must be the demon's powers already moving through her because her strength was unnatural for a woman so thin-boned and aged as your wife.'

'The old thorn ...'

'She set off only a moment ago, sir. But that's a demon to be sure, and if you're off after her you'll watch you're not stumbling or cutting yourself on a poisoned thistle the way it will never heal.'

Axl did his best to hide his irritation with these women, saying politely: 'I'm grateful, ladies. I'll go and see what my wife is up to. Excuse me.'

To our villagers, 'the old thorn' denoted a local beauty spot as much as the actual hawthorn tree that grew seemingly right out of the rock at the edge of the promontory a short walk from the warren. On a sunny day, provided the wind was not strong, it was a pleasant place to pass the time. You had a good view of the land down to the water, of the river's curve and the marshes beyond. On Sundays children often played around the gnarled roots, sometimes daring to jump off the end of the promontory, which in fact had only a gentle drop that would cause a child no injury, but simply to roll like a barrel down the grassy slope. But on a morning like this one, when adults and children alike were busy with tasks, the spot would have been deserted, and Axl, coming through the mist up the incline, was not surprised to see the two women were alone, their figures almost silhouettes against the white sky. Sure enough, the stranger, seated with her back against the rock, was dressed curiously. From a distance, at least, her cloak appeared to be made of many separate pieces of cloth stitched together, and it was now flapping in the wind, giving its owner the appearance of a great bird about to take flight. Beside her, Beatrice - still on her feet, though with head lowered towards her companion - appeared slight and vulnerable. They were in earnest conversation, but spotting Axl's approach below, stopped and watched him. Then Beatrice came to the edge of the promontory and called down:

‘Just stop there, husband, no further! I’ll come to you. But don’t climb up here and be disturbing this poor lady’s peace now she’s at last able to rest her feet and eat a little of yesterday’s bread.’

Axl waited as instructed and before long saw his wife coming down the long field-path to where he was standing. She came right up to him, and concerned no doubt that the wind would carry their words up to the stranger, said in a low voice:

‘Have those foolish women sent you after me, husband? When I was their age, I’m sure it was the old ones were full of fear and foolish beliefs, reckoning every stone cursed and each stray cat an evil spirit. But now I’m grown old myself, what do I find but it’s the young are riddled with beliefs like they never heard the Lord’s promise to walk beside us at all times. Look at that poor stranger, see her yourself, exhausted and solitary, and she’s wandered the forest and fields for four days, village after village commanding her to travel on. And it’s Christian country she’s walked across, but taken for a demon or maybe a leper though her skin bears no mark of it. Now, husband, I hope you’re not here to tell me I’m not to give this poor woman comfort and what sorry food I have with me.’

‘I wouldn’t tell you any such thing, princess, for I see for myself what you’re saying is true. I was thinking before I even came here how it’s a shameful thing we can’t receive a stranger with kindness any more.’

‘Then go on with your business, husband, for I’m sure they’ll be complaining again how slow you are at your work, and before you know they’ll have the children chanting at us again.’

‘No one’s ever said I’m slow in my work, princess. Where did you hear such a thing? I’ve never heard a word of such complaint and I’m able to take the same burden as any man twenty years younger.’

‘If there’s children calling us names, it’s not to do with my work being fast or slow but parents too foolish or more likely drunk to teach them manners or respect.’

‘Calm yourself, husband. I told you I was just teasing and I won’t do so again. The stranger was telling me something that greatly interests me and may some time interest you too. But she needs to finish the telling of it, so let me ask you again to hurry on with whatever task you have to do and leave me to listen to her and give what comfort I can.’

‘I’m sorry, princess, if I spoke harshly to you just then.’

But Beatrice had already turned and was climbing the path back to the thorn tree and the figure in the flapping cloak.

A little later, having completed his errand, Axl was returning to the fields, and at the risk of testing the patience of his colleagues, deviated from his route to go past the old thorn again. For the truth was that while he had fully shared his wife’s scorn for the suspicious instincts of the women, he had not been able to free himself from the thought that the stranger did pose some sort of threat, and he had been uneasy since leaving Beatrice with her. He was relieved then to see his wife’s figure, alone on the promontory in front of the rock, looking out at the sky. She seemed lost in thought, and failed to notice him until he called up to her. As he watched her descending the path, more slowly than before, it occurred to him not for the first time that there was something different lately in her gait. She was not limping exactly, but it was as though she were nursing some secret pain somewhere. When he asked her, as she approached, what had become of her odd companion, Beatrice said simply: 'She went on her way.'

'She would have been grateful for your kindness, princess. Did you speak long with her?'

'I did and she had a deal to say.'

'I can see she said something to trouble you, princess. Perhaps those women were right and she was one best avoided.'

'She's not upset me, Axl. She has me thinking though.'

'You're in a strange mood. Are you sure she hasn't put some spell on you before vanishing into the air?'

'Walk up there to the thorn, husband, and you'll see her on the path and only recently departed. She's hoping for better charity from those around the hill.'

'Well then I'll leave you, princess, since I see you've come to no harm. God will be pleased for the kindness you've shown as is always your way.'

But this time his wife seemed reluctant to let him go. She grasped his arm, as though momentarily to steady herself, then let her head rest on his chest. As though by its own instinct, his hand rose to caress her hair, grown tangled in the wind, and when he glanced down at her he was surprised to see her eyes still wide open.

'You're in a strange mood, right enough,' he said. 'What did that stranger say to you?'

She kept her head on his chest for a moment longer. Then she straightened and let go of him. 'Now I think of it, Axl, there may be something in what you're always saying. It's queer the way the world's forgetting people and things from only yesterday and the day before that. Like a sickness come over us all.'

'Just what I was saying, princess. Take that red-haired woman ...'

'Never mind the red-haired woman, Axl. It's what else we're not remembering.' She had said this while looking away into the mist-layered distance, but now she looked straight at him and he could see her eyes were filled with sadness and yearning. And it was then - he was sure - that she said to him: 'You've long set your heart against it, Axl, I know. But it's time now to think on it anew. There's a journey we must go on, and no more delay.'

'A journey, princess? What sort of journey?'

'A journey to our son's village. It's not far, husband, we know that. Even with our slow steps, it's a few days' walk at most, a little way east beyond the Great Plain. And the spring will soon be upon us.'

'We might go on such a trip, certainly, princess. Was there something that stranger said just now got you thinking of it?'

'It's been a thing in my thoughts a long time, Axl, though it's what that poor woman said just now makes me wish to delay no further. Our son awaits us in his village. How much longer must we keep him waiting?'

'When the spring's here, princess, we'll certainly think about just such a journey. But why do you say it's my wishes always stood in the way of it?'

'I don't remember now all that's passed between us on it, Axl. Only that you always set your heart against it, even as I longed for it. '

'Well, princess, let's talk about it more when there's no work waiting and neighbours ready to call us slow. Let me go on my way just now. We'll talk more on it soon. '

But in the days that followed, even if they alluded to the idea of this journey, they never talked properly about it. For they found they became oddly uncomfortable whenever the topic was broached, and before long an understanding had grown between them, in the silent way understandings do between a husband and wife of many years, to avoid the subject as much as possible. I say 'as much as possible', for there appeared at times to be a need - a compulsion, you might say - to which one or the other would have to yield. But whatever discussions they had in such circumstances inevitably ended quickly in evasiveness or bad temper. And on the one occasion Axl had asked his wife straight out what the strange woman had said to her that day up at the old thorn, Beatrice's expression had clouded, and she had seemed for a moment on the verge of tears. After this, Axl had taken care to avoid any reference to the stranger.

After a while Axl could no longer remember how talk of this journey had started, or what it had ever meant to them. But then this morning, sitting outside in the cold hour before dawn, his memory seemed partially at least to clear, and many things had come back to him: the red-haired woman; Marta; the stranger in dark rags; other memories with which we need not concern ourselves here. And he had remembered, quite vividly, what had happened only a few Sundays ago, when they had taken Beatrice's candle from her.

Sundays were a day of rest for these villagers, at least to the extent that they did not work in the fields. But the livestock had still to be cared for, and with so many other tasks waiting to be done, the pastor had accepted the impracticality of forbidding everything that might be construed as labour. So it was that when Axl emerged into the spring sunshine that particular Sunday after a morning of mending boots, the sight that greeted him was of his neighbours spread all around the terrain in front of the warren, some sitting in the patchy grass, others on small stools or logs, talking, laughing and working. Children were playing everywhere, and one group had gathered around two men constructing on the grass the wheel for a wagon. It was the first Sunday of the year the weather had permitted such outdoor activity, and there was an almost festive atmosphere. Nevertheless, as he stood there at the warren entrance and gazed beyond the villagers to where the land sloped down towards the marshes, Axl could see the mist rising again, and supposed that by the afternoon they would be submerged once more in grey drizzle.

He had been standing there a while when he became aware of a commotion going on over down by the fencing to the grazing fields. It did not greatly interest him at first, but then something in the breeze caught his ear and made him straighten. For though his eyesight had grown annoyingly blurred with the years, Axl's hearing had remained reliable, and he had discerned, in the muddle of shouting emerging from the crowd by the fence, Beatrice's voice raised in distress.

Others too were stopping what they were doing to turn and stare. But now Axl hurried through their midst, narrowly avoiding wandering children and objects left on the grass. Before he could reach the small jostling knot of people, however, it suddenly dispersed, and Beatrice emerged from its centre, clutching something with both hands to her breast. The faces around her mostly showed amusement, but the woman who quickly appeared at his wife's shoulder - the widow of a blacksmith who had died of fever the previous year - had features twisted with fury. Beatrice shook off her tormentor, her own face all the time a stern, near-blank mask, but when she saw Axl coming towards her, it broke into emotion.

Thinking about this now, it seemed to Axl the look on his wife's face then had been, more than anything else, one of overwhelming relief. It was not that Beatrice had believed all would be well once he had arrived; but his presence had made all the difference to her. She had gazed at him not just with relief, but also something like pleading, and held out to him the object she had been jealously guarding.

‘This is ours, Axl! We’ll not sit in darkness any longer. Take it quickly, husband, it’s ours!’

She was holding towards him a squat, somewhat misshapen candle. The blacksmith’s widow tried again to snatch it from her, but Beatrice struck away the invading hand.

‘Take it, husband! That child there, little Nora, she brought it to me this morning after making it with her own hands, thinking we’d grown tired of spending our nights as we do.’

This set off another round of shouting and also some laughter. But Beatrice went on gazing at Axl, her expression full of trust and entreaty, and it was a picture of her face at that moment which had first come back to him this morning on the bench outside the warren as he had sat waiting for the dawn to break. How was it he had forgotten this episode when it could have occurred no more than three weeks ago? How could it be he had not thought about it again until today?

Although he had stretched out his arm, he had not been able to take the candle – the crowd had kept him just out of reach – and he had said, loudly and with some conviction:

‘Don’t worry, princess. Don’t you worry.’ He was conscious of the emptiness of what he was saying even as he spoke, so he was surprised when the crowd quietened, and even the blacksmith’s widow took a step back. Only then did he realise the reaction had not been to his words, but to the approach behind him of the pastor.

‘What manners are these for the Lord’s day?’ The pastor strode past Axl and glared at the now silent gathering. ‘Well?’

Beatrice’s face was a tight mask again, but she did not avoid the pastor’s gaze when it settled on her.

‘I can see for myself it’s true, Mistress Beatrice,’ the pastor said. ‘Now you’ll not have forgotten the council’s edict that you and your husband will not be permitted candles in your chamber.’

‘We’ve neither of us ever tumbled a candle in our lives, sir. We will not sit night after night in darkness.’

‘The decision has been made and you’re to abide by it until the council decides otherwise.’

Axl saw the anger blaze in her eyes. ‘It’s nothing but unkindness. That’s all it is.’ She said this quietly, almost under her breath, but looking straight at the pastor.

‘Remove the candle from her,’ the pastor said. ‘Do as I say. Take it from her.’

As several hands reached towards her, it seemed to Axl she had not fully understood what the pastor had said. For she stood in the middle of the jostling with a puzzled look, continuing to grip the candle as if only by some forgotten instinct. Then panic seemed to seize her and she held the candle out towards Axl again, even as she was knocked off balance. She did not fall on account of those pressing in on her, and recovering, held out the candle for him yet again. He tried to take it, but another hand snatched it away, and then the pastor’s voice boomed out:

‘Enough! Leave Mistress Beatrice in peace and none of you speak unkindly to her. She’s an old woman who doesn’t understand all she does. Enough I say! This is no fit behaviour for the Lord’s day.’

Axl, finally reaching her, took her in his arms, and the crowd melted away. When he recalled this moment, it seemed to him they stayed like that for a long time, standing close together, she with her head resting on his chest, just the way she had done the day of the strange woman's visit, as though she were merely weary and wishing to catch her breath. He continued to hold her as the pastor called again for the people to disperse. When finally they separated and looked around themselves, they found they were alone beside the cow field and its barred wooden gate.

‘What does it matter, princess?’ he said. ‘What do we need with a candle? We’re well used to moving around our room without one. And don’t we keep ourselves entertained well enough with our talk, candle or no candle?’

He observed her carefully. She appeared dreamy, and not particularly upset.

‘I’m sorry, Axl,’ she said. ‘The candle’s gone. I should have kept it a secret for the two of us. But I was overjoyed when the young girl brought it to me and she’d crafted it herself just for us. Now it’s gone. No matter.’

‘No matter at all, princess.’

‘They think us a foolish pair, Axl.’

She took a step forward and placed her head on his chest again. And it was then that she said, her voice muffled so he at first thought he had misheard:

‘Our son, Axl. Do you remember our son? When they were pushing me just now, it was our son I remembered. A fine, strong, upright man. Why must we stay in this place? Let’s go to our son’s village. He’ll protect us and see no one treats us ill. Will your heart not change on it, Axl, and all these years now passed? Do you still say we can’t go to him?’

As she said this, softly into his chest, many fragments of memory tugged at Axl’s mind, so much so that he felt almost faint. He loosened his hold on her and stepped back, fearing he might sway and cause her to lose her own balance.

‘What’s this you’re saying, princess? Was I ever the one to stop us journeying to our son’s village?’

‘But surely you were, Axl. Surely you were.’

‘When did I speak against such a journey, princess?’

‘I always thought you did, husband. But oh, Axl, I don’t remember clearly now you question it. And why do we stand out here, fine day though it is?’

Beatrice appeared confused again. She looked into his face, then all around her, at the pleasant sunshine, their neighbours once more giving attention to their activities.

‘Let’s go and sit in our chamber,’ she said after a while. ‘Let it be just the two of us for a while. A fine day, right enough, but I’m all tired out. Let’s go inside.’

‘That’s right, princess. Sit down and rest a while, out of this sun. You’ll soon feel better.’

There were others awake now all around the warren. The shepherds must have gone out some time ago though he had been so lost in thought he had not even heard them. At the other end of the room Beatrice made a murmuring sound, as though she were preparing to sing, then turned over under the blankets. Recognising these signals, Axl made his way across to the bed in silence, sat carefully on its edge and waited.

Beatrice shifted onto her back, opened her eyes partially and gazed at Axl.

‘Good morning, husband,’ she said eventually. ‘I’m glad to see the spirits chose not to take you away as I slept.’

‘Princess, there’s something I want to talk about.’

Beatrice went on gazing up at him, her eyes still only half open. Then she brought herself up to a sitting posture, her face crossing the beam of light that earlier had illuminated the spider. Her grey mane, untied and matted, hung stiffly down past her shoulders, but Axl still felt happiness stir within him at this sight of her in the morning light.

‘What is it you have to say, Axl, and before I’ve had time to rub the sleep from my eyes?’

‘We talked before, princess, about a journey we might make. Well, here’s the spring upon us, and perhaps it’s time we set off.’

‘Set off, Axl? Set off when?’

‘As soon as we’re able. We need only be gone a few days. The village can spare us. We’ll talk to the pastor.’

‘And will we go to see our son, Axl?’

‘That’s where we’ll go. To see our son.’

Outside the birds were now in chorus. Beatrice turned her gaze towards the window and the sun leaking past the cloth hung over it.

‘Some days I remember him clear enough,’ she said.

‘Then the next day it’s as if a veil’s fallen over his memory. But our son’s a fine and good man, I know that for sure.’

‘Why is he not with us here now, princess?’

‘I don’t know, Axl. It could be he quarrelled with the elders and had to leave. I’ve asked around and there’s no one here remembers him. But he wouldn’t have done anything to bring shame on himself, I know for sure. Can you remember nothing of it yourself, Axl?’

‘When I was outside just now, doing my best to remember all I could in the stillness, many things came back to me. But I can’t remember our son, neither his face nor his voice, though sometimes I think I can see him when he was a small boy, and I’m leading him by the hand beside the riverbank, or when he was weeping one time and I was reaching out to comfort him. But what he looks like today, where he's living, if he has a son of his own, I don't remember at all. I was hoping you'd remember more, princess.'

'He's our son,' Beatrice said. 'So I can feel things about him, even if I don't remember clearly. And I know he longs for us to leave this place and be living with him under his protection.'

'He's our flesh and blood, so why would he not want us to join him?'

'Even so, I'll miss this place, Axl. This small chamber of ours and this village. No light thing to leave a place you've known all your life.'

'No one's asking us to do it without thought, princess. While I was waiting for the sun to rise just now, I was thinking we'll need to make this journey to our son's village and talk with him. For even if we're his mother and father, it's not for us to arrive one fine day and demand to live as part of his village.'

'You're right, husband.'

'There's another thing troubles me, princess. This village may only be a few days away as you say. But how will we know where to find it?'

Beatrice fell silent, gazing into the space before her, her shoulders swaying gently with her breathing. 'I believe we'll know our way well enough, Axl,' she said eventually.

'Even if we don't yet know his exact village, I'll have travelled to ones nearby often enough with the other women when trading our honey and tin. I'll know my way blindfolded to the Great Plain, and the Saxon village beyond where we've often rested. Our son's village can only be a little way further, so we'll find it with little trouble. Axl, are we really to go soon?'

'Yes, princess. We'll start preparing today.'

Chapter Two

There were, however, plenty of things to attend to before they could set off. In a village like this, many items necessary for their journey – blankets, water flasks, tinder – were communally owned and securing their use required much bargaining with neighbours. Moreover, Axl and Beatrice, advanced though they were in years, had their burden of daily duties and could not simply go away without the consent of the community. And even when they were finally ready to leave, a turn in the weather delayed them further. For what was the point of risking the hazards of fog, rain and cold when sunshine was surely just around the corner?

But they did eventually set off, with walking sticks and bundles on their backs, on a bright morning of wispy white clouds and a strong breeze. Axl had wished to start at first light – it was clear to him the day would be fine – but Beatrice had insisted on waiting till the sun was higher. The Saxon village where they would shelter the first night, she argued, was easily within a day's walk, and surely their priority was to cross the corner of the Great Plain as close to noon as possible, when the dark forces of that place were most likely to be dormant.

It had been a while since they had walked any distance together, and Axl had been anxious about his wife's stamina. But after an hour he found himself reassured: though her pace was slow – he noticed again something lop-sided about her gait, as if she were cushioning some pain – Beatrice kept moving on steadily, head down into the wind in open land, undaunted when confronted by thistles and undergrowth. On uphill, or ground so muddy it was an effort to pull one foot out after the other, she would slow right down, but keep pushing on.

In the days before their journey's start, Beatrice had grown increasingly confident of remembering their route, at least as far as the Saxon village which she had regularly visited with the other women over the years. But once they lost sight of the craggy hills above their settlement, and had crossed the valley beyond the marshland, she became less certain. At a fork in a path, or facing a windswept field, she would pause and stand for a long time, panic creeping into her gaze as she surveyed the land.

'Don't worry, princess,' Axl would say on such occasions. 'Don't worry and take all the time you need.'

'But Axl,' she would say, turning to him, 'we don't have time. We must cross the Great Plain at noon if we're to do so in safety.'

'We'll be there in good time, princess. You take all the time you need.'

I might point out here that navigation in open country was something much more difficult in those days, and not just because of the lack of reliable compasses and maps. We did not yet have the hedgerows that so pleasantly divide the countryside today into field, lane and meadow. A traveller of that time would, often as not, find himself in featureless landscape, the view almost identical whichever way he turned. A row of standing stones on the far horizon, a turn of a stream, the particular rise and fall of a valley: such clues were the only means of charting a course. And the consequences of a wrong turn could often prove fatal. Never mind the possibilities of perishing in bad weather: straying off course meant exposing oneself more than ever to the risk of assailants - human, animal or supernatural - lurking away from the established roads.

You might have been surprised by how little they conversed as they walked, this couple usually so full of things to tell each other. But at a time when a broken ankle or an infected graze could be life-threatening, there was a recognition that concentration was desirable at each and every step. You might also have noted that whenever the path grew too narrow to walk side by side, it was always Beatrice, not Axl, who went in front. This too might surprise you, it seeming more natural for the man to go first into potentially hazardous terrain, and sure enough, in woodland or where there was the possibility of wolves or bears, they would switch positions without discussion. But for the most part, Axl would make sure his wife went first, for the reason that practically every fiend or evil spirit they were likely to encounter was known to target its prey at the rear of a party - in much the way, I suppose, a big cat will stalk an antelope at the back of the herd. There were numerous instances of a traveller glancing back to the companion walking behind, only to find the latter vanished without trace. It was the fear of such an occurrence that compelled Beatrice intermittently to ask as they walked: 'Are you still there, Axl?' To which he would answer routinely: 'Still here, princess.'

They reached the edge of the Great Plain by late morning. Axl suggested they push on and put the hazard behind them, but Beatrice was adamant they should wait till noon. They sat down on a rock at the top of the hillslope leading down to the plain, and watched carefully the shortening shadows of their sticks, held upright before them in the earth.

'It may be a good sky, Axl,' she said. 'And I've not heard of any wickedness befalling a person in this corner of the plain. All the same, better wait for noon, when surely no demon will care even to peek out to see us pass.'

'We'll wait, just as you say, princess. And you're right, this is the Great Plain after all, even if it's a benevolent corner of it.'

They sat there like that for a little while, looking down at the land before them, hardly speaking. At one point Beatrice said:

‘When we see our son, Axl, he’s sure to insist we live at his village. Won’t it be strange to leave our neighbours after these years, even if they’re sometimes teasing our grey hairs?’

‘Nothing’s decided yet, princess. We’ll talk everything over with our son when we see him.’ Axl went on gazing out at the Great Plain. Then he shook his head and said quietly: ‘It’s odd, the way I can’t recall him at all just now.’

‘I thought I dreamt about him last night,’ Beatrice said. ‘Standing by a well, and turning, just a little to one side, and calling to someone. What came before or after’s gone now.’

‘At least you saw him, princess, even if in a dream. What did he look like?’

‘A strong, handsome face, that much I remember. But the colour of his eyes, the turn of his cheek, I’ve no memory of them.’

‘I don’t recall his face now at all,’ Axl said. ‘It must all be the work of this mist. Many things I’ll happily let go to it, but it’s cruel when we can’t remember a precious thing like that.’

She moved closer to him, letting her head fall on his shoulder. The wind was now beating hard at them and part of her cloak had come loose. Putting an arm around her, Axl trapped the cloak and held it tightly to her.

‘Well, I dare say one or the other of us will remember soon enough,’ he said.

‘Let’s try, Axl. Let’s both of us try. It’s as if we’ve mislaid a precious stone. But surely we’ll find it again if we both try.’

‘Surely we will, princess. But look, the shadows are almost gone. It’s time for us to go down.’

Beatrice straightened and began rummaging in her bundle. 'Here, we'll carry these.'

She handed to him what looked like two smooth pebbles, but when he studied them he saw complex patterns cut into the face of each one.

'Put them in your belt, Axl, and take care to keep the markings facing out. It will help the Lord Christ keep us safe. I'll carry these others.'

'One will be enough for me, princess.'

'No, Axl, we'll share them equally. Now what I remember is there's a path to follow down there and unless rain's washed it away the walking will be easier than most of what we've had. But there's one place we need to be cautious. Axl, are you listening to me? It's when the path goes over where the giant is buried. To one who doesn't know it, it's an ordinary hill, but I'll signal to you and when you see me you're to follow off the path and round the edge of the hill till we meet the same path on its way down. It'll do us no good treading over such a grave, high noon or not. Are you fully understanding me, Axl?'

'Don't worry, princess, I understand you very well.'

'And I don't need to remind you. If we see a stranger on our path, or calling us from nearby, or any poor animal caught in a trap or injured in a ditch, or any such thing might catch your attention, you don't speak a word or slow your step for it.'

'I'm no fool, princess.'

'Well, then, Axl, it's time we went.'

As Beatrice had promised, they were required to walk on the Great Plain for only a short distance. Their path, though muddy at times, remained defined and never took them out of sunlight. After an initial descent it climbed steadily, till they found themselves walking along a high ridge, moorland on either side of them. The wind was fierce, but if anything a welcome antidote to the noon sun. The ground everywhere was covered in heather and gorse, never more than knee high, and only occasionally did a tree come into view - some solitary, crone-like specimen, bowed by endless gales. Then a valley appeared to their right, reminding them of the power and mystery of the Great Plain, and that they were now trespassing on but a small corner of it.

They walked close together, Axl almost at his wife's heels. Even so, throughout the crossing, Beatrice continued every five or six steps to chant, in the manner of a litany, the question: 'Are you still there, Axl?' to which he would respond: 'Still here, princess.' Aside from this ritualistic exchange, they said nothing. Even when they reached the giant's burial mound, and Beatrice made urgent signs for them to move from the path into the heather, they kept up this call and response in level tones, as though wishing to deceive any listening demons about their intentions. All the while Axl watched for fast-moving mist or sudden darkenings in the sky, but there came no hint of either, and then they had put the Great Plain behind them. As they climbed through a small wood full of songbirds, Beatrice made no comment, but he could see her whole posture relax, and her refrain came to an end.

They rested beside a brook, where they bathed their feet, ate bread and refilled their flasks. From this point their route followed a long sunken lane from Roman days, lined by oaks and elms, which was much easier walking, but required vigilance on account of the other wayfarers they were bound to meet. And sure enough, during the first hour, they encountered coming the other way a woman with her two children, a boy driving donkeys, and a pair of travelling players hurrying to rejoin their troupe. On each occasion they stopped to exchange pleasantries, but another time, hearing the clatter of approaching wheels and hooves, they hid themselves in the ditch. This too proved harmless - a Saxon farmer with a horse and cart piled high with firewood.

Toward mid-afternoon the sky began to cloud as though for a storm. They had been resting beneath a large oak, their backs to the road and hidden from the passing traffic. A clean sweep of land lay visible before them, so they had noticed immediately the coming change.

‘Don’t worry, princess,’ Axl said. ‘We’ll stay dry beneath this tree until the sun returns.’

But Beatrice was on her feet, leaning forward, a hand raised to shield her eyes. ‘I can see the road ahead curving into the distance, Axl. And I see it’s not far to the old villa. I took shelter there once before when I came with the women. A ruin, but the roof was still good then.’

‘Can we reach it before the storm breaks, princess?’

‘We’ll reach it if we go now.’

‘Then let’s hurry. There’s no reason to catch our deaths from a drenching. And this tree, now I’m looking at it, is full of holes the way I can see most of the sky above me.’

* * *

The ruined villa was further from the road than Beatrice remembered. With the first drops of rain and the sky darkening above them, they found themselves struggling down a long narrow path waist high with nettles through which they had to beat their way with their sticks. Though it had been clearly visible from the road, the ruin was obscured for much of this approach by trees and foliage, so that it was with a start, as well as relief, that the travellers suddenly found themselves before it.

The villa must have been splendid enough in Roman days, but now only a small section was standing. Once magnificent floors lay exposed to the elements, disfigured by stagnant puddles, weeds and grass sprouting through the faded tiles. The remains of walls, in places barely ankle high, revealed the old layout of the rooms. A stone arch led into the surviving part of the building, and Axl and Beatrice now moved cautiously towards it, pausing at the threshold to listen. Eventually Axl called out: 'Is anyone within?' And when there was no reply: 'We're two elderly Britons seeking shelter from the storm. We come in peace.'

Still there was silence and they went in under the arch into the shade of what must once have been a corridor. They emerged into the grey light of a spacious room, though here too, an entire wall had fallen away. The adjoining room had disappeared altogether, and evergreens were pressing in oppressively right up to the edge of the floor. The three standing walls, however, provided a sheltered area, with a good ceiling. Here, against the grimy masonry of what once had been whitewashed walls, were two dark figures, one standing, the other sitting, some distance apart.

Seated on a piece of fallen masonry was a small, bird-like old woman - older than Axl and Beatrice - in a dark cloak, the hood pushed back enough to reveal her leathery features. Her eyes were sunk deep so that you could hardly see them. The curve of her back was not quite touching the wall behind her. Something stirred on her lap and Axl saw it was a rabbit, held tightly in her bony hands.

At the furthest point along the same wall, as though he had moved as far from the old woman as possible while keeping under cover, was a thin, unusually tall man. He wore a thick long coat of the sort a shepherd might wear during a cold night's watch, but where it ended, the exposed lower parts of his legs were bare. On his feet were the kind of shoes Axl had seen on fishermen. Though he was probably still young, the top of his head was smoothly bald, while dark tufts sprouted around his ears. The man was standing rigidly, his back to the room, one hand on the wall before him as though listening intently to something occurring on the other side.

He glanced over his shoulder as Axl and Beatrice came in, but said nothing. The old woman too was staring at them in silence and only when Axl said: 'Peace be with you,' did they unfreeze a little. The tall man said: 'Come in further, friends, or you will not stay dry.'

Sure enough, the sky had truly opened now and rainwater was running down some section of broken roof and splashing on the floor near where the visitors were standing. Thanking him, Axl led his wife to the wall, choosing a spot midway between their hosts. He helped Beatrice take off her bundle, then put his own down onto the ground.

Then the four of them remained like that for some time while the storm grew ever more fierce, and a flash of lightning illuminated the shelter. The oddly frozen stances of the tall man and the old woman seemed to cast a spell on Axl and Beatrice, for now they too remained as still and silent. It was almost as if, coming across a picture and stepping inside it, they had been compelled to become painted figures in their turn.

Then as the downpour settled to a steady fall, the bird-like old woman finally broke the silence. Stroking her rabbit with one hand while clutching it tightly in the other, she said:

'God be with you, cousins. You'll forgive me not greeting you earlier, but I was surprised to see you here. You'll know you're welcome nonetheless. A fine day for travelling until this storm came. But it's the kind that vanishes as suddenly as it appears. Your journey won't be long delayed and all the better for your taking a rest. Which way do you go, cousins?'

'We're on our way to our son's village,' Axl said, 'where he waits anxiously to welcome us. But tonight we'll seek shelter at a Saxon village we hope to reach by nightfall.'

‘Saxons have their wild ways,’ the old woman said.

‘But they’ll welcome a traveller more readily than do our own kind. Be seated, cousins. That log behind you is dry and I’ve often sat contentedly on it.’

Axl and Beatrice did as suggested, and then there was silence for a few further moments while the rain continued to beat down. Eventually a movement from the old woman made Axl glance towards her. She was pulling back the rabbit’s ears, and as the animal struggled to free itself, her claw-like hand kept it firmly in its grasp. Then, as Axl watched, the old woman produced in her other hand a large rusted knife and placed it against the creature’s throat. As Beatrice beside him started, Axl realised that the dark patches beneath their feet, and elsewhere all over the ruined floor, were old bloodstains, and that mingled with the smell of ivy and damp mouldering stone was another faint but lingering one of slaughter.

Having placed her knife to the rabbit’s throat, the old woman became quite still again. Her sunken eyes, Axl realised, were fixed on the tall man at the far end of the wall, as though she were waiting for a signal from him. But the man remained in the same rigid posture as before, his forehead almost touching the wall. He either had not noticed the old woman or else was determined to ignore her.

‘Good mistress,’ Axl said, ‘kill the rabbit if you must. But break its neck cleanly. Or else take a stone and give it a good blow.’

‘Had I the strength, sir, but I’m too weak. I have a knife with a sharp edge and that is all.’

‘Then I’ll gladly assist you. There’s no need for your knife.’ Axl rose to his feet, holding out his hand, but the old woman made no move to give up the rabbit. She remained exactly as before, the knife on the animal’s throat, her gaze fixed on the man across the room.

At last the tall man turned to face them. 'Friends,' he said, 'I was surprised to see you enter earlier, but now I'm glad. For I see you're good people, and I beg you, while you wait for this storm to pass, listen to my plight. I'm a humble boatman who ferries travellers across choppy waters. I don't mind the work though the hours are long and when there are many waiting to cross there's little sleep and my limbs ache with each thrust of the oar. I work through rain and wind and under the parching sun. But I keep my spirits up looking forward to my rest days. For I'm but one of several boatmen and we're each able to take our turn to rest, if only after long weeks of labour. On our rest days, we each have a special place to go, and this, friends, is mine. This house where I was once a carefree child. It's not as it once was, but for me it's filled with precious memories, and I come here asking only the quiet to enjoy them. Now consider this. Whenever I come here, within an hour of my arrival, this old woman will enter through that arch. She'll sit herself down and taunt me hour by hour, night and day. She'll make cruel and unjust accusations. Under cover of dark, she'll curse me with the most horrible curses. She will not give me a moment's respite. Sometimes, as you see, she'll bring with her a rabbit, or some such small creature, so she can slay it and pollute this precious place with its blood. I've done all I can to persuade her to leave me, but what pity God placed in her soul, she has learnt to ignore. She will not go, nor will she cease to taunt. Even now it's only your unexpected entrance that has caused her to pause in her persecution. And before long it will be time to begin my journey back, to more long weeks of toil on the water. Friends, I beg you, do what you can to make her leave. Persuade her that her behaviour is ungodly. You may have influence on her, being as you are from the outside.'

There was a silence after the boatman stopped talking. Axl remembered later feeling a vague compulsion to reply, but at the same time a sense that the man had spoken to him in a dream and that there was no real obligation to do so.

Beatrice too seemed to feel no urge to respond, for her eyes remained on the old woman, who had now taken the knife away from the rabbit's throat, and was stroking its fur, almost affectionately, with the edge of the blade. Eventually Beatrice said:

'Mistress, I beg you, allow my husband to assist with your rabbit. There's no call to spill blood in a place such as this, and no basin to catch it. You'll bring bad luck not only to this honest boatman but to yourself and all other travellers who stray in here seeking shelter. Put that knife away and slaughter the creature gently elsewhere. And what good can come of taunting this man as you do, a hard-working boatman?'

'Let's not be hasty to speak harshly to this lady, princess,' Axl said gently. 'We don't know what has occurred between these people. This boatman seems honest, but then again, this lady may have just cause to come here and spend her time as she does.'

'You couldn't have spoken more aptly, sir,' the old woman said. 'Do I think this a charming way to spend my fading days? I'd rather be far from here, in the company of my own husband, and it's because of this boatman I'm now parted from him. My husband was a wise and careful man, sir, and we planned our journey for a long time, talked of it and dreamt of it over many years. And when finally we were ready, and had all we needed, we set off on the road and after several days found the cove from where we could cross to the island. We waited for the ferryman, and in time, saw his boat coming towards us. But as luck would have it, it was this very man here who came to us. See how tall he is. Standing on his boat on the water, against the sky with his long oar, he looked as tall and thin as those players do when they hobble on their stilts. He came to where my husband and I were standing on the rocks and tied his boat. And to this day I don't know how he did it, but somehow he tricked us. We were too trusting. With the island so near, this boatman took away my husband and left me waiting on the shore, after forty years and more of our being husband and wife and hardly a day apart. I can't think how he did it. His voice must have put us in a dream, because before I knew it he was rowing off with my husband and I was still on land. Even then, I didn't believe it. For who could suspect such cruelty from a boatman? So I waited. I said to myself, it's simply that the boat cannot take more than one passenger at a time, for the water was unsettled that day, and the sky almost as dark as it is now. I stood there on the rock and watched the boat getting smaller and then a speck. And still I waited, and in time the speck grew larger and it was the boatman coming back to me. I could soon see his head as smooth as a pebble, now with no passenger left in his boat. And I imagined it was my turn and I would soon be with my beloved again. But when he came to where I was waiting, and tied his rope to the pole, he shook his head and refused to take me across. I argued and wept and called to him, but he would not listen. Instead he offered me - such cruelty! - he offered a rabbit he said had been caught in a trap on the island's shore. He'd brought it to me thinking it a fitting supper for my first evening of solitude. Then seeing there was no one else waiting to be ferried, he pushed away, leaving me weeping on the shore, holding his wretched rabbit. I let it run off into the heather a moment later, for I tell you I had little appetite that evening or for many evenings after. That's why it is I bring him my own little gift each time I come here. A rabbit for his stew in return for his kindness that day.'

'The rabbit was intended for my own supper that evening,' the boatman's voice broke in from across the room.

'Feeling pity, I gave it to her. It was simple kindness.'

'We know nothing of your affairs, sir,' Beatrice said.

'But it does seem a cruel deception to leave this lady alone on the shore that way. What was it made you do such a thing?'

‘This boatman is a sly one,’ the old woman said. ‘He’ll dare to deceive you, even though you’re from the outside. He’ll have you believe every soul roams that island in solitude, but it isn’t true. Would my husband and I have dreamt long years to go to a place like that? The truth is there’s many permitted to cross the water as wedded man and wife to dwell together on the island. Many who roam those same forests and quiet beaches arm in arm. My husband and I knew this. We knew it as children. Good cousins, if you search through your own memories, you’ll remember it to be true even as I speak of it now. We had little inkling as we waited in that cove how cruel a boatman would come over the water to us.’

together. This lady is reluctant to accept it, but her bond with her husband was simply too weak. Let her look into her heart, then dare say my judgement that day was in error.'

'Mistress,' Beatrice said. 'What do you say?'

The old woman remained silent. She kept her eyes lowered, and went on running the blade sulkily over the rabbit's fur.

'Mistress,' Axl said, 'once the rain stops, we'll be returning to the road. Why not leave this place with us? We'll gladly walk with you some of your way. We could talk at leisure about whatever pleases you. Leave this good boatman in peace to enjoy what remains of this house while it stands. What's to be gained sitting here like this? And if you wish it, I'll kill the rabbit cleanly before our paths part. What do you say?'

The old woman gave no reply, nor any indication of having heard Axl's words. After some time, she rose slowly to her feet, the rabbit held closely to her chest. The woman was tiny in stature and her cloak dragged along the floor as she made her way to the broken side of the room. Some water splashed onto her from a section of the ceiling, but she seemed not to care. When she had reached the far end of the floor, she looked out at the rain and the encroaching greenery. Then bending slowly, she set the rabbit down near her feet. The animal, perhaps stiff with fear, did not move at first. Then it vanished into the grass.

The old woman straightened herself carefully. When she turned she appeared to be looking at the boatman - her strangely sunken eyes made it hard to be certain - then said: 'These strangers have taken away my appetite. But it will return, I've no doubt.'

With that she lifted the hem of her cloak and stepped slowly down into the grass like one easing herself into a pool. The rain fell on her steadily, and she pulled her hood further over her head before taking her next steps into the tall nettles.

‘Wait a few moments and we’ll walk with you,’ Axl called after her. But he felt Beatrice’s hand on his arm and heard her whisper: ‘Best not meddle with her, Axl. Let her go.’

When Axl walked over to where the old woman had stepped down, he half expected to see her somewhere, impeded by the foliage and unable to go on. But there was now no sign of her.

‘Thank you, friends,’ the boatman said behind him. ‘Perhaps for this day at least, I shall be allowed peace to remember my childhood.’

‘We too will be out of your way, boatman,’ said Axl. ‘Just as soon as this lets up.’

‘No hurry, friends. You spoke judiciously and I thank you for it.’

Axl went on staring at the rain. He heard his wife say behind him: ‘This must once have been a splendid house, sir.’

‘Oh, it was, good lady. When I was a boy, I didn’t know just how splendid, for it was all I knew. There were fine pictures and treasures, kind and wise servants. Just through there was the banqueting hall.’

‘It must sadden you to see it like this, sir.’

‘I’m simply grateful, good lady, it still stands as it does. For this house has witnessed days of war, when many others like it were burnt to the ground and are no more now than a mound or two beneath grass and heather.’

Then Axl heard Beatrice’s footsteps coming towards him and felt her hand on his shoulder. ‘What is it, Axl?’ she asked, her voice lowered. ‘You’re troubled, I can see it.’

‘It’s nothing, princess. It’s just this ruin here. For a moment it was as if I were the one remembering things here.’

‘What manner of things, Axl?’

‘I don’t know, princess. When the man speaks of wars and burning houses, it’s almost as if something comes back to me. From the days before I knew you, it must be.’

‘Was there ever a time before we knew one another, Axl? Sometimes I feel we must have been together since we were babes.’

‘It seems that way to me too, princess. It’s just some foolishness coming over me in this strange place.’

She was looking at him thoughtfully. Then she squeezed his hand and said quietly: ‘This is a queer place indeed and may bring us more harm than the rain ever could. I’m anxious to leave it, Axl. Before that woman returns or something worse.’

Axl nodded. Then turning, he called across the room: ‘Well, boatman, the sky looks to be clearing so we’ll be on our way. Many thanks for allowing us shelter.’

The boatman said nothing to this, but as they were putting on their bundles, he came to assist them, handing them their walking sticks. ‘A safe journey, friends,’ he said. ‘May you find your son in good health.’

They thanked him again, and were proceeding through the arch when Beatrice suddenly stopped and looked back.

‘Since we’re leaving you, sir,’ she said, ‘and may not meet with you again, I wonder if you’ll allow me a small question.’

The boatman, standing at his spot by the wall, was watching her carefully.

‘You spoke earlier, sir,’ Beatrice went on, ‘of your duty to question a couple waiting to cross the water. You spoke of the need to discover if their bond of love is such as to allow them to dwell together on the island. Well, sir, I was wondering this. How do you question them to discover what you must?'

For a moment the boatman seemed uncertain. Then he said: 'Frankly, good lady, it's not for me to talk of such matters. Indeed, we shouldn't by rights have met today, but some curious chance brought us together and I'm not sorry for it. You were both kind and took my part and for that I'm grateful. So I will answer you as best I can. It is, as you say, my duty to question all who wish to cross to the island. If it's a couple such as you speak of, who claim their bond is so strong, then I must ask them to put their most cherished memories before me. I'll ask one, then the other to do this. Each must speak separately. In this way the real nature of their bond is soon revealed.'

'But isn't it hard, sir,' Beatrice asked, 'to see what truly lies in people's hearts? Appearances deceive so easily.'

'That's true, good lady, but then we boatmen have seen so many over the years it doesn't take us long to see beyond deceptions. Besides, when travellers speak of their most cherished memories, it's impossible for them to disguise the truth. A couple may claim to be bonded by love, but we boatmen may see instead resentment, anger, even hatred. Or a great barrenness. Sometimes a fear of loneliness and nothing more. Abiding love that has endured the years - that we see only rarely. When we do, we're only too glad to ferry the couple together. Good lady, I've already said more than I should.'

'I thank you for it, boatman. It's just to satisfy an old woman's curiosity. Now we'll leave you in peace.'

'May you have a safe journey.'

* * *

They retraced their steps along the path they had beaten earlier through the ferns and nettles. The storm had made the ground underneath treacherous, so for all their anxiety to put the villa behind them, they proceeded at a careful pace. When they finally reached the sunken lane, the rain still had not ceased, and they took shelter under the first large tree they could find.

‘Are you soaked through, princess?’

‘Don’t worry, Axl. This coat did its work. How is it with you?’

‘Nothing the sun won’t soon dry when it returns.’

They put down their bundles and leant against the trunk, recovering their breaths. After a while, Beatrice said quietly:

‘Axl, I feel afraid.’

‘Why, what is it, princess? No harm can come to you now.’

‘Do you remember the strange woman in dark rags you watched me talking to up by the old thorn that day? She may have looked a mad wanderer, but the story she told had much in common with the old woman’s just now. Her husband too had been taken by a boatman and she left behind on the shore. And when she was coming back from the cove, weeping for loneliness, she found herself crossing the edge of a high valley, and she could see the path a long way before and a long way behind, and all along it people weeping just like her. When I heard this I was only partly afraid, saying to myself it was nothing to do with us, Axl. But she went on speaking, about how this land had become cursed with a mist of forgetfulness, a thing we’ve remarked on often enough ourselves. And then she asked me: “How will you and your husband prove your love for each other when you can’t remember the past you’ve shared?” And I’ve been thinking about it ever since. Sometimes I think of it and it makes me so afraid. '

'But what's to fear, princess? We've no plans to go to any such island or any desire to do so. '

'Even so, Axl. What if our love withers before we've a chance even to think of going to such a place? '

'What are you saying, princess? How can our love wither? Isn't it stronger now than when we were foolish young lovers? '

'But Axl, we can't even remember those days. Or any of the years between. We don't remember our fierce quarrels or the small moments we enjoyed and treasured. We don't remember our son or why he's away from us. '

'We can make all those memories come back, princess. Besides, the feeling in my heart for you will be there just the same, no matter what I remember or forget. Don't you feel the same, princess? '

'I do, Axl. But then again I wonder if what we feel in our hearts today isn't like these raindrops still falling on us from the soaked leaves above, even though the sky itself long stopped raining. I'm wondering if without our memories, there's nothing for it but for our love to fade and die. '

'God wouldn't allow such a thing, princess.' Axl said this quietly, almost under his breath, for he had himself felt an unnamed fear welling up within him.

'The day I spoke with her by the old thorn,' Beatrice continued, 'the strange woman warned me to waste no more time. She said we had to do all we could to remember what we've shared, the good and the bad. And now that boatman, when we were leaving, gives the very answer I expected and feared. What chance do we have, Axl, the way we are now? If someone like that asked of us our most treasured memories? Axl, I'm so afraid. '

‘There, princess, there’s nothing to fear. Our memories aren’t gone for ever, just mislaid somewhere on account of this wretched mist. We’ll find them again, one by one if we have to. Isn’t that why we’re on this journey? Once our son’s standing before us, many things are sure to start coming back.’

‘I hope so. That boatman’s words have made me all the more afraid.’

‘Forget him, princess. What do we want with his boat, or his island come to that? And you’re right, the rain’s stopped out there and we’ll be drier stepping out from under this tree. Let’s be on our way, and no more of these worries.’

Chapter Three

The Saxon village, viewed from a distance and a certain height, would have been something more familiar to you as a 'village' than Axl and Beatrice's warren. For one thing - perhaps because the Saxons had a keener sense of claustrophobia - there was none of this digging into the hillside. If you were coming down the steep valley slope, as Axl and Beatrice were that evening, you would have seen below you some forty or more individual houses, laid out on the valley floor in two rough circles, one within the other. You might have been too far away to notice the variations in size and splendour, but you would have made out the thatched roofs, and the fact that many were 'roundhouses' not so far removed from the kind in which some of you, or perhaps your parents, were brought up. And if the Saxons were happy to sacrifice a little security for the benefits of open air, they were careful to compensate: a tall fence of tethered timber poles, their points sharpened like giant pencils, completely encircled the village. At any given point, the fence was at least twice a man's height, and to make the prospect of scaling it even less enticing, a deep trench followed it all the way around the outside.

That would have been the picture Axl and Beatrice saw below them as they paused to catch their breaths during their descent down the hill. The sun was setting over the valley now, and Beatrice, who had the better sight, was once more leaning forward, a step or two in front of Axl, the grass and dandelions around her as tall as her waist.

'I can see four, no five men guarding the gate,' she was saying. 'And I think they're holding spears. When I was last here with the women, it was nothing more than one gate-keeper with a pair of dogs.'

‘Are you sure there’ll be a welcome here for us, princess?’

‘Don’t worry, Axl, they know me well enough by now. Besides, one of their elders here is a Briton, regarded by all as a wise leader even if he’s not of their blood. He’ll see to it we have a safe roof tonight. Even so, Axl, I think something’s happened and I’m uneasy. Now here’s another man with a spear arrived, and that’s a pack of fierce dogs with him.’

‘Who knows what goes on with Saxons,’ said Axl. ‘We may be better seeking shelter elsewhere tonight.’

‘The dark will be soon on us, Axl, and those spears are not intended for us. Besides, there’s a woman in this village I was wanting to visit, one who knows her medicines beyond anyone in our own.’

Axl waited for her to say something further, and when she went on peering into the distance, he asked: ‘And why would you be after medicines, princess?’

‘A small discomfort I feel from time to time. This woman might know of something to soothe it.’

‘What sort of discomfort, princess? Where does it trouble you?’

‘But where does it lie, princess? This pain?’

‘Oh ...’ Without turning to him, she pressed a hand to her side, just below the ribcage, then laughed. ‘It’s nothing to speak of. You can see, it hasn’t slowed me walking here today.’

‘It hasn’t slowed you one bit, princess, and I’ve been the one having to beg we stop and rest.’

‘That’s what I’m saying, Axl. So it’s nothing to worry about.’

‘It hasn’t slowed you down at all. In fact, princess, you must be as strong as any woman half your age. Still, if there’s someone here to help with your pain, what’s the harm in going to her?’

‘That’s all I was saying, Axl. I’ve brought a little tin to trade for medicines.’

‘Who wants these little pains? We all have them, and we’d all be rid of them if we could. By all means, let’s go to this woman if she’s here, and those guards let us pass.’

It was nearly dark by the time they crossed the bridge over the trench, and torches had been lit on either side of the gate. The guards were large and burly but looked panicked by their approach.

‘Wait a moment, Axl,’ Beatrice said quietly. ‘I’ll go alone to speak with them.’

‘Don’t go near their spears, princess. The dogs look calm but those Saxons look foolish with fear.’

‘If it’s you they fear, Axl, old man that you are, I’ll soon show them their great error.’

She walked towards them boldly. The men gathered around her and as she addressed them they threw suspicious glances towards Axl. Then one of them called to him, in the Saxon language, to step closer to the torches, presumably so they could see he was not a younger man in disguise. Then after a few more exchanges with Beatrice the men allowed them through.

Axl was puzzled that a village which from a distance looked to be two orderly rings of houses could turn out to be such a chaotic labyrinth now they were walking through its narrow lanes. Admittedly the light was fading, but as he followed Beatrice, he could discern no logic or pattern to the place. Buildings would loom unexpectedly in front of them, blocking their way and forcing them down baffling side alleys. They were obliged, moreover, to walk with even more caution than out on the roads: not only was the ground pitted and full of puddles from the earlier storm, the Saxons seemed to find it acceptable to leave random objects, even pieces of rubble, lying in the middle of the path. But what troubled Axl most was the odour that grew stronger and fainter as they walked, but never went away. Like anyone of his time, he was well reconciled to the smell of excrement, human or animal, but this was something altogether more offensive. Before long he had determined its source: all over the village people had left out, on the fronts of houses or on the side of the street, piles of putrefying meat as offerings to their various gods. At one point, startled by a particularly strong assault, Axl had turned to see, suspended from the eaves of a hut, a dark object whose shape changed before his eyes as the colony of flies perched on it dispersed. A moment later they encountered a pig being dragged by its ears by a group of children; dogs, cows and donkeys under no one's supervision. The few people they met stared silently at them, or else quickly vanished behind a door or shutter.

‘There’s something strange here tonight,’ Beatrice whispered as they walked. ‘Usually they’d be sitting in front of their houses or perhaps gathered in circles laughing and talking. And the children would be following us by now asking a hundred questions and wondering if to call us names or be our friends. Everything’s eerily still and it makes me uneasy.’

‘Are we lost, princess, or are we still going toward the place they’ll be sheltering us?’

‘I’d been thinking we’d visit first the woman about the medicines. But with things the way they are, we may be better going straight to the old longhouse and keeping out of harm’s way.’

‘Are we far from the medicine lady’s house?’

‘As I remember it, not far at all now.’

‘Then let’s see if she’s there. Even if your pain’s a trivial thing, as we know it to be, there’s no sense in feeling it at all if it can be taken away.’

‘It can wait till the morning, Axl. It’s not even a pain I notice till we’re speaking of it.’

‘Even so, princess, now we’re here, why not go and see the wise woman?’

‘We’ll do so if you particularly wish it, Axl. Though I’d have happily left it for the morning or maybe the next time I’m passing through this place.’

Even as they were talking, they turned a corner into what appeared to be the village square. There was a bonfire blazing at its centre, and all around it, illuminated by its light, a large crowd. There were Saxons of all ages, even tiny children in their parents’ arms, and Axl’s first thought was that they had stumbled upon a pagan ceremony. But as they stopped to consider the scene before them, he saw there was no focus to the crowd’s attention. The faces he could see were solemn, perhaps frightened. Voices were lowered, and collectively came through the air as a worried murmur. A dog barked at Axl and Beatrice and was promptly chased away by shadowy figures. Those among the crowd who noticed the visitors stared their way blankly before losing interest.

‘Who knows what concerns them here, Axl,’ Beatrice said. ‘I’d walk away except the medicine woman’s house is somewhere near. Let me see if I can still find my way to it.’

As they moved towards a row of huts to their right, they became aware of many more people in the shadows, silently watching the crowd around the fire. Beatrice stopped to talk to one of them, a woman standing in front of her own door, and after a while Axl realised this was the medicine woman herself. He could not see her well in the near-darkness, but made out the straight-backed figure of a tall woman, probably in her middle years, clutching a shawl around her arms and shoulders. She and Beatrice went on conferring in low voices, sometimes glancing towards the crowd, sometimes at Axl. Eventually the woman gestured for them to enter her hut, but Beatrice, coming up to him, said softly:

‘Let me speak with her alone, Axl. Help me take off this bundle and wait out here for me.’

‘Can’t I be with you, princess, even if I hardly understand this Saxon tongue?’

‘These are women’s matters, husband. Let me talk with her alone, and she’s saying she’ll examine my old body carefully.’

‘I’m sorry, princess, I wasn’t thinking clearly. Let me take your bundle from you and I’ll be waiting here as long as you wish.’

After the two women had gone inside, Axl felt a great weariness, especially in his shoulders and legs. Removing his own burden, he leaned against the turf wall behind him and gazed over at the crowd. There was now a growing restlessness: people would stride from the darkness around him to join the crowd while others hurried away from the fire, only to return a moment later. The blaze illuminated some faces sharply, while leaving others in shadow, but after a time, Axl came to the conclusion these people were all waiting, in a state of some anxiety, for someone or something to emerge from the timber hall to the left of the fire. This building, probably some meeting place for the Saxons, must have had a fire of its own burning inside, for its windows flickered between blackness and light.

He was on the verge of nodding off, his back to the wall, the muffled voices of Beatrice and the medicine woman somewhere behind him, when the crowd surged and shifted, letting out a soft collective growl. Several men had emerged from the timber hall and were walking towards the fire. The crowd parted and quietened for them, as though in expectation of an announcement, but none came, and soon people were pressing around the newcomers, their voices building again. Axl noticed that attention was focused almost entirely on the man who had come out last from the hall. He was probably no more than thirty but had about him a natural authority. Although he was dressed simply, as a farmer might be, he did not look like anyone else in the village. It was not just the way he had swept his cloak over one shoulder, revealing his belt and the handle of his sword. Nor was it simply that his hair was longer than any of the villagers' - it hung almost down to his shoulders and he had tied some of it with a thong to prevent it swaying over his eyes. In fact the actual thought that crossed Axl's mind was that this man had tied his hair to stop it falling across his vision during combat. This thought had come to Axl quite naturally, and only on reflection did it startle him, for it had carried with it an element of recognition. Moreover, when the stranger, striding into the midst of the crowd, allowed his hand to fall and rest on the sword handle, Axl had felt, almost tangibly, the peculiar mix of comfort, excitement and fear such a movement could bring. Telling himself he would return to these curious sensations at some later point, he shut them out of his mind and concentrated on the scene unfolding before him.

It was the bearing of the man, the way he moved and held himself, that so set him apart from those around him. 'No matter that he tries to pass himself off as an ordinary Saxon,' Axl thought, 'this man is a warrior. And perhaps one capable of wreaking great devastation when he wishes it.'

Two of the other men who had emerged from the hall were hovering nervously behind him, and whenever the warrior drifted further into the crowd, both men tried their best to stay near him, like children anxious not to be left behind by a parent. The two men, who were both young, also wore swords, and in addition, each was clutching a spear, but it was evident they were quite unaccustomed to such weapons. They were, moreover, stiff with fear and seemed unable to respond to the words of encouragement their fellow villagers were giving them. Their gazes darted about in panic even as hands patted their backs or squeezed their shoulders.

‘The long-haired fellow is a stranger arrived only an hour or two before us,’ Beatrice’s voice said close to his ear. ‘A Saxon, but one from a distant country. The fenlands in the east, so he says, where he’s lately been fighting sea raiders.’

Axl had been aware for some time that the voices of the women had grown more distinct, and turning, saw that Beatrice and her hostess had come out of the house and were standing at the door just behind him. The medicine woman now spoke softly, for some time, in Saxon, after which Beatrice said into his ear:

‘It seems earlier today one of the village men came back out of breath and his shoulder wounded, and when prevailed upon to calm himself told of how he and his brother, together with his nephew, a boy of twelve, were fishing at their usual spot by the river and were set upon by two ogres. Except according to this wounded man these were no ordinary ogres. Monstrous and able to move faster and with greater cunning than any ogre he’d ever seen. The fiends – for it’s by that name these villagers are talking of them – the fiends killed his brother outright and carried off the boy, who was alive and struggling. The wounded man himself got away only after a long chase along the river path, the foul grunts coming closer behind him all the while, but he outran them in the end. That would be him there now, Axl, with the splint on his arm, talking to the stranger. Wounded though he was, he was anxious enough for his nephew to lead a party of this village’s strongest men back to the spot, and they saw smoke from a campfire near the bank, and as they were creeping up to it, their weapons at the ready, the bushes opened and it seems these same two fiends had set a trap. The medicine woman says three men were killed even before the others thought to run for their lives, and though they returned unhurt, most of them are now shivering and muttering to themselves in their beds, too shaken to come out and wish well these brave men willing to go out now, even with the darkness coming and the mist setting in, to do what couldn't be done by twelve strong men in broad daylight. '

'Do they know the boy is still alive?'

'They know nothing, but they'll go out to the river even so. After the first party returned in terror, for all the urging of the elders, there was not a single man brave enough to join a further expedition. Then as fortune would have it, here's this stranger come into the village seeking a night's shelter after his horse has hurt a foot. And though he knows nothing of this boy or his family before today, he's declared himself willing to come to the village's aid. Those others going out with him are two more of the boy's uncles, and by the look of them, I'd say they're more likely to hinder that warrior than be of help. Look, Axl, they're sick with fear. '

'I see that right enough, princess. But they're brave men all the same, to go out when they're so afraid. We chose a bad night to ask this village's hospitality. There's weeping somewhere even now, and there may be a great deal more before the night's passed. '

The medicine woman seemed to understand something of what Axl had said, for she spoke again, in her own language, then Beatrice said: 'She says to go straight to the old longhouse now and not show ourselves again till morning. If we choose to wander the village, she says there's no telling how we may be greeted on a night like this. '

'My own thoughts exactly, princess. Then let's be taking the good lady's advice, if you can still remember the way. '

But just at that moment the crowd made a sudden noise, then the noise became cheering, and the crowd shifted again, as if struggling to change shape. Then it began to move, the warrior and his two companions near its centre. A low chanting started up, and soon the spectators in the shadows - the medicine woman included - joined in. The procession came towards them, and though the brightness of the fire had been left behind, several torches were moving within it, so that Axl could catch glimpses of faces, some frightened, some excited. Whenever a torch illuminated the warrior, his expression was calm, gazing to left and right to acknowledge words of encouragement, his hand once more on the handle of his sword. They went past Axl and Beatrice, continued between a row of huts and out of view, though the muted chanting remained audible for some time.

Perhaps daunted by the atmosphere, neither Axl nor Beatrice moved for a while. Then Beatrice began to question the medicine woman on the best way to reach the longhouse, and it seemed to Axl the two women were soon discussing directions to some other destination altogether, for they pointed and gestured into the distance towards the hills above the village.

They finally set off for their lodgings only when quiet had descended over the village. It was harder than ever to find one's way in the darkness, and the occasional torches burning on corners seemed only to increase the confusion with their shadows. They were proceeding in the opposite direction to that in which the crowd had gone, and the houses they passed were dark with no obvious signs of life.

'Walk slowly, princess,' Axl said softly. 'If either of us takes a bad tumble on this ground, I'm not certain there'll be a soul coming out to help us.'

'Axl, I think we've lost our way again. Let's go back to the last corner and this time I'll be sure to find it.'

In time the path straightened and they found themselves walking beside the perimeter fence they had seen from the hill. Its sharpened poles loomed above them a shade darker than the night sky, and as they went on, Axl could hear murmured voices somewhere above them. Then he saw they were no longer alone: high up along the ramparts, at regular intervals, were shapes he realised were people gazing out over the fence into the dark wilderness beyond. He had barely time to share this observation with Beatrice before they heard footsteps gathering behind them. They quickened their pace, but now a torch was moving nearby and shadows swung rapidly before them. At first Axl thought they had stumbled upon a group of villagers coming in the other direction, but then saw that he and Beatrice were entirely surrounded. Saxon men of varying ages and builds, some with spears, others wielding hoes, scythes and other tools, were jostling around them. Several voices addressed them at once, and ever more people seemed to be arriving. Axl felt the heat of the torches thrust at their faces, and holding Beatrice close to him, tried to locate with his gaze the leader of this group, but could find no such figure. Every face, moreover, was filled with panic, and he realised any careless move could bring disaster. He pulled Beatrice out of the reach of a particularly wild-eyed young man who had raised a trembling knife in the air, and searched his memory for some Saxon phrases. When nothing came to him, he made do with a few soothing noises, such as he might have made to an unruly horse.

‘Stop that, Axl,’ Beatrice whispered. ‘They won’t thank you for singing lullabies to them.’ She addressed one, then another of the men in Saxon, but the mood did not improve. Shouted arguments were breaking out, and a dog, tugging on a rope, broke through the ranks to snarl at them.

Then the tense figures around them seemed all at once to sag. Their voices quietened till there was only the one, shouting angrily, somewhere still a little way off. The voice came closer and the crowd parted to let through a squat, misshapen man who shuffled into the pool of light leaning on a thick staff.

He was quite elderly, and though his back was relatively straight, his neck and head protruded from his shoulders at a grotesque angle. Nonetheless all present appeared to yield to his authority - the dog too ceased barking and vanished into the shadows. Even with his limited Saxon, Axl could tell the misshapen man's fury had only partly to do with the villagers' treatment of strangers: they were being reprimanded for abandoning their sentry posts, and the faces caught in the torchlight became crestfallen, though filled with confusion. Then as the elder's voice rose to a new level of anger, the men seemed slowly to remember something, and one by one slipped back into the night. But even when the last of them had gone, and there were sounds of feet clambering up ladders, the misshapen man went on hurling insults after them.

Finally he turned to Axl and Beatrice, and switching to their language, said with no trace of an accent: 'How can it be they forget even this, and so soon after watching the warrior leave with two of their own cousins to do what none of them had the courage for? Is it shame makes their memories so weak or simply fear?'

'They're fearful right enough, Ivor,' Beatrice said. 'Just now a spider falling beside them could set them tearing at one another. A sorry crew you sent out to greet us.'

'My apologies, Mistress Beatrice. And to you too, sir. It's not the welcome you would usually get here, but as you see, you've arrived on a night filled with dread.'

'We've lost our way to the old longhouse, Ivor,' Beatrice said. 'If you'd point us to it we'd be much beholden to you. Especially after that greeting, my husband and I are eager to be indoors and resting.'

‘I’d like to promise you a kind welcome at the longhouse, friends, but on this night there’s no telling what my neighbours may see fit to do. I’d be easier if you and your good husband agreed to spend the night under my own roof, where I know you’ll remain undisturbed.’

‘We accept your kindness gladly, sir,’ Axl broke in. ‘My wife and I are much in need of rest.’

‘Then follow me, friends. Stay close behind me and keep your voices low till we arrive.’

They followed Ivor through the dark until they reached a house which, though in structure much like the others, was larger and stood apart by itself. When they entered under the low arch, the air was thick with woodsmoke, which, even as it made Axl’s chest tighten, felt warm and welcoming. The fire was smouldering in the centre of the room, surrounded by woven rugs, animal skins and furniture crafted from oak and ash. As Axl went about extricating blankets from their bundles, Beatrice sank gratefully into a rocking chair. Ivor, though, remained standing by the doorway, a preoccupied look on his face.

‘The treatment you received just now,’ he said, ‘I shudder with shame to think of it.’

‘Please let’s think no more of it, sir,’ Axl said. ‘You’ve shown us more kindness than we could deserve. And we arrived this evening in time to see the brave men set off on their dangerous mission. So we understand all too well the dread that hangs in the air, and it’s no wonder some should behave foolishly.’

‘If you strangers remember our troubles well enough, how is it those fools are forgetting them already? They were told in terms a child would understand to hold their positions on the fence at all costs, the safety of the whole community depending on it, to say nothing of the need to aid our heroes should they appear at the gates pursued by monsters. So what do they do? Two strangers go by, and remembering nothing of their orders or even the reasons for them, they set on you like crazed wolves. I'd be doubting my own senses if such strange forgetfulness didn't occur so often in this place.'

'It's the same in our own country, sir,' Axl said. 'My wife and I have witnessed many incidents of such forgetfulness among our own neighbours.'

'Interesting to hear that, sir. And I was fearing this a kind of plague spreading through our country only. And is it because I'm old, or that I'm a Briton living here among Saxons, that I'm often left alone holding some memory when all around me have let it slip?'

'We've found it just the same, sir. Though we suffer enough from the mist - for that's how my wife and I have come to call it - we seem to do so less than the younger ones. Can you see an explanation for it, sir?'

'I've heard many things spoken about it, friend, and mostly Saxon superstition. But last winter a stranger came this way who had something to say on this matter to which I find myself giving more credence the more I think on it. Now what's this?' Ivor, who had remained by the door, his staff in his hand, turned with surprising agility for one so twisted. 'Excuse your host, friends. This may be our brave men already returned. It's best for now you remain in here and not show yourselves.'

Once he had left, Axl and Beatrice remained silent for some time, their eyes closed, grateful, in their respective chairs, for the chance to rest. Then Beatrice said quietly:

'What do you suppose Ivor was going to say then, Axl?'

'About what, princess?'

'He was talking of the mist and the reason for it.'

'Just a rumour he heard once. By all means let's ask him to speak more on it. An admirable man. Has he always lived among Saxons? ’

‘Ever since he married a Saxon woman a long time ago, so I’m told. What became of her I never heard. Axl, wouldn’t it be a fine thing to know the cause of the mist? ’

‘A fine thing indeed, but what good it will do, I don’t know. ’

‘How can you say so, Axl? How can you say such a heartless thing? ’

‘What is it, princess? What’s the matter? ’ Axl sat up in his chair and looked over to his wife. ‘I only meant knowing its cause wouldn’t make it go away, here or in our own country. ’

‘If there’s even a chance of understanding the mist, it could make such a difference to us. How can you speak so lightly of it, Axl? ’

‘I’m sorry, princess, I didn’t mean to do so. My mind was on other things. ’

‘How can you be thinking of other things, and we only today heard what we did from that boatman? ’

‘Other things, princess, such as if those brave men have come back and with the child unharmed. Or if this village with its frightened guards and flimsy gate is to be invaded this night by monstrous fiends wishing revenge for the rude attention paid them. There’s plenty for a mind to dwell on, never mind the mist or the superstitious talk of strange boatmen. ’

‘No need for harsh words, Axl. I never wished a quarrel. ’

‘Forgive me, princess. It must be this mood here is affecting me. ’

But Beatrice had become tearful. ‘No need to talk so harshly,’ she muttered almost to herself.

Rising, Axl made his way to her rocking chair and crouching slightly, held her closely to his chest. 'I'm sorry, princess,' he said. 'We'll be sure to talk to Ivor about the mist before we leave this place.' Then after a moment, during which they continued to hold each other, he said: 'To be frank, princess, there was a particular thing on my mind just now.'

'What was that, Axl?'

'I was wondering what the medicine woman said to you about your pain.'

'She said it was nothing but what's to be expected with the years.'

'Just what I always said, princess. Didn't I tell you there was no need for worry?'

'I wasn't the one worrying, husband. It was you insisting we go see the woman tonight.'

'It's as well we did, for now we needn't worry about your pain, if ever we did before.'

She gently freed herself from his embrace and allowed her chair to rock back. 'Axl,' she said. 'The medicine woman mentioned an old monk she says is even wiser than her. He's helped many from this village, a monk called Jonus. His monastery's a day from here, up on the mountain road east.'

'The mountain road east.' Axl wandered towards the door, which Ivor had left ajar, and looked out into the darkness. 'I'm thinking, princess, we could as easily take the higher road tomorrow as the low one through the woods.'

'That's a hard road, Axl. A lot of climbing. It will add at least a day to our journey and there's our own son anxious for our arrival.'

'That's all true. But it seems a pity, having come this far, not to visit this wise monk.'

‘It was only something the medicine woman said, thinking we were travelling that way. I told her our son’s village was more easily reached by the low road, and she agreed herself then it was hardly worth our while, there being nothing troubling me but the usual aches that come with the years.’

Axl went on gazing through the doorway into the dark. ‘Even so, princess, we might think about it yet. But here’s Ivor returning, and not looking happy.’

Ivor came striding in, breathing heavily, and sitting down in a wide chair piled with skins, allowed his staff to fall with a clatter at his feet. ‘A young fool swears he sees a fiend scaled the outside of our fence and now peeking at us over the top of it. A mighty commotion, I needn’t tell you, and it’s all I can do to raise a party to go and see if it’s true. Of course, there’s nothing where he points but the night sky, but he goes on saying the fiend’s there looking at us, and the rest of them cowering behind me like children with their hoes and spears. Then the fool confesses he fell asleep on his watch and saw the fiend in his dream, and even then do they hasten back to their posts? They’re so terrified, I have to swear to beat them till their own kin mistake them for mutton.’ He looked around him, still taking heavy breaths. ‘Excuse your host, friends. I’ll be sleeping in that inner room if I’m to sleep at all tonight, so do what you can to find comfort here, though there’s little on offer.’

‘On the contrary, sir,’ Axl said, ‘you’ve offered us wondrously comfortable lodgings and we’re grateful for it. I’m sorry it wasn’t better news called you out just now.’

‘We must wait, perhaps well into the night and the morning too. To where do you travel, friends?’

‘We’ll set off east tomorrow, sir, to our son’s village, where he anxiously awaits us. But on this matter you may be of help, for my wife and I were just arguing the best road to take. We hear of a wise monk by the name of Jonus at a monastery up on the mountain road whom we might consult on a small matter. '

'Jonus certainly has a revered name, though I've never met the man face to face. Go to him by all means, but be warned, the journey to the monastery's no easy one. The path will climb steeply for much of your day. And when at last it levels you must take care not to lose your way, for you'll be in Querig country. '

'Querig, the she-dragon? I've not heard talk of her in a long time. Is she still feared in this country? '

'She rarely leaves the mountains now,' Ivor said. 'Though she may on a whim attack a passing traveller, it's likely she's often blamed for the work of wild animals or bandits. In my view Querig's menace comes less from her own actions than from the fact of her continuing presence. So long as she's left at liberty, all manner of evil can't help but breed across our land like a pestilence. Take these fiends which curse us tonight. Where did they come from? They're no mere ogres. No one here has seen their like before. Why did they journey here, to make camp on our riverbank? Querig may rarely show herself, but many a dark force stems from her and it's a disgrace she remains unslain all these years. '

'But Ivor,' Beatrice said, 'who'd wish to challenge such a beast? By all accounts Querig's a dragon of great fierceness, and hidden in difficult terrain. '

'You're right, Mistress Beatrice, it's a daunting task. It happens there's an aged knight left from Arthur's days, charged by that great king many years ago to slay Querig. You may come across him should you take the mountain road. He's not easily missed, dressed in rusted chainmail and mounted on a weary steed, always eager to proclaim his sacred mission, though I'd guess the old fool has never given that she-dragon a single moment of anxiety. We'll reach a great age waiting for the day he fulfils his duty. By all means, friends, travel to the monastery, but go with caution and be sure to reach safe shelter by nightfall. '

Ivor began to move to the inner room, but Beatrice quickly sat up and said:

'You were talking earlier, Ivor, about the mist. How you heard something of the cause for it, but then were called away before you could say more. We're anxious now to hear you speak on this matter. '

'Ah, the mist. A good name for it. Who knows how much truth there is in what we hear, Mistress Beatrice? I suppose I was speaking of the stranger riding through our country last year and sheltered here. He was from the fens, much like our brave visitor tonight, though speaking a dialect often hard to understand. I offered him use of this poor house, as I've done you, and we talked on many matters through the evening, among them this mist, as you so aptly call it. Our strange affliction interested him greatly, and he questioned me again and again on the matter. And then he ventured something I dismissed at the time, but have since much pondered. The stranger thought it might be God himself had forgotten much from our pasts, events far distant, events of the same day. And if a thing is not in God's mind, then what chance of it remaining in those of mortal men? '

Beatrice stared at him. 'Can such a thing be possible, Ivor? We're each of us his dear child. Would God really forget what we have done and what's happened to us? '

'My question exactly, Mistress Beatrice, and the stranger could offer no answer. But since that time, I've found myself thinking more and more of his words. Perhaps it's as good an explanation as any for what you name the mist. Now forgive me, friends, I must take some rest while I can. '

Axl became aware that Beatrice was shaking his shoulder. He had no idea how long they had slept: it was still dark, but there were noises outside, and he heard Ivor say somewhere above him: 'Let's pray it's good news and not our end.' When Axl sat up, however, their host had already gone, and Beatrice said: 'Hurry, Axl, and we'll see which it is.'

Bleary with sleep, he slipped his arm through his wife's and together they stumbled out into the night. There were many more torches lit now, some blazing from the ramparts, making it much easier than before to see one's way. People were moving everywhere, dogs barking and children crying. Then some order seemed to impose itself, and Axl and Beatrice found themselves in a procession hurrying in a single direction. They came to an abrupt halt, and Axl was surprised to see they were already at the central square - there was obviously a more direct route from Ivor's house than the one they had taken earlier. The bonfire was blazing more fiercely than ever, so much so that Axl thought for an instant it was its heat that had caused the villagers to stop. But looking past the rows of heads, he saw the warrior had returned. He was standing there quite calmly, to the left of the fire, one side of his figure illuminated, the other in shadow. The visible part of his face was covered in what Axl recognised as tiny spots of blood, as if he had just come walking through a fine mist of the stuff. His long hair, though still tied, had come loose and looked wet. His clothes were covered in mud and perhaps blood, and the cloak he had nonchalantly flung over his shoulder at his departure was now torn in several places. But the man himself appeared uninjured, and he was now talking quietly to three of the village elders, Ivor among them. Axl could see too that the warrior was holding some object in the crook of his arm.

Meanwhile, chanting had started, softly at first, then gathering momentum, till eventually the warrior turned to acknowledge it. His manner was devoid of any crude swagger. And when he began to address the crowd, his voice, though loud enough for all to hear, somehow gave the impression he was speaking in a low, intimate tone appropriate to solemn subject matter.

His listeners hushed to catch each word, and soon he was drawing from them gasps of approval or of horror. At one point he gestured to a spot behind him and Axl noticed for the first time, sitting on the ground just within the circle of light, the two men who had gone out with the warrior. They looked as if they had fallen there from a height and were too dazed to get up. The crowd started up a chant for them, but the pair seemed not to notice, continuing instead to stare at the air before them.

The warrior then turned back to the crowd and said something which caused the chanting to fade. He stepped closer to the fire, and grasping in one hand the object he had been carrying, raised it into the air.

Axl saw what appeared to be the head of a thick-necked creature severed just below the throat. Dark curls of hair hung down from the crown to frame an eerily featureless face: where the eyes, nose and mouth should have been there was only pimpled flesh, like that of a goose, with a few tufts of down-like hair on the cheeks. A growl escaped the crowd and Axl felt it cower back. Only then did he realise that what they were looking at was not a head at all, but a section of the shoulder and upper arm of some abnormally large, human-like creature. The warrior was, in fact, holding up his trophy by the stump close to the bicep with the shoulder end uppermost, and in that moment Axl saw that what he had taken for strands of hair were entrails dangling out of the cut by which the segment had been separated from the body.

After only a short time, the warrior lowered his trophy and let it fall at his feet, as though he could now barely work up sufficient contempt for the creature's remains. For a second time, the crowd recoiled, before edging forward again, and then the chanting started up once more. But this time it died almost instantly for the warrior was speaking again, and though Axl could understand none of it, he could sense palpably the nervous excitement around him. Beatrice said in his ear:

‘Our hero has killed both monsters. One took its mortal wound into the forest, and will not live through the night. The other stood and fought and for its sins the warrior has brought of it what you see on the ground there. The rest of the fiend crawled to the lake to numb its pain and sank there beneath the black waters. The child, Axl, you see there the child?’

Almost beyond the light of the fire a small group of women had huddled around a thin, dark-haired youth seated on a stone. He was already close to a man’s height, but one sensed that beneath the blanket now wrapped around him, he still had the gangly frame of a boy. One woman had brought out a bucket and was washing off the grime from his face and neck, but he seemed oblivious. His eyes were fixed on the warrior’s back just in front of him, though intermittently he would angle his head to one side, as though trying to peer around the warrior’s legs at the thing on the ground.

Axl was surprised that the sight of the rescued child, alive and evidently without serious injury, provoked in him neither relief nor joy, but a vague unease. He supposed at first this was to do with the odd manner of the boy himself, but then it occurred to him what was really wrong: there was something amiss in the way this boy, whose safety had until so recently been at the centre of the community’s concerns, was now being received. There was a reserve, almost a coldness, that reminded Axl of that incident involving the girl Marta in his own village, and he wondered if this boy, like her, was in the process of being forgotten. But surely this could not be the case here. People were even now pointing at the boy, and the women attending him were staring back defensively.

‘I can’t catch what they’re saying, Axl,’ Beatrice said in his ear. ‘Some quarrel about the child, though a great mercy he’s been brought back safe and he himself showing surprising calm after what his young eyes have beheld.’

The warrior was still addressing the crowd, and a tone of entreaty had entered his voice. It was almost as if he was making an accusation, and Axl could feel the mood of the crowd changing. The sense of awe and gratitude was giving way to some other emotion, and there was confusion, even fear in the rumble of voices swelling around him. The warrior spoke again, his voice stern, gesturing behind him towards the boy. Then Ivor came within the light of the fire and standing beside the warrior said something which drew a less inhibited growl of protest from parts of his audience. A voice behind Axl shouted something, then arguments were breaking out on all sides. Ivor raised his voice and for a small moment there was quiet, but almost straight away the shouting resumed, and now there was jostling in the shadows.

Axl put his arm around her shoulders and began to push their way through, but something made him glance back one more time. The boy had not changed his position, and was still staring at the warrior’s back, apparently unaware of the commotion before him. But the woman who had been tending to him had stepped away, and was glancing uncertainly from the boy to the crowd. Beatrice tugged his arm. ‘Axl, please, take us away from here. I’m afraid we’ll be hurt.’

The entire village must have been at the square, for they encountered no one on their way back to Ivor’s house. Only as it came into view did Axl ask: ‘What was being said just now, princess?’

‘I’m not at all sure, Axl. There was too much of it at once for my weak understanding. A quarrel about the boy who was saved, and tempers being lost. It's well we're away and we'll find out in time what's occurred.'

* * *

When Axl awoke the next morning there were shafts of sunlight crossing the room. He was on the floor, but he had been sleeping on a bed of soft rugs beneath warm blankets - an arrangement more luxurious than he was accustomed to - and his limbs felt well rested. He was in good spirits, moreover, because he had awoken with a pleasant memory drifting through his head.

Beatrice stirred beside him but her eyes remained closed and her breathing unbroken. Axl watched her, as he often did at such moments, waiting for a sense of tender joy to fill his breast. It soon did so, just as he expected, but today was mingled with a trace of sadness. The feeling surprised him, and he ran his hand lightly along his wife's shoulder, as though such an action would chase away the shadow.

He could hear noises outside, but unlike those that had woken them in the night, these were of people going about their business of an ordinary morning. It occurred to him he and Beatrice had slept unwisely late, but he still refrained from waking Beatrice and went on gazing at her. Eventually he rose carefully, stepped over to the timber door and pushed it open a little way. This door - it would have been a 'proper' door on wooden hinges - made a creaking noise and the sun entered powerfully through the gap, but still Beatrice slept on. Now somewhat concerned, Axl returned to where she lay and crouched down beside her, feeling the stiffness in his knees as he did so. At last his wife opened her eyes and looked up at him.

'Time we were rising, princess,' he said, hiding his relief. 'The village is alive and our host long gone.'

'Then you should have roused me earlier, Axl.'

‘You looked so peaceful, and after that long day I imagined sleep would be welcome to you. And I was right for now you’re looking as fresh as a young maid.’

‘Talking your nonsense already and we don’t even know what happened in the night. From the sound of things out there, they haven’t beaten each other to bloody pulp. That’s children I hear and the dogs sound fed and happy. Axl, is there water to wash with here?’

A little later, having made themselves presentable as best they could - and with Ivor still not returned - they wandered out into the crisp, bright air in search of something to eat. The village now appeared to Axl a far more benevolent place. The round huts which in the dark had seemed so haphazardly positioned now stood before them in neat rows, their matching shadows forming an orderly avenue through the village. There was a bustle of men and women moving about with tools or washing tubs, groups of children following in their wake. The dogs, though numerous as ever, seemed docile. Only a donkey contentedly defecating in the sun right in front of a well reminded Axl of the unruly place he had entered the night before. There were even nods and subdued greetings from villagers as they passed, though no one went so far as to speak to them.

They had not gone far when they spotted the contrasting figures of Ivor and the warrior standing ahead of them in the street, heads close together in discussion. As Axl and Beatrice approached, Ivor took a step back and smiled self-consciously.

‘I wished not to wake you prematurely,’ he said to them. ‘But I’m a poor host and you both must be famished. Follow me to the old longhouse and I’ll see you’re given your fill. But first, friends, greet our hero of last night. You’ll find Master Wistan understands our tongue with ease.’

Axl turned to the warrior and bowed his head. ‘My wife and I are honoured to meet a man of such courage, generosity and skill. Your deeds last night were remarkable.'

'My deeds were nothing extraordinary, sir, no more my skills.' The warrior's voice, as before, was gentle and a smile hovered about his eyes. 'I had good fortune last night, and besides, was ably helped by brave comrades.'

'The comrades he speaks of', Ivor said, 'were too busy soiling themselves to join the battle. It's this man alone destroyed the fiends.'

'Really, sir, no more on this matter.' The warrior had addressed Ivor, but was now gazing intently at Axl, as though some mark on the latter's face greatly fascinated him.

'You speak our language well, sir,' Axl said, taken aback by the scrutiny.

The warrior went on studying Axl, then caught himself and laughed. 'Forgive me, sir. I thought for a moment ... But forgive me. My blood is Saxon through and through, but I was brought up in a country not far from here and was often among Britons. So I learnt to speak your tongue alongside my own. These days I'm less accustomed to it, living as I do far away in the fenlands, where one hears many strange tongues but not yours. So you must excuse my errors.'

'Far from it, sir,' Axl said. 'One can hardly tell you aren't a native speaker. In fact, I couldn't help notice last night your way of wearing your sword, closer and higher on the waist than Saxons are accustomed to do, your hand falling easily on the handle as you walk. I hope you won't be offended when I say it's a manner much like a Briton's.'

Again Wistan laughed. 'My Saxon comrades ceaselessly jest not only on my wearing of the sword, but my wielding of it. But you see, my skills were taught to me by Britons, and I've never wished for better teaching. It has preserved me well through many dangers, and did so again last night. Excuse my impertinence, sir, but I see you're not from these parts yourself. Can it be your native country is to the west?'

'We're from the neighbouring country, sir. A day's walk away, no more.'

'Yet perhaps in distant days you lived further west?'

'As I say, sir, I'm from the neighbouring country.'

'Forgive my poor manners. Travelling this far west, I find myself nostalgic for the country of my childhood, though I know it's some distance yet. I find myself seeing everywhere shadows of half-remembered faces. Are you and your good wife returning home this morning?'

'No, sir, we go east to our son's village, which we hope to reach within two days.'

'Ah. The road through the forest then.'

'Actually, sir, we mean to take the high road through the mountains, there being a wise man in the monastery there we hope will grant us an audience.'

'Is that so?' Wistan nodded thoughtfully, and once more looked carefully at Axl. 'I'm told that's a steep climb.'

'My guests have not yet breakfasted,' Ivor said, breaking in. 'Excuse us, Master Wistan, while I walk them to the longhouse. Then if we may, sir, I'd like to resume our discussion of just now.' He lowered his voice and continued in Saxon, to which Wistan replied with a nod. Then turning to Axl and Beatrice, Ivor shook his head and said gravely:

'Despite this man's great efforts last night, our problems are far from over. But follow me, friends, you must be famished.'

Ivor marched off with his lurching gait, prodding the earth at each step with his staff. He seemed too distracted to notice his guests falling behind in the crowded alleys. At one point, when Ivor was several paces ahead, Axl said to Beatrice: 'That warrior's an admirable fellow, didn't you think so, princess?'

'No doubt,' she replied quietly. 'But that was a strange way he had of staring at you, Axl.'

There was no time to say more, for Ivor, at last noticing he was in danger of losing them, had stopped at a corner.

Before long they came to a sunny courtyard. There were roaming geese, and the yard itself was bisected by an artificial stream - a shallow channel cut into the earth - along which the water trickled with urgency. At its broadest point the stream was forded by a simple little bridge of two flat rocks, and at that moment an older child was squatting on one of them, washing clothes. It was a scene that struck Axl as almost idyllic, and he would have paused to take it in further had Ivor not kept striding firmly on towards the low, heavily thatched building whose length ran the entire far edge of the yard.

Once inside it, you would not have thought this longhouse so different from the sort of rustic canteen many of you will have experienced in one institution or another. There were rows of long tables and benches, and towards one end, a kitchen and serving area. Its main difference from a modern facility would have been the dominating presence of hay: there was hay above one's head, and beneath one's feet, and though not by design, all over the surface of the tables, blown around by the gusts that regularly swept through the place. On a morning such as this, as our travellers sat down to breakfast, the sun breaking in through the porthole-like windows would have revealed the air itself to be filled with drifting specks of hay.

The old longhouse was deserted when they arrived, but Ivor went into the kitchen area, and a moment later two elderly women appeared with bread, honey, biscuits and jugs of milk and water. Then Ivor himself came back with a tray of poultry cuts which Axl and Beatrice proceeded to devour gratefully.

At first they ate without speaking, only now conscious of how hungry they had been. Ivor, facing them across the table, continued to brood, his eyes far away in thought, and it was only after some time that Beatrice said:

‘These Saxons are a great burden to you, Ivor. Perhaps you’re wishing to be back with your own kind, even with the boy returned safe and the ogres slain.’

‘Those were no ogres, mistress, nor any creatures seen before in these parts. It’s a great fear removed they no longer roam outside our gates. The boy though is another matter. Returned he may be, but far from safe.’ Ivor leaned across the table towards them and lowered his voice, even though they were once more alone. ‘You’re right, Mistress Beatrice, I wonder at myself to live among such savages. Better dwell in a pit of rats. What can that brave stranger think of us, and after all he did last night?’

‘Why, sir, what has occurred?’ Axl asked. ‘We were there at the fire last night, but sensing a fierce quarrel, took our leave and remain ignorant of what went on.’

‘You did well to hide yourselves, friends. These pagans were sufficiently aroused last night to tear out each other’s eyes. How they might have treated a pair of strange Britons found in their midst I dread to think. The boy Edwin was safely returned, but even as the village began to rejoice, the women found on him a small wound. I inspected it myself as did the other elders. A mark just below his chest, no worse than what a child receives after a tumble. But the women, his own kin at that, declared it a bite, and that’s what the village is calling it this morning. I’ve had to have the boy locked in a shed for his safety, and even so, his companions, his very family members, throwing stones at the door and calling for him to be brought out and slaughtered.’

‘But how can this be, Ivor?’ Beatrice asked. ‘Is it the mist’s work again that they’ve lost all memory of the horrors the child so lately suffered?’

‘If only it were, mistress. But this time they appear to remember all too well. The pagans will not look beyond their superstitions. It’s their conviction that once bitten by a fiend, the boy will before long turn fiend himself and wreak horror here within our walls. They fear him and should he remain here, he’ll suffer a fate as terrible as any from which Master Wistan saved him last night.’

‘Surely, sir,’ Axl said, ‘there are those here wise enough to argue better sense.’

‘If there are, we’re outnumbered, and even if we may command restraint for a day or two, it won’t be long before the ignorant have their way.’

‘Then what’s to be done, sir?’

‘The warrior’s as horrified as you are, and we two have been in discussion all morning. I’ve proposed he take the boy with him when he rides out, imposition though this is, and leave him at some village sufficiently distant where he may have a chance of a new life. I felt shame to the depths of my heart to ask such a thing of a man so soon after he has risked his life for us, but I could see little else to do. Wistan is now considering my proposal, though he has an errand for his king and already delayed on account of his horse and last night’s troubles. In fact, I must check the boy’s still safe now, then go see if the warrior has made his decision.’ Ivor rose and picked up his staff. ‘Come and say farewell before you leave, friends. Though after what you’ve heard I’ll understand your wish to hurry from here without a backward glance.’

Axl watched Ivor's figure through the doorway striding off across the sunny courtyard. 'Dismal news, princess,' he said.

'It is, Axl, but it's not to do with us. Let's not dally further in this place. Our path today's a steep one.'

The food and milk were very fresh, and they ate on for a while in silence. Then Beatrice said:

'Do you suppose there's any truth in it, Axl? What Ivor was saying last night about the mist, that it was God himself making us forget.'

'I didn't know what to think of it, princess.'

'Axl, a thought came to me about it this morning, just as I was waking.'

'What thought was that, princess?'

'It was just a thought. That perhaps God is angry about something we've done. Or maybe he's not angry, but ashamed.'

'A curious thought, princess. But if it's as you say, why doesn't he punish us? Why make us forget like fools even things that happened the hour before?'

'Perhaps God's so deeply ashamed of us, of something we did, that he's wishing himself to forget. And as the stranger told Ivor, when God won't remember, it's no wonder we're unable to do so.'

'What on this earth could we have done to make God so ashamed?'

'I don't know, Axl. But it's surely not anything you and I ever did, for he's always loved us well. If we were to pray to him, pray and ask for him to remember at least a few of the things most precious to us, who knows, he may hear and grant us our wish.'

There was a burst of laughter outside. Tilting his head a little, Axl was able to see out in the yard a group of children balancing on the flat rocks over the little stream. As he watched, one of them fell into the water with a squeal.

‘Who’s to say, princess,’ he said. ‘Perhaps the wise monk in the mountains will explain it to us. But now we’re speaking of waking this morning, there’s something came to me also, perhaps the same moment you were having these thoughts. It was a memory, a simple one, but I was pleased enough with it.’

‘Oh, Axl! What memory was that?’

‘I was remembering a time we were walking through a market or a festival. We were in a village, but not our own, and you were wearing that light green cloak with the hood.’

‘This must be a dream or else a long time ago, husband. I have no green cloak.’

‘I’m talking of long ago, right enough, princess. A summer’s day, but there was a chill wind in this place where we were, and you’d placed the green cloak around you, though you kept the hood from your head. A market or perhaps some festival. It was a village on a slope with goats in a pen where you first set foot in it.’

‘And what was it we were doing there, Axl?’

‘We were just walking arm in arm, and then there was a stranger, a man from the village, suddenly in our path. And taking one glance at you, he stared like he was beholding a goddess. Do you remember it, princess? A young man, though I suppose we too were young then. And he was exclaiming he’d never set eyes on a woman so beautiful. Then he reached forward and touched your arm. Do you have a memory of it, princess?’

‘There’s something comes back to me, but not clearly. I’m thinking this was a drunken man you’re talking of.’

‘A little drunk perhaps, I don’t know, princess. It was a day of festivities, as I say. All the same, he saw you and was amazed. Said you were the most beautiful sight he'd ever seen. '

'Then this must be a long time ago right enough! Isn't this the day you grew jealous and quarrelled with the man, the way we were almost run out of the village? '

'I recall nothing like that, princess. The time I'm thinking of, you had on the green cloak, and it was some festival day, and this same stranger, seeing I was your protector, turned to me and said, she's the loveliest vision I've seen so you be sure to take very good care of her my friend. That's what he said. '

'It comes back to me somewhat, but I'm sure you then had a jealous quarrel with him. '

'How could I have done such a thing when even now I feel the pride rising through me at the stranger's words? The most beautiful vision he'd seen. And he was telling me to take the very best care of you. '

'If you felt proud, Axl, you were jealous also. Didn't you stand up to the man even though he was drunk? '

'It's not how I remember it, princess. Perhaps I just made a show of being jealous as a sort of jest. But I would have known the fellow meant no harm. It's what I woke with this morning, though it's been many years. '

'If that's how you've remembered it, Axl, let it be the way it was. With this mist upon us, any memory's a precious thing and we'd best hold tight to it. '

'I wonder what became of that cloak. You always took good care of it. '

'It was a cloak, Axl, and like any cloak it must have worn thin with the years. '

'Didn't we lose it somewhere? Left on a sunny rock perhaps? '

‘Now that comes back to me. And I blamed you bitterly for its loss.’

‘I believe you did, princess, though I can’t think now what justice there was in that.’

‘Oh, Axl, it’s a relief we can remember a few things still, mist or no mist. It could be God’s already heard us and is hastening to help us remember.’

‘And we’ll remember plenty more, princess, when we set our minds to it. There’ll be no sly boatman able to trick us then, even if there ever comes a day we care at all for his foolish chatter. But let’s eat up now. The sun’s high and we’re late for that steep path.’

* * *

They were walking back to Ivor’s house, and had just passed the spot where they were nearly assaulted the previous night, when they heard a voice calling from above. Glancing around, they spotted Wistan high up on the rampart, perched on a lookout’s platform.

‘Glad to see you still here, friends,’ the warrior called down.

‘Still here,’ Axl called in reply, taking a few paces towards the fence. ‘But hastening on our way. And you, sir? Will you rest here for the day?’

‘I too must leave shortly. But if I may impose on you, sir, for a short conversation, I’d be most thankful. I promise not to detain you long.’

Axl and Beatrice exchanged looks, and she said quietly: ‘Speak with him if you will, Axl. I’ll return to Ivor’s and prepare provisions for our journey.’

Axl nodded, then turning to Wistan, called: ‘Very well, sir. Do you wish me to come up?’

‘As you will, sir. I’ll happily come down, but it’s a splendid morning and the view is such as to lift the spirits. If the ladder’s no trouble to you, I urge you to join me up here.’

‘Go see what he wants, Axl,’ Beatrice said quietly. ‘But be careful, and it’s not just the ladder I’m speaking of.’

He took each rung with care until he reached the warrior, waiting with an extended hand. Axl steadied himself on the narrow platform, then looked down to see Beatrice watching from below. Only after he had waved cheerfully did she move off somewhat reluctantly towards Ivor’s house – now clearly visible from his high vantage point. He kept watching her for a further moment, then turned and gazed out over the top of the fence.

‘You see I didn’t lie, sir,’ Wistan said, as they stood there side by side, the wind on their faces. ‘It’s quite splendid as far as the eye will reach.’

The view before them that morning may not have differed so greatly from one to be had from the high windows of an English country house today. The two men would have seen, to their right, the valleyside coming down in regular green ridges, while far to their left, the opposite slope, covered with pine trees, would have appeared hazier, because more distant, as it merged with the outlines of the mountains on the horizon. Directly before them was a clear view along the valley floor; of the river curving gently as it followed the corridor out of view; of the expanses of marshland broken by patches of pond and lake further in the distance. There would have been elms and willows near the water, as well as dense woodland, which in those days would have stirred a sense of foreboding. And just where the sunlight went into shadow on the left bank of the river could be seen some remnants of a long-abandoned village.

‘Yesterday I rode down that hillside,’ Wistan said, ‘and my mare with hardly any prompting set into a gallop as though for sheer joy. We raced across fields, past lake and river, and my spirit soared. A strange thing, as if I were returning to scenes from an early life, though to my knowledge I’ve never before visited this country. Can it be I passed this way as a small boy too young to know my whereabouts, yet old enough to retain these sights? The trees and moorland here, the sky itself seem to tug at some lost memory.’

‘It’s possible’, Axl said, ‘this country and the one further west where you were born share many likenesses.’

‘That must be it, sir. In the fenlands we have no hills to speak of, and the trees and grass lack the colour before us now. But it was on that joyful gallop my mare broke her shoe, and though this morning the good people here have given her another, I will have to ride gently for one hoof is bruised. The truth is, sir, I brought you up here not simply to admire the country, but to be away from unwelcome ears. I take it you’ve by now heard what’s occurred to the boy Edwin?’

‘Master Ivor told us of it, and we thought it poor news to succeed your brave intervention.’

‘You may know also how the elders, despairing of what would happen to the boy here, begged I take him away today. They ask I leave the boy in some distant village, telling some story of how I found him lost and hungry on the road. This I’d do gladly enough, except I fear such a plan can hardly save him. Word will easily travel across the country and next month, next year, the boy could find himself in the very plight he is in today, yet all the worse for being lately arrived and his people unknown. You see how it is, sir?’

‘You’re wise to fear such an outcome, Master Wistan.’

The warrior, who had been speaking while gazing out at the scenery, pushed back a tangled lock of hair the wind had blown across his face. As he did so, he seemed suddenly to see something in Axl's own features and, for a small moment, to forget what he had been saying. He gazed intently at Axl, angling his head. Then he gave a small laugh, saying:

'Forgive me, sir. I was just now reminded of something. But to return to my point. I knew nothing of this boy before last night, but I've been impressed by the steady way he has faced each new terror set before him. My comrades last night, brave though they were when setting out, were overcome with fear as we approached the fiends' camp. The boy, however, even though left at the fiends' mercy for many hours, held himself with a calm I could only wonder at. It would pain me greatly to think his fate's now all but sealed. So I've been thinking of a way out, and if you and your good wife were to consent to lend a hand, all may yet be well.'

'We're keen to do what we can, sir. Let me hear what you propose.'

'When the elders asked me to take the boy to a distant village, they meant no doubt a Saxon village. But it's precisely in a Saxon village the boy will never be safe, for it is Saxons who share this superstition about the bite he carries. If he were to be left with Britons, however, who see such nonsense for what it is, there can be no danger, even if the story were to pursue him. He's strong, and as I've said, has remarkable courage, even if he speaks little. He'll be a useful pair of hands for any community from the day he arrives. Now, sir, you said earlier you're on your way east to your son's village. I take it this will be just such a Christian village as we seek. If you and your wife were to plead for him, with perhaps the support of your son, that would surely secure a good outcome. Of course, it may be the same good people would accept the boy from me, but then I'll be a stranger to them, and one to arouse fear and suspicion.

What's more, the errand which has brought me to this country will prevent my travelling so far east.'

'You're suggesting then,' Axl said, 'that my wife and I be the ones to take the boy from here.'

'That is indeed my suggestion, sir. However, my errand will permit me to travel at least part of the same road. You said you would take the path through the mountains. I'd happily accompany you and the boy, at least to the other side. My company will be a tedious imposition, but then the mountains are known to contain dangers, and my sword may yet prove of service to you. And your bags too could be carried by the horse, for even if her foot's tender, she'll not complain of it. What do you say, sir?'

'I think it an excellent plan. My wife and I were distressed to hear of the boy's plight, and we'll be happy if we can aid some resolution. And what you say is wise, sir. It's among Britons, surely, he's safest now. I've no doubt he'll be received with kindness at my son's village, for my son himself is a respected figure there, practically an elder in all but his years. He'll speak for the boy, I know, and ensure his welcome.'

'I'm much relieved. I'll let Master Ivor know our plan and seek a way to remove the boy quietly from the barn. Are you and your wife ready to leave shortly?'

'My wife is even now packing provisions for the journey.'

'Then please wait by the south gate. I'll come by presently with the mare and the boy Edwin. I'm grateful to you, sir, for the sharing of this trouble. And glad we're to be companions for a day or two.'

Chapter Four

Never in his life had he seen his village from such a height and distance, and it amazed him. It was like an object he could pick up in his hand, and he flexed his fingers experimentally over the view in the afternoon haze. The old woman, who had watched his ascent with anxiety, was still at the foot of the tree, calling up to him to climb no further. But Edwin ignored her, for he knew trees better than anyone. When the warrior had ordered him to keep watch, he had selected the elm with care, knowing that for all its sickly appearance, it would possess its own subtle strength and welcome him. It commanded, moreover, the best view of the bridge, and of the mountain road leading up to it, and he could see clearly the three soldiers talking to the rider. The latter had now dismounted, and holding his restless horse by the bridle, was arguing fiercely with the soldiers.

He knew his trees - and this elm was just like Steffa. 'Let him be carried off and left to rot in the forest.' That was what the older boys always said about Steffa. 'Isn't that what happens to old cripples unable to work?' But Edwin had seen Steffa for what he was: an ancient warrior, still secretly strong, and with an understanding that went beyond even that of the elders. Steffa, alone in the village, had once known battlefields - it was the battlefields that had taken his legs - and that was why, in turn, Steffa had been able to recognise Edwin for what he was. There were other boys stronger, who might amuse themselves pinning Edwin to the ground and beating him. But it was Edwin, not any of them, who possessed a warrior's soul.

'I've watched you, boy,' old Steffa had once said to him. 'Under a storm of fists, your eyes still calm, as if memorising each blow. Eyes I've seen only on the finest warriors moving coldly through the rage of battle. Some day soon you'll become one to fear.'

And now it was starting. It was coming true, just as Steffa had predicted.

As a strong breeze swayed the tree, Edwin moved his grip to a different branch and tried again to recall the events of the morning. His aunt's face had become distorted out of all recognition. She had been shrieking a curse at him, but Elder Ivor had not let her finish, pushing her away from the doorway of the barn, blocking Edwin's view of her as he did so. His aunt had always been good to him, but if she now wanted to curse him, Edwin did not care. Not long ago she had tried to get Edwin to address her as 'mother', but he had never done so. For he knew his real mother was travelling. His real mother would not shriek at him like that, and have to be dragged away by Elder Ivor. And this morning, in the barn, he had heard his real mother's voice.

Elder Ivor had pushed him inside, into the darkness, and the door had closed, taking away his aunt's twisted face - and all those other faces. At first the wagon had appeared only as a looming black shape in the middle of the barn. Then gradually he had distinguished its outline, and when he had reached towards it, the wood had felt moist and rotten. Outside, the voices were shouting again, and then the cracking noises had come. They had started sporadically, then several had come at once, accompanied by a splintering sound, after which the barn had seemed slightly less dark.

He knew the noises were stones striking the rickety walls, but he ignored them to concentrate on the wagon before him. How long ago had it last been used? Why did it stand so crookedly? If it was now of no use, why was it kept like this in the barn?

It was then he had heard her voice: difficult to distinguish at first, on account of the din outside and the sound of the stones, but it had grown steadily more clear.

‘But the elders may not be able to hold them back for ever,’ he had said into the dark, though under his breath, even as his hand had stroked the side of the wagon.

‘The stones may break these thin walls.’

‘Don’t worry, Edwin. Didn’t you know? Those stones are under your control. Look, what’s that before you?’

‘An old and broken wagon.’

‘Well, there you are. Go round and round the wagon, Edwin. Go round and round the wagon, because you’re the mule tethered to the big wheel. Round and round, Edwin. The big wheel can only turn if you turn it, and only if you turn it can the stones keep coming. Round and round the wagon, Edwin. Go round and round and round the wagon.’

‘Why must I turn the wheel, mother?’ Even as he had spoken, his feet had started circling the wagon.

‘Because you’re the mule, Edwin. Round and round. Those sharp cracking noises you hear. They can’t continue unless you turn the wheel. Turn it, Edwin, round and round. Round and round the wagon.’

So he had followed her commands, keeping his hands on the upper edges of the wagon’s boards, passing one hand over the other to maintain his momentum. How many times had he gone round like that? A hundred? Two hundred? He would keep seeing, in one corner, a mysterious mound of earth; in another corner, where a narrow line of sun fell across the floor of the barn, a dead crow on its side, feathers still intact. In the half-dark, these two sights – the mound of earth and the dead crow – had come around again and again. Once he had asked out loud, ‘Did my aunt really curse me?’ but no reply had come, and he had wondered if his mother had gone away. But then her voice had returned, saying, 'Do your duty, Edwin. You're the mule. Don't stop just yet. You control everything. If you stop, so will those noises. So why fear them?'

Sometimes he went three or even four times around the wagon without hearing a single sharp crack. But then as though to compensate, several cracks would come at once, and the shouting outside would rise to a new pitch.

'Where are you, mother?' he had asked once. 'Are you still travelling?'

No reply had come, but then several turns later, she had said, 'I'd have given you brothers and sisters, Edwin, many of them. But you're on your own. So find the strength for me. You're twelve years old, almost grown now. You must be by yourself four, five strong sons. Find the strength and come rescue me.'

As another breeze rocked the elm, Edwin wondered if the barn he had been in was the same one in which the people had hidden the day the wolves had come to the village. Old Steffa had told him the story often enough.

'You were very young then, boy, perhaps too young to remember. Wolves, in broad daylight, three of them, walking calmly right into the village.' Then Steffa's voice would fill with contempt. 'And the village hid in fear. Some men were away in the fields, it's true. But there were plenty still here. They hid themselves in the threshing barn. Not just the women and the children but the men too. The wolves had strange eyes, they said. Best not to challenge them. So the wolves took all they wished. They slaughtered the hens. Feasted on the goats. And all the while, the village hid. Some in their houses. Most in the threshing barn. Cripple that I am, they left me where I was, sitting in the barrow, these broken legs poking out, beside the ditch outside Mistress Mindred's. The wolves trotted towards me. Come and eat me, I said, I'll not hide in a barn for a wolf. But they cared not for me and I watched them go right past, their fur as good as brushing these useless feet. They took all they wished, and only after they'd long departed did those brave men creep out of their hiding places. Three wolves in daylight, and not a man here to stand up to them.'

He had thought about Steffa's story as he had circled the wagon. 'Are you still travelling, mother?' he had asked once more, and again had received no reply. His legs were growing weary, and he had grown heartily sick of seeing the mound of earth and the dead crow, when at last she had said:

'Enough, Edwin. You've worked hard. Call your warrior now if you wish. Bring an end to it.'

Edwin had heard this with relief, but had carried on circling the wagon. To summon Wistan, he knew, would require immense effort. As he had the night before, he would have to will his coming from the very depths of his heart.

But somehow he had found the strength, and once he was confident the warrior was on his way, Edwin had slowed his pace - for even mules were driven more slowly towards the end of a day - and noted with satisfaction the cracking noises were growing more sparse. But only when silence had continued for a long time did he finally stop, and leaning against the side of the wagon, begin to recover his breath. Then the barn door had opened and the warrior had been standing there against the dazzling sunshine.

Wistan had come in leaving the door wide open behind him as though to show his contempt for whatever hostile forces had lately been gathered outside. This had brought a large rectangle of sun into the barn, and when Edwin had glanced about himself, the wagon, so dominant in the dark, had looked pathetically dilapidated. Had Wistan called him 'young comrade' straight away? Edwin was unsure, but he did remember the warrior leading him into that patch of light, lifting his shirt and scrutinising the wound. Wistan had then straightened, glanced carefully over his shoulder, and said in a low voice:

‘So, my young friend, have you kept your promise of last night? About this wound of yours?’

‘Yes, sir. I’ve done just as you said.’

‘You’ve told no one, not even your good aunt?’

‘I’ve told no one, sir. Even though they believe it an ogre’s bite and hate me for it.’

‘Let them go on believing it, young comrade. Ten times worse if they learn the truth of how you received it.’

‘But what of my two uncles who came with you, sir? Don’t they know the truth?’

‘Your uncles, brave as they were, became too sick to enter the camp. So it’s just the two of us who must keep the secret, and once the wound’s healed there’s no need for anyone to wonder about it. Keep it as clean as you can, and never scratch it, by night or day. Do you understand?’

‘I understand, sir.’

Earlier, when they had been climbing the valleyside, and he had stopped to wait for the two elderly Britons, Edwin had tried to remember the circumstances around the wound. On that occasion, standing amidst the stubbled heather, tugging the reins of Wistan’s mare, nothing had formed clearly in his mind. But now, in the branches of the elm, gazing at the tiny figures down on the bridge, Edwin found coming back to him the dank air and blackness; the high smell of the bearskin covering the little wooden cage; the feel of the tiny beetles falling onto his head and shoulders when the cage was jolted. He recalled adjusting his posture and gripping the shaky grid before him to avoid being tossed about as the cage dragged along the ground. Then everything had become still again, and he had waited for the bearskin to be removed, for the cold air to rush in around him, and to glimpse the night by the glow of the nearby fire. For this was what had happened twice already that night, and the repetition had removed the edge from his fear. He remembered more: the stink of the ogres, and the vicious little creature hurling itself at the rickety poles of the cage, obliging Edwin to push as far back as he could.

The creature had moved so quickly it had been hard to get a clear view of it. He had had the impression of something the size and shape of a cockerel, though with no beak or feathers. It attacked with teeth and claws, all the time letting out a shrill squawking. Edwin trusted the wooden poles against the teeth and the claws, but now and then, the little creature's tail would whip by accident against the cage and then everything seemed much more vulnerable. Thankfully the creature - still in its infancy, Edwin supposed - seemed oblivious of the power in its tail.

Although at the time these attacks seemed to go on forever, Edwin now supposed they had not lasted so long before the creature had been pulled back by its leash. Then the bearskin would thump over him, all would be blackness again, and he would have to grip the poles as the cage was dragged to another spot.

How often had he had to endure this sequence? Had it been just two or three times? Or as often as ten, or even twelve? Perhaps after the first time he had fallen asleep, even in those conditions, and dreamt the rest of the attacks.

Then on that final occasion, the bearskin had not come off for a long time. He had waited, listening to the creature's squawks, sometimes far away, sometimes much closer, and the grumbling sounds the ogres made when talking to each other, and he had known that something different was about to happen. And it had been during those moments of dreadful anticipation that he had asked for a rescuer. He had made the request from the depths of his being, so it had been something almost like a prayer, and as soon as it had taken shape in his mind, he had felt certain it would be granted.

At that very moment the cage had begun to tremble, and Edwin had realised the entire front section, with its protective grid, was being drawn aside. Even as this realisation made him shrink back, the bearskin was pulled off and the ferocious creature flew at him. In his sitting position, his instinct was to raise his feet and kick out, but the creature was agile, and Edwin found himself beating it off with fists and arms. Once he thought the creature had got the better of him, and had for an instant closed his eyes, but then opened them again to see his opponent clawing the air as the leash dragged it back. It was one of the few times he had been permitted a good glimpse of the creature, and he saw that his earlier impression had not been inaccurate: it looked like a plucked chicken, though with the head of a serpent. It came for him again, and Edwin was once more beating it off the best he could. Then quite suddenly, the cage front was restored before him, and the bearskin plunged him back in blackness. And it had only been in the moments afterwards, contorted inside the little cage, that he had felt the tingling on his left side just beneath the ribs, and had felt the wet stickiness there.

Edwin adjusted again his foothold within the elm, and bringing down his right hand, touched gently his wound. There was no longer any depth to the pain. During the climb up the valley-side, the coarseness of his shirt had at times made him grimace, but when he was still, as he was now, he could hardly feel a thing. Even that morning in the barn, when the warrior had examined it in the doorway, it had seemed little more than a cluster of tiny punctures. The wound was superficial - not as bad as many he had had before. And yet, because people believed it to be an ogre's bite, it had caused all this trouble. Had he faced the creature with even more determination, perhaps he could have avoided receiving any wound at all.

But he knew there was no shame in how he had faced his ordeal. He had never cried out in terror, or pleaded to the ogres for mercy. After the little creature's first lunges - which had taken him by surprise - Edwin had met it with head held up. In fact he had had the presence of mind to realise the creature was an infant, and that one could in all probability create fear in it, just as one might in an unruly dog. And so he had kept his eyes open and tried to stare it down. His real mother, he knew, would be particularly proud of him for this. Indeed, now that he thought about it, the venom had gone out of the creature's attacks soon after its opening forays, and it had been Edwin who had gained more and more control of the combat. He recalled again the creature clawing the air, and it seemed to him now likely it had not been displaying an eagerness to continue the fight, but simply panic at the choking leash. It was quite possible, in fact, the ogres had judged Edwin the victor of the encounter, and that was why proceedings had been brought to an end.

'I've watched you, boy,' old Steffa had said. 'You have something rare. One day you'll find someone to teach you the skills to match your warrior's soul. Then you'll be one to fear indeed. You'll not be one to hide in a barn while mere wolves stroll unhindered about the village.'

Now it was all coming to pass. The warrior had chosen him, and they were to go together to fulfil an errand. But what was their task? Wistan had not made it clear, saying only that his king, far away in the fenland, was even now waiting to hear of its conclusion. And why travel with these two elderly Britons who required rest at each turn of the road?

Edwin gazed down at them. They were now discussing something earnestly with the warrior. The old woman had given up trying to talk him down, and all three were now watching the soldiers on the bridge from behind the cover of two giant pines. From his own vantage point, Edwin could see the rider had remounted and was gesticulating into the air. Then the three soldiers appeared to move away from him, and the rider turned his horse and set off at a gallop away from the bridge, back down the mountain.

Edwin had wondered earlier why the warrior had been so reluctant to stay on the main mountain road, insisting on the steep cut up the valley side; now it was obvious he had wished to avoid riders such as the one they had just seen. But there now seemed no way to proceed with their journey without going down onto the road and crossing the bridge past the waterfall, and the soldiers were still there. Had Wistan been able to see from down where he was that the rider had departed? Edwin wanted to alert him to this development, but felt he should not shout from the tree in case the soldiers somehow caught the sound. He would have to climb down and tell Wistan. Perhaps, while there had been four potential opponents, the warrior had been hesitant about a confrontation, but now with only three at the bridge, he would consider the odds in his favour. Had it just been Edwin and the warrior, they would surely have gone down to face the soldiers long ago, but the presence of the elderly couple must have made Wistan cautious. No doubt Wistan had brought them along for a good reason, and they had so far been kind to Edwin, but they were frustrating companions all the same.

He remembered again his aunt's contorted features. She had started to shriek a curse at him, but none of that mattered any more. For he was with the warrior now, and he was travelling, just like his real mother. Who was to say they might not come across her? She would be so proud to see him standing there, side by side with the warrior. And the men with her would tremble.

Chapter Five

After a punishing climb for much of the morning, the party had found its way obstructed by a fast-flowing river. So they had made a partial descent through shrouded woodlands in search of the main mountain road, along which, they reasoned, there would surely be a bridge across the water.

They had been right about the bridge, but on spotting the soldiers there, had decided to rest amidst the pine trees until the men had gone. For at first the soldiers had not appeared to be stationed there, but merely refreshing themselves and their horses at the waterfall. But time had passed and the soldiers had shown no signs of moving on. They would take turns getting onto their bellies, reaching down from the bridge and splashing themselves; or sit with their backs against the timber rails, playing dice. Then a fourth man had arrived on horseback, bringing the men to their feet, and had issued instructions to them.

Though they did not have as good a view as Edwin's high in his tree, Axl, Beatrice and the warrior had observed well enough all that had passed from behind their cover of greenery, and once the horseman had ridden off again, exchanged questioning looks.

'They may remain a long time yet,' Wistan said. 'And you're both anxious to reach the monastery.'

'It's desirable we do so by nightfall, sir,' said Axl.

'We hear the she-dragon Querig roams that country, and only fools would be abroad there in the dark. What manner of soldiers do you suppose them to be?'

'Not easy at this distance, sir, and I've little knowledge of local dress. But I'd suppose them Britons, and ones loyal to Lord Brennus. Perhaps Mistress Beatrice will correct me. '

'It's far for my old eyes,' Beatrice said, 'but I'd suppose you right, Master Wistan. They have the dark uniforms I've often seen on Lord Brennus's men. '

'We've nothing to hide from them,' Axl said. 'If we explain ourselves, they'll let us go by in peace. '

'I'm sure that's so,' the warrior said, then fell silent for a moment, gazing down at the bridge. The soldiers had seated themselves again and seemed to be resuming their game. 'Even so,' he went on, 'if we're to cross the bridge under their gazes, let me propose this much. Master Axl, you and Mistress Beatrice will lead the way and talk wisely to the men. The boy can bring the mare behind you, and I'll walk beside him, my jaw slack like a fool's, my eyes wandering loosely. You must tell the soldiers I'm a mute and a half-wit, and the boy and I are brothers lent you in place of debts owed you. I'll hide this sword and belt deep in the horse's pack. Should they find it, you must claim it as your own. '

'Is such a play really necessary, Master Wistan?' Beatrice asked. 'These soldiers may often show coarse manners, but we've met many before without incident. '

'No doubt, mistress. But men with arms, far from their commanders, aren't easy to trust. And here I am, a stranger who they may think good sport to mock and challenge. So let's call the boy down off the tree and do as I propose. '

* * *

They emerged from the woods still some way from the bridge, but the soldiers saw them immediately and rose to their feet.

'Master Wistan,' Beatrice said quietly, 'I fear this will not go well. There remains something about you that proclaims you a warrior, no matter what foolish look you wear. '

'I'm no skilled player, mistress. If you can help improve my disguise, I'd hear it gladly. '

'It's your stride, sir,' Beatrice said. 'You have a warrior's way of walking. Take instead small steps followed by a large one, the way you might stumble any moment. '

'That's good advice, thank you, mistress. Now I should say no more, or they may see I'm no mute. Master Axl, talk us wisely past these fellows. '

As they came closer to the bridge, the noise of the water rushing down the rocks and under the feet of the three awaiting soldiers grew more intense, and to Axl had something ominous about it. He led the way, listening to the horse's steps behind him on the mossy ground, and brought them to a halt when they were within hailing distance of the men.

They wore no chainmail or helmets, but their identical dark tunics, with straps crossing from right shoulder to left hip, declared clearly their trade. Their swords were for now sheathed, though two of them were waiting with hands on the hilts. One was small, stocky and muscular; the other, a youth not much older than Edwin, was also short in stature. Both had closely cropped hair. In contrast, the third soldier was tall, with long grey hair, carefully groomed, that touched his shoulders and was held back by a dark string encircling his skull. Not only his appearance, but his manner differed noticeably from that of his companions; for while the latter were standing stiffly to bar the way across the bridge, he had remained several paces behind, leaning languidly against one of the bridge posts, arms folded before him as though listening to a tale beside a night fire.

The stocky soldier took a step towards them, so it was to him Axl addressed his words. 'Good day, sirs. We mean no harm and wish only to proceed in peace. '

The stocky soldier gave no reply. Uncertainty was crossing his face, and he glared at Axl with a mixture of panic and contempt. He cast a glance back to the young soldier behind him, then finding nothing to enlighten him, returned his gaze to Axl.

It occurred to Axl there had been some confusion: that the soldiers had been expecting another party altogether, and had yet to realise their mistake. So he said: 'We're just simple farmers, sir, on our way to our son's village.'

The stocky soldier, now collecting himself, replied to Axl in an unnecessarily loud voice. 'Who are these you travel with, farmer? Saxons by the look of them.'

'Two brothers just come under our care who we must do our best to train. Though as you see, one's still a child, and the other a slow-witted mute, so the relief they bring us may be slender.'

As Axl said this, the tall grey-haired soldier, as though suddenly reminded of something, took his weight from the bridge post, his head tilting in concentration. Meanwhile, the stocky soldier was staring angrily beyond both Axl and Beatrice. Then, his hand still on the hilt of his sword, he strode past to scrutinise the others. Edwin was holding the mare, and watched the oncoming soldier with expressionless eyes. Wistan, though, was giggling loudly to himself, his eyes roving, mouth wide open.

The stocky soldier looked from one to the other as though for a clue. Then his frustration seemed to get the better of him. Grabbing Wistan's hair, he tugged it in a rage. 'No one cut your hair, Saxon?' he shouted into the warrior's ear, then tugged again as though to bring Wistan to his knees. Wistan stumbled, but managed to stay on his feet, letting out pitiful whimpers.

'He doesn't speak, sir,' Beatrice said. 'As you see, he's simple. He doesn't mind rough treatment, but he's known for a temper we've yet to tame.'

As his wife spoke, a small movement made Axl turn back to the soldiers still on the bridge. He saw then that the tall grey-haired man had raised an arm; his fingers all but formed a pointing shape before softening and collapsing in an aimless gesture. Finally he let his arm fall altogether, though his eyes went on watching with disapproval. Observing this, Axl suddenly had the feeling he understood, even recognised, what the grey-haired soldier had just gone through: an angry reprimand had all but shaped itself on his lips, but he had remembered in time that he lacked any formal authority over his stocky colleague. Axl was sure he had once had an almost identical experience himself somewhere, but he forced away the thought, and said in a conciliatory tone:

'You must be busy with your duties, gentlemen, and we're sorry to distract you. If you'd let us pass, we'll soon be out of your way.'

But the stocky soldier was still tormenting Wistan. 'He'd be unwise to lose his temper with me!' he bellowed. 'Let him do so and taste his price!'

Then finally he let go of Wistan and strode back to take up his position again on the bridge. He said nothing, looking like an angry man who had completely forgotten why he was angry.

The noise of the rushing water seemed only to add to the tense mood, and Axl wondered how the soldiers would react were he to turn and lead the party back towards the woods. But just at that moment, the grey-haired soldier came forward until he was level with the other two and spoke for the first time.

'This bridge has a few planks broken, uncle. Maybe that's why we're standing here, to warn good people like yourselves to cross with care or be down the mountainside tumbling with the tide.'

‘That’s kind of you, sir. We’ll go then with caution.’

‘Your horse there, uncle. I thought I saw it limping coming towards us.’

‘She has a hurt foot, sir, but we hope it’s no serious thing, though we don’t mount her, as you see.’

‘Those boards are rotted with the spray, and that’s why we’re here, though my comrades think there was some further errand must have brought us. So I’ll ask you, uncle, if you and your good wife have seen any strangers on your travels.’

‘We’re strangers here ourselves, sir,’ Beatrice said, ‘so wouldn’t quickly know another. Though on two days’ journey we’ve seen nothing out of the ordinary.’

Noticing Beatrice, the grey-haired soldier’s eyes seemed to soften and smile. ‘A long walk for a woman of your years to make to a son’s village, mistress. Wouldn’t you rather be living there with him where he can see to your comforts each day, instead of having you walk like this, unsheltered from the road’s dangers?’

‘I wish it right enough, sir, and when we see him, my husband and I will talk to him of it. But then it’s a long time since we saw him and we can’t help wonder how he’ll receive us.’

The grey-haired soldier went on regarding her gently. ‘It may be, mistress,’ he said, ‘you’ve not a thing to worry about. I’m myself far from my mother and father, and not seen them in a long while. Perhaps harsh words were said once, who knows? But if they came to find me tomorrow, having walked hard distances as you’re doing now, do you doubt I’d receive them with my heart breaking with joy? I don’t know the kind of man your son is, mistress, but I’d wager he’s not so different to me, and there’ll be happy tears no sooner than he first sees you.’

‘You’re kind to say so, sir,’ said Beatrice. ‘I suppose you’re right, and my husband and I have often said as much, but it’s a comfort to hear it said, and from a son far from home at that.’

‘Go on your journey in peace, mistress. And if by chance you come upon my own mother and father on the road, coming the other way, speak gently to them and tell them to press on, for their journey won’t be a wasted one.’ The grey-haired soldier stood aside to let them pass. ‘And please remember the unsteady boards. Uncle, you’d best lead that mare over yourself. It’s no task for children or God’s fools.’

The stocky soldier, who had been watching with a disgruntled air, seemed nevertheless to yield to the natural authority of his colleague. Turning his back to them all, he leaned sulkily over the rail to look at the water. The young soldier hesitated, then came to stand beside the grey-haired man, and they both nodded politely as Axl, thanking them a last time, led the mare over the bridge, shielding her eyes from the drop.

Once the soldiers and the bridge were no longer in sight, Wistan stopped and suggested they leave the main road to follow a narrow path rising up into the woods.

‘I’ve always had an instinct for my way through a forest,’ he said. ‘And I feel sure this path will allow us to cut a large corner. Besides, we’ll be much safer away from a road such as this, well travelled by soldiers and bandits.’

For a while after that, it was the warrior who led the party, beating back brambles and bushes with a stick he had found. Edwin, holding the mare by her muzzle, often whispering to her, followed closely behind, so that by the time Axl and Beatrice came in their wake, the path had been made much easier. Even so, the short cut - if short cut it was - became increasingly arduous: the trees deepened around them, tangled roots and thistles obliging them to attend to each step. As was the custom, they conversed little as they went, but at one point, when Axl and Beatrice had fallen some way behind, Beatrice called back: 'Are you still there, Axl?'

'Still here, princess.' Indeed, Axl was just a few paces behind. 'Don't worry, these woods aren't known for special dangers, and a good way from the Great Plain.'

'I was just thinking, Axl. Our warrior's not a bad player at that. His disguise might have had me fooled, and never letting up with it, even with that brute tugging his hair.'

'He performed it well, right enough.'

'I was thinking, Axl. It'll be a long time we're away from our own village. Don't you think it a wonder they let us go when there's still a lot of planting to do, and fences and gates to be mended? Do you suppose they'll be complaining of our absence when we're needed?'

'They'll be missing us, no doubt, princess. But we're not away long, and the pastor understands our wishing to see our own son.'

'I hope that's right, Axl. I wouldn't want them saying we're gone just when they have most need of us.'

'There'll always be some to say so, but the better of them will understand our need, and would want the same in our place.'

For a while they continued without talking. Then Beatrice said again: 'Are you still there, Axl?'

'Still here, princess.'

‘It wasn’t right of them. To take away our candle.’

‘Who cares about that now, princess? And the summer coming.’

‘I was remembering about it, Axl. And I was thinking maybe it’s because of our lack of a candle I first took this pain I now have.’

‘What’s that you’re saying, princess? How can that be?’

‘I’m thinking it was maybe the darkness did it.’

‘Go carefully through that blackthorn there. It’s not a spot to take a fall.’

‘I’ll be careful, Axl, and you do the same.’

‘How can it be the darkness gave you the pain, princess?’

‘Do you remember, Axl, there was talk last winter of a sprite seen near our village? We never saw it ourselves, but they said it was one fond of the dark. In all those hours we had of darkness, I’m thinking it might sometimes have been with us without our knowing, in our very chamber, and brought me this trouble.’

‘We would have known had it been with us, princess, dark or not. Even in thick blackness, we would have heard it move or give a sigh.’

‘Now I think of it, Axl, I think there were times last winter I woke in the night, you fast asleep beside me, and I was sure it was a strange noise in the room roused me.’

‘Likely a mouse or some creature, princess.’

‘It wasn’t that kind of sound, and it was more than once I thought I heard it. And now I’m thinking of it, it was around the same time the pain first came.’

‘Well, if it was the sprite, what of it, princess? Your pain’s nothing more than a tiny trouble, the work of a creature more playful than evil, the same way some wicked child once left that rat's head in Mistress Enid's weaving basket just to see her run about in fright. '

'You're right what you say there, Axl. More playful than evil. I suppose you're right. Even so, husband ...' She fell silent while she negotiated her way between two ancient trunks pressing against each other. Then she said: 'Even so, when we go back, I want a candle for our nights. I don't want that sprite or any other bringing us something worse. '

'We'll see to it, don't worry, princess. We'll talk to the pastor as soon as we return. But the monks at the monastery will give you wise advice about your pain, and there'll be no lasting mischief done. '

'I know it, Axl. It's not a thing to worry me greatly. '

It was hard to say if Wistan had been right about his path cutting off a corner, but in any case, shortly after midday, they emerged out of the woods back onto the main road. Here it was wheel-rutted and boggy in parts, but now they could walk more freely, and in time the path grew drier and more level. With a pleasant sun falling through the overhanging branches, they travelled in good spirits.

Then Wistan brought them to a halt again and indicated the ground before them. 'There's a solitary rider not far before us,' he said. And they did not go much further before they saw ahead of them a clearing to the side of their road, and fresh tracks turning into it. Exchanging glances, they stepped forwards cautiously.

As the clearing came more into view, they saw it was of a fair size: perhaps once, in more prosperous times, someone had hoped to build a house here with a surrounding orchard. The path leading off from the main road, though overgrown, had been dug with care, ending in a large circular area, open to the sky except for one huge spreading oak at its centre. From where they now stood, they could see a figure seated in the shadows of the tree, his back against the trunk. He was for the moment in profile to them, and appeared to be in armour: two metal legs stuck out stiffly onto the grass in a child-like way. The face itself was obscured by foliage sprouting from the bark, though they could see he wore no helmet. A saddled horse was grazing contentedly nearby.

‘Declare who you are!’ the man called out from under the tree. ‘All bandits and thieves I’ll rise to meet sword in hand!’

‘Answer him, Master Axl,’ Wistan whispered. ‘Let’s discover what he’s about.’

‘We’re simple wayfarers, sir,’ Axl called back. ‘We wish only to go by in peace.’

‘How many are you? And is that a horse I hear?’

‘A limping one, sir. Otherwise we are four. My wife and I being elderly Britons, and with us a beardless boy and a half-wit mute lately given us by their Saxon kin.’

‘Then come over to me, friends! I have bread here to share, and you must long for rest, as I do for your company.’

‘Shall we go to him, Axl?’ Beatrice asked.

‘I say we do,’ Wistan said, before Axl could respond.

‘He’s no danger to us and sounds a man of decent years. All the same, let’s perform our drama as before. I’ll once more affect a slack jaw and foolish eyes.’

‘But this man is armoured and armed, sir,’ Beatrice said. ‘Are you certain your own weapon is ready enough, packed on a horse amidst blankets and honey pots?’

‘It’s well my sword’s hidden from suspicious eyes, mistress. And I’ll find it soon enough when I need it. Young

Edwin will hold the rein and see the mare doesn't stray too far from me.'

'Come forth, friends!' the stranger shouted, not adjusting his rigid posture. 'No harm will come to you! I'm a knight and a Briton too. Armed, it's true, but come closer and you'll see I'm just a whiskery old fool. This sword and armour I carry only out of duty to my king, the great and beloved Arthur, now many years in heaven, and it's almost as long surely since I drew in anger. My old battlehorse, Horace, you see him there. He's had to suffer the burden of all this metal. Look at him, his legs bowed, back sunk. Oh, I know how much he suffers each time I mount. But he has a great heart, my Horace, and I know he'd have it no other way. We'll travel like this, in full armour, in the name of our great king, and will do so till neither of us can take another step. Come friends, don't fear me!'

They turned into the clearing, and as they approached the oak, Axl saw that indeed, the knight was no threatening figure. He appeared to be very tall, but beneath his armour Axl supposed him thin, if wiry. His armour was frayed and rusted, though no doubt he had done all he could to preserve it. His tunic, once white, showed repeated mending. The face protruding from the armour was kindly and creased; above it, several long strands of snowy hair fluttered from an otherwise bald head. He might have been a sorry sight, fixed to the ground, legs splayed before him, except that the sun falling through the branches above was now dappling him in patterns of light and shade that made him look almost like one enthroned.

'Poor Horace missed his breakfast this morning, for we were on rocky ground when we awoke. Then I was so keen to press on all morning, and I admit it, in an ill temper. I wouldn't let him stop. His steps grew slower, but I know his tricks well enough by now, and would have none of it. I know you're not weary! I told him, and gave him a little spur. These tricks he plays on me, friends, I won't stand for them!

But slower and slower he goes, and soft-hearted fool I am, even knowing full well he's laughing to himself, I relent and say, very well, Horace, stop and feed yourself. So here you find me, taken for a fool again. Come, join me, friends.' He reached forward, his armour complaining, and removed a loaf from a sack in the grass before him. 'This is fresh baked, given to me passing a mill not an hour ago. Come, friends, sit beside me and share it.'

Axl held Beatrice's arm as she lowered herself down onto the gnarled roots of the oak, then he sat down himself between his wife and the old knight. He felt immediately grateful for the mossy bark behind him, the songbirds jostling above, and when the bread was passed, it was soft and fresh. Beatrice leant her head against his shoulder, and her chest rose and fell for a while before she too began to eat with relish.

But Wistan had not sat down. After giggling, and otherwise amply displaying his idiocy to the old knight, he had wandered away to where Edwin was standing in the tall grass, holding his mare. Then Beatrice, finishing her bread, sat forward to address the stranger.

'You must forgive my not greeting you sooner, sir,' she said. 'But it's not often we see a knight and I was awestruck by the thought. I hope you weren't offended.'

'Not offended at all, mistress, and glad of your company. Is your journey still a long one?'

'Our son's village is another day away now we're come by the mountain road, wishing to visit a wise monk at the monastery in these hills.'

'Ah, the holy fathers. I'm sure they'll receive you kindly. They were a great help to Horace last spring when he had a poisoned hoof and I feared he wouldn't be spared. And I myself, recovering some years ago from a fall, found much comfort in their balms. But if you seek a cure for your mute, I fear it's only God himself can bring speech to his lips. '

The knight had said this glancing towards Wistan, only to find the latter walking towards him, the foolish look vanished from his features.

'Allow me then to surprise you, sir,' he said. 'Speech is restored to me. '

The old knight started, then, armour creaking, twisted round to glare enquiringly at Axl.

'Don't blame my friends, sir knight,' Wistan said. 'They were only doing as I begged them. But now there's no cause to fear you, I would cast off my disguise. Please forgive me. '

'I don't mind, sir,' the old knight said, 'for it's as well in this world to be cautious. But tell me now what sort you are that I in turn have no cause to fear you. '

'The name is Wistan, sir, from the fenlands in the east, travelling these parts on my king's errand. '

'Ah. Far from home indeed. '

'Far from home, sir, and these roads should be strange to me. Yet at each turn it's as if another distant memory stirs. '

'It must be then, sir, you came this way before. '

'It must be so, and I heard I was born not in the fens but in a country further west of here. All the more fortunate then to chance upon you, sir, supposing you might be Sir Gawain, from those same western lands, well known to ride in these parts. '

'I'm Gawain, right enough, nephew of the great Arthur who once ruled these lands with such wisdom and justice. I was settled many years in the west, but these days Horace and I travel where we may. '

‘If my hours were my own, I’d ride west this very day and breathe the air of that country. But I’m obliged to complete my errand and hurry back with news of it. Yet it’s an honour indeed to meet a knight of the great Arthur, and a nephew at that. Saxon though I am, his name is one I hold in esteem.’

‘I take pleasure in hearing you say so, sir.’

‘Sir Gawain, with my speech so miraculously restored, I would ask a small question of you.’

‘Ask freely.’

‘This gentleman now sits beside you, he’s the good Master Axl, a farmer from a Christian village two days away. A man of familiar years to yourself. Sir Gawain, I ask you now, turn and look carefully at him. Is his face one you’ve seen before, though a long time ago?’

‘Good heavens, Master Wistan!’ Beatrice, who Axl thought had fallen asleep, was leaning forward again. ‘What is this you ask?’

‘I mean no harm, mistress. Sir Gawain being from the west country, I fancy he might have glimpsed your husband in days past. What harm’s in it?’

‘Master Wistan,’ Axl said, ‘I’ve seen you look strangely at me from time to time since our first meeting, and waited for some account of it. What is it you believe me to be?’

Wistan, who had been standing over where they were sitting three abreast beneath the great oak, now crouched down onto his heels. Perhaps he had done so to appear less challenging, but to Axl it was almost as if the warrior was wishing to scrutinise their faces more closely.

‘Let’s for now have Sir Gawain do as I ask,’ Wistan said, ‘and it’s only a small turn of his head needed. See it as a childish game if you will. I beg you, sir, look at this man beside you and say if you've ever seen him in days past.'

Sir Gawain gave a chuckle, and moved his torso forward. He seemed eager for amusement, as though indeed he had just been invited to participate in a game. But as he gazed into Axl's face, his expression changed to one of surprise - even of shock. Instinctively, Axl turned away, just as the old knight appeared almost to push himself backwards into the tree trunk.

'Well, sir?' Wistan asked, watching with interest.

'I don't believe this gentleman and I met till today,' said Sir Gawain.

'Are you sure? The years can be a rich disguise.'

'Master Wistan,' Beatrice interrupted, 'what is it you search for in my husband's face? Why ask such a thing of this kind knight, until this moment a stranger to us all?'

'Forgive me, mistress. This country awakens so many memories, though each seems like some restless sparrow I know will flee any moment into the breeze. Your husband's face has all day promised me an important remembrance, and if truth be told, that was a reason for my proposing to travel with you, though I sincerely wish to see you both safely through these wild roads.'

'But why would you know my husband from the west when he's always lived in country nearby?'

'Never mind it, princess. Master Wistan has confused me for someone he once knew.'

'That's what it must be, friends!' said Sir Gawain.

'Horace and I often mistake a face for one from the past. See there, Horace, I say. That's our old friend Tudur before us on the road, and we thought he fell at Mount Badon. Then we ride closer and Horace will give a snort, as if to say, what a fool you are, Gawain, this fellow's young enough to be his grandson, and with not even a passing likeness!'

'Master Wistan,' Beatrice said, 'tell me this much. Does my husband remind you of one you loved as a child? Or is it one you dreaded?'

'Best leave it now, princess.'

But Wistan, rocking gently on his heels, was gazing steadily at Axl. 'I believe it must be one I loved, mistress. For when we met this morning, my heart leapt for joy. And yet before long ...' He went on looking at Axl silently, his eyes almost dreamlike. Then his face darkened, and rising to his feet again, the warrior turned away. 'I can't answer you, Mistress Beatrice, for I know not myself. I supposed by travelling beside you the memories would awaken, but they've not yet done so. Sir Gawain, are you well?'

Indeed, Gawain had slumped forward. He now straightened and breathed a sigh. 'Well enough, thank you for asking. Yet Horace and I have gone many nights without a soft bed or decent shelter, and we're both weary. That's all there is to it.' He raised his hand and caressed a spot on his forehead, though his real purpose, it occurred to Axl, might have been to obscure his view of the face beside him.

'Master Wistan,' Axl said, 'since we're now speaking frankly, perhaps I may in turn ask something of you. You say you're in this country on your king's errand. But why so anxious to adopt your disguise travelling through a country long settled in peace? If my wife and that poor boy are to travel beside you, we'd wish to know the full nature of our companion, and who his friends and enemies might be.'

'You speak fairly, sir. This country, as you say, is well settled and at peace. Yet here I am a Saxon crossing lands ruled by Britons, and in these parts by the Lord Brennus, whose guards roam boldly to gather their taxes of corn and livestock. I wish no quarrel of the sort may come from a misunderstanding. Hence my disguise, sir, and we'll all of us move more safely for it.'

'You may be right, Master Wistan,' Axl said. 'Yet I saw on the bridge Lord Brennus's guards seemed not to be passing their time idly, but stationed there for a purpose, and if not for the mist clouding their minds, they might have tested you more closely. Can it be, sir, you're some enemy to Lord Brennus?'

For a moment Wistan appeared lost in thought, following with his eyes one of the gnarled roots stretching from the oak's trunk and past where he stood, before burrowing itself into the earth. Eventually he came nearer again, and this time sat down on the stubbled grass.

'Very well, sir,' he said, 'I'll speak fully. I don't mind doing so before you and this fine knight. We've heard rumours in the east of our fellow Saxons across this land ill used by Britons. My king, worrying for his kin, sent me on this mission to observe the real state of affairs. That's all I am, sir, and was going about my errand peaceably when my horse hurt her foot.'

'I understand well your position, sir,' said Gawain.

'Horace and I often find ourselves on Saxon-governed land and feel the same need for caution. Then I wish to be rid of this armour and taken for a humble farmer. But if we left this metal somewhere, how would we ever find it again? And even though it's years since Arthur fell, isn't it our duty still to wear his crest with pride for all to see? So we go on boldly and when men see I'm a knight of Arthur, I'm happy to report they look on us gently.'

'It's no surprise you're welcomed in these parts, Sir Gawain,' Wistan said. 'But can it really be the same in those countries where Arthur was once such a dreaded enemy?'

'Horace and I find our king's name well received everywhere, sir, even in those countries you mention. For

Arthur was one so generous to those he defeated they soon grew to love him as their own. '

For some time - in fact, ever since Arthur's name had first been mentioned - a nagging, uneasy feeling had been troubling Axl. Now at last, as he listened to Wistan and the old knight talk, a fragment of memory came to him. It was not much, but it nevertheless brought him relief to have something to hold and examine. He remembered standing inside a tent, a large one of the sort an army will erect near a battlefield. It was night, and there was a heavy candle flickering, and the wind outside making the tent's walls suck and billow. There were others in the tent with him. Several others, perhaps, but he could not remember their faces. He, Axl, was angry about something, but he had understood the importance of hiding his anger at least for the time being.

'Master Wistan,' Beatrice was saying beside him, 'let me tell you in our own village there are several Saxon families among the most respected. And you saw yourself the Saxon village from which we came today. Those people prosper, and though they sometimes suffer at the hands of fiends such as those you so bravely put down, it's not by any Briton. '

'The good mistress speaks truly,' Sir Gawain said. 'Our beloved Arthur brought lasting peace here between Briton and Saxon, and though we still hear of wars in distant places, here we've long been friends and kin. '

'All I've seen agree with your words,' Wistan said, 'and I'm eager to carry back a happy report, though I've yet to see the lands beyond these hills. Sir Gawain, I don't know if ever again I'll be free to ask this of one so wise, so let me do so now. By what strange skill did your great king heal the scars of war in these lands that a traveller can see barely a mark or shadow left of them today? '

'The question does you credit, sir. My reply is that my uncle was a ruler never thought himself greater than God, and always prayed for guidance. So it was that the conquered, no less than those who fought at his side, saw his fairness and wished him as their king. '

'Even so, sir, isn't it a strange thing when a man calls another brother who only yesterday slaughtered his children? And yet this is the very thing Arthur appears to have accomplished. '

'You touch the heart of it just there, Master Wistan. Slaughter children, you say. And yet Arthur charged us at all times to spare the innocents caught in the clatter of war. More, sir, he commanded us to rescue and give sanctuary when we could to all women, children and elderly, be they Briton or Saxon. On such actions were bonds of trust built, even as battles raged. '

'What you say rings true, and yet it still seems to me a curious wonder,' Wistan said. 'Master Axl, do you not feel it a remarkable thing, how Arthur has united this country? '

'Master Wistan, once again,' Beatrice exclaimed, 'who do you take my husband to be? He knows nothing, sir, of the wars! '

But suddenly no one was listening any more, for Edwin, who had drifted back to the road, was now shouting, and then came the beating of rapidly approaching hooves. Later when he thought back to it, it occurred to Axl that Wistan must indeed have become preoccupied with his curious speculations about the past, for the usually alert warrior had barely risen to his feet as the rider turned into the clearing, then slowing the horse with admirable control, came trotting towards the great oak.

Axl recognised immediately the tall, grey-haired soldier who had spoken courteously to Beatrice at the bridge. The man still wore a faint smile, but was approaching them with his sword drawn, though pointed downwards, the hilt resting on the edge of the saddle. He came to a halt where just a few more of the animal's strides would have brought him to the tree. 'Good day, Sir Gawain,' he said, bowing his head a little.

The old knight gazed up contemptuously from where he sat. 'What do you mean by this, sir, arriving here sword unsheathed?'

'Forgive me, Sir Gawain. I wish only to question these companions of yours.' He looked down at Wistan, who had again let his jaw drop slackly, and was giggling to himself. Without taking his eyes off the warrior, the soldier shouted: 'Boy, move that horse no closer!' For indeed, behind him, Edwin had been approaching with Wistan's mare. 'Hear me, lad! Let go the rein and come stand here before me beside your idiot brother. I'm waiting, lad.'

Edwin appeared to comprehend the soldier's wishes, if not his actual words, for he left the mare and came to join Wistan. As he did so, the soldier adjusted slightly the position of his horse. Axl, noticing this, understood immediately that the soldier was maintaining a particular angle and distance between himself and his charges that would give him the greatest advantage in the event of sudden conflict. Before, with Wistan standing where he was, the head and neck of the soldier's own horse would momentarily have obstructed his first swing of the sword, giving Wistan vital time either to unsettle the horse, or run to its blind side, where the sword's reach was diminished in scope and power by having to be brought across the body. But now the small adjusting of the horse had made it practically suicidal for an unarmed man, as Wistan was, to storm the rider. The soldier's new position seemed also to have taken expert account of Wistan's mare, loose some distance behind the soldier's back. Wistan was now unable to run for his horse without describing a wide curve to avoid the sword side of the rider, making it a near-certainty he would be run through from behind before reaching his destination.

Axl noted all this with a sense of admiration for the soldier's strategic skill, as well as dismay at its implications. There had been a time when Axl, too, had once nudged his horse forward, in another small but subtly vital manoeuvre, bringing himself in line with a fellow rider. What had he been doing that day? The two of them, he and the other rider, had been waiting on horseback, staring out across a vast grey moor. Until that moment his companion's horse had been in front, for Axl remembered its tail flicking and swaying before him, and wondering how much of this action was due to the animal's reflexes, and how much to the fierce wind sweeping across the empty land.

Axl pushed these puzzling thoughts away as he struggled to his feet, then helped up his wife. Sir Gawain remained seated, apparently stuck to the foot of the oak, glowering at the newcomer. Then he said quietly to Axl: 'Sir, help me rise.'

It took both Axl and Beatrice, one on each arm, to bring the old knight to his feet, but when finally he straightened to his full height in his armour and pulled back his shoulders, he was an impressive sight. But Sir Gawain seemed content to stare moodily at the soldier, and eventually it was Axl who spoke.

'Why do you come upon us like this, sir, and we but simple wayfarers? Do you not remember how you quizzed us not an hour before by the waterfall?'

'I recall you well, uncle,' the grey-haired soldier said. 'Though when we last met a strange spell had fallen on us guarding the bridge that we forgot our very purpose being there. Only now, my post relieved and riding to our camp, it all suddenly returns to me. Then I thought of you, uncle, and your party slipping past, and turned my horse to hurry after you. Boy! Don't wander, I say! Remain beside your idiot brother!'

Edwin sulkily returned to Wistan's side and looked enquiringly at the warrior. The latter was still giggling quietly, a line of saliva spilling from one corner of his mouth. His eyes were roaming wildly, but Axl guessed the warrior was in fact taking careful measure of the distance to his own horse, and the proximity of his opponent, and in all probability coming to the same conclusions as Axl's.

'Sir Gawain,' Axl whispered. 'If there's to be trouble now, I beg you assist me to defend my good wife here.'

'I'll do so on my honour, sir. Rest assured of it.'

Axl nodded gratefully, but now the grey-haired soldier was dismounting. Again Axl found himself admiring the skilful way he did this, so that when finally he stood to face Wistan and the boy, he was once more at exactly the correct distance and angle to them; his sword, moreover, was carried so as not to exhaust his arm, while his horse shielded him from any unexpected assault from the rear.

'I'll tell you what slipped our mind when we last met, uncle. We'd just received word of a Saxon warrior left a nearby village bringing with him a wounded lad.' The soldier nodded at Edwin. 'A lad the age of that one there. Now, uncle, I don't know what you and the good woman here are to this matter. I seek only this Saxon and his lad. Speak frankly and no harm will visit you.'

'There's no warrior here, sir. And we've no quarrel with you, nor with Lord Brennus who I suppose to be your master.'

'Do you know what you speak of, uncle? Lend a mask to our enemies and you'll answer to us, whatever your years. Who are these you travel with, this mute and this lad?'

'As I said before, sir, they're given to us by debtors, in place of corn and tin. They'll work a year to pay their family's debt.'

'Sure you're not mistaken, uncle?'

‘I know not whom you seek, sir, but it wouldn’t be these poor Saxons. And while you spend your time with us, your enemies move freely elsewhere.’

The soldier gave this consideration - Axl’s voice had carried unexpected authority - uncertainty entering his manner. ‘Sir Gawain,’ he asked. ‘What do you know of these people?’

‘They chanced on us as Horace and I rested here. I believe them to be simple creatures.’

The soldier once more scrutinised Wistan’s features. ‘A mute fool, is it?’ He took two steps forward and raised the sword so the point was aimed at Wistan’s throat. ‘But he surely fears death like the rest of us.’

Axl saw that for the first time the soldier had made an error. He had come too close to his opponent, and although it would be a hideous risk, it was now conceivable for Wistan to move very suddenly and seize the arm holding the sword before it could strike. Wistan, however, went on giggling, then smiled foolishly at Edwin beside him. This latest action, however, seemed to arouse Sir Gawain’s anger.

‘They may be strangers to me only an hour ago, sir,’ he boomed. ‘But I’ll not see them treated with rudeness.’

‘This doesn’t concern you, Sir Gawain. I would ask you to remain silent.’

‘Do you dare speak to a knight of Arthur that way, sir?’

‘Can it be possible,’ the soldier said, completely ignoring Sir Gawain, ‘this idiot here is a warrior disguised? With no weapon about him, it makes little difference. Mine’s a blade sharp enough whichever he may be.’

‘How dare he!’ Sir Gawain muttered to himself.

The grey-haired soldier, perhaps suddenly realising his error, took two paces back till he was exactly where he had been before, and lowered the sword to waist height. 'Boy,' he said. 'Step forward to me.'

'He speaks only the Saxon tongue, sir, and a shy boy too,' Axl said.

'He needn't speak, uncle. Only raise his shirt and we'll know if he's the one left the village with the warrior. Boy, a step closer to me.'

As Edwin came nearer the soldier reached out with his free hand. A tussle ensued as Edwin tried to fight him off, but the shirt was soon dragged up the boy's torso, and Axl saw, a little way below the ribs, a swollen patch of skin encircled by tiny dots of dried blood. On either side of him, Beatrice and Gawain were now leaning forward to see better, but the soldier himself, reluctant to take his gaze off Wistan, did not glance at the wound for some time. When finally he did so, he was obliged to make a swift turn of his head, and at that very moment, Edwin produced a piercing, high-pitched noise - not a scream exactly, but something that reminded Axl of a forlorn fox. The soldier was for an instant distracted by it, and Edwin seized the chance to break from his grasp. Only then did Axl realise the noise was coming not from the boy, but from Wistan; and that in response, the warrior's mare, until then languidly munching the ground, had suddenly turned and was charging straight for them.

The soldier's own horse had made a panicked motion behind him, causing him further confusion, and by the time he had recovered, Wistan had gone clear of the sword's reach. The mare kept coming at daunting speed, and Wistan, feinting one way, then moving the other, produced another shrill call. The mare slowed to a canter, bringing herself between Wistan and his opponent, enabling the warrior, in an almost leisurely manner, to take up a position several strides from the oak.

The mare turned again, moving smartly in pursuit of her master. Axl supposed Wistan's intention was to mount the animal as she came past, for the warrior was now waiting, both arms poised in the air. Axl even saw him reach towards the saddle just before the mare momentarily obscured him from view. But then the horse cantered on riderless towards the spot where so recently she had been enjoying the grass. Wistan had remained standing quite still, but now with a sword in his hand.

A small exclamation escaped Beatrice, and Axl, placing an arm around her, drew her closer. On his other side, Gawain made a grunting noise which seemed to signify his appreciation of Wistan's manoeuvre. The old knight had placed a foot up on one of the raised roots of the oak, and was watching with keen interest, a hand on his knee.

The grey-haired soldier's back was now turned to them: in this, of course, he had had little choice, for he had now to face Wistan. Axl was surprised to see that this soldier, so controlled and expert only a moment ago, had become quite disorientated. He was looking towards his horse - which had trotted some way away in panic - as though for reassurance, then raised his sword, the tip just above the level of his shoulder, gripping tightly with both hands. This posture, Axl knew, was premature, and would only exhaust the arm muscles. Wistan, in contrast, looked calm, almost nonchalant, just as he had done the previous night when they had first glimpsed him setting off out of the village. He came slowly towards the soldier, stopping a few steps before him, sword held low in just one hand.

'Sir Gawain,' the soldier said, a new note in his voice, 'I hear you move at my back. Do you stand with me against this foe?'

'I stand here to protect this good couple, sir. Otherwise, this dispute is not my concern, as you so lately reported. This warrior may be your foe, but he isn't yet mine. '

'This fellow's a Saxon warrior, Sir Gawain, and here to do us mischief. Help me face him, for though I'm keen to do my duty, if this is the man we seek he's a fearful fellow by all accounts. '

'What reason have I to take arms against a man simply for being a stranger? It's you, sir, came into this tranquil place with your rude manners. '

There was silence for a while. Then the soldier said to Wistan: 'Do you stay mute, sir? Or will you reveal yourself now we face one another! '

'I'm Wistan, sir, a warrior from the east visiting this country. It seems your Lord Brennus would have me hurt, though for what reason I know not since I travel in peace on an errand for my king. And it's my belief you mean to harm that innocent boy, and seeing this I must now frustrate you. '

'Sir Gawain,' the soldier cried, 'will you come to the aid of a fellow Briton, I ask you once again. If this is Wistan, it's said more than fifty Norsemen have fallen by his hand alone. '

'If fifty fierce Vikings fell to him, what difference can one old and weary knight make to the outcome now, sir? '

'I beg you, do not jest, Sir Gawain. This is a wild fellow, and he'll strike at any moment. I see it in his eye. He's here to do us all mischief, I tell you. '

'Name the mischief I bring,' Wistan said, 'travelling peacefully through your country, a single sword in my pack to defend against wild creatures and bandits. If you can name my crime, do so now, for I'd hear the charge before I strike you. '

‘I’m ignorant of the nature of your mischief, sir, but have faith enough in Lord Brennus’s desire to be free of you.’

‘No charge to name, then, yet you hurry here to slay me.’

‘Sir Gawain, I beg you help me! Fierce as he is, the two of us with careful strategy might overcome him.’

‘Sir, let me remind you, I’m a knight of Arthur, no foot soldier of your Lord Brennus. I don’t take up arms against strangers on rumour or for their foreign blood. And it seems to me you’re unable to give good cause for taking against him.’

‘You force me to speak then, sir, though these are confidences to which a man of my humble rank has no right, even if Lord Brennus himself let me hear them. This man is come to this country on a mission to slay the dragon Querig. This is what brings him here!’

‘Slay Querig?’ Sir Gawain sounded genuinely dumbfounded. He strode forward from the tree and stared at Wistan as if seeing him for the first time. ‘Is this true, sir?’

‘I’ve no wish to lie to a knight of Arthur, so let me declare it. Further to my duty reported earlier, I’ve been charged by my king to slay the she-dragon who roams this country. But what objection could there be to such a task? A fierce dragon bringing danger to all alike. Tell me, soldier, why is it such a mission makes me your enemy?’

‘Slay Querig?! You really mean to slay Querig?!’ Sir Gawain was now shouting. ‘But sir, this is a mission entrusted to me! Do you not know this? A mission entrusted to me by Arthur himself!’

‘A dispute for some other time, Sir Gawain. Let me first attend to this soldier who would make an enemy of me and my friends when we would go by in peace. ’

‘Sir Gawain, if you’ll not come to my aid, I fear this is my final hour! I implore you, sir, remember the affection Lord Brennus has for Arthur and his memory and take arms against this Saxon! ’

‘It is my duty to slay Querig, Master Wistan! Horace and I have laid careful plans to lure her out and we seek no assistance! ’

‘Lay down your sword, sir,’ Wistan said to the soldier, ‘and I may spare you yet. Otherwise end your life on this ground. ’

The soldier hesitated, but then said: ‘I see now I was foolish to suppose myself strong enough to take you alone, sir. I may be punished yet for my vanity. But I won’t now lay down my sword like a coward. ’

‘By what right’ , Sir Gawain cried, ‘does your king order you to come from another country and usurp the duties given to a knight of Arthur? ’

‘Forgive me, Sir Gawain, but it’s many a year you’ve had to slay Querig, and small children have become grown men in the time. If I can do this country a service and rid it of this scourge, why be angry? ’

‘Why be angry, sir? You know not what you’re about! You think it an easy matter to slay Querig? She’s as wise as she’s fierce! You’ll only anger her with your foolishness, and this whole country will need suffer her wrath, where we’ve hardly heard a thing of her these past several years. It requires the most delicate handling, sir, or a calamity will befall the innocent right across this country! Why do you suppose Horace and I have so bided our time? One misstep will have grave consequences, sir! ’

‘Then help me, Sir Gawain,’ the soldier shouted, now making no effort to hide his fear. ‘Let’s together put out this menace! ’

Sir Gawain looked at the soldier with a puzzled air, as if he had forgotten for the moment who he was. Then he said in a calmer voice: ‘I’ll not aid you, sir. I’m no friend of your master, for I fear his dark motives. I fear too the harm you intend to these others here, who must be innocents in whatever intrigue enfolds us.’

‘Sir Gawain, I hang here between life and death as a fly caught in a web. I make my last appeal to you, and though I don’t understand the full part of this matter, I beg you consider why he comes to our country if not to do us mischief! ’

‘He gives good account of his errand here, sir, and though he angers me with his careless plans, it’s hardly reason to join you in arms against him.’

‘Fight now, soldier,’ Wistan said, his tone almost conciliatory. ‘Fight and be done with it.’

‘Will it do harm, Master Wistan,’ Beatrice said suddenly, ‘to let this soldier surrender his sword and ride away? He spoke kindly to me before on the bridge and he’s perhaps not a bad man.’

‘If I do as you ask, Mistress Beatrice, he’ll take news back of us and surely return before long with thirty or more soldiers. There’ll be little mercy shown then. And mark you, he means sinister harm to the boy.’

‘Perhaps he would willingly swear an oath not to betray us.’

‘Your kindness touches me, mistress,’ the grey-haired soldier intervened, never taking his eyes off Wistan. ‘But I’m no scoundrel and won’t take rude advantage of it. What the Saxon says is true. Spare me and I’ll do just as he says, for duty allows me no other course. Yet I thank you for your gentle words, and if these are to be my last moments, then I'll leave this world a little more peacefully for them.'

'What's more, sir,' Beatrice said, 'I've not forgotten your earlier request, concerning your mother and father. You made it then in jest, I know, and it's not likely we'll encounter them. But if ever we do so, they'll know of how you waited with longing to see them again.'

'I thank you once more, mistress. But this is no time for me to soften my heart with such thoughts. Fortune may favour me yet in this contest, no matter this man's reputation, and then you may regret you ever wished me kindness.'

'Most likely so,' Beatrice said and sighed. 'Then Master Wistan, you must do your best for us. I'll look away, for I take no pleasure in slaughter. And I bid you tell young Master Edwin do the same, for I'm sure he'll only heed if you command it.'

'Pardon me, mistress,' Wistan said, 'but I would the boy witness all that unfolds, just as I was often made to do at his age. I know he'll not flinch or retch to witness the ways of warriors.' He now spoke several sentences in Saxon, and Edwin, who had been standing by himself a short way away, walked over to the tree and stood beside Axl and Beatrice. His eyes, watchful, seemed never to blink.

Axl could hear the grey-haired soldier's breathing, more audible now because the man was releasing a low growl with each breath. When he charged forward he did so with his sword high above his head in what seemed an unsophisticated, even suicidal attack; but just before he reached Wistan, he abruptly altered his trajectory, and feinted to his left, his sword lowered to his hip. The grey-haired soldier, Axl understood with a twinge of pity, knowing he stood little chance should the combat mature, had wagered everything on this one desperate ploy. But Wistan had anticipated it, or perhaps it was that his instincts were enough. The Saxon side-stepped neatly, and drew his own sword across the oncoming man in a single simple movement. The soldier let out a sound such as a bucket makes when, dropped into a well, it first strikes the water; he then fell forward onto the ground. Sir Gawain muttered a prayer, and Beatrice asked: 'Is it done now, Axl?'

'It's done, princess.'

Edwin was staring at the fallen man, his expression barely changed from before. Following the boy's gaze, Axl saw that a serpent, disturbed in the grass by the soldier's fall, was now sliding out from under the body. Though dark, the creature was mottled with yellows and whites, and as it revealed more of itself, travelling swiftly across the ground, Axl caught the powerful odour of a man's insides. He instinctively stepped to one side, moving Beatrice with him, in case the creature should come searching for their feet. Still it kept coming their way, parting in two around a clump of thistle, as a stream might part around a rock, before becoming one again and continuing ever closer.

'Come away, princess,' Axl said, leading her. 'It's done, and it's as well. This man meant us harm, though the reason's still not clear.'

'Let me enlighten you as far as I can, Master Axl,' Wistan said. He had been cleaning his sword on the ground, but now rose and came towards them. 'It's true our Saxon kin in this country live in good harmony with your people. But we've reports at home of Lord Brennus's ambitions to conquer this land for himself and make war on all Saxons now living on it.'

'I hear the same reports, sir,' Sir Gawain said. 'It was another reason I wouldn't side with this wretch now gutted like a trout. I fear this Lord Brennus is one who would undo the great peace won by Arthur.'

‘We at home hear more, sir,’ said Wistan. ‘That Brennus entertains in his castle a dangerous guest. A Norseman said to possess the wisdom to tame dragons. It’s my king’s fear Lord Brennus means to capture Querig to fight in the ranks of his army. This she-dragon would make a fierce soldier indeed, and Brennus would then rightly harbour ambition. It’s for this I’m sent to destroy the dragon before her savagery turns on all who oppose Lord Brennus. Sir Gawain, you look aghast, but I speak sincerely.’

‘If I’m aghast, sir, it’s because there’s a sound ring to your words. When I was a young man, I once faced a dragon in an opposing army, and a fearful thing it was. My comrades, hungry for victory the moment before, froze for fear at the sight, and this a creature not half the equal of Querig in might or cunning. If Querig is made a servant of Lord Brennus, it will surely tempt new wars. Yet it’s my hope she’s too wild to be tamed by any man.’ He paused, looked towards the fallen soldier and shook his head.

Wistan strode over to where Edwin was standing, and grasping the boy by the arm, began gently to lead him towards the corpse. Then for a little while the two of them stood side by side over the soldier, Wistan talking quietly, pointing occasionally, and looking into Edwin’s face to check the response. At one stage, Axl saw Wistan’s finger trace a smooth line through the air, as perhaps he explained to the boy the journey made by his blade. All the while, Edwin went on gazing blankly at the fallen man.

Sir Gawain, appearing now at Axl’s side, said: ‘It’s a great sadness this tranquil spot, surely a gift from God to all weary travellers, is now polluted by blood. Let’s bury this man quickly, before anyone else comes this way, and I’ll take his horse to Lord Brennus’s camp, together with news of how I came upon him attacked by bandits, and where his friends may find his grave. Meanwhile, sir’ - he turned to address Wistan - ‘I urge you return straight away east. Think no more of Querig, for you can be assured Horace and I, hearing all we have today, will redouble our efforts to slay her. Now come, friends, let's put this man in the earth that he may return to his maker peacefully. '

PART II

Chapter Six

For all his tiredness, Axl was finding sleep elusive. The monks had provided them with a room on the upper storey, and while it was a relief not to have to contend with the cold seeping up from the soil, he had never slept easily above ground. Even when sheltering in barns or stables, he had often climbed ladders to a restless night troubled by the cavernous space beneath him. Or perhaps his restlessness tonight had to do with the presence of the birds in the dark above. They were now largely silent, but every so often would come a small rustle, or a beating of wings, and he would feel the urge to fling his arms over Beatrice's sleeping form to protect her from the foul feathers drifting down through the air.

The birds had been there when they had first entered the chamber earlier in the day. And had he not felt, even then, something malevolent in the way these crows, blackbirds, woodpigeons looked down on them from the rafters? Or was it just that his memory had become coloured by subsequent events?

Or perhaps the sleeplessness was on account of the sounds, even now echoing across the monastery grounds, of Wistan chopping firewood. The noise had not prevented Beatrice from sinking easily into sleep, and on the other side of the room, beyond the dark shape he knew to be the table on which they had earlier eaten, Edwin had settled to a gentle snoring. But Wistan, as far as Axl knew, had not slept at all. The warrior had remained sitting over in the far corner, waiting for the last monk to leave the courtyard below, then gone out into the night. And now here he was again - and despite Father Jonus's warning - cutting more firewood.

The monks had taken some time to disperse after emerging from their meeting. Several times Axl had come close to sleep only to be brought to the surface again by voices below. Sometimes they were four or five, always lowered, often filled with anger or fear. There had been no voices now for some time, and yet as he drifted again towards slumber, Axl could not shake the feeling there were still monks below their window, not just a few, but dozens of robed figures, standing silently under the moonlight, listening to Wistan's blows resounding across the grounds.

Earlier, with the afternoon sun filling the chamber, Axl had looked out of the window to see what appeared to be the entire community - more than forty monks - waiting in clusters all around the courtyard. There was a furtive mood among them, as if they were keen their words were not overheard even by those in their own ranks, and Axl could see hostile glances exchanged. Their habits were all of the same brown cloth, sometimes missing a hood or a sleeve. They seemed anxious to go into the large stone building opposite, but there had been a delay and their impatience was palpable.

Axl had been gazing down on the courtyard for several moments when a noise made him lean further out of the window and look directly beneath him. He had seen then the outer wall of the building, its pale stone revealing yellow hues in the sun, and the staircase cut into it rising from the ground towards him. Midway up these stairs was a monk - Axl could see the top of his head - holding a tray laden with food and a jug of milk. The man was pausing to rebalance the tray, and Axl watched the manoeuvre with alarm, knowing how these steps were worn unevenly, and that with no rail on the outside, one had always to keep pressed to the wall to be sure not to plunge down onto the hard cobbles. On top of it all, the monk now ascending appeared to have a limp, yet he kept coming, slowly and steadily.

Axl went to the door to relieve the man of the tray, but the monk - Father Brian, as they were soon to learn he was called - insisted on carrying it to the table himself, saying: 'You are our guests, so let me serve you as such.'

Wistan and the boy had left by then, and perhaps the sound of their woodcutting was already ringing through the air. So it had been just he and Beatrice who had sat down, side by side, at the wooden table and devoured gratefully the bread, fruit and milk. As they did so, Father Brian had chatted happily, sometimes dreamily, about past visitors, the fish to be caught in nearby streams, a stray dog that had lived with them until its death the previous winter. Sometimes Father Brian, an elderly but sprightly man, got up from the table and shuffled about the room dragging about his bad leg, talking all the while, every now and then going to the window to check on his colleagues below.

Meanwhile, above their heads, the birds had been criss-crossing the underside of the roof, their feathers occasionally drifting down to blemish the surface of the milk. Axl had been tempted to chase off these birds, but had refrained in case the monks regarded them with affection. He was taken aback then when rapid footsteps came up the stairs outside, and a large monk with a dark beard and a flushed face burst into the room.

'Demons! Demons!' he shouted, glaring up at the rafters. 'I'll see them soak in blood!'

The newcomer was carrying a straw bag, and he now reached into it, brought out a stone and hurled it up at the birds.

'Demons! Foul demons, demons, demons!'

As the first stone ricocheted down to the ground, he threw a second and then a third. The stones were landing away from the table, but Beatrice had covered her head with both arms, and Axl, rising, began to move towards the bearded man. But Father Brian had reached him first, and clutching both the man's arms, said:

‘Brother Irasmus, I beg you! Stop this and calm yourself! ’

The birds by now were screeching and flying in all directions, and the bearded monk shouted over the commotion: ‘I know them! I know them! ’

‘Calm yourself, brother! ’

‘Don’t you stop me, father! They’re agents of the devil! ’

‘They may yet be agents of God, Irasmus. We don’t yet know. ’

‘I know them to be of the devil! Look at their eyes! How can they be of God and gaze at us with such eyes? ’

‘Irasmus, calm yourself. We have guests present. ’

At these words, the bearded monk became aware of Axl and Beatrice. He stared angrily at them, then said to Father Brian: ‘Why bring guests into the house at a time like this? Why do they come here? ’

‘They’re just good people travelling by, brother, and we’re happy to give them hospitality as is ever our custom. ’

‘Father Brian, you’re a fool to tell strangers of our affairs! Look, they spy on us! ’

‘They spy on no one, nor do they have any interest in our problems, having plenty of their own, I don’t doubt. ’

Suddenly the bearded man drew out another stone and prepared to hurl it, but Father Brian managed to prevent him.

‘Go back down, Irasmus, and let go this bag. Here, leave it with me. It won’t do, carrying it everywhere the way you do. ’

The bearded man shook off the older monk, and clutched his sack jealously to his chest. Father Brian, allowing Irasmus this small victory, ushered him to the doorway, and even as the latter turned to glare again at the roof, pushed him gently out onto the stairway.

‘Go back down, Irasmus. They miss you down there. Go back down and take care you don’t fall.’

When the man had finally gone, Father Brian came back into the room, waving his hand at the feathers floating in the air.

‘My apologies to you both. He’s a good man, but this way of life no longer suits him. Please be seated again and finish your meal in peace.’

‘And yet, father,’ Beatrice said, ‘that fellow may be right when he says we intrude on you at an uneasy time. We’ve no desire to increase your burdens here, and if you’ll only let us quickly consult Father Jonus, whose wisdom’s well known, we’ll be on our way. Is there word yet if we might see him?’

Father Brian shook his head. ‘It’s as I told you earlier, mistress. Jonus has been unwell, and the abbot’s given strict orders no one will disturb him other than with permission given by the abbot himself. Knowing of your desire to meet with Jonus, and the pains you took to come here, I’ve been trying since your arrival to attract the abbot’s ear. Yet as you see, you come at a busy time, and now there’s a visitor of some importance arrived for the abbot, delaying our conference further. The abbot’s even now gone back to his study to talk with the visitor while the rest of us wait for him.’

Beatrice had been standing at the window to watch the bearded monk’s departure down the stone steps, and she now pointed, saying: ‘Good father, isn’t that the abbot returning now?’

Axl, coming to her side, saw a gaunt figure striding with authority into the centre of the courtyard. The monks, breaking from their conversations, were all moving towards him.

‘Ah yes, there’s the abbot returned. Now finish your meal in peace. And regarding Jonus, be patient, for I fear I’ll not be able to bring you the abbot’s decision till after this conference is over. Yet I’ll not forget, I promise, and will petition well for you.’

It was surely the case that then, as now, the warrior’s axe blows had been ringing across the courtyard. In fact, Axl could distinctly recall asking himself, as he watched the monks filing into the building opposite, if he was hearing one woodcutter or two; for a second blow would follow so close behind the first it was hard to tell if it was a real sound or an echo. Thinking about it now, lying in the dark, Axl was sure Edwin had been chopping alongside Wistan, matching the warrior blow for blow. In all likelihood the boy was already an expert woodcutter. Earlier that day, before they had come to this monastery, he had astonished them by digging so rapidly with two flat stones he had happened to find nearby.

Axl by then had ceased to dig, having been persuaded by the warrior to preserve his strength for the climb to the monastery. So he had stood beside the oozing body of the soldier, guarding it from the birds gathering in the branches. Wistan, Axl recalled, had been using the dead man’s sword to dig the grave, remarking that he was reluctant to blunt his own on such a task. Sir Gawain, however, had said:

‘This soldier died honourably, no matter the schemes of his master, and a knight’s sword is put to good use giving him a grave.’ Both men, though, had paused to watch in wonder the progress being made by Edwin with his rudimentary tools. Then, as they resumed their work, Wistan had said:

‘I fear, Sir Gawain, Lord Brennus will not believe such a story.’

‘He’ll believe it well enough, sir,’ Gawain had replied, continuing to dig. ‘There’s a coolness between us, but he has me for an honest fool without the wit to invent devious tales. I may tell them how the soldier spoke of bandits even as he bled to death in my arms. Some will think it a grave sin to tell such a lie, yet I know God will look mercifully on it, for isn’t it to stop further bloodshed? I’ll make Brennus believe me, sir. Even so, you remain in danger and have good reason to hurry home.’

‘I’ll do so without delay, Sir Gawain, as soon as my errand here’s finished. If my mare’s foot isn’t soon healed, I may even trade her for another, for that’s a long ride to the fens. Yet I’ll be sorry for she’s a rare horse.’

‘A rare one indeed! My Horace, alas, no longer possesses such agility, yet he’s come to me in many an hour of need, as your mare came to you just now. A rare horse, and one you’ll be sad to lose. Even so, speed is crucial, so be on your way and never mind your errand. Horace and I will see to the she-dragon, so you’ve no cause to think further of her. In any case, now I’ve had time to dwell on it, I see Lord Brennus can never succeed in recruiting Querig into his army. She’s the most wild and untameable of creatures and will as quickly spew fire on her own ranks as on Brennus’s foes. The whole idea’s outlandish, sir. Think no more of it and hurry home before your enemies corner you.’ Then when Wistan continued to dig without responding, Sir Gawain asked: ‘Do I have your word on it, Master Wistan?’

‘On what, Sir Gawain?’

‘That you’ll think no more of the she-dragon and hurry home.’

‘You seem keen to hear me say so.’

‘I think not just of your safety, sir, but of those on whom Querig will turn should you arouse her. And what of these companions who travel with you?’

‘It’s true, the safety of these friends gives me concern. I’ll go beside them as far as the monastery, for I can hardly leave them defenceless on these wild roads. Thereafter, it may be best we part.’

‘So after the monastery, you’ll make your way home.’

‘I’ll set off home when I’m ready, sir knight.’

The smell rising from the dead man’s innards had obliged Axl to take a few steps away, and when he did so, he found he had a better view of Sir Gawain. The knight was now waist deep in the ground, and the perspiration had drenched his forehead, so perhaps that was why his expression had lost its customary benevolence. He was regarding Wistan with intense hostility, while the latter, oblivious, carried on digging.

Beatrice had been upset by the soldier’s death. As the grave had grown deeper, she had walked slowly back to the great oak and seated herself again in its shade, her head bowed. Axl had wanted to go and sit with her, and but for the gathering crows, would have done so. Now, lying in the darkness, he too began to feel a sadness for the slain man. He remembered the soldier’s courtesy towards them on the little bridge, and the gentle way he had spoken to Beatrice. Axl recalled too the precise way he had positioned his horse when first entering the clearing. Something in the way he had done so had tugged on his memory at the time, and now, in the night’s stillness, Axl remembered the rise and fall of moorland, the brooding sky, and the flock of sheep coming through the heather.

He had been on horseback, and in front of him was mounted his companion, a man called Harvey, the smell of whose heavy body overpowered that of their horses. They had halted in the midst of the windswept wilderness because they had spotted movement in the distance, and once it was clear it signified no threat, Axl had stretched his arms – they had been riding a long time – and watched the tail of Harvey’s horse swinging from side to side as though to prevent the flies settling on its rear. Although his companion's face was hidden from him at that moment, the shape of Harvey's back, indeed his whole posture, announced the malevolence aroused by the sight of the approaching party. Gazing past Harvey, Axl could now make out the dark dots that were the sheep's faces, and moving among them four men - one on a donkey, the others on foot. There appeared to be no dogs. The shepherds, Axl supposed, must long ago have spotted them - two riders clearly outlined against the sky - but if they had felt apprehension there was no sign of it in their slow, relentless trudge forwards. There was, in any case, just the one long path across the moor, and Axl supposed the shepherds could avoid them only by turning back.

As the group came nearer, he could see that all four men, though far from old, were sickly and thin. This observation brought a sinking to his heart, for he knew the men's condition would only further provoke his companion's savagery. Axl waited until the party was almost within hailing distance, then nudged forward his horse, positioning it carefully to the side of Harvey where he knew the shepherds, and most of the flock, were bound to pass. He made sure to keep his own horse a nose behind, to allow his companion the illusion of seniority. Yet Axl was now in a position that would shield the shepherds from any sudden assault Harvey might launch with his whip, or with the club hooked to his saddle. All the while, the manoeuvre would have suggested on the surface only camaraderie, and in any case, Harvey did not possess the subtlety of mind even to suspect its real purpose. Indeed, Axl recalled his companion nodding absent-mindedly as he drew up, before turning back to stare moodily across the moor.

Axl had been especially anxious on behalf of the approaching shepherds because of something that had occurred a few days earlier in a Saxon village. It had been a sunny morning, and on that occasion Axl had been as startled as any of the villagers. Without warning, Harvey had heeled his horse forward and started to rain down blows on the people waiting to draw water from the well. Had Harvey used his whip or his club on that occasion? Axl had tried to recall this detail that day on the moor. If Harvey chose to assault the passing shepherds with his whip, the reach would be greater and require less leverage of the arm; he might even dare to swing it over the head of Axl's horse. If, however, he chose his club, with Axl positioned as he now was, Harvey would be obliged to push his horse beyond Axl's and rotate partially before attacking. Such a manoeuvre would appear too deliberate for his companion: Harvey was the type that liked his savagery to look impulsive and effortless.

He could not remember now if his careful actions had saved the shepherds. He had a vague recollection of sheep drifting innocently past them, but his memory of the shepherds themselves had become confusingly bound up with that attack on the villagers by the well. What had brought the pair of them to that village that morning? Axl remembered the cries of outrage, children crying, the looks of hatred, and his own fury, not so much at Harvey himself, but at those who had handicapped him with such a companion. Their mission, if accomplished, would surely be an achievement unique and new, one so supreme God himself would judge it a moment when men came a step closer to him. Yet how could Axl hope to do anything tethered to such a brute?

The grey-haired soldier came back into his thoughts, and the little half-gesture he had made on the bridge. As his stocky colleague had shouted and pulled on Wistan's hair, the grey-haired man had started to raise his arm, his fingers almost in a pointing gesture, a reprimand all but escaping his lips. Then he had let his arm fall. Axl had understood exactly what the grey-haired man had experienced during those moments. The soldier had then spoken with particular gentleness to Beatrice, and Axl had been grateful to him. He recalled Beatrice's expression as she had stood before the bridge, changing from grave and guarded to the softly smiling one so dear to him. The picture now seized his heart, and at the same time made him fearful. A stranger - a potentially dangerous one at that - had but to say a few kindly words and there she was, ready to trust the world again. The thought troubled him and he felt the urge to run his hand gently over the shoulder now beside him. But had she not always been thus? Was it not part of what made her so precious to him? And had she not survived these many years with no great harm coming to her?

‘It can’t be rosemary, sir,’ he remembered Beatrice saying to him, her voice tense with anxiety. He was crouching down, one knee pressed into the ground, for it was a fine day and the soil dry. Beatrice must have been standing behind him, for he could remember her shadow on the forest floor before him as he parted the undergrowth with his hands. ‘It can’t be rosemary, sir. Whoever saw rosemary with such yellow flowers on it?’

‘Then I have its name wrong, maiden,’ Axl had said. ‘But I know for certain it’s one commonly seen, and not one to bring you mischief.’

‘But are you really one who knows his plants, sir? My mother taught me everything grows wild in this country, yet what’s before us now is strange to me.’

‘Then it’s likely something foreign to these parts lately arrived. Why distress yourself so, maiden?’

‘I distress myself, sir, because it’s likely this is a weed I’m brought up to fear.’

‘Why fear a weed except that it’s poisonous, and then all’s needed is not to touch it. Yet there you were, reaching down with your hands, and now getting me to do the same!’

‘Oh, it’s not poisonous, sir! At least not in the way you mean. Yet my mother once described closely a plant and warned that to see it in the heather was bad luck for any young girl.’

‘What sort of bad luck, maiden?’

‘I’m not bold enough to tell you, sir.’

But even as she said this, the young woman – for that was what Beatrice was that day – had crouched down beside him so that their elbows touched for a brief moment, and smiled trustingly into his gaze.

‘If it’s such bad luck to see it,’ Axl had said, ‘what kindness is it to bring me from the road just to place my gaze on it?’

‘Oh, it’s not bad luck for you, sir! Only for unmarried girls. There’s another plant entirely brings bad luck to men like yourself.’

‘You’d better tell me what this other looks like, so I may dread it as you do this one.’

‘You may enjoy mocking me, sir. Yet one day you’ll take a tumble and find the weed next to your nose. You’ll see then if it’s a laughing matter or not.’

He could remember now the feel of the heather as he had passed his hand through it, the wind in the branches above, and the presence of the young woman beside him. Could that have been the first time they had conversed? Surely they had at least known one another by sight; surely it was inconceivable even Beatrice would have been so trusting of a total stranger.

The woodcutting noises, which had paused for a while, now started up again, and it occurred to Axl the warrior might remain outside the entire night. Wistan appeared calm and thoughtful, even in combat, yet it was possible the tensions of the day and previous night had mounted on his nerves, and he needed to work them off in this way. Even so, his behaviour was odd. Father Jonus had specifically warned against further woodcutting, yet here he was, back at it again and with night well fallen. Earlier, when they had first arrived, it had seemed a simple courtesy on the warrior's part. And at that point, as Axl had discovered, Wistan had had his own reasons for cutting wood.

'The woodshed is well positioned,' the warrior had explained. 'The boy and I were able to keep good watch on the comings and goings while we worked. Even better, when we delivered the wood where it was needed, we roamed at will to inspect the surroundings, even if a few doors stayed barred to us.'

The two of them had been talking up by the high monastery wall overlooking the surrounding forest. The monks had long gone into their meeting by then, and a hush had fallen over the grounds. Several moments before, with Beatrice dozing in the chamber, Axl had wandered out under the late afternoon sun, and climbed the worn stone steps to where Wistan was looking down on the dense foliage below.

'But why go to such trouble, Master Wistan?' Axl had asked. 'Can it be you're suspicious of these good monks here?'

The warrior, a hand raised to shield his eyes, said: 'When we were climbing that path earlier, I wanted nothing but to curl in a corner adrift in my dreams. Yet now we're here, I can't keep away the feeling this place holds dangers for us.'

'It must be weariness makes your suspicions keen, Master Wistan. What can trouble you here?'

'Nothing yet I can point to with conviction. But consider this. When I returned to the stables earlier to see all was well with the mare, I heard sounds coming from the stall behind. I mean, sir, this other stall was separated by a wall, but I could hear another horse beyond, though no horse was there when we first arrived and I led in the mare. Then when I walked to the other side, I found there the stable door shut and a great lock hanging on it only a key would release. '

'There may be many innocent explanations, Master Wistan. The horse may have been at pasture and lately brought in. '

'I spoke to a monk on that very point, and learnt they keep no horses here from a wish not to ease their burdens unduly. It would seem since our own arrival some other visitor has come, and one anxious to keep his presence hidden. '

'Now you mention it, Master Wistan, I recall Father Brian made mention of an important visitor arriving for the abbot, and their great conference being delayed on account of his coming. We know nothing of what goes on here, and in all likelihood, none of it touches us. '

Wistan nodded thoughtfully. 'Perhaps you're right, Master Axl. A little sleep would calm my suspicions. Even so, I sent the boy to wander further this place, supposing he'd be excused a natural curiosity more readily than a grown man. Not long ago he returned to report he'd heard a groaning from those quarters over there' - Wistan turned and pointed -

'as of a man in pain. Creeping indoors after this sound, Master Edwin saw marks of blood both old and fresh outside a closed chamber. '

'Curious certainly. Yet there'd be no mystery in a monk meeting some unfortunate accident, perhaps tripping on these very steps. '

'I concede, sir, I've no hard reason to suppose anything amiss here. Perhaps it's a warrior's instinct makes me wish my sword was in my belt and I was done pretending to be a farmboy. Or maybe my fears derive simply from what these walls whisper to me of days gone by. '

'What can you mean, sir? '

‘Only that not long ago, this place was surely no monastery, but a hillfort, and one well made to fight off foes. You recall the exhausting road we climbed? How the path turned back and forth as though eager to drain our strength? Look down there now, sir, see the battlements running above those same paths. It’s from there the defenders once showered their guests from above with arrows, rocks, boiling water. It would have been a feat merely to reach the gate.’

‘I see it. It can’t have been an easy climb.’

‘Further, Master Axl, I’d wager this fort was once in Saxon hands, for I see about it many signs of my kin perhaps invisible to you. Look there’ - Wistan pointed down to a cobbled yard below hemmed in by walls - ‘I fancy just there stood a second gate, much stronger than the first, yet hidden to invaders climbing the road. They saw only the first and strained to storm it, but that gate would have been what we Saxons call a watergate, after those barriers that control a river’s flow. Through this watergate would be let past, quite deliberately, a measured number of the enemy. Then the watergate would close on those following. Now those isolated between the two gates, in that space just there, would find themselves outnumbered, and once again, attacked from above. They would be slaughtered before the next group let through. You see how it worked, sir. This is today a place of peace and prayer, yet you needn’t gaze so deep to find blood and terror.’

‘You read it well, Master Wistan, and I shudder at what you show me.’

‘I’d wager too there were Saxon families here, fled from far and wide seeking protection in this fort. Women, children, wounded, old, sick. See over there, the yard where the monks gathered earlier. All but the weakest would have come out and stood there, all the better to witness the invaders squeal like trapped mice between the two gates.’

‘That I can’t believe, sir. They would surely have hidden themselves below and prayed for deliverance.’

‘Only the most cowardly of them. Most would have stood there in that yard, or even come up here where we now stand, happy to risk an arrow or spear to enjoy the agonies below.’

Axl shook his head. ‘Surely the sort of people you speak of would take no pleasure in bloodshed, even of the enemy.’

‘On the contrary, sir. I speak of people at the end of a brutal road, having seen their children and kin mutilated and ravished. They’ve reached this, their sanctuary, only after long torment, death chasing at their heels. And now comes an invading army of overwhelming size. The fort may hold several days, perhaps even a week or two. But they know in the end they will face their own slaughter. They know the infants they circle in their arms will before long be bloodied toys kicked about these cobbles. They know because they’ve seen it already, from whence they fled. They’ve seen the enemy burn and cut, take turns to rape young girls even as they lie dying of their wounds. They know this is to come, and so must cherish the earlier days of the siege, when the enemy first pay the price for what they will later do. In other words, Master Axl, it’s vengeance to be relished in advance by those not able to take it in its proper place. That’s why I say, sir, my Saxon cousins would have stood here to cheer and clap, and the more cruel the death, the more merry they would have been.’

‘I won’t believe it, sir. How is it possible to hate so deeply for deeds not yet done? The good people who once took shelter here would have kept alive their hopes to the end, and surely watched all suffering, of friend and foe, with pity and horror.’

‘You’re much the senior in years, Master Axl, but in matters of blood, it may be I’m the elder and you the youth. I’ve seen dark hatred as bottomless as the sea on the faces of old women and tender children, and some days felt such hatred myself. '

'I won't have it, sir, and besides, we talk of a barbarous past hopefully gone for ever. Our argument need never be put to the test, thank God. '

The warrior looked strangely at Axl. He appeared about to say something, then to change his mind. Then he turned to survey the stone buildings behind them saying: 'Wandering these grounds earlier, my arms heavy with firewood, I spotted at every turn fascinating traces of that past. The fact is, sir, even with the second gate breached, this fort would have held many more traps for the enemy, some devilishly cunning. The monks here hardly know what they pass each day. But enough of this. While we share this quiet moment, let me ask your forgiveness, Master Axl, for the discomfort I caused you earlier. I refer to my questioning that good knight about you. '

'Think no more of it, sir. There's no offence, even if you did surprise me, and my wife also. You mistook me for another, an easy error. '

'I thank you for your understanding. I took you for one whose face I can never forget, even though I was a small boy when I saw it last. '

'In the west country then. '

'That's right, sir, in the time before I was taken. The man I speak of was no warrior, yet wore a sword and rode a fine stallion. He came often to our village, and to us boys who knew only farmers and boatmen, was a thing of wonder. '

'Yes. I see how he might be. '

'I recall we followed him all about the village, though always at a shy distance. Some days he'd move with urgency, talking with elders or calling a crowd to gather in the square. Other days he'd wander at leisure, talking to one and all as if to pass the day. He knew little of our tongue, but our village being on the river, the boats coming and going, many spoke his language, so he never lacked for companions. He'd sometimes turn to us with a smile, but we being young would scatter and hide.'

'And was it in this village you learnt our tongue so well?'

'No, that came later. When I was taken.'

'Taken, Master Wistan?'

'I was taken from that village by soldiers and trained from a tender age to be the warrior I am today. It was Britons took me, so I soon learnt to speak and fight in their manner. It's long ago and things take strange shapes in the mind. When I first saw you today in that village, perhaps a trick of the morning light, I felt I was that boy again, shyly peeking at that great man with his flowing cloak, moving through our village like a lion amongst pigs and cows. I fancy it was a small corner of your smile, or something about your way of greeting a stranger, head bowed a little. Yet now I see I was mistaken, since you could not have been that man. No more of this. How is your good wife, sir? Not exhausted, I hope?'

'She's recovered her breath well, I thank you for asking, though I've told her to rest further just now. We're forced, in any case, to wait till the monks return from their meeting and the abbot gives permission to visit the wise physician Jonus.'

'A resolute lady, sir. I admired how she made her way here giving no complaint. Ah, here's the boy back again.'

'See how he holds his injury, Master Wistan. We must take him also to Father Jonus.'

Wistan seemed not to hear this. Leaving the wall, he went down the little steps to meet Edwin, and for a few moments the two conferred in low voices, heads close together. The boy's manner was animated, and the warrior listened with a frown, nodding occasionally. As Axl came down the steps to their level, Wistan said quietly:

'Master Edwin reports a curious discovery we may do well to see with our own eyes. Let's follow him, but walk as we've no clear purpose, in case that old monk there is left on purpose to spy on us.'

Indeed, a solitary monk was sweeping the courtyard and as they came closer, Axl noticed he was mouthing words silently to himself, lost in his world. He barely glanced their way as Edwin led them across the courtyard and into a gap between two buildings. They emerged where thin grass covered uneven sloping ground, and a row of withered trees, hardly taller than a man, marked a path leading away from the monastery. As they followed Edwin under a setting sky, Wistan said softly:

'I'm much taken by this boy. Master Axl, we may yet revise our plan to leave him at your son's village. It would suit me well to keep him by me a while longer.'

'I'm troubled to hear you say so, sir.'

'Why so? He hardly longs for a life feeding pigs and digging the cold soil.'

'Yet what will become of him at your side?'

'Once my mission's complete, I'll take him back to the fens.'

'And what will you have him do there, sir? Fight Norsemen all his days?'

'You frown, sir, but the boy has an unusual temperament. He'll make a fine warrior. But hush, let's see what he has for us.'

They had come to where three wooden shacks stood at the side of the lane, in such disrepair that each appeared to be held up by its neighbour. The wet ground was rutted with wheeltracks, and Edwin paused to point these out. Then he led them into the furthest of the three shacks.

There was no door, and much of the roof was open to the sky. As they came in, several birds flew off in furious commotion, and Axl saw, in the gloomy space vacated, a crudely made cart - perhaps the work of the monks themselves - its two wheels sunk into the mud. What arrested the attention was a large cage mounted on its carriage, and coming closer, Axl noticed that though the cage was itself iron, a thick wooden pillar ran down its spine, fixing it firmly to the boards underneath. This same post was festooned with chains and manacles, and at head height, what appeared to be a blackened iron mask, though with no holes for the eyes, and only a small one for the mouth. The cart, and the area all around it, was covered with feathers and droppings. Edwin pulled open the cage door and proceeded to move it back and forth on its squeaking hinge. He was again speaking excited words, to which Wistan, throwing searching glances around the shed, returned the occasional nod.

‘It’s curious,’ Axl said, ‘these monks should have need of such an object as this. No doubt to aid some pious ritual.’

The warrior started to move around the cart, stepping carefully to avoid the stagnant puddles. ‘I saw something like this once before,’ he said. ‘You may suppose this device intended to expose the man within it to the cruelty of the elements. Yet look, see how these bars stand far enough apart to allow my shoulder to pass through. And here, look, how these feathers stick to the iron in hardened blood. A man fastened here is offered thus to the mountain birds. Caught in these cuffs, he has no way to fight off the hungry beaks. This iron mask, though it may look frightful, is in fact a thing of mercy, for with it the eyes at least aren’t feasted on.’

‘There may yet be some more gentle purpose,’ Axl said, but Edwin had started to talk again, and Wistan turned and looked out of the shed.

‘The boy says he followed these tracks out to a spot nearby on the cliff’s edge,’ the warrior said, eventually.

‘He says the ground’s well rutted there, showing where this wagon has often stayed. In other words, the signs all support my guess, and I can see too this cart’s been wheeled out just lately.’

‘I don’t know what it means, Master Wistan, but I admit I now begin to share your uneasiness. This object sends a chill through me and makes me want to return to my wife’s side.’

‘It’s as well we do, sir. Let’s stay no longer.’

But as they came out of the shack, Edwin, who again was leading, stopped abruptly. Looking past him into the evening gloom, Axl could see a robed figure in the tall grass a short distance from them.

‘I’d say it’s the monk lately sweeping the yard,’ the warrior said to Axl.

‘Does he see us?’

‘I’d say he sees us and knows we see him. Yet he stands there still as a tree. Well, let’s go to him.’

The monk was standing at a spot to the side of their path, the grass up to his knee. As they approached the man remained quite still, though the wind pulled at his robe and long white hair. He was thin, almost emaciated, and his protruding eyes stared at them without expression.

‘You observe us, sir,’ Wistan said, stopping, ‘and you know what we’ve just discovered. So perhaps you’d tell us the purpose to which you monks put that device.’

Saying nothing, the monk pointed towards the monastery.

‘It may be he’s vowed to silence,’ Axl said. ‘Or else as mute as you lately pretended, Master Wistan.’

The monk came out of the grass and onto the path. His strange eyes fixed each of them in turn, then he pointed again towards the monastery and set off. They followed him, just a short distance behind, the monk continually glancing back at them over his shoulder.

The monastery buildings were now dark shapes against the setting sky. As they drew closer, the monk paused, moved his forefinger over his lips, then continued at a more cautious pace. He seemed anxious they remain unseen, and to avoid the central courtyard. He took them down narrow passageways behind buildings where the earth was pitted or sloped severely. Once, as they went with heads bowed along a wall, there came from the very windows above sounds from the monks’ conference. One voice was shouting over a hubbub, then a second voice - perhaps that of the abbot - called for order. But there was no time to loiter, and soon they were gathered at an archway through which could be seen the main courtyard. The monk now indicated with urgent signs that they were to proceed as quickly and quietly as possible.

As it was they were not obliged to cross the courtyard, where torches were now burning, but only to skirt one corner under the shadows of a colonnade. When the monk halted again, Axl whispered to him:

‘Good sir, since your intention must be to take us somewhere, I’d ask you to let me go fetch my wife, for I’m uneasy leaving her alone.’

The monk, who had turned immediately to fix Axl in a stare, shook his head and pointed into the semi-dark. Only then did Axl spot Beatrice standing in a doorway further down the cloister. Relieved, he gave a wave, and as the party moved towards her, there came from behind them a surge of angry voices from the monks’ meeting.

‘How is it with you, princess?’ he asked, reaching to take her outstretched hands.

‘Peacefully taking my rest, Axl, when this silent monk appeared before me, the way I took him for a phantom. But he’s keen to lead us somewhere and we’d best follow.’

The monk repeated his gesture for silence, then beckoning, pushed past Beatrice across the threshold where she had been waiting.

The corridors now became as tunnel-like as those of their warren at home, and the lamps flickering in the little alcoves hardly dispelled the darkness. Axl, with Beatrice holding his arm, kept a hand held out before him. For a moment they were back in the open air, crossing a muddy yard between ploughed allotments, then into another low stone building. Here the corridor was wider and lit by larger flames, and the monk seemed finally to relax. Recovering his breath, he looked them over once more, then signalling for them to wait, vanished under an arch. After a little time, the monk appeared again and ushered them forward. As he did so, a frail voice from within said: ‘Come in, guests. A poor chamber this to receive you, but you’re welcome.’

As he waited for sleep to come to him, Axl recalled once again how the four of them, together with the silent monk, had squeezed into the tiny cell. A candle was burning next to the bed, and he had felt Beatrice recoil as she caught sight of the figure lying in it. Then she had taken a breath and moved further into the room. There was hardly space for them all, but they had before long arranged themselves around the bed, the warrior and the boy in the corner furthest away. Axl’s back was pressed against the chilly stone wall, but Beatrice, standing just in front and leaning into him as if for reassurance, was almost up to the sickbed. There was a faint smell of vomit and urine. The silent monk, meanwhile, was fussing about the man in the bed, helping to raise him to a sitting position.

Their host was white-haired and advanced in years. His frame was large, and until recently must have been vigorous, but now the simple act of sitting up appeared to cause multiple agonies. A coarse blanket fell from around him as he raised himself, revealing a nightshirt patched with bloodstains. But what had caused Beatrice to shrink back was the man's neck and face, starkly illuminated by the bedside candle. A swollen mound under one side of the chin, a deep purple fading to a yellow, obliged the head to be held at a slight angle. The peak of the mound was split and caked with pus and old blood. On the face itself, a gouge ran from just below the cheek bone down to the jaw, exposing a section of the man's inner mouth and gum. It must have cost him greatly to smile, but once he was settled in his new position, the monk did just this.

'Welcome, welcome. I'm Jonus, whom I know you came a long way to see. My dear guests, don't look at me with such pity. These wounds are no longer new, and hardly bring the pain they once did.'

'We see now, Father Jonus,' Beatrice said, 'why your good abbot's so reluctant to have strangers impose on you. We'd have waited for his permission, but this kind monk led us to you.'

'Ninian here is my most trusted friend, and even if he's vowed to silence, we understand one another perfectly. He's watched each of you since your arrival and brought me frequent reports. I thought it time we met, even if the abbot knows nothing of it.'

'But what can have caused you such injuries, father?' Beatrice asked. 'And you a man famed for kindness and wisdom.'

‘Let’s leave the topic, mistress, for my feeble strength won’t allow us to speak for long. I know two of you here, yourself and this brave boy, seek my advice. Let me see the boy first, who I understand carries a wound. Come closer into the light, dear lad.’

The monk’s voice, though soft, possessed a natural command, and Edwin started to move towards him. But immediately Wistan reached forward and gripped the boy by the arm. Perhaps it was an effect of the candle flame, or the warrior’s trembling shadow cast on the wall behind him, but it seemed to Axl that for an instant Wistan’s eyes were fixed on the injured monk with peculiar intensity, even hatred. The warrior drew the boy back to the wall, then took a step forward himself as though to shield his charge.

‘What’s wrong, shepherd?’ asked Father Jonus. ‘Do you fear poison from my wounds will travel to your brother? Then my hand needn’t touch him. Let him step closer and my eyes alone will test his injury.’

‘The boy’s wound is clean,’ Wistan said. ‘It’s just this good woman now seeks your help.’

‘Master Wistan,’ Beatrice said, ‘how can you say such a thing? You must know well how a wound clean one moment turns fevered the next. The boy must seek this wise monk’s guidance.’

Wistan seemed not to hear Beatrice, and continued to stare at the monk. Father Jonus, in turn, regarded the warrior as though he were a thing of great fascination. After a while, Father Jonus said:

‘You stand with remarkable boldness for a humble shepherd.’

‘It must be the habit of my trade. A shepherd must stand long hours watchful of wolves gathering in the night.’

‘No doubt that’s so. I imagine too how a shepherd must judge quickly, hearing a sound in the dark, if it heralds danger or the approach of a friend. Much must rest on the ability to make such decisions quickly and well.’

‘Only a foolish shepherd hears a snapping twig or spots a shape in the dark and assumes a companion come to relieve him. We’re a cautious breed, and what’s more, sir, I’ve just now seen with my own eyes the device in your barn.’

‘Ah. I thought you’d come upon it sooner or later. What do you make of your discovery, shepherd?’

‘It angers me.’

‘Angers you?’ Father Jonus rasped this with some force, as though himself suddenly angered. ‘Why does it anger you?’

‘Tell me if I’m wrong, sir. My surmise is that the custom here has been for the monks to take turns in that cage exposing their bodies to the wild birds, hoping this way to atone for crimes once committed in this country and long unpunished. Even these ugly wounds I see here before me have been gained in this way, and for all I know a sense of piety eases your suffering. Yet let me say I feel no pity to see your gashes. How can you describe as penance, sir, the drawing of a veil over the foulest deeds? Is your Christian god one to be bribed so easily with self-inflicted pain and a few prayers? Does he care so little for justice left undone?’

‘Our god is a god of mercy, shepherd, whom you, a pagan, may find hard to comprehend. It’s no foolishness to seek forgiveness from such a god, however great the crime. Our god’s mercy is boundless.’

‘What use is a god with boundless mercy, sir? You mock me as a pagan, yet the gods of my ancestors pronounce clearly their ways and punish severely when we break their laws. Your Christian god of mercy gives men licence to pursue their greed, their lust for land and blood, knowing a few prayers and a little penance will bring forgiveness and blessing. '

'It's true, shepherd, that here in this monastery, there are those who still believe such things. But let me assure you, Ninian and I have long let go such delusions, and neither are we alone. We know our god's mercy is not to be abused, yet many of my brother monks, the abbot included, will not yet accept this. They still believe that cage, and our constant prayers, will be enough. Yet these dark crows and ravens are a sign of God's anger. They never came before. Even last winter, though the wind made the strongest of us weep, the birds were but mischievous children, their beaks bringing only small sufferings. A shake of the chains or a shout was enough to keep them at bay. But now a new breed comes to find us, larger, bolder and with fury in their eyes. They tear at us in calm anger, no matter how we struggle or cry out. We've lost three dear friends these past months, and many more of us carry deep wounds. These surely are signs. '

Wistan's manner had been softening, but he had kept himself firmly in front of the boy. 'Are you saying', he asked, 'I have friends here in this monastery?'

'In this room, shepherd, yes. Elsewhere, we remain divided and even now they argue in great passion about how we are to continue. The abbot will insist we carry on as always. Others of our view will say it's time to stop. That no forgiveness awaits us at the end of this path. That we must uncover what's been hidden and face the past. But those voices, I fear, remain few and will not carry the day. Shepherd, will you trust me now to see this boy's wound? '

For a moment Wistan remained still. Then he moved aside, signalling to Edwin to step forward. Immediately the silent monk helped Father Jonus to a more upright position - both monks had become suddenly quite animated - then grasping the candleholder from the bedside, tugged Edwin closer, impatiently raising the boy's shirt for Father Jonus to see.

Then, for what seemed a long time, both monks went on looking at the boy's wound - Ninian moving the light one way then the other - as though it were a pool within which a miniature world was contained. Eventually the monks exchanged what seemed to Axl looks of triumph, but the very next moment Father Jonus fell shaking back onto his pillows, with an expression closer to resignation or else sadness. As Ninian hastily put down the candle to attend to him, Edwin slipped back into the shadows to stand beside Wistan.

'Father Jonus,' Beatrice said, 'now you've seen the boy's wound, tell us if it's clean and will heal on its own.'

Father Jonus's eyes were closed, and he was still breathing heavily, but he said quite calmly: 'I believe it will heal if he takes good care. Father Ninian will prepare an ointment for him before he leaves this place.'

'Father,' Beatrice went on, 'your present conversation with Master Wistan isn't entirely within my understanding. Yet it interests me greatly.'

'Is that so, mistress?' Father Jonus, still recovering his breath, opened his eyes and looked at her.

'Last night in a village below,' Beatrice said, 'I spoke with a woman wise with medicines. She had much to tell about my sickness, but when I asked her about this mist, the same that makes us forget the last hour as readily as a morning many years past, she confessed she had no idea what or whose work it was. Yet she said if there was one wise enough to know, it would be you, Father Jonus, up here in this monastery. So my husband and I made our way here, even though it's a harder road to our son's village where we're impatiently awaited. It was my hope you'd tell us something of this mist and how Axl and I might be free of it. It may be I'm a foolish woman, but it seemed to me just now, for all the talk of shepherds, you and Master Wistan were speaking of this same mist, and much bothered by what's been lost of our past. So let me ask this of you, and Master Wistan too. Do the both of you know what causes this mist to fall over us?'

Father Jonus and Wistan exchanged looks. Then Wistan said quietly:

'It's the dragon Querig, Mistress Beatrice, that roams these peaks. She's the cause of the mist you speak of. Yet these monks here protect her, and have done so for years. I'd wager even now, if they're wise to my identity, they'll have sent for men to destroy me.'

'Father Jonus, can this be true?' Beatrice asked. 'The mist is the work of this she-dragon?'

The monk, who for an instant had seemed far away, turned to Beatrice. 'The shepherd tells the truth, mistress. It's Querig's breath which fills this land and robs us of memories.'

'Axl, do you hear that? The she-dragon's the cause of the mist! If Master Wistan, or anyone else, even that old knight met on the road, can slay the creature, our memories will be restored to us! Axl, why so quiet?'

Indeed, Axl had been lost in thought, and although he had heard his wife's words, and noticed her excitement, it was all he could do simply to reach out a hand to her. Before he could find any words, Father Jonus said to Wistan:

'Shepherd, if you know your danger, why do you dally here? Why not take this boy and be on your way?'

'The boy needs rest, as I do.'

'But you don't rest, shepherd. You cut firewood and wander like a hungry wolf.'

'When we arrived your log pile was low. And the nights are cold in these mountains.'

'There's something else puzzles me, shepherd. Why does Lord Brennus hunt you as he does? For many days now, his soldiers have searched the country for you. Even last year, when another man came from the east to hunt Querig, Brennus believed it might be you and sent men out to search for you. They came up here asking for you. Shepherd, who are you to Brennus? ’

‘We knew one another as young lads, even before the age of this boy here. ’

‘You’ve come to this country on an errand, shepherd. Why jeopardise it to settle old scores? I say to you, take this boy and be on your way, even before the monks come out of their meeting. ’

‘If Lord Brennus does me the courtesy to come here after me this night, I’m obliged then to stand and face him. ’

‘Master Wistan,’ Beatrice said, ‘I don’t know what’s between you and Lord Brennus. But if it’s your mission to slay the great dragon Querig, I beg you, don’t be distracted from it. There’ll be time to settle scores later. ’

‘The mistress is right, shepherd. I fear I know too the purpose of all this woodcutting. Listen to what we say, sir. This boy gives you a unique chance the like of which may not come your way again. Take him and be on your way. ’

Wistan looked thoughtfully at Father Jonus, then bowed his head politely. ‘I’m happy to have met you, father. And I apologise if earlier I addressed you discourteously. But now let me and this boy take our leave of you. I know Mistress Beatrice still wishes for advice, and she’s a brave and good woman. I beg you preserve some strength to attend to her. Now I’ll thank you for your counsel, and bid you farewell. ’

Lying in the darkness, still hopeful sleep would overtake him, Axl tried to remember why he had been so oddly silent for much of his time in Father Jonus’s cell. There had been some reason, and even when Beatrice, triumphant to discover the origin of the mist, had turned to him and exclaimed, he had been able only to reach out his hand to her, still not speaking. He had been in the throes of some powerful and strange emotion, one that had all but put him in a dream, though every word being spoken around him still reached his ears with perfect clarity. He had felt as one standing in a boat on a wintry river, looking out into dense fog, knowing it would at any moment part to reveal vivid glimpses of the land ahead. And he had been caught in a kind of terror, yet at the same time had felt a curiosity - or something stronger and darker - and he had told himself firmly, 'Whatever it may be, let me see it, let me see it.'

Had he actually spoken these words out loud? Perhaps he had done so, and just at the instant Beatrice had turned to him in excitement, exclaiming, 'Axl, do you hear that? The she-dragon's the cause of the mist!'

He could not remember clearly what had happened once Wistan and the boy had departed Father Jonus's chamber. The silent monk, Ninian, must have left with them, probably to provide the ointment for the boy's wound, or simply to lead them back unobserved. In any case, he and Beatrice had been left alone with Father Jonus, and the latter, despite his wounds and his exhaustion, had examined his wife thoroughly. The monk had not asked her to remove any clothing - Axl had been relieved - and though here too his recollection was hazy, an image came to him of Jonus pressing an ear to Beatrice's side, eyes closed in concentration as though some faint message might be heard coming from within. Axl remembered too the monk, with blinking eyes, putting to Beatrice a series of questions. Did she feel sick after drinking water? Did she ever feel pain at the back of her neck? There were other questions Axl could now no longer remember, but Beatrice had replied in the negative to one after the next, and the more she did so, the more pleased Axl had become. Only once, when Jonus asked if she had noticed blood in her urine, and she replied that yes, she sometimes had, did Axl feel unease. But the monk had nodded, as though this was normal and to be expected, and gone straight on to the next question. How then had this examination ended? He remembered Father Jonus smiling and saying, 'So you can go to your son with nothing to fear,' and Axl himself saying, 'You see, princess, I always knew it was nothing.' Then the monk had eased himself carefully back down in his bed and lain there, recovering his breath. In Ninian's absence, Axl had hurried to fill the monk's drinking cup from the jug, and as he had placed it to the sick man's mouth, had seen tiny droplets of blood slide from the lower lip and spread in the water. Then Father Jonus had looked up at Beatrice and said:

'Mistress, you seem happy to know the truth about this thing you call the mist.'

'Happy indeed, father, for now there's a way forward for us.'

'Take care, for it's a secret guarded jealously by some, though it's maybe for the best it remains so no longer.'

'It's not for me to care if it's a secret or not, father, but I'm glad Axl and I know it and can now act on it.'

'Yet are you so certain, good mistress, you wish to be free of this mist? Is it not better some things remain hidden from our minds?'

'It may be so for some, father, but not for us. Axl and I wish to have again the happy moments we shared together. To be robbed of them is as if a thief came in the night and took what's most precious from us.'

'Yet the mist covers all memories, the bad as well as the good. Isn't that so, mistress?'

'We'll have the bad ones come back too, even if they make us weep or shake with anger. For isn't it the life we've shared?'

'You've no fear, then, of bad memories, mistress?'

‘What’s to fear, father? What Axl and I feel today in our hearts for each other tells us the path taken here can hold no danger for us, no matter that the mist hides it now. It’s like a tale with a happy end, when even a child knows not to fear the twists and turns before. Axl and I would remember our life together, whatever its shape, for it’s been a thing dear to us.’

A bird must have flown across the ceiling above him. The sound had startled him, and then Axl realised that for a moment or two he had actually been asleep. He realised too there were no more woodcutting noises, and the grounds were silent. Had the warrior returned to their chamber? Axl had heard nothing, and there were no signs, beyond the dark shape of the table, of anyone else asleep on Edwin’s side of the room. What had Father Jonus said after examining Beatrice and concluding with his questions? Yes, she had said, she had noticed blood in her urine, but he had smiled and asked something else. You see, princess, Axl had said, I always told you it was nothing. And Father Jonus had smiled, despite his wounds and his exhaustion, and said, you can go to your son with nothing to fear. But these had never been the questions Beatrice had feared. Beatrice, he knew, feared the boatman’s questions, harder to answer than Father Jonus’s, and that was why she had been so pleased to learn the cause of the mist. Axl, do you hear that? She had been triumphant. Axl, do you hear that? she had said, her face radiant.

Chapter Seven

A hand had been shaking him, but by the time Axl sat up the figure was already on the other side of the room, bending over Edwin and whispering, 'Quickly, boy, quickly! And not a sound!' Beatrice was awake beside him, and Axl rose unsteadily to his feet, the cold air startling him, then reached down to grasp his wife's outstretched hands.

It was still the depths of night, but voices were calling outside and surely torches had been lit in the courtyard below, for there were now illuminated patches on the wall facing the window. The monk who had awoken them was dragging the boy, still half asleep, over to their side, and Axl recognised Father Brian's limping gait before his face emerged from the dark.

'I'll try and save you, friends,' Father Brian said, his voice still a whisper, 'but you must be quick and do as I say. There are soldiers arrived, twenty, even thirty, with a will to hunt you down. They already have the older Saxon brother trapped, but he's a lively one and keeps them occupied, giving you a chance of escape. Be still, boy, stay with me!' Edwin was moving to the window, but Father Brian had reached out and clasped his arm. 'I mean to lead you to safety, but we must first leave this chamber unseen. Soldiers cross the square below, but their eyes are on the tower where the Saxon still holds out. With God's help they won't notice us go down the steps outside, and then the worst will be behind us. But cause no sound to make their gazes turn, and take care not to trip on the steps. I'll descend first, then signal your moment to follow. No, mistress, you must leave your bundle here. Let it be enough to keep your lives!'

They crouched near the door and listened to Father Brian's footsteps descend with agonising slowness.

Eventually, when Axl peered cautiously through the doorway, he saw torches moving at the far end of the courtyard; but before he could discern clearly what was going on, his attention was drawn by Father Brian, standing directly below and signalling frantically.

The staircase, running diagonally down the side of the wall, was mostly in shadow except for one patch, quite near the ground, lit up brightly by the nearly full moon.

‘Follow close behind me, princess,’ Axl said. ‘Don’t look across the yard, but keep your eyes on where your foot may find the next step, or it’ll be a hard fall and only enemies to come to our aid. Tell the boy what I’ve just said, and let’s have this behind us.’

Despite his own instructions, Axl could not help glancing across the courtyard as he went down. On the far side, soldiers had gathered around a cylindrical stone tower overlooking the building in which the monks had earlier had their meeting. Blazing torches were being waved, and there appeared to be disorder in their ranks. When Axl was halfway down the steps, two soldiers broke away and came running across the square, and he was sure they would be spotted. But the men vanished into a doorway, and before long Axl was gratefully ushering both Beatrice and Edwin into the shadows of the cloisters where Father Brian was waiting.

They followed the monk along narrow corridors, some of which may have been the same as those taken earlier with the silent Father Ninian. Often they moved through complete darkness, following the rhythmic hiss of their guide’s dragged foot. Then they came into a chamber whose ceiling had partly fallen away. Moonlight was pouring in, revealing piles of wooden boxes and broken furniture. Axl could smell mould and stagnant water.

‘Take heart, friends,’ Father Brian said, no longer whispering. He had gone into a corner and was moving objects aside. ‘You’re nearly safe.’

‘Father,’ Axl said, ‘we’re grateful to you for this rescue, but please tell us what’s occurred.’

Father Brian continued clearing the corner, and did not look up as he said: ‘A mystery to us, sir. They came this night without invitation, pouring through the gates and through our home as if it were their own. They demanded the two young Saxons lately arrived here, and though they made no mention of you or your wife, I wouldn’t trust them to treat you gently. This boy here, they would clearly wish to murder, as they do even now his brother. You must save yourselves and there’ll be time later to ponder the soldiers’ ways.’

‘Master Wistan was a stranger to us only this morning,’ Beatrice said, ‘yet we’re uneasy making our escape while a terrible fate threatens him.’

‘The soldiers may yet come on our heels, mistress, for we left no barred doors behind us. And if that fellow bravely buys your escape, even with his own life, you must grasp it gratefully. Under this trapdoor is a tunnel dug in ancient times. It will take you underground into the forest, where you’ll emerge far from your pursuers. Now help me raise it, sir, for it’s too heavy for my hands alone.’

Even for the two of them, it took some effort to raise the door till it stood up at a steep angle before them, revealing a square of deeper blackness.

‘Let the boy go down first,’ the monk said, ‘for it’s years since any of us used this passage and who knows if the steps haven’t crumbled. He’s nimble-footed and could take a fall better.’

But Edwin was saying something to Beatrice, and she now said: ‘Master Edwin would go to Master Wistan’s aid.’

‘Tell him, princess, we might help Wistan yet by making our escape through this tunnel. Tell the boy what you must, but persuade him to come quickly.’

As Beatrice spoke to him, a change seemed to come over the boy. He kept staring at the hole in the floor, and his eyes, caught in the moonlight, seemed to Axl at that moment to have something strange about them, as though he were steadily coming under a spell. Then even as Beatrice was speaking, Edwin walked towards the trap-door and without looking back at them, stepped into the blackness and vanished. As his footsteps grew fainter, Axl took Beatrice's hand and said:

'Let's go too, princess. Stay close to me.'

The steps leading underground were shallow - flat stones sunk into earth - and felt solid enough. They could see something of the way ahead by the light from the open trap-door above them, but just as Axl turned to speak to Father Brian, the door closed with what seemed a thunderous crash.

They all three stopped and for a while remained quite still. The air did not feel as stale as Axl had expected; in fact he thought he could feel a faint breeze. Somewhere in front of them, Edwin started to speak, and Beatrice answered him in a whisper. Then she said softly:

'The boy asks why Father Brian closed the door on us as he did. I told him he was most likely anxious to hide the tunnel from the soldiers maybe even now entering the room. All the same, Axl, it struck me a little queer too. And isn't that him now, surely, moving objects over the door? If we find the way ahead obstructed by earth or water, the father himself saying it's years since anyone came this way, how will we return and open that door, the way it's so heavy and now with objects above it?'

'Queer right enough. But there's no doubting there's soldiers in the monastery, for didn't we see them ourselves just now? I don't see what choice we have but to go on and pray this tunnel brings us safely to the forest. Tell the boy to keep moving forward, but slowly and always a hand to this mossy wall, for I fear this passage will only grow darker.'

Yet as they went forward they found there was a feeble light, so that at times they could even make out each other's outlines. There were sudden puddles that surprised their feet, and more than once during this phase of their journey, Axl thought he heard a noise up ahead, but since neither Edwin nor Beatrice reacted he put it down to his overwrought imagination. But then Edwin suddenly halted, almost causing Axl to collide into him. He felt Beatrice behind him squeeze his hand, and for a moment they stood there very still in the dark. Then Beatrice moved even closer to him, and her breath felt warm on his neck as she said in the softest of whispers: 'Do you hear it, Axl?'

'Hear what, princess?'

Edwin's hand touched him warningly, and they were silent again. Eventually Beatrice said in his ear: 'There's something here with us, Axl.'

'Perhaps a bat, princess. Or a rat.'

'No, Axl. I hear it now. It's a man's breathing.'

Axl listened again. Then there came a sharp noise, a striking sound repeating three times, four times, just beyond where they were standing. There were bright flashes, then a tiny flame which grew momentarily to reveal the shape of a seated man, then all was darkness again.

'Fear not, friends,' a voice said. 'It's only Gawain, Arthur's knight. And as soon as this tinder lights we'll see each other better.'

There were more noises of flints, then eventually a candle flamed and began to burn steadily.

Sir Gawain was sitting on a dark mound. It evidently did not make an ideal seat for he was at an odd angle, like a giant doll about to topple. The candle in his hand illuminated his face and upper torso with wobbling shadows, and he was breathing heavily. As before, he was in tunic and armour; his sword, unsheathed, had been thrust at an angle into the ground near the foot of the mound. He stared at them balefully, moving the candle from one face to the next.

‘So you’re all here,’ he said finally. ‘I’m relieved.’

‘You surprise us, Sir Gawain,’ Axl said. ‘What do you mean by hiding yourself here?’

‘I’ve been down here a while and walking before you, friends. Yet with this sword and armour, and my great height which forces me to stumble and go with bowed head, I can’t walk quickly and now you discover me.’

‘You hardly explain yourself, sir. Why do you walk before us?’

‘To defend you, sir! The melancholy truth is the monks have deceived you. There’s a beast dwells down here and they mean you to perish by it. Happily, not every monk thinks alike. Ninian, the silent one, brought me down here unseen and I’ll guide you to safety yet.’

‘Your news overwhelms us, Sir Gawain,’ said Axl. ‘But first tell us of this beast you speak of. What is its nature and does it threaten us even as we stand here?’

‘Assume it does, sir. The monks wouldn’t have sent you down here if they didn’t mean you to meet the beast. It’s always their way. As men of Christ, it’s beyond them to use a sword or even poison. So they send down here those they wish dead, and in a day or two they’ll have forgotten they ever did so. Oh yes, that’s their way, especially the abbot’s. By Sunday he may even have convinced himself he saved you from those soldiers. And the work of whatever prowls this tunnel, should it cross his mind, he’ll disown, or even call God’s will. Well, let’s see what God wills tonight now a knight of Arthur walks before you!’

‘You’re saying, Sir Gawain,’ Beatrice asked, ‘the monks wish us dead?’

‘They certainly wish this boy dead, mistress. I tried to make them see it wasn’t necessary, even made a solemn promise to take him far away from this country, but no, they don’t listen to me! They won’t risk this boy loose, even with Master Wistan captured or killed, for who’s to say there won’t come some other fellow one day to find this boy. I’ll take him far away, I said, but they fear what may happen and wish him dead. You and your good husband they might have spared but that you’d inevitably be witnesses to their deeds. Had I seen all this in advance, would I have travelled here to this monastery? Who knows? It seemed my duty then, did it not? But their plans for the boy, and for an innocent Christian couple, I could not allow it! Luckily not all the monks think alike, you know, and Ninian, the silent one, led me down here unwatched. It was my intention to go before you much further, but this armour and my stumbling height – how many times over the years have I cursed this height! What advantage does it bring a man to be so tall? For every high-dangling pear I reached there’s been an arrow threatened me would have flown over a smaller man!’

‘Sir Gawain,’ Axl said, ‘what kind of beast is it, this one you say dwells down here?’

‘I never saw it, sir, only know those the monks send this way perish by it.’

‘Is it one can be killed by an ordinary sword held by a mortal man?’

‘What do you say, sir? I’m a mortal man, I don’t deny it, but I’m a knight well trained and nurtured for long years of my youth by the great Arthur, who taught me to face all manner of challenge with gladness, even when fear seeps to the marrow, for if we’re mortal let us at least shine handsomely in God’s eyes while we walk this earth! Like all who stood with Arthur, sir, I’ve faced beelzebubs and monsters as well as the darkest intents of men, and always upheld my great king's example even in the midst of ferocious conflict. What is it you suggest, sir? How dare you? Were you there? I was there, sir, and saw all with these same eyes that fix you now! But what of it, what of it, friends, this is a discussion for some other time. Forgive me, we have other matters to attend to, of course we have. What is it you asked, sir? Ah yes, this beast, yes, I understand it's monstrous fierce but no demon or spirit and this sword is good enough to slay it.'

'But Sir Gawain,' Beatrice said, 'do you really propose we walk further down this tunnel knowing what we now do?'

'What choice have we, mistress? If I'm not mistaken, the way back to the monastery is locked to us, and yet that same door may open any time to pour forth soldiers into this tunnel. There's nothing for it but to go on, and but for this one beast in our way, we may soon find ourselves in the forest far from your pursuers, for Ninian assures me this is a true tunnel and well maintained. So let's be on our way before this candle burns down, it's the only one I have.'

'Do we trust him, Axl?' Beatrice asked, making no effort to prevent Sir Gawain hearing. 'My mind's giddy now and loath to believe our kind Father Brian's betrayed us. Yet what this knight says has the ring of truth to it.'

'Let's follow him, princess. Sir Gawain, we thank you for your trouble. Please lead us now to safety, and let's hope this beast's dozing or gone prowling the night.'

'I fear we have no such luck. But come, friends, we'll go with courage.' The old knight rose slowly to his feet, then held out the candle at arm's length. 'Master Axl, perhaps you'll carry for us this flame, for I'll need both my hands to keep my sword at the ready.'

They went on into the tunnel, Sir Gawain leading, Axl following with the flame, Beatrice holding his arm from behind, and Edwin now at the rear. There was no option but to go in single file, the passage remaining narrow, and the ceiling of dangling moss and sinewy roots grew lower and lower until even Beatrice had to stoop. Axl did his best to hold the candle high, but the breeze in the tunnel was now stronger, and he was often obliged to lower it and cover the flame with his other hand. Sir Gawain though never complained, and his shape going before them, sword raised over his shoulder, seemed never to vary. Then Beatrice let out an exclamation and tugged Axl's arm.

‘What is it, princess?’

‘Oh, Axl, stop! My foot touched something then, but your candle moved too quickly.’

‘What of it, princess? We have to move on.’

‘Axl, I thought it a child! My foot touched it and I saw it before your light passed. Oh, I believe it's a small child long dead!’

‘There, princess, don't distress yourself. Where was it you saw it?’

‘Come, come, friends,’ Sir Gawain said from the dark. ‘Many things in this place are best left unseen.’

Beatrice seemed not to hear the knight. ‘It was over here, Axl. Bring the flame this way. Down there, Axl, shine it down there, though I dread to see its poor face again!’

Despite his counsel, Sir Gawain had doubled back, and Edwin too was now at Beatrice's side. Axl crouched forward and moved the candle here and there, revealing damp earth, tree roots and stones. Then the flame illuminated a large bat lying on its back as though peacefully asleep, wings stretched right out. Its fur looked wet and sticky. The pig-like face was hairless, and little puddles had formed in the cavities of the outspread wings. The creature might indeed have been sleeping but for what was on the front of its torso. As Axl brought the flame even closer, they all stared at the circular hole extending from just below the bat's breast down to its belly, taking in parts of the ribcage to either side. The wound was peculiarly clean, as though someone had taken a bite from a crisp apple.

'What could have done work like this?' Axl asked.

He must have moved the candle too swiftly, for at that moment the flame guttered and went out.

'Don't worry, friends,' Sir Gawain said. 'I'll find my tinder again.'

'Didn't I tell you, Axl?' Beatrice sounded close to tears. 'I knew it was a baby the moment my foot touched it.'

'What are you saying, princess? It's not a baby. What are you saying?'

'What could have happened to the poor child? And what of its parents?'

'Princess, it's simply a bat, the like of which often haunts dark places.'

'Oh Axl, it was a baby, I'm sure of it!'

'I'm sorry this flame's out, princess, or I'd show you again. A bat it is, nothing more, yet myself I'd look again at what it lies on. Sir Gawain, did you notice the creature's bed?'

'I don't know what you mean, sir.'

'It seemed to me the creature lay on a bed of bones, for I thought I saw a skull or two that could only have belonged to men.'

'What do you suggest, sir?' Sir Gawain's voice became carelessly loud. 'What skulls? I saw no skulls, sir! Only a bat fallen on misfortune! ’

Beatrice was now sobbing quietly, and Axl straightened to embrace her.

‘It was no child, princess,’ he said more gently. ‘Don’t upset yourself.’

‘Such a lonely death. Where were its parents, Axl?’

‘What are you suggesting, sir? Skulls? I saw no skulls! And what if there are a few old bones here? What of it, is that anything extraordinary? Aren’t we underground? But I saw no bed of bones, I don’t know what you suggest, Master Axl. Were you there, sir? Did you stand beside the great Arthur? I’m proud to say I did, sir, and he was a commander as merciful as he was gallant. Yes, indeed, it was I who came to the abbot to warn of Master Wistan’s identity and intentions, what choice had I? Was I to guess how dark the hearts of holy men could turn? Your suggestions are unwarranted, sir! An insult to all who ever stood alongside the great Arthur! There are no beds of bones here! And am I not here now to save you?’

‘Sir Gawain, your voice booms too much and who knows where the soldiers are this moment.’

‘What could I do, sir, knowing what I did? Yes, I rode here and spoke to the abbot, yet how was I to know the darkness of that man’s heart? And the better men, poor Jonus, his liver pecked and his days not long, while that abbot lives on with barely a scratch from those birds ...’

Sir Gawain broke off, interrupted by a noise from further down the tunnel. It was hard to determine how distant or near it had been, but the sound was unmistakably the cry of a beast; it had resembled the howl of a wolf, though there had also been something of the deeper roar of a bear. The cry had not been prolonged, but it made Axl clasp Beatrice to him, and Sir Gawain snatched his sword from out of the ground. Then, for several moments, they remained standing in silence, listening for the sound to return. But nothing further came, and suddenly Sir Gawain began to laugh, quietly and breathlessly. As his laughter went on, Beatrice said into Axl's ear: 'Let's leave this place, husband. I wish no more reminding of this lonely grave.'

Sir Gawain stopped laughing and said: 'Perhaps we heard then the beast, but we have no choice but to go on. So, friends, let's finish our quarrel. We'll light the candle again before long, but let's go a little way now without it in case it hastens the beast our way. See, here's a pale light and enough to walk by. Come, friends, no more of this quarrel. My sword's ready and let's continue.'

The tunnel became more tortuous, and they moved with greater caution, fearing what each turn would reveal. But they encountered nothing, nor heard the cry again. Then the tunnel descended steeply for a good distance before coming out into a large underground chamber.

They all paused to recover their breaths and look around at their new surroundings. After the long walk with the earth brushing their heads, it was a relief to see the ceiling not only so high above them, but composed of more solid material. Once Sir Gawain had lit the candle again, Axl realised they were in some sort of mausoleum, surrounded by walls bearing traces of murals and Roman letters. Before them a pair of substantial pillars formed a gateway into a further chamber of comparable proportions, and falling across this threshold was an intense pool of moonlight. Its source was not obvious: perhaps somewhere behind the high arch crossing the two pillars there was an opening which at that moment, by sheer chance, was aligned to receive the moon. The light illuminated much of the moss and fungus on the pillars, as well as a section of the next chamber, whose floor appeared to be covered in rubble, but which Axl soon realised was comprised of a vast layer of bones. Only then did it occur to him that under his feet were more broken skeletons, and that this strange floor extended for the entirety of both chambers.

‘This must be some ancient burial place,’ he said aloud. ‘Yet there are so many buried here.’

‘A burial place,’ Sir Gawain muttered. ‘Yes, a burial place.’ He had been moving slowly around the chamber, sword in one hand, candle in the other. Now he went towards the arch, but stopped short of the second chamber, as if suddenly daunted by the brilliant moonlight. He thrust his sword into the ground, and Axl watched his silhouette leaning on his weapon, moving the candle up and down with a weary air.

‘We need not quarrel, Master Axl. Here are the skulls of men, I won’t deny it. There an arm, there a leg, but just bones now. An old burial ground. And so it may be. I dare say, sir, our whole country is this way. A fine green valley. A pleasant copse in the springtime. Dig its soil, and not far beneath the daisies and buttercups come the dead. And I don’t talk, sir, only of those who received Christian burial. Beneath our soil lie the remains of old slaughter. Horace and I, we’ve grown weary of it. Weary and we no longer young.’

‘Sir Gawain,’ Axl said, ‘we have but one sword between us. I ask you not to grow melancholic, nor forget the beast is near.’

‘I don’t forget the beast, sir. I merely consider this gateway before us. Look up there, you see it?’ Sir Gawain was holding up the candle to reveal along the lower edge of the arch what appeared to be a row of spearheads pointing down to the ground.

‘A portcullis,’ Axl said.

‘Exactly, sir. This gate isn’t so ancient. Younger than either of us, I’d wager. Someone has raised it for us, wishing us to pass through. See there, the ropes that hold it. And there, the pulleys. Someone comes here often to make this gate rise and fall, and perhaps feed the beast.’ Sir

Gawain stepped towards one of the pillars, his feet crunching over bones. 'If I cut this rope, the gate will surely come down, it will bar our way out. Yet if the beast's beyond, we'll be shielded from it. Is that the Saxon boy I hear or some pixie stolen in here?'

Indeed Edwin, back in the shadows, had started to sing; faintly at first so that Axl had thought the boy was simply soothing his nerves, but then his voice had become steadily more conspicuous. His song seemed to be a slow lullaby, and he was rendering it with his face to the wall, his body rocking gently.

'The boy behaves as one bewitched,' Sir Gawain said.

'Never mind him, we must now decide, Master Axl. Do we walk on? Or do we cut this rope to give us at least a moment shielded from what lies beyond?'

'I say we cut the rope, sir. We can surely raise the gate again when we wish. Let's first discover what we face while the gate's down.'

'Wise counsel, sir. I'll do as you say.'

Handing Axl the candle, Sir Gawain took a further step forward, raised his sword and swung at the pillar. There was the sound of metal striking stone, and the lower section of the gate shook, but remained suspended. Sir Gawain sighed with a hint of embarrassment. Then he repositioned himself, raised the sword again, and struck once more.

This time there was a snapping sound, and the gate crashed down raising a cloud of dust in the moonlight. The noise felt immense - Edwin abruptly stopped his singing - and Axl stared through the iron grid now fallen before them to see what it would summon. But there was no sign of the beast, and after a moment they all let go their breaths.

For all that they were now effectively trapped, the lowering of the portcullis brought a sense of relief, and they all four began to wander around the mausoleum. Sir

Gawain, who had sheathed his sword, went up to the bars and touched them gingerly.

‘Good iron,’ he said. ‘It’ll do its work.’

Beatrice, who had been quiet for some time, came up to Axl and pressed her head against his chest. As he put an arm around her, he realised her cheek was wet with tears.

‘Come, princess,’ he said, ‘take heart. We’ll be out in the night air before long.’

‘All these skulls, Axl. So many! Can this beast really have killed so many?’

She had spoken softly, but Sir Gawain turned to them.

‘I hardly know how to answer you, mistress. I acted as I thought would please God. How was I to guess how dark had grown the hearts of these wretched monks? Horace and I came to this monastery while the sun was up, not long after you yourself arrived, for I supposed then I had need to speak urgently with the abbot. Then I discovered what he plotted against you, and I feigned complacence. I bade him farewell, and they all believed me gone, but I left Horace in the forest and returned up here on foot hidden by the night. Not all the monks think alike, thank God. I knew the good Jonus would receive me. And learning from him the abbot’s schemes, I had Ninian bring me unseen down to this place to await you. Curse it, the boy starts again!’

Sure enough, Edwin was singing once more, not as loudly as before, but now in a curious posture. He had bent forward, a fist to each temple, and was moving slowly about in the shadows like someone in a dance enacting the part of an animal.

‘The recent events surely overwhelm him,’ Axl said.

‘It’s a wonder he’s shown the fortitude he has, and we must attend to him well once we’re away from here. But Sir Gawain, tell us now, why do the monks seek to murder such an innocent lad?’

‘No matter how I argued, sir, the abbot would have the boy destroyed. So I left Horace in the forest and retraced my steps ...’

‘Sir Gawain, please explain. Has this to do with his ogre’s wound? Yet these are men of Christian learning.’

‘That’s no ogre’s bite the boy carries. It’s a dragon gave him that wound. I saw it right away when yesterday that soldier raised his shirt. Who knows how he met with a dragon, but a dragon’s bite it is, and now the desire will be rising in his blood to seek congress with a she-dragon. And in turn, any she-dragon near enough to scent him will come seeking him. This is why Master Wistan is so fond of his protégé, sir. He believes Master Edwin will lead him to Querig. And for this same reason, the monks and these soldiers would have him dead. Look, the boy grows ever wilder!’

‘What are all these skulls, sir?’ Beatrice suddenly asked the knight. ‘Why so many? Can they all have belonged to babies? Some are surely small enough to fit in your palm.’

‘Princess, don’t distress yourself. This is a burial place, nothing more.’

‘What is it you suggest, mistress? The skulls of babes? I’ve fought men, beelzebubs, dragons. But a slaughterer of infants? How dare you, mistress!’

Suddenly Edwin, still singing, pushed past them, and going up to the portcullis pressed himself against the bars.

‘Get back, boy,’ Sir Gawain said, grasping his shoulders. ‘There’s danger here, and that’s enough of your songs!’

Edwin gripped the bars with both hands, and for a moment he and the old knight tussled. Then they both broke off and stepped back from the gate. Beatrice, at Axl’s breast, let out a small gasp, but at that instant Axl’s view was obscured by Edwin and Sir Gawain. Then the beast came into the pool of moonlight, and he saw it more clearly.

‘God protect us,’ Beatrice said. ‘Here’s a creature escaped from the Great Plain itself, and the air grows colder.’

‘Don’t worry, princess. It can’t breach those bars.’

Sir Gawain, who had immediately drawn his sword again, began to laugh quietly. ‘Not nearly as bad as I feared,’ he said, then laughed a little more.

‘Surely bad enough, sir,’ Axl said. ‘It looks well able to devour each of us in turn.’

They might have been gazing at a large skinned animal: an opaque membrane, like the lining of a sheep’s stomach, was stretched tightly over the sinews and joints. Swathed as it was now in moonshadow, the beast appeared roughly the size and shape of a bull, but its head was distinctly wolf-like and of a darker hue – though even here the impression was of blackening by flames rather than of naturally dark fur or flesh. The jaws were massive, the eyes reptilian.

Sir Gawain was still laughing to himself. ‘Coming down that gloomy tunnel my wild imaginings had readied me for worse. Once, sir, on the marshes at Dumum, I faced wolves with the heads of hideous hags! And at Mount Culwich, double-headed ogres that spewed blood at you even as they roared their battle-cry! Here's little more than an angry dog.'

'Yet it bars our way to freedom, Sir Gawain.'

'It does that for sure. So we may stare at it for an hour until the soldiers come down the tunnel behind us. Or we may lift this gate and fight it.'

'I'm inclined to think it a foe darker than a fierce dog, Sir Gawain. I ask you not to grow complacent.'

'I'm an old man, sir, and it's many a year since I swung this blade in anger. Yet I'm still a knight well trained, and if this be a beast of this earth, I'll get the better of it.'

'See, Axl,' Beatrice said, 'how its eyes follow Master Edwin.'

Edwin, now strangely calm, had been walking experimentally, first left, then to the right, always staring back at the beast whose gaze never left him.

'The dog hungers for the boy,' Sir Gawain said thoughtfully. 'It may be there's dragon spawn within this monster.'

'Whatever its nature,' Axl said, 'it awaits our next move with strange patience.'

'Then let me propose this, friends,' said Sir Gawain.

'I'm loath to use this Saxon boy like a young goat tied to trap a wolf. Yet he seems a brave lad, and in no less danger wandering here weapon-less. Let him take the candle and go stand there at the back of the chamber. Then if you, Master Axl, can somehow raise this gate again, perhaps even with your good wife's help, the beast will be free to come through. My fancy is it will make straight for the boy. Knowing the path of its charge, I'll stand here and cut it down as it passes. Do you approve the scheme, sir?'

‘It’s a desperate one. Yet I too fear the soldiers will soon discover this tunnel. So let’s try it, sir, and even with my wife and I hanging together on the rope, we’ll do our best to raise this gate. Princess, explain to Master Edwin our plan and let’s see if he’ll enter into it.’

But Edwin seemed to have grasped Sir Gawain’s strategy without a word being said to him. Taking the candle from the knight, the boy measured out ten good strides over the bones till he was back in the shadows. When he turned again, the candle below his face barely trembled, and revealed blazing eyes fixed on the creature beyond the bars.

‘Quick then, princess,’ Axl said. ‘Climb on my back and try to reach the rope’s end. See where it dangles there.’

At first they nearly toppled over. Then they used the pillar itself to support them, and after a little more groping, he heard her say: ‘I hold it, Axl. Release me and it’ll surely come down with me. Catch me so I don’t fall all at once.’

‘Sir Gawain,’ Axl called softly. ‘Are you ready, sir?’

‘We’re ready.’

‘If the beast passes you, then surely it’s the end of this brave boy.’

‘I know it, sir. And it will not pass.’

‘Let me down slowly, Axl. If I’m still in the air holding the rope, reach up and tug me down.’

Axl released Beatrice and for an instant she hung suspended in the air, her body weight insufficient to raise the gate. Then Axl managed to grip another portion of the rope close to her two hands, and they tugged together. At first nothing happened, then something yielded, and the gate rose with a shudder. Axl continued tugging, and unable to see the effect, called out: 'Is it high yet, sir?'

There was a pause before Sir Gawain's voice came back. 'The dog stares our way and nothing now between us.'

Twisting, Axl looked around the pillar in time to see the beast leap forward. The old knight's face, caught in moonlight, looked aghast as he swung his sword, but too late, and the creature was past him and moving unerringly towards Edwin.

The boy's eyes grew large, but he did not drop the candle. Instead he moved aside, almost as if out of politeness, to let the beast pass. And to Axl's surprise, the creature did just that, running on into the blackness of the tunnel out of which not long ago they had all emerged.

'I'll hold it up yet,' Axl shouted. 'Cross the threshold and save yourselves!'

But neither Beatrice beside him, nor Sir Gawain, who had lowered his sword, seemed to hear. Even Edwin appeared to have lost interest in the terrible creature that had just sped past him and would surely return any moment. The boy, candle held before him, came over to where the old knight was standing, and together they stared down at the ground.

'Let the gate fall, Master Axl,' Sir Gawain said without looking up. 'We'll raise it again soon enough.'

The old knight and the boy, Axl realised, were regarding with fascination something moving on the ground before them. He let the gate fall, and as he did so, Beatrice said:

'A fearsome thing, Axl, and I've no need to see it. But go and look if you will and tell me what you see.'

'Didn't the beast run into the tunnel, princess?'

'Some of it did, and I heard its footsteps cease. Now, Axl, go and see the part of it lies at the knight's feet.'

As Axl came towards them, Sir Gawain and Edwin both started as though shaken from a trance. Then they moved aside and Axl saw the beast's head in the moonlight.

'The jaws will not cease,' Sir Gawain said in a perturbed tone. 'I've a mind to take my sword to it again, yet fear that would be a desecration to bring more evil upon us. Yet I wish it would cease moving.'

Indeed it was hard to believe the severed head was not a living thing. It lay on its side, the one visible eye gleaming like a sea creature. The jaws moved rhythmically with a strange energy, so that the tongue, flopping amidst the teeth, appeared to stir with life.

'We're beholden to you, Sir Gawain,' Axl said.

'A mere dog, sir, and I'd happily face worse. Yet this Saxon boy shows rare courage, and I'm glad to have done him some service. But now we must hurry on, and with caution too, for who knows what occurs above us, or even if a second beast awaits beyond that chamber.'

They now discovered a crank behind one of the pillars, and fastening the rope end to it, soon raised the gate without difficulty. Leaving the beast's head where it had fallen, they passed under the portcullis, Sir Gawain once more leading, sword poised, and Edwin at the rear.

The second chamber of the mausoleum showed clear signs of having served as the beast's lair: amidst the ancient bones were fresher carcasses of sheep and deer, as well as other dark, foulsmelling shapes they could not identify. Then they were once more walking stooped and short of breath along a winding passage. They encountered no more beasts, and eventually they heard birdsong. A patch of light appeared in the distance, and then they came out into the forest, the early dawn all around them.

In a kind of daze, Axl came upon a cluster of roots rising between two large trees, and taking Beatrice's hand, helped her sit down on it. At first Beatrice was too short of breath to speak, but after a moment she looked up, saying:

‘There’s room here beside me, husband. If we’re safe for now, let’s sit together and watch the stars fade. I’m thankful we’re both well and that evil tunnel’s behind us.’ Then she said: ‘Where’s Master Edwin, Axl? I don’t see him.’

Looking about him in the half-light, Axl spotted Sir Gawain’s figure nearby, silhouetted against the dawn, head bowed, a hand on a tree trunk to steady him while he regained his breath. But there was no sign of the boy.

‘Just now he was behind us,’ Axl said. ‘I even heard him exclaim as we came into the fresh air.’

‘I watched him hasten on, sir,’ Sir Gawain said without turning, his breath still laboured. ‘Not being elderly as the rest of us, he’s no need to lean on oaks panting and gasping. I suppose he hurries back to the monastery to rescue Master Wistan.’

‘Didn’t you think to delay him, sir? Surely he hurries to grave danger, and Master Wistan by now killed or captured.’

‘What would you have me do, sir? I did all I could. Hid myself in that airless place. Overcame the beast though it had devoured many brave men before us. Then at the end of it all, the boy runs back to the monastery! Am I to give chase with this heavy armour and sword? I’m all done in, sir. All done in. What’s my duty now? I must pause and think it over. What would Arthur have me do?’

‘Are we to understand, Sir Gawain,’ Beatrice asked, ‘that it was you in the first place came to tell the abbot of Master Wistan’s real identity as a Saxon warrior from the east?’

‘Why go through it again, mistress? Did I not lead you to safety? So many skulls we trod upon before coming out to this sweet dawn! So many. No need to look down, one hears their cackle with each tread. How many dead, sir? A hundred? A thousand? Did you count, Master Axl? Or were you not there, sir?’ He was still a silhouette beside a tree, his words sometimes hard to catch now the birds had begun their early chorus.

‘Whatever the history of this night,’ Axl said, ‘we owe you much thanks, Sir Gawain. Clearly your courage and skill remain undiminished. Yet I too have a question to put to you.’

‘Spare me, sir, enough. How can I chase a nimble youth up these wooded slopes? I’m drained, sir, and perhaps not just of breath.’

‘Sir Gawain, were we not comrades once long ago?’

‘Spare me, sir. I did my duty tonight. Is that not enough? Now I must go find my poor Horace, tied to a branch so he wouldn’t wander, yet what if a wolf or bear comes upon him?’

‘The mist hangs heavily across my past,’ Axl said.

‘Yet lately I find myself reminded of some task, and one of gravity, with which I was once entrusted. Was it a law, a great law to bring all men closer to God? Your presence, and your talk of Arthur, stirs long-faded thoughts, Sir Gawain.’

‘My poor Horace, sir, so dislikes the forest at night. The hooting owl or the screech of a fox is enough to frighten him, no matter he’ll face a shower of arrows without flinching. I’ll go to him now, and let me urge you good people not to rest here too late. Forget the young Saxons, the pair of them. Think now of your own cherished son waiting for you at his village. Best go on your way quickly, I say, now you’re without your blankets and provisions. The river’s near and a fast tide on it flowing east. A friendly word with a bargeman may secure you a ride downstream. But don't dally here, for who knows when soldiers will come this way? God protect you, friends.'

With a rustle and a few thumps, Sir Gawain's form disappeared into the dark foliage. After a moment, Beatrice said:

'We didn't bid him farewell, Axl, and I feel poorly for it. Yet that was a strange leave he took of us and a sudden one.'

'I thought so too, princess. But perhaps he gives us wise counsel. We should hurry on to our son and never mind our recent companions. I feel concern for poor Master Edwin, yet if he'll hasten back to the monastery, what can we do for him?'

'Let's rest just a moment longer, Axl. Soon we'll be on our way, the two of us, and we'd do well to seek a barge to speed our journey. Our son must be wondering what keeps us.'

Chapter Eight

The young monk was a thin, sickly-looking Pict who spoke Edwin's language well. No doubt he had been delighted to have in his company someone nearer his own age, and for the first part of the journey down through the dawn mists, he had talked with relish. But since entering the trees, the young monk had fallen silent and Edwin now wondered if he had in some way offended his guide. More likely the monk was simply anxious not to attract the attention of whatever lurked in these woods; amidst the pleasant birdsong, there had been some strange hissings and murmurs. When Edwin had asked once again, more from a wish to break the silence than for reassurance, 'So my brother's wounds seemed not to be mortal?' the reply had been almost curt.

'Father Jonus says not. There's none wiser.'

Wistan, then, could not be so badly hurt. Indeed, he must have managed this same journey down the hill not long ago, and while it was still dark. Had he had to lean heavily on the arm of his guide? Or had he managed to go mounted on his mare, perhaps with a monk holding steady the bridle?

'Show this boy down to the cooper's cottage. And take care no one sees you leave the monastery.' Such, according to the young monk, had been Father Jonus's instruction to him. So Edwin would soon be reunited with the warrior, but what sort of welcome could he expect? He had let Wistan down at the first challenge. Instead of hurrying to his side at the first sign of battle, Edwin had run off into the long tunnel. But his mother had not been down there, and only when the tunnel's end had finally appeared, distant and moon-like in the blackness, had he felt lifting from him the heavy clouds of dream and realised with horror what had occurred.

At least he had done his utmost once he had emerged into the chilly morning air. He had run almost the whole way back up to the monastery, slowing only for the steepest slopes. Sometimes, pushing through the woods, he had felt himself lost, but then the trees had thinned and the monastery had appeared against the pale sky. So he had gone on climbing and arrived at the big gate, breathless and with his legs aching.

The small door beside the main gate was unlocked, and he had managed to collect himself sufficiently to enter the grounds with stealthy care. He had been aware of smoke for the latter part of his climb, but now it tickled his chest, making it hard not to cough loudly. He knew then for sure it was too late to move the hay wagon, and felt a great emptiness opening within him. But he had pushed the feeling aside for another moment, and pressed on into the grounds.

For some time he came across neither monk nor soldier. But as he moved along the high wall, ducking his head so as not to be spotted from some far-off window, he had seen below the soldiers' horses crowded together in the small yard inside the main gate. Bound on all sides by high walls, the animals, still saddled, were circling nervously, even though there was scarcely space to do so without colliding. Then as he came towards the monks' quarters, where another of his age might well have rushed on to the central courtyard, he had had the presence of mind to recall the geography of the grounds and proceed by a roundabout route, utilising what he remembered of the back ways. Even on reaching his destination, he had placed himself behind a stone pillar and peered round cautiously.

The central courtyard was barely recognisable. Three robed figures were sweeping wearily, and as he watched, a fourth arrived with a pail and tossed water across the cobbles, setting to flight several lurking crows. The ground was strewn in places with straw and with sand, and his eyes were drawn to the several shapes covered over with sackcloth, which he supposed to be corpses. The old stone tower, where he knew Wistan had held out, loomed over the scene, but this too had changed: it was charred and blackened in many places, especially around its arched entry-way and each of its narrow windows. To Edwin's eyes the tower as a whole appeared to have shrunk. He had been craning his neck around the pillar to ascertain if the pools surrounding the covered shapes were of blood or of water, when the bony hands had grasped his shoulders from behind.

He had twisted around to find Father Ninian, the silent monk, staring into his eyes. Edwin had not cried out, but had said, in a low voice, pointing towards the bodies: 'Master Wistan, my Saxon brother. Does he lie there?'

The silent monk appeared to understand, and shook his head emphatically. But even as he raised a finger to his lips in the familiar manner, he had stared warningly into Edwin's face. Then, glancing furtively around him, Ninian had tugged Edwin away from the courtyard.

'Can we be certain, warrior,' he had asked Wistan the day before, 'the soldiers will really come? Who'll tell them we're here? Surely these monks believe us but simple shepherds.'

'Who knows, boy. Perhaps we'll be left in peace. But there's one I fancy may betray our presence here, and even now the good Brennus may be issuing his orders. Test it well, young comrade. Britons have a way of dividing a bale from within with wooden slats. We need it pure hay all the way down.'

He and Wistan had been in the barn behind the old tower. Having for the moment done with woodcutting, the warrior had been seized by the urge to load the rickety wagon high with the hay stored at the back of the shed. As they had set about this task, Edwin had been required at regular intervals to clamber up onto the bales and prod into them with a stick. The warrior, observing carefully from the ground, would sometimes make him go over a section again, or order him to thrust a leg as far down as possible into a particular spot.

‘These holy men are just the sort to get absent-minded,’ Wistan had said by way of explanation. ‘They may have left a spade or pitchfork in the hay. If so, it would be a service to retrieve it for them, tools being scarce up here.’

Although at that point the warrior had given no hint as to the purpose of the hay, Edwin had known straight away it had to do with the confrontation ahead, and that was why, as the bales had piled up, he had asked his question about the soldiers.

‘Who’ll betray us, warrior? The monks don’t suspect us. They’re so concerned with their holy quarrels, they hardly glance our way.’

‘Maybe so, boy. But test there too. Just there.’

‘Can it be, warrior, it’s the old couple will betray us? Surely they’re too foolish and honest.’

‘They may be Britons, but I don’t fear their treachery. Yet you’d be wrong to suppose them foolish, boy. Master Axl, for one, is a deep fellow.’

‘Warrior, why do we travel with them? They slow us at every turn.’

‘They slow us, right enough, and we’ll part ways soon. Yet this morning as we set off, I felt eager for Master Axl’s company. And I may wish for more of it yet. As I say, he’s a deep one. He and I may have a little more to discuss. But just now let’s concentrate on what faces us here. We must load this wagon in a sure and steady way. We need pure hay. No wood or iron there. See how I depend on you, boy.’

But Edwin had let him down. How could he have gone on sleeping for so long? It had been a mistake to lie down at all. He should simply have sat upright in the corner, napping a few winks the way he had seen Wistan do, ready at the first noise to start to his feet. Instead, like an infant, he had accepted from the old woman a cup of milk, and fallen into a deep sleep in his corner of the chamber.

Had his real mother called him in his dreams? Perhaps that was why he had remained asleep for so long. And why, when he had been shaken awake by the crippled monk, instead of rushing to the warrior's side, he had followed after the others down into the long, strange tunnel, for all the world as if he were still in the depths of dreaming.

It had been his mother's voice without doubt, the same voice that had called to him in the barn. 'Find the strength for me, Edwin. Find the strength and come rescue me. Come rescue me. Come rescue me.' There had been an urgency there he had not heard the previous morning. And there had been more: as he had stood at that open trap-door, staring down at the steps leading into the darkness, he had felt something pull at him with such force he had become giddy, almost sick.

The young monk was holding back blackthorn with a stick, waiting for Edwin to go ahead of him. Now at last he spoke, though in a hushed voice.

'A short cut. We'll soon see the roof of the cooper's cottage.'

As they came out of the woods to where the land swept down into the receding mist, Edwin could still hear movement and hissing in the nearby bracken. And he thought of the sunny evening towards the end of summer, when he had talked with the girl.

He had not at first seen the pond that day, for it had been small and well hidden by rushes. A cloud of brightly coloured insects had flown up before him, an event normally to draw his attention, but on this occasion he had been too preoccupied by the noise coming from the water's edge. An animal in a trap? There it was again, behind the birdsong and the wind. The noise followed a pattern: an intense burst of rustling, as of a struggle, then silence. Then soon, more rustling. Approaching cautiously, he had heard laboured breathing. Then the girl had been before him.

She was lying on her back in the rough grass, her torso twisted to one side. She was a few years older than him - fifteen or sixteen - and her eyes were fixed on him without fear. It took a while to realise her odd posture had to do with her hands being tied under her body. The flattened grass around her marked the area where, by pushing with her legs, she had been sliding about in her struggles. Her cloth smock, tied at the waist, was discoloured - perhaps soaked - all along one side, and both her legs, unusually dark-skinned, bore fresh scratches from the thistles.

It occurred to him she was an apparition or a sprite, but when she spoke her voice had no echo to it.

‘What do you want? Why have you come?’

Recovering himself, Edwin said: ‘If you like, I could help you.’

‘These knots aren’t difficult. They just tied me more tightly than usual.’

Only now did he notice her face and neck were covered in perspiration. Even as she spoke, her hands, under her back, were busily struggling.

‘Are you hurt?’ he asked.

‘Not hurt. But a beetle landed on my knee just now. It clung on and bit me. There’ll be a swelling now. I can see you’re still too much of a child to help me. It doesn’t matter, I’ll manage myself.’

Her gaze remained fixed on him, even as her face tightened and she twisted and raised her torso a little way off the ground. He watched, transfixed, expecting at any moment to see the hands come out from under her. But she sagged down defeated and lay in the grass, breathing hard and staring angrily at him.

‘I could help,’ Edwin said. ‘I’m good with knots.’

‘You’re just a child.’

‘I’m not. I’m nearly twelve.’

‘They’ll come back soon. If they find you’ve untied me, they’ll beat you.’

‘Are they grown-ups?’

‘They think they are, but they’re just boys. Older than you though and there’s three of them. They’d like nothing better than to beat you. They’ll force your head into that muddy water until you pass out. I’ve watched them do it before.’

‘Are they from the village?’

‘The village?’ She looked at him with contempt. ‘Your village? We pass village after village every day. What do we care about your village? They may come back soon, then you’ll be in trouble.’

‘I’m not afraid. I could free you if you like.’

‘I always free myself.’ She twisted again.

‘Why did they tie you?’

‘Why? I suppose so they could watch. Watch me try to get free. But they’re gone now, to steal food.’ Then she said:

‘I thought you villagers worked all day. Why does your mother let you wander?’

‘I’m allowed because I finished three corners by myself already today.’ Then he added: ‘My real mother’s not in the village any more.’

‘Where’s she gone?’

‘I don’t know. She was taken. I live with my aunt now.’

‘When I was a child like you,’ she said, ‘I lived in a village. Now I travel.’

‘Who do you travel with?’

‘Oh ... with them. We pass this way quite often. I remember them tying me and leaving me here once before, this very spot, last spring.’

‘I’ll release you,’ he said suddenly. ‘And if they come back, I won’t be frightened of them.’

Yet something still held him back. He had expected her eyes to shift away, or her body at least to accommodate the prospect of his approach. But she had gone on staring at him, while under her arched back her hands continued their struggle. Only when she let out a long sigh did he realise she had been holding her breath for some time.

‘I can usually do it,’ she said. ‘If you weren’t here, I’d have done it by now.’

‘Do they tie you to stop you running away?’

‘Run away? Where would I run away? I travel with them.’ Then she said: ‘Why did you come to me? Why don’t you go help your mother instead?’

‘My mother?’ He was genuinely surprised. ‘Why should my mother want me to help her?’

‘You said she was taken, didn’t you?’

‘Yes, but that was long ago. She’s happy now.’

‘How can she be happy? Don’t you think she wants someone to come and help her?’

‘She’s just travelling. She wouldn’t want me to ...’

‘She didn’t want you to come before because you were a child. But you’re nearly a man now.’ She fell silent, arching her back as she made another concerted effort. Then she sagged back down again. ‘Sometimes,’ she said, ‘if they come back and I haven't got myself free, they don't untie me. They watch and don't say a word until I manage by myself and my hands come loose. Until then they sit there watching and watching, their devil's horns growing between their legs. I'd mind it less if they spoke. But they stare and stare and don't say anything.' Then she said: 'When I saw you, I thought you'd do the same. I thought you'd sit and stare and not say a thing.'

'Shall I untie you? I'm not afraid of them, and I'm good with knots.'

'You're only a child.' Suddenly tears appeared. It happened so quickly, and because her face showed no other sign of emotion, Edwin thought at first he was watching perspiration. But then he realised they were tears, and because her face was half-upturned, the tears rolled oddly, past the bridge of her nose and down the opposite cheek. All the while she held her gaze on him. The tears confused him, making him stop in his tracks.

'Come on then,' she said, and for the first time moved onto her side, letting her gaze fall away towards the bulrushes in the water.

Edwin hurried forward, like a thief spying an opportunity, and crouching in the grass began to tug at the knots. The twine was thin and coarse, cutting cruelly into her wrists; the palms, in contrast, spread open one across the other, were small and tender. At first the knots did not yield, but he forced himself to be calm and studied carefully the path the coils took. Then when he tried again, the knot gave under his touch. Now he went about his work more confidently, glancing from time to time at the soft palms, waiting like a pair of docile creatures.

After he pulled the twine from her, she turned and sat facing him at what suddenly felt an uncomfortably close distance. She did not, he noticed, smell of stale excrement the way most people did: her odour was like that of a fire made from damp wood.

‘If they come,’ she said quietly, ‘they’ll drag you through the reeds then half-drown you. You’d better go. Go back to your village.’ She reached out a hand experimentally, as though unsure if even now it was under her control, and pushed his chest. ‘Go. Hurry.’

‘I’m not afraid of them.’

‘You’re not afraid. But they’ll still do all these things to you. You helped me, but you have to go away now. Go, hurry.’

When he returned just before sunset, the grass was still flattened where she had lain, but there was no other trace left of her. All the same, the spot felt almost uncannily tranquil, and he had sat down in the grass for some moments, watching the bulrushes waving in the wind.

He never told anyone about the girl - not his aunt, who would quickly have concluded she was a demon, nor any of the other boys. But in the weeks that followed, a vivid image of her had often returned to him unbidden; sometimes at night, within his dreams; often in broad daylight, as he was digging the ground or helping to mend a roof, and then the devil’s horn would grow between his legs. Eventually the horn would go away, leaving him with a feeling of shame, and then the girl’s words would return to him: ‘Why did you come to me? Why don’t you go help your mother instead?’

But how could he go to his mother? The girl herself had said he was ‘only a child’. Then again, as she had pointed out, he would soon be a man. Whenever he recalled those words, he would feel his shame anew, and yet he had been able to see no way forward.

But that had all changed the moment Wistan had thrown open the barn door, forcing in the dazzling light, and declared that it was he, Edwin, who had been chosen for the mission. And now here they were, Edwin and the warrior, travelling across the country, and surely it would not be long till they came upon her. Then the men travelling with her would tremble.

But had it really been her voice that had led him away? Had it not been sheer terror of the soldiers? Such questions drifted into his mind as he followed the young monk down a barely trodden path beside a descending stream. Was he sure he had not simply panicked when he had been awoken and seen from the window the soldiers running about the old tower? But now, when he considered it all carefully, he was certain he had felt no fear. And earlier, during the day, when the warrior had led him into that same tower and they had talked, Edwin had felt only an impatience to stand at Wistan's side in the face of the oncoming enemy.

Wistan had been preoccupied with the old tower from the time they had first arrived at the monastery. Edwin could remember him continually glancing up at it while they had been cutting logs in the woodshed. And when they had pushed the barrow around the grounds to deliver the firewood, they had twice made diversions just to go past it. So it had come as no surprise, once the monks had disappeared into their meeting and the courtyard was empty, that the warrior should lean the axe on the woodpile and say: 'Come a moment, young comrade, and we'll examine more closely this tall and ancient friend who stares down at us. It seems to me he watches where we go, and takes offence we've yet to pay him a visit.'

As they had entered under the low arch into the chilly dimness of the tower's interior, the warrior had said to him: 'Take care. You think you're inside, but look to your feet.'

Glancing down, Edwin had seen in front of him a kind of moat which followed the circular wall all the way to form a ring. It was too wide for a man to leap, and the simple bridge of two planks was the only way to reach the central floor of trodden earth. As he stepped onto the planks, gazing down into the darkness below, he heard the warrior say behind him:

‘Notice there’s no water there, young comrade. And even if you fell right in, I’d say you’d find it no deeper than your own height. Curious, don’t you think? Why a moat on the inside? Why a moat at all for a small tower like this? What good can it do?’ Wistan came over the planks himself and tested with his heel the central floor. ‘Perhaps,’ he went on, ‘the ancients built this tower to slaughter animals. Perhaps once this was their killing floor. What they didn’t wish to keep of an animal, they simply pushed over the side into the moat. What do you think, boy?’

‘That’s possible, warrior,’ Edwin said. ‘Yet it would have been no easy thing to lead a beast across narrow planks like that.’

Edwin, seeing the circle of sky high above, said: ‘It’s open at the top, warrior. Like a chimney.’

‘You say something interesting there. Let’s hear it again.’

‘What do you make of it?’

‘If the ancients used this place for their slaughter, warrior, they’d have been able to build a fire just where we now stand. They could have jointed the animal, roasted the meat, the smoke escaping up to the sky.’

‘It’s likely, boy, just as you say. I wonder if these Christian monks have any inkling of what went on here once? These gentlemen, I fancy, come inside this tower for its quiet and seclusion. See how thick is this circling wall. Hardly a sound comes through it, though the crows were shrieking as we entered. And the way the light comes from on high. It must remind them of their god’s grace. What do you say, boy?’

‘The gentlemen might come in here and pray, right enough, warrior. Though this ground’s too soiled to kneel on.’

‘Perhaps they pray standing, guessing little how this was once a place of slaughter and burning. What else do you see looking up, boy?’

‘Nothing, sir.’

‘Nothing?’

‘Only the steps, warrior.’

‘Ah, the steps. Tell me about the steps.’

‘They first rise over the moat, then circle and circle, bending with the roundness of the wall. They rise till they reach the sky at the top.’

‘That’s well observed. Now listen carefully.’ Wistan stepped closer and lowered his voice. ‘This place, not just this old tower, but this entire place, all of what men today call this monastery, I’d wager was once a hillfort built by our Saxon forefathers in times of war. So it contains many cunning traps to welcome invading Britons.’ The warrior moved away and slowly paced the perimeter of the floor, staring down into the moat. Eventually he looked up again and said: 'Imagine this place a fort, boy. The siege broken after many days, the enemy pouring in. Fighting in every yard, on every wall. Now picture this. Two of our Saxon cousins, out there in the yard, hold back a large body of Britons. They fight bravely, but the enemy's too great in number and our heroes must retreat. Let's suppose they retreat here, into this very tower. They skip across the little bridge and turn to face their foes at this very spot. The Britons grow confident. They have our cousins cornered. They press in with their swords and axes, hurry over the bridge towards our heroes. Our brave kin bring down the first of them, but soon must retreat further. Look there, boy. They retreat up those winding stairs along the wall. Still more Britons cross the moat until this space where we stand is filled. Yet the Britons' greater numbers can't yet be turned to advantage. For our brave cousins fight two abreast on the stairs, and the invaders can but meet them two against two. Our heroes are skilled, and though they retreat higher and higher, the invaders cannot overwhelm them. As Britons fall, those following take their place, then fall in their turn. But surely our cousins grow weary. Higher and higher they retreat, the invaders pursue them stair by stair. But what's this? What's this, Edwin? Do our kin finally lose their nerve? They turn and run the remaining circles of steps, only now and then striking behind them. This is surely the end. The Britons are triumphant. Those watching from down here smile like hungry men before a banquet. But look carefully, boy. What do you see? What do you see as our Saxon cousins near that halo of sky above?' Grasping Edwin's shoulders, Wistan repositioned him, pointing up to the opening. 'Speak, boy. What do you see?'

'Our cousins spring a trap, sir. They retreat upwards only to draw in the Britons as ants to a honey pot.'

'Well said, lad! And how's the trap made?'

Edwin considered for a moment, then said: 'Just before the stairway reaches its highest point, warrior, I can see what looks from here to be an alcove. Or is it a doorway?'

'Good. And what do you suppose hides there?'

'Can it be a dozen of our greatest warriors? Then together with our two cousins, they can fight their way down again till they cut into the ranks of the Britons here below.'

'Think again, boy.'

'A fierce bear, then, warrior. Or a lion.'

'When did you last meet a lion, boy?'

'Fire, warrior. There's fire behind that alcove.'

'Well said, boy. We can't know for sure what happened so long ago. Yet I'd wager that's what waited up there. In that little alcove, hardly glimpsed from down here, was a torch, or maybe two or three, blazing behind that wall. Tell me the rest, boy.'

'Our cousins throw the torches down.'

'What, onto the heads of the enemy?'

'No, warrior. Down into the moat.'

'The moat? Filled with water?'

'No, warrior. The moat's filled with firewood. Just like the firewood we've sweated to cut.'

'Just so, boy. And we'll cut more yet before the moon's high. And we'll find ourselves plenty of dry hay too. A chimney, you said, boy. You're right. It's a chimney we stand in now. Our forefathers built it for just such a purpose. Why else a tower here, when a man looking from the top has no better view than one at the wall outside? But imagine, boy, a torch dropping into this so-called moat. Then another. When we circled this place earlier, I saw at its back, close to the ground, openings in the stone. That means a strong wind from the east, such as we have tonight, will fan the flames ever higher. And how are the Britons to escape the inferno? A solid wall around them, only a single narrow bridge to freedom, and the moat itself ablaze. But let's leave this place, boy. It may be this ancient tower grows displeased we should guess so many of his secrets. '

Wistan turned towards the planks, but Edwin was still gazing up to the top of the tower.

'But warrior,' he said. 'Our two brave cousins. Must they burn in the flames with their foes? '

'If they did, wouldn't it be a glorious bargain? Yet perhaps it needn't come to that. Perhaps our two cousins, even as the scalding heat rises, race to the rim of the opening and leap from the top. Would they do that, boy? Even though they lack wings? '

'They have no wings,' Edwin said, 'but their comrades may have brought a wagon behind the tower. A wagon loaded deep with hay. '

'It's possible, boy. Who knows what went on here in ancient days? Now let's finish with our dreaming and cut a little more wood. For surely these good monks face many chilly nights yet before the summer comes. '

In a battle, there was no time for elaborate exchanges of information. A swift look, a wave of a hand, a barked word over the noise: that was all true warriors needed to convey their wishes to one another. It had been in such a spirit Wistan had made his thoughts clear that afternoon in the tower, and Edwin had let him down utterly.

But had the warrior expected too much? Even old Steffa had only talked of Edwin's great promise, what he would become once he had been taught the warrior's ways. Wistan had yet to finish training him, so how was Edwin to respond with such understanding? And now, it seems, the warrior was wounded, but surely this could not be Edwin's fault alone.

The young monk had paused by the edge of the stream to unfasten his shoes. 'This is where we ford,' he said. 'The bridge is much further down and the land there's too open. We may be seen from even the next hilltop.' Then pointing to Edwin's shoes, he said: 'Those look skilfully crafted. Did you make them yourself?'

'Master Baldwin made them for me. The most skilled shoemaker in the village, even though he has fits every full moon.'

'Off with them. A soaking's sure to wreck them. Can you see the stepping stones? Lower your head more, and try to gaze beneath the water's surface. There, you see them? That's our pathway. Keep them in your sight and you'll stay dry.'

Again, the young monk's tone had something curt about it. Could it be that since they had set off he had had time to piece together in his mind Edwin's role in what had occurred? At the start of their journey, the young monk had not only been warmer in manner, he had hardly been able to stop talking.

They had met in the chilly corridor outside Father Jonus's cell, where Edwin had been waiting while several voices, lowered but passionate, argued from within. The dread of what he might soon be told had mounted, and Edwin had been relieved when instead of being summoned inside, he had seen the young monk emerge, a cheerful smile on his face.

'I've been chosen to be your guide,' he had said triumphantly, in Edwin's language. 'Father Jonus says we're to go at once and slip out unseen. Be brave, young cousin, you'll be at your brother's side before long.'

The young monk had an odd way of walking, clutching himself tightly like someone intensely cold, both arms lost within his robe, so that Edwin, following him down the mountain path, had wondered at first if he was one of those born with missing limbs. But as soon as the monastery was safely behind them, the young monk had fallen in step beside him, and producing a thin, long arm had placed it supportively around Edwin's shoulders.

'It was foolish of you to come back as you did, and after you'd made good your escape. Father Jonus was angry to hear of it. But here you are, safely away again, and with luck no one's the wiser about your return. But what an affair this is! Is your brother always so quarrelsome? Or is it one of the soldiers made some fierce insult to him in passing? Perhaps once you reach his bedside, young cousin, you'll ask him how it all began, for none of us can make head or tail of it. If it was he who insulted the soldiers, then it must have been something strong indeed, for they as one forgot whatever purpose brought them to see the abbot, and turning into wild men, set about trying to extract payment for his boldness. I myself woke at the sounds of the shouting, even though my own chamber's far from the courtyard. I ran there in alarm, only to stand helpless alongside my fellow monks, watching in horror all that unfolded. Your brother, they soon told me, had run into the ancient tower to escape the wrath of the soldiers, and though they rushed in after him with a mind to tear him limb from limb, it seems he began to fight them as best he knew. And a surprising match he seemed to be, even though they were thirty or more and he just one Saxon shepherd. We watched expecting any moment to see his bloody remains brought out, and instead it's soldier after soldier running from that tower in panic, or staggering out carrying wounded comrades. We could hardly believe our eyes! We were praying for the quarrel soon to end, for whatever the original insult, such violence's surely uncalled for. Yet it went on and on, and then, young cousin, the dreadful accident occurred. Who knows it wasn't God himself, frowning on so black a quarrel within his holy buildings, pointed a finger and struck them with fire? More likely it was one of the soldiers running back and forth with torches tripped and made his great error. The horror of it! Suddenly the tower was ablaze! And who'd think an old damp tower could offer so much kindling? Yet blaze it did and Lord Brennus's men together with your brother caught within. They'd have done better forgetting their quarrel at once and running out as fast as they could, but I fancy they thought instead to fight the flames, and saw only too late the fires engulfing them. An accident of true ghastliness, and the few who came out did so just to die twisting horribly on the ground. Yet miracle of miracles, young cousin, your brother it turns out escaped! Father Ninian found him wandering the darkness of the grounds, dazed and wounded, but still alive, even as the rest of us watched the blazing tower and prayed for the trapped men inside. Your brother lives, but Father Jonus, who himself treated his wounds, has counselled the few of us who know this news to keep it a solemn secret, even from the abbot himself. For he fears if the news gets further, Lord Brennus will send out more soldiers seeking vengeance, not caring that most died by accident and not by your brother's hand. You'd do well not to whisper a word of it to anyone, at least not until you're both far from this country. Father Jonus was angry you should risk yourself returning to the monastery, yet he's contented he can the more easily reunite you with your brother. "They must travel together out of this country," he said. The best of men is Father Jonus, and still our wisest, even after what the birds have done to him. I dare say your brother owes him and Father Ninian his life.'

But that had been earlier. Now the young monk had become distant, and his arms were once again tucked firmly within his robe. As Edwin followed him across the stream, trying his best to see the rocks beneath the swiftly running water, the thought came to him that he should make a clean breast of it to the warrior; tell him about his mother and how she had called to him. If he explained it all from the start, honestly and frankly, it was possible Wistan would understand and give him another chance.

A shoe in each hand, Edwin sprang lightly towards the next rock, faintly cheered by this possibility.

PART III

Gawain' s First Reverie

Those dark widows. For what purpose did God place them on this mountain path before me? Does he wish to test my humility? Is it not enough he watches me save that gentle couple, the wounded boy also, slay a devil dog, sleep barely an hour on dew-soaked leaves before rising to learn my tasks are yet far from done, that Horace and I must set off again, not down to some sheltering village, but up another steep path beneath a grey sky? Yet he placed those widows there in my way, no doubt about it, and I did well to address them courteously. Even as they sank to foolish insults and throwing clumps of earth at Horace's hindquarters - as though Horace could be panicked into an unseemly gallop! - I gave them not so much as a backward glance, speaking instead into Horace's ear, reminding him we must bear all such trials well, for a far greater one awaited us up in those distant peaks where storm clouds now gathered. Besides, those weathered women with their flapping rags were once innocent maidens, some possessing beauty and grace, or at least the freshness that will often serve as well in a man's eye. Was she not that way, the one I sometimes remember when there stretches before me as much land, empty and companionless, as I could ride on a dreary autumn's day? No beauty was she, yet delightful enough for me. I only glimpsed her once, when I was young, and did I even speak to her then? Yet she returns sometimes in my mind's eye, and I believe she has visited me in my sleep, for I often awake with a mysterious contentment even as my dreams fade from me.

I felt the lingering joys of just such a feeling as Horace woke me this morning, stamping the soft forest ground where I had lain down after the night's exertions. He knows full well I no longer have the old stamina, that after such a night it is no easy thing for me to sleep but a short hour before setting off once more. Yet seeing the sun already high over the shady roof of the forest, he would not let me sleep on. He stamped his feet until I rose, chainmail complaining. I curse this armour more and more. Has it really saved me from much? A small wound or two at best. It is the sword, not the armour, I have to thank for this abiding health. I rose and observed the leaves around me. Why so many fallen and the summer not yet old? Do these trees ail, even as they shelter us? A shaft of sun breaking through the high foliage fell across Horace's muzzle, and I watched him shake his nose from side to side, as though that beam were a fly sent to torment him. He had no pleasant night either, listening to noises of the forest all about him, wondering to what dangers his knight had gone. Displeased though I was that he aroused me so soon, when I stepped towards him, it was only to hold his neck gently in both my arms, and for a brief moment rest my head in his mane. A hard master he has, I know that. I push him on when I know him to be weary, curse him when he has done no wrong. And all this metal as much burden for him as for me. How much further will we ride together? I patted him gently, saying, 'We'll find a friendly village soon, and you'll have a better breakfast than the one you just had.'

I spoke this way believing the problem of Master Wistan settled. But we were hardly down the path, not yet out of the woods, when we came across the bedraggled monk, his shoes broken, hurrying before us to Lord Brennus's camp, and what does he tell us but that Master Wistan has escaped the monastery, leaving his pursuers of the night dead, many no more than charred bones. What a fellow! Strange how my heart fills with joy to hear the news, even though it brings back a heavy task I thought behind us. So Horace and I put aside our thoughts of hay and roast meat and good company, and now we climb uphill once more. Thankfully, at least, we travel further from that cursed monastery. In my heart, it is true, I am relieved Master Wistan did not perish at the hands of those monks and the wretched Brennus. But what a fellow! The blood he sheds each day would make the Severn overflow! He was wounded, the bedraggled monk thought, but who can rely on one such as Master Wistan to lie down and die easily? How foolish I was to let the boy Edwin run off that way, and now who will wager against the two of them finding each other? So foolish, yet I was weary then, and besides, little imagined Master Wistan could escape. What a fellow! Had he been a man of our day, Saxon though he is, he would have won Arthur's admiration. Even the best of us would have feared to meet him as a foe. Yet yesterday, when I saw him meet Brennus's soldier in combat, I might have seen a small weakness on his left side. Or was it his clever ploy of the moment? If I watch him fight once more, I will know better. A skilful warrior all the same, and it would take a knight of Arthur to suspect it, but I thought it so, as I watched the fight. I said to myself, look there, a small lapse on the left side. One a canny opponent might just exploit. Yet which of us would not have respected him?

Yet these dark widows, why do they cross our path? Is our day not busy enough? Our patience not yet sufficiently taxed? We'll stop at the next crest, I was saying to Horace as we came up the slope. We'll stop and rest even though black clouds gather and we most likely face a storm. And if there be no trees I'll still sit down right there on the scrubbed heather and we shall rest all the same. Yet when the road finally levelled, what do we see but great birds perched on their rocks, and they rise as one, not to fly into the darkening sky, but towards us. Then I saw they were no birds, but old women in flapping cloaks, assembling on the path before us.

Why choose such a barren spot to gather? Not a cairn, nor a dry well to mark it. No thin tree nor shrub to comfort a wayfarer from sun or rain. Just these chalky rocks from which they rose, sunk into the earth on either side of the road. Let's be sure, I said to Horace, let's be sure my old eyes don't let me down and these are not bandits come to set upon us. But there was no need to draw the sword - its blade still stinks of that devil dog's slime, no matter I thrust it deep in the ground before I slept - for they were old women sure enough, though we might have made good use of a shield or two against them. Ladies, let us remember them as ladies, Horace, now we are finally beyond them, for are they not to be pitied? We will not call them hags, even if their manners tempt us to. Let us remember that once, some among them at least possessed grace and beauty.

'Here he comes,' cried one, 'the impostor knight!' Others took up the cry as I came closer, and we might have trotted through their ranks, but I am not one to shy from adversity. So I brought Horace to a halt right in their midst, though gazing towards the next peak as if studying the gathering clouds. Only when their rags flapped around me, and I could feel the blast of their shouts, did I gaze down from the saddle at them. Were there fifteen? Twenty? Hands reached to touch Horace's flanks, and I whispered to calm him. Then I straightened and said, 'Ladies, if we are to talk, you must cease this noise!' To which they quietened, but their looks stayed angry, and I said then, 'What do you want of me, ladies? Why come upon me this way?' To which one woman calls up, 'We know you for the foolish knight too timid to complete the task given him.' And another, 'If you'd done long ago what God asked of you, would we be wandering the land in woe this way?' And yet another, 'He dreads his duty! See it on his face. He dreads his duty!'

I contained my anger and asked them to explain themselves. Whereupon one a little more civil than the rest stepped forward. 'Forgive us, knight. It's long days we've wandered under these skies and to see you in person come riding boldly our way, we cannot but make you hear our laments.'

'Mistress,' I said to her, 'I may look burdened by years. But I remain a knight of the great Arthur. If you'll tell me your troubles, I'll gladly help you as I can.'

To my dismay the women - the civil one included - all broke into a sarcastic laugh, and then a voice said: 'Had you done your duty long ago and slain the she-dragon, we'd not be wandering distressed this way.'

This shook me, and I cried out, 'What do you know of it? What do you know of Querig?' but saw in time the need for restraint. And so I spoke calmly: 'Explain it, ladies, what compels you to walk the roads this way?' To which a parched voice behind said, 'If you ask why I wander, knight, I'll happily tell you. When the boatman put to me his questions, my beloved already in the boat and reaching out to help me in, I found my most treasured memories robbed from me. I didn't know then but know now, Querig's breath was the thief robbed me, the very creature you were to have slain long ago.'

'How can you know this, mistress?' I demanded, no longer able to hide my consternation. For how can it be such vagabonds know a secret so well guarded? To which the civil one then smiles strangely and says, 'We're widows, knight. There's little can be hidden from us now.'

Only then do I feel Horace give a tremble, and I hear myself ask, 'What are you, ladies? Are you living or dead?' To which the women once more break into laughter, a jeering sound to it that makes Horace shift a hoof uneasily. I pat him gently while I say, 'Ladies, why do you laugh? Was that so foolish a question?' And the raspy voice behind says, 'See how fearful he is! Now he fears us as readily as he does the dragon!'

'What nonsense is this, lady?' I shout more forcefully, as Horace takes a step back against my wishes, and I have to tug to steady him. 'I fear no dragon, and fierce though Querig is, I've faced far greater evils in my time. If I've been slow to slay her, it's only because she hides herself with great cunning in those high rocks. You rebuke me, madam, but what do we hear of Querig now? A time was she thought nothing of raiding a village or more each month, yet boys have grown into men since we last heard of the like. She knows I close in, so she dares not show herself beyond these hills.'

Even as I spoke, one woman opened her raggy cloak and a clump of mud struck Horace's neck. Intolerable, I told Horace, we must go on. What can these old crones know of our mission? I nudged him to move forward but he was strangely frozen, and I had to dig in my spur to make him push forward. Thankfully the dark figures parted before us and I was gazing again at the distant peaks. My heart sank at the thought of those desolate high grounds. Even the company of these unholy hags, I thought, might be preferable to those bleak winds. But as though to disabuse me of such sentiments, the women started up their chant behind me, and I felt more mud flung our way. But what do they chant? Do they dare cry 'coward'? I had a mind to turn and show my wrath, yet remembered myself in time. Coward, coward. What do they know? Were they there? Were they there that day long ago we rode out to face Querig? Would they have called me coward then, or any of us five? And even after that great mission - from which only three returned - did I not then, ladies, with hardly a rest, hurry to the valley's edge to make good my promise to the young maid?

Edra, she later told me was her name. She was no beauty, and dressed in the simplest weeds, but like that other I sometimes dream of, she had a bloom tugged my heart. I saw her on the roadside carrying her hoe in both her arms. Only lately become a woman, she was small and slight, and the sight of such innocence, wandering unprotected so near the horrors from which I just came made it impossible for me to ride by, even if I went to such a mission as I did.

'Turn back, maiden,' I called down from the stallion, this being before the days of Horace, when even I was young.

'What great foolishness makes you go that way? Don't you know a battle rages down in this valley?'

‘I know it well, sir,’ she says, and no fear meeting my eye. ‘It’s a long journey I’ve made to come this far, and soon I’ll be down the valley and join the battle.’

‘Has some sprite bewitched you, maiden? I came from the valley floor just now where seasoned warriors spew out their stomachs from dread. I’d not have you hear even a distant echo of it. And why that hoe so large for you?’

‘There’s a Saxon lord I know is down in the valley now, and I pray with all my heart he isn’t fallen and God will protect him well. For I will have him die at my hands only, after what he did to my dear mother and sisters, and I carry this hoe to do the work. It breaks the ground of a winter’s morning, so it will do well enough on this Saxon’s bones.’

I was obliged then to dismount and hold her by the arm even as she tried to pull away. If she still lives today – Edra, she later told me was her name – she would now be near your age, ladies. It may even be she was among you just now, how would I know? No great beauty, but like that other, her innocence spoke to me. ‘Let me go, sir!’ she cries, to which I say, ‘You’ll not go down into that valley. The sight from the edge alone will make you swoon.’ ‘I’m no weakling, sir,’ she cries. ‘Let me go!’ And there we stand on the roadside like two quarrelling children, and I can calm her only by saying:

‘Maiden, I see nothing will dissuade you. But think how remote the chances of your finding alone the vengeance you crave. Yet with my help your chances will improve manyfold. So be patient and sit a while out of this sun. Look there, sit beneath that elder tree, and wait for my return. I go to join four comrades on a mission which though grave with danger, won’t keep me long. Should I perish you’ll see me come this way again tied across the saddle of this same horse, and you’ll know I can no longer keep my promise. Otherwise I swear I’ll return and we’ll together go down to make your dream of vengeance true. Be patient, maiden, and if your cause is just, as I believe it to be, God will see this lord doesn't fall before we reach him. '

Were these the words of a coward, ladies, uttered that very day, even as I rode out to face Querig? And once we were done with our task, and I saw I had been spared - though two of us five had not - I hastened back, weary as I was, to that valley's edge and the elder tree where the maid still waited, her hoe in her arms. She sprang to her feet, and the sight of her again tugged my heart. Yet when I tried once more to sway her from her intent, for I dreaded to see her enter that valley, she said angrily, 'Are you false, sir? Will you not keep your promise to me?' So I placed her on the saddle - she held the rein even as she clasped the hoe to her bosom - and I led on foot both horse and maiden down the valley slopes. Did she blanch as we first heard the din? Or when on the outskirts of the battle we met desperate Saxons, their pursuers on their heels? Did she wilt when exhausted warriors groped across our path trailing wounds along the ground? Small tears appeared and I saw her hoe tremble, but she did not turn away. For her eyes had their task, searching that bloody field left and right, far and near. Then I mounted the horse myself, and carrying her before me as if she were some gentle lamb, we rode together into the thick. Did I look timid then, thrashing with my sword, covering her with my shield, turning the horse this way and that until finally the battle tossed us both into the mud? But she was quickly on her feet, and recovering her hoe, began to tread a path through the mashed and quartered heaps. Our ears filled with the strange cries, but she seemed not to hear, the way a good Christian maid refuses the lewd shouts of the coarse men she passes. I was young then and nimble of foot, so ran about her with my sword, cutting down any who would do her harm, sheltering her with my shield from the arrows that regularly fell among us. Then she saw at last the one she sought, yet it was as if we were adrift on choppy waves and though an isle seems near, the tides somehow keep it beyond reach. It was that way for us that day. I fought and battered and kept her safe, yet it seemed an eternity till we stood before him, and even then three men specially to guard him. I passed my shield to the maid, saying, 'Shelter well, for your prize is almost yours,' and though I faced three, and I saw they were warriors of skill, I defeated them one by one till I faced the Saxon lord she so hated. His knees were thick with the gore he waded through, but I saw this was no warrior, and I brought him down till he lay breathing on the earth, his legs no more use to him, staring his hatred up at the sky. So she came then and stood above him, the shield tossed aside, and the look in her eyes chilled my blood over all else to be seen across that ghastly field. Then she brought the hoe down not with a swing, but a small prod, then another, the way she is searching for potatoes in the soil, until I am made to cry, 'Finish it, maiden, or I'll do it myself!' to which she says, 'Leave me now, sir. I thank you for your service, but now it's done.'

'Only half done, maiden,' I cry, 'till I see you safe from this valley,' but she no longer listens and goes on with her foul work. I would have quarrelled further, but it was then he appeared from the crowd. I mean Master Axl, as I now know him, a younger man that day to be sure, but a wise countenance even then, and when I saw him it was as if the noise of battle receded to a hush around us.

'Why stand so exposed, sir?' I say to him. 'And your sword still in its sheath? Take up a fallen shield at least and cover yourself.'

But he keeps a faraway look, as if he stands in a meadow of daisies on a fragrant morning. 'If God chooses to direct an arrow this way,' he says, 'I'll not impede it. Sir Gawain, I'm pleased to see you well. Are you lately arrived, or have you been here from its start?'

This as if we meet at some summer fair, and I am obliged to cry again, 'Cover yourself, sir! The field remains thick with the foe.' And when he continues to survey the scenery, I say, remembering his question to me: 'I was here at the battle's start, but Arthur then chose me as one of five to ride to a mission of great import. I'm only now returned from it.'

At last I draw his attention. 'A mission of great import? And did it go well?'

'Sadly, two comrades lost, but we accomplished it to Master Merlin's satisfaction.'

'Master Merlin,' he says. 'A sage he may be, but that old man makes me shudder.' Then he glances about once more, saying, 'I'm sorry to hear of your lost friends. Many more will be missed before the day closes.'

'Yet the victory's surely ours,' I say. 'These cursed Saxons. Why fight on this way with only Death to thank them for it?'

'I believe they do so for sheer anger and hatred of us,' he says. 'For it must be by now word has reached their ears of what's been done to their innocents left in their villages. I'm myself just come from them, so why would the news not reach also the Saxon ranks?'

'What news do you speak of, Master Axl?'

'News of their women, children and elderly, left unprotected after our solemn agreement not to harm them, now all slaughtered by our hands, even the smallest babes. If this were lately done to us, would our hatred exhaust itself? Would we not also fight to the last as they do, each fresh wound given a balm?'

'Why dwell on this matter, Master Axl? Our victory today's secure and will be a famous one.'

'Why do I dwell on it? Sir, these are the very villages I befriended in Arthur's name. In one village they called me the Knight of Peace, and today I watched a mere dozen of our men ride through it with no hint of mercy, the only ones to oppose them boys not yet grown to our shoulders.'

‘I’m saddened to hear this news. But I press you again, sir, pick up a shield at least.’

‘I came upon village by village the same, and our own men boasting of what they did.’

‘Don’t blame yourself, sir, nor my uncle. The great law you once brokered was a thing truly wondrous while it held. How many innocents, Briton or Saxon, were spared over the years for it? That it didn’t hold forever is none of your doing.’

‘Yet they believed in our bargain till this day. It was I won their trust where first there was only fear and hatred. Today our deeds make me a liar and a butcher, and I take no joy in Arthur’s victory.’

‘What will you do with such wild words, sir? If it’s treachery you contemplate, let’s face one another with no more delay!’

‘Your uncle’s safe from me, sir. Yet how do you rejoice, Sir Gawain, in a victory won at this price?’

‘Master Axl, what was done in these Saxon towns today my uncle would have commanded only with a heavy heart, knowing of no other way for peace to prevail. Think, sir. Those small Saxon boys you lament would soon have become warriors burning to avenge their fathers fallen today. The small girls soon bearing more in their wombs, and this circle of slaughter would never be broken. Look how deep runs the lust for vengeance! Look even now, at that fair maid, one I escorted here myself, watch her there still at her work! Yet with today’s great victory a rare chance comes. We may once and for all sever this evil circle, and a great king must act boldly on it. May this be a famous day, Master Axl, from which our land can be in peace for years to come.’

‘I fail to understand you, sir. Though today we slaughter a sea of Saxons, be they warriors or babes, there are yet many more across the land. They come from the east, they land by ship on our coasts, they build new villages by the day. This circle of hate is hardly broken, sir, but forged instead in iron by what's done today. I'll go now to your uncle and report what I've seen. I would see from his face if he believes God will smile on such deeds.'

A slaughterer of babes. Is that what we were that day? And what of that one I escorted, what became of her? Was she among you just now, ladies? Why gather about me this way as I ride to my duty? Let an old man go in peace. A slaughterer of babes. Yet I was not there, and even had I been, what good for me to argue with a great king, and he my uncle too? I was but a young knight then, and besides, is he not proved right each year that passes? Did you not all grow old in a time of peace? So leave us to go our way without insults at our back. The Law of the Innocents, a mighty law indeed, one to bring men closer to God - so Arthur himself always said, or was it Master Axl called it that? We called him Axelum or Axelus then, but now he goes by Axl, and has a fine wife. Why taunt me, ladies? Is it my fault you grieve? My time will come before long, and I will not turn back to roam this land as you do. I shall greet the boatman contentedly, enter his rocking boat, the waters lapping all about, and I may sleep a while, the sound of his oar in my ears. And I will move from slumber to half-waking, and see the sun sunk low over the water, and the shore moved further still, and nod myself back into dreams till the boatman's voice stirs me gently once more. And were he to ask questions, as some say he will, I would answer honestly, for what have I left to hide? I had no wife, though at times I longed for one. Yet I was a good knight who performed his duty to the end. Let me say so, and he will see I do not lie. I will not mind him. The gentle sunset, his shadow falling over me as he moves from one side of his vessel to the other. But this will wait. Today Horace and I must climb below this grey sky, up the barren slope towards the next peak, for our work is unfinished and Querig awaits us.

Chapter Ten

He had never intended to deceive the warrior. It was as if the deception itself had come quietly over the fields to envelop the two of them.

The cooper's hut appeared to be built inside a deep ditch, its thatch roof so close to the earth that Edwin, lowering his head to pass under it, felt he was climbing into a hole. So he had been prepared for the darkness, but the stifling warmth - and the thick woodsmoke - took him aback, and he announced his arrival with a fit of coughing.

'I'm pleased to see you safe, young comrade.'

Wistan's voice came out of the darkness beyond the smouldering fire, then Edwin discerned the warrior's form on a turf bed.

'Are you badly hurt, warrior?'

As Wistan sat up, slowly moving into the glow, Edwin saw his face, neck and shoulders were covered in perspiration. Yet the hands that reached to the fire were trembling as if from cold.

'The wounds are trivial. But they brought with them this fever. It was worse earlier, and I've little memory of coming here. The good monks say they tied me to the mare's back, and I fancy I was muttering all the while as when playing the slack-jawed fool in the forest. What of you, comrade? You bear no wounds, I trust, beyond the one you carried before.'

'I'm perfectly well, warrior, yet stand before you in shame. I'm a poor comrade to you, sleeping while you fought. Curse me and banish me from your sight, for it'll be a thing well earned.'

‘Not so fast, Master Edwin. If you failed me last night, I’ll soon tell you a way to make up your debt to me.’

The warrior carefully brought both feet to the earth floor, reached down and tossed a log onto the flames. Edwin saw then how his left arm was bound tightly in sacking, and that one side of his face had a spreading bruise that partially closed one eye.

‘True,’ Wistan said, ‘when I first looked down from the top of that burning tower and the wagon we so carefully prepared wasn’t there, I’d a mind to curse you. A long fall to stony ground and hot smoke already around me. Listening to the agonies of my enemies below, I asked, do I mingle with them even as we become ash together? Or better be smashed alone under the night sky? Yet before I could find an answer, the wagon arrived after all, tugged by my own mare, a monk pulling her bridle. I hardly asked if this monk was friend or foe, but leapt from that chimney mouth, and our earlier work was well enough done, comrade, for though I plunged through the hay as if it were water, I met nothing to pierce me. I awoke on a table, gentle monks loyal to Father Jonus attending me all around as if I was their supper. The fever must already have taken hold by then, whether from these wounds or from the great heat, for they say they had to muffle my ravings till they brought me down here out of harm’s way. But if the gods favour us, the fever will pass soon and we’ll set off to finish our errand.’

‘Warrior, I still stand here in shame. Even after I awoke and saw the soldiers around the tower, I let some sprite possess me, and fled the monastery behind those elderly Britons. I’d beg you to curse me now or beat me, but I heard you say there was some way I might make up to you for last night’s disgrace. Tell me the way, warrior, and I’ll fall on whatever task you give me with impatience.’

Even as he said this, his mother’s voice had called, resounding around the little hovel so Edwin was hardly sure he had spoken these words aloud. But he must have done, for he heard Wistan say:

‘Do you suppose I chose you for your courage alone, young comrade? You’ve remarkable spirit right enough, and if we survive this errand, I’ll see you learn the skills to make you a true warrior. But just now you’re rough-hewn, not yet a blade. I chose you above others, Master Edwin, because I saw you had the hunter’s gift to match your warrior spirit. A rare thing indeed to have both.’

‘How can that be, warrior? I know nothing of hunting.’

‘A wolf cub, drinking its mother’s milk, can pick up the scent of a prey in the wild. I believe it a gift of nature. Once this fever leaves me, we’ll go further into these hills and I’ll wager you’ll find the sky itself whispering to you which path to take till we stand before the she-dragon’s very lair.’

‘Warrior, I fear you misplace your faith where it will find no shelter. No kin of mine ever boasted of such skills, and no one suspected me of them. Even Steffa, who saw my warrior’s soul, never mentioned such skills as these.’

‘Then leave it to me alone to believe in them, young comrade. I’ll never say you made any such boast. As soon as this fever leaves me, we’ll set off towards those eastern hills, where all talk has it Querig has her lair, and I’ll follow in your footsteps at each fork.’

It was then the deception had begun. He had never planned it, nor welcomed it when, like a pixie stepping out from its dark corner, it had entered their presence. His mother had continued to call. ‘Find the strength for me, Edwin. You’re almost grown. Find the strength and come rescue me.’ And it was as much the wish to appease her as his eagerness to redeem himself in the warrior’s eyes that had made him say:

‘It’s curious, warrior. Now you speak of it, I feel already this she-dragon’s pull. More a taste in the wind than a scent. We should go without delay, for who knows how long I'll feel it.'

Even as he said this, the scenes were rapidly filling his mind: how he would enter their camp, startling them as they sat silently in their semi-circle to watch his mother trying to free herself. They would be full-grown men by now; most likely bearded and heavy-bellied, no longer the lithe young men who had come swaggering into their village that day. Burly, coarse men, and as they reached for their axes, they would see the warrior following behind Edwin and fear would enter their eyes.

But how could he deceive the warrior - his teacher and the man he admired above all others? And here was Wistan nodding with satisfaction, saying: 'I knew it as soon as I saw you, Master Edwin. Even as I released you from those ogres by the river.' He would enter their camp. He would free his mother. The burly men would be killed, or perhaps be allowed to flee into the mountain fog. And then what? Edwin would have to explain why, even as they were hurrying to complete an urgent errand, he had chosen to deceive the warrior.

Partly to distract himself from such thoughts - for he now sensed it was too late for a retreat - he said: 'Warrior, there's a question I have of you. Though you may think it impertinent.'

Wistan was receding back into the darkness, reclining once more onto his bed. Now all Edwin could see of him was one bare knee moving slowly from side to side.

'Ask it, young comrade.'

'I'm wondering, warrior. Is there some special feud between you and Lord Brennus makes you stay and fight his soldiers when we might have fled the monastery and be half a day closer to Querig? It must be some mighty reason to make you put aside even your errand.'

The silence that followed was so long Edwin thought the warrior had passed out in the stifling air. But then there was the knee still moving slowly, and when the voice eventually came out of the darkness, the slight tremor of the fever seemed to have evaporated.

‘I’ve no excuse, young comrade. I can only confess my folly, and that after the good father’s warning not to forget my duty! See how weak is the resolve of your master. Yet I’m a warrior before all else, and it’s no easy thing to flee a battle I know I can win. You’re right, we could even now be standing at the she-dragon’s den, calling her to come greet us. But Brennus I knew it to be, even a hope he’d come in person, and it was more than I could do not to stay and welcome them.’

‘Then I’m right, warrior. There’s some feud between you and Lord Brennus.’

‘No feud worth the name. We knew each other as boys, as young as you are now. This was in a country further west of here, in a well-guarded fort where we boys, twenty or more, were trained morning till night to become warriors in the Britons’ ranks. I grew to feel great affection for my companions of those days, for they were splendid fellows and we lived like brothers. All except Brennus, that is, for being the lord’s son, he loathed to mix with us. Yet he often trained with us, and though his skills were feeble, whenever one of us faced him with a wooden sword, or at wrestling in the sandpit, we had to let him win. Anything short of glorious victory for the lord’s son would result in punishments for us all. Can you imagine it, young comrade? To be proud young boys, as we were, and have such an inferior opponent appear to conquer us day after day? Worse, Brennus delighted in heaping humiliations on his opponents even as we feigned defeat. It pleased him to stand on our necks, or to kick us as we lay for him on the ground. Imagine how this felt to us, comrade!’

‘I see it well, warrior.’

‘But today I’ve reason to be grateful to Lord Brennus, for he saved me from a pitiable fate. I’ve told you already, Master Edwin, I’d begun to love my companions in that fort as my own brothers, even though they were Britons and I a Saxon.’

‘But is that so shameful, warrior, if you were brought up beside them facing harsh tasks together?’

‘Of course it’s shameful, boy. I feel shame even now remembering the affection I had for them. But it was Brennus showed me my error. Perhaps because even then my skills stood out, he delighted to choose me as his sparring opponent, and reserved his greatest humiliations for me. And he was not slow to notice I was a Saxon boy, and before long, turned each of my companions against me on that account. Even those once closest to me joined against me, spitting in my food, or hiding my clothes as we hurried to our training on a harsh winter’s morning, fearful of our teachers’ wrath. It was a great lesson Brennus taught me then, and when I understood how I shamed myself loving Britons as my brothers, I made up my mind to leave that fort, even with no friend or kin beyond those walls.’

Wistan ceased speaking for a moment while his breath came heavily from beyond the fire.

‘So did you take your revenge on Lord Brennus, warrior, before you left that place?’

‘Judge for me if I did or not, comrade, for I’m undecided on the question. The custom in that fort was for us apprentices, after our day’s training, to be allowed an hour after supper to idle away together. We’d build a fire in the yard and sit around it talking and jesting the way boys will. Brennus never joined us, of course, for he had his privileged quarters, but on that evening, for whatever reason, I saw him walk past. I moved away from the rest then, my companions suspecting nothing. Now that fort, like any other, had many hidden passages, all of which I knew well, so that before long I was in an unwatched corner where the battlements cast black shadows over the ground. Brennus came strolling my way, alone, and when I moved from the gloom he stopped and looked at me with terror. For he saw at once this could be no chance encounter, and further, that his usual powers were suspended. It was curious, Master Edwin, to see this swaggering lord turned so swiftly to an infant ready to make water before me for fear. I was sorely tempted to say to him, "Good sir, I see your sword on your hip. Knowing how much more skilfully you wield it, you'll have no fear drawing it against mine." Yet I said no such thing, for had I hurt him in that dark corner, what of my dreams of a life beyond those walls? I said nothing, but remained before him in silence, letting the moment grow long between us, for I wished it to be one never forgotten. And though he cowered back and would have cried for help had not some remnant of pride told him to do so would ensure his abiding humiliation, we neither of us spoke to the other. Then in time I left him, and so you see, Master Edwin, nothing and yet everything had passed between us. I knew then I'd do well to leave that very night, and since these were no longer times of war, the watch wasn't strict. I slipped quietly past the guards, saying no farewells, and was soon a boy under the moonlight, my dear companions left behind, my own kin long slaughtered, nothing but my courage and lately learned skills to carry on my journey.'

'Warrior, does Brennus hunt you even today fearing your vengeance from those days?'

'Who knows what demons whisper in that fool's ear? A great lord now, in this country and the next, yet he lives in dread of any Saxon traveller from the east passing through his lands. Has he fed the fear of that night again and again that it now sits in his belly a giant worm? Or is it the she-dragon's breath makes him forget whatever cause he once had to fear me, yet the dread grows all the more monstrous for being unnamed? Only last year a Saxon warrior from the fens, one I knew well, was killed as he travelled in peace through this very country. Yet I remain indebted to Lord Brennus for the lesson he taught me, for without it I might even now be counting Britons as my brother warriors. What troubles you, young comrade? You shift from foot to foot as if my fever possesses you also. '

So he had failed to hide his restlessness, but surely Wistan could not suspect his deception. Was it possible the warrior too could hear his mother's voice? She had been calling all the while the warrior had been speaking. 'Will you not find the strength for me, Edwin? Are you too young after all? Will you not come to me, Edwin? Did you not promise me that day you would? '

'I'm sorry, warrior. It's my hunter's instinct makes me impatient, for I fear to lose the scent, and the morning sun already rising outside. '

'We'll be gone as soon as I'm able to climb onto that mare's back. But leave me a little longer, comrade, for how else can we face such an opponent as this dragon when I'm too fevered to lift a sword? '

Chapter Eleven

He longed for a patch of sun to warm Beatrice. But though the opposite bank was often bathed in morning light, their side of the river remained shaded and cold. Axl could feel her leaning on him as they walked, and her shivering had grown steadily worse. He had been about to suggest another rest when at last they spotted the roof behind the willows, jutting out into the water.

It took some time to negotiate the muddy slope down to the boathouse, and when they stepped under its low arch, the near-darkness and the proximity of the lapping water seemed only to make Beatrice shiver more. They moved further inside, over damp wooden boards, and saw beyond the roof's overhang tall grass, rushes, and an expanse of the river. Then a man's figure rose from the shadows to their left, saying: 'Who might you be, friends?'

'God be with you, sir,' Axl said. 'We're sorry if we brought you from your sleep. We're just two weary travellers wishing to go downriver to our son's village.'

A broad, bearded man of middle years, clad in layers of animal skins, emerged into the light and scrutinised them. Eventually he asked, not unkindly:

'Is the lady there unwell?'

'She's only tired, sir, but unable to walk the remaining way. We hoped you might spare a barge or small boat to carry us. We depend on your kindness, for some misfortune lately took the bundles we carried, and with them the tin to recompense you. I can see, sir, you have but one boat now in the water. I can at least promise you safe passage for any cargo you'd entrust should you allow us to use it.'

The boatkeeper looked out at the boat rocking gently under the roof, then back at Axl. 'It'll be a while yet, friend, till this boat goes downstream, for I'm waiting for my companion to return with barley to fill it. But I see you're both weary and lately suffered some misfortune. So let me make this suggestion. Look there, friends. You see those baskets.'

'Baskets, sir?'

'They may look flimsy, but float well and will bear your weight, though you'll have to go one in each. We're accustomed to filling them with full sacks of corn, or even at times a slaughtered pig, and tethered behind a boat they'll travel even a rough river without jeopardy. And today, as you see, the water's steady, so you'll travel without worry.'

'You're kind, sir. But have you no basket large enough for the two of us?'

'You must go one to each basket, friends, or else fear drowning. But I'll gladly tether two together so you'll go almost as good as one. When you see the lower boathouse on this same side, your journey will be over, and I'll ask you to leave the baskets there well tied.'

'Axl,' Beatrice whispered, 'let's not separate. Let's go together on foot, slow though it may be.'

'Walking's beyond us now, princess. We both need warmth and food, and this river will carry us swiftly to our son's welcome.'

'Please, Axl. I don't want us to separate.'

'But this good man says he'll truss our two baskets together, and it'll be as good as we're arm in arm.' Then turning to the boatkeeper, he said: 'I'm grateful to you, sir. We'll do as you suggest. Please tie the baskets tightly, so there's no chance a swift tide will move us apart.'

‘The danger isn’t the river’s speed, friend, but its slowness. It’s easy to get caught in the weeds near the bank and move no further. Yet I’ll lend you a strong staff to push with, so you’ll have little to fear.’

As the boatkeeper went to the edge of his jetty and began to busy himself with rope, Beatrice whispered:

‘Axl, please let’s not be parted.’

‘We’re not to be parted, princess. Look how he makes his knots to keep us together.’

‘The tide may part us, Axl, never mind what this man tells us.’

‘We’ll be fine, princess, and soon at our son’s village.’

Then the boatkeeper was calling them, and they stepped carefully down the little stones to where he was steadying with a long pole two baskets bobbing in the water. ‘They’re well lined with hide,’ he said. ‘You’ll hardly feel the river’s cold.’

Though he found it painful to crouch, Axl kept both hands on Beatrice until she had safely lowered herself into the first basket.

‘Don’t try and rise, princess, or you’ll endanger the vessel.’

‘Won’t you get in yourself, Axl?’

‘I’m getting in right beside you. Look, this good man’s fastened us tight together.’

‘Don’t leave me here alone, Axl.’

But even as she said this, she appeared reassured, and lay down in the basket like a child going to sleep.

‘Good sir,’ Axl said. ‘See how my wife trembles from the cold. Is there something you might lend to cover her?’

The boatkeeper too was looking at Beatrice, who had now curled up on her side and closed her eyes. Suddenly he removed one of the furs he was wearing, and bending forward, laid it on top of her. She seemed not to notice - her eyes remained closed - so it was Axl who thanked him.

‘Welcome, friend. Leave everything at the lower boathouse for me.’ The man pushed them into the tide with his pole. ‘Sit low and keep the staff handy for the weeds.’

It was bitingly cold on the river. Broken ice drifted here and there in sheets, but their baskets moved past them with ease, sometimes bumping gently one against the other. The baskets were shaped almost like boats, with a bow and stern, but had a tendency to rotate, so that at times Axl found himself gazing back up the river to the boathouse still visible on the bank.

The dawn was pouring through the waving grass beside them, and as the boatkeeper had promised, the river moved at an easy pace. Even so, Axl found himself glancing continuously over at Beatrice’s basket, which appeared to be filled entirely by the animal skin, with only a small portion of her hair visible to betray her presence. Once he called out: ‘We’ll be there in no time, princess,’ and when there was no response, reached over to tug her basket closer.

‘Princess, are you sleeping?’

‘Axl, are you still there?’

‘Of course I’m still here.’

‘Axl. I thought maybe you’d left me again.’

‘Why would I leave you, princess? And the man’s tied our vessels so carefully together.’

‘I don’t know if it’s a thing dreamt or remembered. But I saw myself just then, standing in our chamber in the dead of night. It was long ago and I had tight around me that cloak of badger hides you made once as a tender gift to me. I was standing like that, and in our former chamber too, not the one we have now, for the wall had branches of beech crossing left to right, and I was watching a caterpillar crawling slowly along it, and asking why a caterpillar wouldn't be asleep so late at night. '

'Never mind caterpillars, what were you doing yourself awake and staring at a wall in the pit of the night? '

'I think I was standing that way because you'd gone and left me, Axl. Maybe this fur the man's put over me reminds me of that one then, for I was holding it to myself while I stood there, the one you'd made for me from badger skins, which later we lost in that fire. I was watching the caterpillar and asking why it didn't sleep and if a creature like that even knew night from day. Yet I believe the reason was that you'd gone away, Axl. '

'A wild dream, princess, and maybe a fever coming too. But we'll be beside a warm fire before long. '

'Are you still there, Axl? '

'Of course I'm here, and the boathouse long out of sight now. '

'You'd left me that night, Axl. And our precious son too. He'd left a day or two before, saying he'd no wish to be at home when you returned. So it was just me alone, in our former chamber, the dead of night. But we had a candle in those days, and I was able to see that caterpillar. '

'That's a strange dream you speak of, princess, no doubt brought on by your fever and this cold. I wish the sun would rise with less patience. '

'You're right, Axl. It's cold here, even under this rug. '

'I'd warm you in my arms but the river won't allow it. '

‘Axl. Can it be our own son left us in anger one day and we closed our door to him, telling him never to return?’

‘Princess, I see something before us in the water, maybe a boat stuck in the reeds.’

‘You’re drifting further away, Axl. I can hardly hear you.’

‘I’m here beside you, princess.’

He had been sitting low in his basket, his legs spread before him, but now shifted carefully into a crouching posture, holding the rim to either side.

‘I see it better now. A small rowing boat, stuck in the reeds where the bank turns ahead. It’s in our path and we’ll have to take care or we’ll be stuck the same way.’

‘Axl, don’t go away from me.’

‘I’m here beside you, princess. But let me take this staff and keep us clear of the rushes.’

The baskets were moving ever more slowly now, pulling inwards towards the sludge-like water where the bank made its turn. Thrusting the staff into the water, Axl found he could touch the bottom easily, but when he tried to push off back into the tide, the river floor sucked at the stick, allowing him no purchase. He could see too, in the morning light breaking over the long-grassed fields, how weeds had woven thickly around both baskets, as though to bind them further to this stagnant spot. The boat was almost before them, and as they drifted lethargically towards it, Axl held out the staff to touch against its stern and brought them to a halt.

‘Is it the other boathouse, husband?’

‘Not yet.’ Axl glanced over to that part of the river still gliding downstream. ‘I’m sorry, princess. We’re caught in the reeds. But here’s a rowing boat before us, and if it’s worthy, we’ll use it ourselves to complete the journey.’

Pushing the staff once more into the water, Axl manoeuvred them slowly to a position alongside the vessel.

From their low vantage point, the boat loomed large, and Axl could see in fine detail the damaged, coarsened wood, and the underside of the gunwale, where a row of tiny icicles hung like candlewax. Planting the staff in the water, he now rose carefully to his full height within his basket and peered into the boat.

The bow end was bathed in an orange light and it took him a moment to see that the pile of rags heaped there on the boards was in fact an elderly woman. The unusual nature of her garment - a patchwork of numerous small dark rags - and the sooty grime smeared over her face had momentarily deceived him. Moreover, she was seated in a peculiar posture, her head tilted heavily to one side, so that it was almost touching the boat's floor. Something about the old woman's clothes tugged at his memory, but now she opened her eyes and stared at him.

'Help me, stranger,' she said quietly, not altering her posture.

'Are you sick, mistress?'

'My arm won't obey me, or I'd by now be up and taken the oar. Help me, stranger.'

'Who do you speak to, Axl?' Beatrice's voice came from behind him. 'Take care it's not some demon.'

'It's just a poor woman of our years or more, injured in her boat.'

'Don't forget me, Axl.'

'Forget you? Why would I ever forget you, princess?'

'This mist makes us forget so much. Why should it not make us forget each other?'

‘Such a thing can’t ever happen, princess. Now I must help this poor woman, and perhaps with luck we’ll all three use her boat to journey downstream.’

‘Stranger, I hear what you say. You’ll be most welcome to share my boat. But help me now for I’m fallen and hurt.’

‘Axl, don’t leave me here. Don’t forget me.’

‘I’m just stepping onto this boat beside us, princess. I must attend to this poor stranger.’

The cold had stiffened his limbs, and he almost lost his balance as he climbed into the larger vessel. But he steadied himself, then looked around him.

The boat seemed simple and sturdy, with no obvious signs of leakage. There was cargo piled near the stern, but Axl paid this little attention, for the woman was saying something again. The morning sun was still fully upon her, and he could see how her gaze was fixed with some intensity on his feet – so much so that he could not help looking down at them himself. Noticing nothing remarkable, he continued towards her, stepping carefully over the boat’s bracing.

‘Stranger. I see you’re not young, but you’ve strength left. Show them a fierce face. A fierce face to make them flee.’

‘Come, mistress. Are you able to sit up?’ He had said this for he was troubled by her strange posture – her loose grey hair was hanging down and touching the damp boards.

‘Here, I’ll help you. Try to sit higher.’

As he leant forward and touched her, a rusted knife she had been holding fell from her grasp onto the boards. In the same instant, some small creature scampered out from her rags and away into the shadows.

‘Do the rats bother you, mistress?’

‘They’re over there, stranger. Show them a fierce face, I say.’

It now occurred to him she had not been staring at his feet, but beyond him, to something at the back of the boat. He turned, but the low sun dazzled him and he could not discern clearly whatever was moving there.

‘Are they rats, mistress?’

‘They fear you, stranger. They feared me too for a little while, but they sapped me little by little as they will. Had you not come they’d be covering me even now.’

‘Wait a moment, mistress.’

He stepped towards the stern, a hand raised against the low sun, and gazed down at the objects piled in the shadows. He could make out tangled nets, a soaked-through blanket left in a heap, a long-handled tool, like a hoe, lying across it. And there was a wooden, lidless box - the sort fishermen used to keep fresh the dying fish they had caught. But when he peered into it, he saw not fish but skinned rabbits - a considerable number of them, pressed so closely one against the other their tiny limbs appeared to be locked together. Then, as he watched, the whole mass of sinews, elbows and ankles began to shift. Axl took a step back even as he saw an eye open, and then another. A sound made him turn, and he saw at the other end of the boat, still bathed in orange light, the old woman slumped against the bow with pixies - too many to count - swarming over her. At first glance she looked contented, as if being smothered in affection, while the small, scrawny creatures ran through her rags and over her face and shoulders. And now there came more and more out of the river, climbing over the rim of the boat.

Axl reached down for the long-handled tool before him, but he too had become enveloped by a sense of tranquillity, and he found himself extracting the pole from the tangled netting in a strangely leisurely manner. He knew more and more creatures were rising from the water - how many might have boarded now? Thirty? Sixty? - and their collective voices seemed to him to resemble the sound of children playing in the distance. He had the presence of mind to raise the long tool - a hoe, surely, for was that not a rusted blade on the end rising into the sky, or yet another creature clinging to it? - and bring it crashing down onto the tiny knuckles and knees mounting the side of the boat. Then a second swing, this time towards the box with the skinned rabbits from which more pixies were running out. But then he had never been much of a swordsman, his skill being for diplomacy and, when required, intrigue, though who could claim he had ever betrayed the trust his skills had won? On the contrary, it was he who had been betrayed, but he could still wield a weapon in some fashion, and now he would bring it down this way and that, for had he not to defend Beatrice from these swarming creatures? But here they came, more and more - were they still coming from that box, or from the shallow waters? Were they even now gathering around Beatrice asleep in her basket? The last blow of the hoe had had some effect, for several creatures had fallen back into the water, and then another blow had sent two, even three, flying through the air, and the old woman was a stranger, what obligation did he have to her before his own wife? But there she was, the strange woman, hardly visible now beneath the writhing creatures, and Axl crossed the length of the boat, hoe raised, and made another arc in the air to sweep off as many as possible without injury to the stranger. Yet how they clung on! And now they even dared to speak to him - or was that the old woman herself from beneath them?

‘Leave her, stranger. Leave her to us. Leave her, stranger.’

Axl swung the hoe again, and it moved as though the air were thick water, but found its mark, scattering several creatures even as more arrived.

‘Leave her to us, stranger,’ the old woman said again, and only this time did it occur to him, with a stab of fear that seemed bottomless, that the speaker was talking not of the dying stranger before him but of Beatrice. And turning to his wife’s basket in the reeds, he saw the waters around it alive with limbs and shoulders. His own basket was nearly capsizing from the pull of the creatures trying to climb in, preserved only by the ballast of those already inside. But they were boarding his basket only to gain access to its neighbour. He could see other creatures massing over the animal skin covering Beatrice, and uttering a cry, he climbed the side of the boat and let himself fall into the water. It was deeper than he had anticipated, coming above his waist, but the shock of it took his breath only for an instant, before he let out a warrior’s bellow that came to him as if from a distant memory, and he lurched towards the baskets, the hoe held high above him. There was tugging at his clothes, and the water felt honey-like, but when he brought the hoe down onto his own basket, even though his weapon travelled with frustrating slowness through the air, once it landed more creatures than he could have suspected tumbled out into the water. The next swing caused even greater destruction – he must this time have swung with the blade outwards, for was that not bloodied flesh he saw flying up into the sunlight? And yet Beatrice remained an age away, floating complacently even as the creatures rose about her, and now they came from the land too, pouring through the grass on the riverbank. Creatures were now even hanging from his hoe and he let it fall into the water, suddenly wishing only to be at Beatrice’s side.

He waded through the weeds, the broken bulrushes, the mud tugging at his feet, but Beatrice remained further away than ever. Then came the stranger’s voice again, and even though now, down in the water, he could no longer see her, Axl could picture the old woman with startling clarity in his mind’s eye, slumped on the floor of her boat in the morning sun, the pixies moving freely over her as she uttered the words he could hear:

‘Leave her, stranger. Leave her to us.’

‘Curse you,’ Axl muttered under his breath, as he pushed himself forward. ‘I’ll never, never give her up.’

‘A wise man like you, stranger. You’ve known a long time now there’s no cure to save her. How will you bear it, what now lies in wait for her? Do you long for that day you watch your dearest love twist in agony and with nothing to offer but kind words for her ear? Give her to us and we’ll ease her suffering, as we’ve done for all these others before her.’

‘Curse you! I’ll not give her to you!’

‘Give her to us and we’ll see she suffers no pain. We’ll wash her in the river’s waters, the years will fall from her, and she’ll be as in a pleasant dream. Why keep her, sir? What can you give her but the agony of an animal in slaughter?’

‘I’ll be rid of you. Get off. Get off her.’

Locking his hands together to make a club, he swung one way then the other, clearing a path in the water as he waded on, till at last he was before Beatrice, still fast asleep in her basket. The pixies were swarming over the animal skin that covered her, and he began to pull them off one by one, hurling them away.

‘Why will you not give her to us? This is no kindness you show her.’

He pushed the basket through the water until the ground rose up and the basket was sitting on wet mud amidst grass and bulrushes. He leant forward then and gathered his wife in his arms, lifting her out. Thankfully she came back to wakefulness enough to cling to his neck, and they made faltering steps together, first onto the bank, then further, into the fields. Only when the land felt hard and dry beneath them did Axl lower her, and they sat in the grass together, he recovering his breath, she becoming steadily more awake.

‘Axl, what is this place we’ve come to?’

‘Princess, how are you feeling now? We must get away from this spot. I’ll carry you on my back.’

‘Axl, you’re soaked through! Did you fall in the river?’

‘This is an evil spot, princess, and we must leave quickly. I’ll gladly carry you on my back, the way I used to do when we were young and foolish and enjoying a warm spring’s day.’

‘Must we leave the river behind us? Sir Gawain’s right surely that it will carry us all the more swiftly where we’ll go. The land here looks as high in the mountains as we ever were before.’

‘We’ve no choice, princess. We must get far from here. Come, I’ll have you on my back. Come, princess, reach for my shoulders.’

Chapter Twelve

He could hear the warrior's voice below him, appealing to him to climb more slowly, but Edwin ignored it. Wistan was too slow, and in general appeared not to appreciate the urgency of their situation. When they were still not halfway up the cliff, he had asked Edwin: 'Can that be a hawk just flew past us, young comrade?' What did it matter what it was? His fever had made the warrior soft, both in mind and body.

Only a little further to climb, then he at least would be over the edge and standing on firm ground. He could then run - how he longed to run! - but to where? Their destination had, for the moment, drifted beyond his recall. What was more, there had been something important to tell the warrior: he had been deceiving Wistan about something, and now it was almost time to confess. When they had started their climb, leaving the exhausted mare tied to a shrub beside the mountain path, he had resolved to make a clean breast of it once they reached the top. Yet now he was almost there, his mind held nothing but confused wisps.

He clambered over the last rocks and pulled himself up over the precipice. The land before him was bare and wind-scarred, rising gradually towards the pale peaks on the horizon. Nearby were patches of heather and mountain grass, but nothing taller than a man's ankle. Yet strangely, there in the mid-distance, was what appeared to be a wood, its lush trees standing calmly against the battling wind. Had some god, on a whim, picked up in his fingers a section of rich forest and set it down in this inhospitable terrain?

Though out of breath from the climb, Edwin pushed himself forward into a run. For those trees, surely, were where he had to be, and once there he would remember everything. Wistan's voice was shouting again somewhere behind him - the warrior must finally have arrived at the top - but Edwin, not glancing back, ran all the faster. He would leave his confession until those trees. Within their shelter, he would be able to remember more clearly, and they could talk without the wind's howl.

The ground came up to meet him and knocked the breath from him. It happened so unexpectedly he was obliged to lie there a moment, quite dazed, and when he tried to spring back to his feet something soft but forceful kept him down. He realised then that Wistan's knee was on his back, and that his hands were being tied behind him.

'You asked before why we must carry rope with us,' Wistan said. 'Now you see how useful it can be.'

Edwin began to remember their exchange down on the path below. Eager to start the climb, he had been annoyed by the way the warrior was carefully transferring items from his saddle into two sacks for them to carry.

'We must hurry, warrior! Why do we need all these things?'

'Here, carry this, comrade. The she-dragon's foe enough without us growing weak with cold and hunger to aid her.'

'But the scent will be lost! And what need do we have of rope?'

'We may need it yet, young comrade, and we won't find it growing on branches up there.'

Now the rope had been wound around his waist as well as his wrists, so that when finally he rose to his feet, he could move forward only against the pull of his leash.

'Warrior, are you no longer my friend and teacher?'

'I'm still that and your protector too. From here you must go with less haste.'

He found he did not mind the rope. The gait it obliged him to adopt was like that of a mule, and he was reminded of a time not long ago when he had had to impersonate just such a beast, going round and round a wagon. Was he the same mule now, stubbornly pushing his way up the slope even as the rope pulled him back?

He pulled and pulled, occasionally managing several steps at a run before the rope jerked him to a halt. A voice was in his ears - a familiar voice - half-singing, half-chanting a children's rhyme, one he knew well from when he was younger. It was comforting and disturbing in equal measure and he found if he chanted along while tugging on the rope, the voice lost something of its unsettling edge. So he chanted, at first under his breath, then with less inhibition into the wind: 'Who knocked over the cup of ale? Who cut off the dragon's tail? Who left the snake inside the pail?' 'Twas your Cousin Adny.' There were further lines he did not remember, but he was surprised to find that he had but to chant along with the voice and the words would come out correctly.

The trees were near now and the warrior tugged him back again.

'Slowly, young comrade. We need more than courage to enter this strange grove. Look there. Pine trees at this height's no mystery, but aren't those oaks and elms beside them?'

'No matter what trees grow here, warrior, or what birds fly these skies! We have little time left and must hurry!'

They entered the wood and the ground changed beneath them: there was soft moss, nettles, even ferns. The leaves above them were dense enough to form a ceiling, so that for a while they wandered in a grey half-light. Yet this was no forest, for soon they could see before them a clearing with its circle of open sky above it. The thought came to Edwin that if this was indeed the work of a god, the intention must have been to conceal with these trees whatever lay ahead. He pulled angrily at the rope, saying:

‘Why dally, warrior? Can it be you’re afraid?’

‘Look at this place, young comrade. Your hunter’s instincts have served us well. This must be the dragon’s lair before us now.’

‘I’m the hunter of us two, warrior, and I tell you that clearing holds no dragon. We must hurry past it and beyond, for we’ve further to go!’

‘Your wound, young comrade. Let me see if it remains clean.’

‘Never mind my wound! I tell you the scent will be lost! Let go the rope, warrior. I’ll run on even if you will not!’

This time Wistan released him, and Edwin pushed past thistles and tangled roots. Several times he lost his balance, for trussed as he was he had no hand to put out to steady himself. But he reached the clearing without injury, and stopped at its edge to take in the sight before him.

At the centre of the clearing was a pond. It was frozen over, so a man – were he brave or foolish enough – might cross it in twenty or so strides. The smoothness of the ice’s surface was interrupted only near the far side, where the hollowed-out trunk of a dead tree burst up through it. Along the bank, not far from the ruined tree, a large ogre was crouching down on its knees and elbows at the water’s very edge, its head completely submerged. Perhaps the creature had been drinking – or searching for something beneath the surface – and had been overtaken by the sudden freeze. To a careless observer, the ogre might have been a headless corpse, decapitated as it crawled to quench its thirst.

The patch of sky above the pond cast a strange light down on the ogre, and Edwin stared at it for a while, almost expecting it to return to life, bringing up a ghastly and flushed face. Then, with a start, he realised there was a second creature in an identical posture on the far right-hand edge of the pond. And there! - yet a third, not far before him, on the near bank, half-concealed by the ferns.

Ogres usually aroused only revulsion in him, but these creatures, and the eerie melancholy of their postures, made Edwin feel a tug of pity. What had brought them to such a fate? He began to move toward them, but the rope was taut again, and he heard Wistan say close behind him:

‘Do you still deny this is a dragon’s lair, comrade?’

‘Not here, warrior. We must go further.’

‘Yet this spot whispers to me. Even if not her lair, isn’t this a place she comes to drink and bathe?’

‘I say it’s cursed, warrior, and no place to do battle with her. We’ll have only ill luck here. Look at those poor ogres. And they almost as large as the fiends you killed the other night.’

‘What do you speak of, boy?’

‘Don’t you see them? Look, there! And there!’

‘Master Edwin, you’ve become exhausted, as I feared. Let’s rest a while. Even if this is a gloomy spot, it gives us respite from the wind.’

‘How can you talk of rest, warrior? And isn’t that how those poor creatures met their fate, loitering in this bewitched place too long? Heed their warning, warrior!’

‘The only warning I heed tells me to make you rest before you drive your own heart to burst.’

He felt himself tugged, and his back struck against the bark of a tree. Then the warrior was trudging around him, circling rope about his chest and shoulders till he could hardly move.

‘This good tree means you no harm, young comrade.’ The warrior placed a gentle hand on his shoulder. ‘Why waste strength this way to uproot it? Calm yourself and rest, I say, while I study more closely this place.’

He watched Wistan picking his way through the nettles down to the pond. Reaching the water’s edge, the warrior spent several moments walking slowly back and forth, staring closely at the ground, sometimes crouching down to examine whatever caught his eye. Then he straightened, and for a long time seemed to fall into a reverie, gazing over at the trees on the far side of the pond. For Edwin, the warrior was now a near-silhouette against the frozen water. Why did he not even glance towards the ogres?

Wistan made a movement and suddenly the sword was in his hand, the arm poised and unmoving in the air. Then the weapon was returned to its scabbard and the warrior, turning from the water, came walking back towards him.

‘We’re hardly the first visitors here,’ he said. ‘Even this past hour, some party’s come this way, and it’s no she-dragon. Master Edwin, I’m glad to see you calmer.’

‘Warrior, I’ve a confession to make. One that may make you slay me even as I stand trussed to this tree.’

‘Speak, boy, and don’t fear me.’

‘Warrior, you claimed for me the hunter’s gift, and even as you spoke of it I felt a strong pull, so let you believe I had Querig in my nostrils. But I was always deceiving you.’

Wistan came closer till he was standing right before him.

‘Go on, comrade.’

‘I can’t go on, warrior.’

‘You’ve more to fear from your silence than my anger. Speak.’

‘I can’t, warrior. When we began to climb, I knew just what to tell you. Yet now ... I’m uncertain what it is I’ve kept hidden from you.’

‘It’s the she-dragon’s breath, nothing more. It’s had little sway over you before, but now overpowers you. A sure sign we’re close to her.’

‘I fear it’s this cursed pool bewitches me, warrior, and maybe bewitches you too, making you content to dally this way and hardly glancing at those drowned ogres. Yet I know there’s a confession I have to make and only wish I could find it.’

‘Show me the way to the she-dragon’s lair and I’ll forgive whatever small lies you’ve told me.’

‘But that’s just it, warrior. We rode the mare till her heart nearly burst, then climbed this steep mountainside, yet I’m not leading you at all to the she-dragon.’

Wistan had come so close Edwin could feel the warrior’s breath.

‘Where could it be then, Master Edwin, you lead me?’

‘It’s my mother, warrior, I remember it now. My aunt’s not my mother. My real mother was taken, and even though I was a small boy then, I was watching. And I promised her I’d one day bring her back. Now I’m nearly grown, and have you beside me, even those men would tremble to face us. I deceived you, warrior, but understand my feelings and help me now we’re so near her.’

‘Your mother. You say she’s near us now?’

‘Yes, warrior. But not here. Not this cursed place.’

‘What do you remember of the men who took her?’

‘They looked fierce, warrior, and well used to killing. Not a man in the village dared come out to face them that day.’

‘Saxons or Britons?’

‘They were Britons, warrior. Three men, and Steffa said they must not long before have been soldiers, for he recognised their soldiers’ ways. I wasn’t yet five years old, or else I’d have fought for her.’

‘My own mother was taken, young comrade, so I understand your thoughts well. And I too was a child and weak when she was taken. These were times of war, and in my foolishness, seeing how the men slaughtered and hanged so many, I rejoiced to see the way they smiled at her, believing they meant to treat her with gentleness and favour. Perhaps it was this way for you too, Master Edwin, when you were young and still to know of men’s ways.’

‘My mother was taken in peaceful times, warrior, so no great harm has met her. She’s been travelling country to country, and it may not be such a bad life. Yet she longs to return to me, and it’s true, the men who travel with her are sometimes cruel. Warrior, accept this confession, punish me later, but help me now face her captors, for it’s long years she’s waited for me.’

Wistan stared at him strangely. He seemed on the brink of saying something, but then shook his head and walked a few steps away from the tree, almost like one ashamed. Edwin had never seen the warrior wear such an air, and watched him with surprise.

‘I’ll readily forgive you this deception, Master Edwin,’ Wistan said eventually, turning back to face him.

‘And any other small lies you may have told. And soon I’ll release you from this tree and we’ll go to face whatever foe you may lead us to. But in return I ask you to make a promise.’

‘Tell me, warrior.’

‘Should I fall and you survive, promise me this. That you’ll carry in your heart a hatred of Britons.’

‘What do you mean, warrior? Which Britons?’

‘All Britons, young comrade. Even those who show you kindness.’

‘I don’t understand, warrior. Must I hate a Briton who shares with me his bread? Or saves me from a foe as lately did the good Sir Gawain?’

‘There are Britons who tempt our respect, even our love, I know this only too well. But there are now greater things press on us than what each may feel for another. It was Britons under Arthur slaughtered our kind. It was Britons took your mother and mine. We’ve a duty to hate every man, woman and child of their blood. So promise me this. Should I fall before I pass to you my skills, promise me you’ll tend well this hatred in your heart. And should it ever flicker or threaten to die, shield it with care till the flame takes hold again. Will you promise me this, Master Edwin?’

‘Very well, warrior, I promise it. But now I hear my mother calling, and surely we’ve stayed in this gloomy place too long.’

‘Let’s go to her then. But be prepared in case we come too late for her rescue.’

‘What can you mean, warrior? How can that ever be, for I hear her call even now.’

‘Then let’s hasten to her call. Just know one thing, young comrade. When the hour’s too late for rescue, it’s still early enough for revenge. So let me hear your promise again. Promise me you’ll hate the Briton till the day you fall from your wounds or the heaviness of your years.’

‘I gladly promise it again, warrior. But release me from this tree, for I now feel clearly which way we must go.’

Chapter Thirteen

The goat, Axl could see, was well at home on this mountain terrain. It was eating happily the stubbly grass and heather, not caring about the wind, or that its left legs were poised so much lower than the right. The animal had a fierce tug - as Axl had discovered all too well during their ascent - and it had not been easy to find a way of safely tethering it while he and Beatrice took their rest. But he had spotted a dead tree root protruding from the slope, and had carefully bound the rope to it.

The goat was clearly visible from where they now sat. The two large rocks, leaning one towards the other like an old married couple, had been visible from some way down, but Axl had hoped to come across a shelter from the wind long before they reached them. Yet the bare hillside had offered nothing, and they had had to persevere up the little path, the goat tugging as impulsively as the fierce gusts. But when at last they reached the twin rocks, it was as if God had crafted for them this sanctuary, for while they could still hear the blasts around them, they felt only faint stirrings in the air. Even so, they sat close against one another, as if in imitation of the stones above them.

‘Here’s all this country still below us, Axl. Didn’t that river carry us down at all?’

‘We were halted before we could get far, princess.’

‘And now we climb uphill again.’

‘Right enough, princess. I fear that young girl hid from us the true hardship of this task.’

‘No doubt about it, Axl, she made it sound an easy stroll. But who’ll blame her? Still a child and more cares than one her age should bear. Axl, look there. Down in that valley, do you see them?’

A hand raised to the glare, Axl tried to discern what his wife was indicating, but eventually shook his head. ‘My eyes aren’t as good as yours, princess. I see valley after valley where the mountains descend, but nothing remarkable.’

‘There, Axl, follow my finger. Aren’t those soldiers walking in a line?’

‘I see them now, right enough. But surely they’re not moving.’

‘They’re moving, Axl, and might be soldiers, the way they go in a long line.’

‘To my poor eyes, princess, they seem not to move at all. And even if they’re soldiers, they’re surely too far to bother us. It’s those storm clouds to the west concern me more, for they’ll bring mischief swifter than any soldiers in the distance.’

‘You’re right, husband, and I wonder how much further it is we’re to go. That young girl wasn’t honest, insisting it was but a simple stroll. Yet can we blame her? Her parents absent and her younger brothers to worry over. She must have been desperate to have us do her bidding.’

‘I can see them more clearly, princess, now the sun peeks from behind the clouds. They’re not soldiers or men at all, but a row of birds.’

‘What foolishness, Axl. If they’re birds, how would we see them from here at all?’

‘They’re closer than you imagine, princess. Dark birds sat in a line, the way they do in the mountains.’

‘Then why is it one doesn’t fly into the air as we watch them?’

‘One may fly up yet, princess. And I for one won’t blame that young lass, for isn’t she in a black plight? And where would we have been without her help, soaked and shivering as we were when we first saw her? Besides, princess, as I remember it, it wasn’t the girl alone keen to have this goat go up to the giant’s cairn. Is it even an hour gone by you were as anxious?’

‘I’m still as anxious for it, Axl. For wouldn’t it be a fine thing if Querig were slain and this mist no more? It’s just when I see that goat chewing the earth that way, it’s hard to believe a foolish creature like that could ever do away with a great she-dragon.’

The goat had been eating with equal appetite earlier that morning when they had first come upon the little stone cottage. The cottage had been easy to miss, hidden within a pocket of shadow at the foot of a looming cliff, and even when Beatrice had pointed it out to him, Axl had mistaken it for the entrance to a settlement not unlike their own, dug deep into the mountainside. Only as they had come closer had he realised it was an isolated structure, the walls and roof alike built from shards of dark grey rock. Water was falling from high above in a fine thread just in front of the cliffside, to collect in a pool not far from the cottage and trickle away where the land dipped out of view. A little way before the cottage, just now brightly illuminated by the morning sun, was a small fenced paddock, the sole occupant of which was the goat. As usual the animal had been eating busily, but broke off to stare in astonishment at Axl and Beatrice.

The children though had remained unaware of their approach. The girl and her two younger brothers were standing at the edge of a ditch, their backs to their visitors, preoccupied with something beneath their feet. Once, one of the small boys crouched down to throw something into the ditch, provoking the girl to pull him back by the arm.

‘What can they be doing, Axl?’ Beatrice said. ‘Mischief by the look of it, and the youngest of them still small enough to tumble in without meaning to.’

When they had gone past the goat and the children still were unaware of them, Axl called out as gently as he could: ‘God be with you,’ causing all three to spin round in alarm.

Their guilty countenances supported Beatrice’s notion that they had been up to no good, but the girl – a head taller than the two boys – recovered quickly and smiled.

‘Elders! You’re welcome! We prayed to God only last night to send you and here you’ve come to us! Welcome, welcome!’

She came splashing over the marshy grass towards them, her brothers close behind.

‘You mistake us, child,’ Axl said. ‘We’re just two lost travellers, cold and weary, our clothes wet from the river where we were attacked only lately by savage pixies. Would you call your mother or father to allow us warmth and the chance to dry ourselves beside a fire?’

‘We’re not mistaken, sir! We prayed to the God Jesus last night and now you’ve come! Please, elders, go inside our house, where a fire’s still burning.’

‘But where are your parents, child?’ Beatrice asked. ‘Weary as we are, we’d not intrude, and so wait for the lady or master of the house to call us through the door.’

‘It’s just us three now, mistress, so you can call me lady of the house! Please go inside and warm yourselves. You’ll find food in the sack hanging from the beam, and there’s wood beside the fire to add. Go inside, elders, and we’ll not disturb your rest for a while yet, for we must see to the goat.’

‘We accept your kindness gratefully, child,’ Axl said.
‘But tell us if the nearest village is far from here.’

A shadow crossed the girl’s face, and she exchanged looks with her brothers, now lined up beside her. Then she smiled again and said: ‘We’re very high in the mountains here, sir. It’s far to any village, so we’d ask you to stay here with us, and the warm fire and food we offer. You must be very weary, and I see how this wind makes you both shiver. So please, no more talk of going away. Go inside and rest, elders, for we’ve waited for you so long!’

‘What is it so interests you in that ditch there?’
Beatrice asked suddenly.

‘Oh, it’s nothing, mistress! Nothing at all! But here you’re standing in this wind and your clothes wet! Won’t you accept our hospitality, and rest yourselves beside our fire? See how even now its smoke rises from the roof!’

* * *

‘There!’ Axl took his weight from the rock and pointed. ‘A bird flown to the sky. Didn’t I tell you, princess, those are birds standing in a line? Do you see it climbing in the sky?’

Beatrice, who had risen to her feet a few moments before, now took a step beyond the sanctuary of their rocks, and Axl saw the wind immediately pull at her clothes.

‘A bird, right enough,’ she said. ‘But it didn’t rise from those figures yonder. It could be you still don’t see what I point to, Axl. I mean there, on the further ridge, those dark shapes almost against the sky.’

‘I see them well enough, princess. But come back out of the wind.’

‘Soldiers or not, they move slowly on. The bird was never one of them.’

‘Come out of the wind, princess, and sit down. We must gather strength the best we can. Who knows how much further we must pull this goat?’

Beatrice came back to their shelter, holding close to herself the cloak borrowed from the children. ‘Axl,’ she said, as she seated herself again beside him, ‘do you really believe it? That before the great knights and warriors, it’s a weary old couple like us, forbidden a candle in our own village, who may slay the she-dragon? And with this ill-tempered goat to aid us?’

‘Who knows it’ll be so, princess. Maybe it’s all just a young girl’s wishing and nothing more. But we were grateful for her hospitality, and so we shouldn’t mind doing as she asks. And who knows she isn’t right, and Querig will be slain this way.’

‘Axl, tell me. If the she-dragon’s really slain, and the mist starts to clear. Axl, do you ever fear what will then be revealed to us?’

‘Didn’t you say it yourself, princess? Our life together’s like a tale with a happy end, no matter what turns it took on the way.’

‘I said so before, Axl. Yet now it may even be we’ll slay Querig with our own hands, there’s a part of me fears the mist’s fading. Can it be so with you, Axl?’

‘Perhaps it is, princess. Perhaps it’s always been so. But I fear most what you spoke of earlier. I mean as we rested beside the fire.’

‘What was it I said then, Axl?’

‘You don’t remember, princess?’

‘Did we have some foolish quarrel? I’ve no memory of it now, except that I was near my wit’s end from cold and want of rest.’

‘If you’ve no memory of it, princess, then let it stay forgotten.’

‘But I’ve felt something, Axl, ever since we left those children. It’s as if you’re holding yourself away from me as we walk, and not just on account of that tugging goat. Can it be we quarrelled earlier, though I’ve no memory of it?’

‘I’d no intention to hold myself away from you, princess. Forgive me. If it’s not the goat pulling this way and that, then it must be I’m still thinking of some foolishness that was said between us. Trust me, it’s best forgotten.’

* * *

He had got the fire blazing again in the centre of the floor, and all else inside the small cottage had fallen into shadow. Axl had been drying his clothes, holding each garment up to the flames, while Beatrice slept peacefully nearby in a nest of rugs. But then quite suddenly, she had sat up and looked around her.

‘Is the fire too hot for you, princess?’

For a moment she continued to look bewildered, then wearily lowered herself back down onto the rugs. Her eyes though remained open and Axl was about to repeat his question when she had said quietly:

‘I was thinking of a night long ago, husband. When you were gone, leaving me in a lonely bed, wondering to myself if you’d ever come back to me.’

‘Princess, though we escaped those pixies on the river, I fear some spell still lingers on you to give you such dreams.’

‘No dream, husband. Just a memory or two returning. The night as dark as any, and there I was, alone in our bed, knowing all the while you were gone to another younger and fairer.'

'Won't you believe me, princess? This is the work of those pixies still working mischief between us.'

'You may be right, Axl. And if they were true memories, they're of long ago. Even so ...' She became silent, so that Axl thought she had dozed off again. But then she said:

'Even so, husband, they're remembrances to make me shrink from you. When we've finished resting here, and we're on our path again, let me walk a little way in front and you behind. Let's go on our way like that, husband, for I'll not welcome your step beside me now.'

He said nothing to this at first. Then he lowered the garment away from the fire and turned to look at her. Her eyes were closed again, yet he was sure she had not fallen asleep. When Axl finally found his voice, it had come out as no more than a whisper.

'It would be the saddest thing to me, princess. To walk separately from you, when the ground will let us go as we always did.'

Beatrice gave no indication of having heard, and within moments her breathing had grown long and even. He had then put on his newly warmed clothes and lain down on a blanket not far from his wife, but without touching her. An overwhelming tiredness swept over him, and yet he saw again the pixies swarming in the water before him, and the hoe he had swung through the air landing in their midst, and he remembered the noise as of children playing in the distance, and how he had fought, almost like a warrior with fury in his voice. And now she had said what she had. A picture came into his mind, clear and vivid, of himself and Beatrice on a mountain road, large grey skies above them, she walking several steps before him, and a great melancholy welled up within him. There they went, an elderly couple, heads bowed, five, six paces apart.

He awoke to find the fire smouldering, and Beatrice on her feet, peering out through one of the small gaps in the stone that constituted the windows of an abode such as this. Thoughts of their last exchange returned to him, but Beatrice turned, her features caught in a triangle of sunlight, and said in a cheerful voice:

‘I thought to wake you before, Axl, seeing the morning grow outside. But then I kept thinking of the soaking you got in the river and that you needed more than a brief nod or two.’

Only when he did not reply did she ask: ‘What is it, Axl? Why look at me like that?’

‘I’m just gazing at you in relief and happiness, princess.’

‘I’m feeling much better, Axl. Rest was all I needed.’

‘I see that now. Then let’s soon be on our way, for as you say, the morning’s grown while we slept.’

‘I’ve been watching these children, Axl. Even now they stand by that same ditch as when we first came upon them. They’ve something down there draws them and it’s some mischief, I’ll wager, for they often glance back the way they think some adult will discover and scold them. Where can their people be, Axl?’

‘It’s not our concern, and besides, they seem well enough fed and clothed. Let’s say our farewells and be gone.’

‘Axl, can it be you and I were quarrelling earlier? I feel something came between us.’

‘Nothing we can’t put aside, princess. Though we may speak of it before the day’s finished, who knows? But let’s be on our way before hunger and cold overtake us again.’

When they emerged into the chilly sunshine, Axl saw patches of ice on the grass, a large sky and mountains fading into the distance. The goat was eating over in its enclosure, a muddy upturned bucket near its feet.

The three children were still beside the ditch, looking down into it, their backs to the cottage, and appeared to be quarrelling. The girl was the first to realise Axl and Beatrice were approaching, and even as she spun around her face broke into a bright smile.

‘Dear elders!’ She started to come quickly away from the ditch, pulling her brothers with her. ‘I hope you found our home comfortable, humble though it is!’

‘We did, child, and we’re most grateful to you. Now we’re well rested and ready to be on our way. But what’s become of your people that they leave you alone?’

The girl exchanged glances with her brothers, who had taken up positions on either side of her. Then she said, a little hesitantly: ‘We manage by ourselves, sir,’ and put an arm around each of the boys.

‘And what is it down in that ditch draws you so?’ Beatrice asked.

‘It’s just our goat, mistress. It was once our best goat, but it died.’

‘How did your goat come to die, child?’ Axl asked gently. ‘The other there looks well enough.’

The children exchanged more glances, and a decision seemed to pass among them.

‘Go look if you will, sir,’ the girl said, and letting go of her brothers, she stepped to one side.

Beatrice fell in step beside him as he went towards the ditch. Before they were halfway there, Axl stopped and said in a whisper: ‘Let me go alone first, princess.’

‘Do you think I never saw a dead goat before, Axl?’

‘Even so, princess. Wait here a moment.’

The ditch was as deep as a man’s height. The sun, now shining almost directly into it, should have made it easier to discern what was before him, but instead created confusing shadows, and where there was puddle and ice, a myriad of dazzling surfaces. The goat appeared to have been of monstrous proportions, and now lay in several dismembered pieces. Over there, a hind leg; there the neck and head – the latter wearing a serene expression. It took a little longer to identify the soft upturned belly of the animal, because pressed into it was a giant hand emerging from the dark mud. Only then did he see that much of what initially he had taken to be of the dead goat belonged to a second creature entangled with it. That mound there was a shoulder; that a stiffened knee. Then he saw movement and realised the thing in the ditch was still alive.

‘What do you see, Axl?’

Even as he spoke, a large hairless head revolved slowly in the slime, a gaping eye moving with it. Then the mud sucked greedily and the head vanished.

‘We didn’t feed the ogre, sir,’ the girl’s voice said behind him. ‘We know never to feed an ogre, but to bar ourselves inside at their coming. And so we did with this one, sir, and we watched from our window while he pulled down our fence and took our best goat. Then he sat down just there, sir, where you are now, his legs dangling over like he’s an infant, and happily eating the goat raw, the way ogres will. We knew not to unbar the door, and the sun getting lower, and the ogre still eating our goat, but we could see he's getting weaker, sir. Then at last he stands up, holding what's left of the goat, then he falls down, first to his knees, then onto his side. Next thing he rolls into the ditch, goat and all, and it's two days he's been down there and still not dead.'

'Let's come away, child,' Axl said. 'This is no sight for you or your brothers. But what is it made this poor ogre so sick? Can it be your goat was diseased?'

'Not diseased, sir, poisoned! We'd been feeding it more than a full week just the way Bronwen taught us. Six times each day with the leaves.'

'Why did you do such a thing, child?'

'Why, sir, to make the goat poisonous for the she-dragon. This poor ogre wasn't to know that and so he poisoned himself. But it's not our fault, sir, because he shouldn't have been marauding the way he was!'

'A moment, child,' Axl said. 'Are you saying you fed the goat deliberately to fill it with poison?'

'Poison for the she-dragon, sir, but Bronwen said it wouldn't harm any of us. So how could we know the poison might harm an ogre? We weren't to blame, sir, and meant no wickedness!'

'No one will ever blame you, child. Yet tell me, why were you wishing to prepare poison for Querig, for I take it this is the she-dragon you talk of?'

'Oh, sir! We said our prayers morning and night and often in the day too. And when you came this morning, we knew God had sent you. So please say you'll help us, for we're just poor children forgotten by our parents! Will you take that goat there, the only one left to us now, and go with it up that path to the giant's cairn? It's an easy walk, sir, less than half a day there and back, and I'd do it myself but can't leave these young ones alone. We've fed this goat just the way we did the one eaten by the ogre, and this with three more days' leaves in it. If only you'd take it to the giant's cairn and leave it tethered there for the she-dragon, sir, and it's but an easy stroll. Please say you'll do it, elders, for we're fearing nothing else will bring our dear mother and father back to us.'

'At last you speak of them,' Beatrice said. 'What's to be done to bring your parents back to you?'

'Didn't we just tell you, mistress? If you'd only take the goat up to the giant's cairn, where it's well known food's regularly left for the she-dragon. Then who knows, she'll perish the same way that poor ogre has, and he was a strong-looking one before his meal! We'd always been afraid before of Bronwen because of her wise arts, but when she saw we were here alone, forgotten by our own parents, she took pity on us. So please help us, elders, for who knows when anyone else will come this way? We're afraid to show ourselves to soldiers or strange men who pass, but you're the ones we prayed for to the God Jesus.'

'But what is it young children like you can know of this world,' asked Axl, 'that you believe a poisonous goat will bring your parents back to you?'

'It's what Bronwen told us, sir, and though she's a terrible old woman, she never lies. She said it's the she-dragon lives over us here made our parents forget us. And even though we often make our mother angry with our mischief, Bronwen says the day she remembers us again, she'll hurry back and hold us one by one like this.' The girl suddenly clutched an invisible child to her breast, her eyes closing, and rocked gently for a moment. Then opening her eyes again, she went on: 'But for now the she-dragon's cast some spell to make our parents forget us, so they'll not come home. Bronwen says the she-dragon's a curse not just to us but to everyone and the sooner she perishes the better. So we worked hard, sir, feeding both goats exactly as she said, six times each day. Please do as we ask, or we won't ever see our mother and father again. All we ask is you tether the goat at the giant's cairn then go your way. '

Beatrice started to speak, but Axl said over her quickly: 'I'm sorry, child. We wish we could help you, but to climb higher into these hills is now beyond us. We're elderly, and as you see, weary from days of hard travel. We've no choice but to hurry on our way before further misfortune takes us. '

'But, sir, it was God himself sent you to us! And it's but a short stroll, and not even a steep path from here. '

'Dear child,' Axl said, 'our hearts go out to you, and we'll raise help at the next village. But we're too weak to do what you ask, and surely others will pass this way soon, happy to take the goat for you. It's beyond us old ones, but we'll pray for your parents' return and that God will keep you safe always. '

'Don't go, elders! It wasn't our fault the ogre was poisoned. '

Taking his wife's arm, Axl led her away from the children. He did not look back until they had passed the goat's pen, and then he saw the children still standing there, three abreast, watching silently, the towering cliffs behind them. Axl waved encouragingly, but something like shame - and perhaps the trace of some distant memory, a memory of another such departure - made him increase his pace.

But before they had gone far - the marshy ground had started to descend and the valleys to open before them - Beatrice tugged his arm to slow them.

'I didn't wish to talk across you before those children, husband,' she said. 'But is it really beyond us to do as they ask? '

‘They’re in no immediate peril, princess, and we have our own worries. How goes your pain now?’

‘My pain’s no worse. Axl, look how those children stand as we left them, watching as we grow ever smaller in their sight. Can’t we at least pause beside this stone and talk further on it? Let’s not hasten away carelessly.’

‘Don’t look back to them, princess, for you only taunt their hopes. We’ll not go back to their goat, but down into this valley, a fire and what food kind strangers may give us.’

‘But think on what it is they ask, Axl.’ Beatrice had now brought them to a halt. ‘Will a chance like this ever come our way again? Think on it! We stumble to this spot so near Querig’s lair. And these children offer a poisonous goat by which even the two of us, old and weak though we are, might bring down the she-dragon! Think on it, Axl! If Querig falls, the mist will fast begin to clear. Who’s to say those children aren’t right and God himself didn’t bring us this way?’

Axl remained silent for a moment, fighting the urge to look back towards the stone cottage. ‘There’s no telling that goat will bring any harm at all to Querig,’ he said eventually. ‘A hapless ogre’s one thing. This she-dragon’s a creature to scatter an army. And can it be wise for two elderly fools like us to wander so near her lair?’

‘We’re not to face her, Axl, only to tether the goat and flee. It may be days before Querig comes to the spot, and we’ll by then be safe at our son’s village. Axl, don’t we want returned to us our memories of this long life lived together? Or will we become like strangers met one night in a shelter? Come, husband, say we’ll turn back and do as those children bid us.’

* * *

So here they were, climbing still higher, the winds growing stronger. For the moment, the twin rocks provided good shelter, but they could not stay like this for ever. Axl wondered yet again if he had been foolish to give in.

‘Princess,’ he said eventually. ‘Suppose we really do this thing. Suppose God allows us to succeed, and we bring down the she-dragon. I’d like you then to promise me something.’

She was sitting close beside him now, though her eyes were still on the distance and the line of tiny figures.

‘What is it you ask, Axl?’

‘It’s simply this, princess. Should Querig really die and the mist begin to clear. Should memories return, and among them of times I disappointed you. Or yet of dark deeds I may once have done to make you look at me and see no longer the man you do now. Promise me this at least. Promise, princess, you’ll not forget what you feel in your heart for me at this moment. For what good’s a memory’s returning from the mist if it’s only to push away another? Will you promise me, princess? Promise to keep what you feel for me this moment always in your heart, no matter what you see once the mist’s gone.’

‘I’ll promise it, Axl, and no hardship to do so.’

‘Words can’t tell how it comforts me to hear you say it, princess.’

‘A queer mood you’re in, Axl. But who knows how much further it is till the giant’s cairn? Let’s not spend any more time sitting between these great stones. Those children were anxious when we left, and they’ll be awaiting our return.’

Gawain' s Second Reverie

This cursed wind. Is this a storm before us? Horace will mind neither wind nor rain, only that a stranger sits astride him now and not his old master. 'Just a weary woman,' I tell him, 'with greater need of the saddle than me. So carry her in good grace.' Yet why is she here at all? Does Master Axl not see how frail she grows? Has he lost his mind to bring her to these unforgiving heights? But she presses on as determined as he, and nothing I say will turn them back. So I stagger here on foot, a hand on Horace's bridle, heaving this rusty coat. 'Did we not always serve ladies with courtesy?' I murmur to Horace. 'Would we ride on, leaving this good couple tugging at their goat?'

I saw them first as small figures far below and took them for those others. 'See down there, Horace,' I said then. 'Already they've found each other. Already they come, and as though that fellow took no wounds at all from Brennus.'

And Horace looked my way thoughtfully, as though to ask, 'Then, Gawain, will this be the last time we climb this bleak slope together?' And I gave no reply but to stroke gently his neck, though I thought to myself, 'That warrior's young and a terrible fellow. Yet I may have the beating of him, who's to say? I saw something even as he brought down Brennus's man. Another would not see it, yet I did. A small opening on the left for a canny foe.'

But what would Arthur have me do now? His shadow still falls across the land and engulfs me. Would he have me crouch like a beast awaiting its prey? Yet where to hide on these bare slopes? Will the wind alone conceal a man? Or should I perch on some precipice and hurl down a boulder at them? Hardly the way for a knight of Arthur. I would rather show myself openly, greet him, try once more a little diplomacy.

‘Turn back, sir. You endanger not just yourself and your innocent companion, but all the good folk of this country. Leave Querig to one who knows her ways. You see me even now on my way to slay her.’ But such pleas were ignored before. Why would he hear me now he is come so close, and the bitten boy to guide him to her very door? Was I a fool to rescue that boy? Yet the abbot appals me so, and I know God will thank me for what I did.

‘They come as surely as they have a chart,’ I said to Horace. ‘So where shall we wait? Where shall we face them?’

The copse. I remembered it then. Strange how the trees grow so lush there, when the wind sweeps all around so bare. The copse will provide covering for a knight and his horse. I will not pounce like a bandit, yet why show myself a good hour before the encounter?

So I put a little spur on Horace, though it hardly makes an impression on him now, and we crossed the high edge of the land, neither rising nor falling, battered all the way by the wind. We were both thankful to reach those trees, even if they grow so strangely one wonders if Merlin himself cast a spell here. What a fellow was Master Merlin! I thought once he had placed a spell on Death himself, yet even Merlin has taken his path now. Is it heaven or hell he makes his home? Master Axl may believe Merlin a servant of the devil, yet his powers were often enough spent in ways to make God smile. And let it not be said he was without courage. Many times he showed himself to the falling arrows and wild axes alongside us. These may well be Merlin’s woods, and made for this very purpose: that I may some day shelter here to await the one who would undo our great work of that day. Two of us five fell to the she-dragon, yet Master Merlin stood beside us, moving calmly within the sweep of Querig’s tail, for how else could his work be done?

The woods were hushed and peaceful when Horace and I reached them. Even a bird or two singing in the trees, and if the branches stirred wildly, down below was as a calm spring's day where at last an old man's thoughts may drift from one ear to the other without tossing in a tempest! It must be several years now since Horace and I were last in these woods. Weeds have grown monstrous here, a nettle rightly the spread of a small child's palm stands large enough to wrap around a man twice over. I left Horace at a gentle spot to chew on what he could, and wandered a while beneath the sheltering leaves. Why should I not rest here, leaning on this good oak? And when in time they come to this place, as they surely will, he and I will face each other as fellow warriors.

I pushed through the giant nettles - is it for this I have worn this creaking metal? To defend my shins from these feathery stings? - until I reached the clearing and the pond, the grey sky above it peeping through. Around its rim, three great trees, yet each one cracked at the waist and fallen forward into the water. Surely they stood proudly when we were last here. Did lightning strike them? Or did they in weary old age long for the pond's succour, always so near where they grew, yet beyond reach? They drink all they wish now, and mountain birds nest in their broken spines. Will it be at such a spot I meet the Saxon? If he defeats me I may have life left to crawl to the water. I would not tumble in, even if the ice would admit me, for it would be no pleasure to grow bloated beneath this armour, and what chance Horace, missing his master, will come tip-toeing through the gnarled roots and drag out my remains? Yet I've seen comrades in battle yearn for water as they lie with their wounds, and watched yet others crawl to the edge of a river or lake, even though they double their agonies to do so. Is there some great secret known only to dying men? My old comrade, Master Buel, longed for water that day, as he lay on the red clay of that mountain. There's water here left in my gourd, I told him, but no, he demands a lake or river. But we're far from any such thing, I say. 'Curse you, Gawain,' he cries. 'My last wish, will you not grant it, and we comrades through many bold battles?' 'But this she-dragon's all but parted you in two,' I tell him. 'If I must carry you to water, I'll have to go under this summer sun, a separate part of you under each arm before we reach any such place.' But he says to me, 'My heart will welcome death only when you lay me down beside water, Gawain, where I hear its gentle lapping as my eyes close.' He demands this, and cares not whether our errand is well done, or if his life is given at a good price. Only when I reach down to raise him does he ask: 'Who else survives?' And I tell him Master Millus is fallen, yet three of us still stand, and Master Merlin too. And still he asks not if the errand is well finished, but talks of lakes and rivers, and now even of the sea, and it is all I can do to remember this is my old comrade, and a brave one, chosen like me by Arthur for this great task, even as a battle rages down in the valley. Does he forget his duty? I lift him, and he cries out to the heavens, and only then understands the cost even of a few small steps, and there we are, atop a red mountain in the summer heat, an hour's journey even on horseback to the river. And as I lower him he talks now only of the sea. His eyes blind now, when I sprinkle water on his face from my gourd, he thanks me the way I suppose in his mind's eye he stands upon a shore. 'Was it sword or axe finished me?' he asks, and I say, 'What do you talk of, comrade? It's the she-dragon's tail met you, but our task's done and you depart with pride and honour.' 'The she-dragon,' he says. 'What's become of the she-dragon?' 'All but one of the spears rest in her flank,' I say, 'and now she sleeps.' Yet he forgets the errand again, and talks of the sea, and of a boat he knew as a small boy when his father took him far from the shore on a kind evening.

When my own time comes, will I too long for the sea? I think I will be content enough with the soil. And I will not demand the exact spot, but let it be within this country Horace and I have spent the years roaming contentedly. Those dark widows of earlier would cackle to hear me, and hasten to remind me with what I may share my plot of earth. 'Foolish knight! You above all need choose your resting place well, or find yourself a neighbour to the very ones you slaughtered! ' Did they not make some such jest even as they threw mud at Horace's rump? How dare they! Were they there? Can it be this woman now rides in my saddle would say as much if she could hear my thoughts? She talked of slaughtered babes down in that foul-aired tunnel, even as I delivered her from the monks' black plans. How dare she? And now she sits in my saddle, astride my dear battlehorse, and who knows how many more journeys are left to Horace and me?

For a while we thought this might be our last, but I had mistaken this good couple for those others, and a while longer we travel in peace. Yet even as I lead Horace by the bridle, I must glance back, for surely they are coming, even if we go well ahead. Master Axl walks beside me, his goat forbidding him a steady step. Does he guess why I look back so often? 'Sir Gawain, were we not comrades once?' I heard him ask it early this morning as we came out of the tunnel, and I told him to find a boat to go downstream. Yet here he is, still in the mountains, his good wife beside him. I will not meet his eye. Age cloaks us both, as the grass and weeds cloak the fields where we once fought and slaughtered. What is it you seek, sir? What is this goat you bring?

'Turn back, friends,' I said when they came upon me in the woods. 'This is no walk for elderly travellers like you. And look how the good mistress holds her side. Between here and the giant's cairn there's still a mile or more, and the only shelter small rocks behind which one must curl with bowed head. Turn back while you still have strength, and I'll see this goat's left at the cairn and tethered well.' But they both eyed me suspiciously, and Master Axl would not let go the goat. The branches rustled above, and his wife seated on the roots of an oak, gazing to the pond and the cracked trees stooping to water, and I said softly: 'This is no journey for your good wife, sir. Why did you not do as I advised and take the river down out of these hills?' 'We must take this goat where we promised,' says Master Axl. 'A promise made to a child.' And does he look at me strangely as he says so, or do I dream it? 'Horace and I will take the goat,' I say. 'Will you not trust us with the errand? I hardly believe this goat will much trouble Querig even if devoured whole, yet she may be a little slowed and lend me an advantage. So give me the creature and turn back down the mountain before one or the other of you fall in your own footsteps.'

They moved then into the trees away from me, and I could hear the shape of their lowered voices, but no words. Then Master Axl comes to me and says: 'A moment more for my wife to rest, then we will carry on, sir, to the giant's cairn.' I see it is useless to argue more, and I also eager to continue on our way, for who knows how far behind is Master Wistan and his bitten boy?

PART IV

Chapter Fifteen

Some of you will have fine monuments by which the living may remember the evil done to you. Some of you will have only crude wooden crosses or painted rocks, while yet others of you must remain hidden in the shadows of history. You are in any case part of an ancient procession, and so it is always possible the giant's cairn was erected to mark the site of some such tragedy long ago when young innocents were slaughtered in war. This aside, it is not easy to think of reasons for its standing. One can see why on lower ground our ancestors might have wished to commemorate a victory or a king. But why stack heavy stones to above a man's height in so high and remote a place as this?

It was a question, I am sure, equally to baffle Axl as he came wearily up the mountain slope. When the young girl had first mentioned the giant's cairn, he had pictured something atop a large mound. Yet this cairn had simply appeared before them on the incline, no feature around it to explain its presence. The goat, nonetheless, seemed immediately to sense its significance, struggling frantically as soon as the cairn had become visible as a dark finger against the sky. 'It knows its fate,' Sir Gawain had remarked, guiding his horse up with Beatrice in the saddle.

But now the goat had forgotten its earlier dread and was chewing the mountain grass contentedly.

'Can it be Querig's mist works its mischief on goats and men alike?'

It was Beatrice who asked this as she held with both hands the animal's rope. Axl had for the moment relinquished the creature while he hammered into the ground with a stone the wooden stake around which the rope had been wound.

‘Who knows, princess. But if God cares at all for goats, he’ll bring the she-dragon here before long, or it’ll be a lonely wait for this poor animal.’

‘If the goat dies first, Axl, do you suppose she’ll still sup on meat not living and fresh?’

‘Who knows how a she-dragon likes her meat? But there’s grass here to keep this goat a while, princess, even if it’s of a mean sort.’

‘Look there, Axl. I thought the knight would help us, weary as we both are. But he’s forgotten his usual manners.’

Indeed Sir Gawain had become oddly reticent since their arrival at the cairn. ‘This is the place you seek,’ he had said in an almost sulky voice, before wandering off. And now he stood with his back to them, staring at the clouds.

‘Sir Gawain,’ Axl called out, pausing from his work. ‘Will you not assist holding this goat? My poor wife grows tired from it.’

The old knight did not react, and Axl, assuming he had not heard, was about to repeat his request, when Gawain turned suddenly, and with such a look of solemnity, they both stared at him.

‘I see them below,’ the old knight said. ‘And nothing now to turn them.’

‘Who is it you see, sir?’ Axl asked. Then when the knight remained silent, ‘Are they soldiers? We watched earlier some long column on the horizon, but thought they moved away from us.’

‘I speak of your recent companions, sir. The same with whom you travelled yesterday when we met. They emerge from the wood below, and who’ll stop them now? For a moment, I raised a hope I merely looked on two black widows strayed from that infernal procession. But it was the cloudy sky playing its tricks, and it’s them, no mistake.’

‘So Master Wistan escaped the monastery after all,’ Axl said.

‘That he did, sir. And now he comes, and on his rope not a goat, but the Saxon boy to guide him.’

At last Sir Gawain seemed to notice Beatrice struggling with the animal and came hurriedly from the cliff edge to seize the rope. But Beatrice did not let go, and for a moment it was as if she and the knight were tussling for control of the goat. In time they stood steadily, both holding the rope, the old knight a step or two in front of Beatrice.

‘And have our friends in turn seen us here, Sir Gawain?’ Axl asked, returning to his task.

‘I’ll wager that warrior has keen eyes, and sees us even now against the sky, figures in a tug contest, the goat our opponent!’ He laughed to himself, but a melancholy lingered in his voice. ‘Yes,’ he said finally. ‘I fancy he sees us well enough.’

‘Then he joins forces with us,’ Beatrice said, ‘to bring down the she-dragon.’

Sir Gawain looked from one to the other of them uneasily. Then he said: ‘Master Axl, do you still persist in believing it?’

‘Believing what, Sir Gawain?’

‘That we gather here in this forsaken spot as comrades?’

‘Make your meaning clearer, sir knight.’

Gawain led the goat to where Axl was kneeling, oblivious of Beatrice following behind, still clutching her end of the rope.

‘Master Axl, didn’t our ways part years ago? Mine remained with Arthur, while yours ...’ He seemed now to become aware of Beatrice behind him, and turning, bowed politely. 'Dear lady, I beg you let go this rope and rest. I'll not let the animal escape. Sit down beside the cairn there. It will shelter at least some part of you from this wind.'

'Thank you, Sir Gawain,' Beatrice said. 'Then I'll trust you with this creature, and it's a precious one to us.'

She began to make her way towards the cairn, and something about the way she did so, her shoulders hunched against the wind, caused a fragment of recollection to stir on the edges of Axl's mind. The emotion it provoked, even before he could hold it down, surprised and shocked him, for mingled with the overwhelming desire to go to her now and shelter her, were distinct shadows of anger and bitterness. She had talked of a long night spent alone, tormented by his absence, but could it be he too had known such a night, or even several, of similar anguish? Then, as Beatrice stopped before the cairn and bowed her head to the stones as if in apology, he felt both memory and anger growing firmer, and a fear made him turn away from her. Only then did he notice Sir Gawain also gazing over at Beatrice, a look of tenderness in his eyes, seemingly lost in his thoughts. But the knight soon collected himself, and coming closer to Axl, leant right down as though to remove any small chance of Beatrice overhearing.

'Who's to say your path wasn't the more godly?' he said. 'To leave behind all great talk of war and peace. Leave behind that fine law to bring men closer to God. To leave behind Arthur once and for all and devote yourself to ...' He glanced over again at Beatrice, who had remained on her feet, her forehead almost touching the piled stones in her effort to escape the wind. 'To a good wife, sir. I've watched how she goes beside you as a kind shadow. Should I have done the same? Yet God guided us down separate paths. I had a duty. Ha! And do I fear him now? Never, sir, never. I accuse you of nothing. That great law you brokered torn down in blood! Yet it held well for a time. Torn down in blood!

Who blames us for it now? Do I fear youth? Is it youth alone can defeat an opponent? Let him come, let him come. Remember it, sir! I saw you that very day and you talked of cries in your ears of children and babes. I heard the same, sir, yet were they not like the cries from the surgeon's tent when a man's life is spared even as the cure brings agonies? Yet I admit it. There are days I long for a kind shadow to follow me. Even now I turn in hope to see one. Doesn't every animal, every bird in the sky crave a tender companion? There were one or two I'd willingly have given my years. Why should I fear him now? I've fought fanged Norsemen with reindeer snouts, and they no masks! Here, sir, tie your goat now. How much deeper will you drive that stake? Is it a goat you tether or a lion?'

Handing Axl the rope, Gawain went striding off, not stopping till he stood where the land's edge appeared to meet the sky. Axl, one knee pressed into the grass, tied the rope tightly around the notch in the wood, then looked once more over to his wife. She was standing at the cairn much as before, and though something in her posture again tugged at him, he was relieved to find in himself no trace of the earlier bitterness. Instead he felt almost overcome by an urge to defend her, not just from the harsh wind, but from something else large and dark even then gathering around them. He rose and hurried to her.

'The goat's well secured, princess,' he said. 'Just as soon as you're ready, let's be off down this slope. For haven't we completed the errand promised to those children and to ourselves?'

'Oh Axl, I don't want to go back to those woods.'

'What are you saying, princess?'

'Axl, you never went to the pond's edge, you were so busy talking to this knight. You never looked into that chilly water.'

‘These winds have tired you, princess.’

‘I saw their faces staring up as if resting in their beds.’

‘Who, princess?’

‘The babes, and only a short way beneath the water’s surface. I thought first they were smiling, and some waving, but when I went nearer I saw how they lay unmoving.’

‘Just another dream came to you while you rested against that tree. I remember seeing you asleep there and took comfort from it at the time, even as I talked with the old knight.’

‘I truly saw them, Axl. Among the green weed. Let’s not go back to that wood, for I’m sure some evil lingers there.’

Sir Gawain, gazing down at the view, had raised his arm in the air, and now without turning, shouted through the wind: ‘They’ll soon be upon us! They come up the slope eagerly.’

‘Let’s go to him, princess, but keep the cloak around you. I was foolish to bring you this far, but we’ll soon find shelter again. Yet let’s see what troubles the good knight.’

The goat was pulling at its rope as they passed, but the stake showed no sign of shifting. Axl had been keen to see how near the approaching figures were, but now the old knight came walking towards them, and they all three halted not far from where the animal was tethered.

‘Sir Gawain,’ Axl said, ‘my wife grows weak and must return to shelter and food. May we carry her down on your horse as we brought her up?’

‘What’s this you ask? Too much, sir! Did I not tell you when we met in Merlin’s wood to climb this hill no further? It was you both insisted on coming here.’

‘Perhaps we were foolish, sir, but we had a purpose, and if we must turn back without you, you must promise not to free this goat cost us so dearly to bring here.’

‘Free the goat? What do I care for your goat, sir? The Saxon warrior will soon be upon us, and what a fellow he is! Go, look if you doubt it! What do I care for your goat? Master Axl, I see you before me now and I’m reminded of that night. The wind as fierce then as this one. And you, cursing Arthur to his face while the rest of us stood with heads bowed! For who wanted the task of striking you down? Each of us hiding from the king’s eye, for fear he’d command with one glance to run you through, unarmed though you were. But see, sir, Arthur was a great king, and here’s more proof of it! You cursed him before his finest knights, yet he replied gently to you. You recall this, sir?’

‘I recall nothing of it, Sir Gawain. Your she-dragon’s breath keeps it all from me.’

‘My eyes lowered like the rest, expecting your head to roll past my feet even as I gazed down at them! Yet Arthur spoke to you with gentleness! You don’t recall even a part of it? The wind that night almost as strong as this one, our tent ready to fly into the dark sky. Yet Arthur meets curses with gentle words. He thanked you for your service. For your friendship. And he bade us all think of you with honour. I myself whispered farewell to you, sir, as you took your fury into the storm. You didn’t hear me, for it was said under my breath, but a sincere farewell all the same, and I wasn’t alone. We all shared something of your anger, sir, even if you did wrong to curse Arthur, and on the very day of his great victory! You say now Querig’s breath keeps this from your mind, or is it the years alone, or even this wind enough to make the wisest monk a fool?’

‘I don’t care for any of these memories, Sir Gawain. Today I seek others from another stormy night my wife speaks of.’

‘A sincere farewell I bade you, sir, and let me confess it, when you cursed Arthur a small part of me spoke through you. For that was a great treaty you brokered, and well held for years. Didn’t all men, Christian and pagan, sleep more easily for it, even on the eve of battle? To fight knowing our innocents safe in our villages? And yet, sir, the wars didn’t finish. Where once we fought for land and God, we now fought to avenge fallen comrades, themselves slaughtered in vengeance. Where could it end? Babes growing to men knowing only days of war. And your great law already suffering violation ...’

‘The law was well held on both sides until that day, Sir Gawain,’ Axl said. ‘It was an unholy thing to break it.’

‘Ah, now you recall it!’

‘My memory’s of God himself betrayed, sir. And I’m not sorry if the mist robs me further of it.’

‘For a time I wished the same of the mist, Master Axl. Yet soon I understood the hand of a truly great king. For the wars stopped at last, wasn’t that so, sir? Hasn’t peace been our companion since that day?’

‘Remind me no more, Sir Gawain. I don’t thank you for it. Let me see instead the life I led with my dear wife, shivering here beside me. Will you not lend us your horse, sir? At least down to the woods where we met. We’ll leave him safely there to await you.’

‘Oh Axl, I’ll not return to those woods! Why insist we leave this place now and go down there? Can it be, husband, you still fear the mist’s fading, never mind the promise I made you?’

‘My horse, sir? You imply I’ve no more use of my Horace? You go too far, sir! I don’t fear him, even if he’s youth on his side!’

‘I imply nothing, Sir Gawain, only ask for the assistance of your excellent horse to carry my wife down to shelter ...’

‘My horse, sir? Do you insist his eyes be masked or watch his master’s fall? He’s a battlehorse, sir! Not some pony frolics in buttercups! A battlehorse, sir, and well ready to see me fall or triumph as God wills!’

‘If my wife must travel on my own back, sir knight, so be it. Yet I thought you might spare your horse at least the distance down to the wood ...’

‘I’ll remain here, Axl, never mind this cruel wind, and if Master Wistan’s nearly upon us, we’ll stay and see if it’s him or the she-dragon survives this day. Or is it you’d rather not see the mist fade after all, husband?’

‘I’ve seen it before many times, sir! An eager young one brought down by a wise old head. Many times!’

‘Sir, let me implore you again to remember your gentlemanly ways. This wind drains my wife of strength.’

‘Is it not enough, husband, I swore you an oath, and only this morning, I’d not let go what I feel in my heart for you today, no matter what the mist’s fading reveals?’

‘Will you not understand the acts of a great king, sir? We can only watch and wonder. A great king, like God himself, must perform deeds mortals flinch from! Do you think there were none that caught my eye? A tender flower or two passed on the way I didn’t long to press to my bosom? Is this metal coat to be my only bedfellow? Who calls me a coward, sir? Or a slaughterer of babes? Where were you that day? Were you with us? My helmet! I left it in those woods! But what need of it now? The armour too I’d take off but I fear you all laughing to see the skinned fox beneath!’

For a moment, all three of them were shouting over each other, the howl of the wind a fourth voice against theirs, but now Axl became aware that both Gawain and his wife had fallen silent and were staring past his shoulder. Turning, he saw the warrior and the Saxon boy standing at the cliff's edge, almost on the very spot where before Sir Gawain had been gazing broodingly out at the view. The sky had thickened, so that to Axl it was as if the newcomers had been carried here on the clouds. Now both of them, in near-silhouette, appeared peculiarly transfixed: the warrior holding firm his rein in both hands like a charioteer; the boy leaning forward at an angle, both arms outstretched as though for balance. There was a new sound in the wind, and then Axl heard Sir Gawain say: 'Ah! the boy sings again! Can you not make him cease, sir?'

Wistan gave a laugh, and the two figures lost their rigidity and came towards them, the boy pulling in front.

'My apologies,' the warrior said. 'Yet it's all I can do to stop him leaping rock to rock till he breaks himself.'

'What can be the matter with the boy, Axl?' Beatrice said, close to his ear, and he was grateful to hear the gentle intimacy returned to her voice. 'He was just this way before that dog appeared.'

'Must he sing so untunefully?' Sir Gawain addressed Wistan again. 'I'd box his ears but fear he'd not even feel me!'

The warrior, still approaching, laughed again, then glanced cheerfully at Axl and Beatrice. 'My friends, this is a surprise. I fancied you'd be in your son's village by now. What brings you instead to this lonely spot?'

'The same business as yours, Master Wistan. We crave the end to this she-dragon who robs us of treasured memories. You see, sir, we've brought with us a poisoned goat to do our work.'

Wistan regarded the animal and shook his head. 'This must be a mighty and cunning creature we face, friends. I fear your goat may not trouble her beyond a belch or two. '

'It taxed us greatly bringing it here, Master Wistan,' Beatrice said, 'even if we were helped by this good knight met again on the way up. But seeing you here, I'm cheered, for it must be our hopes no longer rest solely with our animal. '

But now Edwin's singing was making it hard for them to hear one another, and the boy was tugging more than ever, the object of his attention quite evidently a spot at the crest of the next slope. Wistan gave the rope a sharp pull, then said:

'Master Edwin appears anxious to reach those rocks up there. Sir Gawain, what lies in them? I see stones piled one upon another, as though to hide a pit or lair. '

'Why ask me, sir?' said Sir Gawain. 'Ask your young companion and he may even stop his songs! '

'I hold him by a leash, sir, but can no more control him than a crazed goblin. '

'Master Wistan,' Axl said, 'we share a duty to keep this boy from harm. We must watch him carefully in this high place. '

'Well said, sir. I'll tether him, if I may, to the same post as your goat. '

The warrior led Edwin to where Axl had hammered in the stake, and crouching down began securing the boy's rope to it. Indeed it seemed to Axl that Wistan lavished unusual care on this task, testing repeatedly each knot he made, as well as the soundness of Axl's handiwork. Meanwhile the boy himself remained oblivious. He calmed somewhat, but his gaze stayed fixed on the rocks at the top of the slope, and he continued to tug with quiet insistence. His singing, though far less shrill, had gained a dogged quality that reminded Axl of the way exhausted soldiers sing to keep marching. For its part, the goat had moved as far away as its own rope would allow, but was nonetheless gawping in fascination.

As for Sir Gawain, he had been watching Wistan's every movement with care, and - so it seemed to Axl - a kind of sly cunning had come into his eyes. As the Saxon warrior had become absorbed in his task, the knight had moved stealthily closer, drawn out his sword, and planting it into the soil, leant his weight on it, forearms resting on the broad hilt. In this stance, Gawain was now watching Wistan, and it struck Axl he might be memorising details concerning the warrior's person: his height, his reach, the strength in the calves, the strapped left arm.

His work completed to his satisfaction, Wistan rose and turned to face Sir Gawain. For a small moment there was a strange uneasiness in the looks they exchanged, then Wistan smiled warmly.

'Now here's a custom divides Britons from Saxons,' he said, pointing. 'See there, sir. Your sword's drawn and you use it to rest your weight, as if it's cousin to a chair or footstool. To any Saxon warrior, even one taught by Britons as I was, it seems a strange custom.'

'Grow to my creaky years, sir, you'll see if it seems so strange! In days of peace like these, I fancy a good sword's only too glad of the work, even if just to relieve its owner's bones. What's odd about it, sir?'

'But observe, Sir Gawain, how it presses into the earth. Now to us Saxons, a sword's edge is a thing of never-sleeping worry. We fear to show a blade even the air lest it lose a tiny part of its edge.'

'Is that so? A sharp edge's of importance, Master Wistan, I'll not dispute. But isn't there too much made of it? Good footwork, sound strategy, calm courage. And that little wildness makes a warrior hard to predict. These are what determine a contest, sir. And the knowledge God wills one's victory. So let an old man rest his shoulders. Besides, aren't there times a sword left in the sheath's drawn too late? I've stood this way on many a battlefield to gather breath, comforted my blade's already out and ready, and it won't be rubbing its eyes and asking me if it's afternoon or morn even as I try to put it to good use.'

'Then it must be we Saxons keep our swords more heartlessly. For we demand they not sleep at all, even as they rest in the dark of their scabbards. Take my own here, sir. It knows my manner well. It doesn't expect to take the air without soon touching flesh and bone.'

'A difference in custom then, sir. It reminds me of a Saxon I once knew, a fine fellow, and he and I gathering kindling on a cold night. I would be busying my sword to hack from a dead tree, yet there he is beside me, employing his bare hands and sometimes a blunt stone. "Have you forgotten your blade, friend?" I asked him. "Why go at it like a sharp-clawed bear?" But he wouldn't hear me. At the time I thought him crazed, yet now you enlighten me. Even with my years, there are still lessons to learn!'

They both laughed briefly, then Wistan said:

'There may be more than custom on my side, Sir Gawain. I was always taught that even as my blade travels through one opponent, I must in my thought prepare the cut that will follow. Now if my edge isn't sharp, sir, and the blade's passage slowed even a tiny instant, snagged in bone or dawdling through the tangles of a man's insides, I'll surely be late for the next cut, and on such may hang victory or defeat.'

'You're right, sir. I believe it's old age and these long years of peace make me careless. I'll follow your example from here, yet just now my knees sag from the climb, and I beg you allow me this small relief.'

‘Of course, sir, take your comfort. Merely a thought struck me seeing you rest that way.’

Suddenly Edwin stopped singing and began to shout. He was making the same statement over and over, and Axl, turning to Beatrice beside him, asked quietly: ‘What is it he says, princess?’

‘He talks of some bandits’ camp lies up there. He bids us all follow him to it.’

Wistan and Gawain were both staring at the boy with something like embarrassment. For another moment, Edwin continued to shout and pull, then fell silent, slumping down onto the ground, and appeared on the verge of tears. No one spoke for what seemed a long time, the wind howling between them.

‘Sir Gawain,’ Axl said finally. ‘We look now to you, sir. Let’s keep no more disguises between us. You’re the she-dragon’s protector, are you not?’

‘I am, sir.’ Gawain gazed at each of them in turn, Edwin included, with an air of defiance. ‘Her protector, and lately her only friend. The monks kept her fed for years, leaving tethered animals at this spot, as you do. But now they quarrel among themselves, and Querig senses their treachery. Yet she knows I stay loyal.’

‘Then Sir Gawain,’ Wistan said, ‘will you care to tell us if we stand near the she-dragon now?’

‘She’s near, sir. You’ve done well to arrive here, even if you had good fortune stumbling on that boy for a guide.’

Edwin, who was back on his feet, began to sing once more, albeit in a low chant-like manner.

‘Master Edwin here may prove of greater fortune yet,’ said the warrior. ‘For I’ve a hunch he’s a pupil to quickly surpass his poor master and one day do great things for his kin. Perhaps even as your Arthur did for his.’

‘What, sir? This boy now singing and tugging like a half-wit?’

‘Sir Gawain,’ Beatrice interrupted, ‘tell a weary old woman if you will. How is it a fine knight like you, and a nephew to the great Arthur, turns out this she-dragon’s protector?’

‘Perhaps Master Wistan here’s keen to explain it, mistress.’

‘On the contrary, I’m as eager as Mistress Beatrice to hear your account of it. Yet all in good time. First, we must settle one question. Will I cut loose Master Edwin to see where he runs? Or will you, Sir Gawain, lead the way to Querig’s lair?’

Sir Gawain stared emptily at the struggling boy, then sighed. ‘Leave him where he is,’ he said heavily. ‘I’ll lead the way.’ He straightened to his full height, pulled the sword from the ground and carefully returned it to its scabbard.

‘I thank you, sir,’ Wistan said. ‘I’m grateful we spare the boy the danger. Yet I may now guess the way without a guide. We must go to those rocks atop this next slope, must we not?’

Sir Gawain sighed again, glanced at Axl as though for help, then shook his head sadly. ‘Quite right, sir,’ he said. ‘Those rocks circle a pit, and no small one. A pit as deep as a quarry, and you’ll find Querig asleep there. If you really mean to fight her, Master Wistan, you’ll have to climb down into it. Now I ask you, sir, do you really mean to do such a wild thing?’

‘I’ve come this long way to do so, sir.’

‘Master Wistan,’ Beatrice said, ‘if you’ll excuse an old woman’s intrusion. You laughed just now at our goat, but this is a great battle you face. If this knight will not help you, at least allow us to take our goat up this last slope and prod it down into this pit. If you must fight a she-dragon single-handed, let it be one slowed by poison. '

'Thank you, mistress, your concern's well received. Yet while I may take advantage of her slumber, poison's a weapon I don't care to employ. Besides, I lack the patience now to wait another half day or more to discover if the she-dragon will sicken from her supper. '

'Then let's have it over with,' Sir Gawain said. 'Come, sir, I'll lead the way.' Then to Axl and Beatrice: 'Wait down here, friends, and hide from the wind beside the cairn. You'll not wait long. '

'But Sir Gawain,' Beatrice said, 'my husband and I've stretched our strength to come this far. We'd walk with you this last slope if there's a way to do so without danger. '

Sir Gawain once again shook his head helplessly. 'Then let's all go together, friends. I dare say no harm will befall you, and I'll be easier myself for your presence. Come, friends, let's go to Querig's lair, and keep your voices low lest she stir from her sleep. '

* * *

As they ascended the next path, the wind grew less harsh, even though they felt more than ever to be touching the sky. The knight and the warrior were striding steadily before them, for all the world like two old companions taking the air together, and before long a distance had opened between them and the elderly couple.

'This is foolishness, princess,' Axl said as they walked. 'What business do we have following these gentlemen? And who knows what dangers lie ahead? Let's turn back and wait beside the boy. '

But Beatrice's step remained determined. 'I'll have us go on,' she said. 'Here, Axl, take my hand and help me keep my courage. For I'm thinking now I'm the one to fear most the mist's clearing, not you. I stood beside those stones just now and it came to me there were dark things I did to you once, husband. Feel how this hand trembles in yours to think they may be returned to us! What will you say to me then? Will you turn away and leave me on this bleak hill? There's a part of me would see this brave warrior fall even as he walks before us now, yet I'll not have us hide. No, I'll not, Axl, and aren't you the same? Let's see freely the path we've come together, whether it's in dark or mellow sun. And if this warrior must really face the she-dragon in her own pit, let's do what we can to keep up his spirits. It may be a shout of warning in the right place, or one to rouse him from a fierce blow will make the difference.'

Axl had let her talk on, listening with only half his mind as he walked, because he had become aware once more of something at the far edge of his memory: a stormy night, a bitter hurt, a loneliness opening before him like unfathomed waters. Could it really have been he, not Beatrice, standing alone in their chamber, unable to sleep, a small candle lit before him?

'What became of our son, princess?' he asked suddenly, and felt her hand tighten on his. 'Does he really wait for us in his village? Or will we search this country for a year and still not find him?'

'It's a thought came to me too, but I was afraid to think it aloud. But hush now, Axl, or we'll be heard.'

Indeed Sir Gawain and Wistan had halted on the path ahead to wait for them, and appeared to be in genial conversation. As he came up to them, Axl could hear Sir Gawain saying with a small chuckle:

'I'll confess, Master Wistan, my hope's that even now Querig's breath will rob you of the memory of why you walk beside me. I await eagerly your asking where it is I lead you! Yet I see from both your eye and step you forget little.'

Wistan smiled. 'I believe, sir, it's this very gift to withstand strange spells won me this errand from my king. For in the fens, we've never known a creature quite like this Querig, yet have known others with wonderful powers, and it was noticed how little I was swayed, even as my comrades swooned and wandered in dreams. I fancy this was my king's only reason to choose me, for almost all my comrades at home are better warriors than this one walks beside you now.'

'Impossible to believe, Master Wistan! Both report and observation tell of your extraordinary qualities.'

'You overestimate me, sir. Yesterday, needing to bring down that soldier under your gaze, I was all too aware how a man of your skill might view my small accomplishments. Sufficient to defeat a frightened guardsman, but far short of your approval, I fear.'

'What nonsense, sir! You're a splendid fellow, and no more of it! Now, friends' - Gawain turned his gaze to include Axl and Beatrice - 'it's not so far now. Let's be moving on while she still sleeps.'

They continued in silence. This time Axl and Beatrice did not fall behind, for a sense of solemnity seemed to descend on Gawain and Wistan, making them proceed in front at an almost ceremonial pace. In any case, the ground had become less demanding, levelling to something like a plateau. The rocks they had discussed from below now loomed before them, and Axl could see, as they came ever nearer, how they were arranged in a rough semi-circle around the top of a mound to the side of their path. He could see too how a row of smaller stones rose in a kind of stairway up the side of the mound, leading right up to the rim of what could only be a pit of significant depth. The grass all around where they had now arrived seemed to have been blackened or burnt, lending the surroundings - already without tree or shrub - an atmosphere of decay. Gawain, bringing the party to a halt near where the crude stairway began, turned to face Wistan with some deliberation.

‘Will you not consider a last time, sir, leaving this dangerous plan? Why not return now to your orphan tied to his stick? There’s his voice in the wind even now.’

The warrior glanced back the way they had come, then looked again at Sir Gawain. ‘You know it, sir. I cannot turn back. Show me this dragon.’

The old knight nodded thoughtfully, as though Wistan had just made some casual but fascinating observation.

‘Very well, friends,’ he said. ‘Then keep your voices low, for what purpose should we wake her?’

Sir Gawain led the way up the side of the mound and on reaching the rocks signalled for them to wait. He then peered over carefully, and after a moment, beckoned to them, saying in a low voice: ‘Come stand along here, friends, and you’ll see her well enough.’

Axl helped his wife onto a ledge beside him, then leant over one of the rocks. The pit below was broader and shallower than he had expected - more like a drained pond than something actually dug into the ground. The greater part of it was now in pale sunlight, and seemed to consist entirely of grey rock and gravel - the blackened grass finishing abruptly at the rim - so that the only living thing visible, aside from the dragon herself, was a solitary hawthorn bush sprouting incongruously through the stone near the centre of the pit’s belly.

As for the dragon, it was hardly clear at first she was alive. Her posture - prone, head twisted to one side, limbs outspread - might easily have resulted from her corpse being hurled into the pit from a height. In fact it took a moment to ascertain this was a dragon at all: she was so emaciated she looked more some worm-like reptile accustomed to water that had mistakenly come aground and was in the process of dehydrating. Her skin, which should have appeared oiled and of a colour not unlike bronze, was instead a yellowing white, reminiscent of the underside of certain fish. The remnants of her wings were sagging folds of skin that a careless glance might have taken for dead leaves accumulated to either side of her. The head being turned against the grey pebbles, Axl could see only the one eye, which was hooded in the manner of a turtle's, and which opened and closed lethargically according to some internal rhythm. This movement, and the faintest rise and fall along the creature's backbone, were the only indicators that Querig was still alive.

'Can this really be her, Axl?' Beatrice said quietly. 'This poor creature no more than a fleshy thread?'

'Yet look there, mistress,' Gawain's voice said behind them. 'So long as she's breath left, she does her duty.'

'Is she sick or perhaps already poisoned?' asked Axl.

'She simply grows old, sir, as we all must do. But she still breathes, and so Merlin's work lingers.'

'Now a little of this comes back to me,' Axl said. 'I remember Merlin's work here and dark it was too.'

'Dark, sir?' said Gawain. 'Why dark? It was the only way. Even before that battle was properly won, I rode out with four good comrades to tame this same creature, in those days both mighty and angry, so Merlin could place this great spell on her breath. A dark man he may have been, but in this he did God's will, not only Arthur's. Without this she-dragon's breath, would peace ever have come? Look how we live now, sir! Old foes as cousins, village by village. Master Wistan, you fall silent before this sight. I ask again. Will you not leave this poor creature to live out her life? Her breath isn't what it was, yet holds the magic even now. Think, sir, once that breath should cease, what might be awoken across this land even after these years! Yes, we slaughtered plenty, I admit it, caring not who was strong and who weak. God may not have smiled at us, but we cleansed the land of war. Leave this place, sir, I beg you. We may pray to different gods, yet surely yours will bless this dragon as does mine.'

Wistan turned away from the pit to look at the old knight.

'What kind of god is it, sir, wishes wrongs to go forgotten and unpunished?'

'You ask it well, Master Wistan, and I know my god looks uneasily on our deeds of that day. Yet it's long past and the bones lie sheltered beneath a pleasant green carpet. The young know nothing of them. I beg you leave this place, and let Querig do her work a while longer. Another season or two, that's the most she'll last. Yet even that may be long enough for old wounds to heal for ever, and an eternal peace to hold among us. Look how she clings to life, sir! Be merciful and leave this place. Leave this country to rest in forgetfulness.'

'Foolishness, sir. How can old wounds heal while maggots linger so richly? Or a peace hold for ever built on slaughter and a magician's trickery? I see how devoutly you wish it, for your old horrors to crumble as dust. Yet they await in the soil as white bones for men to uncover. Sir Gawain, my answer's unchanged. I must go down into this pit.'

Sir Gawain nodded gravely. 'I understand, sir.'

'Then I must ask you in turn, sir knight. Will you leave this place to me and return now to your fine old stallion awaits you below?'

'You know I cannot, Master Wistan.'

'It's as I thought. Well then.'

Wistan came past Axl and Beatrice, and down the rough-hewn steps. When he was once more at the foot of the mound, he looked around him and said, in a quite new voice: 'Sir Gawain, this earth looks curious here. Can it be the she-dragon, in her more vigorous days, blasted it this way? Or does lightning strike here often to burn the ground before new grasses return?'

Gawain, who had followed him down the mound, also came off the steps, and for a moment the two of them strolled about randomly like companions pondering at which spot to pitch their tent.

'It's something always puzzled me too, Master Wistan,' Gawain was saying. 'For even when younger, she remained above, and I don't suppose it's Querig made this blasted ground. Perhaps it was always thus, even when we first brought her here and lowered her into her lair.' Gawain tapped his heel experimentally on the soil. 'A good floor, sir, nevertheless.'

'Indeed.' Wistan, his back to Gawain, was also testing the ground with his foot.

'Though perhaps a little short in width?' remarked the knight. 'See how that edge rolls over the cliffside. A man who fell here would rest on friendly earth, sure enough, yet his blood may run swiftly through these burnt grasses and over the side. I don't speak for you, sir, but I'll not fancy my insides dripping over the cliff like a gull's white droppings!'

They both laughed, then Wistan said:

'A needless worry, sir. See how the ground lifts slightly before the cliff there. As for the opposite edge, it's too far the other way and plenty of thirsty soil first.'

'That's well observed. Well, then, it's no bad spot!' Sir Gawain looked up at Axl and Beatrice, who were still up on the ledge, though now with their backs to the pit.

'Master Axl,' he called cheerfully, 'you were always the great one for diplomacy. Do you care to use your fine eloquence now to let us leave this place as friends?’

‘I’m sorry, Sir Gawain. You’ve shown us much kindness and we thank you for it. Yet we’re now here to see the end of Querig, and if you’ll defend her, there’s nothing I or my wife can say on your side. Our will’s with Master Wistan in this matter.’

‘I see it, sir. Then let me ask at least this of you. I don’t fear this fellow before me. Yet if I should be the one to fall, will you take my good Horace back down this mountain? He’ll welcome a pair of good Britons on his back. You may think he grumbles, but you’ll not be too much for him. Take my dear Horace far away from here and when you’ve no more use of him, find him a fine green meadow where he may eat to his heart’s content and think of old days. Will you do this for me, friends?’

‘We’ll do it gladly, sir, and your horse will be the saving of us too, for it’s a harsh journey down these hills.’

‘On that point, sir.’ Gawain had now come right to the foot of the mound. ‘I urged you once before to use the river, and do so again. Let Horace take you down these slopes, but once you meet the river, search for a boat to take you east. There’s tin and coins in the saddle to buy your passage.’

‘We thank you, sir. Your generosity moves us.’

‘But Sir Gawain,’ Beatrice said. ‘If your horse takes the two of us, then how’s your fallen body to be carried from this mountain? In your kindness you neglect your own corpse. And we’d be sorry to bury you in so lonely a spot as this.’

For an instant, the old knight’s features became solemn, almost sorrowful. Then they creased into a smile, and he said: ‘Now, mistress. Let’s not discuss burial plans while I still expect to emerge victorious! In any case, this mountain's no less lonely a spot to me now than any other, and I'd fear the sights my ghost must witness on lower ground should this contest go another way. So no more talk of corpses, madam! Master Wistan, have you anything to ask of these friends should fortune not go your way?'

'Like you, sir, I prefer not to think of defeat. Yet only a mighty fool will believe you anything other than a formidable foe, no matter your years. So I too will burden this good couple with a request. If I'm no more, please see to it Master Edwin reaches a kind village, and let him know I considered him the worthiest of apprentices.'

'We'll do so, sir,' Axl said. 'We'll seek the best for him, even though the wound he carries makes his future a dark one.'

'That's well said. Now I'm reminded I must do even more to survive this meeting. Well, Sir Gawain, shall we go to it?'

'Yet one more request,' said the old knight, 'and this one to you, Master Wistan. I raise the matter with embarrassment, for it touches what we discussed with pleasure a moment ago. I mean, sir, the question of drawing the sword. With my heavy years, I find it takes a foolishly long time to pull this old weapon out of its sheath. If you and I faced each other, swords undrawn, my fear is I'd provide you with feeble entertainment, knowing how fast you draw. Why, sir, I might still be hobbling about, muttering small curses and tugging at this iron with one grip then another even as you take the air, wondering if to cut off my head or else sing an ode while waiting! Yet if we were to agree to draw our swords in our own time ... Why this embarrasses me greatly, sir!'

'Not another word on it, Sir Gawain. I never think well of a warrior who leans on the speedy draw of a blade to take advantage of his opponent. So let's meet with swords ready drawn, just as you suggest.'

‘I thank you, sir. And in return, though I see your arm strapped, I vow not to seek any special advantage of it.’

‘I’m grateful, sir, though this injury’s a trivial one.’

‘Well then, sir. With your permission.’

The old knight drew his sword - indeed it seemed to take some time - and placed the point into the ground, just as he had done earlier at the giant’s cairn. But instead of leaning on it, he stood there regarding his weapon up and down with a mixture of weariness and affection. Then he took the sword in both hands and raised it - and Gawain’s posture took on an unmistakable grandeur.

‘I’ll turn away now, Axl,’ Beatrice said. ‘Tell me when it’s finished, and let it not be long or unclean.’

At first both men held their swords pointing downwards, so as not to exhaust their arms. From his vantage point, Axl could see their positions clearly: at most five strides apart, Wistan’s body angled slightly to the left away from his opponent’s. They held these positions for a time, then Wistan moved three slow steps to his right, so that to all appearances, his outside shoulder was no longer protected by his sword. But to take advantage, Gawain would have had to close the gap very rapidly, and Axl was hardly surprised when the knight, gazing accusingly at the warrior, himself moved to the right with deliberate strides. Wistan meanwhile changed the grip of both his hands on his sword, and Axl could not be sure Gawain had noticed the change - Wistan’s body possibly obscuring the knight’s view. But now Gawain too was changing his hold, letting the sword’s weight fall from the right arm to the left. Then the two men became fixed in their new positions, and to an innocent spectator, they may have looked, in relation to one another, practically unchanged from before. Yet Axl could sense that these new positions had a different significance. It had been a long time since he had had to consider combat in such detail, and there remained a frustrating sense that he was failing to see half of what was unfolding before him. But he knew somehow the contest had reached a critical point; that things could not be held like this for long without one or the other combatant being forced to commit himself.

Even so, he was taken aback by the suddenness with which Gawain and Wistan met. It was as if they had responded to a signal: the space between them vanished, and the two were suddenly locked in tense embrace. It happened so quickly it appeared to Axl the men had abandoned their swords and were now holding one another in a complicated and mutual armlock. As they did so, they rotated a little, like dancers, and Axl could then see that their two blades, perhaps because of the huge impact of their coming together, had become melded as one. Both men, mortified by this turn of events, were now doing their best to prise the weapons apart. But this was no easy task, and the old knight's features were contorted with the effort. Wistan's face, for the moment, was not visible, but Axl could see the warrior's neck and shoulders shaking as he too did all he could to reverse the calamity. But their efforts were in vain: with each moment, the two swords seemed to fasten more thoroughly, and surely there was nothing for it but to abandon the weapons and start the contest afresh. Neither man, though, appeared willing to give up, even as the effort threatened to drain them of their strength. Then something gave and the blades came apart. As they did so, some dark grain - perhaps the substance that had caused the blades to fasten together in the first place - flew up into the air between them. Gawain, with a look of astonished relief, reeled halfway round and sank to one knee. Wistan, for his part, had been carried by the momentum into turning a near circle, and had come to a halt pointing his now liberated sword towards the clouds beyond the cliff, his back fully turned to the knight.

'God protect him,' Beatrice said beside him, and Axl realised she had been watching all the while. When he looked down again, Gawain had lowered his other knee to the ground. Then the tall figure of the knight fell slowly, twistingly, onto the dark grass. There he struggled a moment, like a man in his sleep trying to make himself more comfortable, and when his face was turned to the sky, even though his legs were still folded untidily beneath him, Gawain seemed content. As Wistan approached with a concerned stride, the old knight appeared to say something, but Axl was too far to hear. The warrior remained standing over his opponent for some time, his sword held forgotten at his side, and Axl could see dark drops falling from the tip of the blade onto the soil.

Beatrice pressed herself against him. 'He was the she-dragon's defender,' she said, 'yet showed us kindness. Who knows where we'd be now without him, Axl, and I'm sorry to see him fallen.'

He pressed Beatrice close to him. Then releasing her, he climbed down a little way to where he could see better Gawain's body lying on the earth. Wistan had been correct: the blood had flowed only to where the ground rose in a kind of lip at the cliff's edge, and was pooling there with no danger of spilling over. The sight caused a melancholy to sweep over him, but also - though it was a distant and vague one - the feeling that some great anger within him had at long last been answered.

'Bravo, sir,' Axl called down. 'Now there's nothing stands between you and the she-dragon.'

Wistan, who had all the while been staring down at the fallen knight, now came slowly, somewhat giddily, to the foot of the mound, and when he looked up appeared to be in something of a dream.

'I learned long ago', he said, 'not to fear Death as I fought. Yet I thought I heard his soft tread behind me as I faced this knight. Long in years, yet he was close to getting the better of me.'

The warrior seemed then to notice the sword still in his hand, and made as though to thrust it into the soft earth at the foot of the mound. But at the last moment he stopped himself, the blade almost at the soil, and straightening, said: 'Why clean this sword yet? Why not let this knight's blood mingle with the she-dragon's?'

He came up the side of the mound, his gait still somewhat like a drunkard's. Brushing past them, he leant over a rock and gazed down into the pit, his shoulders moving with each breath.

'Master Wistan,' Beatrice said gently. 'We're now impatient to see you slay Querig. But will you bury the poor knight after? My husband here's weary and must save his strength for what remains of our journey.'

'He was a kin of the hated Arthur,' Wistan said, turning to her, 'yet I'll not leave him to the crows. Rest assured, mistress, I'll see to him, and may even lay him down in this pit, beside the creature he so long defended.'

'Then hurry, sir,' Beatrice said, 'and finish the task. For though she's feeble, we'll not be easy till we know she's slain.'

But Wistan seemed no longer to hear her, for he was now gazing at Axl with a faraway expression.

'Are you well, sir?' Axl asked eventually.

'Master Axl,' the warrior said, 'we may not meet again. So let me ask one last time. Could you be that gentle Briton from my boyhood who once moved like a wise prince through our village, making men dream of ways to keep innocents beyond the reach of war? If you have a remembrance of it, I ask you to confide in me before we part.'

'If I was that man, sir, I see him today only through the haze of this creature's breath, and he looks a fool and a dreamer, yet one who meant well, and suffered to see solemn oaths undone in cruel slaughter. There were others spread the treaty through the Saxon villages, but if my face stirs something in you, why suppose it was another's?

'I thought it when we first met, sir, but couldn't be sure. I thank you for your frankness.'

'Then speak frankly to me in turn, for it's a thing shifts within me since our meeting yesterday, and perhaps, in truth, for far longer. This man you remember, Master Wistan. Is he one of whom you would seek vengeance?'

'What are you saying, husband?' Beatrice pushed forward, placing herself between Axl and the warrior. 'What quarrel can there be between you and this warrior? If there is one, he'll need strike me first.'

'Master Wistan talks of a skin I shed before we two ever met, princess. One I hoped had long crumbled on a forgotten path.' Then to Wistan: 'What do you say, sir? Your sword still drips. If it's vengeance you crave, it's a thing easily found, though I beg you protect my dear wife who trembles for me.'

'That man was one I once adored from afar, and it's true there were times later I wished him cruelly punished for his part in the betrayal. Yet I see today he may have acted with no cunning, wishing well for his own kin and ours alike. If I met him again, sir, I'd bid him go in peace, even though I know peace now can't hold for long. But excuse me, friends, and let me go down and end my errand.'

Down in the pit, neither the dragon's position nor posture had changed: if her senses were warning her of the proximity of strangers - and of one in particular making his way down the steep side of the pit - Querig gave no indication of it. Or could it be the rise and fall of her spine had become a little more pronounced? And was there a new urgency in the hooded eye as it opened and shut? Axl could not be sure. But as he continued to gaze down at the creature, the idea came to him that the hawthorn bush - the only other thing alive in the pit - had become a source of great comfort to her, and that even now, in her mind's eye, she was reaching for it. Axl realised the idea was fanciful, yet the more he watched, the more credible it seemed. For how was it a solitary bush was growing in a place like this? Could it not be that Merlin himself had allowed it to grow here, so that the dragon would have a companion?

Wistan was continuing his descent, his sword still unsheathed. His gaze rarely strayed from the spot where the creature lay, as if he half expected her to rise suddenly, transformed into a formidable demon. At one stage he slipped, and dug his sword into the ground to avoid sliding some way down on his backside. This episode sent stones and gravel cascading down the slope, but Querig still gave no response.

Then Wistan was safely on the ground. He wiped his forehead, glanced up at Axl and Beatrice, then moved towards the dragon, stopping several strides away. He then raised his sword and began to scrutinise the blade, apparently taken aback to discover it streaked with blood. For several moments, Wistan remained like this, not moving, so that Axl wondered if the strange mood that had overtaken the warrior since his victory had momentarily made him forget his reason for entering the pit.

But then with something of the unexpectedness that had characterised his contest with the old knight, Wistan suddenly moved forward. He did not run, but walked briskly, stepping over the dragon's body without breaking stride, and hurried on as though anxious to reach the other side of the pit. But his sword had described a swift, low arc in passing, and Axl saw the dragon's head spin into the air and roll a little way before coming to rest on the stony ground. It did not remain there long, however, for it was soon engulfed by the rich tide that first parted around it, then buoyed it up till it swam glidingly across the floor of the pit. It came to a stop at the hawthorn, where it lodged, the throat up to the sky. The sight brought back to Axl the head of the monster dog Gawain had severed in the tunnel, and again a melancholy threatened to sweep over him. He made himself look away from the dragon, and watch instead the figure of Wistan, who had not stopped walking. The warrior was now circling back, avoiding the ever-spreading pool, and then with his sword still unsheathed, began the climb out of the pit.

‘It’s done, Axl,’ Beatrice said.

‘It is, princess. Yet there’s still a question I wish to ask this warrior.’

* * *

Wistan took a surprisingly long time to climb out of the pit. When at last he appeared before them again, he looked overwhelmed and not in the least triumphant. Without a word, he sat down on the blackened ground right on the rim of the pit, and at last thrust his sword deep into the earth. Then he gazed emptily, not into the pit, but beyond, at the clouds and the pale hills in the distance.

After a moment, Beatrice went over to him and touched his arm gently. ‘We thank you for this deed, Master Wistan,’ she said. ‘And there’ll be many more across the land would thank you if they were here. Why look so despondent?’

‘Despondent? No matter, I’ll regain my spirit soon, mistress. Yet just at this moment ...’ Wistan turned away from Beatrice and once more gazed at the clouds. Then he said: ‘Perhaps I’ve been too long among you Britons. Despised the cowardly among you, admired and loved the best of you, and all from a tender age. And now I sit here, shaking not from weariness, but at the very thought of what my own hands have done. I must soon steel my heart or be a frail warrior for my king in what’s to come.’

‘What is this you speak of, sir?’ Beatrice asked. ‘What further task awaits you now?’

‘It’s justice and vengeance await, mistress. And they’ll soon hurry this way, for both are much delayed. Yet now the hour’s almost upon us, I find my heart trembles like a maid’s. It can only be I’ve been too long among you.’

‘I didn’t fail to notice, sir,’ Axl said, ‘your earlier remark to me. You said you’d wish me to go in peace, yet that peace couldn’t hold much longer. I wondered then what you meant by it, even as you descended into this pit. Will you explain yourself to us now?’

‘I see you begin to understand, Master Axl. My king sent me to destroy this she-dragon not simply to build a monument to kin slain long ago. You begin to see, sir, this dragon died to make ready the way for the coming conquest.’

‘Conquest, sir?’ Axl moved closer to him. ‘How can this be, Master Wistan? Are your Saxon armies so swelled by your cousins from overseas? Or is it that your warriors are so fierce you talk of conquest in lands well held in peace?’

‘It’s true our armies are yet meagre in numbers, even in the fenlands. Yet look across this whole land. In every valley, beside every river, you’ll now find Saxon communities, and each with strong men and growing boys. It’s from these we’ll swell our ranks even as we come sweeping westward.’

‘Surely you speak in the confusion of your victory, Master Wistan,’ Beatrice said. ‘How can this be? You see yourself how in these parts it’s your kin and mine mingle village by village. Who among them would turn on neighbours loved since childhood?’

‘Yet see your husband’s face, mistress. He begins to understand why I sit here as before a light too fierce for my gaze.’

‘Right enough, princess, the warrior’s words make me tremble. You and I longed for Querig’s end, thinking only of our own dear memories. Yet who knows what old hatreds will loosen across the land now? We must hope God yet finds a way to preserve the bonds between our peoples, yet custom and suspicion have always divided us. Who knows what will come when quick-tongued men make ancient grievances rhyme with fresh desire for land and conquest?’

‘How right to fear it, sir,’ Wistan said. ‘The giant, once well buried, now stirs. When soon he rises, as surely he will, the friendly bonds between us will prove as knots young girls make with the stems of small flowers. Men will burn their neighbours’ houses by night. Hang children from trees at dawn. The rivers will stink with corpses bloated from their days of voyaging. And even as they move on, our armies will grow larger, swollen by anger and thirst for vengeance. For you Britons, it’ll be as a ball of fire rolls towards you. You’ll flee or perish. And country by country, this will become a new land, a Saxon land, with no more trace of your people’s time here than a flock or two of sheep wandering the hills untended.’

‘Can he be right, Axl? Surely he speaks in a fever?’

‘He may yet be mistaken, princess, but this is no fever. The she-dragon’s no more, and Arthur’s shadow will fade with her.’ Then to Wistan, he said: ‘I’m comforted at least, sir, to find you take no delight in these horrors you paint.’

‘I’d take delight if I could, Master Axl, for it’ll be vengeance justly served. Yet I’m enfeebled by my years among you, and try as I will, a part of me turns from the flames of hatred. It’s a weakness shames me, yet I’ll soon offer in my place one trained by my own hand, one with a will far cleaner than mine.’

‘You speak of Master Edwin, sir?’

‘I do, and I dare say he’ll be growing quickly more calm now the dragon’s slain and her pull gone from him. That boy has a true warrior’s spirit given only to a few. The rest he'll learn fast enough, and I'll train his heart well to admit no soft sentiments as have invaded mine. He'll show no mercy in our work ahead. '

'Master Wistan,' Beatrice said, 'I still don't know if you speak only in a mad fever. But my husband and I grow weak, and must return to lower ground and shelter. Will you remember your promise to bury well the gentle knight? '

'I promise to do so, mistress, though I fear even now the birds find him. Good friends, forewarned as you are, you've time enough to escape. Take the knight's horse and ride fast from these parts. Seek your son's village if you must, but linger there no more than a day or two, for who knows how soon the flames will be lit before our coming armies. If your son will not hear your warnings, leave him and flee as far west as you can. You may yet keep ahead of the slaughter. Go now and find the knight's horse. And should you find Master Edwin much calmed, his strange fever passed, cut him free and bid him come up here to me. A fierce future now opens before him, and it's my wish he sees this place, the fallen knight and the broken she-dragon, all before his next steps. Besides, I recall how well he digs a grave with a stray stone or two! Now hurry away, gentle friends, and farewell. '

Chapter Sixteen

For some time now the goat had been trampling the grass very near Edwin's head. Why did the animal have to come so close? They might be tied to the same post, but surely there was territory enough for each of them.

He might have got up and chased the goat away, but Edwin felt too tired. The exhaustion had swept over him a little earlier, and with such intensity that he had fallen forward onto the ground, the mountain grass pressing against his cheek. He had reached the edges of sleep, but then had been startled back to wakefulness by the sudden conviction that his mother had gone. He had not moved, and had kept his eyes closed, but he had muttered aloud into the ground: 'Mother. We're coming. Only a little longer now.'

There had been no answer, and he had felt a great emptiness opening within him. Since then, drifting between sleep and waking, he had several more times called to her, to be answered only by silence. And now the goat was chewing the grass next to his ear.

'Forgive me, mother,' he said softly into the earth. 'They tied me. I couldn't get free.'

There were voices above him. Only then did it occur to him the footsteps around him were not those of the goat. Someone was untying his hands, and the rope was pulling away from under him. A gentle hand raised his head, and he opened his eyes to see the old woman - Mistress Beatrice - peering down at him. He realised he was no longer tied, and rose to his feet.

One of his knees ached badly, but when a gust of wind rocked him, he was able to keep his balance. He looked about him: there was the grey sky, the rising land, the rocks up on the crest of the next hill. Not long ago, those rocks had meant everything to him, but now she was gone, of that there was no doubt. And he remembered something the warrior had said: that when it was too late for rescue, it was still early enough for revenge. If that were true, those who had taken his mother would pay a terrible price.

There was no sign of Wistan. It was just the old couple here, but Edwin felt comforted by their presence. They were standing before him, gazing at him with concern, and the sight of the kindly Mistress Beatrice made him feel suddenly close to tears. But Edwin realised she was saying something - something about Wistan - and made an effort to listen.

Her Saxon was hard to understand, and the wind seemed to carry her words away. In the end he cut across her to ask: 'Is Master Wistan fallen?'

She fell silent, but did not reply. Only when he repeated himself, in a voice that rose above the wind, did Mistress Beatrice shake her head emphatically and say:

'Don't you hear me, Master Edwin? I tell you Master Wistan is well and awaits you at the top of that path.'

The news filled him with relief, and he broke into a run, but then a giddiness quickly overtook him, obliging him to stop before he had even reached the path. He steadied himself, then glancing back, saw the old couple had taken a few steps in his direction. Edwin noticed now how frail they seemed. There they were standing together in the wind, each leaning against the other, looking far older than when he had first met them. Did they have strength left to descend the mountainside? But now they were gazing at him with an odd expression, and behind them, the goat too had ceased its restless activity to stare at him. A strange thought went through Edwin's mind, that he was at that moment covered head to toe in blood, and this was why he had become the object of such scrutiny. But when he glanced down, though his clothes were marked with mud and grass, he saw nothing unusual.

The old man suddenly called out something. It was in the Britons' tongue and Edwin could not understand. Was it a warning? A request? Then Mistress Beatrice's voice came through the wind.

'Master Edwin! We both beg this of you. In the days to come, remember us. Remember us and this friendship when you were still a boy.'

As he heard this, something else came back to Edwin: a promise made to the warrior; a duty to hate all Britons. But surely Wistan had not meant to include this gentle couple. And now here was Master Axl, raising a hand uncertainly into the air. Was it in farewell or an attempt to detain him?

Edwin turned away, and this time when he ran, even with the wind pushing from one side, his body did not fail him. His mother was gone, most likely gone beyond all retrieving, but the warrior was well and waiting for him. He continued to run, even as the path grew steeper and the ache in his knee grew worse.

Chapter Seventeen

They came riding through the rainstorm as I sheltered under the pines. No weather for a pair so long in years and the sagging horse no less weary. Does the old man fear for the animal's heart with one more step? Why else halt in the mud with twenty paces still to the nearest tree? Yet the horse stands with patience under the downpour as the old man lifts her down. Could they perform the task more slowly were they painted figures in a picture? 'Come, friends,' I call to them. 'Hurry and take shelter.'

Neither hears me. Perhaps it's the hiss of the rain or is it their age seals their ears? I call again, and now the old man looks about him and sees me at last. Finally she slides down into his arms, and though she's but a thin sparrow, I see he's barely strength left to hold her. So I leave my shelter, and the old man turns in alarm to see me splash across the grass. But he accepts my assistance, for wasn't he about to sink to the earth, his good wife's arms still circling his neck? I take her from him and hurry back to the trees, she no burden to me at all. I hear the old man panting at my heels. Perhaps he fears for his wife in the arms of a stranger. So I set her down with care, to show I mean them only friendship. I place her head against the soft bark, and well sheltered above, even if a drop or two still falls around her.

The old man crouches beside her, speaking words of encouragement, and I move away, not wishing to intrude on their intimacy. I stand again at my old spot where the trees meet the open ground, and watch the rain sweep across the moorland. Who can blame me sheltering from rain like this? I will easily make up time on my journey, and be all the better for the weeks of unbroken toil to come. I hear them talk at my back, yet what am I to do? Step into the rain to be beyond their murmurings?

‘It’s just the fever talking, princess.’

‘No, no, Axl,’ she says. ‘It comes back to me, something more. How did we ever forget? Our son lives on an island. An island seen from a sheltered cove, and surely near us now.’

‘How can that be, princess?’

‘Don’t you hear it, Axl? I hear it even now. Isn’t that the sea near us?’

‘Just the rain, princess. Or maybe a river.’

‘We forgot it, Axl, with the mist over us, but now it starts to clear. There’s an island near, and our son waits there. Axl, don’t you hear the sea?’

‘Just your fever, princess. We’ll find shelter soon and you’ll be fine again.’

‘Ask this stranger, Axl. He knows this country better than us. Ask if there’s not a cove nearby.’

‘He’s just a kind man came to our aid, princess. Why should he have any special wisdom of such things?’

‘Ask him, Axl. What harm can it do?’

Do I remain silent? What am I to do? I turn and say, ‘The good lady’s right, sir.’ The old man starts, and there’s fear in his eyes. A part of me wishes to fall silent again; to turn away and watch the old horse standing steadfast in the rain. Yet now I’ve spoken I must go on. I point beyond the spot where they huddle.

‘A path there, between those trees, leads down to a cove such as the one the lady speaks of. For the most part covered in shingle, though when the tide’s low, as it will be now, the pebbles give way to sand. And as you say, good lady. There’s an island a little way out to sea.’

They watch me in silence, she with a weary happiness, he with mounting fear. Will they not say anything? Do they expect me to tell more?

‘I’ve watched the sky,’ I say. ‘This rain will clear shortly and the evening will be a fine one. So if you wish me to row you over to the island, I’d be pleased to do so.’

‘Didn’t I tell you, Axl!’

‘Are you then a boatman, sir?’ the old man asks solemnly. ‘And can it be we met somewhere before?’

‘I’m a boatman, sure enough,’ I tell him. ‘It’s more than I can remember if we met before, for I’m obliged to ferry so many and for long hours each day.’

The old man looks more fearful than ever, holds his wife close as he crouches beside her. Judging it best to change the topic, I say:

‘Your horse still stands in the rain. Even though he’s untethered and nothing to stop him seeking the nearby trees.’

‘He’s an old battlehorse, sir.’ The old man, happy to leave talk of the cove, speaks with quick eagerness. ‘He keeps his discipline, even though his master’s no more. We must see to him in time, the way we lately promised his brave owner. But just now I worry for my dear wife. Do you know where we may find shelter, sir, and a fire to warm her?’

I cannot lie and I have my duty. ‘As it happens,’ I reply, ‘there’s a small shelter found on this very cove. It’s one I stitched myself, a simple roof of twigs and rags. I left a fire smouldering beside it this last hour and it’ll not be beyond reviving.’

He hesitates, searching my face carefully. The old woman’s eyes are now closed and her head rests on his shoulder. He says, ‘Boatman, my wife spoke just now in a fever. We’ve no need of islands. Better we shelter beneath these friendly trees till the rain's gone, then we'll journey on our way. '

'Axl, what are you saying?' the woman says, opening her eyes. 'Hasn't our son waited long enough? Let this good boatman lead us to the cove. '

The old man hesitates still, but feels his wife shiver in his arms, and his eyes look to me with desperate entreaty.

'If you wish,' I say, 'I'll carry the good lady and make the way to the cove easier. '

'I'll carry her myself, sir,' he says, like one defeated yet defiant. 'If she's not able to go by her own feet, then she'll go in my arms. '

What to say to this, the husband now almost as weak as the wife?

'The cove's not far,' I say gently. 'But the way down's steep, with pits and twisted roots. Please allow me to carry her, sir. It's the safest thing. You'll walk close beside us where the way allows. Come, when the rain eases, we'll hurry down, for see how the good lady trembles for cold. '

The rain stopped before long and I carried her down the hill-path, the old man stumbling behind, and when we came out to the beach, the dark clouds were swept to one side of the sky as if by an impatient hand. The reddish hues of evening all across the shore, a foggy sun falling towards the sea, and my boat rocking out in the waves. With another show of gentleness, I laid her down under the rude cover of dried skins and branches, placing her head against a cushion of mossy rock. He comes fussing about her even before I can step away.

'See there,' I say, and crouch beside the slumbering fire. 'There's the island. '

Only a small turn of the head gives the woman a view of the sea, and she lets out a soft cry. He must turn on the hard pebbles, and stares bewildered here and there at the waves.

‘There, friend,’ I say. ‘Look there. Midway between the shore and the horizon.’

‘My eyes aren’t so good,’ he says. ‘But yes, I believe I see it now. Are those the tops of trees? Or jagged rocks?’

‘They’ll be trees, friend, for it’s a gentle place.’ I say this all the while breaking twigs and attending the fire. They both look out to the island and I kneel down, the pebbles harsh against my bones, to blow at the embers. This man and woman, did they not come of their own will? Let them decide their own paths, I say to myself.

‘Do you feel the warmth now, princess?’ he cries. ‘You’ll soon be yourself again.’

‘I see the island, Axl,’ she says, and how can I but intrude upon this intimacy? ‘That’s where our son awaits. So strange how we ever forgot such a thing.’

He mumbles a reply and I see he grows troubled again. ‘Surely, princess,’ he says, ‘we’re not yet decided. Do we really want to cross to such a place? Besides, we’ve no way to pay for our passage, for we left the tin and coins with the horse.’

Am I to remain silent? ‘That’s no matter, friends,’ I say. ‘I’ll gladly take what’s owed later from the saddle. That steed won’t wander far.’ Some may call this cunning, but I spoke from simple charity, knowing well I would never come upon the horse again. They talked on in gentle voices, and I kept my back to them, attending to the fire. For do I wish to intrude on them? Yet she lifts her voice, and one more steady than before.

‘Boatman,’ she says. ‘There’s a tale I once heard, perhaps as a small child. Of an island full of gentle woods and streams, yet also a place of strange qualities. Many cross to it, yet for each who dwells there, it’s as if he walks the island alone, his neighbours unseen and unheard. Can this be true of the island now before us, sir?’

I go on breaking twigs and placing them carefully about the flame. ‘Good lady, I know of several islands to fit such a description. Who knows if this one is among them?’

An evasive answer, and one to give her boldness. ‘I also heard, boatman,’ she says, ‘there are times when these strange conditions cease to prevail. Of special dispensations granted certain travellers. Did I hear right, sir?’

‘Dear lady,’ I say, ‘I’m just a humble boatman. It’s not for me to talk of such matters. But since there’s no one else here, let me offer this. I’ve heard it said there may be certain times, perhaps during a storm such as the one just passed, or on a summer’s night when the moon’s full, an islander may get a sense of others moving beside him in the wind. This may be what you once heard, good lady.’

‘No, boatman,’ she says, ‘it was something more. I heard it said a man and woman, after a lifetime shared, and with a bond of love unusually strong, may travel to the island with no need to roam it apart. I heard they may enjoy the pleasures of one another’s company, as they did through all the years before. Could this be a true thing I heard, boatman?’

‘I’ll say it again, good lady. I’m just a boatman, charged with ferrying over those who wish to cross the water. I can speak only of what I observe in my daily toil.’

‘Yet there’s no one here now but you to guide us, boatman. So I ask this of you, sir. If you now ferry my husband and me, can it be we’ll not be parted, but free to walk the island arm in arm the way we go now?’

‘Very well, good lady. I’ll speak to you frankly. You and your husband are a pair as we boatmen rarely set eyes upon. I saw your unusual devotion to each other even as you came riding through the rain. So there’s no question but that you’ll be permitted to dwell on the island together. Be assured on that point.’

‘What you say fills me with happiness, boatman,’ she says, and appears to sag in relief. Then she says, ‘And who knows? During a storm, or on a calm moonlit night, Axl and I may glimpse our son close by. Even speak with him a word or two.’

The fire now burning steadily I rise to my feet. ‘See there,’ I say, pointing out to sea. ‘The boat stirs in the shallows. But I keep my oar hidden in a nearby cave, dipped in a rockpool where tiny fish circle. Friends, I’ll go now to fetch it, and while I’m gone, you may talk here between you, unhindered by my presence. Let’s have you come to your decision once and for all if this is a voyage you wish to make. Now I’ll leave you a moment.’

But she will not release me so easily. ‘One word more before you go, boatman,’ she says. ‘Tell us if when you return, before you’ll consent to ferry us, you intend to question us each in turn. For I heard this was the way among boatmen, to discover those rare ones fit to walk the island unseparated.’

They both gaze at me, the evening light upon their faces, and I see his filled with suspicion. I meet her eyes, not his.

‘Good lady,’ I say, ‘I’m grateful for this reminder. In my haste I may easily have neglected what I’m bound by custom to do. It’s as you say, yet in this case only for the sake of tradition. For as I said, I saw from the first how you were a pair tied by an extraordinary devotion. Now excuse me, friends, for my time grows short. Have your decision for my return.’

So I left them then, and walked across the evening shore till the waves grew loud and the pebbles turned underfoot to wet sand. Whenever I looked back at them, I saw the same sight, if each time a little smaller: the grey old man, crouched in solemn conference before his woman. Of her I could see little, for the rock she leant on hid all but the rise and fall of her hand as she spoke. A devoted couple, but I had my duty, and I went on to the cave and the oar.

When I came back to them, the oar upon my shoulder, I could see their decision in their eyes even before he said, 'We ask you to take us to the island, boatman.'

'Then let's hasten to the boat, for I'm already much delayed,' I say, and move away as though to hurry towards the waves. But then I turn back, saying, 'Ah, but wait. We must first go through this foolish ritual. Then, friends, let me propose this. Good sir, if you'd rise now and walk a little way from us. Once you're out of hearing, I'll speak briefly with your gentle wife. She needn't stir from where she sits. Then in time I'll come to you wherever you stand on this beach. We'll soon be done and return here to fetch this good lady to the boat.'

He stares at me, a part of him now longing to trust me. He says at last, 'Very well, boatman, I'll wander a moment about this shore.' Then to his woman, 'We'll be parted but an instant, princess.'

'There's no concern, Axl,' she says. 'I'm much restored, and safe under this kind man's protection.'

Away he goes, walking slowly to the east of the cove and the great shadow of the cliff. The birds scatter before him, but return quickly to peck as before at their seaweed and rock. He limps slightly, and his back bent like one close to defeat, yet I see still some small fire within him.

The woman sits before me looking up with a soft smile. What am I to ask?

‘Don’t fear my questions, good lady,’ I say. I would wish now for a long wall nearby, to which to turn my face even as I speak to her, but there’s only the evening breeze, and the low sun on my face. I crouch before her, as I saw her husband do, pulling my robe up to my knees.

‘I don’t fear your questions, boatman,’ she says quietly. ‘For I know what I feel in my heart for him. Ask me what you will. My answers will be honest, yet prove only one thing.’

I ask a question or two, the usual questions, for have I not done this often enough? Then every now and then, to encourage her and to show I attend, I ask another. But there’s hardly the need, for she speaks freely. She talks on, her eyes sometimes closing, her voice always clear and steady. And I listen with care, as is my duty, even as my gaze goes across the cove, to the figure of the tired old man pacing anxiously among the small rocks.

Then remembering the work awaiting me elsewhere, I break into her recollections, saying, ‘I thank you, good lady. Let me now hurry to your good husband.’

Surely he begins to trust me now, for why else wander so far from his wife? He hears my footsteps and turns as from a dream. The evening glow upon him, and I see his face no longer filled with suspicion, but a deep sorrow, and small tears in his eyes.

‘How goes it, sir?’ he asks quietly.

‘A pleasure to listen to your good lady,’ I reply, matching my voice to his soft tones, though the wind grows unruly. ‘But now, friend, let’s be brief, so we can be on our way.’

‘Ask what you will, sir.’

‘I have no searching question, friend. But your good wife just now recalled a day the two of you carried eggs back from a market. She said she held them in a basket before her, and you walked beside her, peering into the basket all the way for fear her steps would injure the eggs. She recalled the time with happiness. '

'I think I do too, boatman,' he says, and looks at me with a smile. 'I was anxious for the eggs because she'd stumbled on a previous errand, breaking one or two. A small walk, but we were well contented that day. '

'It's as she remembers it,' I say. 'Well then, let's waste no more time, for this talk was only to satisfy custom. Let's go fetch the good lady and carry her to the boat. '

And I begin to lead the way back to the shelter and his wife, but now he goes at a dreary pace, slowing me with him.

'Don't be afraid of those waves, friend,' I say, thinking here's the source of his worry. 'The estuary's well protected and no harm can come between here and the island. '

'I'll readily trust your judgement, boatman. '

'Friend, as it happens,' I say, for why not fill this slow journey with a little more talk? 'There was a question I might have asked just now had we more time. Since we walk together this way, would you mind my telling you what it was? '

'Not at all, boatman. '

'I was simply going to ask, was there some remembrance from your years together still brought you particular pain? That's all it was. '

'Do we still speak as part of the questioning, sir? '

'Oh no,' I say. 'That's over and finished. I asked the same of your good wife earlier, so it was merely to satisfy my own curiosity. Remain silent on it, friend, I take no offence. Look there.' I point to a rock we are passing.

'Those aren't mere barnacles. With more time, I'd show how to prise them from the rockside to make a handy supper. I've often toasted them over a fire.'

'Boatman,' he says gravely, and his steps slow further still. 'I'll answer your question if you wish. I can't be certain how she answered, for there's much held in silence even between those like us. What's more, until this day, a she-dragon's breath polluted the air, robbing memories both happy and dark. But the dragon's slain and already many things grow clearer in my mind. You ask for a memory brings particular pain. What else can I say, boatman, than it's of our son, almost grown when we last saw him, but who left us before a beard was on his face. It was after some quarrel and only to a nearby village, and I thought it a matter of days before he returned.'

'Your wife spoke of the same, friend,' I tell him. 'And she said she's to blame for his leaving.'

'If she convicts herself for the first part of it, there's plenty to lay at my door for the next. For it's true there was a small moment she was unfaithful to me. It may be, boatman, I did something to drive her to the arms of another. Or was it what I failed to say or do? It's all distant now, like a bird flown by and become a speck in the sky. But our son was witness to its bitterness, and at an age too old to be fooled with soft words, yet too young to know the many strange ways of our hearts. He left vowing never to return, and was still away from us when she and I were happily reunited.'

'This part your wife told me. And how soon after came news of your good son taken by the plague swept the country. My own parents were lost in that same plague, friend, and I remember it well. But why blame yourself for it? A plague sent by God or the devil, but what fault lies with you for it?'

'I forbade her to go to his grave, boatman. A cruel thing. She wished us to go together to where he rested, but I wouldn't have it. Now many years have passed and it's only a few days ago we set off to find it, and by then the she-dragon's mist had robbed us of any clear knowledge of what we sought. '

'Ah, so that's it,' I say. 'That part your wife was shy to reveal. So it was you stopped her visiting his grave. '

'A cruel thing I did, sir. And a darker betrayal than the small infidelity cuckolded me a month or two. '

'What did you hope to gain, sir, preventing not just your wife but even yourself grieving at your son's resting place? '

'Gain? There was nothing to gain, boatman. It was just foolishness and pride. And whatever else lurks in the depths of a man's heart. Perhaps it was a craving to punish, sir. I spoke and acted forgiveness, yet kept locked through long years some small chamber in my heart that yearned for vengeance. A petty and black thing I did her, and my son also. '

'I thank you for confiding this, friend,' I say to him.

'And perhaps it's as well. For though this talk intrudes in no part on my duty, and we speak now as two companions passing the day, I confess there was before a small unease in my mind, a feeling I'd yet to hear all there was. Now I'll be able to row you with a carefree contentment. But tell me, friend, what is it made you break your resolve of so many years and come out at last on this journey? Was it something said? Or a change of heart as unknowable as the tide and sky before us? '

'I've wondered myself, boatman. And I think now it's no single thing changed my heart, but it was gradually won back by the years shared between us. That may be all it was, boatman. A wound that healed slowly, but heal it did. For there was a morning not long ago, the dawn brought with it the first signs of this spring, and I watched my wife still asleep though the sun already lit our chamber. And I knew the last of the darkness had left me. So we came on this journey, sir, and now my wife recalls our son crossing before us to this island, so his burial place must be within its woods or perhaps on its gentle shores. Boatman, I've spoken honestly to you, and I hope it doesn't cast your earlier judgement of us in doubt. For I suppose there's some would hear my words and think our love flawed and broken. But God will know the slow tread of an old couple's love for each other, and understand how black shadows make part of its whole.'

'Don't worry, friend. What you told me merely echoes what I saw when you and your wife first came through the rain on that weary steed. Well, sir, no more talk, for who knows if another storm will come our way. Let's hurry to her and carry her to the boat.'

She sits asleep at the rock with a look of contentment, the fire smoking beside her.

'I'll carry her myself this time, boatman,' he says. 'I feel my strength restored to me.'

Can I allow this? It will make my task no easier. 'These pebbles make hard walking, friend,' I say. 'What will be the cost of your stumbling as you carry her? I'm well used to the work, for she'll not be the first to need carrying to a boat. You can walk beside us, talking to her as you wish. Let it be like when she carried those eggs and you went anxiously beside her.'

The fear returns to his face. Yet he replies quietly, 'Very well, boatman. Let's do as you say.'

He walks at my side, muttering encouragement to her. Do I stride too swiftly? For now he lags behind, and as I carry her into the sea I feel his hand grasp desperately at my back. Yet this is no place to loiter, for my feet must discover the quay where it hides beneath the chilly water's surface. I step onto the stones, the lapping waves grow shallow again, and I enter the boat, hardly tilting though I carry her in my arms. My rugs near the stern wet from the rain. I kick away the soaked early layers and lay her down gently. I leave her sitting up, her head just beneath the gunwale, and search the chest for dry blankets against the sea wind.

I feel him climb into the boat even as I wrap her and the floor rocks with his tread. 'Friend,' I say, 'you see the waters grow more restless. And this is but a small vessel. I daren't carry more than one passenger at a time.'

I see the fire in him well enough now, for it blazes through his eyes. 'I thought it well understood, boatman,' he says, 'my wife and I would cross to the island unseparated. Didn't you say so repeatedly, and this the purpose of your questions?'

'Please don't misunderstand, friend,' I say. 'I speak only of the practical matter of crossing this water. It's beyond question the two of you will dwell on the island together, going arm in arm as you've always done. And if your son's burial place is found in some shaded spot, you may think of placing wild flowers about it, such as you'll find growing around the island. There'll be bell heather, even marigold in the woodland. Yet for this crossing today, I ask you to wait a while longer back on the shore. I'll see to it the good lady's comfortable on the opposite one, for I know a spot close to the boat's landing where three ancient rocks face one another like old companions. I'll leave her there well sheltered, yet with a view of the waves, and hasten back to fetch you. But leave us for now and wait on the shore a moment longer.'

The red glow of the sunset on him, or is it still the fire in his gaze? 'I'll not step off this boat, sir, while my wife sits within it. Row us over together as you promised. Or must I row myself?'

‘I hold the oar, sir, and it remains my duty to pronounce how many may ride in this vessel. Can it be, despite our recent friendship, you suspect some foul trickery? Do you fear I’ll not return for you?’

‘I accuse you of nothing, sir. Yet many rumours abound of boatmen and their ways. I mean no offence, but beg you take us both now, and no more dallying.’

‘Boatman,’ comes her voice, and I turn in time to see her hand reach at the empty air as though to find me there, though her eyes remain closed. ‘Boatman. Leave us a small moment. Let my husband and I speak alone a while.’

Dare I leave the boat to them? Yet surely she now speaks for me. The oar firm in my hands, I step past him over the boards and into the water. The sea rises to my knee soaking the hem of my robe. The vessel’s well tied and I have the oar. What mischief can come of it? Still I dare not wade far, and though I look to the shore and remain still as a rock, I find I again intrude on their intimacy. I hear them over the quiet lapping waves.

‘Has he left us, Axl?’

‘He stands in the water, princess. He was reluctant to leave his boat and I’d say he’ll not give us long.’

‘Axl, this is no time to quarrel with the boatman. We’ve had great fortune coming upon him today. A boatman who looks so favourably on us.’

‘Yet we’ve often heard of their sly tricks, isn’t that so, princess?’

‘I trust him, Axl. He’ll keep his word.’

‘How can you be so sure, princess?’

‘I know it, Axl. He’s a good man and won’t let us down. Do as he says and wait for him back on the land. He’ll come for you soon enough. Let’s do it this way, Axl, or I fear we'll lose the great dispensation offered us. We're promised our time together on the island, as only a few can be, even among those entwined a lifetime. Why risk such a prize for a few moments of waiting? Don't quarrel with him, or who knows next time we'll face some brute of a man? Axl, please make your peace with him. Even now I fear he grows angry and will change his mind. Axl, are you still there?'

'I'm still before you, princess. Can it really be we're talking of going our ways separately?'

'It's only for a moment or two, husband. What does he do now?'

'Still stands there unmoving, showing only his tall back and shining head to us. Princess, do you really believe we can trust this man?'

'I do, Axl.'

'Your talk with him just now. Did it go happily?'

'It went happily, husband. Wasn't it the same for you?'

'I suppose it was, princess.'

The sunset on the cove. Silence at my back. Dare I turn to them yet?

'Tell me, princess,' I hear him say. 'Are you glad of the mist's fading?'

'It may bring horrors to this land. Yet for us it fades just in time.'

'I was wondering, princess. Could it be our love would never have grown so strong down the years had the mist not robbed us the way it did? Perhaps it allowed old wounds to heal.'

'What does it matter now, Axl? Mend your friendship with the boatman, and let him ferry us over. If it's one of us he'll row, then the other, why quarrel with him? Axl, what do you say?'

‘Very well, princess. I’ll do as you say.’

‘So leave me now and return to the shore.’

‘I’ll do so, princess.’

‘Then why do you still linger, husband? Do you think boatmen never grow impatient?’

‘Very well, princess. But let me just hold you once more.’

Do they embrace now, even though I left her swaddled like a babe? Even though he must kneel and make a strange shape on the boat’s hard floor? I suppose they do, and for as long as the silence remains, I dare not turn. The oar in my arms, does it cast a shadow in this swaying water? How much longer? At last their voices return.

‘We’ll talk more on the island, princess,’ he says.

‘We’ll do that, Axl. And with the mist gone, we’ll have plenty to talk of. Does the boatman still stand in the water?’

‘He does, princess. I’ll go now and make my peace with him.’

‘Farewell then, Axl.’

‘Farewell, my one true love.’

I hear him coming through the water. Does he intend a word for me? He spoke of mending our friendship. Yet when I turn he does not look my way, only to the land and the low sun on the cove. And neither do I search for his eye. He wades on past me, not glancing back. Wait for me on the shore, friend, I say quietly, but he does not hear and he wades on.

第一章

我们最终给小女儿取名叫妮基。这不是缩写，这是我和她父亲达成的妥协。真奇怪，是他想取一个日本名字，而我——或许是出于不愿想起过去的私心——反而坚持要英文名。他最终同意妮基这个名字，觉得还是有点东方的味道在里头。

妮基今年早些时候来看过我，四月的时候，那时天还很冷，细雨绵绵。也许她本打算多待几天，我不知道。但我住的乡下房子和房子里的安静让她不安，没多久，我就看出来她急着想回伦敦自己的生活中去。她不耐烦地听着我的古典唱片，随意地翻着一本本杂志。经常有她的电话，她大踏步走过地毯，瘦瘦的身材挤在紧紧的衣服里，小心地关上身后的门，不让我听到她的谈话。五天后她离开。

直到来的第二天她才提起景子。那是一个灰暗的、刮着风的早晨，我们把沙发挪近窗户，看雨水落在花园里。

“你指望过我去吗？”她问。“我是说葬礼。”

“不，没有。我知道你不会来。”

“我真的很难过，听到她的死讯。我差点就来了。”

“我从不指望你会来。”

“别人不知道我到底是怎么了，”她说，“我没有告诉任何人。我想我那时觉得很丢脸。别人不会真的理解的，他们不可能理解我的感受。姐妹之间应该是很亲近的，不是吗？你可能不太喜欢她们，可你还是和她们很亲近。但是我和她根本不是这样。我甚至都不记得她长什么样了。”

“是啊，你很久没见到她了。”

“我只记得她是一个让我难受的人。这就是我对她的印象。可是我真的很难过，听到她的消息。”

也许不单单是这里的安静驱使我女儿回伦敦去。虽然我们从来不长谈景子的死，但它从来挥之不去，在我们交谈时，时刻萦绕在我们的心头。

和妮基不同，景子是纯血统的日本人，不止一家报纸马上就发现了这个事实。英国人有一个奇特的想法，觉得我们这个民族天生爱自杀，好像无需多解释；因为这就是他们报导的全部内容：她是个日本人，她在自己的房间里上吊自杀。

那天晚上，我站在窗前，看着外面漆黑一片，突然听到妮基在我身后问：“你在看什么呢，妈妈？”她坐在房间那头的长靠背椅上，膝盖上放着一本软皮书。

“我在想以前认识的一个人。以前认识的一个女人。”

“在你……来英国之前认识的？”

“我在长崎时认识的，要是你指的是这个。”她还看着我，我就补充道，“很久以前了。在我认识你父亲之前很久。”

这下她好像满意了，嘟囔了句什么，继续看她的书。从很多方面来说，妮基是个孝顺的孩子。她不仅仅是来看看景子死后我的情况；她是出于一种使命感来的。这几年，她开始欣赏起我过去的某些方面。她来是准备告诉我：事实仍旧如此，我不应后悔从前做的那些决定。简而言之，是来安慰我说我不应为景子的死负责。

如今我并不想多谈景子，多说无益。我在这里提起她只是因为这是今年四月妮基来我这里时的情形，正是在那段时间里，我在这么多年后又想起了佐知子。我和佐知子并不很熟。事实上我们的友谊就只有几个星期，那是在许多年前的一个夏天。

那时最坏的日子已经过去了。美国大兵还是和以前一样多——因为朝鲜半岛还在打仗——但是在长崎，在经历了那一切之后，日子显得平静安详。空气中处处感觉到变化。

我和丈夫住在东边的城郊，离市中心有一小段电车的距离。旁边有一条河，我听说战前河边有一个小村庄。然而炸弹扔下来以后就只剩下烧焦的废墟。人们开始重建家园，不久，四栋混凝土大楼拔地而起，每栋有四十间左右的独立公寓。这四栋楼里，我们这一栋是最后建的，也宣告重建计划暂告一段落；公寓楼和小河之间是一片好几英亩废弃不用的空地，尽是污泥和臭水沟。很多人抱怨这会危害健康，确实，那里的污水很吓人。一年到头死水积满土坑，到了夏天还有让人受不了的蚊子。时不时看见有公务人员来丈量土地、在本子上写写画画，但是好几个月过去，没有任何动静。

这些公寓楼的住户都和我们相似——都是刚结婚的年轻夫妇，男人们在规模渐大的公司里找到了不错的工作。很多公寓都是公司所有，然后以优惠的价格租给员工们。每间公寓都是一样的：榻榻米的地板，西式的浴室和厨房。房子不大，天气暖和一点时又不凉快，不过大家普遍感到心满意足。可是我记得公寓楼里又确实有一种临时过渡的感觉，好像我们都在等着有一天我们会搬到更好的房子里去。

一座小木屋在战争的炮火和政府的推土机中幸存下来。我从窗户就能看见木屋独自伫立在那片空地的尽头，就在河岸边。是乡下常见的那种木屋子，斜斜的瓦屋顶都快碰到地面了。我不干活时经常站在窗前盯着它看。

从佐知子搬到那里受到的关注看来，我不是唯一一个盯着木屋看的人。有一天大家看到两个男的在那里忙活，大家议论着他们是不是政府的人。后来就听说有个女的带着她的小女儿住进了那里，我自己也看见过她们几次，看见她们小心翼翼地走过臭水坑。

我是在快夏天时——那时我已经怀孕三四个月了——第一次看见那辆破旧的白色美国大车的，车子正跌跌撞撞地穿过空地朝河边开去。那时天已经快黑了，小屋后的最后几缕阳光滑过金属的车身。

后来一天下午，我在电车站听到两个女人在谈论刚搬进河边那间破房子的那个女人。其中一个对另一个说，那天早上她跟那个女人说话，却受到了明显的冷落。听话的人也觉得新来的人似乎不是很友善——大概是傲慢。她们觉得那个女人至少有三十岁了，因为那个孩子至少十岁了。第一个女人说陌生人是东京腔，肯定不是长崎人。她们说了一会儿她的那个“美国朋友”，然后第一个女人又回头说这个陌生人早上是如何冷落她的。

如今我并不怀疑那时和我住在同一区的女人里有的也受了很多苦，也充满了痛苦、可怕的回忆。但是看着她们每天围着自己的丈夫和孩子忙得团团转，那时的我很难相信——她们的生活也曾经历了战争的不幸和噩梦。我从来不想显得不友好，可是大概我也从来没有刻意努力显得友好。因为那时我还是想独自一人、不被打扰。

那天我饶有兴趣地听着那两个女人谈论佐知子。我至今还清楚地记得那天下午电车站的情景。六月的雨季终于过去，天开始放晴，湿透了的砖头和水泥都开始变干。我们站在一座铁路桥上，山脚下铁路的一侧是鳞次栉比的屋顶，好像一座座房子从山坡上滚下来。越过这些房子，再过去一些，就是我们的公寓楼，像四根水泥柱子立在那

里。当时我隐隐地同情佐知子，有时我远远地看着她，感觉她不太合群，而我觉得自己可以理解她的那种心情。

那年夏天我们成了朋友，至少有一小段时间她允许我介入她的私事。如今我已经记不得我们是怎么认识的。我只记得一天下午，我在出公寓区的小路上看见她在我前头。我急忙走上前去，而佐知子不缓不慢地迈着步子。那时我们应该已经知道对方的名字，因为我记得我边往前走边叫她。

佐知子转过身站住、等我追上她。“什么事？”她问。

“找到你太好了，”我有点上气不接下气地说，“你女儿，我出来时看见她在打架。就在水沟旁。”

“她在打架？”

“和另外两个孩子。其中一个男的。看起来打得挺凶。”

“我知道了。”说完她继续往前走去。我跟在她的旁边。

“我不是想吓你，”我说，“可真的看起来打得挺凶。事实上我想我看到你女儿脸划伤了。”

“我知道了。”

“就在那里，空地边上。”

“你想他们还在打吗？”她继续往山上走。

“呃，我想不打了。我看见你女儿跑了。”

佐知子看着我，笑了笑。“你不习惯看小孩子打架？”

“呃，我想小孩子是会打架。但我想我应该告诉你一声。还有你看，我想你女儿不是要去上学。另外两个孩子继续往学校的方向走，而她却回河那边去了。” 佐知子没有回答，继续往山上走。

“其实，”我接着说，“我以前就想跟你说了。是这样的，最近我时常看见你的女儿。我在想，她是不是偶尔会逃学。”

小路在山顶上分岔了。佐知子停住脚步，转向我。

“谢谢你的关心，悦子，”她说，“你真好心。我肯定你会是一位好母亲。”

之前我和电车站的女人一样认为佐知子三十岁上下。然而也许是她略显年轻的身材骗了大家，她的脸远不止三十岁。她用一副觉得有点好笑的神情看着我，而她神情里的某些东西让我尴尬地笑了笑。

“很感激你这样来找我，”她又说道，“可是你瞧，我现在忙得很。我得到城里去。”

“知道了。我只是想最好来跟你说一声，没别的。”

她又用那副觉得好笑的神情看了我一会儿，然后说：“太谢谢你了。现在请原谅，我得到城里去了。”她欠了欠身，走向通往电车站的小路。

“只是她的脸划伤了，”我稍稍提高了声音，说。“而且河那边有些地方很危险。我想最好来跟你说一声。”

她再次转过身来，看着我。“你要是有空，悦子，”她说，“今天能帮我看一下女儿吗？我下午会回来。我肯定你们能处得来。”

“要是你希望如此，我不介意。我得说，你女儿看上去还很小，不能让她一整天自己一个人待着。”

“太谢谢你了，”佐知子再次说道，然后又笑了笑。“没错，我肯定你会是一位好母亲。”

和佐知子分开后，我走下山，穿过公寓区，很快回到了我们的公寓楼外，面对着那片空地。我没有看见小女孩，正打算进去，突然看见河边有动静。万里子刚才肯定是蹲下去了，因为现在我可以清楚地看见她小小的身影穿过泥地。刚开始，我想忘了这整件事，回去干活。但是最后，我迈开步子向她走去，小心地避开水沟。

我印象那是我第一次跟万里子说话。所以很可能她那天早上的反应并没有什么奇怪的地方，毕竟我对她来说是陌生人，她很有理由不相信我。要是我那时确实感到一种奇怪的不安，那也只不过是对万里子的态度的自然反应。

那时雨季刚过去几个星期，河水还很高、很急。空地和河岸之间有一道陡坡，小女孩就站在坡底的泥地里，那里的土显然湿得多。万里子穿着一件普通的到膝盖的棉布连衣裙，剪得短短的头发让她的脸像个男孩子。她抬头看着站在泥土坡上头的我，没有笑容。

“你好，”我说，“我刚刚和你母亲说话。你肯定就是万里子吧。”

小女孩还是盯着我，没有吭声。之前我以为她的脸受伤了，现在看清楚那只是被土弄脏了。

“你怎么没去上学？”我问。

她还是不说话。过了一会儿才说：“我不上学。”

“可小孩子应该上学。你不想去吗？”

“我不上学。”

“可你妈妈没有送你到这里的学校去吗？”

万里子没有回答。相反，她往后退了一步。

“小心，”我说。“你会掉到河里的。很滑。”

她还是站在坡底抬起头来瞪着我。我看见她的小鞋子躺在旁边的泥土里。她的脚丫子和鞋子一样陷在泥土里。

“我刚刚和你母亲说过话，”我说，亲切地笑了笑，“她说你可以到我家来等她。就在那里，那栋楼里。你可以来尝尝我昨天做的蛋糕。好不好，万里子？你还可以跟我说说你自己。”

万里子还是小心地看着我。然后，她一边目不转睛地看着我，一边弯下腰捡起鞋子。一开始我以为她这是要跟我走。可是她还是一直盯着我，我才明白她是抓住鞋子随时准备跑掉。

“我不会伤害你的，”我紧张地笑了笑，说，“我是你妈妈的朋友。”

我记得这就是那天上午我和万里子间发生的一切。我不想吓着她，不久就转身回去。这孩子的反应着实让我失望；那时，这类小事都会让我对做母亲产生怀疑。我对自己说，这不是什么大不了的事，将来我一定有机会和这个小女孩做朋友。而后来，我是在大约两周后的一个下午才又和万里子说话的。

那天下午之前，我从没进去过那间房子，佐知子请我去时我很意外。我马上想到她是有事才请我去的，而事实确实如此。

屋里很整洁，但是很破旧。屋顶的木梁看上去很旧、不牢固，到处都有一股霉味。房前的大部分拉门都打开了，好让阳光从走廊照进来。尽管如此，房子里的大部分地方还是照不到太阳。

万里子躺在离阳光最远的角落里。我看见她身旁的影子里有什么东西在动，走近一看，一只大猫蜷缩在榻榻米上。

“你好，万里子，”我说，“你还记得我吗？”

她停下抚摸猫的手，抬起头来。

“我们以前见过，”我又说，“记得吗？在河边。”

小女孩好像没有认出我来。她看了我一会儿，又继续抚摸她的猫。我听见在我身后，佐知子正在屋子中间地面的炉子上准备泡茶。我正想走过去，突然听见万里子说：“它快生小猫了。”

“哦，真的？太好了。”

“你要一只小猫吗？”

“谢谢你，万里子。我得看看。可是我肯定它们全都会找到好地方的。”

“你为什么不要一只？”孩子说，“另外一个女人说她要一只。”

“我得看看，万里子。另外一位女士是谁？”

“另外一个女人。在河对岸。她说她要一只。”

“可是我想河对岸没有人住，万里子。那里只有树和林子。”

“她说她要带我去她家。她住在河对岸。我没有跟她去。”

我看了她一会儿。突然我想到了什么，笑了出来。

“那是我，万里子。你不记得了吗？那天你妈妈进城去时我叫你去我家。”

万里子再次抬起头来看我。“不是你，”她说，“是另外一个女人。她住在河对岸。她昨晚来这儿了。那时妈妈不在。”

“昨晚？你妈妈不在？”

“她说她要带我去她家，可是我没有跟她去。因为天黑了。她说我们可以拿那个灯笼”——她指了指挂在墙上的灯笼——“可是我没有跟她去。因为天黑了。”

在我身后，佐知子站起身来，看着她女儿。万里子不说话了，转过身去，继续抚摸她的猫。

“我们到走廊去吧，”佐知子对我说，手里端着盛着茶具的托盘。“那里比较凉快。”

我们去了走廊，把万里子留在角落里。在走廊上看不到河水，但是可以看到斜坡和河边潮湿的泥土。佐知子在垫子上坐下，开始倒茶。

“这里到处都是流浪猫，”她说，“对要出生的这些小东西我可没那么乐观。”

“是啊，很多野猫野狗，”我说，“真不像话。万里子的猫是在这里捡的吗？”

“不，我们带来的。我是不想带它来，可是万里子不听。”

“你们从东京一路带来？”

“哦，不。我们在长崎住了快一年了。在城市的另一头。”

“哦，真的？我才知道。你和……和朋友一起住？”

佐知子停下正在倒茶的手，看着我，双手握着茶壶。我在她眼里又看见了上次她看着我的那种觉得好笑的神情。

“我想你搞错了，悦子，”她终于说道，又接着倒茶。“我们住在我伯父家。”

“我向你保证，我只是……”

“是啊，当然。所以没什么不好意思的。”她笑了笑，把茶递给我。“抱歉，悦子，我并没有要取笑你。其实，我有事要找你。一点小忙。”佐知子开始给自己倒茶，这时，她的态度变得严肃许多。倒完茶，她放下茶壶，看着我。“是这样的，悦子，一些事情没有照我计划的那样。结果，我发现自己钱不够了。不是什么大数目，你知道。就一点点。”

“我明白的，”我压低声音，说。“你一定很艰难，带着万里子。”

“悦子，能帮帮我吗？”

我鞠了鞠躬。“我自己有些积蓄，”我说，几乎是耳语。“我很乐意帮忙。”

可是让我想不到的是，佐知子大笑起来。“太谢谢你了，”她说，“可是我并不是要叫你借钱给我。我有别的打算。前几天你提到一个开面店的朋友。”

“你是指藤原太太？”

“你说她需要一个帮手。像这样的小工作就可以帮我大忙。”

“这个嘛，”我拿不准地说，“你要的话我问问。”

“那真是太好了。”佐知子看了我一会儿。“可是你好像很没有把握，悦子。”

“没有的事。我下次看到她就帮你问。可是我在想”——我再次压低声音——“白天谁照顾你女儿呢？”

“万里子？她可以在店里帮忙。她很能干。”

“我相信她行。可是您看，我不知道藤原太太会怎么想。毕竟其实万里子白天应该上学才对。”

“我向你保证，悦子。万里子决不会造成什么麻烦。况且下星期学校就都放假了。我会保证不让她碍事的。这点你可以放心。”

我再次鞠了鞠躬。“我下次看到她就帮你问。”

“太感谢你了。”佐知子呷了一口茶。“其实我想让你这几天就去找你的朋友。”

“我试试看。”

“你真是太好了。”

我们沉默片刻。之前我就注意到了佐知子的茶壶；是用浅色瓷器做的，做工很精细。我手里的茶杯也是同一种精美的材料做的。精美的茶具与破旧的屋子和走廊下方泥泞的土地形成了强烈的对比。我之前就注意到这点，喝茶时这种感觉更加明显。当我抬起头来时才发现佐知子在看着我。

“我用惯了好陶瓷，悦子，”她说，“你瞧，我不是一直都住在这种”——她朝屋子挥了挥手——“这种地方。当然了，我不介意吃一点苦。可是对有些东西，我还是很讲究的。”

我欠了欠身，没说什么。佐知子也研究起她手里的杯子来。她小心地转动着杯子，仔细观察，然后突然说道：“我想可以说我偷了这

套茶具。可是我想伯父他不会太想它们的。”

我有些吃惊地看着她。佐知子把杯子放下，挥手赶走几只苍蝇。

“你说你住在你伯父家？”我问。

她慢慢地点了点头。“一栋很漂亮的房子。花园里还有池塘。和眼前的这一切很不一样。”

一时间我们两个人都往屋子里看。万里子还像我们出来时那样躺在她的角落里，背对着我们，好像在跟她的猫说话。

我们俩沉默了片刻后，我说：“我还不知道河对面住着人。”

佐知子转头看着远处的树木。“不，我没见过那里有人。”

“可是帮你看孩子的那个人。万里子说她是从那里来的。”

“我没有别人帮我看孩子，悦子。我在这谁也不认识。”

“刚才万里子跟我说有个女的……”

“请别当真。”

“你是说那是万里子编出来的？”

有那么一小会儿，佐知子像是在想些什么。然后她才说：“对。是她编出来的。”

“我想小孩子经常干这种事。”

佐知子点点头。“你当妈妈后，悦子，”她笑着说，“你就得习惯这种事了。”

接着我们聊到别的事上去了。那时我们的友谊刚刚开始，我们只谈论一些无关紧要的小事。直到几个星期后的一天早上，我才再次听到万里子提起那个来找她的女人。

第二章

那时，回到中川一带仍然会令我悲喜交加。这里山峦起伏，再次走在一座座房子间那些狭窄、陡峭的街道上总是给我一种深深的失落感。虽然我不会想来就来，但总也无法长久地远离这里。

拜访藤原太太同样会给我这种感觉；因为她是我母亲最好的朋友之一，一位和蔼的女士，头发已经花白。她的面店开在一条热闹的小巷子里；店门口有一块水泥地，屋顶伸了出去，客人就在那里，坐在木桌和长凳上吃面。她的客人主要是午休和下班时来光顾的上班族，其他钟点则没有什么客人。

那天下午我有点紧张，因为那是佐知子到那边工作后我第一次去。我在担心——替她们两个都担心——尤其是因为我不知道藤原太太是不是真的需要帮手。那天很热，小巷里都是人。进到阴凉处我真高兴。

藤原太太见到我很高兴。她让我在一张桌子旁坐下，然后去取茶。那天下午没有什么客人——可能一个都没有，我不记得了——也没有看见佐知子。藤原太太取来茶时，我问她：“我的朋友在这里做得怎么样？她还行吧？”

“你的朋友？”藤原太太转头朝厨房的门看去。“她在削土豆。我想很快就会出来了。”然后，好像转念一想，她站起来，朝厨房门口走了几步。“佐知子太太，”她喊道，“悦子来了。”我听见里面传来一声应答。

藤原太太回来坐下，伸过手来摸我的肚子。“开始变明显了，”她说，“你现在开始可得当心啊。”

“反正我也没干多少活，”我说。“我日子很清闲。”

“那就好。我记得我怀第一胎时，遇上了地震，挺大的地震。我那时怀的是和夫。可他后来也健康得很。别太担心，悦子。”

“我会的。”我朝厨房门口看了一眼，“我的朋友在这里做得还好吧？”

藤原太太顺着我的目光朝厨房看去。然后又转向我，说：“我想还好。你们是好朋友，对吗？”

“是的。我在现在住的地方没有多少朋友。我很高兴认识了佐知子。”

“是啊。那太好了。”她坐在那里，看了我几秒钟。“悦子，你今天很累的样子。”

“我想是很累。”我笑了笑。“我想是怀孕的缘故。”

“是啊，自然。”藤原太太还是看着我的脸。“但我是说你好像——不太开心。”

“不开心？才没有呢。我只是有点累，我没有比现在更开心了。”

“那就好。你现在得多想想开心的事。孩子啊。未来啊。”

“是的，我会的。想到孩子我就很开心。”

“很好。”她点点头，但还是盯着我。“心态决定一切。一位母亲应该得到她想要的所有的照顾，她需要以一种积极的心态来抚养孩子。”

“我确实很期待。”我笑了笑，说。厨房里传出声响，我又一次看过去，但还是没有看见佐知子。

“我每周都看见一个年轻的女子，”藤原太太接着说道。“怀孕六七个月了。我每次去墓地都看见她。我没有跟她说过话，但是她看上去很悲伤，和她的丈夫站在那里。真是羞愧啊，一个孕妇和她的丈夫每周日不做别的，就想着死人。我知道他们是敬爱死者，但仍旧不应该这样。他们应该想着未来才是。”

“我想她很难忘记过去。”

“我想是吧。我很同情她。但是现在他们应该向前看。每周都来墓地，这样怎么能把孩子带到这个世上来呢？”

“大概不能。”

“墓地不是年轻人去的地方。和夫有时会陪我去，但我从来没有要他一定要去。他现在也应该向前看了。”

“和夫还好吗？”我问。“他的工作顺利吗？”

“工作很顺利。下个月他就会得到晋升。但他也该想想别的事了。他不可能永远年轻。”

突然我看见外面太阳下来来往往的人群中站着一个小小的身影。

“哎呀，那不是万里子吗？”我问。

藤原太太坐在椅子上转过头去。“万里子，”她喊道。“你到哪里去了？”

万里子站在马路上不动。但不一会儿，她走进阴凉的水泥地，走过我们，在旁边的一张空桌子坐下。

藤原太太先是看着万里子，然后不安地看了我一眼，好像要说什么，但是她站了起来，朝小女孩走去。

“万里子，你到哪里去了？”藤原太太压低了声音，但我还是听得见。“你不可以老是这样子乱跑。你妈妈很生气。”

万里子看着自己的手指，没有抬头看藤原太太。

“还有万里子，请你不要那样子跟客人说话。你不知道那样子很没礼貌吗？你妈妈很生气。”

万里子还是看着自己的手指。在她身后，佐知子出现在厨房门口。我记得那天早上看见佐知子时，我再次惊讶于她比我原先以为的要老得多；她的长发都塞进了头巾里，这样一来，眼角和嘴角的皱纹变得更加明显。

“你妈妈来了，”藤原太太说，“我想她一定很生气。”

小女孩还是坐在那里，背对着她妈妈。佐知子很快地瞥了她一眼，笑着转向我。

“你好啊，悦子，”她说，优雅地鞠了一躬。“在这里见到你真是惊喜。”

在水泥地的另一头，两个上班模样的女人走进来坐下。藤原太太朝她们鞠了个躬，又转向万里子。

“你为什么不到厨房去一会儿呢？”她小声说。“你妈妈会告诉你要做些什么的。很简单的。我相信像你这么聪明的女孩子一定会做的。”

万里子没有反应。藤原太太抬头看看佐知子，一刹那，我觉得她们冷冷地交换了眼神。然后藤原太太转身向她的客人走去。看来她认识她们，边走过水泥地，边熟识地跟她们打招呼。

佐知子走过来在桌子边坐下。“厨房里真热啊，”她说。

“你在这里做得怎么样？”我问她。

“做得怎么样？哦，悦子，这真是很有趣的经历，在面店里工作。我得说，我从没想过有一天我会在这种地方擦桌子。但是”——她很快地笑了笑——“很有趣。”

“我知道了。那万里子呢，她习惯吗？”

我们都往万里子的桌子看去；那孩子还是看着她的手。

“哦，她很好，”佐知子说。“当然了，她有时候很好动。但是你怎么可能要她安静地待在这里呢？真遗憾，悦子，但是你看，我的女儿并没有我的幽默感。她不觉得这里很有趣。”佐知子笑了笑，又看看万里子。然后她站起来，朝她走去。

她静静地问：“藤原太太跟我说的是真的吗？”

小女孩没有回答。

“她说你又对客人不礼貌了。是真的吗？”

万里子还是不做声。

“她跟我说的是真的吗？万里子，人家问你话时你要回答。”

“那个女人又来了，”万里子说。“昨晚。你不在的时候。”

佐知子看了她女儿一两秒钟，然后说：“我想你现在最好进去。进去，我来告诉你要干些什么。”

“她昨天晚上又来了。她说她要带我去她家。”

“进去，万里子，到厨房里去等我。”

“她要带我去她住的地方。”

“万里子，进去。”

水泥地的那边，藤原太太和那两个女人为了什么事大笑起来。万里子还是看着她的手掌。佐知子走开了，回到我这张桌子。

“请原谅，悦子，”她说。“我有东西在煮。我一会儿就回来。”然后她降低声音加了句：“你不能指望她会对这种地方感兴趣，不是吗？”她笑了笑，走向厨房。到了门口，她再次转向她的女儿。

“快点，万里子，进来。”

万里子没有动。佐知子耸耸肩，进去了。

同样在那段时间，初夏时，绪方先生到我们这里来了，那是他那年早些时候搬出长崎后第一次到这里来。他是我的公公，可是我却老是把当作“绪方先生”，即使在我自己也姓绪方的时候。那时，我已经认识他很久了——比我认识二郎还要久——一直叫他“绪方先生”，我从来不习惯叫他“爸爸”。

他们父子俩长得不像。如今回想起二郎，我的眼前出现一个矮矮、结实的、表情严肃的男人；我丈夫对外表一丝不苟，即使在家里，也经常穿衬衫、打领带。现在我还能想见他坐在客厅的榻榻米上，弓着背吃早、晚餐，就像我以前常见的那样。我记得他老是弓着背——像拳击手那样——不管站着还是走路。相反，他的父亲总是坐得直直的，神情轻松、和蔼。那年夏天他来的时候，他的健康状况还很好，身体硬朗、精神矍铄，不像有那么大岁数。

我记得一天早上，他第一次提到松田重夫。那时他已经住了几天了，显然觉得这间小四方屋子很舒适，想多住几天。那是一个明媚的早晨，我们仨在吃早餐，二郎还没去上班。

“你们的同学会，”他对二郎说。“在今晚，是吧？”

“不，是明天晚上。”

“你会见到松田重夫吗？”

“重夫？我想不会见到。他不常参加这些活动。我很抱歉得出去，不能陪你，爸爸。我想不去的，但是那样会让他们不高兴。”

“别担心。悦子会把我照顾得很好的。而且这些活动也很重要。”

“我想请几天假，”二郎说，“可是眼下我们很忙。我说过了，订单刚好在您来的那天来了。真是讨厌。”

“哪儿的话，”他父亲说。“我完全理解。我自己前不久也还在为工作忙碌呢。我没有那么老，你知道。”

“没有，当然没有。”

我们安静地吃着早餐。突然绪方先生说：

“那么你觉得明天不会遇到松田重夫。但是你们偶尔还是会碰面吧？”

“最近不常见了。长大以后大家就各走各的了。”

“是啊，都是这样。学生们都各走各的，然后发现很难保持联系。所以这些同学会就很重要。人不应该那么快就忘记以前的感情。应该时不时地看看过去，才能更好地认识事情。没错，我觉得明天你当然要去。”

“也许爸爸星期天的时候还在这里，”我丈夫说。“那样我们也许能去哪里走走。”

“嗯，好啊。好主意。但是如果你得上班，那一点儿也不要紧。”

“不，我想我星期天没事。很抱歉眼下我太忙了。”

“明天你们请了以前的老师没？”绪方先生问。

“据我所知没有。”

“真是遗憾啊，这种场合老师不太常被邀请。我以前有时也被邀请。在我年轻的时候，我们总是不忘要邀请老师。我认为这样才恰当。这是一个机会让老师看看他的劳动成果，让学生们向他表示感激。我认为老师应该出席才对。”

“是，也许您说得对。”

“现在的人很容易就忘记他们的教育归功于谁。”

“是，您说得很对。”

我丈夫吃完早餐，放下筷子。我给他倒了些茶。

“有一天我碰到了一件奇怪的小事情，”绪方先生说。“现在想想我觉得挺有趣。一天我在长崎的图书馆看见了一本期刊——一本教师期刊。我没听说过那个期刊，我教书的时候没有那个期刊。读那本期刊，你会以为现在日本的教师都变成共产主义者了。”

“显然共产主义现在在日本越来越流行，”我丈夫说。

“你的朋友松田重夫在上面发表了文章。想想我看见文章里提到我的名字时是多么惊讶。我没想到现在还有人记得我。”

“我肯定在长崎还有很多人记得爸爸，”我插了一句。

“太奇怪了。他提到远藤老师和我，说到我们的退休。要是我没理解错的话，他暗示说这一行没了我们真是庆幸。事实上，他甚至觉得我们在战争结束后就该被解职了。太奇怪了。”

“您确定是同一个松田重夫吗？”二郎问。

“同一个。栗山高中的。太奇怪了。我记得他以前常来我们家和您玩。您妈妈特别喜欢他。我问图书馆的管理员可不可以买一本，她说她会帮您订一本。到时我拿给您看。”

“这不是忘恩负义吗？”我说。

“当时我可惊讶了，”绪方先生转向我说。“是我把他介绍给栗山高中的校长的。”

二郎喝完茶，用毛巾擦了擦嘴。“太遗憾了。我说过了，我有一段时间没见到重夫了。请原谅，爸爸，但是我得走了，不然要迟到了。”

“哦，当然。工作顺利。”

二郎走下玄关，开始穿鞋。我对绪方先生说：“像爸爸这种地位的人一定会听到一些批评。这是很自然的。”

“是啊，”他说，笑了起来。“别在意这件事，悦子。我一点都不介意。只是二郎要去参加同学会，让我又想起了这件事。不知道远藤读到这篇文章没有。”

“祝您今天愉快，爸爸，”二郎在玄关那里说道。“可以的话我会争取早点回来。”

“胡说什么。别为我操心。工作重要。”

那天上午早些时候，绪方先生从房里出来，穿着外套、打着领带。

“您要出去吗，爸爸？”我问。

“我想去见见远藤老师。”

“远藤老师？”

“对，我想去看看他最近过得怎么样。”

“可是您不是要在吃午饭前去吧？”

“我想我最好马上就去，”他看了看表，说。“远藤现在住的地方离长崎市区有点远。我得搭电车。”

“那让我给您准备一份便当吧，不用多长时间。”

“哎呀，谢谢了，悦子。那我就等几分钟。其实我是想让你帮我准备便当的。”

“那您就说出来，”我站起身来，说。“您不能老用这种暗示来得到您想要的东西，爸爸。”

“可是我知道你会领会我的意思的，悦子。我对你有信心。”

我走向厨房，穿上拖鞋，走进铺着瓷砖的地面。几分钟后，拉门开了，绪方先生出现在门口。他就坐在门口看我准备便当。

“你在给我做什么呢？”

“没什么。只是昨晚的剩菜。这么短的时间里，不可能要求更好的了。”

“但是我肯定你还是会剩菜变得很可口。你拿蛋要做什么？那个不是剩菜吧？”

“我要加一个煎蛋。您运气好，爸爸，我那么慷慨。”

“煎蛋。你一定要教我怎么做煎蛋。难不难？”

“很难。您这个年纪是学不来的。”

“可是我很想学。还有，你说‘您这个年纪’是什么意思？我还年轻，还可以学很多新东西。”

“您真的打算成为一名厨师吗，爸爸？”

“没什么可笑的。这些年来，我渐渐懂得欣赏做菜了。它是一门艺术，我确信这点，就像绘画或诗歌一样高雅。不能因为它的产品很快就消失了而不懂得欣赏。”

“您要坚持画画，爸爸。您画得越来越好了。”

“画画啊。”他叹了一口气。“画画已经不能像以前那样给我满足感了。不，我想我应该学做煎蛋做得跟你一样好，悦子。我回福冈前你一定要教我。”

“一旦您学会了，您就不会再觉得它是什么艺术了。也许女人应该把这些事情保密。”

他笑了起来，像是在对自己笑，然后又安安静静地看我做事情。

“你想是男孩还是女孩呢，悦子？”过了好一会儿他问道。

“我一点儿都不在乎。要是男孩就取您的名字。”

“真的？一言为定？”

“现在再想想，我又拿不准了。我不记得爸爸的名字了。征尔——这个名字不好听。”

“那只是因为我长得丑，悦子。我记得有一个班的学生说我长得像河马。可是你不应该光看外表就觉得不行。”

“没错。我们还得看看二郎是怎么想的。”

“是。”

“可是我希望我的儿子能取您的名字，爸爸。”

“那可真让我高兴。”他笑着朝我微微鞠了一躬。“可我是知道家人坚持要用自己的名字给孩子取名是多么讨人厌的。我记得我和老伴给二郎起名字的时候，我想用我一个叔叔的名字，可是孩子他妈不喜欢这种用亲戚的名字给孩子取名的做法。当然，后来她让步了。景子是个很固执的人。”

“景子是个好名字。要是女孩，也许可以叫景子。”

“你可不能这么匆忙地做决定。你要是没有说到做到，会让老人家很失望的。”

“对不起，我想到了就说出来了。”

“而且，悦子，我相信还有其他人的名字你想用。其他跟你亲近的人。”

“也许吧。不过要是男孩，我想用您的名字。您以前就像我的父亲。”

“我现在不像你的父亲了？”

“像，当然像。可是不一样。”

“我希望二郎是个好丈夫。”

“当然是了。我再幸福不过了。”

“孩子也会让你幸福。”

“是。怀孕的时机再好不过了。现在我们在这里安定下来了，二郎的工作也很顺利。这个时候要孩子最好。”

“那么你觉得幸福？”

“是的，我很幸福。”

“很好。我真替你们两个高兴。”

“给，做好了。”我把涂漆的便当盒递给他。

“啊对了，剩菜，”他说，接过去，深深地鞠了一躬。他微微打开盖子。“但看上去很可口。”

我终于回到客厅。绪方先生在玄关那里穿鞋。

“告诉我，悦子，”他头也不抬地说。“你见过这个松田重夫吗？”

“一两次。我们结婚后他来过。”

“但是现在他和二郎不是什么特别要好的朋友吧？”

“不是。我们寄寄贺年卡，仅此而已。”

“我要叫二郎写信给他。重夫应该道歉。要不然我就要叫二郎跟这个年轻人断交。”

“我知道了。”

“我本想早点跟他说，就在刚才吃早饭的时候。但是这种事最好留到晚上再说。”

“也许您说得对。”

绪方先生再次感谢我做的便当，然后出门了。

结果，那天晚上他并没有提起这件事。他们两个回家时都很累了，一整晚大都在看报纸，很少说话。只有一次绪方先生提到了远藤老师。那是在吃晚饭的时候，他轻描淡写地说了句：“远藤看来不错，只是想念他的工作。毕竟教书是他的生命。”

那天晚上躺在床上准备睡觉时，我对二郎说：“我希望爸爸对我们的接待还满意。”

“不然他还想要怎么样？”我丈夫说。“你要是这么不放心，干吗不带他出去走走？”

“你周六下午要上班吗？”

“怎么可能不上班？我进度已经落后了。他刚好挑在最不方便的时候来。实在太糟了。”

“但是我们周日还是可以出去，对吧？”

印象中我好像没有得到回答，虽然我久久地仰望着漆黑的房间、等着。辛苦地工作了一天之后，二郎总是很累，不想说话。

不管怎样，看来我是瞎操心绪方先生了，因为那次是他待得最久的一次。我记得佐知子来敲门的那天晚上他还在。

佐知子穿着一件我之前从没见过的裙子，肩膀上披着一条围巾。脸上仔仔细细地化了妆，但是有一小撮头发松了，垂到了脸上。

“很抱歉打扰你，悦子，”她笑着说。“我在想万里子是不是在这里。”

“万里子？怎么了，没有啊。”

“哦，没关系。你没有见到过她？”

“抱歉，没有。她丢了？”

“不是的，”她笑了笑，说，“只是我回去时她不在屋子里，没别的。我肯定我很快就能找到她。”

我们在玄关那里说话，我突然发觉二郎和绪方先生在看这边，就介绍了佐知子。他们相互鞠了躬。

“真让人担心，”绪方先生说。“也许我们最好马上打电话给警察。”

“没这个必要，”佐知子说。“我肯定我会找到她的。”

“可是也许安全起见，还是打一下好。”

“真的不用”——佐知子的声音里有一丝生气——“没有必要。我肯定我会找到她的。”

“我帮你找，”我边说边穿上外套。

我丈夫不满地看着我，好像要说什么，但又没说。最后，他说：“天快黑了。”

“真的，悦子，不必这么大惊小怪的，”佐知子说。“不过要是你不介意出来一下的话，我感激不尽。”

“要小心，悦子，”绪方先生说。“要是没有很快找到孩子，就给警察打电话。”

我们下了楼。外面热气还未散尽，空地那头，太阳落得低低的，照亮了泥泞的水沟。

“公寓这一带你找了吗？”我问。

“没有，还没有。”

“那我们找找看吧。”我开始加快步子。“万里子可能待在什么朋友家吗？”

“我想不可能。真的，悦子”——佐知子笑了笑，拉住我的胳膊——“没必要这么慌张。她不会有事的。其实，悦子，我来找你是想告诉你一些事情。你瞧，事情终于定下来了。我们过几天就要去美国了。”

“美国？”也许是因为佐知子抓住我的胳膊，也许是因为吃惊，我停住了脚步。

“对，美国。你肯定没听说过这么个地方。”看到我吃惊她好像很开心。

我又走了起来。公寓楼这一带都是水泥路，偶尔会遇见几棵细细的小树，是楼盖好了以后种的。头顶上，大部分窗户的灯都亮了。

“你不再问我别的了吗？”佐知子追上我，说。“你不问我为什么要去？要和谁去？”

“若这是你想要的，我真替你高兴，”我说。“可是也许我们应该先找到您的女儿。”

“悦子，你得明白，我没有什么丢脸的。我没有什么好隐瞒的。请你问些你想知道的事吧，我不觉得丢脸。”

“我想也许我们应该先找到您的女儿。我们可以以后再说。”

“好吧，悦子，”她笑了笑，说。“我们先找万里子吧。”

我们找了孩子们玩耍的地方，看了每一栋公寓楼，很快发现我们回到了原来的地方。突然，我看见其中一栋公寓的主入口有两个女人在说话。

“那里的两位太太也许能帮我们，”我说。

佐知子没有动。她朝她们看了看，说道：“我不觉得。”

“但是她们可能见过她。她们可能见过您的女儿。”

佐知子还是看着她们。然后她冷笑一声，耸耸肩，说：“好吧，我们去给她们一些嚼舌根的东西吧。我不在乎。”

我们走过去，佐知子礼貌又镇静地问了她们。两位太太交换了关切的眼神，但是她们都没有看见小女孩。佐知子请她们放心，没什么可担心的，我们就离开了。

“我肯定这下她们高兴了，”她对我说。“现在她们有东西可聊了。”

“我相信她们肯定没有恶意。她们看上去都是真的很关心。”

“你真好，悦子，不过不必跟我说这些。我从来不在乎她们那样的人想什么，现在我更不在乎了。”

我们停住脚步。我看了看四周，又望望公寓的窗户。“她会在哪儿呢？”我说。

“你瞧，悦子，我没有什么丢脸的。我没有什么好瞒着你的。或者是瞒着那些女人。”

“你想我们要不要到河边找一找？”

“河边？哦，我已经找过了。”

“那另一边呢？她可能到对面去了。”

“我想不会，悦子。其实，要是我没猜错的话，她现在已经回去了。大概还很高兴自己惹了这些麻烦。”

“那我们去看看。”

我们回到空地边，太阳已经落到河的下面去了，只能看见河边柳树的轮廓。

“你不用跟着我，”佐知子说。“我很快就会找到她了。”

“没关系。我和你一起去。”

“那好吧。一起走吧。”

我们朝小屋走去。地上凹凸不平，我只穿着木屐，很难走。

“你出去了多久？”我问。佐知子在我前面一两步；她没有回答，我想她可能没有听到，又问了一遍：“你出去了多久？”

“哦，不太久。”

“是多久？半小时？不止？”

“我想大概三四个钟头。”

“我知道了。”

我们一路穿过泥地，尽量当心不踩到臭水坑。快到小屋时，我说：“也许我们应该到对面看一看，以防万一。”

“树林里？我女儿不会在那里的。我们进屋去看看。没必要这么担心，悦子。”她又笑了笑，但是我觉得她的笑声里有丝丝的颤抖。

屋里没有电灯，一片漆黑。我在玄关等着，佐知子进屋去。她叫她女儿的名字，打开连着主室的两个小房间的拉门。我站在玄关，听着她在黑暗里来回走动，然后她回到玄关。

“也许你是对的，”她说。“我们最好到对面看看。”

河边的半空中有很多小虫子。我们静静地朝下游的小木桥走去。走过木桥，对岸就是之前佐知子提到的树林。

我们正走在桥上，佐知子突然转向我，飞快地说道：“我们最后去了酒吧。我们本来是要去看电影的，加里·库珀演的，可是排队的人太多了。城里很挤，又有很多喝醉酒的。最后我们去了酒吧，他们给了我们单独的一间小房间。”

“我知道了。”

“我想你没有去过酒吧吧，悦子？”

“没有，没去过。”

那是我第一次到河对岸去。脚下的泥土很软，甚至感觉要陷下去。这也许只是我的想象，但是那时我在河边觉得凉飕飕的，很不自在，像是感觉到有事要发生。我重新加快脚步，朝前面漆黑的树林走去。

佐知子拉住我的胳膊不让我往前走。我顺着她的目光看见河边草地上离河很近的地方躺着一捆什么东西。模模糊糊地看不清楚，只看见地上有一团比周围草地颜色深的黑影。我的第一反应是要冲过去，却发现佐知子还呆呆地站着，盯着那团东西看。

“那是什么？”我傻乎乎地问。

“是万里子，”她静静地说。当她转过头来看着我时，眼睛里有一种异样的神情。

第三章

也许随着时间的推移，我对这些事情的记忆已经模糊，事情可能不是我记得的这个样子。但是我清楚地记得有一个神秘的咒语把我们两个定住了。天越来越暗，我们呆呆地站在原地，盯着远处河边的那个影子。突然间，咒语解除了，我们两个都跑了起来。跑近时，我看见万里子缩成一团侧躺着，背对着我们。佐知子比我早一点到那里，我怀着孕，行动不方便，等我到时，佐知子已经站在孩子身边了。万里子的眼睛睁着，一开始我还以为她死了。但是后来我看见她的眼睛动了，用奇怪的、空洞的眼神盯着我们。

佐知子单腿跪下，扶起孩子的头。万里子还是那么盯着。

“你没事吧，万里子？”我有点上气不接下气地说道。

她没有回答。佐知子也不做声，检查着她的女儿，把她在怀里翻来翻去，好像她是一个易碎的、没有感觉的洋娃娃。我发现佐知子的袖子上有血，再一看，是万里子身上来的。

“我们最好叫人，”我说。

“不严重，”佐知子说。“只是擦伤。看，伤口不大。”

万里子躺在水沟里，短裙有一面浸在黑色的水里。血从她大腿内侧的伤口流出来。

“怎么了？”佐知子问她女儿。“出什么事了？”

万里子还是盯着她妈妈看。

“她可能吓着了，”我说。“现在最好别问她问题。”

佐知子扶万里子站了起来。

“我们很担心你，万里子，”我说。小女孩狐疑地看了我一眼，转过去，走了起来。她走得很稳；腿上的伤看来并无大碍。

我们往回走，过了木桥，沿着河边走。她们两个走在我前面，没有说话。我们回到小屋时，天已经全黑了。

佐知子把万里子带进浴室。我点燃主室中间的炉子泡茶。除了炉子，刚才佐知子点亮的一盏吊着的旧灯笼是屋子里唯一的亮光，屋里

大部分地方都还是漆黑一片。角落里，几只黑色的小猫仔被我们吵醒，开始骚动不安。它们的爪子在榻榻米上发出沙沙的声音。

再次出现时，母女两人都换上了和服。她们进了隔壁的一间小房间，我又等了一会儿。佐知子的声音透过隔板传了出来。

最后，佐知子一个人出来了。“还是很热，”她说，走过房间，把通向走廊的拉门打开。

“她怎么样了？”我问。

“她没事。伤口没什么。”佐知子在拉门旁坐下来吹风。

“我们要不要把这件事报告警察？”

“警察？要报告什么呢？万里子说她爬树，结果摔倒了，弄了那个伤。”

“这么说她今天晚上没有和什么人在一起？”

“没有。她能和谁在一起呢？”

“那个女人？”我说。

“哪个女人？”

“万里子说的那个女人。你现在还认为是她编出来的吗？”

佐知子叹了口气。“我想不完全是编的，”她说。“是万里子以前见过的一个人。以前，她还很小的时候。”

“可是这个女人今晚会不会在这里呢？”

佐知子笑了笑。“不会的，悦子，不可能。不管怎么说，那个女人已经死了。相信我，悦子，说什么有个女人，都是万里子发难时的小把戏。我已经很习惯她这些小把戏了。”

“可是她为什么要编这些故事呢？”

“为什么？”佐知子耸了耸肩。“小孩子就喜欢做这些。悦子，你自己当了妈妈以后也要习惯这些事情。”

“你肯定她今天晚上没有和什么人在一起？”

“很肯定。我很了解自己的女儿。”

我们都不说话了。蚊子在我们周围嗡嗡叫。佐知子用手掩住嘴打了个哈欠。

“你瞧，悦子，”她说，“我很快就要离开日本了。你好像不是很在意。”

“我当然在意了。而且我很高兴，要是这是你所向往的。不过不会遇到……很多困难吗？”

“困难？”

“我是指，搬到另一个国家，语言、习惯都不同。”

“我明白你的意思，悦子。但是说真的，我不觉得有什么可担心的。你瞧，我听说过很多有关美国的事，对美国并不完全陌生。至于语言嘛，我已经会说很多了。我和弗兰克都说英语。我在美国住一阵子后，就能像美国女人一样说话了。我真的不觉得有什么可担心的。我知道我能行。”

我微微鞠了一躬，但没说什么。两只小猫朝佐知子坐的地方走来。她看了它们一会儿，然后笑了笑。“当然了，”她说，“有时我也在想事情会怎么样呢。但是真的”——她对我笑了笑——“我知道我能行。”

“其实，”我说，“我担心的是万里子。她会怎么样呢？”

“万里子？哦，她没问题的。你了解小孩子。他们比大人更能适应新环境，不是吗？”

“不过对她来说仍是个很大的变化。她准备好了吗？”

佐知子不耐烦地叹了口气。“说真的，悦子，你觉得我难道没有考虑过这些吗？你以为我决定要离开这个国家前没有首先考虑女儿的利益吗？”

“当然，”我说，“你一定会仔仔细细地考虑。”

“对我来说，女儿的利益是最重要的，悦子。我不会做出有损她的未来的决定。我已经仔细地考虑过了整件事情，我也和弗兰克商量过了。我向你保证，万里子没事的。不会有问题的。”

“可是她的学习呢，会怎么样呢？”

佐知子又笑了。“悦子，我又不是要到深山老林去。美国有学校。而且你要明白，我的女儿非常聪明。她爸爸出身名门，我这边也

是，我的亲戚都是很有地位的人。悦子，你不能因为……因为眼前的事物就认为她是什么贫农的孩子。”

“没有。我从来没有……”

“她很聪明。你没有见过她真正的样子，悦子。在眼前这种环境里，小孩子自然有时有点笨拙。但你要是我伯父的家里头看见她，你就会发现她真正的品质。大人跟她说话时，她回答得清楚、流利，不会像很多小孩子那样傻笑或者扭扭捏捏。而且绝没有这些小把戏。她去上学，跟最优秀的孩子交朋友。我们还给她请了一位家庭教师，老师对她的评价很高。她这么快就能赶上真是叫人吃惊。”

“赶上？”

“这个”——佐知子耸耸肩——“很不幸，万里子的学习总是时不时地被打断。这个事，那个事，我们又经常搬家。但是我们现在比较困难，悦子。要不是战争，要是我丈夫还活着，万里子就能过上我们这种地位的家庭应有的生活。”

“是的，”我说。“没错。”

佐知子可能是听出我的语气不大对，抬起头来看着我。当她往下说时，语气变紧了。

“我不用离开东京的。悦子，”她说。“但是我离开了，为了万里子。我大老远地来我伯父家住，是因为我认为这样对我女儿最好。我本来不用这么做的，我根本用不着离开东京。”

我鞠了一躬。佐知子看了我一会儿，然后转头凝视着屋外漆黑的一片。

“可是如今你离开了你伯父家，”我说。“现在又即将要离开日本。”

佐知子生气地看着我。“你为什么这么说话呢，悦子？你为什么不能祝福我呢？就因为你妒忌？”

“我是祝福你的。而且我向你保证我……”

“万里子在美国会过得很好的，你为什么不肯相信？那里更适合孩子的成长。在那里她的机会更多，在美国女人的生活要好得多。”

“我向你保证我替你高兴。至于我自己，我再心满意足不过了。二郎的工作很顺利，现在又在我们想要的时候有了孩子……”

“她可以成为女商人，甚至是女演员。这就是美国，悦子，什么事情都有可能。弗兰克说我也有可能成为女商人。在那里这些事情都有可能发生。”

“我相信。只是就我而言，我对我现在的生活非常满意。”

佐知子看着那两只小猫在她身旁的榻榻米上乱抓。有几分钟我们两个都没有说话。

“我得回去了，”我打破沉默。“他们要担心我了。”我站起来，可是佐知子仍然看着那两只小猫。“你们什么时候离开？”我问。

“这几天。弗兰克会开车来接我们。周末我们就会坐上船了。”

“那么我想你不会再去给藤原太太帮忙了吧。”

佐知子抬起头来看我，冷笑道：“悦子，我要去美国了。我不再需要到面店工作了。”

“我知道了。”

“其实，悦子，要请你转告藤原太太。我不会再见到她了。”

“你不自己跟她说吗？”

她不耐烦地叹了口气。“悦子，难道你不能体会对我这样的人来说每天在面店里工作有多讨厌吗？不过我不抱怨，要我做什么，我就做什么。但是现在都结束了，我不想再见到那个地方了。”一只小猫在抓佐知子和服的袖子。佐知子用手背重重地拍了它一下，小家伙急忙往回跑过榻榻米。“所以请向藤原太太转达我对她的问候，”她说。“也祝她生意兴隆。”

“我会的。现在请原谅，我得走了。”

这次，佐知子站起来，送我到玄关。

“我们离开前我会去道别的，”我穿鞋时她说。

一开始这好像只是一个很普通的梦；我梦见了前一天看见的事——我们看见一个小女孩在公园里玩。第二天晚上，我又做了同样的梦。其实，这几个月里，我做了几次这样的梦。

那天下午，我和妮基到村子里去时，看见小女孩在玩秋千。那是妮基来的第三天，雨小了，变成毛毛细雨。我有几天没有出门了，走

在蜿蜒的小路上，户外的空气令我神清气爽。

妮基走得很快，每走一步，窄窄的皮靴子都咯咯响。虽然我也可以走得很快，但是我更喜欢慢慢走。妮基，我认为，应该懂得走路本身的快乐。再者，虽然她在这里长大，却体会不到乡下给人的感觉。我们边走，我边把我的想法原原本本地说给她听。她反驳说这里不是真正的乡下，只是迎合住在这里的有钱人的一种居住模式。我想她说得对；我一直没敢到英国北部的农业区去，妮基说，那里才是真正的乡下。尽管如此，这些年来，我越来越喜欢这些小路带来的平静和安详。

到村子后，我带妮基去我有时光顾的茶馆。村子不大，只有几间旅馆和商店；茶馆开在街角，在一家面包店楼上。那天下午，妮基和我坐在靠窗的桌子，我们就是从那里看见小女孩在底下的公园玩。我们看见她爬上一个秋千，朝坐在旁边长椅上的两个女人喊。她是个活泼可爱的小女孩，穿着绿色橡胶雨衣和小橡胶雨靴。

“也许你很快就会结婚生孩子，”我说。“我怀念小孩子。”

“这是我最不想做的事了，”妮基说。

“好吧，我想你还太年轻。”

“这和年不年轻没关系。我就是不喜欢一群小孩子在你旁边大喊大叫。”

“别担心，妮基，”我笑了，说。“我不是在强迫你生孩子。我刚刚突然心血来潮想当外婆，没别的。我想也许你能让我当上外婆，不过这事不急。”

小女孩站在秋千上，拼命拉链子，可是不知怎么，就是没办法让秋千荡得更高。但是她仍旧笑着，又朝那两个女人喊。

“我的一个朋友刚生了孩子，”妮基说。“她高兴得不得了。我真不明白。那小东西乱喊乱叫的。”

“至少她很开心。你的朋友几岁？”

“十九岁。”

“十九岁？比你还小。她结婚了吗？”

“没有。这有什么差别？”

“可是这样子她肯定不高兴。”

“为什么不高兴？就因为 she 没结婚？”

“是的。还有她才十九岁。我不敢相信这样她会高兴。”

“她结没结婚有什么差别？她想要孩子，所有的事情都是她计划好的。”

“她告诉你的？”

“可是，妈妈，我了解她，她是我的朋友。我知道她想要孩子。”

长椅上的女人站了起来。其中一个喊那个女孩子。小女孩从秋千上下来，跑向她们。

“那孩子的父亲呢？”我问。

“他也很高兴。我记得当他们发现他们有孩子了，我们全都出去庆祝。”

“可是人们总是假装高兴的样子。就像昨天晚上我们在电视上看的那部电影。”

“什么电影？”

“我想你没有在看。你在看你的杂志。”

“哦那个。那电影很烂。”

“是很烂。但我就是这个意思。我肯定没有人在知道有孩子时会像电影里的人那样。”

“说真的，妈妈，我真不知道你怎么能坐得住看那种垃圾。你以前都不习惯看电视。我记得以前我电视看太多，你总是叫我把电视关掉。”

我笑了。“你瞧，我们的角色变了，妮基。我相信你是为我好。你一定不能让我像那样浪费时间。”

我们离开茶馆往回走时，空中乌云密布，雨也变大了。我们刚走过一个小小的火车站不多远，就听见后面有人喊：“谢林汉姆太太！谢林汉姆太太！”

我回头看见一个穿着大衣的小个子女人正急急地走过来。

“我猜是你，”她追上我们，说。“你最近好吗？”她给了我一个灿烂的微笑。

“你好，沃特斯太太，”我说。“很高兴又见到你。”

“看来又是坏天气。哦，你好，景子”——她碰了碰妮基的袖子——“我没注意是你。”

“不是，”我急忙说，“这是妮基。”

“妮基，没错。天啊，你长这么大了，亲爱的。难怪我弄混了。你长这么大了。”

“你好，沃特斯太太，”妮基舒了口气，说。

沃特斯太太住在附近。现在我偶尔才见到她，几年前她教我的两个女儿钢琴。她教了景子好几年，而妮基只在小时候教了一年左右。我很快就发现沃特斯太太的钢琴技术有限，而且她对音乐的总的看法也常常让我生气。比如说，她把肖邦和柴可夫斯基的作品都称为“动听的旋律”。可是她为人和蔼可亲，我不忍心把她换掉。

“你最近怎么样，亲爱的？”她问妮基。

“我？哦，我住在伦敦。”

“哦，是吗？你在那里干什么呢？读书？”

“我其实也没干什么。只是住在那里。”

“哦，我知道了。不过你在那里很开心，是吧？这是最主要的，不是吗？”

“是的，我很开心。”

“那就好，这是最主要的，不是吗？那景子呢？”沃特斯太太转向我。“她最近怎么样？”

“景子？哦，她搬到曼彻斯特去了。”

“哦，是吗？听说那个城市总的来说还不错。她喜欢那里吗？”

“我最近没有她的消息。”

“哦，好吧。我想没有消息就是好消息。景子还弹琴吗？”

“我想还弹。我最近都没有她的消息。”

沃特斯太太终于看出我不想谈论景子，尴尬地笑了笑，放开这个话题。景子离开家的这几年来，每次遇见我，沃特斯太太总是要问起景子。我很明显不想谈论景子，而且到那天下午都还讲不出我女儿在什么地方。但是沃特斯太太从不把这些放在心上。很可能以后我们每次见面，沃特斯太太还会笑着向我打听景子的事。

我们到家时，雨一直淅淅沥沥地下着。

“我想我让你丢脸了，对吗？”妮基对我说。我们又坐在沙发上，看着外面的花园。

“你怎么会这么想？”我说。

“我应该跟她说我正在考虑上大学什么的。”

“我一点都不介意你说自己什么。我不觉得丢脸。”

“我想你不会。”

“不过我想你对她很不耐烦。你从来都不太喜欢她，不是吗？”

“沃特斯太太？哦，我以前很讨厌上她的课。无聊死了。我常常睡着，然后耳边不时有小小的声音，叫你把手指放在这里、这里或这里。是你的主意吗，让我上钢琴课？”

“主要是我的意思。你瞧，以前我对你期望很高。”

妮基笑了。“对不起我没学成。可这得怪你自己。我根本没有学音乐的天赋。我们屋里有个女孩是弹吉他的，她想教我几个和弦，可是我根本就不想学。我想沃特斯太太让我这辈子都讨厌音乐了。”

“将来有一天你可能会重新爱上音乐，那时你就会感激上过那些课了。”

“可是我把学的全忘了。”

“不可能全忘的。那个年纪学的东西是不会全丢掉的。”

“反正是浪费时间，”妮基嘟囔道。她坐在那里看着窗外，过了一会儿，转向我说：“我想很难跟别人说吧。我是指景子的事。”

“我那样说最省事，”我答道。“她着实吓了我一跳。”

“我想是这样。”妮基又面无表情地看着窗外。“景子没有来参加爸爸的葬礼，对吧？”她终于说道。

“你明知道她没去干吗还问？”

“我随口说说，没什么。”

“你是要说因为她没有参加你爸爸的葬礼所以你也不参加她的葬礼？别这么孩子气，妮基。”

“我不是孩子气。我是说事实就是这样。她从来不是我们生活的一部分——既不在我的生活里也不在爸爸的生活里。我从没想过她会来参加爸爸的葬礼。”

我没有回答，我们静静地坐在沙发上。然后妮基说：

“刚才真是不自在，和沃特斯太太说话的时候。你好像很喜欢？”

“喜欢什么？”

“假装景子还活着。”

“我不喜欢骗人。”也许是我的话蹦得太快，妮基好像吓了一跳。

“我知道，”她轻声说。

那天晚上雨下了一整夜，第二天——妮基来的第四天——仍旧淅淅沥沥地下个不停。

“今天晚上我换个房间可以吗？”妮基说。“我可以睡空房间。”我们刚吃完早餐，正在厨房里洗盘子。

“空房间？”我笑了笑。“这里现在都是空房间。你要睡空房间当然可以，没有什么不可以。你不喜欢你的旧房间了？”

“睡在那里我觉得不自在。”

“太没良心了，妮基。我本来希望你还把它当作自己的房间的。”

“我是这么想来着，”她急忙说。“我不是不喜欢那个房间。”她不说了，用干毛巾擦着刀子。最后她终于说：“是另外那间。她的房间。就在正对面，让我觉得不自在。”

我停下手里的事，板着脸看着她。

“我忍不住，妈妈。一想到那间房间就在正对面我就觉得怪怪的。”

“睡空房间去吧，”我冷冷地说。“可是你得自己铺床。”

虽然我对妮基换房间的要求表现得很生气，但是我并不想难为她。因为我自己也曾对那个房间感到不安。在许多方面，那个房间是这栋房子里最好的房间，从那里看果园视野极好。但是很长时间里，它一直是景子极小心守护的私人领域，所以即使在她已经离开了六年后的今天，那里仍然笼罩着一股神秘的空气——这种感觉在景子死后更加强烈。

在她最终离开我们的前两三年，景子把自己关在那个房间里，把我们挡在她的世界之外。她很少出来，虽然有时我们都上床睡觉后我听到她在房子里走动。我猜想她在房间里看杂志，听广播。她没有朋友，也不许我们其他人进她的房间。吃饭时，我把她的盘子留在厨房里，她会下来拿，然后又把自己锁起来。我发现房间里乱糟糟的。有发霉的香水和脏衣服的味道，我偶尔瞥见里面，地上是成堆的衣服和无数的时尚杂志。我只得连哄带骗叫她把衣服拿出来洗。最后我们达成共识：每几个星期，我会在她房间门口看见一袋要洗的衣服，我把衣服洗了，拿回去。后来，大家渐渐习惯了她的做法，而当她偶尔心血来潮冒险到客厅里来时，大家就都很紧张。她每次出来无一例外地都是以争吵收场，不是和妮基吵架，就是和我丈夫吵架，最后她又回到自己的房间里去。

我没有见过景子在曼彻斯特的房间，她死的那个房间。作为一个母亲，这么想可能有点病态，但是听到她自杀的消息时，我脑子里的第一个想法——甚至在我感到震惊之前——是：在他们发现之前她那么吊着多久了。在自己家里，我们都一连几天看不见她；在一个没有人认识她的陌生城市里，更别指望会很快被人发现。后来，验尸官说她已经死亡“好几天了”。是房东太太开的门，她以为景子没有交房租就离开了。

我发现这个画面一直出现在我的脑海里——我的女儿在房间里吊了好几天。画面的恐怖从未减弱，但是我早就不觉得这是什么病态的事了；就像人身上的伤口，久而久之你就会熟悉最痛的部分。

“在空房间里睡我至少能暖和些，”妮基说。

“妮基，你晚上要是觉得冷，把暖气打开就好了。”

“我知道。”她叹了口气。“最近我总是睡不好。我想我老做噩梦，但是醒来后就想不起来了。”

“昨天晚上我做了一个梦，”我说。

“我想可能跟这里的安静有关。我不习惯晚上这么安静。”

“我梦见了那个小女孩。昨天我们看见的那个。公园里那个。”

“我在车上就能睡着，可是我不记得怎么在安静的地方睡觉了。”妮基耸耸肩，把一些餐具扔进抽屉里。“也许在空房间里我能睡得好一点。”

我跟妮基说起这个梦，在我第一次做这个梦的时候。这也许表明我从那时起就觉得这不是一个普通的梦。我肯定从一开始就怀疑——虽然不确定是为什么——这个梦跟我们看见的那个小女孩没多大关系，而是跟我两天前想起佐知子有关。

第四章

一天下午，我丈夫下班回来之前，我正在厨房里准备晚饭，突然听见客厅传来奇怪的声音。我停下手里的活侧耳倾听。声音又响了——是很难听的小提琴声。声音持续了几分钟，然后停了。

当我终于来到客厅时，发现绪方先生正弯着腰坐在棋盘前。夕阳照射进来，尽管开着电风扇，屋里还是湿气很重。我把窗户开得更些。

“你们昨晚没有把棋下完吗？”我走向他，问。

“没有。二郎说他累了。我猜这是他的诡计。你瞧，我在这里把他围住了。”

“这样啊。”

“他仰赖我现在的记性不好了。所以我在温习我的步子。”

“您真是厉害，爸爸。可是我想二郎不会这么狡猾的。”

“也许吧。我敢说现在你比我更了解他。”绪方先生继续研究棋盘，过了一会儿，抬起头来，笑了笑。“你一定觉得很有趣吧。二郎在公司里辛苦工作，而我在家里等他下班回来和我下棋。我就像一个孩子在等爸爸回来。”

“哦，我宁愿您还是下棋的好。您刚才的琴声实在是太可怕了。”

“太没礼貌了。我还希望能感动你呢，悦子。”

小提琴放在旁边的地板上，已经放回盒子里了。绪方先生看着我打开盒子。

“我看见它放在那边的架子上，就擅自拿下来了。”他说。“别担心，悦子。我拿得很小心。”

“我看不一定。正如您说的，爸爸现在像个小孩子。”我拿起小提琴仔细检查。“只不过小孩子够不着那么高的架子。”

我把琴塞到下巴底下。绪方先生一直看着我。

“给我拉一首吧，”他说。“我肯定你拉得比我好。”

“那是肯定的。”我把琴重新放下，搁在一旁。“可是我好久没拉琴了。”

“你是说你都没有练习？太可惜了，悦子。你以前是那么喜欢这个乐器。”

“我想我以前是很喜欢。可现在很少碰了。”

“太不应该了，悦子。你以前是那么喜欢。我还记得以前你三更半夜拉琴，把全家都吵醒了。”

“把全家都吵醒了？我什么时候干过这种事？”

“有，我记得。你刚来我们家住时。”绪方先生笑了笑。“别在意，悦子。我们都原谅你了。现在我想想，你以前最崇拜哪个作曲家来着？是门德尔松吗？”

“是真的吗？我把全家都吵醒了？”

“别在意，悦子。那是好几年前的事了。给我拉一首门德尔松的吧。”

“可是你们干吗不阻止我？”

“只是刚开始的几个晚上。而且我们一点都不介意。”

我轻轻地拨了拨琴弦。音已经走调了。

“我那时肯定成了您的负担，”我静静地说。

“胡说。”

“可是家里其他人。他们肯定觉得我是个疯丫头。”

“他们才不会把你想得这么坏。毕竟最后你跟二郎结了婚。现在好了，悦子，别说这些了。给我拉一首吧。”

“我那时候像什么样子呢，爸爸？我像个疯子吗？”

“你被吓坏了，这是很自然的事。大家都吓坏了，我们这些幸存下来的人。现在，悦子，忘了这些事吧。我很抱歉提起这件事。”

我再次把琴放到下巴底下。

“啊，”他说，“门德尔松。”

我就这么把琴夹在下巴下。过了几秒钟，我放下琴，叹了口气，说：“我现在拉不出来。”

“对不起，悦子。”绪方先生说，声音变沉重了。“也许我不应该碰琴的。”

我抬起头来看他，笑着说：“瞧，小朋友现在知道错了。”

“我在架子上看见它，想起了以前的事。”

“我以后再拉给您听吧。我练习练习。”

他微微地鞠了一躬，眼里又露出了喜悦。

“我会记着你说过的话的，悦子。说不定你还可以教教我。”

“我不能什么都教您，爸爸。您还说您要学做菜。”

“啊对了。还有那个。”

“您下次来的时候我再拉给您听吧。”

“我会记着的，”他说。

那天晚上吃完饭，二郎和父亲坐下来下棋。我收拾完晚餐的东西，拿了些针线活坐下来。棋下到一半时，绪方先生说：

“我刚想到了什么。你不介意的话，我要重新走那步。”

“当然可以，”二郎说。

“可是这样对你很不公平。特别是现在我的形势比你有利。”

“没关系。请重新走那步吧。”

“你不介意？”

“一点儿也不。”

他们继续静静地下棋。

“二郎，”几分钟后绪方先生说，“我在想，信你写了吗？给松田重夫的信？”

我停下手里的针线，抬起头来。二郎还在专心地下棋，他走完那一步才答道：“重夫？哦，还没。我打算写的。但是最近实在是太忙了。”

“当然，我十分理解。我刚好想到这件事，没什么。”

“我最近实在是没时间。”

“当然。不急。我并不是要老缠着你。只是信早点写的好。他那篇文章已经登出来几个星期了。”

“是，当然。您说得很对。”

他们接着下棋。有好几分钟，两个人都没有说话。突然绪方先生说：

“你觉得他会是什么反应呢？”

“重夫？我不知道。我说过了，我现在跟他不熟。”

“你说他加入了共产党？”

“我说不准。我上次见到他时，他确实说支持共产党。”

“真遗憾。不过话说回来，现在日本发生了太多事情让年轻人动摇。”

“是的，的确。”

“现在很多年轻人都被什么思想啊、理论啊冲昏了头。不过他可能会收回前言并道歉的。及时地提醒个人的责任之类的东西也没有。你知道，我怀疑他都没有停下来想过自己在干什么。我想他写那篇文章时是一手拿着笔，一手拿着共产主义的书。他最后会收回前言的。”

“很可能。我最近的工作实在是太多了。”

“当然，当然。工作第一。别为这件事操心。现在，是不是轮到我了？”

他们接着下棋，很少说话。有一次，我听见绪方先生说：“你走的跟我想的一样。你要动动脑筋才能从那里突围。”

他们下了好一会，突然有敲门声。二郎抬起头来，给我递了个眼色。我放下针线，站了起来。

我打开门，看见两个男人笑嘻嘻地朝我鞠躬。那时已经很晚了，一开始我以为他们走错门了。可后来我认出他们是二郎的同事，就请他们进来。他们站在玄关自顾自地笑着。其中一个矮矮胖胖的，脸很

红。另一个瘦一些，皮肤很白，像欧洲人的白；但是他好像也喝酒了，脸颊上露出粉色的斑。他们系着的领带都松了，外套挂在手上。

二郎见到他们很高兴，叫他们进去坐。可是他们只是站在玄关，笑个不停。

“啊，绪方，”白皮肤的那个对二郎说，“我们可能来的不是时候。”

“不会。不过你们在这附近做什么呢？”

“我们去看村崎的哥哥。其实，我们还没回家呢。”

“我们不敢回家，所以来打扰你，”胖胖的那个插进来说。“我们没有跟太太说我们要晚点回去。”

“真是混蛋，你们两个，”二郎说。“你们干吗不脱鞋进来呢？”

“我们来的不是时候，”白皮肤的那个又说。“我看见你有客人。”他朝绪方先生笑了笑，鞠了一躬。

“这是我父亲，可是你们不进来我怎么介绍呢？”

客人终于脱了鞋，进来坐下。二郎把他们介绍给父亲，他们再次鞠躬，又笑了起来。

“你们是二郎公司的？”绪方先生问。

“是的，”矮矮胖胖的那个答道。“很荣幸，虽然他让我们很不好过。在办公室里我们叫你儿子‘法老’，因为他让我们像奴隶一样工作，自己却什么都不做。”

“胡说八道，”我丈夫说。

“是真的。他像苦役一样驱使我们，然后自己坐下来看报纸。”

绪方先生好像听得有点迷糊，但是看见其他人在笑，他也笑了笑。

“啊，这是什么？”白皮肤的那个指了指棋盘。“瞧，我就知道我们会打扰你们。”

“我们只是在下棋打发时间，”二郎说。

“接着下吧。别让我们这种混蛋打断你们下棋。”

“别傻了。有你们这样的笨蛋在旁边，我怎么能集中精神。”说着二郎把棋盘推到一边。有一两个棋子倒了，他看也不看就把它摆正。“那么说，你们去看村崎的哥哥。悦子，给客人倒茶。”我丈夫说这句话之前，我已经往厨房走去了。可这时矮矮胖胖的那个突然拼命挥手。

“夫人，夫人，坐下。请坐下。我们一会儿就走。您请坐。”

“不麻烦，”我笑着说。

“不用，夫人，我求您”——他越说越大声——“正如您丈夫说的，我们只是两个混蛋。不用麻烦了，请坐下。”

我正想遵照他的意思，突然看见二郎生气地看了我一眼。

“至少喝杯茶再走，”我说。“一点儿也不麻烦。”

“既然坐下了，就多坐一会儿，”我丈夫对客人说。“反正我也想听听村崎的哥哥的事。他真的像人们说的那样疯疯癫癫的吗？”

“他的确是个怪人，”矮矮胖胖的那个笑着说。“今晚确实没有让我们失望。你听说过他妻子的事吗？”

我欠了欠身，悄悄地到厨房去。我泡了茶，在盘子上放了几块那天早些时候做的蛋糕。我听见客厅传来笑声，我丈夫也在笑。其中一个客人又很大声地叫了他一次“法老”。我回到客厅时，二郎和他的客人们聊得正欢。矮矮胖胖的那个正在说一件趣闻，说一个内阁大臣遇见麦克阿瑟将军的事。我把蛋糕放在他们旁边，给他们倒了茶，然后在绪方先生身边坐下。二郎的朋友又开了几个政治家的玩笑，然后白皮肤的那个假装生气了，因为另一个说了一位他敬仰的人物的坏话。大家笑他，他板起脸来。

“对了，花田，”我丈夫对他说。“有一天我在办公室听说了一件有趣的事情。我听说在上次选举时，你威胁你太太说要用高尔夫球棍打她，因为她不跟你选同样的人。”

“你听谁胡说的？”

“消息可靠的人说的。”

“没错，”矮矮胖胖的那个说。“还有，你太太打算报告警察说你政治胁迫。”

“胡说八道。再说，我没有高尔夫球棍了。我去年都卖掉了。”

“你还有一根七号铁杆，”矮矮胖胖的那个说。“上周在你家我看到过。你可能是用那个。”

“可是你不能说没有这事吧，花田？”二郎说。

“什么高尔夫球棍，都是胡说八道。”

“可是你没能让她照你说的做，这是真的吧。”

白皮肤的那个耸耸肩。“这个嘛，她要投给谁是她自己的权利。”

“那你为什么威胁她？”他的朋友问。

“我自然是在试着跟她讲道理。我太太投给吉田就因为他长得像她叔叔。女人就是这样。她们不懂政治。她们以为可以像选衣服那样选国家领导人。”

“所以你就用七号铁杆打她，”二郎说。

“是真的吗？”绪方先生问。从我把茶拿来到现在，他都没有说话。其他三人都不笑了，白皮肤的那个惊讶地看着绪方先生。

“没有。”他突然变得正经八百，微微鞠了一躬。“我没有真的打她。”

“不，不，”绪方先生说。“我是说你太太和你——你们真的投给不同的政党？”

“啊，是的。”他耸耸肩，然后苦笑了一下。“我能怎么办呢？”

“对不起。我不是要多管闲事。”绪方先生低低地鞠了一躬，白皮肤的那个回敬了一个。这一鞠好像成了信号，三个年轻人又开始说说笑笑起来。他们不谈政治了，聊起公司里的同事来。添茶时，我注意到虽然我端了不少蛋糕出来，但是已经快没了。我添完茶，回到绪方先生身旁坐下。

客人们待了一个小时左右。二郎送他们到门口，然后回来坐下，叹了口气。“晚了，”他说。“我得睡觉了。”

绪方先生正在研究棋盘。“我想有几个棋子摆错了，”他说。“我肯定马应该在这格，不是那格。”

“很可能。”

“那我把它放在这里了。同意吗？”

“好，好。我肯定您是对的。我们以后再把棋下完吧，爸爸。我得赶快睡觉了。”

“再走几步吧。我们很快就能下完了。”

“说真的，还是算了吧。我现在太累了。”

“好吧。”

我把刚才做的针线活收起来，坐着等其他人去睡觉。可是二郎翻开一份报纸读了起来。他看见盘子里还有一块蛋糕，就若无其事地拿起来吃。过了一会儿，绪方先生说：

“我们还是现在把它下完吧。只差几步了。”

“爸爸，我现在真的很累了。我明天早上还得上班呢。”

“是的，好吧。”

二郎继续一面看报纸一面吃蛋糕。我看见有一些蛋糕屑掉在榻榻米上。绪方先生又盯着棋盘看了一会儿。

“太奇怪了，”他终于说道，“你朋友刚刚说的事。”

“哦？什么事？”二郎的眼睛没有离开报纸。

“他和他太太投票给不同的政党的事。几年前这种事情是不可能的。”

“没错。”

“如今的事情都太奇怪了。不过我想这就是所谓的民主吧。”绪方先生叹了口气。“我们急着想从美国人那里学来的这些东西，不一定是好的。”

“是的，确实不一定都好。”

“看看出了什么事。丈夫和妻子投票给不同的政党。再也不能在这些事上信任妻子，真是悲哀。”

二郎边看他的报纸边说：“是啊，太可惜了。”

“现在的妻子都忘了对家庭的忠诚。想干什么就干什么，一时高兴的话就把票投给另一个党。这事在现在的日本太典型了。人人借着民主的名义丢掉忠诚。”

二郎抬头看了他父亲一眼，很快又把目光移回报纸。“您说得很对，”他说。“不过当然了，美国人带来的东西也不全是坏的。”

“美国人，他们从来就不理解日本人的处世之道。从来没有。他们的做法也许很适合美国人，可是在日本情况就不一样，很不一样。”绪方先生又叹了一口气。“纪律，忠诚，从前是这些东西把日本人团结在一起。也许听起来不太真实，可确实是这样的。人们都有一种责任感。对自己的家庭，对上级，对国家。可是现在人们不再讲这些了，而是讲什么民主。当一个人想自私自利时，想丢掉责任时，就说民主。”

“是的，您说得对。”二郎打了个哈欠，挠了挠侧脸。

“就拿我这一行来说吧。多年来，我们有一套自己精心建立并热爱的体系。美国人来了，不假思索地把这套体系废除了、粉碎掉。他们决定要把我们的学校变得像美国那样的，我们的孩子应该学美国孩子学的东西。而日本人对这些全都欢迎，大谈特谈什么民主”——他摇了摇头——“学校里很多好东西都被毁了。”

“是的，我想您说得很对。”二郎再次抬起头来。“不过当然了，旧的教育体系里也有一些缺点，其他体系也是。”

“二郎，你说什么？你在哪里看到的吗？”

“只是我的看法。”

“那是你在报纸上看到的吗？我这一辈子都在教育年轻人。后来我看着美国人把整个教育体系都给粉碎了。现在的学校太奇怪了，他们教给孩子的为人处世之道太奇怪了。而且很多东西都不教了。你知道吗？现在的孩子离开学校时对自己国家的历史一无所知。”

“这确实令人遗憾。不过我也记得我上学时的一些怪事。比如说，我记得以前老师教过神是怎样创造日本的。我们这个民族是多么的神圣和至高无上。我们得把课本一个字、一个字地背下来。有些事情也许并不是什么损失。”

“可是二郎，事情不是这么简单。你根本不知道是怎么回事。事情绝不像你想的那么简单。我们献身教育，确保优良的传统传承下去，确保孩子们形成正确的国家观、民族观。以前的日本有一种精神把大家团结在一起。想象一下现在的孩子是怎么样的。在学校里他学不到什么价值观——也许除了说他应该向生活索取任何他想要的东

西。回到家里，他发现父母在打架，因为他母亲拒绝投票给他父亲支持的党。这是什么世道？”

“是的，我明白您的意思。现在，爸爸，请原谅，我得去睡觉了。”

“我们尽了全力，像远藤和我这样的人，我们尽全力教导这个国家。很多好东西都被毁了。”

“确实太遗憾了。”我丈夫站了起来。“对不起，爸爸，可是我得睡了。我明天还要忙一天呢。”

绪方先生抬头看着他的儿子，脸上有些惊讶。“啊，当然。我把你拖得这么晚真是太不应该了。”他微微地鞠了一躬。

“没有的事。我很抱歉我们不能接着聊，可是我真的得去睡了。”

“啊，当然。”

二郎向他父亲道了晚安，离开客厅。绪方先生盯着二郎走出去的那扇门看了好几秒钟，好像在等他儿子随时会回来。然后他转向我，表情很不安。

“我没注意到已经这么晚了，”他说。“我不是有意不让二郎睡觉的。”

第五章

“走了？可他有没有在旅馆里留口信给你？”

佐知子笑了。“你太吃惊了，悦子，”她说。“没有，他什么也没留。他们只知道他昨天上午离开的。老实说，我猜到会这样。”

我才注意到我还端着盘子。我小心地把盘子放下，然后在佐知子对面的垫子上坐下。那天早上，公寓里吹着凉爽的微风。

“可是你多惨啊，”我说。“你把东西都收拾好、准备妥当，在等着他。”

“这对我来说不新鲜，悦子。在东京的时候——我是在东京认识他的——在东京的时候，也发生过同样的事。所以这对我来说不新鲜了。我已经学会预料到这类情况。”

“你还说你今晚要回到城里去？一个人去？”

“别大惊小怪的，悦子。跟东京比起来，长崎像是个沉闷的小镇。如果他还在长崎的话，我今晚就能找到他。旅馆可以换，可是他的习惯是不会改的。”

“可是太让人伤心了。你需要的话，我可以去陪着万里子到你回来。”

“啊，你太好了。万里子一个人待着没问题，不过要是你今晚愿意去陪她一两个小时，那真是太谢谢你了。不过我肯定事情自然会好起来的，悦子。你瞧，你要是有我的一些经历的话，你就懂得不为这种小小的挫折烦恼了。”

“可是要是他……我是说，要是他已经离开长崎了呢？”

“哦，他没有走远，悦子。再说，如果他真的要离开我的话，他会留个字条什么的，不是吗？所以说，他没有走远。他知道我会去找他。”

佐知子微笑着看着我。我不知道该说什么。

“再说了，悦子，”她接着说，“他大老远地到这里来。他大老远地到长崎来我伯父家找我，大老远地从东京来。若不是为了他答应过的事，他为什么要这么做呢？要知道，悦子，他最想做的就是带我

去美国。这就是他想做的。这一点没有改变，现在只不过是稍稍的耽搁。”她干笑了一声。“你瞧，有时候他像个孩子。”

“可是你的朋友这样走了是什么意思呢？我不明白。”

“没什么好明白的，悦子，这没什么大不了的。他想做的就是带我去美国，过稳定、体面的生活。这是他真正想做的。不然他干吗要大老远地来我伯父家找我呢？所以说，悦子，没什么好担心的。”

“是的，我想没什么好担心的。”

佐知子好像还想说些什么，却停住不说了。她低头看了看盘子里的茶具。“那现在，悦子，”她笑着说，“我们倒茶吧。”

她静静地看着我倒茶。期间我很快地瞥了她一眼，她笑了，像是在鼓励我接着倒。我倒完茶，我们静静地坐了一会儿。

“对了，悦子，”佐知子说，“我想你已经跟藤原太太说了我的情况了吧。”

“是的。我前天见到她。”

“我想她一定在想我怎么了。”

“我告诉她有人要带你到美国去。她完全理解。”

“你瞧，悦子，”佐知子说，“我发现自己现在处境艰难。”

“是的，我可以理解。”

“经济方面，和其他各个方面。”

“是的，我明白，”我说，并微微地鞠了一躬。“你要的话，我当然可以跟藤原太太说。我相信在这种情况下她很乐意……”

“不，不，悦子”——佐知子笑了起来——“我不想回她的小面馆。我肯定很快就要离开、到美国去了。只是稍稍推迟几天，没别的。但是与此同时，你瞧，我需要一点钱。我记得，悦子，你以前说过可以帮我。”

她和蔼地微笑着看着我。我也看着她。片刻后，我鞠了一躬，说：

“我有一些私房钱。不是很多，但是我很乐意尽我所能。”

佐知子优雅地鞠了一躬，然后拿起她的茶杯，说：“我不会说个数让你为难。要借多少全看你自己。你觉得多少合适，我都会感激地接受。当然了，钱会及时归还，这点你尽管放心，悦子。”

“那是，”我静静地说。“我不担心这个。”

佐知子仍然和蔼地微笑着看着我。我说了声“失陪”，走出房间。

卧室里，阳光照射进来，照亮了空气中的灰尘。我在柜子底部的一排小抽屉旁跪了下来。我打开最底下的那个抽屉，取出各种东西——相册、贺卡、一个装着我母亲画的水彩画的夹子——小心翼翼地将它们放在旁边的地板上。抽屉的最底下放着一个黑色的漆制礼盒。打开盒子，里面装着一些我珍藏的信件——我丈夫不知道这些信件——和两两三张小照片。我从盒子的最底下取出装着钱的信封。我小心翼翼地把东西放回原样，关上抽屉。离开卧室前，我打开衣橱，挑了一条样子合适的丝巾把信封包上。

我回到客厅时，佐知子正在给自己添茶，没有抬起头来看我。我把包好的丝巾放在她身旁的地板上时，她也没有看，继续倒茶。我坐下时她朝我点了一下头，然后喝起茶来。只是在放下杯子时，她很快地用余光瞥了一下坐垫旁的那包东西。

“你好像有点误会，悦子，”她说。“你瞧，对我所做的一切，我没有什么觉得丢脸或见不得人的。你想问什么都可以。”

“是的，当然。”

“比如说，悦子，你为什么从来不问我‘我的朋友’的事？你坚持这么叫他。真的没有什么可丢脸的。怎么了，悦子，你已经开始脸红了。”

“我向你保证我没有觉得丢脸。其实……”

“你有，悦子，我看得出来。”佐知子笑了一声，拍了一下掌。“可你为什么不明白我没有什么好隐瞒的，也没有什么好丢脸的？你为什么要脸红呢？就因为我提到弗兰克？”

“我没有觉得丢脸。我向你保证我从没想过……”

“你为什么从来不问我他的事，悦子？你肯定有很多问题想问。为什么不问呢？毕竟左邻右舍都很好奇，你一定也是，悦子。所以请别拘束，想问什么就问吧。”

“可是我真的……”

“快点，悦子，我要你问。问我他的事。我一定要你问。问我他的事吧，悦子。”

“那好吧。”

“好？说啊，悦子，问吧。”

“好吧。他长什么样，你的朋友？”

“他长什么样？”佐知子又笑了。“你就想知道这个？好吧，他和一般的老外一样高，他的头发开始变稀了。他不老，你明白。老外更容易秃头，你知道吗，悦子？现在再问点别的吧。你肯定还有其他事情想知道。”

“这个，说真的……”

“快点，悦子，问啊。我要你问。”

“可是我真的没有什么想……”

“肯定有，你为什么不问呢？问我他的事吧，悦子，问我吧。”

“好吧，其实，”我说，“我确实想知道一件事。”

佐知子好像突然僵住了。她把本来握在胸前的手放下，放回大腿上。

“我确实想知道，”我说，“他会不会说日语？”

有一会儿，佐知子没有做声。然后她笑了，神情变轻松了。她再次端起茶杯，抿了几口。她开口说话时，声音听起来很恍惚。

“老外学我们的语言很难，”她说，然后停了一下，出神地笑着。“弗兰克的日语很糟糕，所以我们用英语交谈。你懂英语吗，悦子？一点都不懂？是这样，以前我父亲英语说得很好。他有亲戚在欧洲，所以他一直鼓励我学英语。不过后来当然了，结婚后，我就不学了。我丈夫不许我学。他把我的英语书都收走了。可是我没有忘记英语。我在东京遇到老外时就都想起来了。”

我们静静地坐了一会儿。然后佐知子疲惫地叹了口气。

“我想我得赶快回去了，”她说。她弯下腰拿起包好的丝巾，没有打开看，就把它放进手提包里。

“不再喝点茶吗？”我问。

她耸了耸肩。“那就再来一点吧。”

我给她满上。佐知子看着我，然后说：“要是不方便——我是说今天晚上——也没有关系。万里子这么大了，可以一个人待着。”

“不要紧。我肯定我丈夫不会反对的。”

“你太好了，悦子，”佐知子有气无力地说。“也许我应该警告你。我女儿这几天情绪很不好。”

“没关系，”我笑着说。“我得习惯小孩子的各种脾气。”

佐知子又慢慢地喝起茶来，好像并不急着回去。然后放下茶杯，呆呆地看着自己的手背。

过了好一会儿，她终于开口说道：“我知道那时长崎这里遭受了可怕的事情。可是东京的情况也很坏。一周又一周，情况糟透了，不见好转。后来，我们都住在地道和破房子里，到处都是废墟。住在东京的人都目睹了一些可怕的事情。万里子也是。”她还是盯着自己的手背。

“是的，”我说。“那段时间一定很艰难。”

“这个女人。你听万里子说起的这个女人。是万里子在东京看到的。她在东京还目睹了一些其他的事情，一些可怕的事情，可是她一直记得那个女人。”她把手翻过来，看着手心，一会儿看看这手，一会儿看看那手，像是在作比较。

“而这个女人，”我说。“在空袭中被炸死了？”

“她自杀了。他们说她割断了自己的喉咙。我不知道她是谁。事情是这样的，那天早上万里子跑了出去。我不记得她为什么跑出去了，可能是在为什么事情生气。反正她跑到街上去了，所以我去追她。那时还很早，周围没有人。万里子跑进一条小巷子里，我跟了过去。小巷的尽头是一条运河，那个女人跪在那里，前臂浸在水里。一个年轻女人，很瘦。我一看见她就知道有什么不对劲。你瞧，悦子，她转过来，对万里子笑了笑。我知道有什么不对劲，万里子肯定也感觉到了，因为她停下不跑了。一开始我以为那个女人是个瞎子，因为她的眼神，她的眼睛好像什么也看不见。然后，她把手臂从水里拿出来，让我们看她抱在水底下的东西。是个婴儿。我拉住万里子，离开了那条巷子。”

我没有说话，等着下文。佐知子拿起茶壶给自己倒了些茶。

“正如我刚才说的，”她说，“我听说那个女人自杀了。几天以后。”

“那时万里子几岁？”

“五岁，快六岁了。她在东京还目睹了一些其他的事情。可是她一直记得那个女人。”

“她全看见了？她看见婴儿了？”

“是的。其实，很长时间里，我以为她并不懂得她看见的事情。那天之后她并没有提起这件事。那时她也没有特别不安。直到一个月左右以后，她才第一次提起这件事。那时我们睡在一栋老建筑里。我半夜醒来，看见万里子站着，盯着门口看。那里没有门，只有一个出入口。而万里子站着，盯着那里。我吓坏了。你知道，那个房子没有门，什么人都可以进去。我问万里子怎么了，她说有个女人站在那里看着我们。我问是什么样的女人，她说是那天早上我们看见的那个。站在门口看着我们。我起来看了看，可是那里并没有人。当然了，很可能是有个女的曾站在那里。那里什么人都可以进去。”

“我明白了。万里子把她当作你们见到的那个人了。”

“我猜想是这样的。不管是怎么回事，事情就是这样开始的，万里子对那个女人的幻想。我以为她长大以后就会好了，可是最近又开始了。如果今天晚上她又说起这个，请不要理她。”

“好的，我知道了。”

“你知道小孩子就是这样，”佐知子说。“他们编一些事情来玩，结果分不清哪些是真的、哪些是假的。”

“是的，我想这一点儿都不奇怪。”

“你瞧，悦子，万里子出生的时候很艰难。”

“是的，一定是这样的，”我说。“我很幸运。我知道。”

“那时很艰难。也许我不应该那时结婚。毕竟大家都看得出来战争快来了。可是话说回来，悦子，没有人知道战争是什么样的，那时没有。我嫁入了一个很有名望的家庭。我从没想到战争会造成这么大的影响。”

佐知子放下茶杯，一只手捋了一下头发。然后她很快地笑了一笑。“至于今天晚上，悦子，”她说，“我女儿很会自己跟自己玩。所以请不用太费心。”

说起儿子时，藤原太太的脸常常变得疲倦。

“他一天天变老，”她说。“很快他就只剩下老姑娘可挑了。”

我们坐在她的面摊前的水泥空地。一旁几张桌子上有一些上班族在吃午饭。

“可怜的和夫，”我笑了笑，说。“不过我可以理解他的感受。美智子小姐的事太令人伤心了。而且他们订婚很长时间了，对吧？”

“三年。我从不明白干吗要订婚这么长时间。没错，美智子是个好女孩。我肯定她会第一个同意我的观点，和夫不应该再这样想着她了。她会希望和夫继续好好地生活下去。”

“不过和夫一定很难过。计划了那么多年的事情最后变成这个样子。”

“可是这些都已经过去了，”藤原太太说。“我们都应该把以前的事放在身后。你也是，悦子，我记得以前你难过极了。可是你挺过来了，继续生活。”

“是的，不过我很幸运。那个时候绪方先生对我很好。要是没有他，我不知道我会怎样。”

“是啊，他对你很好。而且当然了，你因此认识了你丈夫。不过这是你应得的。”

“要是绪方先生没有收留我，我真不知道我现在会怎样。不过我可以理解他是多么伤心——我是指您的儿子。即使是我，我有时也会想起中村君。我忍不住。有时候我醒过来，忘了自己在哪里。我以为我还在这里，在中川……”

“好了，悦子，别说了。”藤原太太看了我好一会儿，然后叹了口气。“不过我也是。像你说的，早上，醒来的时候，这事趁你不注意的时候就会找上你。我常常醒过来，心想我得赶快起来给大家准备早饭。”

我们谁也不说话了。过了一会儿，藤原太太笑了笑。

“你太坏了，悦子，”她说。“瞧，你让我都说了这些话。”

“我太傻了，”我说。“不管怎么说，中村君和我，我们之间从来都没有什么。我是说，我们并没有定下什么事。”

藤原太太还是看着我，出神地点了点头。这时，空地那一边的一个客人站了起来，准备离开。

我看着藤原太太走向他，是个穿着衬衫的整洁的年轻人。他们互相鞠躬，然后愉快地聊了起来。那人扣上公文包时说了些什么，藤原太太开心地笑了。他们又互相鞠了一躬，然后那人消失在午后上班的人群里。我刚好利用这个时间调整一下情绪。藤原太太回来时，我说：

“我得走了。眼下您忙得很。”

“你坐着休息吧。你才刚来。我给你弄点吃的。”

“不，不用了。”

“听我说，悦子，你要是不在这里吃，可得再过一个小时才能吃到午饭。你知道现在规律的饮食对你来说多么重要。”

“是，我想是的。”

藤原太太细细地看了我一会儿，然后说：“你现在有那么多盼头，悦子。你在为什么事情不开心呢？”

“不开心？可我一点儿也没有不开心。”

她还是看着我，我紧张地笑了笑。

“孩子出生以后，”她说，“你就会开心起来了，相信我。而且你会是个好母亲的，悦子。”

“我希望如此。”

“你肯定会。”

“是。”我抬起头来，笑了。

藤原太太点了点头。然后再次站起身来。

佐知子的小屋里越来越暗——屋里只有一盏灯笼——起先我以为万里子在盯着墙上的黑点。她伸出一根指头，那个东西动了一下。这时我才发现是一只蜘蛛。

“万里子，别碰它。这样不好。”

她把双手都放到背后，不过还是盯着蜘蛛看。

“以前我们养了一只猫，”她说。“在我们到这里来之前。那只猫会抓蜘蛛。”

“我知道了。住手，别碰它，万里子。”

“可是它没有毒。”

“是没有毒，可是别碰它，很脏。”

“以前我们养的那只猫，它会吃蜘蛛。我要是吃蜘蛛会怎么样？”

“我不知道，万里子。”

“我会生病吗？”

“我不知道。”我接着做我带来的针线活。万里子继续盯着蜘蛛。最后她说：“我知道你今晚晚上为什么过来。”

“我来是因为小女孩自己一个人待着不好。”

“是因为那个女人。是因为那个女人可能会再来。”

“你干吗不再多拿些画给我看呢？你刚才给我看的那些很漂亮。”

万里子没有回答，走向窗户，看着外面。

“你妈妈很快就回来了，”我说。“你干吗不再多拿些画给我看呢？”

万里子还是看着外面。最后，她回到去看蜘蛛前坐着的角落。

“你今天都做了什么，万里子？”我问。“你画画了吗？”

“我跟小胖和小美玩。”

“太好了。他们住在哪里？公寓里吗？”

“它是小胖”——她指了指身旁的一只黑色小猫——“它是小美。”

我笑了。“哦，我明白了。是可爱的小猫，是吗？不过你不和别的孩子玩吗？住在公寓里的孩子？”

“我跟小胖和小美玩。”

“可是你应该试着和别的孩子交朋友。我肯定他们都是好孩子。”

“他们偷了花花。那是我最喜欢的小猫。”

“他们偷了小猫？哦天啊，他们为什么要这么做？”

万里子开始抚摸小猫。“现在我没有花花了。”

“也许它很快就会出现。我肯定那些孩子只是玩一玩。”

“他们杀了它。现在我没有花花了。”

“哦。他们怎么会做这种事？”

“我向他们扔石头。因为他们说了难听的话。”

“啊，你不应该扔石头，万里子。”

“他们说了难听的话。说妈妈。我向他们扔石头，他们就偷走了花花，不把它还回来。”

“咳，你还有其他的小猫啊。”

万里子又朝窗户走去。她的个子刚好够让她把手肘靠在窗沿上。有几分钟的时间，她看着外面，脸贴在窗户上。

“我想出去，”她突然说。

“出去？可是已经很晚了，外面很黑。而且你妈妈就快回来了。”

“可是我想出去。”

“待在这里，万里子。”

她还是看着外面。我试着看看她看到了什么；从我坐的地方我只看到一片漆黑。

“也许你应该对其他孩子好一点。这样你就可以和他们交朋友了。”

“我知道妈妈为什么叫你来。”

“你要是扔石头，怎么能交得到朋友呢？”

“是因为那个女人。是因为妈妈知道那个女人。”

“我不知道你在说什么，万里子。再跟我说说你的小猫。它们长大一些，你还会再给它们画画吗？”

“是因为那个女人可能会再来。所以妈妈叫你来。”

“我想不是这样。”

“妈妈见过那个女人。前两天的一个晚上，她看见她了。”

我猛地停下手里的针线活，抬起头来看万里子。她不再看着窗外，而是面无表情地看着我，样子很奇怪。

“你妈妈是在哪里看见这个——这个人的？”

“那里。在那里看见的。所以她叫你来。”

万里子离开窗户，回到她的小猫身边。母猫出现了，小猫都偎依到妈妈怀里。万里子在它们旁边躺下，小声地说起话来。她的低语让人隐隐地觉得不安。

“你妈妈就快回来了，”我说。“她现在会在干什么呢？”

万里子仍旧在低语。

“她跟我说了好多弗兰克的事，”我说。“他听上去是个好人。”

万里子不做声了。一刹那间，我们面面相觑。

“他是个坏蛋，”万里子说。

“你这样说可不好，万里子。你妈妈跟我说了好多弗兰克的事，他听上去确实是个好人。而且我相信他对你很好，不是吗？”

她站起来，走向墙壁。蜘蛛还在那里。

“对，我相信他是个好人。他对你很好，不是吗，万里子？”

万里子伸出手去。蜘蛛沿着墙壁慢慢地爬着。

“万里子，别碰它。”

“我们在东京养的那只猫，它会抓蜘蛛。我们本来要把它带来的。”

蜘蛛挪了地方以后，我看得更清楚了。它的腿又粗又短，每一条腿都在黄色的墙壁上投下一道阴影。

“它是只好猫，”万里子接着说。“它本来要和我们一起来长崎。”

“你们带它来了吗？”

“它不见了。我们出发的前一天。妈妈答应说我们可以带上它的，可是它不见了。”

“这样啊。”

她突然伸出手去，抓住了蜘蛛的一条腿，把它从墙壁上拿下来。其他几条腿在空中疯狂地乱舞。

“万里子，放开它。它很脏。”

万里子把手翻过来，蜘蛛爬到她的手掌上。她把另一只手盖上，把蜘蛛关在里面。

“万里子，放开它。”

“它没有毒，”她说，向我走来。

“没有毒，可是很脏。放回角落去。”

“可是它没有毒。”

她站在我面前，蜘蛛合在她手里。我从她的手指缝里看见蜘蛛的一条腿在慢慢地、有节奏地抖动。

“把它放回角落去，万里子。”

“我把它吃了会怎么样？它没有毒。”

“你会得重病的。好了，万里子，把它放回角落去。”

万里子把蜘蛛拿到嘴边，张开嘴巴。

“别傻了，万里子。很脏。”

她张大嘴巴，然后分开合着的手，蜘蛛掉在我的正前方。我吓得往后退。蜘蛛飞快地沿着榻榻米跑进我身后的黑暗里去。我过了一会儿才回过神来，这时万里子已经跑出小屋了。

第六章

我不知道那天晚上我找她找了多久。应该是挺久的，因为那时我的肚子已经很大了，我总是当心行动不能太匆忙。而且，到了外面，我突然发现走在河边十分惬意。河岸上有块地方草长得很高。那天晚上我一定是穿着木屐，因为我清楚地记得草在我脚边的感觉。我走着，身边一直萦绕着昆虫的叫声。

最后我终于听出来其中有个沙沙的声音，像有条蛇在我身后的草地里爬行。我停下来细听，发现了声音的来源；一条旧绳子缠在我的脚踝上，我在草地一直拖着它。我小心地把它从脚上解下来。我把它拿到月光底下，它在我手指里湿漉漉的，满是泥。

“喂，万里子，”我喊道，她就坐在我前面不远的草丛里，蜷起腿，下巴靠在膝盖上。一棵柳树——河岸上有几株柳树——垂到她坐的地方。我往前走了几步，把她的脸看得更清楚些。

“那是什么？”她问。

“没什么。我走路时，它缠住我的脚了。”

“到底是什么？”

“没什么，只是一条旧绳子。你为什么跑到这里来？”

“你要一只小猫吗？”

“一只小猫？”

“妈妈说我们不能带着小猫。你要一只吗？”

“我不想要。”

“可是我们得赶快帮它们找到一个家。不然妈妈说我们就得把它们淹死。”

“那太遗憾了。”

“你可以要小胖。”

“这得看看。”

“你干吗拿着那个？”

“我说了，没什么。它缠住我的脚了。”我往前一步。“你这是做什么，万里子？”

“做什么？”

“你刚刚的表情很奇怪。”

“我没有。你干吗拿着绳子？”

“你刚刚的表情很奇怪。非常奇怪。”

“你干吗拿着绳子？”

我注视了她一会儿。她的脸上露出害怕的样子。

“那么，你不想要小猫吗？”她问。

“不，我不想要。你是怎么了？”

万里子站了起来。我走到柳树底下，看见小屋在不远处，屋顶的颜色比天空深。我听见万里子跑进黑暗里的脚步声。

我回到小屋的门口，听见里面传来佐知子生气的声音。我进屋时，母女俩都转过来看我。佐知子站在屋子中央，她女儿在她面前。她精心打扮的脸在灯笼的照射下像一张面具。

“恐怕万里子给你添麻烦了，”她对我说。

“啊，她跑到外面去了……”

“跟悦子道歉。”她狠狠地抓着万里子的胳膊。

“我还要出去。”

“你不许动。马上道歉。”

“我要出去。”

佐知子举起一只手重重地打孩子的大腿背。“马上跟悦子道歉。”

万里子的眼睛里闪烁着小小的泪珠。她很快地瞥了我一眼，然后转向她妈妈。“你为什么老是出去？”

佐知子再次举起手来警告她。

“你为什么老是和弗兰克出去？”

“你要不要道歉？”

“弗兰克像猪一样撒尿。他是臭水沟里的猪。”

佐知子吃惊地看着她的孩子，手停在半空中。

“他喝自己的尿。”

“住嘴。”

“他喝自己的尿，还在床上大便。”

佐知子还是生气地盯着她，人却呆住了。

“他喝自己的尿。”万里子挣开佐知子的手臂，若无其事地走过客厅。走到玄关，她转过身来，回瞪着她妈妈。“他像猪一样撒尿，”她又说了一遍，然后跑了出去。

佐知子还是盯着玄关，显然忘了我的存在。

“不去追她吗？”过了一会儿，我说。

佐知子看着我，好像稍微缓过来了。“不用，”她边说边坐下来。“别管她。”

“可是已经很晚了。”

“别管她。她高兴了就会回来了。”

水壶已经在炉子上滚了好一会儿了。佐知子把它从火上拿开，开始泡茶。我看了她一会儿，然后静静地问：

“找到你的朋友了吗？”

“是的，悦子，”她说。“我找到他了。”她继续泡茶，没有抬起头来看我。然后她说：“太谢谢你今天晚上到这里来了。我为万里子的事道歉。”

我还是看着她。最后，我说：“你现在打算怎么办？”

“打算怎么办？”佐知子添满茶壶，把剩下的水倒到火里。“悦子，我跟你说过很多次了，对我来说最重要的是我女儿的幸福。这是我优先考虑的。毕竟我是个母亲。我不是什么不懂得自重的年轻酒吧女郎。我是个母亲，我女儿的利益是第一位的。”

“当然。”

“我打算给我的伯父写信。我要告诉他我的行踪，他有权知道我现在的情况，我会都告诉他。然后他同意的话，我要跟他商量我们有没有可能回那里去。”佐知子双手拿起茶壶，轻轻地摇晃起来。“事实上，悦子，我很高兴事情变成这个样子。想象一下我女儿会多么的不习惯，突然发现自己在一个都是老外的地方，一个都是老美的地方。突然有一个老美做爸爸，想象一下她会多么不知所措。你明白我说的话吗，悦子？她这辈子已经有太多的动荡不安了，她应该找个地方安顿下来。事情变成这个样子也好。”

我嘟囔了一声表示同意。

“孩子，悦子，”她接着说，“就意味着责任。你很快就会明白这点了。这就是他害怕的，谁都看得出来。他怕万里子。这个，我不能接受，悦子。我必须先考虑我的女儿。事情变成这个样子也好。”她的手还在摇晃着茶壶。

“你一定很失望吧，”最后，我说道。

“失望？”——佐知子笑了——“悦子，你以为这种小事会让我失望吗？我在你这个年纪时也许会。可是现在不会了。过去这几年，我经历了太多的事情。不管怎样，我料到会这样。哦没错，我一点也不惊讶。我料到了。上次，在东京，也差不多是这样。他不见了，把我们的钱都花光了，三天内全都喝光了。其中很多是我的钱。你知道吗？悦子，我甚至在旅馆里当女佣。没错，当女佣。可是我不抱怨，我们钱凑得差不多了，再过几个星期我们就可以坐船去美国了。可是他把钱全喝光了。那么多个星期，我跪在地上擦地板，可是他三天内就全都喝光了。这次他又来了，和一文不值的酒吧女郎泡在酒吧里。我怎么能把我女儿的未来交到他这种人的手上？我是个母亲，我必须先考虑我的女儿。”

我们又都不说话了。佐知子把茶壶放下，盯着它。

“我希望你伯父能理解你，”我说。

她耸了耸肩。“至于我伯父，悦子，我会和他商量的。我愿意为了万里子而这么做。他要是不同意，我就再想别的办法。反正我不打算陪着一个洋酒鬼去美国。我很高兴他找了个酒吧女郎陪他喝酒，我肯定他们真是般配。可是至于我，我要做对万里子最好的事情，这就是我的决定。”

佐知子又盯着茶壶看了一会儿。然后她叹了一口气，站了起来，走向窗户，往外看。

“我们现在不去找她吗？”我说。

“不用，”佐知子边看着窗外边说。“她很快就会回来了。她想待在外面就让她待在外面吧。”

如今的我无限追悔以前对景子的态度。毕竟在这个国家，像她那个年纪的年轻女孩想离开家不是想不到的。我做成的事似乎就是让她在最后真的离开家时——事情已经过去快六年了——切断了和我的所有关系。可是我怎么也想不到她这么快就消失得无影无踪；我所能预见的是待在家里不开心的女儿会发现承受不了外面的世界。我是为了她好才一直强烈反对她的。

那天早上——妮基来的第五天——我很早就醒过来，脑子里的第一个念头是我没有听到这几个晚上和清晨都能听到的雨声。然后我想起了是什么让我醒过来。

我躺在被窝里，来来回回地看在微光中依稀可见的东西。几分钟后，我感觉平静了一些，就又闭上眼睛。可是我并没有睡。我想着那个房东——景子的房东——想着她是怎样终于打开曼彻斯特的房门的。

我睁开眼睛，又看着房间里的东西。最后我爬起来，穿上晨衣，去盥洗室。我小心不吵醒睡在我隔壁客房里的妮基。当我走出盥洗室时，我在楼梯口站了一会儿。楼梯的那边，走廊的尽头，可以看见景子的房门。门和平时一样关着。我直盯着门，然后往前迈开步子。最后我来到了房门前。我站在那里，好像听见一个细小的声音，是里面传来的动静。我又听了一会儿，可是什么也听不见了。我伸出手去，打开门。

灰暗的光线里，景子的房间显得凄凉；床上只有一条床单，旁边是她的白色梳妆台，地上有几个纸板箱，装着她没有带到曼彻斯特去的东西。我走进房间。窗帘开着，我能看见下面的果园。天空露出鱼肚白；似乎没有在下雨。窗户下、草地上，两只鸟在啄着掉下来的苹果。这时，我开始觉得冷，于是回到自己的房间。

“我的一个朋友在写一首关于你的诗，”妮基说。我们正在厨房里吃早饭。

“关于我？为什么呢？”

“我跟她说了你的事，她就决定要写一首诗。她是个才华横溢的诗人。”

“一首关于我的诗？太荒唐了。有什么可写的？她都不认识我。”

“我说了，妈妈，我跟她说了你的事。她理解人的能力真是惊人。你瞧，她自己也经历了很多事情。”

“我明白了。你这个朋友几岁？”

“妈妈，你总是关心别人几岁。人重要的不是年龄，而是经历。有的人活到一百岁也没经历过什么事。”

“我想是的。”我笑了，瞥了一眼窗子。外面下起了蒙蒙细雨。

“我跟她说了你的事，”妮基说。“你的、爸爸的，还有你们是怎么离开日本的。她听了以后印象深刻。她能体会事情是什么样的，知道做起来并不像听起来的那么容易。”

我盯着窗子看了一会儿。然后我很快地说：“我相信你的朋友一定能写出一首好诗。”我从水果篮里拿了一个苹果，妮基看着我拿起小刀来削。

“很多女人，”她说，“被孩子和讨厌的丈夫捆住手脚，过得很不开心。可是她们没有勇气改变一切。就这么过完一生。”

“嗯哼。所以你是说她们应该抛弃孩子，是吗，妮基？”

“你知道我的意思。人浪费生命是悲惨的。”

我没有做声，虽然我女儿停了下来，像是在等着我回答。

“一定很不容易，你做的那些，妈妈。你应该为你所做的感到自豪。”

我继续削苹果。削完后，拿纸巾擦干手指。

“我的朋友们也都这么想，”妮基说。“那些知道你的事的。”

“我真是受宠若惊。谢谢你那些了不起的朋友。”

“我只是说说而已。”

“你已经把意思说得很清楚了。”

也许那天早上我没有必要敷衍她，不过妮基一直觉得应该在这些事情上把我劝开。再者，其实她并不知道我们在长崎的最后那段日子究竟发生了什么。她可能是通过她父亲告诉她的事构建了一些图画。这样的图画不可避免是不准确的。事实上，虽然我的丈夫写了很多令人印象深刻的关于日本的文章，但是他从不曾理解我们的文化，更不理解二郎这样的人。我并非在深情地怀念二郎，可是他绝不是我丈夫想的那种呆呆笨笨的人。二郎努力为家庭尽到他的本分，他也希望我尽到我的本分；在他自己看来，他是个称职的丈夫。而确实，在他当女儿父亲的那七年，他是个好父亲。不管在最后的那段日子里，我如何说服自己，我从不假装景子不会想念他。

不过这些事情都已经过去了，我也不愿再去想它们。我离开日本的动机是正当的，而且我知道我时刻把景子的利益放在心上。再想这些也没什么用了。

我正在修剪窗台上的盆栽，弄着弄着，突然发觉妮基很安静。我转过头去看她，她站在壁炉前，视线越过我，看着外面的园子。我回头看窗外，顺着她的视线看她在看什么；虽然玻璃上有雾，但仍然可以看清楚花园。妮基好像是在看着篱笆附近，那里风和雨打进来，打乱了支撑幼小的西红柿的藤。

“我想那些西红柿今年是不行了，”我说。“我都没怎么去管它们。”

我仍旧看着那些藤，突然听见抽屉被打开的声音。我再次转过头去，妮基正在翻抽屉。早饭后，她决定把她爸爸在报纸上发表的文章统统读一遍，一早上大部分时间花在了翻找家里的抽屉和书架上。

我继续整理我的盆栽；盆栽有不少，杂乱地堆满窗台。身后，我能听见妮基翻抽屉的声音。突然她又没有声响了。我转过头去时，她的视线再次越过我，看着外面的园子。

“我要去喂金鱼，”她说。

“金鱼？”

妮基没有回答就走了出去，一会儿我看见她大步走过草坪。我擦掉玻璃上的一块雾，看着她。妮基走到花园的尽头，走到假山中的鱼池。她把饲料倒进鱼池，在那里站了几秒钟，盯着鱼池。我可以看见她的侧影；她很瘦，虽然穿着时髦衣服，却明显还是有些孩子气。我看着风吹乱她的头发，心想她怎么不穿外衣就出去了。

往回走时，她在西红柿边上停下。尽管雨点不小，她还是站在那里观察了它们一会儿。接着她走近几步，开始小心翼翼地把藤弄直起来。她扶起几根完全倒下去的藤，然后蹲了下来，膝盖几乎碰到了湿漉漉的草地，把我放在地上、用来赶走偷吃的鸟儿的网弄正。

“谢谢你，妮基，”她进屋时我对她说。“你太有心了。”

她嘟囔了一声，在长靠背椅上坐下。我注意到她变得有些不好意思。

“我今年真的没怎么去管那些西红柿，”我又说道。“不过我想也没什么关系。现在那么多的西红柿我都不知道该怎么办。去年，我把大部分都给了莫里森夫妇。”

“哦天啊，”妮基说，“莫里森夫妇。亲爱的莫里森老两口怎么样了？”

“妮基，莫里森夫妇都是很好的人。我想不通你干吗要这么瞧不起他们。以前你和卡西还是最好的朋友。”

“哦没错，卡西。她最近怎么样了？还住在家里吧，我想？”

“啊，是的。她现在在银行上班。”

“很像她。”

“在我看来，她这个年纪做这个再适合不过了。还有，玛里琳结婚了，你知道吗？”

“哦是吗？她嫁给谁了？”

“我不记得她丈夫是做什么的了。我见过他一次。他看来很讨人喜欢。”

“我猜他是个教区牧师之类的。”

“好了，妮基，我真是想不通你为什么非得用这种语气。莫里森夫妇一直对我们很好。”

妮基不耐烦地叹了口气，说：“他们做事的方式就是让我讨厌。比如说他们教育孩子的方式。”

“可是你好几年没见到莫里森夫妇了。”

“我以前认识卡西时已经见得够多的了。他们那种人真是无药可救。我想我应该替卡西难过。”

“你就因为卡西没有像你一样到伦敦去住而责怪她？我得说，妮基，这可不像你和你朋友们所标榜的宽容大度。”

“哦，没关系。反正你也不明白我在讲什么。”她瞥了我一眼，然后又叹了一口气。“没关系，”她看着另一边，又说了一次。

我又盯着她看了一会儿。最后，我转回窗台，继续摆弄我的盆栽，没有说话。

“你知道，妮基，”几分钟后我说道，“我很高兴你有处得来的好朋友。毕竟，现在你要过自己的生活。这是自然的。”

我的女儿没有做声。我看了她一眼，她正在看从抽屉里找到的一份报纸。

“我很想见见你的朋友，”我说。“随时欢迎你带他们到这里来。”

妮基轻轻地甩了一下头，不让头发遮住视线，继续看报纸，脸上露出专注的神情。

我重新回到盆栽上，因为这些信号我再明白不过了。每当我打探她在伦敦的生活，妮基就摆出一副微妙的、但是相当斩钉截铁的态度；她用这种方式告诉我，我不应该再问下去，不然会后悔。结果，我对她目前生活的认识大部分都是靠猜想。可是，在她的信里——妮基总是记得写信——她提到了一些在谈话中不可能涉及的东西。比如说，我就是从信里知道她的男朋友叫大卫，在伦敦的一所大学里学政治。可是在谈话中，要是我问到他好吗，我知道那道障碍马上就会严严实实地落下。

如此强烈地保护自己的隐私让我想起了她的姐姐。因为事实上，我的两个女儿有很多共同点，比我丈夫承认的要多得多。在他看来，她们是完全不同的；而且，他形成这么一种看法，认为景子天生就是一个难相处的人，对此我们无能为力。其实，虽然他从未直说出来，但是他会暗示说景子从她爸爸那里继承了这种性格。我没有反驳，因为这是最简单的解释：怪二郎，不怪我们。当然了，我丈夫并不知道小时候的景子是什么样的；他要是知道的话，就会发现这两个女孩在小时候有多像。都是火爆脾气，都有很强的占有欲；生气的话，不会像其他孩子那样很快忘记他们的怒火，而是会闷闷不乐一整天。可是，一个长成了快乐、自信的年轻姑娘——我对妮基的未来充满信心——另一个越来越不快乐，最终结束了自己的生命。我并不像我丈夫

那样，觉得可以把原因简单地归咎于天性或二郎。可是，这些事情都已经过去了，再想也没什么用了。

“对了，妈妈，”妮基说。“今天早上是你吧？”

“今天早上？”

“早上我听见一些动静。很早的时候，大概四点吧。”

“很抱歉吵到你了。对，是我。”我笑了起来。“怎么了，你以为还会是谁呢？”我还在笑，一时停不下来。妮基瞪着我，报纸还摊在她面前。“哦，对不起我把你吵醒了，妮基，”我终于止住了笑，说道。

“没关系，反正我已经醒了。这几天我好像都睡不好。”

“换了房间也睡不好？你可能得去看医生。”

“我可能会去。”妮基说道，又继续看报纸。

我放下一直拿着的大剪刀，转向她。“你知道，很奇怪。今天早上我又做了那个梦。”

“什么梦？”

“我昨天跟你所说的那个，不过我想那时你没有在听。我又梦见了那个小女孩。”

“哪个小女孩？”

“那天我们在村里喝咖啡时看见的，在荡秋千的那个。”

妮基耸了耸肩。“哦，那个，”她没有抬头，说。

“其实，根本不是那个小女孩。今天早上我意识到这一点。看似是她，但其实不是。”

妮基又一次抬起头来看着我，然后说：“我想你是指她。景子。”

“景子？”我微微地笑了。“多奇怪的想法。为什么是景子呢？不，跟景子没有关系。”

妮基还是不确定地看着我。

“只是我以前认识的一个小女孩，”我说。“很久以前。”

“哪个小女孩？”

“你不认识。我很久以前认识的。”

妮基又耸了耸肩。“我甚至压根就无法入睡。我想昨天晚上我只睡了大概四个小时。”

“太让人担心了，妮基。特别是在你这种年纪。你可能得去看医生。你随时可以去找弗格森医生。”

妮基又做了个不耐烦的动作，继续看她爸爸登在报纸上的文章。我看了她一会儿。

“其实，今天早上我还意识到别的事情，”我说。“关于那个梦的。”

我女儿似乎没有在听。

“你瞧，”我说，“那个小女孩根本不是在秋千上。一开始好像是秋千。但其实她不是在秋千上。”

妮基嘟囔了句什么，继续看报纸。

第二部

第七章

夏天越来越热，公寓区旁的那片空地也越来越让人不能忍受。大部分的土干得裂开了，而雨季里积的雨水却还留在凹下去的沟和坑里。空地滋生各种虫子，其中蚊子最多，随处可见。公寓里的人一直在抱怨，可是几年以后，对那块空地的愤怒逐渐变成了听之任之、冷嘲热讽。

那年夏天我经常要穿过那块空地到佐知子的小屋去，这段路真够讨厌的；虫子飞进你的头发，地面的裂缝里看得到大大小小的蚊子。我至今仍清楚地记得那段路，那一趟趟来回——还有对即将做妈妈的担心，还有绪方先生的来访——使得那个夏天与众不同。可是除此之外，那个夏天跟别的夏天没什么两样。很多时候——后来几年也是——我都呆呆地望着窗外的景色。晴朗一些的日子里，我能看见河对岸的树后面淡淡的山的轮廓，映着白云。那景色还挺好看，有时还能带给我难得的消遣，打发我在公寓里的那一个个漫长、无聊的下午。

除了空地的事，那年夏天小区的人还关心其他话题。报纸上都在说占领快结束了，东京的政客们忙着吵来吵去。公寓里的人也经常谈论这件事，但跟讲起空地一样，带着冷嘲热讽。大家更关心的是儿童谋杀案的报道，案件震惊了当时的长崎。先是一个男孩，后来是一个小女孩发现被殴打致死。当发现第三名受害者时——又一个小女孩被吊死在树上——小区里的妈妈们几乎惊慌失措。虽说事件都发生在城市的另一头，但这丝毫不能减轻人们的恐惧：小区里几乎看不见孩子的身影，尤其是在晚上。

我不清楚当时的那些报道让佐知子担心到什么程度。诚然她似乎不像以前那样把万里子一个人留下，可是后来我怀疑这更主要的是因为她生活中的其他进展；她收到了她伯父的回信，说愿意让她们回去住，之后我很快就发现佐知子对小女孩的态度变了：她对孩子似乎更有耐心、更加随和了。

收到她伯父的来信后，佐知子大大地松了一口气，一开始我毫不怀疑她会回去。然而，日子一天天过去，我开始怀疑她的打算。一方面，收到信后的几天，我发现佐知子没有把这件事情告诉万里子。后来，几周过去了，佐知子不仅没有准备离开，我发现她也没有给她伯父回信。

要不是佐知子特别不愿提起她伯父家，我想我不会去想这个事情。我越来越好奇。虽然佐知子三缄其口，我还是知道了一些事情；比如说，这个伯父似乎并不是佐知子的血亲，而是她丈夫那边的亲戚；佐知子是在到他家来的几个月前才知道他的。这个伯父很有钱，他的房子不是一般的大——而且就只住着他、他女儿和一个女佣——所以足以腾出空间来让佐知子和她的小女儿住。其实佐知子不只一次地说到那所房子大部分都是空的，静悄悄的。

我对这个伯父的女儿特别好奇。据我所知，她与佐知子年纪相仿，没有结婚。佐知子很少提起她的表姐，可是我清楚地记得那时的一次交谈。当时我认为佐知子之所以迟迟不回她伯父家去是因为她和她的表姐不和。那天早上我一定是试探着跟佐知子说起这个，因而打开了她的话匣子，佐知子很少直说她在她伯父家里的生活，那次是少有的几次之一。那次交谈如今仍历历在目；那是八月中旬的一个没有风的、干燥的早上，我们站在山顶的桥上等进城的电车。我不记得那天我们是要去哪里，也不记得是在哪里离开万里子的——我记得孩子没有和我们在一起。佐知子看着远处的风景，举起一只手来挡着脸，遮住太阳。

“我搞不懂，悦子，”她说，“你怎么会有这种想法。恰恰相反，安子和我是最好的朋友，我也很想再见到她。我真不明白你怎么会想得刚好相反，悦子。”

“对不起，我一定是弄错了，”我说。“不知怎么的，我觉得你不大想回那里去。”

“没有的事，悦子。我们刚认识时，确实是，那时我正在考虑其他的可能性。可是一个母亲应该考虑出现的、给孩子的各种机会，难道应该为此受到责备吗？只是有一阵子，我们似乎有一个不错的选择。但是进一步考虑之后，我放弃了。事情就是这样，悦子，现在我对这些计划都没有兴趣了。我很高兴事情有了最好的结局，现在我盼着回到我伯父家去。至于安子，我们都十分尊敬对方。我不明白是什么让你有相反的想法，悦子。”

“真的很抱歉。我只是记得有一次你提到了吵架什么的。”

“吵架？”她看了我一会儿，然后脸上露出了笑容。“哦，我知道你指什么了。不，悦子，那不是吵架。那只是小小的口角。为了什么来着？你瞧，我都不记得是为了什么事了，太小的事了。哦对了，没错，我们在争谁来准备晚饭。对，没错，就为了这个。你瞧，悦 子，那时我们轮流做饭。女佣做一个晚上，再来是我表姐，然后轮到我。一天轮到女佣做饭，她却病了，安子和我两个人都争着要做。你千万别误会，悦子，我们通常相处得很好。只是当你老是见到同一个人、见不到别人时，有时难免会有摩擦。”

“是的，我很理解。对不起，我误会了。”

“要知道，悦子，当有女佣帮你做所有的杂事时，时间就过得出奇的慢。安子和我都找些这样、那样的事来做，可是整天除了坐着聊天以外实在是没什么好做的。那几个月，我们一起坐在那所房子里，几乎见不到什么外人。我们没有真的吵起来真是奇迹。也许吧，我的意思是。”

“是的，确实如此。之前是我误会您了。”

“是啊，悦子，恐怕你是误会了。我记得这件事只是因为这是在我们离开之前不久发生的，从那以后我就再也没有见过我的表姐了。不过说那是吵架还真是好笑。”她笑了笑。“其实，我想安子要是想起这件事也会笑出来的。”

也许就是在那天早上我们决定在佐知子离开前，要找一天一起去哪里走走。而事实上，不久之后的一个炎热的下午，我陪佐知子母女去了稻佐山。稻佐山是长崎的山区，俯视港口，山上的景色很有名；稻佐山离我们住的地方不远——其实我从公寓的窗口看见的就是稻佐山——可是那时候，我极少外出，去稻佐山就成了一次远足。我记得那时我盼了好几天；我想这是我那些日子的美好回忆之一。

我们在下午最热的时候坐渡船到稻佐山去。港口的嘈杂声跟随着我们的船——铁锤的叮当声，机器的轰鸣声，时不时传来的低沉的船的汽笛声——在那个时候的长崎，这些声音可不是什么噪声；它们是重建的声音，当时仍然可以振奋人心。

到了对岸，那里的海风比较大，天气没有那么闷热了。我们坐在缆车站空地的长椅上，仍旧可以听到风传来的港口的声音。凉风习习，空地上还有难得的遮阳的地方，我们心里更加感激；这里只不过是一块水泥空地——那天空地上大多是母亲带着孩子——像个学校的操场。空地的一边，在一排旋转栅门后是缆车靠站的木站台。有好一会儿，我们坐在那里出神地看着缆车上上下下；一辆缆车慢慢地向山上升去，渐渐地变成空中的一个小点，而另一辆则越来越低，越来越大，最后停在站台上。栅门旁的小屋里，一个男的在控制一些操作

杆；他戴着一顶帽子，每次缆车安全地停下来以后，他都要探出身来和围过来看的孩子们聊天。

我们决定坐缆车到山顶去，由此那天第一次遇见了那个美国女人。佐知子和女儿去买票，我一个人坐在长椅上。突然我注意到空地的另一头有个卖糖果和玩具的小摊。我想说不定可以买糖给万里子，就站起来走过去。两个孩子在我前面，争吵着要买什么。我等着他们，发现玩具里有一副塑料双筒望远镜。那两个孩子还在吵，我回头看了一眼空地。佐知子和万里子还站在栅门旁；佐知子好像在和两个女人讲话。

“您要什么，夫人？”

孩子们走了。小摊后站着一个穿着整洁的夏季制服的小伙子。

“我能试试这个吗？”我指了指双筒望远镜。

“当然可以，夫人。虽然只是玩具，但是能看得挺远的。”

我举起望远镜，抬头看山坡；望远镜居然能看得很清楚。我转向空地，发现佐知子母女在镜头里。佐知子今天穿着一件浅色和服，系着一条精致的腰带——我想那腰带是特殊场合才拿出来系的——她的姿态在人群里很优雅。她还在和那两个女人讲话，其中一个像是外国人。

“又是一个大热天啊，夫人，”我递给小伙子钱时他说。“你们要坐缆车吗？”

“我们正要去坐。”

“上面的风景很棒。山顶上那个是我们建的电视塔。到了明年，缆车就能直通那里了，直通山顶。”

“太好了。祝你今天过得愉快。”

“谢谢您，夫人。”

我拿着双筒望远镜走回去。虽然那时我并不知道英语，但是我马上猜到那个外国女人是美国人。她很高，一头红色的波浪发，戴着一副边角往上翘的眼镜。她在大声跟佐知子说话。看见佐知子那么自如地用英语回答她我很是吃惊。另外一个女人是日本人；胖胖的，四十岁上下，身边有个八九岁的敦实的小男孩。我走过去，向他们鞠躬问好，然后把双筒望远镜递给万里子。

“只是个玩具，”我说。“不过可以看见不少东西。”

万里子打开包装，认真地研究望远镜。她举起望远镜，先是看看空地，然后抬头看山坡。

“说谢谢，万里子，”佐知子说。

万里子只顾着看。然后她放下望远镜，把塑料绳套到脖子上。

“谢谢悦子阿姨，”她有点不情愿地说。

那个美国女人指着望远镜，用英语说了什么，笑了。双筒望远镜同样引起了那个敦实的小男孩的注意。他原本在看着山坡和下降的缆车，现在走近万里子，眼睛盯着望远镜。

“太谢谢了，悦子，”佐知子说。

“没什么。只是一个玩具。”

缆车到了，我们走过栅门，走上凹下去的木板。好像除了我们以外，那两个女人和那个男孩便是仅有的乘客了。戴帽子的男人走出他的小屋，引领我们一个个走进缆车。车厢里光秃秃的，就是个金属壳子。四面都有大窗户，两面长的墙壁下各有一条长椅。

缆车没有马上开动，而是在站台上停留了几分钟，那个敦实的小男孩开始不耐烦地走来走去。在我身边，万里子跪在长椅上看窗外。从我们这边的窗户可以看见空地和聚集在栅门旁的小观众们。万里子像是在测试望远镜的性能，一会儿把望远镜拿到眼前，一会儿又拿开。这时，敦实的小男孩走过来，也跪在她旁边的椅子上。一开始两个孩子谁也没有理谁。最后，那个男孩说：

“现在我要看。”说着伸手去要望远镜。万里子冷冷地看着他。

“阿明，不能这样要东西，”他妈妈说。“好好地跟小姐姐要。”

小男孩把手拿开，看着万里子。万里子回瞪着他。小男孩转身走到另一边的窗户去。

缆车启动了，栅门旁的孩子们朝我们挥手。我本能地抓住窗户旁的铁栏杆，那个美国女人紧张地叫了一声，笑了。空地越变越小，接着，山坡在我们底下移动；我们渐渐升高，缆车轻轻地摇晃着；有一会儿，树顶像是擦着窗户，突然我们的脚下空了，出现了一个巨大的

山壑，我们悬在空中了。佐知子轻轻地笑了笑，指了指窗外的什么东西。万里子又拿起望远镜看。

缆车到了终点，我们小心翼翼地一个接一个出来，像是不能肯定自己已经到了坚实的地面。上面的这个站台没有水泥地，走出木地板就是一小片草地。除了引导我们出站台的穿着制服的男人以外，看不见其他人。草地后立着几张野餐用的木桌，几乎掩映在松树林里。草地的这边，我们下车的地方，有一道铁栅栏围住悬崖。我们大致搞清楚所在的方位后就走到栅栏边去看缓缓向下的山坡。过了一会儿，那两个女人和那个男孩也走了过来。

“太壮观了，不是吗？”那个日本女人对我说。“我带我的朋友饱览风光。她以前没来过日本。”

“这样啊。我希望她在这里玩得开心。”

“我希望如此。可惜我的英语说得不好。你的朋友说得比我好多了。”

“是啊，她说得很好。”

我们俩都看了一眼佐知子。她和那个美国女人又用英语聊开了。

“受到这么好的教育真好，”日本女人对我说。“好了，祝你们今天全都玩得愉快。”

我们互相鞠了鞠躬，日本女人朝她的美国客人招了招手，示意他们该走了。

“我能看一下吗？”敦实的小男孩生气地问，再次伸出手去。万里子像在缆车里那样盯着他。

“我想看，”小男孩说得更凶了。

“阿明，记住好好地跟小姐姐要。”

“求你！我想看。”

万里子又看了他一小会儿，才把塑料绳从脖子上拿下来，把望远镜递给小男孩。男孩举起望远镜朝栅栏那边看去。

“这个一点都不好，”他看了好一会儿后跟他妈妈说道。“没有我的那个好。妈妈，你看，都看不清楚那边的树。你看啊。”

他要把望远镜给他妈妈。万里子伸出手去拿，可是男孩一把闪开，又递给他妈妈。

“你看啊，妈妈。都看不见那边的树，近处的那些。”

“阿明，把望远镜还给小姐姐。”

“这个没有我的那个好。”

“好了，阿明，这么说话没有礼貌。你知道不是每个人都像你这么幸运。”

万里子伸手去拿望远镜，这次男孩放手了。

“跟小姐姐说谢谢，”他妈妈说。

小男孩什么也没说就走开了。他妈妈笑了笑。

“谢谢你，”她对万里子说。“你真好。”接着她又依次对佐知子和我笑了笑。“景色很漂亮，不是吗？”她说。“祝愿你们今天玩得愉快。”

山路上满是松针，沿着山坡蜿蜒而上。我们慢慢地走，时不时停下来休息。万里子很安静，而且——让我很意外——一点都没有要淘气的样子，只是奇怪不愿意跟她妈妈和我走在一起。她一会儿落在后面，让我们担心地回过头去看；一会儿又跑过去，走在前头。

在我们从缆车上下来约一个小时以后，我们第二次遇到那个美国女人。她和她的同伴正从山上下来，认出了我们，高兴地打招呼。胖胖的小男孩走在她们后面，没有跟我们打招呼。美国女人走过去时用英语跟佐知子说了什么，听了佐知子的回答以后笑了起来。她好像想停下来交谈，可是日本女人跟她儿子没有停下脚步；美国女人挥挥手，继续往前走。

当我称赞佐知子的英语时，她笑了笑，没说什么。我注意到这次偶遇在她身上产生了奇怪的效应。她变得很安静，边走边陷入了沉思。当万里子又冲到前面去时，她对我说：

“我父亲是个很受人尊敬的人，悦子。德高望重。可是他的海外关系差点毁了我的婚事。”她微微一笑，摇了摇头说，“真奇怪，悦子。现在这些都恍若隔世。”

“是啊，”我说。“一切都大变样了。”

山路转了一个大弯，又是上坡。树木变少了，突然在我们周围天空豁然开朗。前头，万里子叫了起来，指着什么东西，然后兴冲冲地往前跑去。

“我很少见到我父亲，”佐知子说。“他大部分时间都在国外，在欧洲和美国。我小时候曾经梦想有一天我会去美国，去那里变成电影明星。我妈妈笑话我，可是爸爸说我要是把英语学好了，就能很容易地成为一个女商人。我以前很喜欢学英语。”

万里子在一个像是平地的地方停下来，又朝我们不知道喊了什么。

“我记得有一次，”佐知子接着说，“我父亲从美国带了一本书给我，英文版的《圣诞颂歌》。它成了我的目标，悦子。我想学好英语，看懂那本书。可惜没有机会实现。结婚以后，我丈夫不准我继续学。事实上，他让我把那本书扔掉。”

“太可惜了，”我说。

“我丈夫就是这样，悦子。很严厉，很爱国。他从来不是一个体谅别人的人。但是他的家庭出身很好，我父母觉得门当户对。他禁止我学英语时我没有反对。毕竟没有意义了。”

我们走到万里子站的地方；小路的边上有一块突出去的四方形平地，周围围着几块大石头。一根倒下来的巨大树干表面被刨光、弄平，做成长椅。佐知子和我坐下来歇口气。

“别太靠近边上，万里子，”佐知子喊道。小女孩已经走到大石头那里去，拿起望远镜看。

坐在山的边缘俯视这番景色，我有一种忐忑不安的心情；在我们底下很远的地方可以看见港口，像个掉在水里的精密的机器零部件。港口过去，对岸是通向长崎的群山。山脚下房屋密布，高高低低。远处右手边是港口的入海口。

我们在那里稍坐片刻，歇口气、吹吹风。这时我说道：

“你不会想到这里曾经发生的一切，不是吗？一切看上去是那么生机勃勃。可是下面那一整片”——我朝底下的景色挥了挥手——“那一整片在炸弹掉下来的时候受了多么严重的打击。可是看看现在。”

佐知子点点头，然后笑着转向我，说：“你今天心情真不错啊，悦子。”

“到这里来走走真是太好了。我决定从今往后要乐观。我以后一定要过得幸福。藤原太太一直对我说往前看是多么重要。她是对的。假设人们没有往前看，那么这里”——我又指了指底下的景色——“这里就都还是废墟一片。”

佐知子又笑了。“是啊，你说得对，悦子。这里就都还是废墟一片。”说完，她又回头看着下面的风景。过了一会儿她说：“对了，悦子，你的朋友，藤原太太，我想她在战争中失去了她的家人是吧。”

我点点头。“以前她有五个孩子。她丈夫还是长崎的重要人物。炸弹掉下来的时候，除了大儿子以外都死了。她一定受了很大的打击，可是她还一直坚持。”

“是啊，”佐知子慢慢地点着头，说，“我猜有这类事情。那她一直都是开面馆的吗？”

“没有，当然没有了。她丈夫是个要人。是后来，她失去了一切以后才有面馆的。每次我看见她，都对自己说：我应该像她那样，我应该往前看。因为从很多方面来说，她失去的比我多。毕竟看看我现在。我要开始组建自己的家庭了。”

“是啊，你说得太对了。”风吹乱了佐知子梳得整整齐齐的头发。她捋了一下头发，然后深深地吸了一口气，“你说得太对了，悦子，我们不应该老想着过去。战争毁了我的很多东西，可是我还有我的女儿。正如你说的，我们应该往前看。”

“你知道吗，”我说，“我是最近几天才认真地想这件事的。我是指为人父母。现在我没有那么害怕了。我要高高兴兴地迎接它。从今往后我要乐观。”

“你就应该这样，悦子。毕竟你还有很多盼头。其实你很快就会发现，是做母亲让生活变得真正有意义。住在我伯父家里闷了点又有什么关系呢？我只要给我女儿最好的。我们要给她请最好的家庭教师，她很快就会把功课赶上。正如你说的，悦子，我们必须对生活乐观。”

“你这么想我真高兴，”我说。“我们俩真的都应该心存感激。我们也许在战争中失去了很多，但是还有那么多盼头。”

“是啊，悦子。还有很多盼头。”

万里子走过来，站在我们面前。也许她听见了我们的一些谈话，因为她对我说：

“我们又要和安子阿姨一起住了。妈妈有没有告诉你？”

“有，”我说，“她告诉我了。你很想再回到那里去住吗，万里子？”

“现在我们可以留着小猫了，”小女孩说。“安子阿姨的房子很大。”

“这件事还要再看，万里子，”佐知子说。

万里子看了她妈妈一会儿，然后说：“可是安子阿姨喜欢猫。再说，反正圆圆本来就是我们从她那里拿过来的。所以那些小猫也是她的。”

“是没错，万里子，可是我们还得看看。我们得看看安子阿姨的爸爸怎么说。”

小女孩生气地看了她妈妈一眼，然后又转向我，表情严肃地说：“我们可以留着小猫。”

下午快过去的时候，我们回到了下缆车时的空旷地。我们的午餐盒里还有一些饼干和巧克力，我们就在一张野餐桌上坐下，吃了起来。空地的那头，一些人站在铁栏杆旁，等下山的缆车。

我们坐了几分钟，突然听见有人叫我们。那个美国女人大踏步地从空地的那头走过来，笑容满脸。她一屁股坐下，一点儿也没有觉得不好意思，朝我们一个个笑了笑之后就跟佐知子说起英语来。我想她很高兴有机会交谈，而不是用手比划。我朝周围看了看，果然看见那个日本女人就在附近，在给她儿子穿外套。她不是很想跟我们一起的样子，但最后还是微笑地走过来。她在我对面坐下，她儿子坐在她身旁，这时我发现母子俩的体型很像，都是圆圆胖胖的；最明显的是两个人的脸颊都有垂肉，有点像斗牛犬。美国女人一直高声地跟佐知子讲个不停。

在陌生人到来之前，万里子已经打开她的素描本，开始画画。胖脸女人跟我寒暄过后转向小女孩。

“你今天玩得开心吗？”她问万里子。“这上面很漂亮，不是吗？”

万里子仍旧低着头画画。可是女人一点儿也没有在意。

“你在画什么呢？”她问。“很漂亮的样子。”

这次万里子停了下来，冷冷地看着日本女人。

“很漂亮的样子。可以让我们看看吗？”女人伸手拿过素描本。
“是不是很漂亮，阿明？”她对她儿子说。“小姐姐是不是很聪明？”

男孩趴到桌子上来，好看得清楚些。他饶有兴趣地看着万里子的画，但是没说什么。

“真是漂亮。”女人翻着素描本。“这些都是今天画的吗？”

一开始万里子没有答话。但过了一会儿，她说道：“这些蜡笔是新的。今天早上才买的。新蜡笔比较不好画。”

“这样啊。是啊，新蜡笔比较不好画，不是吗？阿明也画画，是不是，阿明？”

“画画很简单，”男孩说。

“这些小画是不是很漂亮，阿明？”

万里子指着翻开的那一页，说：“我不喜欢这一张。蜡笔还磨得不够。下面一张比较好。”

“哦是啊。这张真漂亮！”

“这张是在港口画的，”万里子说。“可是那里又吵又热，所以我匆匆忙忙地画的。”

“可是画得很好。你喜欢画画吗？”

“喜欢。”

佐知子和美国女人也都转过来看素描本。美国女人指着上面的画，大声地用日语说了好几次“太棒了”。

“这是什么？”胖脸女人又问道。“是蝴蝶啊！把蝴蝶画这么好一定很不容易吧。蝴蝶不会一直呆着不动。”

“我记得它的样子，”万里子说。“我之前看见一只。”

女人点点头，然后转向佐知子。“你女儿真聪明。我想一个小孩会用记忆和想象是很值得表扬的。这个年纪的很多孩子都还只会照着书上的画。”

“是啊，”佐知子说。“我想是这样。”

佐知子的语气里带着轻蔑，让我很是惊讶，因为她一直在极其友好地跟美国女人说话。敦实的男孩趴得更近了些，用手指指着画页。

“那些船太大了，”他说。“如果那个是树的话，那船应该要画得小很多。”

他妈妈想了想，说：“啊，也许。可这幅画还是很漂亮。你不觉得吗，阿明？”

“船画得太大了，”男孩说。

女人笑了笑。“你可千万别生阿明的气，”她对佐知子说。“你瞧，他有一个非常优秀的美术家庭教师，所以他明显比大部分同龄的孩子在这些方面更有眼力。你女儿有教画画的家庭教师吗？”

“没有。”佐知子的语气仍旧很冷淡。可是那个女人丝毫没有察觉。

“请人来教画画根本不是什么坏主意，”她接着说。“我丈夫一开始不同意。他觉得阿明有数学和科学的家庭教师就够了。但是我认为画画也很重要。孩子应该从小培养他的想象力。学校的老师也同意我的看法。可是他学得最好的是数学。我认为数学很重要，你说呢？”

“是，确实，”佐知子说。“我相信数学很有用。”

“数学能提高孩子的智力。你会发现大多数数学学得好的孩子其他方面也都很好。关于请数学老师我丈夫和我没有异议。结果很值得。去年，阿明在班上一直是第三、第四名，可今年一直是第一。”

“数学很简单，”男孩说道。接着他问万里子：“你会九九乘法表吗？”

他妈妈又笑了。“我猜这个小姑娘一定也很聪明。从她的画就能看出来。”

“数学很简单，”男孩再次说道。“九九乘法表简单得不得了。”

“是啊，阿明已经会整张乘法表了。很多同龄的孩子只会算到三或四。阿明，九乘以五得多少？”

“九五四十五！”

“那九乘以九呢？”

“九九八十一！”

美国女人问了佐知子什么，佐知子点点头，美国女人就拍了拍手，又用日语说了几次“太棒了”。

“你女儿看来很聪明，”胖脸女人对佐知子说。“她喜欢上学吗？阿明几乎喜欢学校里的所有科目。除了数学和画图，他的地理也很好。我的这位朋友很惊讶地发现阿明知道美国所有大城市的名字。是不是，苏西小姐？”女人转向她的朋友，说了几个结结巴巴的英语单词。美国女人没听懂，但是朝男孩赞许地笑了笑。

“可阿明最喜欢的科目是数学。是不是，阿明？”

“数学很简单！”

“这个小姑娘最喜欢的科目是什么呢？”女人再次转向万里子，问道。

万里子没有马上回答。过了一会儿，她说：“我也喜欢数学。”

“你也喜欢数学。太好了。”

“那九乘以六是多少？”男孩生气地问她。

“孩子喜欢学校的功课真是太好了，不是吗？”他妈妈说。

“快点啊，九乘以六是多少？”

我问：“阿明君长大以后想做什么？”

“阿明，告诉这位阿姨你长大以后想当什么。”

“三菱公司的董事长！”

“他爸爸的公司，”他母亲解释道。“阿明已经下定决心了。”

“是，我知道了，”我笑着说。“多好啊。”

“你爸爸在哪里工作？”男孩问万里子。

“好了，阿明，别问东问西的，没有礼貌。”女人又转向佐知子。“很多同龄的男孩子都还只会说想当警察啊、消防员啊。可是阿明很小的时候就想到三菱工作了。”

“你爸爸在哪里工作？”男孩又问了一次。这次他妈妈没有阻止他，而是好奇地看着万里子。

“他是动物园里的饲养员，”万里子说。

一时间没有人说话。奇怪的是，万里子的回答似乎挫了男孩的锐气，他阴沉着脸坐回椅子上。这时，他母亲有点不知所措地说：

“多有意思的职业啊。我们都很喜欢动物。你丈夫的动物园在这附近吗？”

佐知子还没来得及回答，万里子就窸窸窣窣地爬下椅子，一声不响地朝附近的树丛走去。我们都看着她。

“她是你最大的孩子吗？”女人问佐知子。

“我只有一个。”

“哦，这样。这也不是什么坏事。独生子女更独立。而且我想独生子女通常也更刻苦。我们这个”——她把手放到男孩的头上——“和老大相差六岁。”

美国女人惊呼一声，拍起手来。万里子正稳稳地爬上树枝。胖脸女人在座位上转过身去，担心地看着万里子。

“你女儿真像个假小子，”她说。

美国女人开心地重复了一遍“假小子”，又拍起手来。

“这样安全吗？”胖脸女人问。“她可能会掉下来。”

佐知子笑了笑，对那个女人的态度突然变得热情得多。“你不习惯孩子爬树吗？”她问。

胖脸女人仍旧担心地看着万里子。“你肯定这样安全吗？树枝可能会断掉。”

佐知子笑了一声。“我肯定我女儿知道自己在做什么。谢谢你的关心。你真好心。”说着优雅地鞠了一躬。这时美国女人跟佐知子说了什么，她们俩又用英语聊开了。胖脸女人把视线从树上收回来。

“请千万别怪我多管闲事，”她一只手搭在我的胳膊上，说，“可是我忍不住注意到，这是你的第一胎吧？”

“是的，”我笑着说。“预产期在秋天。”

“多好啊。对了，你丈夫也是饲养员吗？”

“哦，不是。他在电器公司工作。”

“真的？”

胖脸女人开始给我一些照顾婴儿方面的建议。这时，我越过她的肩膀看见男孩离开桌子，朝万里子爬的树走去。

“应该让孩子多听好的音乐，”女人说。“我肯定效果很明显。孩子从一开始就应该听好音乐。”

“是的，我很喜欢音乐。”

男孩站在树下，抬头困惑地看着万里子。

“我们大儿子的音乐鉴赏力没有阿明好，”女人接着说。“我丈夫说是因为他很小的时候没有听够多的好音乐，我认为他说得对。那时的广播放了太多的军乐。我确信一点儿好处都没有。”

胖脸女人说话时，我看见男孩试着在树干上找一个踏脚的地方。万里子爬下来一些，像是在教他。在我身旁，美国女人一直大笑不停，时不时蹦出几个日语单词。男孩终于成功地离开地面；他一只脚踩在树缝里，双手紧紧握住一根树枝。虽然离地面只有几厘米，但他看上去很紧张。很难说万里子是不是故意的，只是万里子在下来时，狠狠地踩在了男孩的手指上。男孩尖叫一声，笨重地摔了下来。

他母亲惊恐地转过头去。佐知子和美国女人不知道发生了什么，也都看了过来。男孩侧躺在地上，号啕大哭。他母亲赶忙跑过去，跪下去检查他的腿。男孩不停地哭。空地那头等缆车的乘客都往这边看。大约一分钟以后，男孩呜咽着被他妈妈带回桌子这边。

“爬树很危险，”女人生气地说。

“他摔得不重，”我安慰她说。“他根本没有爬多高。”

“他可能摔断骨头。我想应该阻止孩子爬树。爬树太愚蠢了。”

“她踢我，”男孩哭着说。“她把我从树上踢下来。她要杀我。”

“她踢你？小姑娘踢你？”

我看见佐知子瞥了她女儿一眼。万里子又爬到高高的树上去了。

“她要杀我。”

“小姑娘踢你？”

“你儿子只是脚踩滑了，”我赶紧插嘴说。“我都看见了。他根本没摔着。”

“她踢我。她要杀我。”

女人也转过头去看那棵树。

“他只是脚踩滑了，”我重复道。

“你不应该做这种蠢事，阿明，”女人生气地说。“爬树很危险。”

“她要杀我。”

“你不准再爬树。”

男孩继续抽泣着。

比起英国，日本城市里的旅馆、茶馆、商店似乎更加喜欢夜幕降临；天还没黑，窗户上的灯笼、门口的霓虹招牌早早就亮了起来。那天傍晚，当我们重新走上长崎的街道时，已经灯火通明了；我们快傍晚时离开稻佐山，在浜屋百货公司里的美食街吃了晚饭。晚饭后，我们还不想回去，在巷子里慢慢地溜达，并不急着去电车站。我记得那时的年轻情侣流行在街上手牵手——我和二郎从来没有过——我们一路走着，看见很多这样的情侣在寻找晚上的娱乐。夏季傍晚的天空变成了浅紫色。

路旁有很多卖鱼的小摊，傍晚的这个时候，渔船都回港了，你经常能看到肩上扛着满满一箱刚打上来的鱼的男人穿梭在拥挤的巷子里。就是在这样一条有很多垃圾和悠闲漫步者的巷子里，我们遇到了那个抓阉儿的小摊。我从来不去那种小摊凑热闹，在英国也没有那种小摊——也许集市里有一——所以要不是想起那个傍晚，我可能已经不记得那种东西了。

我们站在人群后面看。一个女人抱着一个两三岁的小男孩；台上，一个绑着头巾的男人弯下腰来，好让男孩能够到碗。小男孩好不

容易从碗里抽出一个签来，却似乎不知道该怎么办。他把签捏在手里，茫然地看着周围的一张张笑脸。绑着头巾的男人把腰弯得更低，对小男孩说了什么，惹得旁边的人想笑。最后，母亲把孩子放下来，拿过他手里的签，递给那个男人。小男孩抽中了一支口红，女人笑着收下了。

万里子踮起脚尖看小摊的后面摆着些什么奖品。突然她转向佐知子，说：“我要抽一次签。”

“这纯粹是浪费钱，万里子。”

“我要抽一次签。”她显得很急迫，真让人奇怪。“我想试试这个抓阄儿。”

“给你，万里子。”我递给她一个硬币。

她有点吃惊地转向我，然后接过硬币，挤到人群的前面去。

又有几个人试了试手气；一个女人抽中一块糖果，一个中年男子抽中一个橡皮球。接着轮到万里子。

“好了，小妹妹，”——男人慢慢地摇了摇碗——“闭上眼睛，努力地想那边的那只大熊。”

“我不要熊，”万里子说。

男人做了个鬼脸，大家都笑了。“你不要那只大毛绒熊？好，好，小妹妹，那你要什么呢？”

万里子指着小摊的后面，说：“那个篮子。”

“那个篮子？”男人耸了耸肩。“好吧，小妹妹，紧紧地闭上眼睛，想着你的篮子。准备好了吗？”

万里子抽中了一个花盆。她回到我们站的地方，把奖品递给我。

“你不想要吗？”我问。“你抽中的。”

“我要那个篮子。小猫们现在需要有自己的篮子。”

“好了，别在意。”

万里子转向她妈妈。“我想再试一次。”

佐知子叹了口气。“天晚了。”

“我想再试一次。就一次。”

万里子再次挤到台子那去。我们等她时，佐知子转向我，说：

“真奇怪，我对她的印象不是那样的。我指你的朋友，藤原太太。”

“哦？”

佐知子侧过头去看了看抓阄儿的人群，说：“不，悦子，恐怕我的看法跟你不一样。我的印象是你的朋友已经一无所有了。”

“不是的，”我说。

“哦？那她还有什么指望呢，悦子？她靠什么活下去呢？”

“她有一家店。虽然不大，但是对她来说很重要。”

“她的店？”

“还有她的儿子，事业正蒸蒸日上。”

佐知子又转过头去看着小摊。“对，我想是这样，”她疲惫地笑了笑说。“我想她还有她的儿子。”

这次万里子抽中一支铅笔，生气地走回来。我们要走了，可万里子还在看着抓阄儿的小摊。

“走了，”佐知子说。“悦子阿姨要回家了。”

“我想再试一次。就一次。”

佐知子不耐烦地叹了口气，然后看看我。我耸耸肩，笑了笑。

“好吧，”佐知子说。“再试一次。”

又有几个人抽中奖品。有一次一个年轻女子抽中一个粉饼盒，大家觉得这个奖品太适合她了，鼓了鼓掌。看见万里子第三次出现，绑着头巾的男人又做了一个鬼脸。

“啊，小妹妹，又回来了！还想要那个篮子？你不觉得那只大毛绒熊更好吗？”

万里子没有回答，默默地等着男人把碗递给她。万里子抽出一支，男人仔细地看了看，然后瞥了一眼身后放奖品的地方，又仔细地看了一次万里子的签，最后终于点点头。

“你没有抽中篮子。不过你抽中了——一个大奖！”

四周响起笑声和掌声。男人走到小摊的后面，拿来一个像是只大木盒子的东西。

“给你妈妈装菜！”他说——不是对万里子，而是对人群——并把奖品展示了一小会儿。我身旁的佐知子笑了出来，跟着鼓起掌来。大家让开一条路让万里子拿着奖品出来。

我们离开人群时佐知子还在笑，笑得流出了泪珠儿；她擦了擦眼睛，然后看着那个盒子。

“真是个怪模怪样的东西，”她一面递给我，一面说。

那盒子跟装橙子的盒子一般大，异常的轻；木头很光滑，但没有上漆，盒子的一侧有两块铁丝网做的滑板。

“也许会很有用，”我打开其中一个滑板说。

“我抽中了大奖，”万里子说。

“是，干得好，”佐知子说。

“我有一次抽中过一件和服，”万里子对我说。“在东京，我有一次抽中过一件和服。”

“啊，你又抽中了。”

“悦子，能帮我拿一下包吗？我好把这个东西带回去。”

“我抽中了大奖，”万里子说。

“是，你做得太好了，”她妈妈轻声笑着说。

我们离开抓阄儿的小摊。街上丢着废报纸和各种垃圾。

“小猫们可以住在里面，不是吗？”万里子说。“我们可以在里面放些垫子，就成了它们的家了。”

佐知子不确定地看着怀里的盒子。“我不知道它们会不会喜欢这东西。”

“盒子可以做它们的家。我们要搬到安子阿姨家去时，可以把它们放在里面。”

佐知子疲惫地笑了笑。

“可以吧，妈妈？我们可以把小猫们放在里面。”

“是，我想可以，”佐知子说。“是，好。我们到时把小猫们放在里面。”

“这么说我们可以留着小猫咯？”

“对，我们可以留着小猫。我想安子阿姨的父亲不会反对。”

万里子往前跑了一段，等着我们。

“那么我们再也不用帮它们找家了？”

“对，现在不用了。我们要搬到安子阿姨家去，所以我们可以留着小猫。”

“那我们不用帮它们找主人了。我们可以把它们全留着。我们可以把它们放在盒子里，对不对，妈妈？”

“对，”佐知子说，把头向后一仰，又笑了起来。

我经常想起那天晚上回家的电车上万里子的脸。她看着窗外，额头贴在玻璃上；男孩子气的脸，被窗外不断闪过的流光溢彩照亮。万里子一路上都没有说话，佐知子和我也说得不多。我记得她问了我：

“你丈夫会不会生气？”

“很可能，”我微微一笑，说。“不过昨天我已经告诉他我可能会晚回。”

“今天玩得真开心。”

“是啊。二郎只能坐着生气。我今天玩得很开心。”

“我们以后一定要再出来玩，悦子。”

“是啊，一定。”

“我们搬家以后你要记得来看我。”

“会，我会记得。”

之后我们就没有说话了。不久，电车减速准备靠站，我感到佐知子突然吓了一跳。她看着下客门，那里站着两三个人。其中一个女人在看着万里子。女人三十岁上下，消瘦的脸，疲惫的神情。她很可能只是无意地看着万里子，要不是因为佐知子的反应，我想我不会觉得有什么不对劲。万里子一直在看着窗外，没有注意到那个女人。

女人注意到佐知子在看她，就转了过去。电车靠站了，门开了，女人下了车。

“你认识那个人？”我轻声问。

佐知子笑了笑。“不，我认错了。”

“你把她当作别人了？”

“就一小会儿工夫。其实一点都不像。”她又笑了一声，然后瞧瞧外面，看我们到哪了。

第八章

回想起来，那年夏天，绪方先生跟我们待在一起那么久的用意很明显。知子莫若父，他一定已经猜到二郎要怎么处理松田重夫那篇登在杂志上的文章惹出的事情；我丈夫只是在等绪方先生回福岡，这件事就会被忘掉。而他可以继续欣然同意：这种侮辱家族名声的事应该迅速地、坚决地予以回应；这件事不仅是他父亲关心的，也是他关心的；他一有时间就会给他的老同学写信。现在回想起来，这就是二郎面对可能的尴尬局面时的一贯做法。如果多年之后，他在面对另一场危机时不是采取同一种态度，我也许不会离开长崎。但这是后话了。

我在前面已经讲了有天晚上，我丈夫的两个喝得醉醺醺的同事来到家里，打断了他和绪方先生下棋。那晚我铺床时，很想就松田重夫的整件事情和二郎谈谈；我并不希望二郎违心地写这封信，但我越来越强烈地希望他能把他的立场更清楚地告诉他父亲。但结果，那晚，和前几次一样，我最终没有说出口。一来，我丈夫会觉得对这件事情我不应该说话；二来，晚上的那个时候，二郎总是很累，和他说话只会让他不耐烦。总之，我们夫妇间从不开口讨论这样的事情。

第二天，绪方先生一整天都待在公寓里，时不时研究那盘棋，他告诉我说，昨天晚上棋下到关键时候被打断了。到了晚上，晚饭后约一小时，他又把棋盘拿出来，开始研究棋子。忽然，他抬起头来对我丈夫说：

“那么，二郎，明天就是大日子啦。”

二郎把眼睛从报纸上移开，笑了笑，说：“没什么大不了的。”

“胡说。明天可是你的大日子。当然了，为公司尽全力是你的本分，但要我说，不管明天结果如何，这件事本身就很不了不起。你的资历不深，就能叫你代表公司，这事在今天，也是很少见的。”

二郎耸了耸肩。“是不多见。当然了，即使明天进行得异常顺利，也并不保证我能获得提升。可是我想经理应该会对我的今年的业绩感到满意。”

“要我说，大家都觉得他对你很有信心。你觉得明天会怎么样？”

“我当然希望一切顺利。现阶段需要参与各方通力合作。这只是为秋天的正式谈判做准备。没什么特别的。”

“我们就等着瞧吧。现在，二郎，我们把这盘棋下完怎么样？我们已经下了三天了。”

“哦，对了，下棋。当然了，爸爸，您知道不管明天我多成功，都不一定保证我能获得提升。”

“我当然知道了，二郎。我自己也是从残酷的职场竞争中过来的。我再清楚不过了。有时那些哪方面都比不上你的人却被选中了。但你不能让这些事妨碍你。你只要坚持，最后一定会成功。现在，把棋下完吧。”

我丈夫瞥了一眼棋盘，却没有要上前去的意思。“我没记错的话，您快赢了。”他说。

“局面是对你不利，可是是有办法化解的。记得吗，二郎，我第一次教你下棋时，是怎么一直警告你不要太早出车的？你现在还是犯同样的错误。看出来了吗？”

“车，是啊。您说得对。”

“还有，顺便说一下，二郎，我想你下棋前没有先想好步子，是吧？记不记得以前我是怎么费老大劲教你至少要先想好三步？可是我想你没有。”

“先想三步？不，我没有。我不像您那么会下棋，爸爸。反正我想您已经赢了。”

“其实，二郎，这盘棋你老早就没有先想好步子，真叫人心痛。我告诉过你多少次？一个好棋手得想好了再走棋，至少要先想好三步。”

“对，我想是这样。”

“比如说，你为什么要马走到这里来？二郎，看过来，你连看都没看。记得你为什么要把这个走到这里来吗？”

二郎瞥了一眼棋盘。“说实话，我不记得了，”他说，“那时可能很有理由应该那么走。”

“很有理由？胡说八道，二郎。前几步，你是想好了步子，我看得出来。你那时其实是有一个战略的。可一旦我打乱了你的战略，你

就放弃了，你就开始走一步想一步了。你不记得我以前总是跟你说：下棋就是不停地贯彻战略。就是敌人破坏了你的计划也不放弃，而是马上想出另一个战略。胜负并不是在王被将时决定的。当棋手放弃运用任何战略时，胜负就已经定局了。你的兵七零八落，没有共同的目标，走一步想一步，这时你就输了。”

“很对，爸爸，我承认。我输了。现在让我们忘了这件事吧。”

绪方先生瞥了我一眼，又转向二郎。“这是什么话？今天我很认真地研究了这盘棋，发现你至少有三种方法可以解围。”

我丈夫放下报纸。“请原谅，可要是我没理解错，”他说，“是您自己说：不能始终贯彻战略的棋手就一定会输。而您也一再指出：我走一步想一步。那就没必要再下了吧。现在请您原谅，我要读完这篇报道。”

“什么，二郎，这纯粹是投降主义。我说了，你还没输呢。你现在应该组织防守，稳住阵脚，然后再向我进攻。二郎，你从小就有些投降主义。我真希望把它从你身上根除，可到头来，还是老样子。”

“请原谅，可我看不出这跟投降主义有什么关系。这只是一盘棋……”

“也许这确实只是一盘棋。但是知子莫若父。一位父亲能看出这些讨厌的特征的苗头。你的这种品格，我可一点儿也不觉得骄傲，二郎。第一个战略失败了，你就马上放弃。现在要你防守，你就生气，不想再下了。啊，这跟你九岁时一模一样。”

“爸爸，胡说什么啊。我一整天有很多事要做，哪有时间想下棋的事？”

二郎说得很大声，把绪方先生吓了一跳。

“对您来说没问题，爸爸，”我丈夫接着说。“您有一整天的时间来想您的战略和计划。而我有更重要的事要做。”

说完，我丈夫又回到报纸上。他父亲则一直吃惊地盯着他。最后，绪方先生笑了起来。

“好了，二郎，”他说，“我们像两个渔夫的妻子在吵架。”说着又笑了一声。“像两个渔夫的妻子。”

二郎没有抬起头来。

“好了，二郎，我们别吵了。你要是不想下了，我们就别下了。”

我丈夫还是没有听到的样子。

绪方先生又笑了一声。“好了，你赢了。我们不下了。但是让我来告诉你怎么走出这小小的困境。有三种方法。第一种最简单，而且对此我束手无策。看，二郎，看这边。二郎，看，我在教你。”

二郎仍旧没有理他父亲，一副专心致志地看报纸的样子。他翻了一页，继续看。

绪方先生对着自个儿点点头，轻声笑了笑。“跟小时候一样，”他说。“不称心时就生气，拿他一点儿办法也没有。”他看了我一眼，苦笑着，然后又转向他儿子。“二郎，看，至少看看这个。很简单。”

突然间，我丈夫扔下报纸，朝他父亲的方向直起身。很明显，他是想把棋盘和上面的棋子统统打翻。可一个不小心，还没打到棋盘，先把脚边的茶壶给踢倒了。茶壶侧滚，壶盖咣当一声开了，茶水立刻流到了榻榻米上。二郎不知道发生了什么，转过头来瞪着流出来的茶水，然后又转回去盯着棋盘。看见棋子还立在格子上好像让他更加恼火。一时间我以为他会再去把它们打翻。可是他站起来，抓起报纸，一言不发地走了出去。

我赶紧朝茶水流出来的地方跑去。有些水已经开始渗到二郎坐的垫子里去了。我拿开垫子，用围裙的角擦了擦。

“跟以前一个样，”绪方先生说，眼角泛着淡淡的微笑。“孩子长成了大人，却没有变多少。”

我跑到厨房去找了一块布。回来时，绪方先生仍那么坐着，眼角仍浮着微笑。他盯着榻榻米上的水渍，陷入沉思，似乎着了迷。我犹豫了一下才跪下来把它擦掉。

“你千万别为这件事生气，悦子，”他终于开口说道，“没什么好生气的。”

“是。”我一边擦地板一边说道。

“好了，我想我们也赶紧睡吧。偶尔早点睡对身体好。”

“是。”

“你千万别为这件事生气，悦子。二郎明天早上就会忘了整件事的，你看着吧。我记得很清楚他这种一时的脾气。其实，真让人怀念啊，看见这种小小的场面。让我想起他小时候的样子来。对，真是让人怀念。”

我仍旧擦着地板。

“好了，悦子，”他说，“没什么好生气的。”

到第二天早晨之前，我没有再和我丈夫说话。他一边吃早饭一边扫几眼我放在碗边的早报。他很少说话，对于他父亲没有出现也没有说什么。而我仔细地听绪方先生房里的动静，但什么也没听到。

“我希望今天一切顺利，”我们好几分钟没有说话，我打破沉默说。

我丈夫耸耸肩，说：“没什么大不了的。”然后他抬起头来看着我，说：“我今天本来想系那条黑色的丝绸领带，可你好像拿去弄什么了。我希望你别老乱动我的领带。”

“那条黑色的丝绸领带？和其他领带一起挂在架子上啊。”

“刚才没有看见。我希望你别老乱动它们。”

“丝绸的那条应该也在那里的，”我说，“我前天烫好了，因为我知道你今天要戴，我肯定放回去了。你确定不在那里吗？”

我丈夫不耐烦地叹了口气，低头看报纸。“没关系，”他说，“这条也行。”

他继续默默地吃着早饭，与此同时仍不见绪方先生出现。最后，我站起来，到他的房门口去。我站了一会儿，没有听见任何动静，于是准备开个小缝看看。这时我丈夫转过来，说：

“你在干什么呢？要知道我可没有一早上的时间。”说着递出茶杯。

我再次坐下，把他吃完的碗盘放到一边，倒上茶。他很快地抿着，一边扫着报纸的头版。

“今天对我们很重要，”我说，“我希望事情顺利。”

“没什么大不了的，”他低着头说。

可是，那天出门前，二郎却在玄关那里的镜子前仔仔细细地照了照，整了整领带，看了看下巴，检查是不是刮干净了。他离开以后，我再次来到绪方先生的房门口听动静。还是什么都没听到。

“爸爸？”我轻声叫道。

“啊，悦子，”我听见里面传来绪方先生的声音。“我该猜到你不会让我睡懒觉。”

我松了一口气，回到厨房，新泡了一壶茶，然后把绪方先生的早饭准备好。当绪方先生终于坐下来吃早饭时，他轻描淡写地说道：

“我想二郎已经走了吧。”

“哦是，他早走了。我正准备把爸爸的早饭倒掉。我以为他懒得中午前都不想起床。”

“啊，别那么不近人情，悦子。等你到了我这个年纪，你就会想偶尔放松一下。再说，跟你们在一起，我就像放假一样。”

“好了，我想就这一次，可以原谅爸爸这么偷懒。”

“回到福冈以后我就没有机会像今天这样睡懒觉了，”他拿起筷子说，接着，深深地叹了口气。“我想我差不多该回去了。”

“回去？可是不急啊，爸爸。”

“不，我真的差不多该回去了。还有很多工作要接着做。”

“工作？什么工作？”

“这个嘛，首先，我得给阳台装上新的护板。再就是假山。这个我都还没开始弄呢。石头几个月前就运来了，放在花园里，等着我回去。”他叹了口气，开始吃早饭。“回去以后我确实没有机会像今天这样睡懒觉了。”

“可是没有必要急着回去不是，爸爸？假山可以再等一等。”

“你太好了，悦子。可是时间紧迫。你瞧，我想我女儿和她丈夫今年秋天又会南下，我得在他们来之前把所有的事做完。去年和前年，他们都在秋天时来看我。所以我想今年他们会再来。”

“我明白了。”

“没错，他们今年秋天一定想再来。那个时候对纪久子的丈夫最方便。纪久子在信里总是说她多想看看我的新房子。”

绪方先生不由自主地点点头，然后端起碗接着吃饭。我看了他一会儿。

“纪久子真是个孝顺的女儿啊，爸爸，”我说，“大老远地从大阪过来。她一定很想念您。”

“我想她是觉得有必要偶尔离开一下她的公公。除此之外我想不到她为什么要跑这么老远。”

“您太坏了，爸爸。我肯定她是想您了。我要把您的话告诉她。”

绪方先生笑了。“可这是真的。老渡边像个军阀似的统治他们。每次南下，他们都要说他变得多么的让人难以忍受。我自己是相当喜欢这位老人的，但不可否认他是个老军阀。我猜他们会喜欢一个类似这里的地方，悦子，一间属于他们自己的公寓。不是什么坏事，年轻夫妇跟父母分开住。现在越来越多的夫妇这样做。年轻人不想一直受专制的老人的统治。”

绪方先生好像突然想起碗里的饭，赶紧吃了起来。吃完早饭后，他站起来，走到窗边。他在那里站了一会儿，背对着我，看着窗外的风景。然后他调整了一下窗户，让更多空气进来，深深地吸了一口气。

“您喜欢您的新房子吗，爸爸？”我问。

“我的房子？怎么，是的。正如我说的，有这里那里还需要弄一弄。但它小多了。长崎的房子对一个老人来说太大了。”

他依旧看着窗外；在早晨强烈的阳光下，我看不清他的头和肩膀。

“可那是栋好房子，旧的那栋，”我说。“我要是往那里走的话，还会停下来看看它。其实，上周我从藤原太太那里回来时就路过了。”

他没有做声，依旧看着外面的风景，我就以为他没有听见我的话。但过了一会儿，他说：

“老房子怎么样了？”

“哦，跟以前差不多。新住户一定是喜欢原来的样子。”

他微微转向我。“那那些杜鹃花呢，悦子？还在门口吗？”亮光仍旧使我看不清他的脸，但是我从他的声音听出他在微笑。

“杜鹃花？”

“啊，我想你不会记得的。”他转回去，伸了伸胳膊。“我那天种在门口的。事情最后定下来的那天。”

“什么事情定下来？”

“你和二郎结婚的事。但是我从来没有告诉你杜鹃花的事，所以我想我不应该指望你记得它们。”

“您为我种了一些杜鹃花？多好的想法。可是没有，我不记得您提起过。”

“可要知道，悦子，是你要我种的。”他再次转向我。“事实上，你断然要求我种在门口。”

“什么？”——我笑了——“我要求您的？”

“是的，你要求我的。把我当成雇来的花匠。你不记得了？当我以为终于一切都定下来了，你终于要成为我的媳妇时，你对我说还有一件事，你不会住在一所门口没有杜鹃花的房子里。要是我不种杜鹃花，整件事就都告吹。所以我能怎么办呢？我立刻出去，种了杜鹃花。”

我笑了笑，说：“您这么一说，我想起来像是有那么回事。可是太可笑了，爸爸。我从来没有强迫您。”

“哦不，你有，悦子。你说你不会住在一所门口没有杜鹃花的房子里。”他离开窗户，再次在我对面坐下。“没错，悦子，”他说，“当成雇来的花匠。”

我们俩都笑了，我开始倒茶。

“您瞧，杜鹃花一直是我最喜欢的花，”我说。

“是，你说过。”

我倒完茶，我们静静地坐着，看着蒸汽从茶杯里冒出来。

过了一会儿我说：“那时我对二郎的计划一无所知。”

“是啊。”

我伸出手去把一碟小蛋糕放在他的茶杯旁。绪方先生微笑地看着它们。最后，他说道：

“杜鹃花长得很漂亮。可是那时，当然了，你们已经搬走了。但这也不是什么坏事，年轻夫妇自己住。看看纪久子和她丈夫。他们想搬出来自己住，可是老渡边让他们想都别想。他真是老军阀。”

“现在想想，”我说，“上周门口是有杜鹃花。新住户一定同意我的看法。房子门口一定要有杜鹃花。”

“我很高兴它们还在。”绪方先生呷了一口茶。然后他叹了口气，笑了一声，说：“那个渡边真是老军阀。”

早饭后不久，绪方先生建议我们应该去长崎逛逛——用他的话说“像游客那样”。我立刻同意，我们坐电车进城。我记得我们先在一个美术馆里待了一会儿，然后，快中午前，我们去参观离市中心不远的一个大型开放公园里的和平纪念雕像。

这个公园一般被叫做“和平公园”——我一直不知道这是不是它的正式名称——而确实，尽管有孩子和鸟儿的叫声，这一大片绿地上却笼罩着一种肃穆的气氛。公园里常见的装饰，诸如灌木和喷泉，少之又少，而且都很朴素；平坦的草地、广阔的夏日天空以及雕像本身——一尊巨大的白色雕像，纪念原子弹的遇难者——占据了公园的主要部分。

雕像貌似一位希腊男神，伸开双臂坐着。他的右手指向天空，炸弹掉下来的地方；另一只手向左侧伸展开去，意喻挡住邪恶势力。他双眼紧闭，在祈祷。

我一直觉得那尊雕像长得很丑，而且我无法将它和炸弹掉下来那天发生的事以及随后的可怕的日子联系起来。远远看近乎可笑，像个警察在指挥交通。我一直觉得它就只是一尊雕像，虽然大多数长崎人似乎把它当作一种象征，但我怀疑大家的感觉和我一样。如今我要是偶尔回忆起长崎的那尊大白色雕像，我总是首先想起我和绪方先生去参观和平公园的那个早晨，以及他的明信片的事。

“照片上看起来不怎么样，”我记得绪方先生举起他刚买的雕像的明信片说。我们站在离雕像五十码开外的地方。“我一直想寄张明信片，”他接着说，“虽然现在我随时都会回福冈去，但我想还是值得寄的。悦子，你有笔吗？也许我应该马上就寄，不然一定会忘记。”

我在手提包里找到一支笔，我们在附近的长椅上坐下。我发现他一直盯着卡片空白的那面，笔拿在手上，却没有写。我感到奇怪。有一两次，我看见他抬头看看雕像，像是在寻找灵感。最后我问他：

“您是要寄给福冈的朋友吗？”

“哦，只是一个熟人。”

“爸爸看上去做贼心虚，”我说，“我在想他会是在写给谁呢。”

绪方先生惊讶地朝上一看，然后大笑起来。“心虚？真的吗？”

“真的，很心虚。我在想要是没有人看着爸爸，他会干什么呢。”

绪方先生大笑个不停，笑得我觉得椅子在晃。等他笑得不那么厉害时，他说：“很好，悦子。你抓住我了。你抓住我在给我的女朋友写信”——“女朋友”这个词他用的是英语。“当场抓住。”说着又笑了起来。

“我一直猜想爸爸在福冈的生活很精彩。”

“是，悦子”——他仍轻轻地笑着——“很精彩的生活。”接着他深吸了一口气，再次低头看明信片。“你知道，我真的不晓得该写什么。也许我可以什么都不写，就这样寄出去。毕竟我只是想让她看看雕像长什么样。但话说回来，这样可能太随便了。”

“啊，我不能给您建议，爸爸，除非您告诉我这位神秘的女士是谁。”

“这位神秘的女士，悦子，在福冈开一家小饭馆。离我的房子很近，所以我经常去那里吃晚饭。有时我和她聊聊，她人不错，我答应要寄给她一张和平纪念雕像的明信片。恐怕事情就是这样。”

“我知道了，爸爸。可我还是不相信。”

“人很不错的一位老太太，但过一会儿就让人觉得烦了。如果只有我一个客人，她就整顿饭的工夫站着，讲个不停。不幸的是附近没有多少合适的吃饭的地方。你瞧，悦子，你要是像你答应过的那样教我做饭，我就不必忍受她那种人了。”

“可这是白费力气，”我笑着说，“爸爸不可能学会的。”

“胡说。你只是怕我超过你。你太自私了，悦子。好了我想想”——他再次看看明信片——“我该跟这位老太太说些什么呢？”

“您还记得藤原太太吗？”我问，“她现在在开一家面馆。在爸爸的老房子附近。”

“是，我听说了。太遗憾了。像她那种地位的人开起了面馆。”

“可她很喜歡。面馆让她有事可做。她经常问起您。”

“太遗憾了，”他重复道。“她丈夫是个很有地位的人。我很尊敬他。可如今她开起了面馆。不可思议。”他沉重地摇摇头。“我想去拜访她、向她问好，可我想这会让她觉得很难堪。我是说就她的现状。”

“爸爸，她并不觉得开面馆是件丢脸的事。她觉得自豪。她说她一直想做生意，不管是多么小的生意。我想您去看她，她会很高兴的。”

“你说她的店在中川？”

“对。离老房子很近。”

绪方先生似乎考虑了一会儿。然后他转向我说：“那好，悦子。我们去看她吧。”他匆匆地在明信片上写了几句，把笔还给我。

“您是说现在，爸爸？”我被他的突然决定吓了一跳。

“对，干吗不呢？”

“很好。我想她可以给我们午饭吃。”

“对，也许。但我可不想让那位好太太觉得丢脸。”

“她会很乐意做午饭给我们吃的。”

绪方先生点点头，没有说话。沉默片刻后，他慢慢说道：“其实，悦子，我早就想去中川了。我想拜访那里一个人。”

“哦？”

“我在想这会儿他在不在家。”

“您想去拜访谁，爸爸？”

“重夫。松田重夫。我一直想去拜访他。他可能回家吃午饭，这样的话我就能找到他。比去学校打搅他好。”

许久，绪方先生凝视着雕像的方向，脸上露出有点拿不定主意的表情。我不做声，看着他把明信片拿在手里转啊转。突然，他拍了一下膝盖，站起来。

“好，悦子，”他说，“就这么办吧。我们先去找重夫，然后去拜访藤原太太。”

我们搭上去往中川的电车时一定已经是中午时分了；车厢内又挤又闷，车厢外的马路上满是吃午饭的人群。但当我们渐渐离开市中心时，乘客越来越少，电车到达终点站中川时，就只剩下几个人了。

走出电车，绪方先生站了一会儿，摸着下巴。很难说他是在品味重回这里的滋味，还是只是在想松田重夫家怎么走。我们站在一个水泥院子里，周围停着几辆空电车，头顶上是横七竖八的黑色电线。太阳很大，照得油漆的车身十分晃眼。

“真热啊，”绪方先生擦了擦额头，说道。然后他迈开步子，朝电车庭院那头后面的一排房子走去。我跟着他。

几年来，这一带并没有变多少。我们走在弯弯曲曲的小路上，一会儿上、一会儿下。山上哪儿能盖房子，房子就矗立在哪儿，其中的很多房子我依然熟悉；有的站在斜坡上摇摇欲坠，有的挤在看不见的角落里。很多阳台上挂着毯子啦、洗的衣服啦。我们走着，经过几间看上去气派一点的房子，但我们既没有经过绪方先生的老房子，也没有经过以前我和父母住在一起的房子。事实上，我怀疑绪方先生是不是故意选了一条避开它们的路。

我猜想我们最多走了十或者十五分钟，但太阳和陡坡让我们筋疲力尽。最后我们在一个陡坡的中央停了下来，绪方先生拉我到人行道旁一棵茂密的树下乘凉。接着他指着马路对面一栋旧式大斜瓦屋顶、样子舒适的老房子，说：

“那就是重夫家。我跟他父亲很熟。就我所知，他母亲仍跟他住在一起。”说完，绪方先生又开始摸下巴，像刚下电车时那样。我没说什么，只是等着。

“他很可能不在家，”绪方先生说，“他有可能和同事一起待在教研室里午休。”

我仍旧是等着，不做声。绪方先生依然站在我旁边，凝视着那所房子。最后，他说：

“悦子，这里离藤原太太那多远？你知道吗？”

“几分钟就到了。”

“我在想，也许最好是你先过去，我去找你。这样可能最好。”

“好的。要是您希望如此。”

“其实是我做事太欠考虑。”

“我不是弱不禁风，爸爸。”

他笑了一声，然后又瞥了一眼房子。“我想最好这样，”他重复道，“你先过去。”

“好的。”

“我不会很久。其实”——他又瞥了一眼房子——“其实，你干吗不在这里等着，我去按门铃。要是看见我进去，你就先到藤原太太那里去。我太欠考虑了。”

“一点儿都不要紧，爸爸。现在您听好了，不然您永远也别想找到面馆。您记得以前那个医生的诊所吗？”

但这时绪方先生已经没有在听了。马路对面的大门开了，一个瘦瘦的、戴着眼镜的年轻人走出来。他穿着衬衫，腋下夹着一只小公文包。走到太阳底下时，他眯了眯眼睛。接着他转向公文包，开始找东西。松田重夫比我之前见过的几次看起来更瘦、更年轻。

第九章

松田重夫扣上公文包的扣子，然后一边心烦意乱地看看周围，一边朝马路这边走来。他扫了我们这边一眼，却没有认出我们，继续往前走。

绪方先生看着他走过去。当年轻人走了几码远时，他才喊道：“啊，重夫！”

松田重夫停下脚步，转过身来，然后迷惑不解地朝我们走来。

“你好吗，重夫？”

年轻人透过镜片细细看来，接着高兴地笑了起来。

“啊呀，绪方先生！太意外了！”他鞠了一躬，然后伸出手来。“真是个惊喜。啊，还有悦子！你们好吗？真高兴又见到你们。”

我们互相鞠了躬，他还和我们都握了手。接着他对绪方先生说：

“你们是要去找我吗？太不巧了，我的午休时间快到了。”他看了看表。“但我们还可以进去坐几分钟。”

“不，不，”绪方先生赶忙说。“别让我们打搅了你的工作。我们只是刚好路过这里，我想起你住在这里，正把你家指给悦子看。”

“不客气，我能腾出几分钟来。至少喝杯茶吧。这天外面热得要命。”

“不，不。你得工作。”

一时间两个人站着对视。

“最近怎么样，重夫？”绪方先生问。“学校里怎么样？”

“哦，老样子。您知道的。而您，绪方先生，但愿您退休后过得愉快？我不知道您在长崎。我和二郎现在几乎都失去联系了。”接着他转向我，说：“我一直想写信，但老是忘记。”

我笑了笑，说了几句客套话。然后两人又对视着。

“您看上去气色真不错，绪方先生，”松田重夫说。“您喜欢福岡吗？”

“喜欢，一座好城市。我的老家，你知道。”

“真的？”

又是一阵沉默。接着绪方先生说：“千万别让我们耽搁了你。你要是赶时间的话，我很理解。”

“不，不。我还有几分钟。真可惜您没有早点路过这里。也许您离开长崎前可以来找我。”

“好，我尽量。可我有很多人要去拜访。”

“是，我理解。”

“还有你母亲，她好吗？”

“是，她很好。谢谢您。”

一时间，两人又不说话了。

“我很高兴一切都好，”绪方先生打破沉默，说道，“对，我们刚好路过这里，我在告诉悦子你住在这里。事实上，我刚刚想起你以前常来我们家和二郎玩，你们都还是小孩子的时候。”

松田重夫笑了。“时间过得真快啊，不是吗？”他说。

“是啊。我刚还在跟悦子说呢。事实上，我正要告诉她一件奇怪的小事。我看见你家时突然想起来的。一件奇怪的小事。”

“哦，是吗？”

“是的。我看见你家时刚好想起来，就这么回事。是这样，有一天我读到一篇东西。一本期刊里的一篇文章。我想是叫《新教育文摘》。”

一时间年轻人没有做声，过了一会儿他调整了一下在人行道上的站姿，放下公文包。

“嗯哼，”他说。

“读了以后我有点吃惊。事实上是很惊讶。”

“是。我想您会的。”

“文章很奇怪，重夫。很奇怪。”

松田重夫深吸了一口气，然后看着地板。他点点头，但没有说什么。

“我早想来找你谈谈，”绪方先生接着说，“但自然了，我把这件事忘了。重夫，老实告诉我，你相信你写的东西吗？解释一下是什么让你写那些东西。解释给我听，重夫，这样我才能安心地回到福冈去。现在我很迷惑。”

松田重夫用鞋跟踢着一块小石头。最后他叹了口气，抬头看绪方先生，正了正眼镜。

“这几年很多事都变了，”他说。

“啊，自然是这样。我看得出来。可这算什么回答，重夫？”

“绪方先生，让我解释给您听。”他停顿了一下，又低头看地板，中间挠了一下耳朵。“您瞧，您必须理解。现在很多事都变了。而且还在变。我们现在的生活和过去……过去您是位有影响力的人物时不一样了。”

“但是，重夫，这和事情有什么关系？时代可能是变了，但为什么写那种文章？我做了什么冒犯你的事了吗？”

“没有，从来没有。至少对我个人没有。”

“我想也是。还记得那天我把你介绍给现在学校的校长吗？不是很久以前的事吧。或者说那也是另一个时代的事？”

“绪方先生”——松田重夫提高了嗓门，神态里似乎透出一丝权威——“绪方先生，我真希望您早一个小时来，那样我也许能解释得清楚些。现在没有时间把整件事情讲清楚。但是让我就说这么多。是的，我相信我文章里写的每一个字，现在仍然相信。您那个时候，老师教给日本的孩子们可怕的东西。他们学到的是最具破坏力的谎言。最糟糕的是，老师教他们不能看、不能问。这就是为什么我们国家会卷入有史以来最可怕的灾难。”

“我们也许是打了败仗，”绪方先生打断他说，“但不能因此而照搬敌人的那一套。我们打败仗是因为我们没有足够的枪和坦克，不是因为我们的人民胆小，不是因为我们的社会浮浅。重夫，你不知道我们多么辛勤地工作，我们这些人，像我，像远藤老师，你在文章里

也侮辱了他。我们深切地关心我们的国家，辛勤工作让正确的价值观保留下来，并传承下去。”

“我不怀疑这些。我不怀疑您的真诚和辛勤工作。我从来没有质疑过这点。可是您的精力用在了不对的地方，罪恶的地方。您当时不会发觉，但恐怕这是事实。如今一切都过去了，我们惟有感激。”

“太奇怪了，重夫。你真的相信这些？谁教你说这些的？”

“绪方先生，坦诚一些吧。您一定心知肚明我说的都是真的。而且说句公道话，不应该责备您没有认识到您的行为的真正后果。当时很少有人认识到局势发展的方向，而那些少数认清时局的人却因直抒己见而被投进监狱。不过现在他们被释放了，他们将带领我们走向新的黎明。”

“新的黎明？胡说八道些什么？”

“好了，我得走了。很抱歉我们不能多谈谈。”

“这是什么话，重夫？你怎么能说出这种话？你显然不知道像远藤老师这样的人为工作付出了多少努力和心血。那时你还是小孩子，你怎么可能知道事情是什么样的？你怎么可能知道我们付出了什么，取得了什么？”

“事实上，我碰巧熟悉您的职业的某些方面。比如说，在西坂小学解雇并监禁了五名教师。我没记错的话是1938年4月。不过现在那些人被释放了，他们将帮助我们迈向新的黎明。现在请原谅。”松田重夫拎起公文包，朝我们依次鞠了躬。“代我向二郎问好，”他补充道，然后转身离去。

绪方先生看着年轻人走下山去，消失不见。之后他仍在原地站了好一会儿，没有说话。当他最终转向我时，眼角泛着微笑。

“多么自信的年轻人啊，”他说，“我想我以前也是一样。坚持己见。”

“爸爸，”我说，“现在我们该去看藤原太太了吧。我们该吃午饭了。”

“哎呀，当然了，悦子。我太粗心了，让你这么大热天地站着。对，我们去看那位好太太吧。我很高兴能再见到她。”

我们走下山，接着走过一条小河上的一座木桥。桥下有一群孩子在河边玩耍，其中几个拿着鱼竿。路上我对绪方先生说：

“他都是在胡说八道。”

“谁？你指重夫？”

“都是些可耻的话。我觉得您根本不用在意，爸爸。”

绪方先生笑了笑，但没有回答。

和平时一样，那个钟点，那一带的商业街挤满了人。走进面馆阴凉的前院时，我欣喜地看见几张桌子上坐着客人。藤原太太看见我们，走了过来。

“哎呀，绪方先生，”她一眼就认出他来，惊呼道，“再次见到您真是太好了。很久不见了，不是吗？”

“确实是很久了。”绪方先生回敬藤原太太的鞠躬。“是啊，很久了。”

看见他们如此热情地打招呼，我很是感动，因为据我所知，他们并不熟识。他们没完没了地鞠躬来鞠躬去，最后藤原太太才去给我们取东西吃。

她很快就端来两碗热腾腾的面，抱歉说没有什么更好的东西来招待我们。绪方先生感激地鞠了一躬，吃起来。

“我还以为您早把我忘了呢，藤原太太，”他微笑着说。“说真的，好久了。”

“像这样久别重逢真是件高兴的事。”藤原太太在我那张长凳的角上坐下，说，“悦子跟我说您现在住在福冈。我去过福冈几次。很好的城市，不是吗？”

“是的，没错。福冈是我的老家。”

“福冈是您的老家？可是您在这里生活、工作了那么多年。难道长崎没有值得您留念的吗？”

绪方先生笑了，把头歪向一边。“一个人也许会在一个地方工作、奉献，但是到了最后”——他耸耸肩，怀念地笑了笑——“到了最后，他仍旧想回到他生长的故乡去。”

藤原太太点点头，表示理解，然后说道：“绪方先生，我刚刚在想您当秀一学校校长的那时候。他以前可怕您了。”

绪方先生笑了。“是，我清楚地记得您的秀一。一个聪明的男孩子。很聪明。”

“您真的还记得他，绪方先生？”

“是，当然，我记得秀一。他学习很用功。是个好孩子。”

“是啊，他是个好孩子。”

绪方先生用筷子指了指碗，说：“太好吃了。”

“瞎说。很抱歉没有什么更好的东西来招待你们。”

“不，真的，很好吃。”

“让我想想，”藤原太太说。“那个时候有个老师，她对秀一很好。她叫什么名字来着？我想是铃木，铃木小姐。您知道她后来怎么样了么，绪方先生？”

“铃木小姐？啊，是，我想起来了。但是很遗憾我不知道她现在在哪里。”

“她对秀一很好。还有另外一个老师，名字叫黑田。一个很棒的年轻人。”

“黑田……”绪方先生慢慢地点点头。“啊，是，黑田。我记得他。是位好老师。”

“是啊，一个与众不同的年轻人。我丈夫对他印象特别深刻。您知道他后来怎么样了么？”

“黑田……”绪方先生仍若有所思地点着头。一缕阳光照在他脸上，照亮了他眼睛周围的许多皱纹。“黑田，让我想想。我有一次遇到过他，很偶然的，战争开始的时候。我想他参战了。从那以后我就再也没有他的消息了。是，是位好老师。以前的很多人都没有消息了。”

有人叫藤原太太，我们看着她匆匆地走过水泥地到客人的桌子那去。她站在那里行了好一会儿的礼，然后收拾桌上的碗盘，走进厨房。

绪方先生看着她，然后摇摇头。“看见她这样真是遗憾，”他低声说。我没说什么，只是吃饭。过了一会儿绪方先生从桌子那头俯过身来，问：“悦子，你以前说她儿子叫什么名字来着？我是指活着的那个。”

“和夫，”我小声说。

他点点头，接着吃面。

过了一会儿藤原太太回来。“没有什么更好的东西来招待你们，真是不好意思，”她说。

“瞎说，”绪方先生说。“面很好吃。对了，和夫最近怎么样？”

“他很好。他身体健康，工作也顺利。”

“很好。悦子刚才跟我说他在一家汽车公司上班。”

“是，他在那里做得很好。而且他正在考虑再婚。”

“真的？”

“以前他说他不会再结婚，但是现在他开始向前看了。他目前还没有考虑的对象，但至少他开始考虑未来了。”

“这样想才对，”绪方先生说。“啊，他还年轻，不是？”

“当然了。他还有一大把日子呢。”

“当然了。他的日子还长着呢。你一定要给他找一个好姑娘，藤原太太。”

她笑了。“您以为我没试过？不过现在的女孩子大不一样了。太让我吃惊了，世道变得如此之大、如此之快。”

“确实，您说得很对。现在的女孩子都任性得很。而且整天在讲什么洗衣机啦、洋裙啦。悦子也是。”

“胡说，爸爸。”

藤原太太又笑了，然后说：“我记得我第一次听说洗衣机时，我不敢相信有人会想要那玩意。明明有一双好好的手可以干活，干吗要花那个钱？不过我相信悦子不会同意我的看法的。”

我正想说什么，却被绪方先生抢先一步：“我跟您说我前些天听说的一件事。其实是二郎的一个同事告诉我的。显然是在上次的选举中，要投给哪个政党，他妻子和他意见不合。他就打她，但是他妻子仍然没有让步。所以最后，他们分别投给了不同的政党。您能想像过去会发生这种事吗？太奇怪了。”

藤原太太摇摇头。“世道变太多了，”她叹了口气，说。“不过我听悦子说二郎现在在公司里干得很好。您一定很为他骄傲，绪方先生。”

“是，我想那孩子确实干得不错。事实上，今天他将代表他们公司参加一个很重要的会议。看来他们正在考虑再次提拔他。”

“太了不起了。”

“他去年才刚刚获得提升。我想领导一定对他评价很高。”

“太了不起了。您一定很为他骄傲。”

“那小子是个工作很努力的人。从小就是。我记得小时候，其他父亲都在使劲地叫孩子要更刻苦地学习，我却要不断地叫他多去玩一玩，学得那么刻苦对身体不好。”

藤原太太笑了，摇摇头说：“是啊，和夫也工作得很拼命，常常看文件看到半夜。我劝他不要工作得这么辛苦，可他不听。”

“是，他们根本不听。但是我得承认，我以前也是这样。当你相信你做的是对的时，你就不愿意浪费一分一秒。我妻子也常劝我多休息，可我就是不听。”

“是啊，和夫就是这样。可他要是再结婚了，就得改改了。”

“别指望结了婚就会改变，”绪方先生笑着说。说完，他把筷子整齐地搁在碗上。“哎呀，太好吃了。”

“瞎说。很抱歉没有什么更好的东西来招待你们。您还要吗？”

“有多的话，我很乐意。要知道，我得趁这些日子多享受享受这么好的饭菜。”

“瞎说，”藤原太太站起来，再次说道。

我们回到家后不久，二郎也下班回家了，比平时早一个小时左右。他愉快地向他父亲问好——完全忘了前一天晚上发脾气的事——然后洗澡去了。洗完澡出来时，他换上了和服，哼着小曲儿。他在垫子上坐下，开始用毛巾擦头发。

“那么，事情怎么样？”绪方先生问。

“什么事情？哦，您是指那个会啊。还不错。不算太糟。”

我正要去厨房，但在门口停了下来，想听听二郎接下来会说些什么。他父亲也一直看着他。而二郎只是擦着头发，没有看我们。

“事实上，”他终于开口说道，“我想我干得还不错。我说服他们的代表签了一份协议。不是合同，但差不离了。我的老板相当吃惊。他们很少像这样答应下来。老板让我提早下班。”

“哎呀，真是好消息，”绪方先生说道，然后笑了一声。他朝我看了一眼，又转向他儿子。“真是好消息。”

“恭喜，”我对着我丈夫微笑地说道。“我太高兴了。”

二郎抬起头来，好像这才注意到我。

“你干吗那样站在那里？”他问。“你知道我不介意来点茶。”他放下毛巾，开始梳头。

那天晚上，为了庆祝二郎谈判成功，我准备了比平时丰盛的晚餐。不管是晚餐时，还是晚餐后直到睡觉，绪方先生都没有提起白天见到松田重夫的事。可是晚餐刚开始时，他突然说道：

“哦，二郎，我明天要回去了。”

二郎抬起头来。“您要回去了？哦，太遗憾了。我希望您这几天住得开心。”

“是，我好好地休息了一番。事实上，我比原计划多待了好一阵子。”

“我们欢迎您住在这里，爸爸，”二郎说。“不用急着回去，我向您保证。”

“谢谢你们，可我该回去了。有些事情要接着做。”

“方便的时候，请一定要再来。”

“爸爸，”我说，“孩子出生以后您一定要来看孩子。”

绪方先生微笑着说：“那大概在新年吧。在那之前我不会来打搅你的，悦子。你会有够多的事要忙，哪有时间照顾我？”

“真遗憾您来的不是时候，”我丈夫说，“也许下一次我的工作就没有逼得这么紧了，我们就有时间多聊聊了。”

“好了，别担心了，二郎。没有什么比看到你如此投入工作更让我高兴的了。”

“现在这笔生意终于谈成了，”二郎说，“我的时间就多一些了。真遗憾您这时候要回去。我正在考虑请两天假呢。但我想是无济于事了。”

“爸爸，”我打断二郎的话，“要是二郎能请两天假，您不能多待一个星期吗？”

我丈夫停下在吃饭的手，但没有抬头。

“很诱人的提议，”绪方先生说，“但我想我真的该回去了。”

二郎接着吃饭。“真遗憾，”他说。

“没错，我真的得在纪久子和她丈夫来之前把阳台弄好。他们秋天时一定会想来的。”

二郎没有回答，我们静静地吃着晚饭。过了一会儿，绪方先生说：

“而且我不能整天坐在这里想着下棋。”他有点不自然地笑了笑。

二郎点点头，但没有说什么。绪方先生又笑了一声，我们继续静静地吃饭。

“您最近喝清酒吗，爸爸？”过了好一会儿二郎问道。

“清酒？有时喝一点。不常喝。”

“既然这是您住在这里的最后一晚，我们喝点酒吧。”

绪方先生像是想了好一会儿。最后他微笑着说：“没有必要为了我一个糟老头瞎忙活。但我和你喝一杯，庆祝你美好的前程。”

二郎冲我点点头。我走向碗柜，取出一个酒瓶和两个杯子。

这时绪方先生说：“我一直相信你会成功。你总是很有前途。”

“就凭今天的事并不保证他们一定会提升我，”我丈夫说。“但我想我今天的努力也没什么坏处。”

“当然没有，”绪方先生说。“不会有什么坏处。”

他俩都静静地看着我倒酒。然后绪方先生放下筷子，举起酒杯。

“为你的将来干杯，二郎，”他说。

我丈夫嘴里还吃着东西，也举起酒杯。

“也为您干杯，爸爸，”他说。

回忆，我发现，可能是不可靠的东西；常常被你回忆时的环境所大大地扭曲，毫无疑问，我现在在这里的某些回忆就是这样。比如说，我发现这种想法很诱人，即：那天下午我看见了一个先兆；那天我脑子里闪过的可怕的画面和一个人长时间地无聊时做的各种白日梦是完全不同的，来得更加强烈、更加逼真。

很可能根本不是什么大不了的事。一个小女孩被发现吊死在树上的惨剧——更甚于之前的那几起儿童谋杀案——震惊了整个小区。所以那年夏天我不会是唯一一个被这类幻象所困扰的人。

那是我们去稻佐山一两天之后，下午晚些时候，我正在公寓里忙着一些零活，无意间瞥了一眼窗外。从我第一次看见那辆美国大车以来，那片废弃的空地肯定已经变硬了很多，因为现在我看见车在凹凸不平的路面上行驶并没有什么困难。车越来越近，然后跌跌撞撞地开上了我们窗户底下的水泥路。反光的挡风玻璃让我看不清车里，但我确定车里不只司机一个。车在住宅区这兜了一下，然后开出了我的视线。

一定是在那个时候，当我有些困惑地看着小木屋时，我看见了那个幻象。没有任何明显的征兆，那个毛骨悚然的画面就突然闯进我的脑海。我不安地从窗户边走开，继续做我的家务，努力把那个画面赶出脑海，但过了好几分钟，我才觉得摆脱掉了它，思绪回到再次出现的白色大车上。

大约一个小时以后我看见一个人穿过空地朝木屋走去。我遮起眼睛好看得更清楚些；是个女人——瘦瘦的——慢慢地、小心翼翼地走着。她在小屋外停了一会儿，然后消失在斜斜的屋顶后面。我一直盯着那里，但她没有再出现；显然她进去了。

我在窗口站了一会儿，不知道该怎么办。最后，我穿上木屐，走出公寓。外面正是一天中最热的时候，穿过干巴巴的空地的那段不长的路却似乎永远也走不完。当我终于走到小屋时，我累得忘了我来干什么。这时，我听见屋里的说话声，有点吓了一跳。一个声音是万里子的；另一个声音我不认识。我走近门口，但听不清楚她们在说什么。我在那里站了站，拿不准该怎么办。最后我打开门叫了起来。说话声停止了。我等了一下，然后走了进去。

第十章

从亮晃晃的外头进来，小屋里似乎又冷又暗。阳光从各处狭窄的缝隙里强烈地照射进来，在榻榻米上投下一个个小光斑。木头的潮味还跟以前一样重。

过了一两秒钟我的眼睛才适应过来。一位老妇人坐在榻榻米上，万里子坐在她面前。老妇人转过来看我时很小心地摆头，像是怕伤着脖子。她的脸瘦瘦的，而且粉笔般苍白，开始时令我有点不安。她看上去七十岁上下，虽说她脆弱的脖子和肩膀可能是因为上了年纪，也可能是因为身体不好。她穿着一一般在葬礼上才穿的暗黑色和服，眼睛有点凹，面无表情地看着我。

“你好，”她终于开口说道。

我微微欠了欠身，也说了句“您好”。我们尴尬地对视了一两秒钟。

“你是邻居？”老妇人问。她说话是一个字、一个字慢慢地吐出来。

“是的，”我说，“一个朋友。”

她又看了我一会儿，然后问：“你知道主人上哪儿去了吗？她把孩子一个人扔下了。”

小女孩换了位置，和陌生人并排坐着。听到老妇人问的问题，万里子目不转睛地看着我。

“不，我不知道，”我说。

“真奇怪，”妇人说。“孩子好像也不知道。她会去哪儿了呢？我不能待很久。”

我们又对视了一会儿。

“您从远处来的吗？”我问。

“相当远。请原谅我的服装。我刚参加了一个葬礼。”

“我知道了。”我又鞠了一躬。

“伤感的场合，”老妇人说道，出神地慢慢点起头来。“我父亲以前的一个同事。家父身体虚弱，不能出门，让我代为致意。是个伤感的场合。”她环顾了一下小屋的内部，摆头时同样是很小心。“你不知道她去哪儿了？”她又问了一遍。

“是的，很遗憾我不清楚。”

“我不能等太久。家父会担心的。”

“有没有什么话我可以代为转达？”我问。

老妇人没有马上回答。过了一会儿，她说：“也许你可以告诉她我来找过她，向她问好。我是她的亲戚。我叫川田安子。”

“安子女士？”我努力掩饰我的惊讶。“您是安子女士，佐知子的表姐？”

老妇人鞠了一躬，鞠躬时肩膀微微颤抖。“请告诉她我来找过她，向她问好。你不知道她去哪儿了？”

我再次否认知道任何消息。妇人又一次出神地点起头来。

“如今的长崎大不一样了，”她说。“今天下午我都认不出来了。”

“是，”我说。“我想是变了很多。可是您不住在长崎吗？”

“我们已经在长崎住了好多年了。正如你说的，长崎变了很多。出现了很多新楼，还有新的街道。我上一次到城里来一定是在春天的时候。可即便在这段时间里也盖起了新楼。我肯定春天的时候是没有那些楼的。事实上，我想那次我也是来参加一个葬礼。没错，山下先生的丧礼。不知为何，春天的葬礼似乎更加伤感。你说你是邻居？很高兴认识你。”她的脸抖动了一下，我看见她在微笑；她的眼睛眯得细细的，嘴角向下弯，而不是向上。站在玄关我觉得不舒服，但又不敢走到榻榻米上去。

“很高兴见到您，”我说。“佐知子常提起您。”

“她提起我？”妇人似乎回味了一下这句话。“我们在等着她搬来和我们住。跟家父和我。也许她跟你说了。”

“是的，她说过。”

“我们三个星期前就开始等。可她一直没来。”

“三个星期前？这个嘛，我想这里面一定有什么误会。我知道她一直在准备搬家。”

老妇人再次环顾了一下小屋。“真遗憾她不在家，”她说。“不过如果你是她的邻居，那我很高兴认识你。”她再次鞠了一躬，然后一直盯着我看。“也许你能替我传个话给她，”她说。

“啊，当然可以。”

妇人沉默了一会儿才开口说道：“我们发生了小小的争执，她和我。也许她告诉过你。只不过是个小误会，没什么。结果第二天我惊讶地发现她已经收拾好东西，离开了。我确实很惊讶。我无意冒犯她。家父说是我的错。”她停顿了一下。“我无意冒犯她，”她重复道。

我从没想到过佐知子的伯父和表姐不知道她有个美国朋友。我再次鞠了一躬，不知道回答什么。

“我承认她走了以后我很想她，”老妇人接着说。“我也想念万里子。我很喜欢她们的陪伴，我不应该发脾气、说了那些话。”她再次停下，脸转向万里子，再转回来。“家父虽然方式不同，但也想念她们。你瞧，他听得出来。他能听到房子里安静了好多。一天早上我发现他醒着，他对我说房子安静得让他想到坟墓。就像个坟墓，他说。她们搬回去对家父大有好处。也许佐知子愿意为了家父而搬回去。”

“我一定把您的感受传达给佐知子，”我说。

“也是为了她自己，”老妇人说。“毕竟一个女人不能没有一个男人来引导她。否则只会带来不良后果。家父虽然有病在身，但没有生命危险。她现在该回来了，不为别的也该为了她自己。”老妇人开始解开放在身旁的方巾。“事实上，我把它带来了，”她说。“没什么，只是我自己织的几件开襟毛衣。不过是好羊毛。我本打算她们回去以后给她们，但我今天带来了。起初我织了一件要给万里子，后来我想也给她母亲织一件好了。”她举起一件毛衣，然后看看小女孩。她笑的时候嘴角再次向下弯。

“真漂亮，”我说。“您一定花了很多时间。”

“是好羊毛，”妇人重复道。她把毛衣重新包起来，然后把方巾小心地系好。“现在我得回去了。家父要担心了。”

老妇人站起来，走下榻榻米。我帮她穿好木屐。万里子也来到榻榻米边，老妇人轻轻地碰了碰孩子的头顶。

她说：“万里子，要记住把我对你说的话告诉你妈妈。还有，你不用担心你的小猫。房子里有足够的地方给它们住。”

“我们很快就会回去，”万里子说。“我会告诉妈妈的。”

妇人又笑了笑。然后她转向我，鞠了一躬。“很高兴认识你。我不能久留了。你瞧，家父身体不好。”

“哦，是你啊，悦子，”佐知子说。那天晚上我又回到她的小屋。然后她笑了一声，说：“别那么吃惊的样子。你早知道我不会永远住在这里，不是吗？”

衣服、毯子和无数其他的东西堆得榻榻米上到处都是。我做了恰当的回答，然后找了个不碍事的地方坐下。我注意到身旁的地板上有两件看起来很漂亮的和服，我从没见佐知子穿过。我还看见了一——地板中央，一个硬纸盒里——她那套精美的浅白色陶瓷茶具。

佐知子已经把中间的几扇拉门都打开了，让最后的日光照进屋来；然而，昏暗还是在迅速地袭来，从走廊射进来的余晖基本上照不到万里子坐着的那个远远的角落。她静静地看着她妈妈。旁边，两只小猫在嬉戏打闹；小女孩怀里抱着另外一只。

“我想万里子告诉你了，”我对佐知子说。“早些时候有人来找你。你表姐来过这里。”

“是。万里子告诉我了。”佐知子继续收拾她的箱子。

“你明天早上离开？”

“对，”她有点不耐烦地说。然后她叹了一口气，抬头看我。

“对，悦子，我们明天早上离开。”她叠了件什么放进箱子的角落里。

“你的行李这么多，”我终于说道。“要怎么全都搬走呢？”

佐知子没有马上回答。过了一会儿，她一边收拾，一边说：“你是知道的，悦子。我们有车。”

我不说话了。佐知子深深地叹了口气，从房间那头朝我坐的地方看了一眼。

“对，我们要离开长崎了，悦子。我向你保证，我本打算全都收拾好了以后就去道别。我不会不跟你道谢就离开的，你对我那么好。对了，至于借的钱，我会通过邮局还给你。这点请不用担心。”她又开始收拾。

“你们要搬去哪里？”我问。

“神户。现在所有的事情都定下来了，不会再改变了。”

“神户？”

“对，悦子，神户。然后从那里去美国。弗兰克已经把所有的事情都安排好了。你不替我高兴吗？”她很快扬了扬嘴角，又转开了。

我还是盯着她。万里子也一直看着她。她怀里的小猫挣扎着想去和榻榻米上的小猫一起玩，可是小女孩紧紧地抱住它。她身边，屋子的角上，我看见了她在抓阉摊上赢的那只装菜的盒子；看来万里子已经把盒子改造成了小猫们的家。

“对了，悦子，那边那堆”——佐知子指了指——“那些东西我带不走了。我没想到东西这么多。那里有些质量还不错。你要的话就请拿去用吧。我当然没有冒犯的意思。仅仅是因为有些东西质量挺好。”

“可是你伯父怎么办？”我说。“还有你的表姐？”

“我伯父？”她耸耸肩。“很谢谢他请我去他家住。可是恐怕现在我另有打算。你不知道，悦子，离开这个地方我是多么如释重负。我相信我再也不会见到这种破地方了。”她又朝我看了一眼，笑了。

“我知道你在想什么。我向你保证，悦子，你想错了。这次他不会再让我失望了。明天一大早他就会开车过来。你不替我高兴吗？”佐知子看了看满地的行李，叹了口气。然后她跨过一堆衣服，在装茶具的盒子边跪下，开始往里面装一卷卷的羊毛。

“你决定了吗？”万里子突然问。

“现在没时间谈这个，万里子，”她妈妈说。“我这会儿很忙。”

“可是你说过我可以留着它们。你不记得了吗？”

佐知子轻轻摇了摇纸箱；瓷器仍然嘎嘎作响。她看了看周围，找到一块布，把它撕成碎布条。

“你说过我可以留着它们，”万里子重复道。

“万里子，请你稍微考虑一下眼前的情况。我们怎么可能带上那些畜牲呢？”

“可是你说过我可以留着它们。”

佐知子叹了口气，有一会儿像是在想事情。她低头看看茶具，手里捏着碎布条。

“你说过的，妈妈，”万里子说。“你不记得了吗？你说过我可以留着的。”

佐知子抬头看看她女儿，然后又看看那些小猫。“如今情况不同了，”她疲惫地说。这时，一股怒气划过她的脸，她一把扔掉那些布条。“万里子，你老想着那些畜牲干吗？我们怎么可能带上它们？不行，我们只能把它们留在这里。”

“可是你说过我可以留着它们。”

佐知子看了她女儿一会儿。“你就不能考虑一下其他事情吗？”她说，声音变得很低。“你难道还小，看不出除了这些肮脏的小东西以外，还有其他更重要的事情？你得懂事一点了。你不能总是对这些东西恋恋不舍。这些只是……只是动物，你看不出来吗？你不明白这个吗，孩子？你不明白吗？”

万里子也瞪着她妈妈。

“你喜欢的话，万里子，”我插进去说，“我可以时不时地来喂它们。它们最后都会找到家的。不用担心。”

小女孩转向我说：“妈妈说过我可以留着小猫。”

“别再孩子气了，”佐知子说。“你只是在故意捣乱，跟平时一样。这些肮脏的小畜牲有什么大不了的呢？”她站起来，走向万里子的角落。榻榻米上的小猫急忙后退；佐知子低头看看它们，然后深吸了一口气。她相当镇定地把蔬菜盒子侧翻过来——这样，铁丝网的滑板就朝上了一——弯下腰，把小猫一只只地扔进盒子里。然后她转向她女儿；万里子紧紧抱住剩下的一只小猫。

“把它给我，”佐知子说。

万里子抱着小猫不放。佐知子走上前去，伸出一只手。小女孩转过来看我。

“这只是小胖，”她说。“你想不想看看它，悦子阿姨？这只是小胖。”

“把那东西给我，万里子，”佐知子说。“你不明白吗，那只是一只动物。你怎么就不明白呢，万里子？你真的还小吗？那不是你的小宝宝，只是一只动物，就像老鼠啊、蛇啊。现在把它给我。”

万里子抬头瞪着她妈妈，然后慢慢地把小猫放下。小猫落在了她面前的榻榻米上，挣扎着被佐知子抓了起来。佐知子把它也扔进了蔬菜盒子里，然后“啪”地关上铁丝网。

“待在这里，”她对女儿说，然后拎起盒子。她经过我身边时，对我说：“真是太傻了，它们只是几只动物，有什么大不了的？”

万里子站了起来，像是要跟着她妈妈。佐知子在玄关那里回过头来说：“照我说的做。待在这里。”

有一会儿，万里子站在榻榻米的边上不动，看着她妈妈消失在门口。

“在这里等你妈妈，万里子，”我对她说。

小女孩转过来看了我一眼，然后就跑出去了。

起先，我没有动。一两分钟以后，我站起来、穿上木屐。在门口，我看见佐知子到河边去了，蔬菜盒子放在她脚边；她似乎没有注意到她女儿站在她身后几码的地方，就在陡坡上面。我离开小屋，朝万里子站着的地方走去。

“我们回到屋里去吧，万里子，”我轻声说。

小女孩仍旧看着她妈妈，面无表情。在我们下方，佐知子在河边小心翼翼地蹲下，把盒子拉近了一点。

“我们进去吧，万里子，”我又说了一遍，可小女孩还是没有理我。我离开她，走下泥泞的斜坡，朝佐知子蹲着的地方走去。夕阳透过树枝照在对岸，河边的芦苇在我们周围的泥地上投下长长的影子。虽然佐知子找了块有草的地方蹲下，但那里也都是泥。

“我们不能放了它们吗？”我静静地说。“谁知道呢。也许有人要它们。”

佐知子低头看着铁丝网里的小猫。她“啪”地把盒子打开，取出一只小猫，然后又把盒子关上。她双手抓住小猫，看了一会儿，然后

抬头看了我一眼，说：“这只是一只动物，悦子。就只是一只动物。”

她把小猫放进水里、按住。她保持这个姿势，眼睛盯着水里，双手都在水下。她穿着一件日常的夏季和服，两只袖子的袖口都碰到了水。

突然佐知子第一次转过头去看了一眼她女儿，手依旧放在水里。我本能地顺着她的视线看去，一刹那间，我们俩都回头看着万里子。小女孩站在斜坡顶上，依旧面无表情地看着。看见她母亲的脸转向她，她微微地把头转开；然后一动不动，双手背在身后。

佐知子把手从水里拿出来，看着仍旧抓在手里的小猫。她把小猫拿得近一点，水流下她的手腕和手臂。

“还活着，”她疲倦地说。然后她转向我说：“看看这水，悦子。太脏了。”她厌恶地把湿漉漉的小猫扔回盒子里，关上盖子。

“这些小东西在顽抗，”她嘟囔道，举起手腕，给我看上面的抓痕。不知怎么的，佐知子的头发也湿了；一滴水，然后又一滴从垂到她脸上的一小撮头发上流下来。

佐知子换了个姿势，把蔬菜盒子推向河边；盒子滑了下来，掉进水里。佐知子伸出手去抓住盒子，不让它漂走。河水几乎没到了铁丝网的半腰。她仍旧抓着盒子不放，最后双手把盒子一推。盒子漂进水里，冒着泡泡，沉得更下去了。佐知子站了起来，我们俩一起注视着盒子。盒子漂着，然后一股水流冲来，盒子加速往下游漂去。

这时什么东西从我眼前闪过，我猛地转头。万里子跑下河边，跑到几码远处的一块突进水里的浅滩上。她站在那里看着漂流的盒子，脸上依旧没有表情。盒子被芦苇缠住，松开了又继续前进。万里子又跑了起来。她沿着河岸跑了一段，然后又停下来，看着盒子。这时，盒子只剩一个小角露在水面上了。

“这水真脏，”佐知子说。她甩了甩手上的水，把和服两边的袖口一一拧干，然后掸掉膝盖上的泥。“我们进去吧，悦子。这里的虫子越来越让人受不了了。”

“我们不去找万里子吗？天很快就黑了。”

佐知子转过去叫她女儿的名字。万里子已经跑到五十码开外了，眼睛仍然看着河水，似乎没有听见在叫她。佐知子耸耸肩，说：“她

一会儿会回来的。现在我得趁天没黑赶紧把东西收拾完。”说完爬上斜坡，朝小屋走去。

佐知子点亮灯笼，挂在一处低木梁上。“别担心，悦子，”她说。“她很快就会回来了。”她走过一地板的各种各样的东西，跟刚才一样在敞开的拉门前坐下。身后，夕阳已经褪去，天色昏暗。

佐知子接着收拾东西。我在房间的另一头坐下，看着她。

“你现在怎么打算的？”我问。“到了神户以后要干什么？”

“全都安排好了，悦子，”她回答说，没有抬头。“不用担心。弗兰克都安排好了。”

“可为什么是神户？”

“他有朋友在那里。在美军基地。他得到了一份货船上的工作，他很快就能回美国了。然后他会寄给我们所需的钱，我们就去美国找他。他都安排好了。”

“你是说，他要先你们离开日本？”

佐知子笑了一声。“人要有耐心，悦子。一旦他到了美国，他就能找到工作、寄钱来。这是目前最可行的方案。毕竟他回到美国后找工作会容易得多。我不介意多等一些时间。”

“我知道了。”

“他都安排好了，悦子。他在神户给我们找好了住的地方，他还安排好到时我们坐的船可以比一般价格低将近一半。”说到这里，她叹了口气。“你不知道离开这个地方我有多高兴。”

佐知子又继续收拾东西。屋外微弱的光线照在她的半张脸上，而她的手和袖子都在灯笼的亮光里。感觉很奇怪。

“你在神户要等很久吗？”我问。

她耸耸肩。“我做好了耐心等待的准备，悦子。人要有耐心。”

光线很暗，我看不清楚她在叠什么；但似乎不好叠，她叠好又打开重新叠，反复了好几次。

“不管怎样，悦子，”她接着说，“他若不是确确实实真心的，干吗要给自己找这个麻烦呢？他干吗要特意为我做这些呢？悦子，有时候你好像很怀疑。你应该为我高兴才是。事情总算开始好转了。”

“是，当然了。我很为你高兴。”

“可说真的，悦子，他特意为我做了这些而你还怀疑他，这是不公平的。相当不公平。”

“是。”

“而且万里子在美国也会过得更好。美国更适合女孩子成长。在那里，她可以做各种各样的事。她可以成为女商人。她可以进大学学画画，然后成为一个艺术家。所有这些事情在美国要容易得多，悦子。日本不适合女孩子成长。在这里她能有什么指望呢？”

我没有回答。佐知子抬头看了我一眼，轻轻笑了笑。

“笑一笑，悦子，”她说。“事情最后会变好的。”

“是，我相信会的。”

“当然会了。”

“是。”

佐知子又继续收拾了一分钟左右，她的手突然停下来，从房间那头朝我看过来。脸上像我刚才描述的那样一半阴、一半亮。

“我想你一定认为我是个傻瓜，”她静静地说。“是不是，悦子？”

我也看着她，有点吃惊。

“我知道我们可能永远见不到美国，”她说。“也知道即使见到了，有多少困难等着我们。你以为我没想过这些吗？”

我没有回答，我们就这么对视着。

“可是那又怎么样？”佐知子说。“那又有什么关系呢？我为什么不应该去神户呢？毕竟，悦子，我会损失什么呢？我伯父的房子里没有什么可以给我的。只有一些空房间，没别的了。我可以找一间坐着，然后慢慢变老。除此之外什么都没有。只有空房间，没别的了。你是知道的，悦子。”

“可万里子呢，”我说。“万里子怎么办？”

“万里子？她会应付得过来的。她得应付过来。”佐知子还是透过昏暗的灯光看着我，半张脸在阴影里。她接着说：“你以为我认为自己是个好母亲？”

我没有回答。突然，佐知子笑了起来。

“我们干吗这样子说话？”她说道，双手又忙活了起来。“一切都会好的，我向你保证。到了美国以后我会给你写信。也许，悦子，也许有一天你还能来看我们。带着你的孩子。”

“是，没错。”

“也许那个时候你已经孩子成群了。”

“是，”我不自然地笑了笑。“谁知道呢。”

佐知子叹了口气，举起双手。“要收拾的东西真多啊，”她咕哝道。“有些东西只好不带了。”

我坐在那里，看着她。几分钟以后，我终于开口说道：

“你愿意的话，我可以去找万里子。天很黑了。”

“你只会让自己受累，悦子。我快收拾完了，到时她要是还没回来，我们一起出去找她。”

“没关系。我去找找她。天已经全黑了。”

佐知子抬头看了一眼，耸耸肩，说：“你最好把灯笼带上，河边很滑。”

我站起来，把灯笼从木梁上拿下来，朝门口走去。阴影随着我的脚步掠过小屋。离开时，我回头看了一眼佐知子。我只看见她的剪影，坐在敞开的拉门前，身后的天空已经全黑了。

我沿着河边走，蚊虫跟着我的灯笼。偶尔有虫子飞进灯笼里出不来，我只好停下来，拿稳灯笼，等虫子找到出来的路。

不久那座小木桥就出现在了面前。走过木桥时，我在桥上停了一会儿，看着夜晚的天空。我记得在桥上时，一股异样的宁静向我袭来。我倚在栏杆上站了几分钟，听着脚下河水的声音。当我终于转身时，我看见了自己的影子，被灯光投在桥的木板条上。

“你在这里做什么？”我问。小女孩就在我面前，蜷缩在另一边的栏杆底下。我走上前去，好更清楚地看见灯笼底下的她。她看着她的手掌，不发一语。

“你是怎么了？”我说。“你为什么这样子坐在这里？”

灯笼周围聚集了不少虫子。我把灯笼拿到面前，放低，灯光把孩子的脸照得更亮了。过了好久，她才开口说道：“我不想走。明天我不想走。”

我叹了口气。“你会喜欢的。每个人对新事物总是有点害怕。可你会喜欢那里的。”

“我不想走。我不喜欢他。他像头猪。”

“你不能这么说话，”我生气地说。我们对视了一会儿，然后她又低头看着她的手。

“你不能这么说话。”我说，语气变缓和了。“他很喜欢你，他会像个新爸爸。一切都会变好的，我向你保证。”

孩子不做声。我又叹了口气。

“不管怎样，”我接着说，“你要是不喜欢那里，我们随时可以回来。”

这一次，她抬起头来，怀疑地看着我。

“是，我保证，”我说。“你要是不喜欢那里，我们就马上回来。可我们得试试看，看看我们喜不喜欢那里。我相信我们会喜欢的。”

小女孩紧紧地盯着我。“你拿着那个做什么？”她问。

“这个？照亮脚下的路而已，就这样。”

“你拿着它做什么？”

“我说了。照亮脚下的路而已。你是怎么了？”我笑了一声。“你干吗这样看着我？我不会伤害你的。”

她一面盯着我，一面慢慢地站起来。

“你是怎么了？”我又问了一遍。

孩子跑了起来，在木板上发出“咚咚咚”的声音。跑到桥头时，她停了下来，怀疑地看着我。我对她笑了笑，拿起灯笼。孩子又跑了起来。

半轮月亮出现在水里，我静静地待在桥上看了几分钟。有一次，我想我在昏暗中看见万里子沿着河岸朝小屋的方向跑去。

第十一章

起初我肯定有人经过我的床，走出房间，轻轻关上门。后来我清醒多了，发现这是多么荒唐的想法。

我躺在床上听着外面的动静。很显然，我听到了隔壁妮基的声音；在这里她一直抱怨睡不好。也有可能根本没有什么声响，我又习惯性地早早就醒过来。

外面传来鸟叫声，可我的房间里仍然一片漆黑。几分钟后，我起来找晨衣。我打开房门时，外面的天色还很朦胧。我朝楼梯平台走去，几乎是下意识地瞥了一眼走廊尽头景子的房门。

突然，一刹那，我肯定从景子的房里传来声响，在屋外的鸟叫声中夹杂着一个微小但清晰的声响。我停下来听，然后迈开脚步朝房门走去。又传来了几个声响，这时我意识到是楼下厨房传来的声音。我在平台上站了一会儿，然后走下楼梯。

妮基从厨房里出来，看见我吓了一跳。

“哦，妈妈，你吓了我一大跳。”

在走廊朦朦胧胧的光线中，我看见她瘦瘦的身子穿着一件浅色晨衣，双手握着茶杯。

“对不起，妮基。我把你当作小偷了。”

我女儿深吸了一口气，但似乎仍惊魂未定。过了一会儿，她说：“我睡不着，就想不如起来冲杯咖啡。”

“现在几点？”

“我想大概五点。”

她走进客厅，留下我一个人站在楼梯脚下。我走进厨房冲了杯咖啡，然后也到客厅去。客厅里，妮基已经拉开窗帘，叉开腿坐在一张硬靠背椅上，呆呆地看着花园。窗外灰蒙蒙的亮光照在她脸上。

“你觉得还会不会下雨？”我问。

她耸耸肩，继续看着窗外。我在壁炉旁坐下，看着她。过了一会儿，她疲惫地叹了口气，说道：

“我睡得不怎么好。老是做噩梦。”

“真让人担心，妮基。你这种年纪不应该有睡眠问题。”

她没说什么，仍旧看着花园。

“你做什么噩梦？”我问。

“哦，就是噩梦。”

“什么噩梦，妮基？”

“就是噩梦，”她说，突然就生气了。“管它是什么噩梦？”

我们都不说话了。过了一会儿，妮基头也不回地说道：

“我想爸爸应该多关心她一点，不是吗？大多数时候爸爸都不管她。这样真是不公平。”

我等着她是不是还要说些什么。然后我说：“咳，可以理解。他毕竟不是她的亲爸爸。”

“可是真是不公平。”

我看见外面天快亮了。一只孤零零的小鸟在窗子附近什么地方叽叽喳喳地叫着。

“你爸爸有时相当的理想主义，”我说。“你瞧，那个时候他真的相信我们能在这里给她一个幸福的生活。”

妮基耸耸肩。我看了她好一会儿，然后说：“可是你瞧，妮基，我一开始就知道。我一开始就知道她在这里不会幸福的。可我还是决定把她带来。”

我女儿似乎在思索着我的话，过了一会儿转向我说：“别傻了，你怎么会知道呢？而且你为她尽力了。您是最不应该受到责备的人。”

我没有回答。她没有化妆的脸显得很年轻。

“不管怎样，”她说，“人有时就得冒险。你做得完全正确。你不能看着生命白白浪费。”

我放下一直握着的咖啡杯，越过她，看着外面的花园。没有要下雨的迹象，天空似乎比前几个早上晴朗。

“要是你接受现实，留在原地，”妮基接着说，“那才是太愚蠢了。至少你尽力了。”

“你说得对。现在我们别说这个了。”

“人要是浪费生命真是太愚蠢了。”

“我们别说这个了，”我语气更加坚定地说。“现在说这些有什么用呢？”

我女儿再次把脸转过去。我们默默地坐了一会儿，然后我站起来，走近窗户。

“今天早上看来天气不错，”我说。“也许会出太阳。要是出太阳的话，妮基，我们出去散散步。散步很有好处。”

“我想是吧，”她咕哝道。

我离开客厅时，我女儿仍旧叉开腿坐在椅子上，一手托着下巴，呆呆地看着外面的花园。

电话响起来时，我和妮基正在厨房里吃早餐。这几天老有电话找她，所以自然是她去接电话。等她接完电话回来，她的咖啡已经冷掉了。

“又是你的朋友？”我问。

她点点头，走过去打开炉子烧水。

“是这样的，妈妈，”她说，“我下午得回去了。行吗？”她站在那里，一手放在水壶柄上，一手放在臀部。

“当然可以。你能来这里我很高兴，妮基。”

“我很快会再来看你的。可现在我真的得回去了。”

“你用不着道歉。如今你过自己的生活很重要。”

妮基转过身去等水开。水槽上方的窗户还有一些雾气，但外面已经出太阳了。妮基冲了咖啡，然后在桌子旁坐下。

“哦，对了，妈妈，”她说。“你记得我跟你提起的那个朋友，在写关于你的诗的那个？”

我微微一笑。“哦，记得。你的朋友。”

“她想让我带张照片什么的回去。长崎的。你有这样的东西吗？旧明信片什么的？”

“我想我可以找一找。太荒唐了”——我笑了一声——“她能写我什么呢？”

“她是个很棒的诗人。她经历了很多事情，你瞧。所以我跟她说了你的事。”

“我相信她一定会写出了不起的诗来，妮基。”

“就旧明信片什么的。让她看看一切都是什么样的。”

“这个嘛，妮基，我不敢肯定。得看得出一切都是什么样的，是吗？”

“你知道我的意思。”

我又笑了一声。“我待会儿给你找找看。”

妮基刚在一片烤面包上涂了些黄油，现在又把黄油刮掉一些。我女儿从小就瘦，却担心变胖，让我觉得好笑。我看了她一会儿。

“话说回来，”我终于说道，“真可惜你今天就要离开。我本打算今晚一起去看电影。”

“看电影？为什么，在放什么？”

“我不知道他们现在放些什么电影。我以为你会清楚些。”

“说真的，妈妈，我们好久没有一起看电影了，不是吗？从我长大以后。”妮基微笑了一下，霎时间她的脸变得孩子气。接着，她放下小刀，盯着自己的杯子。“我也不常看电影，”她说。“在伦敦总有一大堆电影看，可我们不常去。”

“啊，你要是喜欢的话，也可以去看戏。如今有公车直达剧院。我不知道他们现在在演什么，不过我们能查到。本地的报纸是不是在那里，就在你后面？”

“好了，妈妈，别麻烦了。没有什么意义。”

“我想他们不时会演些好戏。相当现代的。报上有。”

“没有什么意义，妈妈。我今天就得回去了。我很想留下来，可是我真的得回去了。”

“当然，妮基。不必道歉。”我给了桌子那头的她一个微笑。
“事实上，你有处得来的好朋友，我感到很欣慰。随时欢迎你带他们来这里。”

“好的，妈妈，谢谢你。”

妮基睡的空房间是个简陋的小房间；那天早上，阳光流泻了进来。

“这个给你朋友行吗？”我在门口问道。

妮基正在床边收拾箱子，抬头看了一眼我找到的日历。“可以，”她说。

我走进房间。透过窗子，我可以看见下面的果园和一排排整齐的小树。我手里的日历原本每个月份都有一张照片，如今撕得只剩下最后一张了。我盯着这最后一张照片看了一会儿。

“别给我什么重要的东西，”妮基说。“没有的话也没关系。”

我笑了，把照片跟她的其他东西一起放在床上。“只是一本旧日历，没什么。我也不知道为什么会留着。”

妮基拨了些头发到耳后，继续整理。

“我想，”我终于开口说道，“你打算暂时继续住在伦敦。”

她耸了耸肩。“这个，我在那里很开心。”

“一定要替我向你的朋友们问好。”

“好的，我会的。”

“还有大卫。这是他的名字吧？”

她又耸了耸肩，没说什么。她带了三双不同的靴子回来，现在正想办法装到箱子里去。

“妮基，我想你还没有打算结婚吧？”

“我干吗打算结婚？”

“我问问而已。”

“我干吗要结婚？意义何在？”

“你打算就这么继续——住在伦敦，是吗？”

“我干吗要结婚呢？太愚蠢了，妈妈。”她把日历卷起来、收好。“那么多女人被灌输这种思想，认为生活就是结婚，然后生一大堆孩子。”

我还是看着她。过了一会儿，我说：“可说到底，妮基，没别的什么了。”

“天啊，妈妈，我有很多事情可以干。我不想固定下来，然后整天围着丈夫和一大群吵吵闹闹的孩子团团转。你怎么突然唠叨起这个了？”箱子的盖子关不上，妮基不耐烦地直往下按。

“我只是想知道你是怎么打算的，妮基，”我笑了下说。“没必要生这么大的气。你当然要照自己的想法生活。”

她把盖子重新打开，整了整里面的东西。

“好了，妮基，没必要生这么大的气。”

这次，她总算把盖子给关上了。“天晓得我干吗带了这么多东西？”她小声自言自语道。

“你要怎么跟别人说，妈妈？”妮基问。“别人问我去哪儿了，你要怎么跟他们说？”

我女儿决定她可以吃过午饭再走，我俩就从屋后的果园出来散步。太阳还在，可天气很冷。我不解地看着她。

“我就告诉他们你住在伦敦啊，妮基。不是这样吗？”

“我想是。可他们不会问我在干什么吗？像那天沃特斯老太太那样？”

“是啊，他们有时候会问。我就说你和朋友们住在一起。说真的，妮基，我不知道你那么在乎人们对你的看法。”

“我没有。”

我们继续慢慢地走着。许多地方很泥泞。

“我想你不太喜欢，对不对，妈妈？”

“喜欢什么，妮基？”

“我的做法。你不喜欢我搬出去。还有和大卫住啊，等等。”

我们来到了果园尽头。妮基跨出园子，走上一条弯弯曲曲的小路；她走到路的对面，朝一片原野的几扇木门走去。我跟在她后面。草地很大，从我们面前缓缓地升上去。在最高点有两棵瘦瘦的假挪威槭映着蓝天。

“我并不为你感到羞耻，妮基，”我说。“你应该按照自己的想法生活。”

我女儿注视着原野。“以前这里有马，不是吗？”她说，举起双手去摸木门。我放眼望去，没有看见马。

“说来奇怪，”我说道。“我记得我刚结婚时，我和我丈夫吵了起来，因为他不想和他父亲住在一起。你瞧，那时的日本，子女还是应该跟父母住一起的。我们为此吵个不停。”

“我敢说你一定觉得轻松多了，”妮基说道，视线没有离开原野。

“轻松？为什么？”

“因为不用和他父亲一起住。”

“相反，妮基。我更愿意他和我们一起住。再说，他妻子不在了。日本传统的生活方式一点儿也不坏。”

“你现在当然会这么说了。可我敢说你那时肯定不是这么想的。”

“可是妮基，你真的不明白。我非常喜欢我的公公。”我看了她一会儿，最后还是笑了笑。“也许你说得对。也许他不和我们一起住我是轻松多了。我记不清了。”我伸出手去摸木门的顶端。一些水汽沾到了我的手指上。我发现妮基在看我，就把手举给她看。“还有些霜，”我说。

“你还常常想日本吗，妈妈？”

“我想是的。”我又转回去看着原野。“我会回忆一些往事。”

两匹小马出现在假挪威槭附近。一时间，它们静静地站在那里，并排站在阳光下。

“我今天早上给你的那本日历，”我说。“上面是长崎港口的风景。今天早上我想起有一次我们到那里去，一次郊游。港口周围的那些山非常漂亮。”

那两匹小马慢慢地走到树后面去。

“有什么特别的？”妮基问。

“特别？”

“你们去港口的那天。”

“哦，没什么特别的。我刚好想到，就这样。那天景子很高兴。我们坐了缆车。”我笑了一声，转向妮基。“对，没什么特别的。只是件快乐的往事，仅此而已。”

我女儿叹了口气，说：“这里好安静啊。我都不记得有这么安静了。”

“是啊，比起伦敦，这里一定显得很安静。”

“我想你一个人住在这里有时候一定有点无聊。”

“可是我喜欢安静，妮基。我一直觉得这里最像英国。”

我的视线离开原野，回头看着我们身后的果园。

“我们刚来这里的时候没有那些树，”过了许久，我说道，“一整片都是原野，你从这里就可以看见房子。你父亲刚带我到这里来的时候，妮基，我记得我觉得这里的一切都那么像英国。原野啊，房子啊。正是我一直以来想像中的英国的样子，我高兴极了。”

妮基深吸了一口气，离开木门，说：“我们回去吧，我得赶紧走了。”

我们重新穿过果园时，天空似乎又布起了乌云。

“前些日子我突然想到，”我说，“也许现在我该把房子卖了。”

“卖了？”

“是啊。也许该换个小一点的房子。我想想而已。”

“你想把房子卖了？”我女儿担心地看着我。“可这房子很好。”

“但如今太大了。”

“可这房子很好，妈妈。卖掉太可惜了。”

“我想也是。我想想而已，妮基，没别的。”

我本想送她去火车站——离这里不过几分钟的路——可这似乎会让她不自在。午饭后不久她就走了，一副奇怪的、难为情的样子，好像她是没有经过我的同意离开的。下午天空转阴了，起了风，我站在门口看着她走到车道尽头。她穿着和来时一样的紧身衣，有点费力地拖着箱子。到门口时，妮基回头看了一眼，发现我还站在门口，似乎有点吃惊。我笑了笑，朝她挥挥手。

译后记

读完整部作品，感觉就像它的标题所示，留给读者的只是一个模糊的印象、一种淡淡的感觉，整部书连一个完整的情节都没有，留下无数的空白让读者自己去想象。而且，即便是已知的信息，也得靠读者自己从小说的字里行间一块块拼起来，小说中没有多少介绍故事背景、人物来龙去脉之类的说明性文字。

构成这本书的是主人公悦子零碎的回忆。回忆是石黑的作品里最重要的题材。正如书中说的：“回忆，我发现，可能是不可靠的东西。”悦子的回忆充满矛盾和空白。回忆不仅由于时间的流逝变得模糊，而且是非常主观的东西，加入了人的情感和选择。石黑说：“我喜欢回忆，是因为回忆是我们审视自己生活的过滤器。回忆模糊不清，就给自己欺骗提供了机会。作为一个作家，我更关心的是人们告诉自己发生了什么，而不是实际发生了什么。”石黑一雄关心的不是外部的现实世界，而是人复杂的内心世界。通过扭曲的回忆所反映的微妙东西可以帮助人们窥探这个世界：为什么他在这个时候想起这件事？他对这件事是什么感觉？他说他记不清发生了什么事，却还是要说给我们听，那么读者能相信他多少？等等。

总之，石黑笔下的主人公的回忆是扭曲的，读者不能完全相信，很可能要带着批判的眼光阅读第二遍。比如，书的一开始就是故事矛盾激化的地方：景子自杀了。可是接下来并没有解释为什么自杀，转而开始回忆悦子在二战后的长崎与一位友人的一段友谊。读者会想：怎么讲到另一件事去了？她对女儿的自杀心情如何？她女儿为什么自杀？

读完全书，大家都会觉得悦子和佐知子其实是同一个人，景子其实也就是万里子。石黑说：“我希望读者能明白她的故事是通过她朋友的故事来讲的。”不管佐知子母女是不是真有其人，悦子利用她们做掩护，精心编织了一个看似是别人的故事，想藏在别人的面具之下减轻自己的罪恶感。读者可能从一开始就怀疑是这样，但找不到确实的文本证据。到了书的最后，“那天景子很高兴。我们坐了缆车。”淡淡一句就戳破了悦子在整本书中精心设计的谎言。她的心理防线在最后还是崩溃了，她不想或者忘了伪装。书的戏剧效果极强。

为什么要这样写，石黑的解释是，当时他在伦敦收留无家可归者的慈善机构里做社工，“我有很多时间和无家可归的人在一起，我倾听他们的故事，听他们说怎么会到这里来，我发现他们不会直截了当、坦白地说他们的故事。”“我就觉得用这种方法写小说很有意思：某个人觉得自己的经历太过痛苦或不堪，无法启口，于是借用别人的故事来讲自己的故事。”

小说始终没有交待景子到底为什么自杀，悦子为什么离开日本（悦子为自己设计的在长崎的形象是一个传统的、尽本分的妻子，与她后来离开丈夫、离开祖国的大胆行为相去甚远。）悦子回忆的重点不是她们具体怎样离开日本到达英国，也不是景子在英国到底过得如何（景子在英国的生活我们可以从悦子本身少量的叙述中看出来，也可以从妮基对景子的回忆中窥见一斑。景子一直与这个异国新家格格不入，后来更是自我封闭、有点病态，最终导致自杀）。悦子的回忆集中在去与留的抉择。这反映出悦子心里深知景子悲剧的根源在日本，景子的自杀触发了悦子内心长期以来的担忧：自己选择离开日本的决定到底对不对？

对于离开日本的决定，按佐知子自己（我们把她看作悦子的代言人）的话说：“我是个母亲，我女儿的利益是第一位的。”“万里子在美国会过得很好的……那里更适合孩子的成长。在那里她的机会更多，在美国女人的生活要好得多。”“日本不适合女孩子成长。在这里她能有什么指望呢？”

虽然佐知子口口声声去美国都是为了女儿，但是读者能体味到去美国似乎更符合佐知子自己的愿望和利益，而不是万里子的。从主观愿望来说，万里子不愿意去美国，想回安子阿姨家，讨厌那个美国酒鬼。万里子甚至在她们第一次准备离开的时候试图上吊自杀。当然，在佐知子的回忆里把它说成是一个从树上摔下来的小意外。从客观条件来说，回安子阿姨家对万里子来说意味着稳定的生活，去美国则存在着很多不确定因素，是很冒险的举动。然而对佐知子来说，她伯父家只是个有无数空房间的坟墓，美国则是一个充满可能性的国家。这是她从小梦想，在日本饱经战乱之苦后，这种向往异国的心情更加强烈。所以纵使弗兰克不是一个十分可靠的人，却是她改变现状唯一的希望。

就算佐知子确实是为了女儿好（不冒点险怎么能变得更好呢？），她在母女关系上处理得也不是很好。她们的关系大部分时候都很紧张，她时常把万里子一个人撇在家里。这种紧张在淹死小猫的

事件上达到高潮。她没有如约让万里子带着小猫回到安子阿姨家，很明显后来也没有像她保证的那样：“你要是不喜欢那里，我们随时可以回来。”桥上悦子与万里子谈话的那一幕，评论家们基本上都认为实际上就是她们母女俩在谈话。这无疑是说服万里子去美国的一次重要的对话，回忆到这里时，当时的情形又清清楚楚地浮现在眼前，悦子无意中就跨过了旁观者的界限，变成了当事人。此时故事接近尾声，悦子与她的代言人之间的界限变得十分模糊，而到了最后就如前面所说的彻底崩溃。

悦子一会儿安慰自己：“我离开日本的动机是正当的，而且我知道我时刻把景子的利益放在心上。”一会儿又说：“我一开始就知道她在这里不会幸福的。可我还是决定把她带来。”她的一生都在做着激烈的良心斗争，当她的担心最终变为现实时——景子用自杀结束了自己不开心的一生——这种斗争达到了高潮。景子死后，悦子心中充满自责和悔恨。

从“时钟时间”计算，小说的时间跨度是妮基来看望悦子的那五天。这五天里，悦子想起了大约二十年前在长崎的往事，“心理时间”的跨度长达二十几年。作者似乎将她的一生浓缩在这几天里。故事一会儿发生在距离现代较近的英国，一会儿又回到遥远的战后的长崎。因为利用回忆，作者就可以轻易地在各个不同的时空（物理时空与心理时空）之间跳来跳去，无需多费笔墨加以交待，过去与现在交织在一起，造成了一种亦真亦幻的效果。

小说以战后的长崎为背景。一个关键词就是：改变。事物在变（重建正在如火如荼地进行，如佐知子的表姐说的：“我肯定春天的时候是没有那些楼的。”读者就能直观地感受到），人心也在变。书中虽然没有一个地方直接描写原子弹爆炸，但原子弹爆炸带来的阴影却无处不在。首先，悦子、佐知子和藤原太太都在原子弹爆炸中失去了很多，可是她们对战后生活的态度却迥然不同。积极乐观、向前看的藤原太太安心地经营着小小的面店，悦子和佐知子则不能像藤原太太那样坦然接受现实生活。其次，儿童是战争首当其冲的受害者，战争中儿童的利益往往最容易被牺牲。经历了战争的万里子对大人感到恐惧、不信任。再者，绪方先生所代表的旧价值观受到了以松田重夫为代表的新价值观的强烈挑战。夫妻关系也开始发生变化。

石黑以自己的家乡长崎作为处女作的背景自然与他的身世分不开，但他也一再强调读者不要把他的作品与某个特定的历史时期对号入座（比如他的另外一部小说《长日将尽》是以两战期间的英国为背

景，《我辈孤雏》则是以三十年代的上海公共租界为背景）。他希望人们更多地把他的小说看成是隐喻和象征。选择故事发生在这里而不是那里更多的是技巧上的需要，而不是内容上的需要。他通常是故事、主题已经成形在胸了，最后才为故事寻找适合的地点。比如此书场景最初设置在英国康沃尔郡，而不是长崎。作者无意写一本历史小说，本书的中心还是探讨内疚和自欺的。

此外，石黑也一再强调他对背景的描写也不是如实描绘，只是取其典型。他认为如今的小说没有必要像十九世纪时那样细致入微地描写风景，因为电视、电影等媒体在写实方面比小说更有优势。小说家只需用几个关键词引起读者联想就够了。例如，介绍佐知子的小屋时，石黑只说“是乡下常见的那种木屋子，斜斜的瓦屋顶都快碰到地面了”，剩下的就靠读者自己去联想了。石黑对日本的印象除了儿时的记忆和父母的言传身教以外，还来自五十年代的日本电影，例如小津安二郎、黑泽明和成濑巳喜男的电影。

另外，书中平淡之中见辛辣讽刺的地方也比比皆是。例如，举世闻名的和平雕像就被作者揶揄了一番：

我一直觉得那尊雕像长得很丑，而且我无法将它和炸弹掉下来那天发生的事以及随后的可怕的日子联系起来。远远看近乎可笑，像个警察在指挥交通。我一直觉得它就只是一尊雕像，虽然大多数长崎人似乎把它当作一种象征，但我怀疑大家的感觉和我一样。

然而你不得不佩服他的角度很新颖，说法也不无道理。

此书出版于1982年，是石黑的处女作。其中的很多东西成了他日后的标志，如：第一人称叙述、回忆、幽默与讽刺、国际化的视角等。

石黑的第一部作品就获得了英国皇家学会颁发的温尼弗雷德·霍尔比纪念奖。虽然这部书出版至今已经快三十年了，但仍在不断重印。它的艺术价值和魅力得到了时间的检验，探讨人性的主题也永远不会过时，现在读来仍令人唏嘘感慨。

A Pale View of Hills

PART ONE

Chapter One

Niki, the name we finally gave my younger daughter, is not an abbreviation; it was a compromise I reached with her father. For paradoxically it was he who wanted to give her a Japanese name, and I — perhaps out of some selfish desire not to be reminded of the past — insisted on an English one. He finally agreed to Niki, thinking it had some vague echo of the East about it.

She came to see me earlier this year, in April, when the days were still cold and drizzly. Perhaps she had intended to stay longer, I do not know. But my country house and the quiet that surrounds it made her restless, and before long I could see she was anxious to return to her life in London. She listened impatiently to my classical records, flicked through numerous magazines. The telephone rang for her regularly, and she would stride across the carpet, her thin figure squeezed into her tight clothes, taking care to close the door behind her so I would not overhear her conversation. She left after five days.

She did not mention Keiko until the second day. It was a grey windy morning, and we had moved the armchairs nearer the windows to watch the rain falling on my garden.

“Did you expect me to be there?” she asked. “At the funeral, I mean.”

“No, I suppose not. I didn’t really think you’d come.”

“It did upset me, hearing about her. I almost came.”

“I never expected you to come.”

“People didn’t know what was wrong with me,” she said. “I didn’t tell anybody. I suppose I was embarrassed. They wouldn’t understand really, they wouldn’t understand how I felt about it. Sisters are supposed to be people you’re close to, aren't they. You may not like them much, but you're still close to them. That's just not how it was though. I don't even remember what she looked like now."

"Yes, it's quite a time since you saw her."

"I just remember her as someone who used to make me miserable. That's what I remember about her. But I was sad though, when I heard."

Perhaps it was not just the quiet that drove my daughter back to London. For although we never dwelt long on the subject of Keiko's death, it was never far away, hovering over us whenever we talked.

Keiko, unlike Niki, was pure Japanese, and more than one newspaper was quick to pick up on this fact. The English are fond of their idea that our race has an instinct for suicide, as if further explanations are unnecessary; for that was all they reported, that she was Japanese and that she had hung herself in her room.

That same evening I was standing at the windows, looking out into the darkness, when I heard Niki say behind me; "What are you thinking about now, Mother?" She was sitting across the settee, a paperback book on her knee.

"I was thinking about someone I knew once. A woman I knew once."

"Someone you knew when you ... before you came to England?"

"I knew her when I was living in Nagasaki, if that's what you mean." She continued to watch me, so I added: "A long time ago. Long before I met your father."

She seemed satisfied and with some vague comment returned to her book. In many ways Niki is an affectionate child. She had not come simply to see how I had taken the news of Keiko's death; she had come to me out of a sense of mission.

For in recent years she has taken it upon herself to admire certain aspects of my past, and she had come prepared to tell me things were no different now, that I should have no regrets for those choices I once made. In short, to reassure me I was not responsible for Keiko's death.

I have no great wish to dwell on Keiko now, it brings me little comfort. I only mention her here because those were the circumstances around Niki's visit this April, and because it was during that visit I remembered Sachiko again after all this time. I never knew Sachiko well. In fact our friendship was no more than a matter of some several weeks one summer many years ago.

The worst days were over by then. American soldiers were as numerous as ever—for there was fighting in Korea—but in Nagasaki, after what had gone before, those were days of calm and relief. The world had a feeling of change about it.

My husband and I lived in an area to the east of the city, a short tram journey from the centre of town. A river ran near us, and I was once told that before the war a small village had grown up on the riverbank. But then the bomb had fallen and afterwards all that remained were charred ruins. Rebuilding had got under way and in time four concrete buildings had been erected, each containing forty or so separate apartments. Of the four, our block had been built last and it marked the point where the rebuilding programme had come to a halt; between us and the river lay an expanse of wasteground, several acres of dried mud and ditches. Many complained it was a health hazard, and indeed the drainage was appalling. All year round there were craters filled with stagnant water, and in the summer months the mosquitoes became intolerable. From time to time officials were to be seen pacing out measurements or scribbling down notes, but the months went by and nothing was done.

The occupants of the apartment blocks were much like ourselves — young married couples, the husbands having found good employment with expanding firms. Many of the apartments were owned by the firms, who rented them to employees at a generous rate. Each apartment was identical; the floors were tatami, the bathrooms and kitchens of a Western design. They were small and rather difficult to keep cool during the warmer months, but on the whole the feeling amongst the occupants seemed one of satisfaction. And yet I remember an unmistakable air of transience there, as if we were all of us waiting for the day we could move to something better.

One wooden cottage had survived both the devastation of the war and the government bulldozers. I could see it from our window, standing alone at the end of that expanse of wasteground, practically on the edge of the river. It was the kind of cottage often seen in the countryside, with a tiled roof sloping almost to the ground. Often, during my empty moments, I would stand at my window gazing at it.

To judge from the attention attracted by Sachiko's arrival, I was not alone in gazing at that cottage. There was much talk about two men seen working there one day — as to whether or not they were government workers. Later there was talk that a woman and her little girl were living there, and I saw them myself on several occasions, making their way across the ditchy ground.

It was towards the beginning of summer — I was in my third or fourth month of pregnancy by then — when I first watched that large American car, white and battered, bumping its way over the wasteground towards the river. It was well into the evening, and the sun setting behind the cottage gleamed a moment against the metal.

Then one afternoon I heard two women talking at the tram stop, about the woman who had moved into the derelict house by the river. One was explaining to her companion how she had spoken to the woman that morning and had received a clear snub. Her companion agreed the newcomer seemed unfriendly — proud probably. She must be thirty at the youngest, they thought, for the child was at least ten. The first woman said the stranger had spoken with a Tokyo dialect and certainly was not from Nagasaki. They discussed for a while her “American friend”, then the woman spoke again of how unfriendly the stranger had been to her that morning.

Now I do not doubt that amongst those women I lived with then, there were those who had suffered, those with sad and terrible memories. But to watch them each day, busily involved with their husbands and their children, I found this hard to believe — that their lives had ever held the tragedies and nightmares of wartime. It was never my intention to appear unfriendly, but it was probably true that I made no special effort to seem otherwise. For at that point in my life, I was still wishing to be left alone.

It was with interest then that I listened to those women talking of Sachiko. I can recall quite vividly that afternoon at the tram stop. It was one of the first days of bright sunlight after the rainy season in June, and the soaked surfaces of brick and concrete were drying all around us. We were standing on a railway bridge and on one side of the tracks at the foot of the hill could be seen a cluster of roofs, as if houses had come tumbling down the slope. Beyond the houses, a little way off, were our apartment blocks standing like four concrete pillars. I felt a kind of sympathy for Sachiko then, and felt I understood something of that aloofness I had noticed about her when I had watched her from afar.

We were to become friends that summer and for a short time at least I was to be admitted into her confidence. I am not sure now how it was we first met. I remember one afternoon spotting her figure ahead of me on the path leading out of the housing precinct. I was hurrying, but Sachiko walked on with a steady stride. By that point we must have already known each other by name, for I remember calling to her as I got nearer.

Sachiko turned and waited for me to catch up. "Is something wrong?" she asked.

"I'm glad I found you," I said, a little out of breath. "Your daughter, she was fighting just as I came out. Back there near the ditches."

"She was fighting?"

"With two other children. One of them was a boy. It looked a nasty little fight."

"I see." Sachiko began to walk again. I fell in step beside her.

"I don't want to alarm you," I said, "but it did look quite a nasty fight. In fact, I think I saw a cut on your daughter's cheek."

"I see."

"It was back there, on the edge of the wasteground."

"And are they still fighting, do you think?" She continued to walk up the hill.

"Well, no. I saw your daughter running off."

Sachiko looked at me and smiled. "Are you not used to seeing children fight?"

"Well, children do fight, I suppose. But I thought I ought to tell you. And you see, I don't think she's on her way to school. The other children carried on towards the school, but your daughter went back towards the river."

Sachiko made no reply and continued to walk up the hill.

"As a matter of fact," I continued, "I'd meant to mention this to you before. You see, I've seen your daughter on a number of occasions recently. I wonder, perhaps, if she hasn't been playing truant a little."

The path forked at the top of the hill. Sachiko stopped and we turned to each other.

"It's very kind of you to be so concerned, Etsuko," she said. "So very kind. I'm sure you'll make a splendid mother."

I had supposed previously — like the women at the tram stop — that Sachiko was a woman of thirty or so. But possibly her youthful figure had been deceiving, for she had the face of an older person. She was gazing at me with a slightly amused expression, and something in the way she did so caused me to laugh self-consciously.

"I do appreciate your coming to find me like this," she went on. "But as you see, I'm rather busy just now. I have to go into Nagasaki."

"I see. I just thought it best to come and tell you, that's all."

For a moment, she continued to look at me with her amused expression. Then she said: "How kind you are. Now please excuse me. I must get into town." She bowed, then turned towards the path that led up towards the tram stop.

"It's just that she had a cut on her face," I said, raising my voice a little. "And the river's quite dangerous in places. I thought it best to come and tell you."

She turned and looked at me once more. "If you have nothing else to concern yourself with, Etsuko," she said, "then perhaps you'd care to look after my daughter for the day. I'll be back sometime in the afternoon. I'm sure you'll get on very well with her."

"I wouldn't object, if that's what you wish. I must say, your daughter seems quite young to be left on her own all day."

"How kind you are," Sachiko said again. Then she smiled once more. "Yes, I'm sure you'll make a splendid mother."

After parting with Sachiko, I made my way down the hill and back through the housing precinct. I soon found myself back outside our apartment block, facing that expanse of wasteground. Seeing no sign of the little girl, I was about to go inside, but then caught sight of some movement along the riverbank. Mariko must previously have been crouching down, for now I could see her small figure quite clearly across the muddy ground. At first, I felt the urge to forget the whole matter and return to my housework. Eventually, however, I began making my way towards her, taking care to avoid the ditches.

As far as I remember, that was the first occasion I spoke to Mariko. Quite probably there was nothing so unusual about her behaviour that morning, for, after all, I was a stranger to the child and she had every right to regard me with suspicion. And if in fact I did experience a curious feeling of unease at the time, it was probably nothing more than a simple response to Mariko's manner.

The river that morning was still quite high and flowing swiftly after the rainy season a few weeks earlier. The ground sloped down steeply before it reached the water's edge, and the mud at the foot of the slope, where the little girl was standing, looked distinctly wetter. Mariko was dressed in a simple cotton dress which ended at her knees, and her short trimmed hair made her face look boyish. She looked up, not smiling, to where I stood at the top of the muddy slope.

"Hello," I said, "I was just speaking with your mother. You must be Mariko-San."

The little girl continued to stare up at me, saying nothing. What I had thought earlier to be a wound on her cheek, I now saw to be a smudge of mud.

"Shouldn't you be at school?" I asked.

She remained silent for a moment. Then she said: "I don't go to school."

"But all children must go to school. Don't you like to go?"

"I don't go to school."

"But hasn't your mother sent you to a school here?"

Mariko did not reply. Instead, she took a step away from me.

"Careful," I said. "You'll fall into the water. It's very slippery."

She continued to stare up at me from the bottom of the slope. I could see her small shoes lying in the mud beside her. Her bare feet, like her shoes, were covered in mud.

"I was just speaking with your mother," I said, smiling at her reassuringly. "She said it would be perfectly all right if you came and waited for her at my house. It's just over there, that building there. You could come and try some cakes I made yesterday. Would you like that, Mariko-San? And you could tell me all about yourself."

Mariko continued to watch me carefully. Then, without taking her eyes off me, she crouched down and picked up her shoes. At first, I took this as a sign that she was about to follow me. But then as she continued to stare up at me, I realized she was holding her shoes in readiness to run away.

"I'm not going to hurt you," I said, with a nervous laugh. "I'm a friend of your mother's."

As far as I remember, that was all that took place between us that morning. I had no wish to alarm the child further, and before long I turned and made my way back across the wasteland. The child's response had, it is true, upset me somewhat; for in those days, such small things were capable of arousing in me every kind of misgiving about motherhood. I told myself the episode was insignificant, and that in any case, further opportunities to make friends with the little girl were bound to present themselves over the coming days. As it was, I did not speak to Mariko again until one afternoon a fortnight or so later.

I had never been inside the cottage prior to that afternoon, and I had been rather surprised when Sachiko had asked me in. In fact, I had sensed immediately that she had done so with something in mind, and as it turned out, I was not mistaken.

The cottage was tidy, but I remember a kind of stark shabbiness about the place; the wooden beams that crossed the ceiling looked old and insecure, and a faint odour of dampness lingered everywhere. At the front of the cottage, the main partitions had been left wide open to allow the sunlight in across the veranda. For all that, much of the place remained in shadow.

Mariko was lying in the corner furthest from the sunlight. I could see something moving beside her in the shade, and when I came closer, saw a large cat curled up on the tatami.

“Hello, Mariko-San,” I said. “Don’t you remember me?”

She stopped stroking the cat and looked up.

“We met the other day,” I went on. “Don’t you remember? You were by the river.”

The little girl showed no signs of recognition. She looked at me for a while, then began to stroke her cat again. Behind me, I could hear Sachiko preparing the tea on the open stove at the centre of the room. I was about to go over to her, when Mariko said suddenly: “She’s going to have kittens.”

“Oh really? How nice.”

“Do you want a kitten?”

“That’s very kind of you, Mariko-San. We’ll see. But I’m sure they’ll all find nice homes. ”

“Why don’t you take a kitten?” the child said. “The other woman said she’d take one. ”

“We’ll see, Mariko-San. Which other lady was this?”

“The other woman. The woman from across the river. She said she’d take one. ”

“But I don’t think anyone lives over there, Mariko-San. It’s just trees and forest over there. ”

“She said she’d take me to her house. She lives across the river. I didn’t go with her. ”

I looked at the child for a second. Then a thought struck me and I laughed.

“But that was me, Mariko-San. Don’t you remember? I asked you to come to my house while your mother was away in the town. ”

Mariko looked up at me again. “Not you,” she said. “The other woman. The woman from across the river. She was here last night. While Mother was away. ”

“Last night? While your mother was away?”

“She said she’d take me to her house, but I didn’t go with her. Because it was dark. She said we could take the lantern with us” — she gestured towards a lantern hung on the wall — “but I didn’t go with her. Because it was dark. ”

Behind me, Sachiko had got to her feet and was looking at her daughter. Mariko became silent, then turned away and began once more to stroke her cat.

“Let’s go out on the veranda,” Sachiko said to me. She was holding the tea things on a tray. “It’s cooler out there. ”

We did as she suggested, leaving Mariko in her corner. From the veranda, the river itself was hidden from view, but I could see where the ground sloped down and the mud became wetter as it approached the water. Sachiko seated herself on a cushion and began to pour the tea.

“The place is alive with stray cats,” she said. “I’m not so optimistic about these kittens.”

“Yes, there are so many strays,” I said. “It’s such a shame. Did Mariko find her cat around here somewhere?”

“No, we brought that creature with us. I’d have preferred to leave it behind myself, but Mariko wouldn’t hear of it.”

“You brought it all the way from Tokyo?”

“Oh no. We’ve been living in Nagasaki for almost a year now. On the other side of the city.”

“Oh really? I didn’t realize that. You lived there with ... with friends?”

Sachiko stopped pouring and looked at me, the teapot held in both hands. I saw in her gaze something of that amused expression with which she had observed me on that earlier occasion.

“I’m afraid you’re quite wrong, Etsuko,” she said, eventually. Then she began to pour the tea again. “We were staying at my uncle’s house.”

“I assure you, I was merely ...”

“Yes, of course. So there’s no need to get embarrassed, is there?” She laughed and passed me my teacup. “I’m sorry, Etsuko, I don’t mean to tease you. As a matter of fact, I did have something to ask you. A little favour.” Sachiko began to pour tea into her own cup, and as she did so, a more serious air seemed to enter her manner. Then she put down the teapot and looked at me. “You see, Etsuko, certain arrangements I made have not gone as planned. As a result, I find myself in need of money. Not a great deal, you understand. Just a small amount. ”

“I quite understand,” I said, lowering my voice. “It must be very difficult for you, with Mariko-San to think of. ”

“Etsuko, may I ask a favour of you? ”

I bowed. “I have some savings of my own,” I said, almost in a whisper. “I’d be pleased to be of some assistance. ”

To my surprise, Sachiko laughed loudly. “You’re very kind,” she said. “But I didn’t in fact want you to lend me money. I had something else in mind. You mentioned something the other day. A friend of yours who ran a noodle shop. ”

“Mrs Fujiwara, you mean? ”

“You were saying she may want an assistant. A small job like that would be very useful to me. ”

“Well,” I said, uncertainly, “I could enquire if you wish. ”

“That would be very kind. ” Sachiko looked at me for a moment. “But you look rather unsure about it, Etsuko. ”

“Not at all. I’ll enquire when I next see her. But I was just wondering” — I lowered my voice again — “who would look after your daughter during the day? ”

“Mariko? She could help at the noodle shop. She’s quite capable of being useful. ”

“I’m sure she is. But you see, I’m not certain how Mrs Fujiwara would feel. After all, Mariko should in reality be at school during the day. ”

“I assure you, Etsuko, Mariko won’t be the slightest problem. Besides, the schools are closing next week. And I’ll make sure she won't get in the way. You can rest assured on that. "

I bowed again. "I'll enquire when I next see her. "

"I'm very grateful to you. " Sachiko took a sip from her teacup. "In fact, perhaps I could ask you to see your friend within the next few days. "

"I'll try. "

"You're so kind. "

We fell silent for a moment. My attention had been caught earlier by Sachiko's teapot; it appeared a fine piece of craftsmanship made from a pale china. The teacup I now held in my hand was of the same delicate material. As we sat drinking our tea, I was struck, not for the first time, by the odd contrast of the tea-set alongside the shabbiness of the cottage and the muddy ground beneath the veranda. When I looked up, I realized Sachiko had been watching me.

"I'm used to good crockery, Etsuko, " she said. "You see, I don't always live like" — she waved a hand towards the cottage — "like this. Of course, I don't mind a little discomfort. But about some things, I'm still rather discerning. "

I bowed, saying nothing. Sachiko, also, began to study her teacup. She continued to examine it, turning it carefully in her hands. Then suddenly she said: "I suppose it's true to say I stole this tea-set. Still, I don't suppose my uncle will miss it much. "

I looked at her, somewhat surprised. Sachiko put the teacup down in front of her and waved away some flies.

"You were living at your uncle's house, you say? " I asked.

She nodded slowly. "A most beautiful house. With a pond in the garden. Very different from these present surroundings. ”

For a moment, we both glanced towards the inside of the cottage. Mariko was lying in her corner, just as we had left her, her back turned towards us. She appeared to be talking quietly to her cat.

“I didn’t realize”, I said, when neither of us had spoken for some time, “that anyone lived across the river. ”

Sachiko turned and glanced towards the trees on the far bank. “No, I haven’t seen anyone there. ”

“But your babysitter. Mariko was saying she came from over there. ”

“I have no babysitter, Etsuko. I know nobody here. ”

“Mariko was telling me about some lady ...”

“Please don’t pay any attention. ”

“You mean she was just making it up? ”

For a brief moment, Sachiko seemed to be considering something. Then she said: “Yes. She was just making it up. ”

“Well, I suppose children often do things like that. ”

Sachiko nodded. “When you become a mother, Etsuko,” she said, smiling, “you’ll need to get used to such things. ”

We drifted on to other subjects then. Those were early days in our friendship and we talked mainly of little things. It was not until one morning some weeks later that I heard Mariko mention again a woman who had approached her.

Chapter Two

In those days, returning to the Nakagawa district still provoked in me mixed emotions of sadness and pleasure. It is a hilly area, and climbing again those steep narrow streets between the clusters of houses never failed to fill me with a deep sense of loss. Though not a place I visited on casual impulse, I was unable to stay away for long.

Calling on Mrs Fujiwara aroused in me much the same mixture of feelings; for she had been amongst my mother's closest friends, a kindly woman with hair that was by then turning grey. Her noodle shop was situated in a busy sidestreet; it had a concrete forecourt under the cover of an extended roof and it was there her customers ate, at the wooden tables and benches. She did a lot of trade with office workers during their lunch breaks and again on their way home, but at other times of the day the clientele became sparse.

I was a little anxious that afternoon, for it was the first time I had called at the shop since Sachiko had started to work there. I felt concerned — on both their behalves — especially since I was not sure how genuinely Mrs Fujiwara had wanted an assistant. It was a hot day, and the little sidestreet was alive with people. I was glad to come into the shade.

Mrs Fujiwara was pleased to see me. She sat me down at a table, then went to fetch some tea. Customers were few that afternoon — perhaps there were none, I do not remember — and Sachiko was not to be seen. When Mrs Fujiwara came back, I asked her: “How is my friend getting along? Is she managing all right?”

“Your friend?” Mrs Fujiwara looked over her shoulder towards the doorway of the kitchen. “She was peeling prawns.

I expect she'll be out soon." Then, as if on second thoughts, she got to her feet and walked a little way towards the doorway. "Sachiko-San," she called. "Etsuko is here." I heard a voice reply from within.

As she sat down again, Mrs Fujiwara reached over and touched my stomach. "It's beginning to show now," she said. "You must take good care from now on."

"I don't do a great deal anyway," I said. "I lead a very easy life."

"That's good. I remember my first time, there was an earthquake, quite a large one. I was carrying Kazuo then. He came perfectly healthy though. Try not to worry too much, Etsuko."

"I try not to." I glanced towards the kitchen door. "Is my friend getting on well here?"

Mrs Fujiwara followed my gaze towards the kitchen. Then she turned to me again and said: "I expect so. You're good friends, are you?"

"Yes. I haven't found many friends where we live. I'm very glad to have met Sachiko."

"Yes. That was fortunate." She sat there looking at me for several seconds. "Etsuko, you're looking rather tired today."

"I suppose I am." I laughed a little. "It's only to be expected, I suppose."

"Yes, of course." Mrs Fujiwara kept looking into my face. "But I meant you looked a little — miserable."

"Miserable? I certainly don't feel it. I'm just a little tired, but otherwise I've never been happier."

"That's good. You must keep your mind on happy things now. Your child. And the future."

"Yes, I will. Thinking about the child cheers me up."

“Good.” She nodded, still keeping her gaze on me. “Your attitude makes all the difference. A mother can take all the physical care she likes, she needs a positive attitude to bring up a child.”

“Well, I’m certainly looking forward to it,” I said, with a laugh. A noise made me look towards the kitchen again, but Sachiko was still not in sight.

“There’s a young woman I see every week,” Mrs Fujiwara went on. “She must be six or seven months pregnant now. I see her every time I go to visit the cemetery. I’ve never spoken to her, but she looks so sad, standing there with her husband. It’s a shame, a pregnant girl and her husband spending their Sundays thinking about the dead. I know they’re being respectful, but all the same, I think it’s a shame. They should be thinking about the future.”

“I suppose she finds it hard to forget.”

“I suppose so. I feel sorry for her. But they should be thinking ahead now. That’s no way to bring a child into the world, visiting the cemetery every week.”

“Perhaps not.”

“Cemeteries are no places for young people. Kazuo comes with me sometimes, but I never insist. It’s time he started looking ahead too.”

“How is Kazuo?” I asked. “Is his work coming on well?”

“His work’s fine. He’s expecting to be promoted next month. But he needs to give other things a little thought. He won’t be young for ever.”

Just then my eye was caught by a small figure standing out in the sunlight amidst the rush of passers-by.

“Why, isn’t that Mariko?” I said.

Mrs Fujiwara turned in her seat. "Mariko-San," she called. "Where have you been?"

For a moment, Mariko remained standing out in the street. Then she stepped into the shade of the forecourt, came walking past us and sat down at an empty table nearby.

Mrs Fujiwara watched the little girl, then gave me an uneasy look. She seemed about to say something, but then got to her feet and went over to the little girl.

"Mariko-San, where have you been?" Mrs Fujiwara had lowered her voice, but I was still able to hear. "You're not to keep running off like that. Your mother's very angry with you."

Mariko was studying her fingers. She did not look up at Mrs Fujiwara.

"And Mariko-San, please, you're never to talk to customers like that. Don't you know it's very rude? Your mother's very angry with you."

Mariko went on studying her hands. Behind her, Sachiko appeared in the doorway of the kitchen. Seeing Sachiko that morning, I recall I was struck afresh by the impression that she was indeed older than I had first supposed; with her long hair hidden away inside a handkerchief, the tired areas of skin around her eyes and mouth seemed somehow more pronounced.

"Here's your mother now," said Mrs Fujiwara. "I expect she's very angry with you."

The little girl had remained seated with her back to her mother. Sachiko threw a quick glance towards her, then turned to me with a smile.

"How do you do, Etsuko," she said, with an elegant bow. "What a pleasant surprise to see you here."

At the other end of the forecourt, two women in office clothes were seating themselves at a table. Mrs Fujiwara gestured towards them, then turned to Mariko once more.

“Why don’t you go into the kitchen for a little while,” she said, in a low voice. “Your mother will show you what to do. It’s very easy. I’m sure a clever girl like you could manage.”

Mariko gave no sign of having heard. Mrs Fujiwara glanced up at Sachiko, and for a brief instant I thought they exchanged cold glances. Then Mrs Fujiwara turned and went off towards her customers. She appeared to know them, for as she walked across the forecourt, she gave them a familiar greeting.

Sachiko came and sat at the edge of my table. “It’s so hot inside that kitchen,” she said.

“How are you getting on here?” I asked her.

“How am I getting on? Well, Etsuko, it’s certainly an amusing sort of experience, working in a noodle shop. I must say, I never imagined I’d one day find myself scrubbing tables in a place like this. Still” — she laughed quickly — “it’s quite amusing.”

“I see. And Mariko, is she settling in?”

We both glanced over to Mariko’s table; the child was still looking down at her hands.

“Oh, Mariko’s fine,” said Sachiko. “Of course, she’s rather restless at times. But then you’d hardly expect otherwise under the circumstances. It’s regrettable, Etsuko, but you see, my daughter doesn’t seem to share my sense of humour. She doesn’t find it quite so amusing here.” Sachiko smiled and glanced towards Mariko again. Then she got to her feet and went over to her.

She asked quietly: “Is it true what Mrs Fujiwara told me?”

The little girl remained silent.

"She says you were being rude to customers again. Is that true?"

Mariko still gave no response.

"Is it true what she told me? Mariko, please answer when you're spoken to."

"The woman came round again," said Mariko. "Last night. While you were gone."

Sachiko looked at her daughter for a second or two. Then she said: "I think you should go inside now. Go on, I'll show you what you have to do."

"She came again last night. She said she'd take me to her house."

"Go on, Mariko, go on into the kitchen and wait for me there."

"She's going to show me where she lives."

"Mariko, go inside."

Across the forecourt, Mrs Fujiwara and the two women were laughing loudly about something. Mariko continued to stare at her palms. Sachiko turned away and came back to my table.

"Excuse me a moment, Etsuko," she said. "But I left something boiling. I'll be back in just a moment." Then lowering her voice, she added: "You can hardly expect her to get enthusiastic about a place like this, can you?" She smiled and went towards the kitchen. At the doorway, she turned once more to her daughter.

"Come on, Mariko, come inside."

Mariko did not move. Sachiko shrugged, then disappeared inside the kitchen.

Around that same time, in early summer, Ogata-San came to visit us, his first visit since moving away from Nagasaki earlier that year. He was my husband's father, and it seems rather odd I always thought of him as "Ogata-San", even in those days when that was my own name. But then I had known him as "Ogata-San" for such a long time — since long before I had ever met Jiro — I had never got used to calling him "Father".

There was little family resemblance between Ogata-San and my husband. When I recall Jiro today, I picture a small stocky man wearing a stern expression; my husband was always fastidious about his appearance, and even at home would frequently dress in shirt and tie. I see him now as I saw him so often, seated on the tatami in our living room, hunched forward over his breakfast or supper. I remember he had this same tendency to hunch forward — in a manner not unlike that of a boxer — whether standing or walking. By contrast, his father would always sit with his shoulders flung well back, and had a relaxed, generous manner about him. When he came to visit us that summer, Ogata-San was still in the best of health, displaying a well-built physique and the robust energy of a much younger man.

I remember the morning he first mentioned Shigeo Matsuda. He had been with us for a few days by then, apparently finding the small square room comfortable enough for an extended stay. It was a bright morning and the three of us were finishing breakfast before Jiro left for the office.

"This school reunion of yours," he said to Jiro.
"That's tonight, is it?"

"No, tomorrow evening."

"Will you be seeing Shigeo Matsuda?"

"Shigeo? No, I doubt it. He doesn't usually attend these occasions. I'm sorry to be going off and leaving you, Father."

I'd rather give the thing a miss, but that may cause offence. "

"Don't worry. Etsuko-San will look after me well enough. And these occasions are important. "

"I'd take some days off work," Jiro said, "but we're so busy just now. As I say, this order came into the office the day you arrived. A real nuisance. "

"Not at all," said his father. "I understand perfectly. It wasn't so long ago I was rushed off my feet with work myself. I'm not so old, you know. "

"No, of course. "

We ate on in silence for several moments. Then Ogata-San said:

"So you don't think you'll be running into Shigeo Matsuda. But you still see him from time to time? "

"Not so often these days. We've gone such separate ways since we got older. "

"Yes, this is what happens. Pupils all go separate ways, and then they find it so difficult to keep in touch. That's why these reunions are so important. One shouldn't be so quick to forget old allegiances. And it's good to take a glance back now and then, it helps keep things in perspective. Yes, I think you should certainly go along tomorrow. "

"Perhaps Father will still be with us on Sunday," my husband said. "Then perhaps we could go out somewhere for the day. "

"Yes, we can do that. A splendid idea. But if you have work to do, it doesn't matter in the least. "

"No, I think I can leave Sunday free. I'm sorry to be so busy at the moment. "

"Have you asked any of your old teachers along tomorrow?" Ogata-San asked.

"Not that I know of."

"It's a shame teachers aren't asked more often to these occasions. I was asked along from time to time. And when I was younger, we always made a point of inviting our teachers. I think it's only proper. It's an opportunity for a teacher to see the fruits of his work, and for the pupils to express their gratitude to him. I think it's only proper that teachers are present."

"Yes, perhaps you have a point."

"Men these days forget so easily to whom they owe their education."

"Yes, you're very right."

My husband finished eating and laid down his chopsticks. I poured him some tea.

"An odd little thing happened the other day," Ogata-San said. "In retrospect, I suppose it's rather amusing. I was at the library in Nagasaki, and I came across this periodical — a teachers' periodical. I'd never heard of it, it wasn't in existence in my days. To read it, you'd think all the teachers in Japan were communists now."

"Apparently communism is growing in the country," my husband said.

"Your friend Shigeo Matsuda had written in it. Now imagine my surprise when I saw my name mentioned in his article. I didn't think I was so noteworthy these days."

"I'm sure Father is still remembered very well in Nagasaki," I put in.

"It was quite extraordinary. He was talking about Dr Endo and myself, about our retirements. If I understood him correctly, he was implying that the profession was well rid of us. In fact, he went so far as to suggest we should have been dismissed at the end of the war. Quite extraordinary. ”

“Are you sure it’s the same Shigeo Matsuda?” asked Jiro.

“The same one. From Kuriyama Highschool. Extraordinary. I remember when he used to come to our house, to play with you. Your mother used to spoil him. I asked the librarian if I could buy a copy, and she said she would order one for me. I’ll show it to you. ”

“It seems very disloyal,” I said.

“I was so surprised,” Ogata-San said, turning to me. “And I was the one who introduced him to the headmaster at Kuriyama. ”

Jiro drank up his tea and wiped his mouth with his napkin. “It’s very regrettable. As I say, I haven’t seen Shigeo for some time. I’m sorry, Father, but you must excuse me now or I’ll be late. ”

“Why certainly. Have a good day at work. ”

Jiro stepped down to the entryway, where he started to put on his shoes. I said to Ogata-San: “Someone who reached your position, Father, must expect a little criticism. That’s only natural. ”

“Of course,” he said, breaking out into a laugh. “No, don’t concern yourself about it, Etsuko. I hadn’t given it a second thought. I just happened to think of it because Jiro was going to his reunion. I wonder if Endo read the article. ”

“I hope you have a good day, Father,” Jiro called from the entryway. “I’ll try to be back a little early if I can. ”

“Nonsense, don’t make such a fuss. Your work is important. ”

A little later that morning, Ogata-San emerged from his room dressed in his jacket and tie.

“Are you going out, Father?” I asked.

“I thought I’d just pay a visit to Dr Endo.”

“Dr Endo?”

“Yes, I thought I’d go and see how he was keeping these days.”

“But you’re not going before lunch, are you?”

“I thought I’d better go quite soon,” he said, looking at his watch. “Endo lives a little way outside Nagasaki now. I’ll need to get a train.”

“Well, let me pack you a lunch-box, it won’t take a minute.”

“Why, thank you, Etsuko. In that case I’ll wait a few minutes. In fact, I was hoping you’d offer to pack me lunch.”

“Then you should have asked,” I said, getting to my feet. “You won’t always get what you want just by hinting like that, Father.”

“But I knew you’d pick me up correctly, Etsuko. I have faith in you.”

I went through to the kitchen, put on some sandals and stepped down to the tiled floor. A few minutes later, the partition slid open and Ogata-San appeared at the doorway. He seated himself at the threshold to watch me working.

“What is that you’re cooking me there?”

“Nothing much. Just left-overs from last night. At such short notice, you don’t deserve any better.”

“And yet you’ll manage to turn it into something quite appetizing, I’m sure. What’s that you’re doing with the egg? That’s not a left-over too, is it?”

“I’m adding an omelette. You’re very fortunate, Father, I’m in such a generous mood. ”

“An omelette. You must teach me how to do that. Is it difficult? ”

“Extremely difficult. It would be hopeless you trying to learn at this stage. ”

“But I’m very keen to learn. And what do you mean ‘at this stage’? I’m still young enough to learn many new things. ”

“Are you really planning on becoming a cook, Father? ”

“It’s nothing to laugh at. I’ve come to appreciate cooking over the years. It’s an art, I’m convinced of it, just as noble as painting or poetry. It’s not appreciated simply because the product disappears so quickly. ”

“Persevere with painting, Father. You do it much better. ”

“Painting. ” He gave a sigh. “It doesn’t give me the satisfaction it once did. No, I think I should learn to cook omelettes as well as you do, Etsuko. You must show me before I go back to Fukuoka. ”

“You wouldn’t think it such an art once you’d learnt how it was done. Perhaps women should keep these things secret. ”

He laughed, as if to himself, then continued to watch me quietly.

“Which are you hoping for, Etsuko? ” he asked, eventually. “A boy or a girl? ”

“I really don’t mind. If it’s a boy we could name him after you. ”

“Really? Is that a promise? ”

“On second thoughts I don’t know. I was forgetting what Father’s first name was. Seiji — that’s an ugly sort of name. ”

“But that’s only because you find me ugly, Etsuko. I remember one class of pupils decided I resembled a hippopotamus. But you shouldn’t be put off by such outer trappings. ”

“That’s true. Well, we’ll have to see what Jiro thinks. ”

“Yes. ”

“But I’d like my son to be named after you, Father. ”

“That would make me very happy. ” He smiled and gave me a small bow. “But then I know how irritating it is when relatives insist on having children named after them. I remember the time my wife and I argued over what to call Jiro. I wanted to name him after an uncle of mine, but my wife disliked this practice of naming children after relatives. Of course, she had her way in the end. Keiko was a hard woman to budge. ”

“Keiko is a nice name. Perhaps if it’s a girl we could call her Keiko. ”

“You shouldn’t make such promises so rashly. You’ll make an old man very disappointed if you don’t keep to them. ”

“I’m sorry, I was just thinking aloud. ”

“And besides, Etsuko, I’m sure there are others you’d prefer to name your child after. Others you were closer to. ”

“Perhaps. But if it’s a boy I’d like him to be named after you. You were like a father to me once. ”

“Am I no longer like a father to you? ”

“Yes, of course. But it’s different. ”

“Jiro is a good husband to you, I hope. ”

“Of course. I couldn’t be happier. ”

"And the child will make you happy. "

"Yes. It couldn't have happened at a better time. We're quite settled here now, and Jiro's work is going well. This is the ideal time for this to have happened. "

"So you're happy? "

"Yes, I'm very happy. "

"Good. I'm happy for you both. "

"There, it's all ready for you. " I handed him the lacquer lunch-box.

"Ah yes, the left-overs, " he said, receiving it with a dramatic bow. He lifted the lid a little. "It looks delightful though. "

When I eventually went back into the living room, Ogata-San was putting on his shoes in the entryway.

"Tell me, Etsuko, " he said, not looking up from his laces. "Have you met this Shigeo Matsuda? "

"Once or twice. He used to visit us after we were married. "

"But he and Jiro aren't such close friends these days? "

"Hardly. We exchange greeting cards, but that's all. "

"I'm going to suggest to Jiro he writes to his friend. Shigeo should apologize. Or else I'll have to insist Jiro disassociates himself from that young man. "

"I see. "

"I thought of suggesting it to him earlier, when we were talking at breakfast. But then that kind of talk is best left till the evening. "

"You're probably right. "

Ogata-San thanked me once more for the lunch-box before leaving.

As it turned out, he did not bring the matter up that night. They both seemed tired when they came in and spent most of the evening reading newspapers, speaking little. And only once did Ogata-San mention Dr Endo. That was at supper, and he said simply: "Endo seemed well. He misses his work though. After all, the man lived for it."

In bed that night, before we fell asleep, I said to Jiro: "I hope Father's quite content with the way we're receiving him."

"What else can he expect?" my husband said. "Why don't you take him out somewhere if you're so worried."

"Will you be working on Saturday afternoon?"

"How can I afford not to? I'm behind schedule as it is. He happened to choose the most difficult of times to visit me. It's just too bad."

"But we could still go out on Sunday, couldn't we?"

I have a feeling I did not receive a reply then, though I lay gazing up into the darkness waiting. Jiro was often tired after a day's work and not in the mood for conversation.

In any case, it seems I was worrying unduly about Ogata-San, for his visit that summer turned out to be one of his lengthiest. I remember he was still with us that night Sachiko knocked on our apartment door.

She was wearing a dress I had never seen before, and there was a shawl wrapped around her shoulders. Her face had been carefully made up, but a thin strand of hair had come loose and was hanging over her cheek.

"I'm sorry to disturb you, Etsuko," she said, smiling. "I was wondering if by any chance Mariko was here."

"Mariko? Why, no."

"Well, never mind. You haven't seen her at all?"

“I’m afraid not. You’ve lost her?”

“There’s no need to look like that,” she said, with a laugh. “It’s just that she wasn’t in the cottage when I got back, that’s all. I’m sure I’ll find her very soon.”

We were talking at the entryway, and I became aware of Jiro and Ogata-San looking towards us. I introduced Sachiko, and they all bowed to each other.

“This is worrying,” Ogata-San said. “Perhaps we’d better phone the police straight away.”

“But perhaps it’s best to be safe and phone anyway.”

“No really” — a slight hint of irritation had entered Sachiko’s voice — “there’s no need. I’m sure I’ll find her.”

“I’ll help you look for her,” I said, starting to put on my jacket.

My husband looked at me disapprovingly. He seemed about to speak, but then stopped himself. In the end, he said: “It’s almost dark now.”

“Really, Etsuko, there’s no need to make such a fuss,” Sachiko was saying. “But if you don’t mind coming out for a minute, I’ll be most grateful.”

“Take care, Etsuko,” Ogata-San said. “And phone the police if you don’t find the child soon.”

We descended the flight of stairs. Outside it was still warm, and across the wasteground the sun had sunk very low, highlighting the muddy furrows.

“Have you looked around the housing precinct?” I asked.

“No, not yet.”

"Let's look then." I began to walk rapidly. "Does Mariko have friends she may be with?"

"I don't think so. Really, Etsuko" — Sachiko laughed and put a hand on my arm — "there's no need to be so alarmed. Nothing will have happened to her. In fact, Etsuko, I really came round because I wanted to tell you some news. You see, it's all been settled at last. We're leaving for America within the next few days."

"America?" Perhaps because of Sachiko's hand on my arm, perhaps out of sheer surprise, I stopped walking.

"Yes, America. You've no doubt heard of such a place." She seemed pleased at my astonishment.

I began to walk again. Our precinct was an expanse of paved concrete, interrupted occasionally by thin young trees planted when the buildings had gone up. Above us, lights had come on in most of the windows.

"Aren't you going to ask me anything more?" Sachiko said, catching up with me. "Aren't you going to ask me why I'm going? And who I'm going with?"

"I'm very glad if this is what you wanted," I said. "But perhaps we should find your daughter first."

"Etsuko, you must understand, there's nothing I'm ashamed of. There's nothing I want to hide from anyone. Please ask me anything you want, I'm not ashamed."

"I thought perhaps we should find your daughter first. We can talk later."

"Very well, Etsuko," she said, with a laugh. "Let's find Mariko first."

We searched the playing areas and walked around each of the apartment blocks. Soon we found ourselves back where we had started. Then I spotted two women talking by the main entrance to one of the apartment blocks.

"Perhaps those ladies over there could help us," I said.

Sachiko did not move. She looked over towards the two women, then said: "I doubt it."

"But they may have seen her. They may have seen your daughter."

Sachiko continued to look at the women. Then she gave a short laugh and shrugged. "Very well," she said. "Let's give them something to gossip about. It's no concern of mine."

We walked over to them and Sachiko politely and calmly made her enquiries. The women exchanged concerned looks, but neither had seen the little girl. Sachiko assured them there was no cause for alarm, and we took our leave.

"I'm sure that made their day," she said to me. "Now they'll have something to talk about."

"I'm sure they had no malicious thoughts whatsoever. They both seemed genuinely concerned."

"You're so kind, Etsuko, but there's really no need to convince me of such things. You see, it's never been any concern to me what people like that thought, and I care even less now."

We stopped walking. I threw a glance around me, and up at the apartment windows. "Where else could she be?" I said.

"You see, Etsuko, there's nothing I'm ashamed of. There's nothing I want to hide from you. Or from those women, for that matter."

"Do you think we should search by the river?"

"The river? Oh, I've looked along there."

"What about the other side? Perhaps she's over on the other side."

“I doubt it, Etsuko. In fact, if I know my daughter, she’ll be back at the cottage at this very moment. Probably rather pleased with herself to have caused this fuss.”

“Well, let’s go and see.”

When we came back to the edge of the wasteground, the sun was disappearing behind the river, silhouetting the willow trees along the bank.

“There’s no need for you to come with me,” Sachiko said. “I’ll find her in good time.”

“It’s all right. I’ll come with you.”

“Very well then. Come with me.”

We began walking towards the cottage. I was wearing sandals and found it hard going on the uneven earth.

“How long were you out?” I asked. Sachiko was a pace or two ahead of me; she did not reply at first, and I thought possibly she had not heard me. “How long were you out?” I repeated.

“Oh, not long.”

“How long? Half an hour? Longer?”

“About three or four hours, I suppose.”

“I see.”

We continued our way across the muddy ground, doing our best to avoid any puddles. As we approached the cottage, I said: “Perhaps we should look over on the other side, just in case.”

“The woods? My daughter wouldn’t be over there. Let’s go and look in the cottage. There’s no need to look so worried, Etsuko.” She laughed again, but I thought her voice wobbled a little as she did so.

The cottage, having no electricity, was in darkness. I waited in the entryway while Sachiko stepped up to the tatami. She called her daughter's name and slid back the partitions to the two smaller rooms that adjoined the main one. I stood listening to her moving around in the darkness, then she came back to the entryway.

"Perhaps you're right," she said. "We'd better look on the other bank."

Along the river the air was full of insects. We walked in silence, towards the small wooden bridge further downstream. Beyond it, on the opposite bank, were the woods Sachiko had mentioned earlier.

We were crossing the bridge, when Sachiko turned to me and said rapidly: "We went to a bar in the end. We were going to go to the cinema, to a film with Gary Cooper, but there was a long queue. The town was very crowded and a lot of people were drunk. We went to a bar in the end and they gave us a little room to ourselves."

"I see."

"I suppose you don't go to bars, do you, Etsuko?"

"No, I don't."

That was the first time I had crossed to the far side of the river. The ground felt soft, almost marshy under my feet. Perhaps it is just my fancy that I felt a cold touch of unease there on that bank, a feeling not unlike premonition, which caused me to walk with renewed urgency towards the darkness of the trees before us.

Sachiko stopped me, grasping my arm. Following her gaze, I could see a short way along the bank something like a bundle lying on the grass, close to the river's edge. It was just discernible in the gloom, a few shades darker than the ground around it. My first impulse was to run towards it, but then I realized Sachiko was standing quite still, gazing towards the object.

"What is it?" I said, rather stupidly.

“It’s Mariko,” she said, quietly. And when she turned to me there was a strange look in her eyes.

Chapter Three

It is possible that my memory of these events will have grown hazy with time, that things did not happen in quite the way they come back to me today. But I remember with some distinctness that eerie spell which seemed to bind the two of us as we stood there in the coming darkness looking towards that shape further down the bank. Then the spell broke and we both began to run. As we came nearer, I saw Mariko lying curled on her side, knees hunched, her back towards us. Sachiko reached the spot a little ahead of me, I being slowed by my pregnancy, and she was standing over the child when I joined her. Mariko's eyes were open and at first I thought she was dead. But then I saw them move and they stared up at us with a peculiar blankness.

Sachiko dropped on to one knee and lifted the child's head. Mariko continued to stare.

"Mariko-San, are you all right?" I said, a little out of breath.

She did not reply. Sachiko too was silent, examining her daughter, turning her in her arms as if she were a fragile, but senseless doll. I noticed the blood on Sachiko's sleeve, then saw it was coming from Mariko.

"We'd better call someone," I said.

"It's not serious," Sachiko said. "It's just a graze. See, it's just a small cut."

Mariko had been lying in a puddle and one side of her short dress was soaked in dark water. The blood was coming from a wound on the inside of her thigh.

"What happened?" Sachiko said to her daughter. "What happened to you?"

Mariko went on looking at her mother.

"She's probably shocked," I said. "Perhaps it's best not to question her immediately."

Sachiko brought Mariko to her feet.

"We were very worried about you, Mariko-San," I said. The little girl gave me a suspicious look, then turned away and started to walk. She walked quite steadily; the wound on her leg did not seem to trouble her unduly.

We walked back over the bridge and along the river. The two of them walked in front of me, not talking. It was completely dark by the time we reached the cottage.

Sachiko took Mariko into the bathroom. I lit the stove in the centre of the main room to make some tea. Aside from the stove, an old hanging lantern Sachiko had lit provided the only source of light, and large areas of the room remained in shadow. In one corner several tiny black kittens aroused by our arrival started to move restlessly. Their claws, catching in the tatami, made a scuttling noise.

When they appeared again, both mother and daughter had changed into kimonos. They went through to one of the small adjoining rooms and I continued to wait for some time. The sound of Sachiko's voice came through the screen.

Finally, Sachiko came out alone. "It's still very hot," she remarked. She crossed the room and slid apart the partitions which opened out on to the veranda.

"How is she?" I asked.

"She's all right. The cut's nothing." Sachiko sat down in the breeze, next to the partitions.

"Shall we report the matter to the police?"

"The police? But what is there to report? Mariko says she was climbing a tree and fell. That's how she got her cut."

“So she wasn’t with anyone tonight?”

“No. Who could she have been with?”

“And what about this woman?” I said.

“What woman?”

“This woman Mariko talks about. Are you still certain she’s imaginary?”

Sachiko sighed. “She’s not entirely imaginary, I suppose,” she said. “She’s just someone Mariko saw once. Once, when she was much younger.”

“But do you think she could have been here tonight, this woman?”

Sachiko gave a laugh. “No, Etsuko, that’s quite impossible. In any case, that woman’s dead. Believe me, Etsuko, all this about a woman, it’s just a little game Mariko likes to play when she means to be difficult. I’ve grown quite used to these little games of hers.”

“But why should she tell stories like that?”

“Why?” Sachiko shrugged. “It’s just what children like to do. Once you become a mother, Etsuko, you’ll need to get used to such things.”

“You’re sure she was with no one tonight?”

“Quite sure. I know my own daughter well enough.”

We fell silent for a moment. Mosquitoes were humming in the air around us. Sachiko gave a yawn, covering her mouth with a hand.

“So you see, Etsuko,” she said, “I’ll be leaving Japan very shortly. You don’t seem very impressed.”

“Of course I am. And I’m very pleased, if this is what you wished. But won’t there be … various difficulties?”

“Difficulties?”

“I mean, moving to a different country, with a different language and foreign ways. ”

“I understand your concern, Etsuko. But really, I don't think there's much for me to worry about. You see, I've heard so much about America, it won't be like an entirely foreign country. And as for the language, I already speak it to a certain extent. Frank-San and I, we always talk in English. Once I've been in America for a little while, I should speak it like an American woman. I really don't see there's any cause for me to be worrying. I know I'll manage. ”

I gave a small bow, but said nothing. Two of the kittens began making their way towards where Sachiko was sitting. She watched them for a moment, then gave a laugh. “Of course,” she said, “I sometimes have moments when I wonder how everything will turn out. But really” — she smiled at me — “I know I'll manage. ”

“Actually,” I said, “it was Mariko I had in mind. What will become of her? ”

“Mariko? Oh, she'll be fine. You know how children are. They find it so much easier to settle into new surroundings, don't they? ”

“But it would still be an enormous change for her. Is she ready for such a thing? ”

Sachiko sighed impatiently. “Really, Etsuko, did you think I hadn't considered all this? Did you suppose I would decide to leave the country without having first given the most careful consideration to my daughter's welfare? ”

“Naturally,” I said, “you'd give it the most careful consideration. ”

“My daughter's welfare is of the utmost importance to me, Etsuko. I wouldn't make any decision that jeopardized her future. I've given the whole matter much consideration, and I've discussed it with Frank. I assure you, Mariko will be fine. There'll be no problems. "

"But her education, what will become of that? "

Sachiko laughed again. "Etsuko, I'm not about to leave for the jungle. There are such things as schools in America. And you must understand, my daughter is a very bright child. Her father was an accomplished man, and on my side too, there were relatives of the highest rank. You mustn't suppose, Etsuko, simply because you've seen her in these ... in these present surroundings, that she's some peasant's child. "

"Of course not. I didn't for one moment ..."

"She's a very bright child. You haven't seen her as she really is, Etsuko. In surroundings like this, you can only expect a child to prove a little awkward at times. But if you'd seen her while we were at my uncle's house, you'd have seen her true qualities then. If an adult addressed her, she'd answer back very clearly and intelligently, there'd be none of this giggling and shying away like most other children. And there were certainly none of these little games of hers. She went to school, and made friends with the best kinds of children. And we had a private tutor for her, and he praised her very highly. It was astonishing how quickly she began to catch up. "

"To catch up? "

"Well" — Sachiko gave a shrug — "it's unfortunate that Mariko's education's had to be interrupted from time to time. What with one thing and another, and our moving around so much. But these are difficult times we've come through, Etsuko. If it wasn't for the war, if my husband was still alive, then Mariko would have had the kind of up-bringing appropriate to a family of our position. "

"Yes, " I said. "Indeed. "

Perhaps Sachiko had caught something in my tone; she looked up and stared at me, and when she spoke again, her voice had become more tense.

“I didn’t need to leave Tokyo, Etsuko,” she said. “But I did, for Mariko’s sake. I came all this way to stay at my uncle’s house, because I thought it would be best for my daughter. I didn’t have to do that, I didn’t need to leave Tokyo at all.”

I gave a bow. Sachiko looked at me for a moment, then turned and gazed out through the open partitions, out into the darkness.

“But you’ve left your uncle now,” I said. “And now you’re about to leave Japan.”

Sachiko glared at me angrily. “Why do you speak to me like this, Etsuko? Why is it you can’t wish me well? Is it simply that you’re envious?”

“But I do wish you well. And I assure you I ...”

“Mariko will be fine in America, why won’t you believe that? It’s a better place for a child to grow up. And she’ll have far more opportunities there, life’s much better for a woman in America.”

“I assure you I’m happy for you. As for myself, I couldn’t be happier with things as they are. Jiro’s work is going so well, and now the child arriving just when we wanted it ...”

“She could become a business girl, a film actress even. America’s like that, Etsuko, so many things are possible. Frank says I could become a business woman too. Such things are possible out there.”

“I’m sure they are. It’s just that personally, I’m very happy with my life where I am.”

Sachiko gazed at the two small kittens, clawing at the tatami beside her. For several moments we were silent.

"I must be getting back," I said, eventually. "They'll be getting worried about me." I rose to my feet, but Sachiko did not take her eyes off the kittens. "When is it you leave?" I asked.

"Within the next few days. Frank will come and get us in his car. We should be on a ship by the end of the week."

"I take it then you won't be helping Mrs Fujiwara much longer."

Sachiko looked up at me with a short incredulous laugh. "Etsuko, I'm about to go to America. There's no need for me to work any more in a noodle shop."

"I see."

"In fact, Etsuko, perhaps you'd care to tell Mrs Fujiwara what's happened to me. I don't expect to be seeing her again."

"Won't you tell her yourself?"

She sighed impatiently. "Etsuko, can't you appreciate how loathsome it's been for someone such as myself to work each day in a noodle shop? But I didn't complain and I did what was required of me. But now it's over, I've no great wish to see that place again." A kitten had been clawing at the sleeve of Sachiko's kimono. She gave it a sharp slap with the back of her hand and the little creature went scurrying back across the tatami. "So please give my regards to Mrs Fujiwara," she said. "And my best wishes for her trade."

"I'll do that. Now please excuse me, I must go."

This time, Sachiko got to her feet and accompanied me to the entryway.

"I'll come and say goodbye before we leave," she said, as I was putting on my sandals.

At first it had seemed a perfectly innocent dream; I had merely dreamt of something I had seen the previous day — the little girl we had watched playing in the park. And then the dream came back the following night. Indeed, over the past few months, it has returned to me several times.

Niki and I had watched the girl playing on the swings the afternoon we had walked into the village. It was the third day of Niki's visit and the rain had eased to a drizzle. I had not been out of the house for several days and enjoyed the feel of the air as we stepped into the winding lane outside.

Niki tended to walk rather fast, her narrow leather boots creaking with each stride. Although I found it no trouble keeping up with her, I would have preferred a more leisurely pace. Niki, one supposes, has yet to learn the pleasures of walking for its own sake. Neither does she seem sensitive to the feel of the countryside despite having grown up here. I said as much to her as we walked, and she retorted that this was not the real countryside, just a residential version to cater for the wealthy people who lived here. I dare say she is right; I have never ventured north to the agricultural areas of England where, Niki insists, I will find the real countryside. Nevertheless, there is a calm and quietness about these lanes I have come to appreciate over the years.

When we arrived at the village I took Niki to the tea shop where I sometimes go. The village is small, just a few hotels and shops; the tea shop is on a street corner, upstairs above a bakery. That afternoon, Niki and I sat at a table next to the windows, and it was from there we watched the little girl playing in the park below. As we watched, she climbed on to a swing and called out towards two women sitting together on a bench nearby. She was a cheerful little girl, dressed in a green mackintosh and small Wellington boots.

“Perhaps you’ll get married and have children soon,” I said. “I miss little children.”

“I can’t think of anything I’d like less,” said Niki.

“Well, I suppose you’re still rather young.”

“It’s nothing to do with how young or old I am. I just don’t feel like having a lot of kids screaming around me.”

“Don’t worry, Niki,” I said, with a laugh. “I wasn’t insisting you became a mother just yet. I had this passing fancy just now to be a grandmother, that’s all. I thought perhaps you’d oblige, but it can wait.”

The little girl, standing on the seat of the swing, was pulling hard on the chains, but somehow she could not make the swing go higher. She smiled anyway and called out again to the women.

“A friend of mine’s just had a baby,” Niki said. “She’s really pleased. I can’t think why. Horrible screaming thing she’s produced.”

“Well, at least she’s happy. How old is your friend?”

“Nineteen.”

“Nineteen? She’s even younger than you are. Is she married?”

“No. What difference does that make?”

“But surely she can’t be happy about it.”

“Why not? Just because she isn’t married?”

“There’s that. And the fact that she’s only nineteen. I can’t believe she was happy about it.”

“What difference does it make whether she’s married? She wanted it, she planned it and everything.”

“Is that what she told you?”

“But, Mother, I know her, she’s a friend of mine. I know she wanted it.”

The women on the bench got to their feet. One of them called to the little girl. She came off the swing and went running towards the women.

“And what about the father?” I asked.

“He was happy about it too. I remember when they first found out. We all went out to celebrate.”

“But people always pretend to be delighted. It’s like that film we saw on the television last night.”

“What film?”

“I expect you weren’t watching it. You were reading your magazine.”

“Oh that. It looked awful.”

“It certainly was. But that’s what I mean. I’m sure nobody ever receives the news of a baby like these people do in these films.”

“Honestly, Mother, I don’t know how you can sit and watch rubbish like that. You hardly used to watch television at all. I remember you used to keep telling me off because I watched it so much.”

I laughed. “You see how our roles are reversing, Niki. I’m sure you’re very good for me. You must stop me wasting my time away like that.”

As we made our way back from the tea shop, the sky had clouded over ominously and the drizzle had become heavier. We had walked a little way past the small railway station when a voice called from behind us: “Mrs Sheringham! Mrs Sheringham!”

I turned and saw a small woman in an overcoat hurrying up the road.

"I thought it was you," she said, catching up with us. "And how have you been keeping?" She gave me a cheerful smile.

"Hello, Mrs Waters," I said. "How nice to see you again."

"Seems to have turned all miserable again, hasn't it? Why, hello, Keiko" — she touched Niki's sleeve — "I didn't realize it was you."

"No," I said hurriedly, "this is Niki."

"Niki, of course. Good gracious, you've completely grown up, dear. That's why I got you muddled. You've completely grown up."

"Hello, Mrs Waters," Niki said, recovering.

Mrs Waters lives not far from me. These days I see her only very occasionally, but several years ago she had given piano lessons to both my daughters. She had taught Keiko for a number of years, and then Niki for a year or so when she was still a child. It had not taken me long to see Mrs Waters was a very limited pianist and her attitude to music in general had often irritated me; for instance, she would refer to works by Chopin and Tchaikovsky alike as "charming melodies". But she was such an affectionate woman I never had the heart to replace her.

"And what are you doing with yourself these days, dear?" she asked Niki.

"Me? Oh, I live in London."

"Oh yes? And what are you doing there? Studying?"

"I'm not doing anything really. I just live there."

"Oh, I see. But you're happy there, are you? That's the main thing, isn't it."

“Yes, I’m happy enough. ”

“Well, that’s the main thing, isn’t it. And what about Keiko?” Mrs Waters turned to me. “How is Keiko getting on now?”

“Keiko? Oh, she went to live in Manchester. ”

“Oh yes? That’s a nice city on the whole. That’s what I’ve heard anyway. And does she like it up there?”

“I haven’t heard from her recently. ”

“Oh well. No news is good news, I expect. And does Keiko still play the piano?”

“I expect she does. I haven’t heard from her recently. ”

My lack of enthusiasm seemed finally to penetrate, and she dropped the subject with an awkward laugh. Such persistence on her part has characterized our encounters over the years since Keiko’s leaving home. Neither my evident reluctance to discuss Keiko nor the fact that until that afternoon I had been unable to tell her so much as my daughter’s whereabouts had succeeded in making any lasting impression upon her. In all probability, Mrs Waters will continue to ask cheerfully after my daughter whenever we happen to meet.

By the time we got home, the rain was falling steadily.

“I suppose I embarrassed you, didn’t I?” Niki said to me. We were sitting once again in our armchairs, looking out into the garden.

“Why do you suppose that?” I said.

“I should have told her I was thinking of going to university or something like that. ”

“I don’t mind in the least what you say about yourself. I’m not ashamed of you. ”

“No, I suppose not. ”

“But I did think you were rather off-hand with her. You never did like that woman much, did you?”

“Mrs Waters? Well, I used to hate those lessons she gave me. They were sheer boredom. I used to just go off in a dream, then now and again there’d be this little voice telling me to put my finger here or here or here. Was that your idea, getting me to have lessons?”

“It was mainly mine. You see, I had great plans for you once.”

Niki laughed. “I’m sorry to be such a failure. But it’s your own fault. I haven’t got any musical sense at all. There’s this girl in our house who plays the guitar, and she was trying to show me some chords, but I couldn’t be bothered to even learn those. I think Mrs Waters put me off music for life.”

“You may come back to it some time and you’ll appreciate having had lessons.”

“But I’ve forgotten everything I ever learnt.”

“I doubt if you would have forgotten everything. Nothing you learn at that age is totally lost.”

“A waste of time, anyway,” Niki muttered. She sat looking out of the windows for some time. Then she turned to me and said: “I suppose it must be quite difficult to tell people. About Keiko, I mean.”

“It seemed easiest to say what I did,” I replied. “She rather took me by surprise.”

“Yes, I suppose so.” Niki went on looking out of the window with an empty expression. “Keiko didn’t come to Dad’s funeral, did she?” she said, eventually.

“You know perfectly well she didn’t so why ask?”

“I was just saying, that’s all.”

“You mean you didn’t come to her funeral because she didn’t come to your father’s? Don’t be so childish, Niki.”

“I’m not being childish. I’m just saying that’s the way it was. She was never a part of our lives — not mine or Dad’s anyway. I never expected her to be at Dad’s funeral.”

I did not reply and we sat silently in our armchairs. Then Niki said:

“It was odd just now, with Mrs Waters. It was almost like you enjoyed it.”

“Enjoyed what?”

“Pretending Keiko was alive.”

“I don’t enjoy deceiving people.” Perhaps I snapped a little, for Niki looked startled.

“No, I suppose not,” she said, lamely.

It rained throughout that night, and the next day — the fourth day of Niki’s stay — it was still raining steadily.

“Do you mind if I change rooms tonight?” Niki said. “I could use the spare bedroom.” We were in the kitchen, washing the dishes after breakfast.

“The spare bedroom?” I laughed a little. “They’re all spare bedrooms now. No, there’s no reason why you shouldn’t sleep in the spare room. Have you taken a dislike to your old room?”

“I feel a bit odd sleeping there.”

“How unkind, Niki. I hoped you’d still feel it was your room.”

“Yes, I do,” she said, hurriedly. “It’s not that I don’t like it.” She fell silent, wiping some knives with a tea-towel. Finally she said: “It’s that other room. Her room. It gives me an odd feeling, that room being right opposite. ”

I stopped what I was doing and looked at her sternly.

“Well, I can’t help it, Mother. I just feel strange thinking about that room being right opposite. ”

“Take the spare room by all means,” I said, coldly. “But you’ll need to make up the bed in there. ”

Although I had made a show of being upset by Niki’s request to change rooms, I had no wish to make it difficult for her to do so. For I too had experienced a disturbing feeling about that room opposite. In many ways, that room is the most pleasant in the house, with a splendid view across the orchard. But it had been Keiko’s fanatically guarded domain for so long, a strange spell seemed to linger there even now, six years after she had left it — a spell that had grown all the stronger now that Keiko was dead.

For the two or three years before she finally left us, Keiko had retreated into that bedroom, shutting us out of her life. She rarely came out, although I would sometimes hear her moving around the house after we had all gone to bed. I surmised that she spent her time reading magazines and listening to her radio. She had no friends, and the rest of us were forbidden entry into her room. At mealtimes I would leave her plate in the kitchen and she would come down to get it, then shut herself in again. The room, I realized, was in a terrible condition. An odour of stale perfume and dirty linen came from within, and on the occasions I had glimpsed inside, I had seen countless glossy magazines lying on the floor amidst heaps of clothes. I had to coax her to put out her laundry, and in this at least we reached an understanding: every few weeks I would find a bag of washing outside her door, which I would wash and return. In the end, the rest of us grew used to her ways, and when by some impulse Keiko ventured down into our living room, we would all feel a great tension. Invariably, these excursions would end with her fighting, with Niki or with my husband, and then she would be back in her room.

I never saw Keiko's room in Manchester, the room in which she died. It may seem morbid of a mother to have such thoughts, but on hearing of her suicide, the first thought that ran through my mind — before I registered even the shock — was to wonder how long she had been there like that before they had found her. She had lived amidst her own family without being seen for days on end; little hope she would be discovered quickly in a strange city where no one knew her. Later, the coroner said she had been there “for several days”. It was the landlady who had opened the door, thinking Keiko had left without paying the rent.

I have found myself continually bringing to mind that picture — of my daughter hanging in her room for days on end. The horror of that image has never diminished, but it has long ceased to be a morbid matter; as with a wound on one's own body, it is possible to develop an intimacy with the most disturbing of things.

“I'll probably be warmer in the spare room anyhow,” Niki said.

“If you're cold at night, Niki, you can simply turn up the heating.”

“I suppose so.” She gave a sigh. “I haven't slept very well lately. I think I'm getting bad dreams, but I can never remember them properly once I wake up.”

“I had a dream last night,” I said.

“I think it might be to do with the quiet. I'm not used to it being so quiet at night.”

“I dreamt about that little girl. The one we were watching yesterday. The little girl in the park.”

“I can sleep right through traffic, but I've forgotten what it's like, sleeping in the quiet.” Niki shrugged and dropped some cutlery into the drawer. "Perhaps I'll sleep better in the spare room."

The fact that I mentioned my dream to Niki, that first time I had it, indicates perhaps that I had doubts even then as to its innocence. I must have suspected from the start — without fully knowing why — that the dream had to do not so much with the little girl we had watched, but with my having remembered Sachiko two days previously.

Chapter Four

I was in the kitchen one afternoon preparing the supper before my husband came home from work, when I heard a strange sound coming from the living room. I stopped what I was doing and listened. It came again — the sound of a violin being played very badly. The noises continued for a few minutes then stopped.

When eventually I went into the living room, I found Ogata-San bowed over a chess-board. The late afternoon sun was streaming in and despite the electric fans a humidity had set in all around the apartment. I opened the windows a little wider.

“Didn’t you finish your game last night?” I asked, coming over to him.

“No, Jiro claimed he was too tired. A ploy on his part, I suspect. You see, I have him in a nice corner here.”

“I see.”

“He’s relying on the fact that my memory’s so foggy these days. So I’m just going over my strategy again.”

“How resourceful of you, Father. But I doubt if Jiro’s mind works quite so cunningly.”

“Perhaps not. I dare say you know him better than I do these days.” Ogata-San continued to study the board for several moments, then looked up and laughed. “This must seem amusing to you. Jiro sweating away in his office and here I am preparing a game of chess for when he comes home. I feel like a small child waiting for his father.”

“Well, I’d much rather you occupied yourself with chess. Your musical recital earlier was hideous.”

“How disrespectful. And I thought you’d be moved, Etsuko.”

The violin was on the floor nearby, put back in its case. Ogata-San watched me as I began opening the case.

“I noticed it up there on the shelf,” he said. “I took the liberty of bringing it down. Don’t look so concerned, Etsuko. I was very gentle with it.”

“I can’t be sure. As you say, Father’s like a child these days.” I held up the violin and examined it. “Except small children can’t reach up to high shelves.”

I tucked the instrument under my chin. Ogata-San continued to watch me.

“Play something for me,” he said. “I’m sure you can do better than me.”

“I’m sure I can.” Once more I held the violin out at arm’s length. “But it’s been such a long time.”

“You mean you haven’t been practising? Now that’s a pity, Etsuko. You used to be so devoted to the instrument.”

“I suppose I was once. But I hardly touch it now.”

“A great shame, Etsuko. And you were so devoted. I remember when you used to play in the dead of night and wake up the house.”

“Wake up the house? When did I do that?”

“Yes, I remember. When you first came to stay with us.” Ogata-San gave a laugh. “Don’t look so worried, Etsuko. We all forgave you. Now let me see, who was the composer you used to admire so much? Was it Mendelssohn?”

“Is that true? I woke up the house?”

“Don’t look so worried, Etsuko. It was years ago. Play me something by Mendelssohn.”

“But why didn’t you stop me?”

“It was only for the first few nights. And besides, we didn’t mind in the least.”

I plucked the strings lightly. The violin was out of tune.

“I must have been such a burden to you in those days,” I said, quietly.

“Nonsense.”

“But the rest of the family. They must have thought I was a mad girl.”

“They couldn’t have thought too badly of you. After all, it ended up with you marrying Jiro. Now come on, Etsuko, enough of this. Play me something.”

“What was I like in those days, Father? Was I like a mad person?”

“You were very shocked, which was only to be expected. We were all shocked, those of us who were left. Now, Etsuko, let’s forget these things. I’m sorry I ever brought up the matter.”

I brought the instrument up to my chin once more.

“Ah,” he said, “Mendelssohn.”

I remained like that for several seconds, the violin under my chin. Then I brought it down to my lap and sighed.

“I hardly play it now,” I said.

“I’m sorry, Etsuko.” Ogata-San’s voice had become solemn. “Perhaps I shouldn’t have touched it.”

I looked up at him and smiled. “So,” I said, “the little child is feeling guilty now.”

“It’s just that I saw it up there and I remembered it from those days.”

“I’ll play it for you another time. After I’ve practised a little.”

He gave me a small bow, and the smile returned to his eyes.

"I'll remember you promised, Etsuko. And perhaps you could teach me a little."

"I can't teach you everything, Father. You said you wanted to learn to cook."

"Ah yes. That too."

"I'll play for you the next time you come to stay with us."

"I'll remember you promised," he said.

After supper that evening, Jiro and his father settled down to their game of chess. I cleared up the supper things and then sat down with some sewing. At one point during their game, Ogata-San said:

"I've just noticed something. If you don't mind, I'd like to make that move again."

"Certainly," said Jiro.

"But then it's rather unfair on you. Especially since I seem to have the better of you at the moment."

"No, not at all. Please take the move again."

"You don't mind?"

"Not at all."

They played on in silence.

"Jiro," Ogata-San said after several minutes, "I was just wondering. Have you written that letter yet? To Shigeo Matsuda?"

I looked up from my sewing. Jiro appeared absorbed in the game and did not reply until he had moved his piece.

“Shigeo? Well, not yet. I’ve been meaning to. But I’ve been so busy just recently.”

“Of course. I quite understand. I just happened to think of it, that’s all.”

“I don’t seem to have had much time just recently.”

“Of course. There’s no hurry. I don’t mean to keep pestering you like this. It’s just that it might be more appropriate if he heard from you fairly soon. It’s a few weeks now since his article appeared.”

“Yes, certainly. You’re quite right.”

They returned to their game. For some moments neither of them spoke. Then Ogata-San said:

“How do you suppose he’ll react?”

“Shigeo? I don’t know. As I say, I don’t know him very well these days.”

“He’s joined the Communist Party, you say?”

“I’m not certain. He certainly expressed such sympathies when I last saw him.”

“A great pity. But then there are so many things in Japan today to sway a young man.”

“Yes, no doubt.”

“So many young men these days get carried away with ideas and theories. But perhaps he’ll back down and apologize. There’s nothing like a timely reminder of one’s personal obligations. You know, I suspect Shigeo never even stopped to consider what he was doing. I think he wrote that article with a pen in one hand and his books about communism in the other. He may well back down in the end.”

“Quite possibly. I’ve just had so much work recently.”

“Of course, of course. Your work must take precedence. Please don’t worry about it. Now, was it my move?”

They continued their game, speaking little. Once I heard Ogata-San say: "You're moving just as I anticipated. You'll need to be very clever to escape from that corner."

They had been playing for sometime when there was a knock at the door. Jiro looked up and threw me a glance. I put down my sewing and got to my feet.

When I opened the door, I found two men grinning and bowing at me. It was quite late by then and I thought at first they had come to the wrong apartment. But then I recognized them as two of Jiro's colleagues and asked them in. They stood in the entryway giggling to themselves. One was a tubby little man whose face looked quite flushed. His companion was thinner, with a pale complexion like that of a European; but it seemed he too had been drinking, for pink blotches had appeared on each of his cheeks. They were both wearing ties, loosened untidily, and were holding jackets over their arms.

Jiro seemed pleased to see them and called to them to sit down. But they remained in the entryway, giggling.

"Ah, Ogata," the pale-faced man said to Jiro, "perhaps we've caught you at a bad time."

"Not at all. What are you doing in these parts anyway?"

"We've been to see Murasaki's brother. In fact, we haven't been home yet."

"We came to disturb you because we're afraid to go home," the tubby man put in. "We didn't tell our wives we'd be late."

"What rabble you are, the pair of you," said Jiro. "Why don't you take off your shoes and come up here?"

"We've caught you at a bad time," the pale-faced man said again. "I can see you've got a visitor." He grinned and bowed towards Ogata-San.

“This is my father, but how can I introduce you if you don’t come in?”

The visitors finally took off their shoes and seated themselves. Jiro introduced them to his father and they began once more to bow and giggle.

“You gentlemen are from Jiro’s firm?” Ogata-San asked.

“Yes, indeed,” the tubby man replied. “A great honour it is too, even if he does give us a tough time. We call your son ‘Pharaoh’ in the office because he urges the rest of us to work like slaves while he does nothing himself.”

“What nonsense,” said my husband.

“It’s true. He orders us around like we’re his dogsbodies. Then he sits down and reads the newspaper.”

Ogata-San seemed a little confused, but seeing the others laugh he joined in.

“And what’s this here?” The pale-faced man indicated the chess-board. “You see, I knew we’d interrupted something.”

“We were just playing chess to pass the time,” said Jiro.

“Go on playing then. Don’t let rabble like us interrupt.”

“Don’t be silly. How could I concentrate with idiots like you around.” Jiro pushed away the chess-board. One or two of the pieces fell over and he stood them up again without looking at the squares. “So. You’ve been to see Murasaki’s brother. Etsuko, get some tea for the gentlemen.” My husband had said this despite the fact that I was already on my way to the kitchen. But then the tubby man started to wave his hand frantically.

“Madam, madam, sit down. Please. We’ll be going in just a moment. Please be seated.”

"It's no trouble," I said, smiling.

"No, madam, I implore you" — he had started to shout quite loudly — "We're just rabble, like your husband says. Please don't make a fuss, please sit down."

I was about to obey him, but then I saw Jiro give me an angry look.

"At least have some tea with us," I said. "It's no trouble at all."

"Now you've sat down, you may as well stay a while," my husband said to the visitors. "Anyway, I want to know about Murasaki's brother. Is he as mad as they say he is?"

"He's a character all right," the tubby man said, with a laugh. "We certainly weren't disappointed. And did anyone tell you about his wife?"

I bowed and made my way into the kitchen unnoticed. I prepared the tea and put on to a plate some cakes I had been making earlier that day. I could hear laughter coming from the living room, my husband's voice amongst them. One of the visitors was calling him "Pharaoh" again in a loud voice. When I returned to the living room, Jiro and his visitors seemed in high spirits. The tubby man was relating an anecdote, about some cabinet minister's encounter with General MacArthur. I put the cakes near them, poured out their tea, then sat down beside Ogata-San. Jiro's friends made several more jokes concerning politicians and then the pale-faced man pretended to be offended because his companion had spoken disparagingly of some personage he admired. He kept a straight face while the others teased him.

"By the way, Hanada," my husband said to him. "I heard an interesting story the other day at the office. I was told during the last elections, you threatened to beat your wife with a golf club because she wouldn't vote the way you wanted."

"Where did you pick up this rubbish?"

"I got it from reliable sources."

"That's right," the tubby man said. "And your wife was going to call the police to report political intimidation."

"What rubbish. Besides, I don't have golf clubs any more. I sold them all last year."

"You still have that seven-iron," said the tubby man. "I saw it in your apartment last week. Maybe you used that."

"But you can't deny it, can you, Hanada?" said Jiro.

"It's nonsense about the golf club."

"But it's true you couldn't get her to obey you."

The pale-faced man shrugged. "Well, it's her personal right to vote any way she pleases."

"Then why did you threaten her?" his friend asked.

"I was trying to make her see sense, of course. My wife votes for Yoshida just because he looks like her uncle. That's typical of women. They don't understand politics. They think they can choose the country's leaders the same way they choose dresses."

"So you gave her a seven-iron," said Jiro.

"Is that really true?" Ogata-San asked. He had not spoken since I had come back in with the tea. The other three stopped laughing and the pale-faced man looked at Ogata-San with a surprised expression.

"Well, no." He became suddenly formal and gave a small bow. "I didn't actually hit her."

"No, no," said Ogata-San. "I meant your wife and yourself — you voted for separate parties?"

“Well, yes.” He shrugged, then giggled awkwardly.
“What could I do?”

“I’m sorry. I didn’t mean to pry.” Ogata-San gave a low bow, and the pale-faced man returned it. As if the bowing were a signal, the three younger men started once more to laugh and talk amongst themselves. They moved off politics and began discussing various members of their firm. When I was pouring more tea, I noticed that the cakes, despite my having put out a generous amount, had almost all disappeared. I finished refilling their teacups, then sat down again beside Ogata-San.

The visitors stayed for an hour or so. Jiro saw them to the door then sat down again with a sigh. “It’s getting late,” he said. “I’ll need to turn in soon.”

Ogata-San was examining the chess board. “I think the pieces got jogged a little,” he said. “I’m sure the horse was on this square, not that one.”

“Quite probably.”

“I’ll put it here then. Are we agreed on this?”

“Yes, yes, I’m sure you’re right. We’ll have to finish the game another time, Father. I’ll need to retire very shortly.”

“How about playing just the next few moves. We may well finish it off.”

“Really, I’d rather not. I’m feeling very tired now.”

“Of course.”

I packed away the sewing I had been doing earlier in the evening and sat waiting for the others to retire. Jiro, however, picked up a newspaper and started to read the back page. Then he took the last remaining cake from the plate and began to eat nonchalantly. After several moments, Ogata-San said:

“Perhaps we ought to just finish it off now. It’ll only take a few more moves.”

“Father, I really am too tired now. I have work to go to in the morning.”

“Yes, of course.”

Jiro went back to his newspapers. He continued to eat the cake and I watched several crumbs drop on to the tatami. Ogata-San continued to gaze at the chess-board for some time.

“Quite extraordinary”, he said, eventually, “what your friend was saying.”

“Oh? What was that?” Jiro did not look up from his newspaper.

“About him and his wife voting for different parties. A few years ago that would have been unthinkable.”

“No doubt.”

“Quite extraordinary the things that happen now. But that’s what’s meant by democracy, I suppose.” Ogata-San gave a sigh. “These things we’ve learnt so eagerly from the Americans, they aren’t always to the good.”

“No, indeed they’re not.”

“Look what happens. Husband and wife voting for different parties. It’s a sad state of affairs when a wife can’t be relied on in such matters any more.”

Jiro continued to read his newspaper. “Yes, it’s regrettable,” he said.

“A wife these days feels no sense of loyalty towards the household. She just does what she pleases, votes for a different party if the whim takes her. That’s so typical of the way things have gone in Japan. All in the name of democracy people abandon obligations. ”

Jiro looked up at his father for a brief moment, then turned his eyes back to his paper. “No doubt you’re very right,” he said. “But surely the Americans didn’t bring all bad. ”

“The Americans, they never understood the way things were in Japan. Not for one moment have they understood. Their ways may be fine for Americans, but in Japan things are different, very different.” Ogata-San sighed again.

“Discipline, loyalty, such things held Japan together once. That may sound fanciful, but it’s true. People were bound by a sense of duty. Towards one’s family, towards superiors, towards the country. But now instead there’s all this talk of democracy. You hear it whenever people want to be selfish, whenever they want to forget obligations. ”

“Yes, no doubt you’re right. ” Jiro yawned and scratched the side of his face.

“Take what happened in my profession, for instance. Here was a system we’d nurtured and cherished for years. The Americans came and stripped it, tore it down without a thought. They decided our schools would be like American schools, the children should learn what American children learn. And the Japanese welcomed it all. Welcomed it with a lot of talk about democracy” — he shook his head — “Many fine things were destroyed in our schools. ”

“Yes, I’m sure that’s very true. ” Jiro glanced up once more. “But surely there were some faults in the old system, in schools as much as anywhere. ”

“Jiro, what is this? Something you read somewhere? ”

“Did you read that in your newspaper? I devoted my life to the teaching of the young. And then I watched the Americans tear it all down. Quite extraordinary what goes on in schools now, the way children are taught to behave. Extraordinary. And so much just isn't taught any more. Do you know, children leave school today knowing nothing about the history of their own country? ”

“That may be a pity, admittedly. But then I remember some odd things from my schooldays. I remember being taught all about how Japan was created by the gods, for instance. How we as a nation were divine and supreme. We had to memorize the text book word for word. Some things aren't such a loss, perhaps. ”

“But Jiro, things aren't as simple as that. You clearly don't understand how such things worked. Things aren't nearly as simple as you presume. We devoted ourselves to ensuring that proper qualities were handed down, that children grew up with the correct attitude to their country, to their fellows. There was a spirit in Japan once, it bound us all together. Just imagine what it must be like being a young boy today. He's taught no values at school — except perhaps that he should selfishly demand whatever he wants out of life. He goes home and finds his parents fighting because his mother refuses to vote for his father's party. What a state of affairs. ”

“Yes, I see your point. Now, Father, I'm sorry but I must go to bed. ”

“We did our best, men like Endo and I, we did our best to nurture what was good in the country. A lot of good has been destroyed. ”

“It's most regrettable. ” My husband got to his feet. “Excuse me, Father, but I must sleep. I have another busy day tomorrow. ”

Ogata-San looked up at his son, a somewhat surprised expression on his face. “Why, of course. How inconsiderate of me to have kept you so late. ” He gave a small bow.

“Not at all. I’m sorry we can’t talk longer, but I really ought to get some sleep now.”

“Why, of course.”

Jiro wished his father a good night’s sleep and left the room. For a few seconds, Ogata-San gazed at the door through which Jiro had disappeared as if he expected his son to return at any moment. Then he turned to me with a troubled look.

“I didn’t realize how late it was,” he said. “I didn’t mean to keep Jiro up.”

Chapter Five

“Gone? And had he left you no message at his hotel?”

Sachiko laughed. “You look so astonished, Etsuko,” she said. “No, he’d left nothing. He’d gone yesterday morning, that’s all they knew. To tell you the truth, I half expected this.”

I realized I was still holding the tray. I laid it down carefully then seated myself on a cushion opposite Sachiko. There was a pleasant breeze blowing through the apartment that morning.

“But how terrible for you,” I said. “And you were waiting with everything packed and ready.”

“This is nothing new to me, Etsuko. Back in Tokyo — that’s where I first met him, you see — back in Tokyo, it was just the same thing. Oh no, this is nothing new to me. I’ve learnt to expect such things.”

“And you say you’re going back into town tonight? On your own?”

“Don’t look so shocked, Etsuko. After Tokyo, Nagasaki seems a tame little town. If he’s still in Nagasaki, I’ll find him tonight. He may change his hotel, but he won’t have changed his habits.”

“But this is all so distressing. If you wish, I’d be glad to come and sit with Mariko until you get back.”

“Why, how kind of you. Mariko’s quite capable of being left on her own, but if you’re prepared to spend a couple of hours with her tonight, that would be most kind. But I’m sure this whole thing will sort itself out, Etsuko. You see, when you’ve come through some of the things I have, you learn not to let small set-backs like this worry you.”

“But what if he’s ... I mean, what if he’s left Nagasaki altogether?”

“Oh, he hasn’t gone far, Etsuko. Besides, if he really meant to leave me, he would have left a note of some kind, wouldn’t he? You see, he hasn’t gone far. He knows I’ll come and find him.”

Sachiko looked at me and smiled. I found myself at a loss for any reply.

“Besides, Etsuko,” she went on, “he did come all the way down here. He came down all this way to Nagasaki to find me at my uncle’s house, all that way from Tokyo. Now why would he have done that if he didn’t mean everything he’s promised? You see, Etsuko, what he wants most is to take me to America. That’s what he wants. Nothing’s changed really, this is just a slight delay.” She gave a quick laugh. “Sometimes, you see, he’s like a little child.”

“But what do you think your friend means by going off like this? I don’t understand.”

“There’s nothing to understand, Etsuko, it hardly matters. What he really wants is to take me to America and lead a steady respectable life there. That’s what he really wants. Otherwise why would he have come all that way and found me at my uncle’s house? You see, Etsuko, this isn’t anything to be so worried about.”

“No, I’m sure it isn’t.”

Sachiko seemed about to speak again, but then appeared to stop herself. She stared down at the tea things on the tray.

“Well then, Etsuko,” she said, with a smile, “let’s pour the tea.”

She watched in silence as I poured. Once when I glanced quickly towards her, she smiled as if to encourage me. I finished pouring the tea and for a moment or two we sat there quietly.

“Incidentally, Etsuko,” Sachiko said, “I take it you’ve spoken to Mrs Fujiwara and explained my position to her.”

“Yes. I saw her the day before yesterday.”

“I suppose she’d been wondering what had become of me.”

“I explained to her that you’d been called away to America. She was perfectly understanding about it.”

“You see, Etsuko,” said Sachiko, “I find myself in a difficult situation now.”

“Yes, I can appreciate that.”

“As regards finances, as well as everything else.”

“Yes, I see,” I said, with a small bow. “If you wish, I could certainly talk to Mrs Fujiwara. I’m sure under the circumstances she’d be happy to ...”

“No, no, Etsuko” — Sachiko gave a laugh — “I’ve no desire to return to her little noodle shop. I fully expect to be leaving for America in the near future. It’s merely a case of things being delayed a little, that’s all. But in the meantime, you see, I’ll need a little money. And I was just remembering, Etsuko, how you once offered to assist me in that respect.”

She was looking at me with a kindly smile. I looked back at her for a few moments. Then I bowed and said:

“I have some savings of my own. Not a great deal, but I’d be glad to do what I can.”

Sachiko bowed gracefully, then lifted her teacup. “I won’t embarrass you”, she said, “by naming any particular sum. That, of course, is entirely up to you. I’ll gratefully accept whatever you feel is appropriate. Of course, the loan will be returned in due course, you can rest assured of that, Etsuko.”

“Naturally,” I said, quietly. “I had no doubts on that.”

Sachiko continued to regard me with her kindly smile. I excused myself and left the room.

In the bedroom, the sun was streaming in, revealing all the dust in the air. I knelt beside a set of small drawers at the foot of our cupboard. From the lowest drawer I removed various items — photograph albums, greeting cards, a folder of water-colours my mother had painted — laying them carefully on the floor beside me. At the bottom of the drawer was the black lacquer gift-box. Lifting the lid, I found the several letters I had preserved — unknown to my husband — together with two or three small photographs. From beneath these, I took out the envelope containing my money. I carefully put back everything as it had been and closed the drawer. Before leaving the room, I opened the wardrobe, chose a silk scarf of a suitably discreet pattern, and wrapped it around the envelope.

When I returned to the living room, Sachiko was refilling her teacup. She did not look up at me, and when I laid the folded scarf on the floor beside her, she carried on pouring the tea without glancing at it. She gave me a nod as I sat down, then began to sip from her cup. Only once, as she was lowering her teacup, did she cast a quick sideways glance at the bundle beside her cushion.

“There’s something you don’t seem to understand, Etsuko,” she said. “You see, I’m not ashamed or embarrassed about anything I’ve done. You can feel free to ask whatever you like.”

“Yes, of course.”

“For instance, Etsuko, why is it you never ask me anything about ‘my friend’, as you insist on calling him? There really isn’t anything to get embarrassed about. Why, Etsuko, you’re beginning to blush already.”

“I assure you I’m not getting embarrassed. In fact ...”

“But you are, Etsuko, I can see you are.” Sachiko gave a laugh and clapped her hands together. “But why can’t you understand I’ve nothing to hide, I’ve nothing to be ashamed of? Why are you blushing like this? Just because I mentioned Frank?”

“But I’m not embarrassed. And I assure you I’ve never assumed anything ...”

“Why do you never ask me about him, Etsuko? There must be all sorts of questions you’d like to ask. So why don’t you ask them? After all, everybody else in the neighbourhood seems interested enough, you must be too, Etsuko. So please feel free, ask me anything you like.”

“But really, I ...”

“Come on, Etsuko, I insist. Ask me about him. I do want you to. Ask me about him, Etsuko.”

“Very well then.”

“Well? Go on, Etsuko, ask.”

“Very well. What does he look like, your friend?”

“What does he look like?” Sachiko laughed again. “Is that all you wish to know? Well, he’s tall like most of these foreigners, and his hair’s going a little thin. He’s not old, you understand. Foreigners go bald more easily, did you know that, Etsuko? Now ask me something else about him. There must be other things you want to know.”

“Well, quite honestly ...”

“Come on, Etsuko, ask. I want you to ask.”

“But really, there’s nothing I wish to ...”

“But there must be, why won’t you ask? Ask me about him, Etsuko, ask me.”

“Well, in fact,” I said, “I did wonder about one thing.” Sachiko seemed to suddenly freeze. She had been holding her hands together in front of her, but now she lowered them and placed them back on her lap.

“I did wonder”, I said, “if he spoke Japanese at all.” For a moment, Sachiko said nothing. Then she smiled and her manner seemed to relax. She lifted her teacup again and took several sips. Then when she spoke again, her voice sounded almost dreamy.

“Foreigners have so much trouble with our language,” she said. She paused and smiled to herself. “Frank’s Japanese is quite terrible, so we converse in English. Do you know English at all, Etsuko? Not at all? You see, my father used to speak good English. He had connections in Europe and he always used to encourage me to study the language. But then of course, when I married, I stopped learning. My husband forbade it. He took away all my English books. But I didn’t forget it. When I met foreigners in Tokyo, it came back to me.”

We sat in silence for a little while. Then Sachiko gave a tired sigh.

“I suppose I’d better get back fairly soon,” she said. She reached down and picked up the folded scarf. Then without inspecting it, she dropped it into her handbag.

“You won’t have a little more tea?” I asked.

She shrugged. “Just a little more perhaps.”

I refilled the cups. Sachiko watched me, then said: “If it’s inconvenient — about tonight, I mean — it wouldn’t matter at all. Mariko should be capable of being left on her own by now.”

“You’re very kind, Etsuko,” Sachiko said, in a flat tone. Then she said: “I should warn you, perhaps. My daughter has been in a somewhat difficult mood these past few days. ”

“That’s all right,” I said, smiling. “I’ll need to get used to children in every kind of mood. ”

Sachiko went on drinking her tea slowly. She seemed in no hurry to be returning. Then she put down her teacup and for some moments sat examining the back of her hands.

“I know it was a terrible thing that happened here in Nagasaki,” she said, finally. “But it was bad in Tokyo too. Week after week it went on, it was very bad. Towards the end we were all living in tunnels and derelict buildings and there was nothing but rubble. Everyone who lived in Tokyo saw unpleasant things. And Mariko did too.” She continued to gaze at the back of her hands.

“Yes,” I said. “It must have been a very difficult time. ”

“This woman. This woman you’ve heard Mariko talk about. That was something Mariko saw in Tokyo. She saw other things in Tokyo, some terrible things, but she’s always remembered that woman.” She turned over her hands and looked at the palms looking from one to the other as if to compare them.

“And this woman,” I said. “She was killed in an air-raid?”

“She killed herself. They said she cut her throat. I never knew her. You see, Mariko went running off one morning. I can’t remember why, perhaps she was upset about something. Anyway she went running off out into the streets, so I went chasing after her. It was very early, there was nobody about. Mariko ran down an alleyway, and I followed after her. There was a canal at the end and the woman was kneeling there, up to her elbows in water. A young woman, very thin. I knew something was wrong as soon as I saw her. You see, Etsuko, she turned round and smiled at Mariko. I knew something was wrong and Mariko must have done too because she stopped running. At first I thought the woman was blind, she had that kind of look, her eyes didn't seem to actually see anything. Well, she brought her arms out of the canal and showed us what she'd been holding under the water. It was a baby. I took hold of Mariko then and we came out of the alley. "

I remained silent, waiting for her to continue. Sachiko helped herself to more tea from the pot.

"As I say," she said, "I heard the woman killed herself. That was a few days afterwards. "

"How old was Mariko then? "

"Five, almost six. She saw other things in Tokyo. But she always remembers that woman. "

"She saw everything? She saw the baby? "

"Yes. Actually, for a long time I thought she hadn't understood what she'd seen. She didn't talk about it afterwards. She didn't even seem particularly upset at the time. She didn't start talking about it until a month or so later. We were sleeping in this old building then. I woke up in the night and saw Mariko sitting up, staring at the doorway. There wasn't a door, it was just this doorway, and Mariko was sitting up looking at it. I was quite alarmed. You see, there was nothing to stop anyone walking into the building. I asked Mariko what was wrong and she said a woman had been standing there watching us. I asked what sort of woman and Mariko said it was the one we'd seen that morning. Watching us from the doorway. I got up and looked around but there wasn't anyone there. It's quite possible, of course, that some woman was standing there. There was nothing to stop anyone stepping inside. "

"I see. And Mariko mistook her for the woman you'd seen. "

"I expect that's what happened. In any case, that's when it started, Mariko's obsession with that woman. I thought she'd grown out of it, but just recently it's started again. If she starts to talk about it tonight, please don't pay her any attention. "

"Yes, I see. "

"You know how it is with children," said Sachiko. "They play at make-believe and they get confused where their fantasies begin and end. "

"Yes, I suppose it's nothing unusual really. "

"You see, Etsuko, things were very difficult when Mariko was born. "

"Yes, they must have been," I said. "I'm very fortunate, I know. "

"Things were very difficult. Perhaps it was foolish to have married when I did. After all, everyone could see a war was coming. But then again, Etsuko, no one knew what a war was really like, not in those days. I married into a highly respected family. I never thought a war could change things so much. "

Sachiko put down her teacup and passed a hand through her hair. Then she smiled quickly. "As regards tonight, Etsuko," she said, "my daughter is quite capable of amusing herself. So please don't bother too much with her. "

Mrs Fujiwara's face often grew weary when she talked about her son.

"He's becoming an old man," she was saying. "Soon he'll have only the old maids to choose from. "

We were sitting in the forecourt of her noodle shop. Several tables were occupied by office-workers having their lunch.

"Poor Kazuo-San," I said, with a laugh. "But I can understand how he feels. It was so sad about Miss Michiko. And they were engaged for a long time, weren't they? "

"Three years. I never saw the point in these long engagements. Yes, Michiko was a nice girl. I'm sure she'd be the first to agree with me about Kazuo mourning her like this. She would have wanted him to continue with his life."

"It must be difficult for him though. To have built up plans for so long only for things to end like that."

"But that's all in the past now," said Mrs Fujiwara. "We've all had to put things behind us. You too, Etsuko, I remember you were very heartbroken once. But you managed to carry on."

"Yes, but I was fortunate. Ogata-San was very kind to me in those days. I don't know what would have become of me otherwise."

"Yes, he was very kind to you. And of course, that's how you met your husband. But you deserved to be fortunate."

"I really don't know where I'd be today if Ogata-San hadn't taken me in. But I can understand how difficult it must be — for your son, I mean. Even me I still think about Nakamura-San sometimes. I can't help it. Sometimes I wake up and forget. I think I'm still back here, here in Nakagawa ..."

"Now, Etsuko, that's no way to talk." Mrs Fujiwara looked at me for some moments, then gave a sigh. "But it happens to me too. Like you say, in the mornings, just as you wake, it can catch you unawares. I often wake up thinking I'll have to hurry and get breakfast ready for them all."

We fell silent for a moment. Then Mrs Fujiwara laughed a little.

"You're very bad, Etsuko," she said. "See, you've got me talking like this now."

"It's very foolish of me," I said. "In any case, Nakamura-San and I, there was never anything between us. I mean, nothing had been decided."

Mrs Fujiwara went on looking at me, nodding to some private train of thought. Then across the forecourt a customer stood up, ready to leave.

I watched Mrs Fujiwara go over to him, a neat young man in shirt-sleeves. They bowed to each other and began chatting cheerfully. The man made some remark as he buttoned his briefcase and Mrs Fujiwara laughed heartily. They exchanged bows once more, then he disappeared into the afternoon rush. I was grateful for the opportunity to compose my emotions. When Mrs Fujiwara came back, I said:

“I’d better be leaving you soon. You’re very busy just now. ”

“You just stay there and relax. You’ve only just sat down. I’ll get you some lunch. ”

“No, that’s all right. ”

“Now, Etsuko, if you don’t eat here, you won’t eat lunch for another hour. You know how important it is for you to eat regularly at this stage. ”

“Yes, I suppose so. ”

Mrs Fujiwara looked at me closely for a moment. Then she said: “You’ve everything to look forward to now, Etsuko. What are you so unhappy about? ”

“Unhappy? But I’m not unhappy in the least. ”

She continued to look at me, and I laughed nervously.

“Once the child comes,” she said, “you’ll be delighted, believe me. And you’ll make a splendid mother, Etsuko. ”

“I hope so. ”

“Of course you will. ”

“Yes. ” I looked up and smiled.

Mrs Fujiwara nodded, then rose to her feet once more.

The inside of Sachiko's cottage had grown increasingly dark — there was only one lantern in the room — and at first I thought Mariko was staring at a black mark on the wall. She reached out a finger and the shape moved a little. Only then did I realize it was a spider.

“Mariko, leave that alone. That's not nice.”

She put both hands behind her back, but went on staring at the spider.

“We used to have a cat once,” she said. “Before we came here. She used to catch spiders.”

“I see. No, leave it alone, Mariko.”

“But it's not poisonous.”

“No, but leave it alone, it's dirty.”

“The cat we used to have, she could eat spiders. What would happen if I ate a spider?”

“I don't know, Mariko.”

“Would I be sick?”

“I don't know.” I went back to the sewing I had brought with me. Mariko continued to watch the spider. Eventually she said: “I know why you came here tonight.”

“I came because it's not nice for little girls to be on their own.”

“It's because of the woman. It's because the woman might come again.”

“Why don't you show me some more drawings? The ones you showed me just now were lovely.”

Mariko did not reply. She moved over to the window and looked out into the darkness.

“Your mother won't be long now,” I said. “Why don't you show me some more drawings.”

Mariko continued to look into the darkness. Eventually, she returned to the corner where she had been sitting before the spider had attracted her attention.

“How did you spend your day today, Mariko?” I asked.
“Did you do any drawing?”

“I played with Atsu and Mee-Chan.”

“That’s nice. And where do they live? Are they from the apartments?”

“That’s Atsu” — she pointed to one of the small black kittens beside her — “and that’s Mee-Chan.”

I laughed. “Oh, I see. They’re lovely little kittens, aren’t they? But don’t you ever play with other children? The children from the apartments?”

“I play with Atsu and Mee-Chan.”

“But you should try and make friends with the other children. I’m sure they’re all very nice.”

“They stole Suji-Chan. He was my favourite kitten.”

“They stole him? Oh dear, I wonder why they did that.”

Mariko began stroking a kitten. “I’ve lost Suji-Chan now.”

“Perhaps he’ll turn up soon. I’m sure the children were just playing.”

“They killed him. I’ve lost Suji-Chan now.”

“Oh. I wonder why they did a thing like that.”

“I threw stones at them. Because they said things.”

“Well, you shouldn’t throw stones, Mariko.”

“They said things. About Mother. I threw stones at them and they took Suji-Chan and wouldn’t give him back.”

“Well, you’ve still got your other kittens.”

Mariko moved across the room towards the window again. She was just tall enough to lean her elbows on the ledge. For a few minutes she looked into the darkness, her face close to the pane.

“I want to go out now,” she said, suddenly.

“Go out? But it’s far too late, it’s dark outside. And your mother will be back any time now.”

“But I want to go out.”

“Stay here now, Mariko.”

She continued to look outside. I tried to see what was visible to her; from where I sat I could see only darkness.

“Perhaps you should be kinder to the other children. Then you could make friends with them.”

“I know why Mother asked you to come here.”

“You can’t expect to make friends if you throw stones.”

“It’s because of the woman. It’s because Mother knows about the woman.”

“I don’t understand what you’re talking about, Mariko-San. Tell me more about your kittens. Will you draw more pictures of them when they get bigger?”

“It’s because the woman might come again. That’s why Mother asked you.”

“I don’t think so.”

“Mother’s seen the woman. She saw her the other night.”

I stopped sewing for a second and looked up at Mariko. She had turned away from the window and was gazing at me with a strangely expressionless look.

“Where did your mother see this — this person?”

“Out there. She saw her out there. That’s why she asked you.”

Mariko came away from the window and returned to her kittens. The older cat had appeared and the kittens had curled up to their mother. Mariko lay down beside them and started to whisper. Her whispering had a vaguely disturbing quality.

“Your mother should be home soon,” I said. “I wonder what she can be doing.”

“She was telling me all about Frank-San,” I said. “He sounds a very nice man.”

The whispering noises stopped. We stared at each other for a second.

“He’s a bad man,” Mariko said.

“Now that’s not a nice thing to say, Mariko-San. Your mother told me all about him and he sounds very nice. And I’m sure he’s very kind to you, isn’t he?”

She got to her feet and went to the wall. The spider was still there.

“Yes, I’m sure he’s a nice man. He’s kind to you, isn’t he, Mariko-San?”

Mariko reached forward. The spider moved quite slowly along the wall.

“Mariko, leave that alone.”

“The cat we had in Tokyo, she used to catch spiders. We were going to bring her with us.”

I could see the spider more clearly in its new position. It had thick short legs, each leg casting a shadow on the yellow wall.

“She was a good cat,” Mariko continued. “She was going to come with us to Nagasaki.”

“And did you bring her?”

“She disappeared. The day before we were leaving. Mother promised we could bring her, but she disappeared. ”

“I see. ”

She moved suddenly and caught one of the spider’s legs. The remaining legs crawled frantically around her hand as she brought it away from the wall.

“Mariko, let that go. That’s dirty. ”

Mariko turned over her hand and the spider crawled into her palm. She closed her other hand over it so that it was imprisoned.

“Mariko, put that down. ”

“It’s not poisonous, ” she said, coming closer to me.

“No, but it’s dirty. Put it back in the corner. ”

“It’s not poisonous though. ”

She stood in front of me, the spider inside her cupped hands. Through a gap in her fingers, I could see a leg moving slowly and rhythmically.

“Put it back in the corner, Mariko. ”

“What would happen if I ate it? It’s not poisonous. ”

“You’d be very sick. Now, Mariko, put it back in the corner. ”

Mariko brought the spider closer to her face and parted her lips.

“Don’t be silly, Mariko. That’s very dirty. ”

Her mouth opened wider, and then her hands parted and the spider landed in front of my lap. I started back. The spider sped along the tatami into the shadows behind me. It took me a moment to recover, and by then Mariko had left the cottage.

Chapter Six

I cannot be sure now how long I spent searching for her that night. Quite possibly it was for a considerable time, for I was advanced in my pregnancy by then and careful to avoid hurried movements. Besides, once having come outside, I was finding it strangely peaceful to walk beside the river. Along one section of the bank, the grass had grown very tall. I must have been wearing sandals that night for I can remember distinctly the feel of the grass on my feet. As I walked, there were insects making noises all around me.

Then eventually I became aware of a separate sound, a rustling noise as if a snake were sliding in the grass behind me. I stopped to listen, then realized what had caused it; an old piece of rope had tangled itself around my ankle and I had been dragging it through the grass. I carefully released it from around my foot. When I held it up to the moonlight it felt damp and muddy between my fingers.

“Hello, Mariko,” I said, for she was sitting in the grass a short way in front of me, her knees hunched up to her chin. A willow tree — one of several that grew on the bank — hung over the spot where she sat. I took a few steps towards her until I could make out her face more clearly.

“What’s that?” she asked.

“Nothing. It just tangled on to my foot when I was walking.”

“What is it though?”

“Nothing, just a piece of old rope. Why are you out here?”

“Do you want to take a kitten?”

“A kitten?”

“Mother says we can’t keep the kittens. Do you want one?”

“I don’t think so.”

“But we have to find homes for them soon. Or else Mother says we’ll have to drown them.”

“That would be a pity.”

“You could have Atsu.”

“We’ll have to see.”

“Why have you got that?”

“I told you, it’s nothing. It just caught on to my foot.” I took a step closer. “Why are you doing that, Mariko?”

“Doing what?”

“You were making a strange face just now.”

“I wasn’t making a strange face. Why have you got the rope?”

“You were making a strange face. It was a very strange face.”

“Why have you got the rope?”

I watched her for a moment. Signs of fear were appearing on her face.

“Don’t you want a kitten then?” she asked.

“No, I don’t think so. What’s the matter with you?”

Mariko got to her feet. I came forward until I reached the willow tree. I noticed the cottage a short distance away, the shape of its roof darker than the sky. I could hear Mariko’s footsteps running off into the darkness.

When I reached the door of the cottage, I could hear Sachiko's voice from within, talking angrily. They both turned to me as I came in. Sachiko was standing in the middle of the room, her daughter before her. In the light cast by the lantern, her carefully prepared face had a mask-like quality.

"I fear Mariko's been giving you trouble," she said to me.

"Well, she ran outside ..."

"Say sorry to Etsuko-San." She gripped Mariko's arm roughly.

"I want to go outside again."

"You won't move. Now apologize."

"I want to go outside."

With her free hand, Sachiko slapped the child sharply on the back of her thigh. "Now, apologize to Etsuko-San."

Small tears were appearing in Mariko's eyes. She looked at me briefly, then turned back to her mother. "Why do you always go away?"

Sachiko raised her hand again warningly.

"Why do you always go away with Frank-San?"

"Are you going to say you're sorry?"

"Frank-San pisses like a pig. He's a pig in a sewer."

Sachiko stared at her child, her hand still poised in the air.

"He drinks his own piss."

"Silence."

"He drinks his own piss and he shits in his bed."

Sachiko continued to glare, but remained quite still.

“He drinks his own piss.” Mariko pulled her arm free and walked across the room with an air of nonchalance. At the entryway she turned and stared back at her mother. “He pisses like a pig,” she repeated, then went out into the darkness.

Sachiko stared at the entryway for some moments, apparently oblivious of my presence.

“Shouldn’t someone go after her?” I said, after a while.

Sachiko looked at me and seemed to relax a little. “No,” she said, sitting down. “Leave her.”

“But it’s very late.”

“Leave her. She can come back when she pleases.”

A kettle had been steaming on the open stove for some time. Sachiko took it off the flame and began making tea. I watched her for several moments, then asked quietly:

“Did you find your friend?”

“Yes, Etsuko,” she said. “I found him.” She continued with her tea-making, not looking up at me. Then she said: “It was very kind of you to have come here tonight. I do apologize about Mariko.”

I continued to watch her. Eventually, I said: “What are your plans now?”

“My plans?” Sachiko finished filling the teapot, then poured the remaining water on to the flame. “Etsuko, I’ve told you many times, what is of the utmost importance to me is my daughter’s welfare. That must come before everything else. I’m a mother, after all. I’m not some young saloon girl with no regard for decency. I’m a mother, and my daughter’s interests come first.”

“Of course.”

"I intend to write to my uncle. I'll inform him of my whereabouts and I'll tell him as much as he has a right to know about my present circumstances. Then if he wishes, I'll discuss with him the possibilities of our returning to his house." Sachiko picked up the teapot in both hands and began to shake it gently. "As a matter of fact, Etsuko, I'm rather glad things have turned out like this. Imagine how unsettling it would have been for my daughter, finding herself in a land full of foreigners, a land full of Ame-kos. And suddenly having an Ame-ko for a father, imagine how confusing that would be for her. Do you understand what I'm saying, Etsuko? She's had enough disturbance in her life already, she deserves to be somewhere settled. It's just as well things have turned out this way."

I murmured something in assent.

"Children, Etsuko," she went on, "mean responsibility. You'll discover that yourself soon enough. And that's what he's really scared of, anyone can see that. He's scared of Mariko. Well, that's not acceptable to me, Etsuko. My daughter comes first. It's just as well things have turned out this way." She went on rocking the teapot in her hands.

"This must be very distressing for you," I said, eventually.

"Distressing?" — Sachiko laughed — "Etsuko, do you imagine little things like this distress me? When I was your age, perhaps. But not any more. I've gone through too much over the last few years. In any case, I was expecting this to happen. Oh yes, I'm not surprised at all. I expected this. The last time, in Tokyo, it was much the same. He disappeared and spent all our money, drank it all in three days. A lot of it was my money too. Do you know, Etsuko, I actually worked as a maid in a hotel? Yes, as a maid. But I didn't complain, and we almost had enough, a few more weeks and we could have got a ship to America. But then he drank it all. All those weeks I spent scrubbing floors on my knees and he drank it all up in three days. And now there he is again, in a bar with his worthless saloon girl. How can I place my daughter's future in the hands of a man like that? I'm a mother, and my daughter comes first."

We fell silent again. Sachiko put the teapot down in front of her and stared at it.

"I hope your uncle will prove understanding," I said.

She gave a shrug. "As far as my uncle's concerned, Etsuko, I'll discuss the matter with him. I'm willing to do so for Mariko's sake. If he proves unhelpful, then I'll just find some alternative course. In any case, I've no intention of accompanying some foreign drunkard to America. I'm quite happy he's found some saloon girl to drink with him, I'm sure they deserve one another. But as far as I'm concerned, I'm going to do what's best for Mariko, and that's my decision."

For some time, Sachiko continued to stare at the teapot. Then she sighed and got to her feet. She went over to the window and peered out into the darkness.

"Should we go and look for her now?" I said.

"No," Sachiko said, still looking out. "She'll be back soon. Let her stay out if that's what she wants."

I feel only regret now for those attitudes I displayed towards Keiko. In this country, after all, it is not unexpected that a young woman of that age should wish to leave home. All I succeeded in doing, it would seem, was to ensure that when she finally left — now almost six years ago — she did so severing all her ties with me. But then I never imagined she could so quickly vanish beyond my reach; all I saw was that my daughter, unhappy as she was at home, would find the world outside too much for her. It was for her own protection I opposed her so vehemently.

That morning — the fifth day of Niki's visit — I awoke during the early hours. What occurred to me first was that I could no longer hear the rain as on previous nights and mornings. Then I remembered what had awoken me.

I lay under the covers looking in turn at those objects visible in the pale light. After several minutes, I felt somewhat calmer and closed my eyes again. I did not sleep, however. I thought of the landlady — Keiko's landlady — and how she had finally opened the door of that room in Manchester.

I opened my eyes and once more looked at the objects in the room. Finally I rose and put on my dressing gown. I made my way to the bathroom, taking care not to arouse Niki, asleep in the spare room next to mine. When I came out of the bathroom, I remained standing on the landing for some time. Beyond the staircase, at the far end of the hallway, I could see the door of Keiko's room. The door, as usual, was shut. I went on staring at it, then moved a few steps forward. Eventually, I found myself standing before it. Once, as I stood there, I thought I heard a small sound, some movement from within. I listened for a while but the sound did not come again. I reached forward and opened the door.

Keiko's room looked stark in the greyish light; a bed covered with a single sheet, her white dressing table, and on the floor, several cardboard boxes containing those of her belongings she had not taken with her to Manchester. I stepped further into the room. The curtains had been left open and I could see the orchard below. The sky looked pale and white; it did not appear to be raining. Beneath the window, down on the grass, two birds were pecking at some fallen apples. I started to feel the cold then and returned to my room.

"A friend of mine's writing a poem about you," said Niki. We were eating breakfast in the kitchen.

“About me? Why on earth is she doing that?”

“I was telling her about you and she decided she’d write a poem. She’s a brilliant poet.”

“A poem about me? How absurd. What is there to write about? She doesn’t even know me.”

“I just said, Mother. I told her about you. It’s amazing how well she understands people. She’s been through quite a bit herself, you see.”

“I see. And how old is this friend of yours?”

“Mother, you’re always so obsessed about how old people are. It doesn’t matter how old someone is, it’s what they’ve experienced that counts. People can get to be a hundred and not experience a thing.”

“I suppose so.” I gave a laugh and glanced towards the windows. Outside, it had started to drizzle.

“I was telling her about you,” Niki said. “About you and Dad and how you left Japan. She was really impressed. She appreciates what it must have been like, how it wasn’t quite as easy as it sounds.”

For a moment, I went on gazing at the windows. Then I said quickly: “I’m sure your friend will write a marvellous poem.” I took an apple from the fruit basket and Niki watched as I began to peel it with my knife.

“So many women”, she said, “get stuck with kids and lousy husbands and they’re just miserable. But they can’t pluck up the courage to do a thing about it. They’ll just go on like that for the rest of their lives.”

“I see. So you’re saying they should desert their children, are you, Niki?”

“You know what I mean. It’s pathetic when people just waste away their lives.”

I did not speak, although my daughter paused as if expecting me to do so.

"It couldn't have been easy, what you did, Mother. You ought to be proud of what you did with your life."

I continued to peel the apple. When I had finished, I dried my fingers on the napkin.

"My friends all think so too," said Niki. "The ones I've told anyway."

"I'm very flattered. Please thank your marvellous friends."

"I was just saying, that's all."

"Well, you've made your point quite clearly now."

Perhaps I was unnecessarily curt with her that morning, but then it was presumptuous of Niki to suppose I would need reassuring on such matters. Besides, she has little idea of what actually occurred during those last days in Nagasaki. One supposes she has built up some sort of picture from what her father has told her. Such a picture, inevitably, would have its inaccuracies. For, in truth, despite all the impressive articles he wrote about Japan, my husband never understood the ways of our culture, even less a man like Jiro. I do not claim to recall Jiro with affection, but then he was never the oafish man my husband considered him to be. Jiro worked hard to do his part for the family and he expected me to do mine; in his own terms, he was a dutiful husband. And indeed, for the seven years he knew his daughter, he was a good father to her. Whatever else I convinced myself of during those final days, I never pretended Keiko would not miss him.

But such things are long in the past now and I have no wish to ponder them yet again. My motives for leaving Japan were justifiable, and I know I always kept Keiko's interests very much at heart. There is nothing to be gained in going over such matters again.

I had been pruning the pot plants along the window ledge for some time when I realized how quiet Niki had become. When I turned to her, she was standing in front of the fireplace, looking past me out into the garden. I turned back to the window, trying to follow her gaze; despite the mist on the pane, the garden was still clearly discernible. Niki, it seemed, was gazing over to a spot near the hedge, where the rain and wind had put into disarray the canes which supported the young tomato plants.

“I think the tomatoes are ruined for this year,” I said. “I’ve really rather neglected them.”

I was still looking at the canes when I heard the sound of a drawer being pulled open, and when I turned again, Niki was continuing with her search. She had decided after breakfast to read through all her father’s newspaper articles, and had spent much of the morning going through all the drawers and bookshelves in the house.

For some minutes, I continued working on my pot plants; there were a large number of them, cluttering the window ledge. Behind me, I could hear Niki going through the drawers. Then she became quiet again, and when I turned to her, she was once more gazing past me, out into the garden.

“I think I’ll go and do the goldfish now,” she said.

“The goldfish?”

Without replying, Niki left the room, and a moment later I saw her go striding across the lawn. I wiped away a little mist from the pane and watched her. Niki walked to the far end of the garden, to the fish-pond amidst the rockery. She poured in the feed, and for several seconds remained standing there, gazing into the pond. I could see her figure in profile; she looked very thin, and despite her fashionable clothes there was still something unmistakably childlike about her. I watched the wind disturb her hair and wondered why she had gone outside without a jacket.

On her way back, she stopped beside the tomato plants and in spite of the heavy drizzle stood contemplating them for some time. Then she took a few steps closer and with much care began straightening the canes. She stood up several that had fallen completely, then, crouching down so her knees almost touched the wet grass, adjusted the net I had laid above the soil to protect the plants from marauding birds.

“Thank you, Niki,” I said to her when she came in. “That was very thoughtful of you.”

She muttered something and sat down on the settee. I noticed she had become quite embarrassed.

“I really have been rather neglectful about those tomatoes this year,” I went on. “Still, it doesn’t really matter, I suppose. I never know what to do with so many tomatoes these days. Last year, I gave most of them to the Morrisons.”

“Oh God,” said Niki, “the Morrisons. And how are the dear old Morrisons?”

“Niki, the Morrisons are perfectly kind people. I’ve never understood why you need to be so disparaging. You and Cathy used to be the best of friends once.”

“Oh yes, Cathy. And how’s she these days? Still living at home, I suppose?”

“Well, yes. She works in a bank now.”

“Typical enough.”

“That seems to me a perfectly sensible thing to be doing at her age. And Marilyn’s married now, did you know?”

“Oh yes? And who did she marry?”

"I don't remember what her husband does. I met him once. He seemed very pleasant."

"I expect he's a vicar or something like that."

"Now, Niki, I really don't see why you have to adopt this tone. The Morrisons have always been extremely kind to us."

Niki sighed impatiently. "It's just the way they do things," she said. "It makes me sick. Like the way they've brought up their kids."

"But you've hardly seen the Morrisons in years."

"I saw them often enough when I used to know Cathy. People like that are so hopeless. I suppose I ought to feel sorry for Cathy."

"You're blaming her because she hasn't gone to live in London like you have? I must say, Niki, that doesn't sound like the broadmindedness you and your friends seem so proud of."

"Oh, it doesn't matter. You don't understand what I'm talking about anyway." She glanced towards me, then heaved another sigh. "It doesn't matter," she repeated, looking the other way.

I continued to stare at her for a moment. Eventually, I turned back to the window ledge and for some minutes worked on in silence.

"You know, Niki," I said, after some time, "I'm very pleased you have good friends you enjoy being with. After all, you must lead your own life now. That's only to be expected."

My daughter gave no reply. When I glanced at her, she was reading one of the newspapers she had found in the drawer.

"I'd be interested to meet your friends," I said. "You're always welcome to bring any of them here."

Niki flicked her head to prevent her hair falling across her vision, and continued to read. A look of concentration had appeared on her face.

I went back to my plants, for I could read these signals well enough. There is a certain subtle and yet quiet emphatic manner Niki adopts whenever I display curiosity concerning her life in London; it is her way of telling me I will regret it if I persist. Consequently, my picture of her present life is built largely upon speculation. In her letters, however — and Niki is very good about remembering to write — she mentions certain things she would never touch upon in conversation. That is how I have learnt, for instance, that her boyfriend's name is David and that he is studying politics at one of the London colleges. And yet, during conversation, if I were even to enquire after his health, I know that barrier would come firmly down.

This rather aggressive regard for privacy reminds me very much of her sister. For in truth, my two daughters had much in common, much more than my husband would ever admit. As far as he was concerned, they were complete opposites; furthermore, it became his view that Keiko was a difficult person by nature and there was little we could do for her. In fact, although he never claimed it outright, he would imply that Keiko had inherited her personality from her father. I did little to contradict this, for it was the easy explanation, that Jiro was to blame, not us. Of course, my husband never knew Keiko in her early years; if he had, he may well have recognized how similar the two girls were during their respective early stages. Both had fierce tempers, both were possessive; if they became upset, they would not like other children forget their anger quickly, but would remain moody for most of the day. And yet, one has become a happy, confident young woman — I have every hope for Niki's future — while the other, after becoming increasingly miserable, took her own life. I do not find it as easy as my husband did to put the blame on Nature, or else on Jiro. However, such things are in the past now, and there is little to be gained in going over them here.

“By the way, Mother,” said Niki. “That was you this morning, wasn’t it?”

“This morning?”

“I heard these sounds this morning. Really early, about four o’clock.”

“I’m sorry I disturbed you. Yes, that was me.” I began to laugh. “Why, who else did you imagine it was?” I continued to laugh, and for a moment could not stop. Niki stared at me, her newspaper still held open before her.

“Well, I’m sorry I woke you, Niki,” I said, finally controlling my laughter.

“It’s all right, I was awake anyway. I can’t seem to sleep properly these days.”

“And after all that fuss you made about the rooms. Perhaps you should see a doctor.”

“Maybe I will.” Niki went back to her newspaper.

I laid down the clippers I had been using and turned to her. “You know, it’s strange. I had that dream again this morning.”

“What dream?”

“I was telling you about it yesterday, but I don’t suppose you were listening. I dreamt about that little girl again.”

“What little girl?”

“The one we saw playing on the swing the other day. When we were in the village having coffee.”

Niki shrugged. “Oh, that one,” she said, not looking up.

“Well, actually, it isn’t that little girl at all. That’s what I realized this morning. It seemed to be that little girl, but it wasn’t.”

Niki looked at me again. Then she said: “I suppose you mean it was her. Keiko.”

“Keiko?” I laughed a little. “What a strange idea. Why should it be Keiko? No, it was nothing to do with Keiko.”

Niki continued to look at me uncertainly.

“It was just a little girl I knew once,” I said to her. “A long time ago.”

“Which little girl?”

“No one you know. I knew her a long time ago.”

Niki gave another shrug. “I can’t even get to sleep in the first place. I think I only slept about four hours last night.”

“That’s rather disturbing, Niki. Especially at your age. Perhaps you should see a doctor. You can always go and see Dr Ferguson.”

Niki made another of her impatient gestures and went back to her father’s newspaper article. I watched her for a moment.

“In fact, I realized something else this morning,” I said. “Something else about the dream.”

My daughter did not seem to hear.

“You see,” I said, “the little girl isn’t on a swing at all. It seemed like that at first. But it’s not a swing she’s on.”

Niki murmured something and carried on reading.

PART TWO

Chapter Seven

As the summer grew hotter, the stretch of wasteground outside our apartment block became increasingly unpleasant. Much of the earth lay dried and cracked, while water which had accumulated during the rainy season remained in the deeper ditches and craters. The ground bred all manner of insects, and the mosquitoes in particular seemed everywhere. In the apartments there was the usual complaining, but over the years the anger over the wasteground had become resigned and cynical.

I crossed that ground regularly that summer to reach Sachiko's cottage, and indeed it was a loathsome journey; insects often caught in one's hair, and there were grubs and midges visible amidst the cracked surface. I still remember those journeys vividly, and they — like those misgivings about motherhood, like Ogata-San's visit — serve today to bring a certain distinctness to that summer. And yet in many ways, that summer was much like any other. I spent many moments — as I was to do throughout succeeding years — gazing emptily at the view from my apartment window. On clearer days, I could see far beyond the trees on the opposite bank of the river, a pale outline of hills visible against the clouds. It was not an unpleasant view, and on occasions it brought me a rare sense of relief from the emptiness of those long afternoons I spent in that apartment.

Apart from the matter of the wasteground, there were other topics which preoccupied the neighbourhood that summer. The newspapers were full of talk about the occupation coming to an end and in Tokyo politicians were busy in argument with each other. In the apartments, the issue was discussed frequently enough, but with much the same cynicism as coloured talk concerning the wasteground. Received with more urgency were the reports of the child murders that were alarming Nagasaki at the time. First a boy, then a small girl had been found battered to death. When a third victim, another little girl, had been found hanging from a tree there was near-panic amongst the mothers in the neighbourhood. Understandably, little comfort was taken from the fact that the incidents had taken place on the other side of the city: children became a rare sight around the housing precinct, particularly in the evening hours.

I am not sure to what extent these reports worried Sachiko at the time. Certainly she seemed less inclined to leave Mariko unattended, but then I suspect this had more to do with other developments in her life; she had received a reply from her uncle, expressing his willingness to take her back into his household, and soon after this news, I noticed a change come over Sachiko's attitude to the little girl: she seemed somehow more patient and relaxed with the child.

Sachiko had betrayed much relief about her uncle's letter, and at first I had little reason to doubt she would return to his house. However, as the days went by, my suspicions grew about her intentions. For one thing, I discovered some days after the arrival of the letter that Sachiko had not yet mentioned the matter to Mariko. And then, as the weeks went on, not only did Sachiko make no preparations for moving, she had not, so I discovered, sent a reply to her uncle.

Had Sachiko not been so peculiarly reluctant to talk about her uncle's household, I doubt if it would have occurred to me to ponder such a topic. As it was, I grew curious, and despite Sachiko's reticence I managed to gather certain impressions; for one thing, the uncle was not, it seemed, related by blood, but was a relative of Sachiko's husband; Sachiko had never known him prior to arriving at his house several months earlier. The uncle was wealthy, and since his house was an unusually large one — and his daughter and a housemaid the only other occupants — there had been plenty of room for Sachiko and her little girl.

Indeed, one thing Sachiko did mention more than once was her recollection of how large parts of that house had remained empty and silent.

In particular, I became curious about the uncle's daughter, who I gathered to be an unmarried woman of roughly Sachiko's age. Sachiko would say little about her cousin, but then I do recall one conversation we had around that time. I had by then formed an idea that Sachiko's slowness in returning to her uncle had to do with some tension which existed between herself and the cousin. I must have tentatively put this to Sachiko that morning, for it provoked one of the few occasions upon which she talked explicitly about the time she had spent at her uncle's house. The conversation comes back to me quite vividly; it was one of those dry windless mornings of mid-August, and we were standing on the bridge at the top of our hill, waiting for a tram to take us into the city. I cannot remember where it was we were going that day, or where we had left Mariko — for I recall the child was not with us. Sachiko was gazing out at the view from the bridge, holding up a hand to shield her face from the sun.

"It puzzles me, Etsuko," she said, "how you ever managed to get hold of such an idea. On the contrary, Yasuko and I were the best of friends, and I'm greatly looking forward to seeing her again. I really don't understand how you could have thought otherwise, Etsuko."

"I'm sorry, I must have been mistaken," I said. "For some reason, I supposed you had some reservations about returning there."

"Not at all, Etsuko. When you first met me, it's quite true, I was in the process of considering certain other possibilities. But a mother can't be blamed for considering the different options that arise for her child, can she? It just so happened that for a while there seemed an interesting option open to us. But having given it further consideration, I've now rejected it. That's all there is to it, Etsuko, I've no further interest in these other plans that were suggested to me. I'm glad everything has turned out for the best, and I'm looking forward to returning to my uncle's house. As for Yasuko-San, we have the highest regard for each other. I don't understand what could have made you suppose otherwise, Etsuko. "

"I do apologize. It's just that I thought you once mentioned a quarrel of some kind. "

"A quarrel?" She looked at me for a second, and then a smile spread over her face. "Oh, now I understand what you're referring to. No, Etsuko, that was no quarrel. That was just some trivial tiff we had. What was it about now? You see, I don't even remember, it was so trivial. Oh yes, that's right, we were arguing about which of us should prepare the supper. Yes, really, that's all it was. You see, Etsuko, we used to take it in turns. The housemaid would cook one night, my cousin the next, then it would be my turn. The housemaid was taken ill on one of her nights, and Yasuko and I both wanted to cook. Now you mustn't misunderstand, Etsuko, we generally got on very well. It's just that when you see so much of one person and no one else, things can get out of proportion at times. "

"Yes, I do understand. I'm sorry, I was quite mistaken. "

"You see, Etsuko, when you have a housemaid to do all the little jobs for you, it's surprising how slowly the time goes by. Yasuko and I, we tried to occupy ourselves one way or another, but really there was little to do other than sit and talk all day. All those months we sat in that house together, we hardly saw an outsider the whole time. It's a wonder we didn't really quarrel. Properly, I mean. "

"Yes, it certainly is. I obviously misunderstood you before. "

“Yes, Etsuko, I’m afraid you did. I only happen to remember the incident because it occurred just before we left and I haven’t seen my cousin since. But it’s absurd to call it a quarrel.” She gave a laugh. “In fact, I expect Yasuko’s thinking of it and laughing too.”

Perhaps it was that same morning, we decided that before Sachiko went away, we would go together on a day’s outing somewhere. And indeed, one hot afternoon not long afterwards, I accompanied Sachiko and her daughter to Inasa. Inasa is the hilly area of Nagasaki overlooking the harbour, renowned for its mountain scenery; it was not so far from where we lived — in fact it was the hills of Inasa I could see from my apartment window — but in those days, outings of any sort were rare for me, and the trip to Inasa seemed like a major excursion. I remember I looked forward to it for days; it is, I suppose, one of the better memories I have from those times.

We crossed to Inasa by ferry at the height of the afternoon. Noises from the harbour followed us across the water — the clang of hammers, the whine of machinery, the occasional deep sound from a ship’s horn — but in those days, in Nagasaki, such sounds were not unpleasing; they were the sounds of recovery and they were still capable then of bringing a certain uplifting feeling to one’s spirits.

Once we had crossed the water, the sea-winds seemed to blow more freely and the day no longer felt so stifling. The sounds of the harbour, carried in the wind, still reached us as we sat on a bench in the forecourt of the cable-car station. We were all the more grateful for the breeze, for the forecourt offered scant shelter from the sun; it was simply an open area of concrete which — being peopled that day largely by children and their mothers — resembled a school playground. Over to one side, behind a set of turnstiles, we could see the wooden platforms where the cable-cars came to rest. For some moments we sat mesmerized by the sight of the cable-cars climbing and falling; one car would go rising away into the trees, gradually turning into a small dot against the sky, while its companion came lower, growing larger, until it heaved itself to a halt at the platform. Inside a small hut beside the turnstiles, a man was operating some levers; he wore a cap, and after each car had come down safely, he would lean out and chat to a group of children who had gathered to watch.

The first of our encounters that day with the American woman occurred as a result of our deciding to take the cable-car to the hilltop. Sachiko and her daughter had gone to buy the tickets and for a moment I was left sitting alone on the bench. Then I noticed at the far end of the forecourt a small stall selling sweets and toys. Thinking I would perhaps buy some candy for Mariko, I got to my feet and walked over to it. Two children were there before me, arguing about what to buy. While I waited for them, I noticed among the toys a pair of plastic binoculars. The children continued to quarrel, and I glanced back across the forecourt. Sachiko and Mariko were still standing by the turnstiles; Sachiko seemed to be in conversation with two women.

“Can I be of service, madam?”

The children had gone. Behind the stall was a young man in a neat summer uniform.

“May I try these?” I pointed to the binoculars.

“Certainly, madam. It’s just a toy, but quite effective.”

I put the binoculars to my face and looked towards the hill-slope; they were surprisingly powerful. I turned to the forecourt and found Sachiko and her daughter in the lenses. Sachiko had dressed for the day in a light-coloured kimono tied with an elegant sash — a costume, I suspected, reserved only for special occasions — and she cut a graceful figure amidst the crowd. She was still talking to the two women, one of whom looked like a foreigner.

"A hot day again, madam," the young man said, as I handed him the money. "Are you riding on the cable-car?"

"We're just about to."

"It's a magnificent view. That's a television tower we're building on the top. By next year, the cable-car will go right up to it, right to the top."

"How splendid. Have a nice day, won't you."

"Thank you, madam."

I made my way back across the forecourt with the binoculars. Although at that time I did not understand English, I guessed at once that the foreign woman was American. She was tall, with red wavy hair and glasses which pointed up at the corners. She was addressing Sachiko in a loud voice, and I noted with surprise the ease with which Sachiko replied in English. The other woman was Japanese; she had noticeably plump features, and appeared to be around forty or so. Beside her was a tubby little boy of about eight or nine. I bowed to them as I arrived, wished them a pleasant day, then handed Mariko the binoculars.

"It's just a toy," I said. "But you might be able to see a few things."

Mariko opened the wrapping and examined the binoculars with a serious expression. She looked through them, first around the forecourt, then up at the hill-slope.

"Say thank you, Mariko," Sachiko said.

Mariko continued to look through the binoculars. Then she brought them away from her face and put the plastic strap over her head.

"Thank you, Etsuko-San," she said, a little grudgingly.

The American woman pointed to the binoculars, said something in English and laughed. The binoculars had also attracted the attention of the tubby boy, who previously had been watching the hill-slope and the descending cable-car. He took a few steps towards Mariko, his eyes on the binoculars.

“That was very kind of you, Etsuko,” said Sachiko.

“Not at all. It’s just a toy.”

The cable-car arrived and we went through the turnstiles, on to the hollow wooden boards. The two women and the tubby boy, it seemed, were to be the only other passengers. The man with the cap came out of his hut and ushered us one by one into the car. The interior looked stark and metallic. There were large windows on all sides and benches ran along the two larger walls.

The car remained at the platform for several more minutes and the tubby boy began to walk around impatiently. Beside me, Mariko was looking out of the window, her knees up on the bench. From our side of the car, we could see the forecourt and the gathering of young spectators at the turnstiles. Mariko seemed to be testing the effectiveness of her binoculars, holding them to her eyes one moment, taking them away the next. Then the tubby boy came and knelt on the bench beside her. For a little while, the two children ignored each other. Finally, the boy said:

“I want to have a look now.” He held out his hand for the binoculars. Mariko looked at him coldly.

“Akira, don’t ask like that,” said his mother. “Ask the little lady nicely.”

The boy took his hand away and looked at Mariko. The little girl stared back. The boy turned and went to another window.

The children at the turnstiles waved as the car began to pull away. I instinctively reached for the metal bar running along the window, and the American woman made a nervous noise and laughed. The forecourt was growing smaller and then the hillside began to move beneath us; the cable-car swayed gently as we climbed higher; for a moment, the treetops seemed to brush against the windows, then suddenly a large dip opened beneath us and we were hanging in the sky. Sachiko laughed softly and pointed to something out of the window. Mariko continued to look through her binoculars.

The cable-car finished its climb and we filed out cautiously as if uncertain we had arrived on solid ground. The higher station had no concrete forecourt, and we stepped off the wooden boards into a small grass clearing. Other than the uniformed man who ushered us out, there were no other people in sight. At the back of the clearing, almost amidst the pine trees, stood several wooden picnic tables. The near edge of the clearing where we had disembarked was marked by a metal fence, which separated us from a cliff-edge. When we had regained our bearings a little, we wandered over to the fence and looked out over the falling mountainside. After a moment, the two women and the boy joined us.

“Quite breathtaking, isn’t it?” the Japanese woman said to me. “I’m just showing my friend all the interesting sights. She’s never been in Japan before.”

“I see. I hope she’s enjoying it here.”

“I hope so. Unfortunately, I don’t understand English so well. Your friend seems to speak it much better than I do.”

“Yes, she speaks it very well.”

We both glanced towards Sachiko. She and the American woman were again exchanging remarks in English.

“How nice to be so well educated,” the woman said to me. “Well, I hope you all have a nice day.”

We exchanged bows, then the woman made gestures to her American guest, suggesting they move off.

“Please may I look,” the tubby boy said, in an angry voice. Again, he was holding out his hand. Mariko stared at him, as she had done in the cable-car.

“I want to see it,” the boy said, more fiercely.

“Akira, remember to ask the little lady nicely.”

“Please! I want to see it.”

Mariko continued to look at him for a second, then took the plastic strap from around her neck and handed the boy the binoculars. The boy put them to his face and for some moments gazed over the fence.

“These aren’t any good,” he said finally, turning to his mother. “They aren’t nearly as good as mine. Mother, look, you can’t even see those trees over there properly. Take a look.”

He held the binoculars towards his mother. Mariko reached for them but the boy snatched them away and again offered them to the woman.

“Take a look, Mother. You can’t even see those trees, the near ones.”

“Akira, give them back to the little lady now.”

“They aren’t nearly as good as mine.”

“Now, Akira, that’s not a nice thing to say. You know everyone isn’t as lucky as you.”

Mariko reached for the binoculars and this time the boy let go.

“Say thank you to the little lady,” said his mother.

The boy said nothing and started to walk away. The mother laughed a little.

“Thank you very much,” she said to Mariko. “You were very kind.” Then she smiled in turn towards Sachiko and myself. "Splendid scenery, isn't it?" she said. "I do hope you have a nice day."

The path was covered with pine needles and rose up the side of the mountain in zig-zags. We walked at an easy pace, often stopping to rest. Mariko was quiet and — rather to my surprise — showed no signs of wishing to misbehave. She did however display a curious reluctance to walk alongside her mother and myself. One moment she would be lagging behind, causing us to cast anxious glances over our shoulders; the next moment, she would go running past us and walk on ahead.

We met the American woman for the second time an hour or so after we had disembarked from the cable-car. She and her companion were coming back down the path and, recognizing us, gave cheerful greetings. The tubby boy, coming behind them, ignored us. As she passed, the American woman said something to Sachiko in English, and when Sachiko replied, gave a loud laugh. She seemed to want to stop and talk, but the Japanese woman and her son did not break their step; the American woman waved and walked on.

When I complimented Sachiko on her command of English, she laughed and said nothing. The encounter, I noticed, had had a curious effect upon her. She became quiet, and walked on beside me as if lost in thought. Then, when Mariko had once more rushed on ahead, she said to me:

"My father was a highly respected man, Etsuko. Highly respected indeed. But his foreign connections almost resulted in my marriage proposal being withdrawn." She smiled slightly and shook her head. "How odd, Etsuko. That all seems like another age now."

"Yes," I said. "Things have changed so much."

The path bent sharply and began to climb again. The trees fell away and suddenly the sky seemed huge all around us. Up ahead, Mariko shouted something and pointed. Then she hurried on excitedly.

"I never saw a great deal of my father," Sachiko said. "He was abroad much of the time, in Europe and America. When I was young, I used to dream I'd go to America one day, that I'd go there and become a film actress. My mother used to laugh at me. But my father told me if I learnt my English well enough, I could easily become a business girl. I used to enjoy learning English."

Mariko had stopped at what looked like a plateau. She shouted something to us again.

"I remember once," Sachiko went on, "my father brought a book back from America for me, an English version of A Christmas Carol. That became something of an ambition of mine, Etsuko. I wanted to learn English well enough to read that book. Unfortunately, I never had the chance. When I married, my husband forbade me to continue learning. In fact, he made me throw the book away."

"That seems rather a pity," I said.

"My husband was like that, Etsuko. Very strict and very patriotic. He was never the most considerate of men. But he came from a highly distinguished family and my parents considered it a good match. I didn't protest when he forbade me to study English. After all, there seemed little point any more."

We reached the spot where Mariko was standing; it was a square area of ground that jutted off the edge of the path, bound in by several large boulders. A thick tree trunk fallen on to its side had been converted into a bench, the top surface having been smoothed and flattened. Sachiko and I sat down to recover our breath.

"Don't go too near the edge, Mariko," Sachiko called. The little girl had walked out to the boulders and was looking at the view with her binoculars.

I had a rather precarious feeling, perched on the edge of that mountain looking out over such a view; a long way down below us, we could see the harbour looking like a dense piece of machinery left in the water. Across the harbour, on the opposite bank, rose the series of hills that led into Nagasaki. The land at the foot of the hills was busy with houses and buildings. Far over to our right, the harbour opened out on to the sea.

We sat there for a while, recovering our breath and enjoying the breeze. Then I said:

“You wouldn’t think anything had ever happened here, would you? Everything looks so full of life. But all that area down there” — I waved my hand at the view below us — “all that area was so badly hit when the bomb fell. But look at it now.”

Sachiko nodded, then turned to me with a smile. “How cheerful you are today, Etsuko,” she said.

“But it’s so good to come out here. Today I’ve decided I’m going to be optimistic. I’m determined to have a happy future. Mrs Fujiwara always tells me how important it is to keep looking forward. And she’s right. If people didn’t do that, then all this” — I pointed again at the view — “all this would still be rubble.”

Sachiko smiled again. “Yes, as you say, Etsuko. It would all be rubble.” For a few moments, she continued to gaze at the view below us. “Incidentally, Etsuko,” she said, after a while, “your friend, Mrs Fujiwara. I assume she lost her family in the war.”

I nodded. “She had five children. And her husband was an important man in Nagasaki. When the bomb fell, they all died except her eldest son. It must have been such a blow to her, but she just kept going.”

“Yes,” said Sachiko, nodding slowly, “I thought something of that nature had happened. And did she always have that noodle shop of hers? ”

“No, of course not. Her husband was an important man. That was only afterwards, after she lost everything. Whenever I see her, I think to myself I have to be like her, I should keep looking forward. Because in many ways, she lost more than I did. After all, look at me now. I’m about to start a family of my own. ”

“Yes, how right you are. ” The wind had disturbed Sachiko’s carefully combed hair. She passed her hand through it, then took a deep breath, “How right you are Etsuko, we shouldn’t keep looking back to the past. The war destroyed many things for me, but I still have my daughter. As you say, we have to keep looking forward. ”

“You know, ” I said, “it’s only in the last few days I’ve really thought about what it’s going to be like. To have a child, I mean. I don’t feel nearly so afraid now. I’m going to look forward to it. I’m going to be optimistic from now on. ”

“And so you should, Etsuko. After all, you have a lot to look forward to. In fact, you’ll discover soon enough, it’s being a mother that makes life truly worthwhile. What do I care if life is a little dull at my uncle’s house? All I want is what’s best for my daughter. We’ll get her the best private tuition and she’ll catch up on her schoolwork in no time. As you say, Etsuko, we must look forward to life. ”

“I’m so glad you feel like that, ” I said. “We should both of us be grateful really. We may have lost a lot in the war, but there’s still so much to look forward to. ”

“Yes, Etsuko. There’s a lot to look forward to. ”

Mariko came nearer and stood in front of us. Perhaps she had overheard some of our conversation, for she said to me:

“We’re going to live with Yasuko-San again. Did Mother tell you? ”

“Yes,” I said, “she did. Are you looking forward to living there again, Mariko-San?”

“We might be able to keep the kittens now,” the little girl said. “There’s plenty of room at Yasuko-San’s house.”

“We’ll have to see about that, Mariko,” said Sachiko.

Mariko looked at her mother for a moment. Then she said: “But Yasuko-San likes cats. And anyway, Maru was Yasuko-San’s cat before we took her. So the kittens are hers too.”

“Yes, Mariko, but we’ll have to see. We’ll have to see what Yasuko-San’s father will say.”

The little girl regarded her mother with a sullen look, then turned to me once more. “We might be able to keep them,” she said, with a serious expression.

Towards the latter part of the afternoon, we found ourselves back at the clearing where we had first stepped off the cable-car. There still remained in our lunch-boxes some biscuits and chocolates, so we sat down for a snack at one of the picnic tables. At the other end of the clearing, a handful of people were gathered near the metal fence, awaiting the cable-car that would take them back down the mountain.

We had been sitting at the picnic table for several minutes when a voice made us look up. The American woman came striding across the clearing, a broad smile on her face. Without the least sign of bashfulness, she sat down at our table, smiled to us in turn, then began to address Sachiko in English. She was, I supposed, grateful for the chance to communicate other than by means of gestures. Looking around, I spotted the Japanese woman nearby, putting a jacket on her son. She appeared less enthusiastic for our company, but eventually she came towards our table with a smile. She sat down opposite me, and when her son sat beside her, I could see the extent to which mother and child shared the same plump features; most noticeably, their cheeks had a kind of fleshy sagginess to them, not unlike the cheeks of bulldogs. The American woman, all the while, continued to talk loudly to Sachiko.

At the arrival of the strangers, Mariko had opened her sketchbook and begun to draw. The plump-faced woman, after exchanging a few pleasantries with me, turned to the little girl.

“And have you enjoyed your day?” she asked Mariko. “It’s very pretty up here, isn’t it?”

Mariko continued to crayon her page, not looking up. The woman, however, did not seem in the least deterred.

“What are you drawing there?” she asked. “It looks very nice.”

This time, Mariko stopped drawing and looked at the woman coldly.

“That looks very nice. May we see?” The woman reached forward and took the sketchbook. “Aren’t these nice, Akira,” she said to her son. “Isn’t the little lady clever?”

The boy leaned across the table for a better view. He regarded the drawings with interest, but said nothing.

“They’re very nice indeed.” The woman was turning over the pages. “Did you do all these today?”

Mariko remained silent for a moment. Then she said: “The crayons are new. We bought them this morning. It’s harder to draw with new crayons.”

“I see. Yes, new crayons are harder, aren’t they? Akira here draws too, don’t you, Akira?”

“Drawing’s easy,” the boy said.

“Aren’t these nice little pictures, Akira?”

Mariko pointed to the open page. "I don't like that one there. The crayons weren't worn in enough. The one on the next page is better."

"Oh yes. This one's lovely!"

"I did it down at the harbour," said Mariko. "But it was noisy and hot down there, so I hurried."

"But it's very good. Do you enjoy drawing?"

"Yes."

Sachiko and the American woman had both turned towards the sketchbook. The American woman pointed at the drawing and uttered loudly several times the Japanese word for "delicious".

"And what's this?" the plump-faced woman continued. "A butterfly! It must have been very hard to draw it so well. It couldn't have stayed still for very long."

"I remembered it," said Mariko. "I saw one earlier on."

The woman nodded, then turned to Sachiko. "How clever your daughter is. I think it's very commendable for a child to use her memory and imagination. So many children at this age are still copying out of books."

"Yes," said Sachiko. "I suppose so."

I was rather surprised at the dismissiveness of her tone, for she had been talking to the American woman in her most gracious manner. The tubby boy leaned further across the table and put his finger to the page.

"Those ships are too big," he said. "If that's supposed to be a tree, then the ships would be much smaller."

His mother considered this for a moment. "Well, perhaps," she said. "But it's a lovely little drawing all the same. Don't you think so, Akira?"

“The ships are far too big,” said the boy.

The woman gave a laugh. “You must excuse Akira,” she said to Sachiko. “But you see, he has a quite distinguished tutor for his drawing, and so he’s obviously much more discerning about these things than most children his age. Does your daughter have a tutor for her drawing?”

“No, she doesn’t.” Again, Sachiko’s tone was unmistakably cold. The woman, however, appeared to notice nothing.

“It’s not a bad idea at all,” she went on. “My husband was against it at first. He thought it was quite enough for Akira to have home tuition for maths and science. But I think drawing is important too. A child should develop his imagination while he’s young. The teachers at school all agreed with me. But he gets on best with maths, I think maths is very important, don’t you?”

“Yes, indeed,” said Sachiko. “I’m sure it’s very useful.”

“Maths sharpens children’s minds. You’ll find most children good at maths are good at most other things. My husband and I were in no disagreement about getting a maths tutor. And it’s been well worth it. Last year, Akira always came third or fourth in his class, but this year he’s been top throughout.”

“Maths is easy,” the boy announced. Then he said to Mariko: “Do you know the nine times table?”

His mother laughed again. “I expect the little lady’s very clever too. Her drawing certainly shows promise.”

“Maths is easy,” the boy said again. “The nine times table is easy as anything.”

“Yes, Akira knows all his multiplication now. A lot of children his age only know it up to three or four. Akira, what’s nine times five?”

“Nine times five make forty-five! ”

“And nine times nine? ”

“Nine times nine make eighty-one! ”

The American woman asked Sachiko something, and when Sachiko nodded she clapped her hands and once more repeated the word “delicious” several times.

“Your daughter seems a bright little lady,” the plump-faced woman said to Sachiko. “Does she enjoy school? Akira likes almost everything at school. Apart from maths and drawing, he gets on very well with geography. My friend here was very surprised to find Akira knew the names of all the large cities in America. Weren’t you, Suzie-San?” The woman turned to her friend and spoke several faltering words of English. The American woman did not appear to understand, but smiled approvingly towards the boy.

“But maths is Akira’s favourite subject. Isn’t it, Akira?”

“Maths is easy! ”

“And what does the little lady enjoy most at school?” the woman asked, turning again to Mariko.

Mariko did not answer for a moment. Then she said: “I like maths too.”

“You like maths too. That’s splendid.”

“What’s nine times six then?” the boy asked her angrily.

“It’s so nice when children take an interest in their schoolwork, isn’t it?” said his mother.

“Go on, what’s nine times six?”

I asked: “What does Akira-San want to do when he grows up?”

“Akira, tell the lady what you’re going to become.”

“Head Director of Mitsubishi Corporation!”

“His father’s firm,” his mother explained. “Akira’s already very determined.”

“Yes, I see,” I said, smiling. “How wonderful.”

“Who does your father work for?” the boy asked Mariko.

“Now, Akira, don’t be too inquisitive, it’s not nice.” The woman turned to Sachiko again. “A lot of boys his age are still saying they want to be policemen or firemen. But Akira’s wanted to work for Mitsubishi since he was much younger.”

“Who does your father work for?” the boy asked again. This time his mother, instead of intervening, looked towards Mariko expectantly.

“He’s a zoo-keeper,” said Mariko.

For a brief moment, no one spoke. Curiously, the answer seemed to humble the boy, and he sat back on his bench with a sulky expression. Then his mother said a little uncertainly:

“What an interesting occupation. We’re very fond of animals. Is your husband’s zoo near here?”

Before Sachiko could reply, Mariko had clambered off the bench noisily. Without a word, she walked away from us, towards a cluster of trees nearby. We all watched her for a moment.

“Is she your eldest?” the woman asked Sachiko.

“I have no others.”

“Oh, I see. It’s no bad thing really. A child can become more independent that way. I think a child often works harder too. There’s six years’ difference between this one” — she put her hand on the boy’s head — “and the eldest one.”

The American woman produced a loud exclamation and clapped her hands. Mariko was progressing steadily up the branches of a tree. The plump-faced woman turned in her seat and looked up at Mariko worriedly.

“Your daughter’s quite a tomboy,” she said.

The American woman repeated the word “tomboy” gleefully, and clapped her hands again.

“Is it safe?” the plump-faced woman asked. “She might fall.”

Sachiko smiled, and her manner towards the woman seemed to grow suddenly warmer. “Are you not used to children climbing trees?” she asked.

The woman continued to watch anxiously. “Are you sure it’s safe? A branch may break.”

Sachiko gave a laugh. “I’m sure my daughter knows what she’s doing. Thank you all the same for your concern. It’s so kind of you.” She gave the woman an elegant bow. The American woman said something to Sachiko, and they began conversing again in English. The plump-faced woman turned away from the trees.

“Please don’t think me impertinent,” she said, putting a hand on my arm, “but I couldn’t help noticing. Will this be your first time?”

“Yes,” I said, with a laugh. “We’re expecting it in the autumn.”

“How splendid. And your husband, is he also a zoo-keeper?”

“Oh no. He works for an electronics firm.”

“Really?”

The woman began to give me advice concerning the care of babies. Meanwhile, I could see over her shoulder the boy wandering away from the table towards Mariko’s tree.

“And it’s an idea to let the child hear a lot of good music,” the woman was saying. “I’m sure that makes a lot of difference. A child should hear good music amongst his earliest sounds.”

“Yes, I’m very fond of music.”

The boy was standing at the foot of the tree, looking up at Mariko with a puzzled expression.

“Our older son doesn’t have as fine an ear for music as Akira,” the woman went on. “My husband says this is because he didn’t hear enough good music when he was a baby, and I tend to think he’s right. In those days, the radio was broadcasting so much military music. I’m sure it did no good at all.”

As the woman continued to talk, I could see the boy trying to find a foothold in the tree-trunk. Mariko had come lower and appeared to be advising him. Beside me, the American woman kept laughing loudly, occasionally uttering single words of Japanese. The boy finally managed to hoist himself off the ground; he had one foot pressed into a crevice and was holding on to a branch with both hands. Although only a few centimetres off the ground, he seemed in a state of high tension. It was hard to say if she did so deliberately, but as she lowered herself, the little girl trod firmly on the boy’s fingers. The boy gave a shriek, falling clumsily.

The mother turned in alarm. Sachiko and the American woman, neither of whom had seen the incident, also turned towards the fallen boy. He was lying on his side making a loud noise. His mother ran to him and kneeling beside him began to feel his legs. The boy continued his noises. Across the clearing, passengers waiting for the cable-car were all looking our way. After a minute or so, the boy came sobbing to the table, guided by his mother.

“Tree-climbing is so dangerous,” the woman said, angrily.

“He didn’t fall far,” I assured her. “He was hardly on the tree at all.”

“He might have broken a bone. I think children should be discouraged from climbing trees. It’s so silly.”

“She kicked me,” the boy sobbed. “She kicked me off the tree. She tried to kill me.”

“She kicked you? The little girl kicked you?”

I saw Sachiko cast a glance towards her daughter. Mariko was once more high up the tree.

“She tried to kill me.”

“The little girl kicked you?”

“Your son just slipped,” I interrupted quickly. “I saw it all. He hardly fell any distance.”

“She kicked me. She tried to kill me.”

The woman also turned and glanced towards the tree.

“He just slipped,” I said again.

“You shouldn’t be doing such silly things, Akira,” the woman said, angrily. “It’s very very dangerous to climb trees.”

“She tried to kill me.”

“You’re not to go up trees.”

The boy continued to sob.

In Japanese cities, much more so than in England, the restaurant owners, the teahouse proprietors, the shopkeepers all seem to will the darkness to fall; long before the daylight has faded, lanterns appear in the windows, lighted signs above doorways. Nagasaki was already full of the colours of night-time as we came back out into the street that evening; we had left Inasa in the late afternoon and had been eating supper on the restaurant floor of the Hamaya department store. Afterwards, reluctant to end the day, we found ourselves strolling through the sidestreets, in little hurry to reach the tram depot. In those days, I remember it had become the vogue for young couples to be seen in public holding hands — something Jiro and I had never done — and as we walked we saw many such couples seeking their evening's entertainment. The sky, as often on those summer evenings, had become a pale purple colour.

Many of the stalls sold fish, and at that time of the evening, when the fishing boats were coming into the harbour, one would often see men pushing their way through the crowded sidestreets, carrying on their shoulders baskets heavy with freshly caught fish. It was in one such sidestreet, filled with litter and casually strolling people, that we came across the kujibiki stand. Since it was never my habit to indulge in kujibiki and since it has no equivalents here in England — except perhaps in fairgrounds — I might well have forgotten the existence of such a thing were it not for my memory of that particular evening.

We stood at the back of the crowd and watched. A woman was holding up a young boy of around two or three; up on the platform, a man with a handkerchief tied around his head was stooping forward with the bowl so the child could reach. The boy managed to pick out a ticket, but did not seem to know what to do with it. He held it in his hand and looked emptily at the amused faces all around him. The man with the handkerchief bent lower and made some remark to the child which caused the people round about to laugh. In the end, the mother lowered her child, took the ticket from him, and handed it to the man. The ticket won a lipstick, which the woman accepted with a laugh.

Mariko was standing on her tip-toes, trying to see the prizes displayed at the back of the stall. Suddenly she turned to Sachiko and said: "I want to buy a ticket."

"It's rather a waste of money, Mariko."

"I want to buy a ticket." There was a curious urgency in her manner. "I want to try the kujibiki."

"Here you are, Mariko-San." I offered her a coin.

She turned to me, a little surprised. Then she took the coin and pushed her way through to the front of the crowd.

A few more contestants tried their luck; a woman won a piece of candy, a middle-aged man won a rubber ball. Then came Mariko's turn.

"Now, little princess," — the man shook the bowl with deliberation — "close your eyes and think hard about that big bear over there."

"I don't want the bear," said Mariko.

The man made a face and the people laughed. "You don't want that big furry bear? Well, well, little princess, what is it you want then?"

Mariko pointed to the back of the stall. "That basket," she said.

"The basket?" The man shrugged. "All right, princess, close your eyes tight and think about your basket. Ready?"

Mariko's ticket won a flowerpot. She came back to where we were standing and handed me her prize.

"Don't you want it?" I asked. "You won it."

"I wanted the basket. The kittens need a basket of their own now."

"Well, never mind."

Mariko turned to her mother. "I want to try once more."

Sachiko sighed. "It's getting late now."

"I want to try. Just once more."

Again, she pushed her way to the platform. As we waited, Sachiko turned to me and said:

"It's funny, but I had a quite different impression of her. Your friend, Mrs Fujiwara, I mean."

"Oh?"

Sachiko leaned her head to see past the spectators. "No, Etsuko," she said, "I'm afraid I never saw her in quite the way you do. Your friend struck me as a woman with nothing left in her life."

"But that's not true," I said.

"Oh? And what does she have to look forward to, Etsuko? What does she have to live for?"

"She has her shop. It's nothing grand, but it means a lot to her."

"Her shop?"

"And she has her son. Her son has a very promising career."

Sachiko was looking again towards the stall. "Yes, I suppose so," she said, with a tired smile. "I suppose she has her son."

This time Mariko won a pencil, and came back to us with a sullen expression. We started to go, but Mariko was still looking towards the Kujibiki stand.

"Come on," Sachiko said. "Etsuko-San needs to be getting home now."

"I want to try once more. Just once more."

Sachiko sighed impatiently, then looked at me. I shrugged and gave a laugh.

“All right,” said Sachiko. “Try once more.”

Several more people won prizes. Once a young woman won a face-compact and the appropriateness of the prize provoked some applause. On seeing Mariko appear for the third time, the man with the handkerchief pulled another of his amusing faces.

“Well, little princess, back again! Still want the basket? Wouldn’t you prefer that big furry bear?”

Mariko said nothing, waiting for the man to offer her the bowl. When she had picked out a ticket, the man examined it closely, then glanced behind him to where the prizes were exhibited. He scrutinized the ticket once more, then finally gave a nod.

“You haven’t won the basket. But you have won — a major prize!”

There was laughter and applause all around. The man went to the back of the stall and returned with what looked like a large wooden box.

“For your mother to keep her vegetables in!” he announced — to the crowd rather than to Mariko — and for a brief moment held up the prize. Beside me, Sachiko burst into laughter and joined in the applause. A gangway formed to allow Mariko through with her prize.

Sachiko was still laughing as we came away from the crowd. She had laughed so much that small tears had appeared in her eyes; she wiped them away and looked at the box.

“What a strange-looking thing,” she said, passing it to me.

It was the size of an orange box and surprisingly light; the wood was smooth but unvarnished, and on one side were two sliding panels of wire gauze.

“It may come in useful,” I said, sliding open a panel.

"I won a major prize," said Mariko.

"Yes, well done," Sachiko said.

"I won a kimono once," Mariko said to me. "In Tokyo, I won a kimono once."

"Well, you've won again."

"Etsuko, perhaps you could carry my bag. Then I could carry this object home."

"I won a major prize," said Mariko.

"Yes, you were very good," said her mother, and laughed a little.

We walked away from the kujibiki stand. The street was littered with discarded newspapers and all manner of rubbish.

"The kittens could live in there, couldn't they?" Mariko said. "We could put rugs inside it and that could be their house."

Sachiko looked doubtfully at the box in her arms. "I'm not sure they'd like it so much."

"That could be their house. Then when we go to Yasuko-San's house, we could carry them in there."

Sachiko smiled tiredly.

"We could, couldn't we, Mother? We could carry the kittens in there."

"Yes, I suppose so," said Sachiko. "Yes, all right. We'll carry the kittens in there."

"So we can keep the kittens then?"

"Yes, we can keep the kittens. I'm sure Yasuko-San's father won't object."

Mariko ran a little way ahead, then waited for us to catch up.

“So we won’t have to find homes for them any more?”

“No, not now. We’re going to Yasuko-San’s house, so we’ll keep the kittens after all.”

“We won’t have to find owners then. We can keep them all. We could take them in the box, couldn’t we, Mother?”

“Yes,” said Sachiko. Then she tossed back her head and once more began to laugh.

I often find myself recalling Mariko’s face the way I saw it that evening on the tram going home. She was staring out of the window, her forehead pressed against the glass; a boyish face, caught in the changing lights of the city rattling by outside. Mariko remained silent throughout that journey home, and Sachiko and I conversed little. Once, I remember, Sachiko asked:

“Will your husband be angry with you?”

“Quite possibly,” I said, with a smile. “But I did warn him yesterday I might be late.”

“Yes. Jiro will just have to sit and get angry. I’ve enjoyed today very much.”

“We must do it again, Etsuko.”

“Yes, we must.”

“Remember, won’t you, to come and visit me after I move.”

“Yes, I’ll remember.”

We fell silent again after that. It was a little later, just as the tram slowed for a stop, I felt Sachiko give a sudden start. She was looking down the carriage, to where two or three people had gathered near the exit. A woman was standing there looking at Mariko. She was around thirty or so, with a thin face and tired expression. It was conceivable she was gazing at Mariko quite innocently, and but for Sachiko's reaction I doubt if my suspicions would have been aroused. In the meantime, Mariko continued to look out of the window, quite unaware of the woman.

The woman noticed Sachiko looking at her and turned away. The tram came to a stop, the doors opened and the woman stepped out.

“Did you know that person?” I asked, quietly.

Sachiko laughed a little. “No. I just made a mistake.”

“You mistook her for someone else?”

“Just for a moment. There wasn't even a resemblance really.” She laughed again, then glanced outside to check where we were.

Chapter Eight

In retrospect it seems quite clear why Ogata-San remained with us for as long as he did that summer. Knowing his son well enough, he must have recognized Jiro's strategy over the matter concerning Shigeo Matsuda's magazine article; my husband was simply waiting for Ogata-San to return home to Fukuoka so the whole affair could be forgotten. Meanwhile, he would continue to agree readily that such an attack on the family name should be dealt with both promptly and firmly, that the matter was his concern as much as his father's, and that he would write to his old schoolfriend as soon as he had time. I can see now, with hindsight, how typical this was of the way Jiro faced any potentially awkward confrontation. Had he not, years later, faced another crisis in much the same manner, it may be that I would never have left Nagasaki. However, that is by the way.

I have recounted earlier some details of the evening my husband's two drunken colleagues arrived to interrupt the chess game between Jiro and Ogata-San. That night, as I prepared for bed, I felt a strong urge to talk to Jiro about the whole business concerning Shigeo Matsuda; while I did not wish Jiro to write such a letter against his will, I was feeling more and more keenly that he should make his position clearer to his father. As it was, however, I refrained from mentioning the subject that night, just as I had done on previous occasions. For one thing, my husband would have considered it no business of mine to comment on such a matter. Furthermore, at that time of night, Jiro was invariably tired and any attempts to converse would only make him impatient. And in any case, it was never in the nature of our relationship to discuss such things openly.

Throughout the following day, Ogata-San remained in the apartment, often studying the chess game which — so he told me — had been interrupted at a crucial stage the previous night. Then that evening, an hour or so after we had finished supper, he brought out the chess-board again and began once more to study the pieces. Once, he looked up and said to my husband:

“So, Jiro. Tomorrow’s the big day then. ”

Jiro looked up from his newspaper and gave a short laugh. “It’s nothing to make a fuss about,” he said.

“Nonsense. It’s a big day for you. Of course, it’s imperative you do your best for the firm, but in my view this is a triumph in itself, whatever the outcome tomorrow. To be asked to represent the firm at this level, so early in your career, that can’t be usual, even these days. ”

Jiro gave a shrug. “I suppose not. Of course, even if tomorrow goes exceptionally well, that’s no guarantee I’ll get the promotion. But I suppose the manager must be reasonably pleased with my efforts this year. ”

“I should think he has great faith in you, by all accounts. And how do you think it will go tomorrow? ”

“Smoothly enough, I should hope. At this stage all the parties involved need to co-operate. It’s more a case of laying the groundwork for the real negotiations in the autumn. It’s nothing so special. ”

“Well, we’ll have to just wait and see how it goes. Now, Jiro, why don’t we finish off this game. We’ve been at it for three days. ”

“Oh yes, the game. Of course, Father, you realize however successful I am tomorrow, that’s no guarantee I’ll be given the promotion. ”

“Of course not, Jiro, I realize these things. I came up through a competitive career myself. I know only too well how it is. Sometimes others are chosen in preference who by all rights shouldn’t even be considered your equals. But you mustn't let such things deter you. You persevere and triumph in the end. Now, how about finishing off this game. ”

My husband glanced towards the chess-board, but showed no sign of moving nearer it. “You'd just about won, if I remember,” he said.

“Well, you're in quite a difficult corner, but there's a way out if you can find it. Do you remember, Jiro, when I first taught you this game, how I always warned you about using the castles too early? And you still make the same mistake. Do you see? ”

“The castles, yes. As you say. ”

“And incidentally, Jiro, I don't think you're thinking your moves out in advance, are you? Do you remember how much trouble I once took to make you plan at least three moves ahead. But I don't think you've been doing that. ”

“Three moves ahead? Well, no, I suppose I haven't. I can't claim to be an expert like yourself, Father. In any case, I think we can say you've won. ”

“In fact, Jiro, it became painfully obvious very early in the game, that you weren't thinking your moves out. How often have I told you? A good chess player needs to think ahead, three moves on at the very least. ”

“Yes, I suppose so. ”

“For instance, why did you move this horse here? Jiro, look, you're not even looking. Can you even remember why you moved this here? ”

Jiro glanced towards the board. “To be honest, I don't remember,” he said. “There was probably a good enough reason at the time. ”

“A good enough reason? What nonsense, Jiro. For the first few moves, you were planning ahead, I could see that. You actually had a strategy then. But as soon as I broke that down, you gave up, you began playing one move at a time. Don't you remember what I always used to tell you? Chess is all about maintaining coherent strategies. It's about not giving up when the enemy destroys one plan, but to immediately come up with the next. A game isn't won and lost at the point when the king is finally cornered. The game's sealed when a player gives up having any strategy at all. When his soldiers are all scattered, they have no common cause, and they move one piece at a time, that's when you've lost. "

"Very well, Father, I admit it. I've lost. Now perhaps we can forget about it. "

Ogata-San glanced towards me, then back at Jiro. "Now what kind of talk is that? I studied this board quite hard today and I can see three separate means by which you can escape. "

My husband lowered his newspaper. "Forgive me if I'm mistaken," he said, "but I believe you just said yourself, the player who cannot maintain a coherent strategy is inevitably the loser. Well, as you've pointed out so repeatedly, I've been thinking only one move at a time, so there seems little point in carrying on. Now if you'll excuse me, I'd like to finish reading this report. "

"Why, Jiro, this is sheer defeatism. The game's far from lost, I've just told you. You should be planning your defence now, to survive and fight me again. Jiro, you always had a streak of defeatism in you, ever since you were young. I'd hoped I'd taken it out of you, but here it is again, after all this time. "

"Forgive me, but I fail to see what defeatism has to do with it. This is merely a game ..."

"It may indeed be just a game. But a father gets to know his son well enough. A father can recognize these unwelcome traits when they arise. This is hardly a quality I'm proud of in you, Jiro. You gave up as soon as your first strategy collapsed. And now when you're forced on to the defensive, you sulk and don't want to play the game any more. Why, this is just the way you were at nine years old. "

"Father, this is all nonsense. I have better things to do than think about chess all day. "

Jiro had spoken quite loudly, and for a moment Ogata-San looked somewhat taken aback.

"It may be very well for you, Father," my husband continued. "You have the whole day to dream up your strategies and ploys. Personally, I have better things to do with my time. "

With that, my husband returned to his paper. His father continued to stare at him, an astonished look on his face. Then finally, Ogata-San began to laugh.

"Come, Jiro," he said, "we're shouting at each other like a pair of fishermen's wives. " He gave another laugh. "Like a pair of fishermen's wives. "

Jiro did not look up.

"Come on, Jiro, let's stop our argument. If you don't want to finish the game, we don't have to finish it. "

My husband still gave no sign of having heard.

Ogata-San laughed again. "All right, you win. We won't play any more. But let me show you how you could have got out of this little corner here. There's three things you could have done. The first one's the most simple and there's little I could have done about it. Look, Jiro, look here. Jiro, look, I'm showing you something. "

Jiro continued to ignore his father. He had all the appearance of someone solemnly absorbed in his reading. He turned over a page and carried on reading.

Ogata-San nodded to himself, laughing quietly. "Just like when he was a child," he said. "When he doesn't get his own way, he sulks and there's nothing to be done with him." He glanced towards where I was sitting and laughed rather oddly. Then he turned back to his son. "Jiro, look. Let me show you this at least. It's simplicity itself."

Quite suddenly, my husband flung down his newspaper and made a movement towards his father. Clearly, what he had intended was to knock the chess-board across the floor and all the pieces with it. But he moved clumsily and before he could strike the board, his foot had upset the teapot beside him. The pot rolled on to its side, the lid fell open with a rattle, and the tea ran swiftly across the surface of the tatami. Jiro, not sure what had occurred, turned and stared at the spilt tea. Then he turned back and glared at the chess-board. The sight of the chessmen, still upright on their squares, seemed to anger him all the more, and for a moment I thought he would make another attempt to upset them. As it was, he got to his feet, snatched up his newspaper, and left the room without a word.

I went over quickly to where the tea had spilt. Some of the liquid had begun to soak into the cushion Jiro had been sitting on. I moved the cushion and rubbed at it with the edge of my apron.

"Just like he used to be," Ogata-San said. A faint smile had appeared around his eyes. "Children become adults but they don't change much."

I went out into the kitchen and found a cloth. When I returned, Ogata-San was sitting just as I had left him, the smile still hovering around his eyes. He was gazing at the puddle on the tatami and looked deep in thought. Indeed, he seemed so absorbed by the sight of the tea, I hesitated a little before kneeling down to wipe it away.

"You mustn't let this upset you, Etsuko," he said, eventually. "It's nothing to upset yourself about."

"No." I continued to wipe the tatami.

"Well, I suppose we might as well turn in fairly soon. It's good to turn in early once in a while."

"Yes."

"You mustn't let this upset you, Etsuko. Jiro will have forgotten the whole thing by tomorrow, you'll see. I remember these spells of his very well. In fact, it makes you quite nostalgic, witnessing a little scene like that. It reminds me so much of when he was small. Yes, it's enough to make you quite nostalgic."

I continued to wipe away the tea.

"Now, Etsuko," he said. "This is nothing to upset yourself about."

I exchanged no further words with my husband until the following morning. He ate his breakfast glancing occasionally at the morning newspaper I had placed beside his bowl. He spoke little and made no comment on the fact that his father had not yet emerged. For my part, I listened carefully for sounds from Ogata-San's room, but could hear nothing.

"I hope it all goes well today," I said, after we had sat in silence for some minutes.

My husband gave a shrug. "It's nothing to make a fuss about," he said. Then he looked up at me and said: "I wanted my black silk tie today, but you seem to have done something with it. I wish you wouldn't meddle with my ties."

"The black silk one? It's hanging on the rail with your other ties."

"It wasn't there just now. I wish you'd stop meddling with them all the time."

"The silk one should be there with the others," I said. "I ironed it the day before yesterday, because I knew you'd be wanting it for today, but I made sure to put it back. Are you sure it wasn't there? ”

My husband sighed impatiently and looked down at the newspaper. “It doesn't matter,” he said. “This one will have to do. ”

He continued to eat in silence. Meanwhile, there was still no sign of Ogata-San and eventually I rose to my feet and went to listen outside his door. When after several seconds I had not heard a sound, I was about to slide open the door a little way. But my husband turned and said:

“What are you up to? I haven't got all morning, you know. ” He pushed his teacup forward.

I seated myself again, put his used dishes away to one side, and poured him some tea. He sipped it rapidly, glancing over the front page of the newspaper.

“This is an important day for us, ” I said. “I hope it goes well. ”

“It's nothing to make such a fuss about, ” he said, not looking up.

However, before he left that morning, Jiro studied himself carefully in the mirror by the entryway, adjusting his tie and examining his jaw to check he had shaved efficiently. When he had left, I went over once more to Ogata-San's door and listened. I still could hear nothing.

“Father? ” I called softly.

“Ah, Etsuko, ” I heard Ogata-San's voice from within. “I might have known you wouldn't let me lie in. ”

Somewhat relieved, I went to the kitchen to prepare a fresh pot of tea, then laid the table ready for Ogata-San's breakfast. When he eventually sat down to eat, he remarked casually:

“Jiro's left already, I suppose. ”

“Oh yes, he went a long time ago. I was just about to throw Father’s breakfast away. I thought he’d be far too lazy to get up much before noon. ”

“Now, don’t be cruel, Etsuko. When you get to my age, you like to relax once in a while. Besides, this is like a vacation for me, staying here with you. ”

“Well, I suppose just this once then, Father can be forgiven for being so lazy. ”

“I won’t get the opportunity to lie in like this once I get back to Fukuoka,” he said, taking up his chopsticks. Then he sighed deeply. “I suppose it’s time I was getting back soon. ”

“Getting back? But there’s no hurry, Father. ”

“No, I really have to be getting back soon. There’s plenty of work to be getting on with. ”

“Work? What work is that? ”

“Well, for a start, I need to build new panels for the veranda. Then there’s the rockery. I haven’t even started on it yet. The stones were delivered months ago and they’ve just been sitting there in the garden waiting for me.” he gave a sigh and began to eat. “I certainly won’t get to lie in like this once I get back. ”

“But there’s no need to go just yet, is there, Father? Your rockery can wait a little longer. ”

“You’re very kind, Etsuko. But time’s pressing on now. You see, I’m expecting my daughter and her husband down again this autumn, and I’ll need to get all this work finished before they come. Last year and the year before, they came to see me in the autumn. So I rather suspect they’ll want to come again this year. ”

“I see. ”

“Yes, they’re bound to want to come again this autumn. It’s the most convenient time for Kikuko’s husband. And Kikuko’s always saying in her letters how curious she is to see my new house. ”

Ogata-San nodded to himself, then carried on eating from his bowl. I watched him for a while.

“What a loyal daughter Kikuko-San is to you, Father,” I said. “It’s a long way to come, all that way from Osaka. She must miss you. ”

“I suppose she feels the need to get away from her father-in-law once in a while. I can’t think why else she would want to come so far. ”

“How unkind, Father. I’m sure she misses you. I’ll have to tell her what you’re saying. ”

Ogata-San laughed. “But it’s true. Old Watanabe rules over them like a war-lord. Whenever they come down, they’re forever talking about how intolerable he’s getting. Personally I rather like the old man, but there’s no denying he’s an old war-lord. I expect they’d like some place like this, Etsuko, an apartment like this just to themselves. It’s no bad thing, young couples living away from the parents. More and more couples do it now. Young people don’t want overbearing old men ruling over them for ever. ”

Ogata-San seemed to remember the food in his bowl and began to eat hurriedly. When he had finished, he got to his feet and went over to the window. For a moment he stood there, his back to me, looking at the view. Then he adjusted the window to let in more air, and took a deep breath.

“Are you pleased with your new house, Father?” I asked.

“My house? Why, yes. It’ll need a little more work here and there, as I say. But it’s much more compact. The Nagasaki house was far too large for just one old man. ”

He continued to gaze out of the window; in the sharp morning light, all I could see of his head and shoulders was a hazy outline.

“But it was a nice house, the old house,” I said. “I still stop and look at it if I’m walking that way. In fact, I went past it last week on my way back from Mrs Fujiwara’s.”

I thought he had not heard me, for he continued to gaze silently out at the view. But a moment later, he said:

“And how did it look, the old house?”

“Oh, much the same. The new occupants must like it the way Father left it.”

He turned towards me slightly. “And what about the azaleas, Etsuko? Were the azaleas still in the gateway?” The brightness still prevented me from seeing his face clearly, but I supposed from his voice that he was smiling.

“Azaleas?”

“Well, I suppose there’s no reason why you should remember.” He turned back to the window and stretched out his arms. “I planted them in the gateway that day. The day it was all finally decided.”

“The day what was decided?”

“That you and Jiro were to be married. But I never told you about the azaleas, so I suppose it’s rather unreasonable of me to expect you to remember about them.”

“You planted some azaleas for me? Now that was a nice thought. But no, I don’t think you ever mentioned it.”

“But you see, Etsuko, you asked for them.” He had turned towards me again. “In fact, you positively ordered me to plant them in the gateway.”

“What? — I laughed —” I ordered you?”

“Yes, you ordered me. Like I was some hired gardener. Don’t you remember? Just when I thought it was all settled at last, and you were finally to become my daughter-in-law, you told me there was one thing more, you wouldn’t live in a house without azaleas in the gateway. And if I didn’t plant azaleas then the whole thing would be called off. So what could I do? I went straight out and planted azaleas.”

I laughed a little. “Now you mention it,” I said, “I remember something like that. But what nonsense, Father. I never forced you.”

“Oh yes, you did, Etsuko. You said you wouldn’t live in a house without azaleas in the gateway.” He came away from the window and sat down opposite me again. “Yes, Etsuko,” he said “just like a hired gardener.”

We both laughed and I began to pour out the tea.

“Azaleas were always my favourite flowers, you see,” I said.

“Yes. So you said.”

I finished pouring and we sat silently for a few moments, watching the steam rise from the teacups.

“And I had no idea then,” I said. “About Jiro’s plans, I mean.”

“No.”

I reached forward and placed a plate of small cakes by his teacup. Ogata-San regarded them with a smile. Eventually, he said:

“The azaleas came up beautifully. But by that time, of course, you’d moved away. Still, it’s no bad thing at all, young couples living on their own. Look at Kikuko and her husband. They’d love to have a little place of their own, but old Watanabe won’t even let them consider it. What an old war-lord he is.”

“Now I think of it,” I said, “there were azaleas in the gateway last week. The new occupants must agree with me. Azaleas are essential for a gateway.”

“I’m glad they’re still there.” Ogata-San took a sip from his teacup. Then he sighed and said with a laugh: “What an old war-lord that Watanabe is.”

Shortly after breakfast, Ogata-San suggested we should go and look around Nagasaki — “like the tourists do”, as he put it. I agreed at once and we took a tram into the city. As I recall, we spent some time at an art gallery, and then, a little before noon, we went to visit the peace memorial in the large public park not far from the centre of the city.

The park was commonly known as “Peace Park” — I never discovered whether this was the official name — and indeed, despite the sounds of children and birds, an atmosphere of solemnity hung over that large expanse of green. The usual adornments, such as shrubs and fountains, had been kept to a minimum, and the effect was a kind of austerity; the flat grass, a wide summer sky, and the memorial itself — a massive white statue in memory of those killed by the atomic bomb — presiding over its domain.

The statue resembled some muscular Greek god, seated with both arms outstretched. With his right hand, he pointed to the sky from where the bomb had fallen; with his other arm — stretched out to his left — the figure was supposedly holding back the forces of evil. His eyes were closed in prayer.

It was always my feeling that the statue had a rather cumbersome appearance, and I was never able to associate it with what had occurred that day the bomb had fallen, and those terrible days which followed. Seen from a distance, the figure looked almost comical, resembling a policeman conducting traffic. It remained for me nothing more than a statue, and while most people in Nagasaki seemed to appreciate it as some form of gesture, I suspect the general feeling was much like mine. And today, should I by chance recall that large white statue in Nagasaki, I find myself reminded primarily of my visit to Peace Park with Ogata-San that morning, and that business concerning his postcard.

"It doesn't look quite so impressive in a picture," I remember Ogata-San saying, holding up the postcard of the statue which he had just bought. We were standing some fifty yards or so from the monument. "I've been meaning to send a card for some time," he continued. "I'll be going back to Fukuoka any day now, but I suppose it's still worth sending. Etsuko, do you have a pen? Perhaps I should send it straight away, otherwise I'm bound to forget."

I found a pen in my handbag and we sat down on a bench nearby. I became curious when I noticed him staring at the blank side of the card, his pen poised but not writing. Once or twice, I saw him glance up towards the statue as if for inspiration. Finally I asked him:

"Are you sending it to a friend in Fukuoka?"

"Well, just an acquaintance."

"Father's looking very guilty," I said. "I wonder who it can be he's writing to."

Ogata-San glanced up with a look of astonishment. Then he burst into loud laughter. "Guilty? Am I really?"

"Yes, very guilty. I wonder what Father gets up to when there's no one to keep an eye on him."

Ogata-San continued to laugh loudly. He was laughing so much I could feel the bench shake. He recovered a little and said: "Very well, Etsuko. You've caught me. You've caught me writing to my girl-friend — he used the English word.

"Caught me red-handed." He began laughing again.

"I always suspected Father led a glamorous life in Fukuoka. "

"Yes, Etsuko" — he was still laughing a little — "a very glamorous life." Then he took a deep breath and looked down once more at his postcard. "You know, I really don't know what to write. Perhaps I could just send it with nothing written. After all, I only wanted to show her what the memorial looks like. But then again, perhaps that's rather too informal. "

"Well, I can't advise you, Father, unless you reveal who this mysterious lady is. "

"The mysterious lady, Etsuko, runs a small restaurant in Fukuoka. It's quite near my house so I usually go there for my evening meals. I talk to her sometimes, she's pleasant enough, and I promised I'd send her a postcard of the peace memorial. I'm afraid that's all there is to it. "

"I see, Father. But I'm still suspicious. "

"Quite a pleasant old woman, but she gets tiresome after a while. If I'm the only customer, she stands and talks all through the meal. Unfortunately there aren't many other suitable places to eat nearby. You see, Etsuko, if you'd teach me to cook, as you promised, then I wouldn't need to suffer the likes of her. "

"But it would be pointless," I said, laughing. "Father would never get the hang of it. "

"Nonsense. You're simply afraid I'll surpass you. It's most selfish of you, Etsuko. Now let me see" — he looked at his postcard once more — "What can I say to the old lady? "

"Do you remember Mrs Fujiwara? " I asked. "She runs a noodle shop now. Near Father's old house. "

"Yes, so I hear. A great pity. Someone of her position running a noodle shop. "

"But she enjoys it. It gives her something to work for. She often asks after you. "

"A great pity," he said again. "Her husband was a distinguished man. I had much respect for him. And now she's running a noodle shop. Extraordinary." He shook his head gravely. "I'd call in and pay my respects, but then I suppose she'd find that rather awkward. In her present circumstances, I mean. "

"Father, she's not ashamed to be running a noodle shop. She's proud of it. She says she always wanted to run a business, however humble. I expect she'd be delighted if you called on her. "

"Her shop is in Nakagawa, you say? "

"Yes. Quite near the old house. "

Ogata-San seemed to consider this for some time. Then he turned to me and said: "Right, then, Etsuko. Let's go and pay her a visit." He scribbled quickly on the postcard and gave me back the pen.

"You mean, go now, Father? " I was a little taken aback by his sudden decisiveness.

"Yes, why not? "

"Very well. I suppose she could give us lunch. "

"Yes, perhaps. But I've no wish to humiliate the good lady. "

"She'd be pleased to give us lunch. "

Ogata-San nodded and for a moment did not speak. Then he said with some deliberation: "As a matter of fact, Etsuko, I'd been thinking of visiting Nakagawa for some time now. I'd like to call in on a certain person there. "

"Oh? "

"I wonder if he'd be in at this time of day. "

“Who is it you wish to call on, Father?”

“Shigeo. Shigeo Matsuda. I’ve been intending to pay him a call for some time. Perhaps he takes his lunch at home, in which case I may just catch him. That would be preferable to disturbing him at his school.”

For a few minutes, Ogata-San gazed towards the statue, a slightly puzzled look on his face. I remained silent, watching the postcard he was rotating in his hands. Then suddenly he slapped his knees and stood up.

“Right, Etsuko,” he said, “let’s do that then. We’ll try Shigeo first, then we could call in on Mrs Fujiwara.”

It must have been around noon that we boarded the tram to take us to Nakagawa; the car was stiflingly crowded and the streets outside were filled with the lunch time hordes. But as we came away from the city centre, the passengers became more sparse, and by the time the car reached its terminus at Nakagawa, there were only a handful of us left.

Stepping out of the tram, Ogata-San paused for a moment and stroked his chin. It was not easy to tell whether he was savouring the feeling of being back in the district, or whether he was simply trying to remember the way to Shigeo Matsuda’s house. We were standing in a concrete yard surrounded by several empty tram cars. Above our heads, a maze of black wires crossed the air. The sun was shining down with some force, causing the painted surfaces of the cars to gleam sharply.

“What heat,” Ogata-San remarked, wiping his forehead. Then he began to walk, leading the way towards a row of houses which began on the far side of the tram yard.

The district had not changed greatly over the years. As we walked, the narrow roads twisted, climbed and fell. Houses, many of them still familiar to me, stood wherever the hilly landscape would permit; some were perched precariously on slopes, others squeezed into unlikely corners. Blankets and laundry hung from many of the balconies. We walked on, past other houses more grand-looking, but we passed neither Ogata-San's old house nor the house I had once lived in with my parents. In fact, the thought occurred to me that perhaps Ogata-San had chosen a route so as to deliberately avoid them.

I doubt if we walked for much more than ten or fifteen minutes in all, but the sun and the steep hills became very tiring. Eventually we stopped halfway up a steep path, and Ogata-San ushered me underneath the shelter of a leafy tree that hung over the pavement. Then he pointed across the road to a pleasant-looking old house with large sloping roof-tiles in the traditional manner.

"That's Shigeo's place," he said. "I knew his father quite well. As far as I know, his mother still lives with him." Then Ogata-San began to stroke his chin, just as he had done on first stepping off the tram. I said nothing and waited.

"Quite possibly he won't be home," said Ogata-San. "He'll probably spend the lunch break in the staff room with his colleagues."

I continued to wait silently. Ogata-San remained standing beside me, gazing at the house. Finally, he said:

"Etsuko, how far is it to Mrs Fujiwara's from here? Have you any idea?"

"It's just a few minutes' walk."

"Now I think of it, perhaps it may be best if you went on ahead, and I could meet you there. That may be the best thing."

"Very well. If that's what you wish."

"In fact, this was all very inconsiderate of me."

“I’m not an invalid, Father. ”

He laughed quickly, then glanced again towards the house. “I think it might be best,” he said again. “You go on ahead. ”

“Very well. ”

“I don’t expect to be long. In fact” — he glanced once more towards the house — “in fact, why don’t you wait here until I pull the bell. If you see me go in, then you can go on to Mrs Fujiwara’s. This has all been very inconsiderate of me. ”

“It’s perfectly all right, Father. Now listen carefully, or else you’ll never find the noodle shop. You remember where the doctor used to have his surgery? ”

But Ogata-San was no longer listening. Across the road, the entrance gate had slid open, and a thin young man with spectacles had appeared. He was dressed in his shirtsleeves and held a small briefcase under his arm. He squinted a little as he stepped further into the glare, then bent over the briefcase and began searching through it. Shigeo Matsuda looked thinner and more youthful than I remembered him from the few occasions I had met him in the past.

Chapter Nine

Shigeo Matsuda tied the buckle of his briefcase, then glancing about him with a distracted air came walking over to our side of the road. For a brief moment he glanced our way but, not recognizing us, went walking on.

Ogata-San watched him go by. Then when the young man had gone several yards down the road, he called out: "Ah, Shigeo! " Shigeo Matsuda stopped and turned. Then he came towards us with a puzzled look.

"How are you, Shigeo? "

The young man peered through his spectacles, then burst into cheerful laughter.

"Why, Ogata-San! Now this is an unexpected surprise! " He bowed and held out his hand. "What a splendid surprise. Why Etsuko-San too! How are you? How nice to meet again. "

We exchanged bows, and he shook hands with us both. Then he said to Ogata-San:

"Were you by any chance about to visit me? This is bad luck, my lunch break's almost over now." He glanced at his watch. "But we could go back inside for a few minutes. "

"No, no, " said Ogata-San hurriedly. "Don't let us interrupt your work. It just so happened we were passing this way, and I remembered you lived here. I was just pointing out your house to Etsuko. "

"Please, I can spare a few minutes. Let me offer you some tea at least. It's a sweltering day out here. "

"No, no. You must get to work. "

For a moment the two men stood looking at each other.

“And how is everything, Shigeo?” Ogata-San asked. “How are things at the school?”

“Oh, much the same as ever. You know how it is. And you, Ogata-San, you’re enjoying your retirement, I hope? I had no idea you were in Nagasaki. Jiro and I seem to have lost touch these days.” Then he turned to me and said: “I’m always meaning to write, but I’m so forgetful.”

I smiled and made some polite comment. Then the two men looked at each other again.

“You’re looking splendidly well, Ogata-San,” Shigeo Matsuda said. “You find Fukuoka to your liking?”

“Yes, a fine city. My hometown, you know.”

“Really?”

There was another pause. Then Ogata-San said: “Please don’t let us keep you. If you have to hurry away, I quite understand.”

“No, no. I have a few minutes yet. A pity you weren’t passing a little earlier. Perhaps you’d care to call in before you leave Nagasaki.”

“Yes, I’ll try to. But there’s so many people to visit.”

“Yes, I can understand how it is.”

“And your mother, is she well?”

“Yes, she’s fine. Thank you.”

For a moment, they fell silent again.

“I’m glad everything’s going well,” Ogata-San said, eventually. “Yes, we were just passing this way and I was telling Etsuko-San you lived here. In fact, I was just remembering how you used to come and play with Jiro, when you were both little boys.”

Shigeo Matsuda laughed. "Time really flies by, doesn't it?" he said.

"Yes. I was just saying as much to Etsuko. In fact, I was just about to tell her about a curious little thing. I happened to remember it, when I saw your house. A curious little thing."

"Oh yes?"

"Yes. I just happened to remember it when I saw your house, that's all. You see, I was reading something the other day. An article in a journal. The New Education Digest, I think it was called."

The young man said nothing for a moment, then he adjusted his position on the pavement and put down his briefcase.

"I see," he said.

"I was rather surprised to read it. In fact, I was quite astonished."

"Yes. I suppose you would be."

"It was quite extraordinary, Shigeo. Quite extraordinary."

Shigeo Matsuda took a deep breath and looked down at the ground. He nodded, but said nothing.

"I'd meant to come and speak to you for some days now," Ogata-San continued. "But of course, the matter slipped my mind. Shigeo, tell me honestly, do you believe a word of what you wrote? Explain to me what made you write such things. Explain it to me, Shigeo, then I can go home to Fukuoka with my mind at rest. At the moment, I'm very puzzled."

Shigeo Matsuda was prodding a pebble with the end of his shoe. Finally he sighed, looked up at Ogata-San and adjusted his spectacles.

"Many things have changed over the last few years," he said.

“Well, of course they have. I can see that much. What kind of answer is that, Shigeo?”

“Ogata-San, let me explain.” He paused and looked down at the ground again. For a second or two, he scratched at his ear. “You see, you must understand. Many things have changed now. And things are changing still. We live in a different age from those days when ... when you were an influential figure.”

“But, Shigeo, what has this to do with anything? Things may change, but why write such an article? Have I ever done something to offend you?”

“No, never. At least, not to me personally.”

“I should think not. Do you remember the day I introduced you to the principal at your school? That wasn’t so long ago, was it? Or was that perhaps a different era too?”

“Ogata-San” — Shigeo Matsuda had raised his voice, and an air of authority seemed to enter his manner — “Ogata-San, I only wish you’d called in an hour earlier. Then perhaps I’d have been able to explain at greater length. There isn’t time to talk the whole thing over now. But let me just say this much. Yes, I believed everything I wrote in that article and still do. In your day, children in Japan were taught terrible things. They were taught lies of the most damaging kind. Worst of all, they were taught not to see, not to question. And that’s why the country was plunged into the most evil disaster in her entire history.”

“We may have lost the war,” Ogata-San interrupted, “but that’s no reason to ape the ways of the enemy. We lost the war because we didn’t have enough guns and tanks, not because our people were cowardly, not because our society was shallow. You have no idea, Shigeo, how hard we worked, men like myself, men like Dr Endo, whom you also insulted in your article. We cared deeply for the country and worked hard to ensure the correct values were preserved and handed on. ”

“I don’t doubt these things. I don’t doubt you were sincere and hard working. I’ve never questioned that for one moment. But it just so happens that your energies were spent in a misguided direction, an evil direction. You weren’t to know this, but I’m afraid it’s true. It’s all behind us now and we can only be thankful. ”

“This is extraordinary, Shigeo. Can you really believe this? Who taught you to say such things? ”

“Ogata-San, be honest with yourself. In your heart of hearts, you must know yourself what I’m saying is true. And to be fair, you shouldn’t be blamed for not realizing the true consequences of your actions. Very few men could see where it was all leading at the time, and those men were put in prison for saying what they thought. But they’re free now, and they’ll lead us to a new dawn. ”

“A new dawn? What nonsense is this? ”

“Now, I must be on my way. I’m sorry we couldn’t discuss this any longer. ”

“What is this, Shigeo? How can you say these things? You obviously have no idea of the effort and devotion men like Dr Endo gave to their work. You were just a small boy then, how could you know how things were? How can you know what we gave and what we achieved? ”

“As a matter of fact, I do happen to be familiar with certain aspects of your career. For instance, the sacking and imprisoning of the five teachers at Nishizaka. April of 1938, if I’m not mistaken. But those men are free now, and they’ll help us reach a new dawn. Now please excuse me. ” He picked up his briefcase and bowed to us in turn. “My regards to Jiro,” he added, then turned and walked away.

Ogata-San watched the young man disappear down the hill. He continued to stand there for several more moments, not speaking. Then when he turned to me, there was a smile around his eyes.

"How confident young men are," he said. "I suppose I was much the same once. Very sure of my opinions."

"Father," I said. "Perhaps we should go and see Mrs Fujiwara now. It's time we ate lunch."

"Why, of course, Etsuko. This is very inconsiderate of me, making you stand about in this heat. Yes, let's go and see the good lady. I'll be very pleased to see her again."

We made our way down the hill, then crossed a wooden bridge over a narrow river. Below us, children were playing along the riverbank, some with fishing poles. Once, I said to Ogata-San:

"What nonsense he was speaking."

"Who? You mean Shigeo?"

"What vile nonsense. I don't think you should pay the slightest attention, Father."

Ogata-San laughed, but made no reply.

As always at that hour, the shopping area of the district was busy with people. On entering the shaded forecourt of the noodle shop, I was pleased to see several of the tables occupied with customers. Mrs Fujiwara saw us and came across the forecourt.

"Why, Ogata-San," she exclaimed, recognizing him immediately, "how splendid to see you again. It's been a long time, hasn't it?"

"A long time indeed." Ogata-San returned the bow Mrs Fujiwara gave him. "Yes, a long time."

I was struck by the warmth with which they greeted each other, for as far as I knew Ogata-San and Mrs Fujiwara had never known one another well. They exchanged what seemed an endless succession of bows, before Mrs Fujiwara went to fetch us something to eat.

She returned presently with two steaming bowls, apologizing that she had nothing better for us. Ogata-San bowed appreciatively and began to eat.

"I thought you'd have forgotten me long ago, Mrs Fujiwara," he remarked with a smile. "Indeed, it's been a long time."

"It's such a pleasure to meet again like this," Mrs Fujiwara said, seating herself on the edge of my bench.

"Etsuko tells me you reside in Fukuoka these days. I visited Fukuoka several times. A fine city, isn't it?"

"Yes, indeed. Fukuoka is my hometown."

"Fukuoka your hometown? But you lived and worked here for years, Ogata-San. Don't we have any claim on you in Nagasaki?"

Ogata-San laughed and leaned his head to one side. "A man might work and make his contribution in one place, but at the end of it all" — he shrugged and smiled wistfully — "at the end of it all, he still wants to go back to the place where he grew up."

Mrs Fujiwara nodded understandingly. Then she said: "I was just remembering, Ogata-San, the days when you were the headmaster at Suichi's school. He used to be so frightened of you."

Ogata-San laughed. "Yes, I remember your Suichi very well. A bright little boy. Very bright."

"Do you really remember him still, Ogata-San?"

"Yes, of course, I remember Suichi. He used to work very hard. A good little boy. "

"Yes, he was a good little boy. "

Ogata-San pointed at his bowl with his chopsticks. "This is really marvellous," he said.

"Nonsense. I'm sorry I have nothing better to give you. "

"No, really, it's delicious. "

"Now let me see," said Mrs Fujiwara. "There was a teacher in those days, she was very kind to Suichi. Now what was her name? Suzuki, I think it was, Miss Suzuki. Have you any idea what became of her, Ogata-San? "

"Miss Suzuki? Ah, yes, I recall her quite well. But I'm afraid I've no idea where she could be now. "

"She was very kind to Suichi. And there was that other teacher, Kuroda was his name. An excellent young man. "

"Kuroda ..." Ogata-San nodded slowly. "Ah yes, Kuroda. I remember him. A splendid teacher. "

"Yes, a most impressive young man. My husband was very struck by him. Do you know what became of him? "

"Kuroda ..." Ogata-San was still nodding to himself. A streak of sunlight had fallen across his face, lighting up the many wrinkles around his eyes. "Kuroda, now let me see. I ran into him once, quite by accident. That was at the start of the war. I suppose he went off to fight. I've never heard of him since. Yes, an excellent teacher. There are so many from those days I never hear of now. "

Someone called out to Mrs Fujiwara and we watched her go hurriedly across the forecourt to her customer's table. She stood there bowing for several moments, then cleared some dishes from the table and disappeared into the kitchen.

Ogata-San watched her, then shook his head. "A great pity to see her like this," he said, in a low voice. I said nothing and continued to eat. Then Ogata-San leaned across the table and asked: "Etsuko, what did you say was the name of her son? The one who's still alive, I mean."

"Kazuo," I whispered.

He nodded, then returned to his bowl of noodles.

Mrs Fujiwara came back a few moments later. "Such a shame I don't have something better to offer you," she said.

"Nonsense," said Ogata-San. "This is delicious. And how is Kazuo-San these days?"

"He's fine. He's in good health, and he enjoys his work."

"Splendid. Etsuko was telling me he works for a motor car company."

"Yes, he's doing very well there. What's more, he's thinking of marrying again."

"Really?"

"He said once he'd never marry again, but he's starting to look ahead to things now. He has no one in mind as of yet, but at least he's started to think ahead."

"That sounds like good sense," Ogata-San said. "Why, he's still quite a young man, isn't he?"

"Of course he is. He still has all his life ahead of him."

"Of course he has. His whole life ahead of him. You must find him a nice young lady, Mrs Fujiwara."

She laughed. "Don't think I haven't tried. But young women are so different these days. It amazes me, how things have changed so much so quickly."

"Indeed, how right you are. Young women these days are all so headstrong. And forever talking about washing-machines and American dresses. Etsuko here's no different. "

"Nonsense, Father. "

Mrs Fujiwara laughed again, then said: "I remember the first time I heard of a washing-machine, I couldn't believe anyone would want such a thing. Spending all that money, when you had two good hands to work with. But I'm sure Etsuko wouldn't agree with me. "

I was about to say something, but Ogata-San spoke first: "Let me tell you," he said, "what I heard the other day. A man was telling me this, a colleague of Jiro's, in fact. Apparently at the last elections, his wife wouldn't agree with him about which party to vote for. He had to beat her, but she still didn't give way. So in the end, they voted for separate parties. Can you imagine such a thing happening in the old days? Extraordinary. "

Mrs Fujiwara shook her head. "Things are so different now," she said, and sighed. "But I hear from Etsuko, Jiro-San is getting on splendidly now. You must be proud of him, Ogata-San. "

"Yes, I suppose that boy's getting on well enough. In fact, today he'll be representing his firm at a most important meeting. It appears they're thinking of promoting him again. "

"How marvellous. "

"It was only last year he was promoted. I suppose his superiors must have a high opinion of him. "

"How marvellous. You must be very proud of him. "

"He's a determined worker, that one. He always was from an early age. I remember when he was a boy, and all the other fathers were busy telling their children to study harder, I was obliged to keep telling him to play more, it wasn't good for him to work so hard. "

Mrs Fujiwara laughed and shook her head. "Yes, Kazuo's a hard worker too," she said. "He's often reading through his paperwork right into the night. I tell him he shouldn't work so hard, but he won't listen. "

"No, they never listen. And I must admit, I was much the same. But when you believe in what you're doing, you don't feel like idling away the hours. My wife was always telling me to take it easy, but I never listened. "

"Yes, that's just the way Kazuo is. But he'll have to change his ways if he marries again. "

"Don't depend on it," Ogata-San said, with a laugh. Then he put his chopsticks neatly together across his bowl. "Why, that was a splendid meal. "

"Nonsense. I'm sorry I couldn't offer you something better. Would you care for some more? "

"If you have more to spare me, I'd be delighted. These days, I have to make the best of such good cooking, you know. "

"Nonsense," said Mrs Fujiwara again, getting to her feet.

We had not been back long when Jiro came in from work, an hour or so earlier than usual. He greeted his father cheerfully — his show of temper the previous night apparently quite forgotten — before disappearing to take his bath. He returned a little later, dressed in a kimono, humming a song to himself. He seated himself on a cushion and began to towel his hair.

"Well, how did it go? " Ogata-San asked.

“What’s that? Oh, the meeting, you mean. It wasn’t so bad. Not so bad at all.”

I had been on the point of going into the kitchen, but paused at the doorway, waiting to hear what else Jiro had to say. His father, too, continued to look at him. For several moments, Jiro went on towelling his hair, looking at neither of us.

“In fact,” he said at last, “I suppose I did rather well. I persuaded their representatives to sign an agreement. Not exactly a contract, but to all purposes the same thing. My boss was quite surprised. It’s unusual for them to commit themselves like that. He told me to take the rest of the day off.”

“Why, that’s splendid news,” Ogata-San said, then gave a laugh. He glanced towards me, then back at his son. “That’s splendid news.”

“Congratulations,” I said, smiling at my husband. “I’m so glad.”

Jiro looked up, as if noticing me for the first time.

“Why are you standing there like that?” he asked. “I wouldn’t mind some tea, you know.” He put down his towel and began combing his hair.

That evening, in order to celebrate Jiro’s success, I prepared a more elaborate meal than usual. Neither during supper, nor during the rest of the evening, did Ogata-San mention anything of his encounter with Shigeo Matsuda that day. However, just as we began to eat, he said quite suddenly:

“Well, Jiro, I’ll be leaving you tomorrow.”

Jiro looked up. “You’re leaving? Oh, a pity. Well, I hope you enjoyed your visit.”

“Yes, I’ve had a good rest. In fact, I’ve been with you rather longer than I planned.”

“You’re welcome, Father,” said Jiro. “No need to rush, I assure you.”

“Thank you, but I must be getting back now. There’s a few things I have to be getting on with.”

“Please come and visit us again, whenever it’s convenient.”

“Father,” I said. “You must come and see the baby when it arrives.”

Ogata-San smiled. “Perhaps at New Year then,” he said. “But I won’t bother you much earlier than that, Etsuko. You’ll have enough on your hands without having to contend with me.”

“A pity you caught me at such a busy time,” my husband said. “Next time, perhaps, I won’t be so hard pressed and we’ll have more time to talk.”

“Now, don’t worry, Jiro. Nothing has pleased me more than to see how much you devote yourself to your work.”

“Now this deal’s finally gone through,” said Jiro, “I’ll have a little more time. A shame you have to go back just now. And I was thinking of taking a couple of days off too. Still, it can’t be helped, I suppose.”

“Father,” I said, interrupting, “if Jiro’s going to take a few days off, can’t you stay another week?”

My husband stopped eating, but did not look up.

“It’s tempting,” Ogata-San said, “but I really think it’s time I went back.”

Jiro began to eat once more. “A pity,” he said.

“Yes, I really must get the veranda finished before Kikuko and her husband come. They’re bound to want to come down in the autumn. ”

Jiro did not reply, and we all ate in silence for a while. Then Ogata-San said:

“Besides, I can’t sit here thinking about chess all day. ” He laughed, a little strangely.

Jiro nodded, but said nothing. Ogata-San laughed again, then for several moments we continued to eat in silence.

“Do you drink sake these days, Father?” Jiro asked eventually.

“Sake? I take a drop sometimes. Not often. ”

“Since this is your last evening with us, perhaps we should take some sake. ”

Ogata-San seemed to consider this for a moment. Finally, he said with a smile: “There’s no need to make a fuss about an old man like me. But I’ll join you in a cup to celebrate your splendid future. ”

Jiro nodded to me. I went to the cupboard and brought out a bottle and two cups.

“I always thought you’d go far, ” Ogata-San was saying. “You always showed promise. ”

“Just because of what happened today, that’s no guarantee they’ll give me the promotion, ” my husband said. “But I suppose my efforts today will have done no harm. ”

“No, indeed, ” said Ogata-San. “I doubt if you did yourself much harm today. ”

They both watched in silence as I poured out the sake. Then Ogata-San laid down his chopsticks and raised his cup.

“Here’s to your future, Jiro, ” he said.

My husband, some food still in his mouth, also raised his cup.

“And to yours, Father,” he said.

Memory, I realize, can be an unreliable thing; often it is heavily coloured by the circumstances in which one remembers, and no doubt this applies to certain of the recollections I have gathered here. For instance. I find it tempting to persuade myself it was a premonition I experienced that afternoon, that the unpleasant image which entered my thoughts that day was something altogether different — something much more intense and vivid — than the numerous day-dreams which drift through one's imagination during such long and empty hours.

In all possibility, it was nothing so remarkable. The tragedy of the little girl found hanging from a tree — much more so than the earlier child murders — had made a shocked impression on the neighbourhood, and I could not have been alone that summer in being disturbed by such images.

It was the latter part of the afternoon, a day or two after our outing to Inasa, and I was occupying myself with some small chores around the apartment when I happened to glance out of the window. The wasteground outside must have hardened significantly since the first occasion I had watched that large American car, for now I saw it coming across the uneven surface without undue difficulty. It continued to come nearer, then bumped up on to the concrete beneath my window. The glare on the windscreen prevented me from seeing clearly, but I received a distinct impression the driver was not alone. The car moved around the apartment block and out of my vision.

It must have been just then that it happened, just as I was gazing towards the cottage in a somewhat confused state of mind. With no apparent provocation, that chilling image intruded into my thoughts, and I came away from the window with a troubled feeling. I returned to my housework, trying to put the picture out of my mind, but it was some minutes before I felt sufficiently rid of it to give consideration to the reappearance of the large white car.

It was an hour or so later I saw the figure walking across the wasteground towards the cottage. I shaded my eyes to see more clearly; it was a woman — a thin figure — and she walked with a slow deliberate step. The figure paused outside the cottage for some time, then disappeared behind the sloping roof. I continued to watch, but she did not re-emerge; to all appearances, the woman had gone inside.

For several moments, I remained at the window, unsure what to do. Then finally, I put on some sandals and left the apartment. Outside, the day was at its hottest, and the journey across those few dried acres seemed to take an eternity. Indeed, the walk to the cottage tired me so much that when I arrived I had almost forgotten my original purpose. It was with a kind of shock, then, that I heard voices from within the cottage. One of the voices was Mariko's; the other I did not recognize. I stepped closer to the entrance, but could make out no words. For several moments I remained there, not sure what I should do. Then I slid open the entrance and called out. The voices stopped. I waited another moment, then stepped inside.

Chapter Ten

After the brightness of the day outside, the interior of the cottage seemed cool and dark. Here and there, the sun came in sharply through narrow gaps, lighting up small patches on the tatami. The odour of damp wood seemed as strong as ever.

It took a second or two for my eyes to adjust. There was an old woman sitting on the tatami, Mariko in front of her. In turning to face me, the old woman moved her head with caution as if in fear of hurting her neck. Her face was thin, and had a chalky paleness about it which at first quite unnerved me. She looked to be around seventy or so, though the frailness of her neck and shoulders could have derived from ill-health as much as from age. Her kimono was of a dark sombre colour, the kind normally worn in mourning. Her eyes were slightly hooded and watched me with no apparent emotion.

“How do you do,” she said, eventually.

I bowed slightly and returned some greeting. For a second or two, we looked at each other awkwardly.

“Are you a neighbour?” the old woman asked. She had a slow way of speaking her words.

“Yes,” I said. “A friend.”

She continued to look at me for a moment, then asked: “Have you any idea where the occupant has gone? She’s left the child here on her own.”

The little girl had shifted her position so that she was sitting alongside the stranger. At the old woman’s question, Mariko looked at me intently.

“No, I’ve no idea,” I said.

“It’s odd,” said the woman. “The child doesn’t seem to know either. I wonder where she could be. I cannot stay long. ”

We gazed at each other for a few moments more.

“Have you come far?” I asked.

“Quite far. Please excuse my clothes. I’ve just been attending a funeral. ”

“I see. ” I bowed again.

“A sorrowful occasion,” the old woman said, nodding slowly to herself. “A former colleague of my father. My father is too ill to leave the house. He sent me to pay his respects. It was a sorrowful occasion. ” She passed her gaze around the inside of the cottage, moving her head with the same carefulness. “You have no idea where she is?” she asked again.

“No, I’m afraid not. ”

“I cannot wait long. My father will be getting anxious. ”

“Is there perhaps some message I could pass on?” I asked.

The old woman did not answer for a while. Then she said: “You could perhaps tell her I came here and was asking after her. I am a relative. My name is Yasuko Kawada. ”

“Yasuko-San?” I did my best to conceal my surprise. “You’re Yasuko-San, Sachiko’s cousin?”

The old woman bowed, and as she did so her shoulders trembled slightly. “If you would tell her I was here and that I was asking after her. You have no idea where she could be?”

Again, I denied any knowledge. The woman began nodding to herself once more.

“Nagasaki is very different now,” she said. “This afternoon, I could hardly recognize it. ”

“Yes,” I said. “I suppose it’s greatly changed. But do you not live in Nagasaki?”

“We’ve lived in Nagasaki now for many years. It’s greatly changed, as you say. New buildings have appeared, even new streets. It must have been in the spring, the last time I came out into the town. And even since then, new buildings have appeared. I’m certain they were not there in the spring. In fact, on that occasion too, I believe I was attending a funeral. Yes, it was Yamashita-San’s funeral. A funeral in the spring seems all the sadder somehow. You are a neighbour, you say? Then I’m very pleased to make your acquaintance.” Her face trembled and I saw she was smiling; her eyes had become very thin, and her mouth was curving downwards instead of up. I felt uncomfortable standing in the entryway, but did not feel free to step up to the tatami.

“I’m very pleased to meet you,” I said. “Sachiko often mentions you.”

“She mentions me?” The woman seemed to consider this for a moment. “We were expecting her to come and live with us. With my father and myself. Perhaps she told you as much.”

“Yes, she did.”

“We were expecting her three weeks ago. But she has not yet come.”

“Three weeks ago? Well, I suppose there must have been some misunderstanding. I know she’s preparing to move any day.”

The old woman’s eyes passed around the cottage once more. “A pity she isn’t here,” she said. “But if you are her neighbour, then I’m very glad to have made your acquaintance.” She bowed to me again, then went on gazing at me. “Perhaps you will pass a message to her,” she said.

“Why, certainly.”

The woman remained silent for some time. Finally, she said: "We had a slight disagreement, she and I. Perhaps she even told you about it. Nothing more than a misunderstanding, that was all. I was very surprised to find she had packed and left the next day. I was very surprised indeed. I didn't mean to offend her. My father says I am to blame." She paused for a moment. "I didn't mean to offend her," she repeated.

It had never occurred to me before that Sachiko's uncle and cousin would know nothing of the existence of her American friend. I bowed again, at a loss for a suitable reply.

"I've missed her since she left, I confess it," the old woman continued. "I've missed Mariko-San also. I enjoyed their company and it was foolish of me to have lost my temper and said the things I did." She paused again, turned her face towards Mariko, then back to me. "My father, in his own way, misses them also. He can hear, you see. He can hear how much quieter the house is. The other morning I found him awake and he said it reminded him of a tomb. Just like a tomb, he said. It would do my father much good to have them back again. Perhaps she will come back for his sake."

"I'll certainly convey your feelings to Sachiko-San," I said.

"For her own sake too," the old woman said. "After all, it isn't good that a woman should be without a man to guide her. Only harm can come of such a situation. My father is ill, but his life is in no danger. She should come back now, for her own wellbeing if for nothing else." The old woman began to untie a kerchief lying at her side. "In fact, I brought these with me," she said. "Just some cardigans I knitted, nothing more. But it's fine wool. I'd intended to offer them when she came back, but I brought them with me today. I first knitted one for Mariko, then I thought I may as well knit another for her mother." She held up a cardigan, then looked towards the little girl. Her mouth curved downwards again as she smiled.

“They look splendid,” I said. “It must have taken you a long time.”

“It’s fine wool,” the woman said again. She wrapped the kerchief back around the cardigans, then tied it carefully.

“Now I must return. My father will be anxious.”

She got to her feet and came down off the tatami. I assisted her in putting on her wooden sandals. Mariko had come to the edge of the tatami and the old woman lightly touched the top of the child’s head.

“Remember then, Mariko-San,” she said, “tell your mother what I told you. And you’re not to worry about your kittens. There’s plenty of room in the house for them all.”

“We’ll come soon,” Mariko said. “I’ll tell Mother.”

The woman smiled again. Then she turned to me and bowed. “I’m glad to have made your acquaintance. I cannot stay any longer. My father, you see, is unwell.”

“Oh, it’s you, Etsuko,” Sachiko said, when I returned to her cottage that evening. Then she laughed and said: “Don’t look so surprised. You didn’t expect me to stay here for ever, did you?”

Articles of clothing, blankets, numerous other items lay scattered over the tatami. I made some appropriate reply and sat down where I would not be in the way. On the floor beside me, I noticed two splendid-looking kimonos I had never seen Sachiko wear. I saw also — in the middle of the floor, packed into a cardboard box — her delicate teaset of pale white china.

Sachiko had opened wide the central partitions to allow the last of the daylight to come into the cottage; despite that, a dimness was fast setting in, and the sunset coming across the veranda barely reached the far corner where Mariko sat watching her mother quietly. Near her, two of the kittens were fighting playfully; the little girl was holding a third kitten in her arms.

"I expect Mariko told you," I said to Sachiko. "There was a visitor for you earlier. Your cousin was here."

"Yes. Mariko told me." Sachiko continued to pack her trunk.

"You're leaving in the morning?"

"Yes," she said, with a touch of impatience. Then she gave a sigh and looked up at me. "Yes, Etsuko, we're leaving in the morning." She folded something away into a corner of her trunk.

"You have so much luggage," I said, eventually. "How will you ever carry it all?"

For a little while, Sachiko did not answer. Then, continuing to pack, she said: "You know perfectly well, Etsuko. We'll put it in the car."

I remained silent. She took a deep breath, and glanced across the room to where I was sitting.

"Yes, we're leaving Nagasaki, Etsuko. I assure you, I had every intention of coming to say goodbye once all the packing was finished. I wouldn't have left without thanking you, you've been most kind. Incidentally, as regards the loan, it will be returned to you through the post. Please don't worry about that." She began to pack again.

"Where is it you're going?" I asked.

"Kobe. Everything's decided now, once and for all."

"Kobe?"

"Yes, Etsuko, Kobe. Then after that, America. Frank has arranged everything. Aren't you pleased for me?" She smiled quickly, then turned away again.

I went on watching her. Mariko, too, was watching her. The kitten in her arms was struggling to join its companions on the tatami, but the little girl continued to hold it firmly. Beside her, in the corner of the room, I saw the vegetable box she had won at the kujibiki stall; Mariko, it appeared, had converted the box into a house for her kittens.

"Incidentally, Etsuko, that pile over there" — Sachiko pointed — "those items I'll just have to leave behind. I had no idea there was so much. Some of it is of decent enough quality. Please make use of it if you wish. I don't mean any offence, of course. It's merely that some of it is of good quality."

"But what about your uncle?" I said. "And your cousin?"

"My uncle?" She gave a shrug. "It was kind of him to have invited me into his household. But I'm afraid I've made other plans now. You have no idea, Etsuko, how relieved I'll be to leave this place. I trust I've seen the last of such squalor." Then she looked across to me once more and laughed. "I can see exactly what you're thinking. I can assure you, Etsuko, you're quite wrong. He won't let me down this time. He'll be here with the car, first thing tomorrow morning. Aren't you pleased for me?" Sachiko looked around at the luggage strewn over the floor and sighed. Then stepping over a pile of clothes, she knelt beside the box containing the teaset, and began filling it with rolls of wool.

"Have you decided yet?" Mariko said, suddenly.

"We can't talk about it now, Mariko," said her mother. "I'm busy now."

"But you said I could keep them. Don't you remember?"

Sachiko shook the cardboard box gently; the china still rattled. She looked around, found a piece of cloth and began tearing it into strips.

“You said I could keep them,” Mariko said again.

“Mariko, please consider the situation for a moment. How can we possibly take all those creatures with us?”

“But you said I could keep them.”

Sachiko sighed, and for a moment seemed to be considering something. She looked down at the teaset, the pieces of cloth held in her hands.

“You did, Mother,” Mariko said. “Don’t you remember? You said I could.”

Sachiko looked up at her daughter, then over towards the kittens. “Things are different now,” she said, tiredly. Then a wave of irritation crossed her face, and she flung down the pieces of cloth. “Mariko, how can you think so much of these creatures? How can we possibly take them with us? No, we’ll just have to leave them here.”

“But you said I could keep them.”

Sachiko glared at her daughter for a moment. “Can’t you think of anything else?” she said, lowering her voice almost to a whisper. “Aren’t you old enough yet to see there are other things besides these filthy little animals? You’ll just have to grow up a little. You simply can’t have these sentimental attachments for ever. These are just … just animals don’t you see? Don’t you understand that, child? Don’t you understand?”

Mariko stared back at her mother.

“If you like, Mariko-San,” I put in, “I could come and feed them from time to time. Then eventually they’ll find homes for themselves. There’s no need to worry.”

The little girl turned to me. “Mother said I could keep the kittens,” she said.

“Stop being so childish,” said Sachiko, sharply. “You’re being deliberately awkward, as you always are. What does it matter about the dirty little creatures?" She rose to her feet and went over to Mariko's corner. The kittens on the tatami scurried back; Sachiko looked down at them, then took a deep breath. Quite calmly, she turned the vegetable box on to its side — so that the wire-grid panels were facing upwards — reached down and dropped the kittens one by one into the box. She then turned to her daughter; Mariko was still clutching the remaining kitten.

"Give me that," said Sachiko.

Mariko continued to hold the kitten. Sachiko stepped forward and put out her hand. The little girl turned and looked at me.

"This is Atsu," she said. "Do you want to see him, Etsuko-San? This is Atsu."

"Give me that creature, Mariko," Sachiko said. "Don't you understand, it's just an animal. Why can't you understand that, Mariko? Are you really too young? It's not your little baby, it's just an animal, just like a rat or a snake. Now give it to me."

Mariko stared up at her mother. Then slowly, she lowered the kitten and let it drop to the tatami in front of her. The kitten struggled as Sachiko lifted it off the ground. She dropped it into the vegetable box and slid shut the wire grid.

"Stay here," she said to her daughter, and picked the box up in her arms. Then as she came past, she said to me: "It's so stupid, these are just animals, what does it matter?"

Mariko rose to her feet and seemed about to follow her mother. Sachiko turned at the entryway and said: "Do as you're told. Stay here."

For a few moments, Mariko remained standing at the edge of the tatami, looking at the doorway where her mother had disappeared.

“Wait for your mother here, Mariko-San,” I said to her.

The little girl turned and looked at me. Then the next moment, she had gone.

For a minute or two, I did not move. Then eventually I got to my feet and put on my sandals. From the doorway, I could see Sachiko down by the water, the vegetable box beside her feet; she appeared not to have noticed her daughter standing several yards behind her, just at the point where the ground began to slope down steeply. I left the cottage and made my way to where Mariko was standing.

“Let’s go back to the house, Mariko-San,” I said, gently.

The little girl’s eyes remained on her mother, her face devoid of any expression. Down in front of us, Sachiko knelt cautiously on the bank, then moved the box a little nearer.

“Let’s go inside, Mariko,” I said again, but the little girl continued to ignore me. I left her and walked down the muddy slope to where Sachiko was kneeling. The sunset was coming through the trees on the opposite bank, and the reeds that grew along the water’s edge cast long shadows on the muddy ground around us. Sachiko had found some grass to kneel on, but that too was thick with mud.

“Can’t we let them loose?” I said, quietly. “You never know. Someone may want them.”

Sachiko was gazing down into the vegetable box through the wire gauze. She slid open a panel, brought out a kitten and shut the box again. She held the kitten in both hands, looked at it for a few seconds, then glanced up at me. “It’s just an animal, Etsuko,” she said. “That’s all it is.”

She put the kitten into the water and held it there. She remained like that for some moments, staring into the water, both hands beneath the surface. She was wearing a casual summer kimono, and the corners of each sleeve touched the water.

Then for the first time, without taking her hands from the water, Sachiko threw a glance over her shoulder towards her daughter. Instinctively, I followed her glance, and for one brief moment the two of us were both staring back up at Mariko. The little girl was standing at the top of the slope, watching with the same blank expression. On seeing her mother's face turn to her, she moved her head very slightly; then she remained quite still, her hands behind her back.

Sachiko brought her hands out of the water and stared at the kitten she was still holding. She brought it closer to her face and the water ran down her wrists and arms.

"It's still alive," she said, tiredly. Then she turned to me and said: "Look at this water, Etsuko. It's so dirty." With an air of disgust, she dropped the soaked kitten back into the box and shut it. "How these things struggle," she muttered, and held up her wrists to show me the scratch-marks. Somehow, Sachiko's hair had also become wet; one drop, then another fell from a thin strand which hung down one side of her face.

Sachiko adjusted her position then pushed the vegetable box over the edge of the bank; the box rolled and landed in the water. To prevent it floating, Sachiko leaned forward and held it down. The water came almost halfway up the wire-grid. She continued to hold down the box, then finally pushed it with both hands. The box floated a little way into the river, bobbed and sank further. Sachiko got to her feet, and we both of us watched the box. It continued to float, then caught in the current and began moving more swiftly downstream.

Some movement caught my eye and made me turn. Mariko had run several yards down the river's edge, to a spot where the bank jutted out into the water. She stood there watching the box float on, her face still expressionless. The box caught in some reeds, freed itself and continued its journey. Mariko began to run again. She ran on some distance along the bank, then stopped again to watch the box. By this time, only a small corner was visible above the surface.

"This water's so dirty," Sachiko said. She had been shaking the water off her hands. She squeezed in turn the sleeve-ends of her kimono, then brushed the mud from her knees. "Let's go back inside, Etsuko. The insects here are becoming intolerable."

"Shouldn't we go and get Mariko? It will be dark soon."

Sachiko turned and called her daughter's name. Mariko was now fifty yards or so away, still looking at the water. She did not seem to hear and Sachiko gave a shrug. "She'll come back in time," she said. "Now, I must finish packing before the light goes completely." She began to walk up the slope towards the cottage.

Sachiko lit the lantern and hung it from a low wooden beam.

"Don't worry yourself, Etsuko," she said. "She'll be back soon enough." She made her way through the various items strewn over the tatami, and seated herself, as before, in front of the open partitions. Behind her, the sky had become pale and faded.

She began packing again. I sat down at the opposite side of the room and watched her.

"What are your plans now?" I asked. "What will you do once you arrive in Kobe?"

"Everything's been arranged, Etsuko," she said, without looking up. "There's no need to worry. Frank has seen to everything."

"But why Kobe?"

"He has friends there. At the American base. He's been entrusted with a job on a cargo ship, and he'll be in America in a very short time. Then he'll send us the necessary amount of money, and we'll go and join him. He's seen to all the arrangements. "

"You mean, he's leaving Japan without you?"

Sachiko laughed. "One needs to be patient, Etsuko. Once he arrives in America, he'll be able to work and send money. It's by far the most sensible solution. After all, it would be so much easier for him to find work once he's back in America. I don't mind waiting a little. "

"I see. "

"He's seen to everything, Etsuko. He's found a place for us to stay in Kobe, and he's seen to it that we'll get on a ship at almost half the usual cost. " She gave a sigh. "You have no idea how pleased I am to be leaving this place. "

Sachiko continued to pack. The pale light from outside fell on one side of her face, but her hands and sleeves were caught in the glow from the lantern. It was a strange effect.

"Do you expect to wait long in Kobe?" I asked.

She shrugged. "I'm prepared to be patient, Etsuko. One needs to be patient. "

I could not see in the dimness what it was she was folding; it seemed to be giving her some difficulty, for she opened and refolded it several times.

"In any case, Etsuko, " she went on, "why would he have gone to all this trouble if he wasn't absolutely sincere? Why would he have gone to all this trouble on my behalf? Sometimes, Etsuko, you seem so doubting. You should be happy for me. Things are working out at last. "

"Yes, of course. I'm very happy for you. "

"But really, Etsuko, it would be unfair to start doubting him after he's gone to all this trouble. It would be quite unfair. "

“Yes. ”

“And Mariko would be happier there. America is a far better place for a young girl to grow up. Out there, she could do all kinds of things with her life. She could become a business girl. Or she could study painting at college and become an artist. All these things are much easier in America, Etsuko. Japan is no place for a girl. What can she look forward to here? ”

I made no reply. Sachiko glanced up at me and gave a small laugh.

“Try and smile, Etsuko,” she said. “Things will turn out well in the end. ”

“Yes, I’m sure they will. ”

“Of course they will. ”

“Yes. ”

For another minute or so, Sachiko continued with her packing. Then her hands became still, and she gazed across the room towards me, her face caught in that strange mixture of light.

“I suppose you think I’m a fool,” she said, quietly. “Don’t you, Etsuko? ”

I looked back at her, a little surprised.

“I realize we may never see America,” she said. “And even if we did, I know how difficult things will be. Did you think I never knew that? ”

I gave no reply, and we went on staring at each other.

“But what of it? ” said Sachiko. “What difference does it make? Why shouldn’t I go to Kobe? After all, Etsuko, what do I have to lose? There’s nothing for me at my uncle’s house. Just a few empty rooms, that’s all. I could sit there in a room and grow old. Other than that there’ll be nothing.

Just empty rooms, that's all. You know that yourself, Etsuko. "

"But Mariko," I said. "What about Mariko?"

"Mariko? She'll manage well enough. She'll just have to." Sachiko continued to gaze at me through the dimness, one side of her face in shadow. Then she said: "Do you think I imagine for one moment that I'm a good mother to her?"

I remained silent. Then suddenly, Sachiko laughed.

"Why are we talking like this?" she said, and her hands began to move busily once more. "Everything will turn out well, I assure you. I'll write to you when I reach America. Perhaps, Etsuko, you'll even come and visit us one day. You could bring your child with you. "

"Yes, indeed. "

"Perhaps you'll have several children by then. "

"Yes," I said, laughing awkwardly. "You never know. "

Sachiko gave a sigh and lifted both hands into the air. "There's so much to pack," she murmured. "I'll just have to leave some of it behind. "

I sat there for some moments, watching her.

"If you wish," I said, eventually, "I could go and look for Mariko. It's getting rather late. "

"You'll only tire yourself, Etsuko. I'll finish packing and if she still hasn't come back we could go and look for her together. "

"It's all right. I'll see if I can find her. It's nearly dark now. "

Sachiko glanced up, then shrugged. "Perhaps you'd best take the lantern with you," she said. "It's quite slippery along the bank. "

I rose to my feet and took the lantern down from the beam. The shadows moved across the cottage as I walked with it towards the doorway. As I was leaving, I glanced back towards Sachiko. I could see only her silhouette, seated before the open partitions, the sky behind her turned almost to night.

Insects followed my lantern as I made my way along the river. Occasionally, some creature would become trapped inside, and I would then have to stop and hold the lantern still until it had found its way out.

In time, the small wooden bridge appeared on the bank ahead of me. While crossing it, I stopped for a moment to gaze at the evening sky. As I recall, a strange sense of tranquillity came over me there on that bridge. I stood there for some minutes, leaning over the rail, listening to the sounds of the river below me. When finally I turned, I saw my own shadow, cast by the lantern, thrown across the wooden slats of the bridge.

“What are you doing here?” I asked, for the little girl was before me, sat crouched beneath the opposite rail. I came forward until I could see her more clearly under my lantern. She was looking at her palms and said nothing.

“What’s the matter with you?” I said. “Why are you sitting here like this?”

The insects were clustering around the lantern. I put it down in front of me, and the child’s face became more sharply illuminated. After a long silence, she said: “I don’t want to go away. I don’t want to go away tomorrow.”

I gave a sigh. “But you’ll like it. Everyone’s a little frightened of new things. You’ll like it over there.”

“I don’t want to go away. And I don’t like him. He’s like a Pig”

“You’re not to speak like that,” I said, angrily. We stared at each other for a moment, then she looked back down at her hands.

“You mustn’t speak like that,” I said, more calmly. “He’s very fond of you, and he’ll be just like a new father. Everything will turn out well, I promise.”

The child said nothing. I sighed again.

“In any case,” I went on, “if you don’t like it over there, we can always come back.”

This time she looked up at me questioningly.

“Yes, I promise,” I said. “If you don’t like it over there, we’ll come straight back. But we have to try it and see if we like it there. I’m sure we will.”

The little girl was watching me closely. “Why are you holding that?” she asked.

“This? It just caught around my sandal, that’s all.”

“Why are you holding it?”

“I told you. It caught around my foot. What’s wrong with you?” I gave a short laugh. “Why are you looking at me like that? I’m not going to hurt you.”

Without taking her eyes from me, she rose slowly to her feet.

“What’s wrong with you?” I repeated.

The child began to run, her footsteps drumming along the wooden boards. She stopped at the end of the bridge and stood watching me suspiciously. I smiled at her and picked up the lantern. The child began once more to run.

A half-moon had appeared above the water and for several quiet moments I remained on the bridge, gazing at it. Once, through the dimness, I thought I could see Mariko running along the riverbank in the direction of the cottage.

Chapter Eleven

At first, I was sure someone had walked past my bed and out of my room, closing the door quietly. Then I became more awake, and I realized how fanciful an idea this was.

I lay in bed listening for further noises. Quite obviously, I had heard Niki in the next room; she had complained throughout her stay of being unable to sleep well. Or possibly there had been no noises at all, I had awoken again during the early hours from habit.

The sound of birds came from outside, but my room was still in darkness. After several minutes I rose and found my dressing gown. When I opened my door, the light outside was very pale. I stepped further on to the landing and almost by instinct cast a glance down to the far end of the corridor, towards Keiko's door.

Then, for a moment, I was sure I had heard a sound come from within Keiko's room, a small clear sound amidst the singing of the birds outside. I stood still, listening, then began to walk towards the door. There came more noises, and I realized they were coming from the kitchen downstairs. I remained on the landing for a moment, then made my way down the staircase.

Niki was coming out of the kitchen and started on seeing me.

“Oh, Mother, you gave me a real fright.”

In the murky light of the hallway, I could see her thin figure in a pale dressing gown holding a cup in both her hands.

“I'm sorry, Niki. I thought perhaps you were a burglar.”

My daughter took a deep breath, but still seemed shaken. Then she said: "I couldn't sleep very well. So I thought I might as well make some coffee."

"What time is it now?"

"About five, I suppose."

She went into the living room, leaving me standing at the foot of the stairs. I went to the kitchen to make myself coffee before going to join her. In the living room, Niki had opened the curtains and was sitting astride a hard-backed chair, looking emptily out into the garden. The grey light from the window fell on her face.

"Will it rain again, do you think?" I asked.

She shrugged and continued to look out of the window. I sat down near the fireplace and watched her. Then she sighed tiredly and said:

"I don't seem to sleep very well. I keep having these bad dreams all the time."

"That's worrying, Niki. At your age you should have no problems sleeping."

She said nothing and went on looking at the garden.

"What kind of bad dreams do you have?" I asked.

"Oh, just bad dreams."

"Bad dreams about what, Niki?"

"Just bad dreams," she said, suddenly irritated. "What does it matter what they're about?"

We fell silent for a moment. Then Niki said without turning:

"I suppose Dad should have looked after her a bit more, shouldn't he? He ignored her most of the time. It wasn't fair really."

I waited to see if she would say more. Then I said: "Well, it's understandable enough. He wasn't her real father, after all."

"But it wasn't fair really."

Outside, I could see, it was nearly daylight. A lone bird was making its noises somewhere close by the window.

"Your father was rather idealistic at times," I said. "In those days, you see, he really believed we could give her a happy life over here."

Niki shrugged. I watched her for a little longer, then said: "But you see, Niki, I knew all along. I knew all along she wouldn't be happy over here. But I decided to bring her just the same."

My daughter seemed to consider this for a moment. "Don't be silly," she said, turning to me, "how could you have known? And you did everything you could for her. You're the last person anyone could blame."

I remained silent. Her face, devoid of any make-up, looked very young.

"Anyway," she said, "sometimes you've got to take risks. You did exactly the right thing. You can't just watch your life wasting away."

I put down the coffee cup I had been holding and stared past her, out into the garden. There were no signs of rain and the sky seemed clearer than on previous mornings.

"It would have been so stupid," Niki went on, "if you'd just accepted everything the way it was and just stayed where you were. At least you made an effort."

"As you say. Now let's not discuss it any further."

"It's so stupid the way people just waste away their lives."

“Let’s not discuss it any further,” I said, more firmly. “There’s no point in going over all that now.”

My daughter turned away again. We sat without talking for a little while, then I rose to my feet and came closer to the window.

“It looks a much better morning today,” I said. “Perhaps the sun will come out. If it does, Niki, we could go for a walk. It would do us a lot of good.”

“I suppose so,” she mumbled.

When I left the living room, my daughter was still sitting astride her chair, her chin supported by a hand, gazing emptily out into the garden.

When the telephone rang, Niki and I were finishing breakfast in the kitchen. It had rung for her so frequently during the previous few days that it seemed natural she should be the one to go and answer it. By the time she returned, her coffee had grown cold.

“Your friends again?” I asked.

She nodded, then went over to switch on the kettle.

“Actually, Mother,” she said, “I’ll have to go back this afternoon. Is that all right?” She was standing with one hand on the handle of the kettle, the other on her hip.

“Of course it’s all right. It’s been very nice having you here, Niki.”

“I’ll come and see you again soon. But I’ve really got to be getting back now.”

“You don’t have to apologize. It’s very important you lead your own life now.”

Niki turned away and waited for her kettle. The windows above the sink unit had misted over a little, but outside the sun was shining. Niki poured herself coffee, then sat down at the table.

“Oh, by the way, Mother,” she said. “You know that friend I was telling you about, the one writing the poem about you?”

I smiled. “Oh yes. Your friend.”

“She wanted me to bring back a photo or something. Of Nagasaki. Have you got anything like that? An old postcard or something?”

“I should think I could find something for you. How absurd” — I gave a laugh — “Whatever can she be writing about me?”

“She’s a really good poet. She’s been through a lot, you see. That’s why I told her about you.”

“I’m sure she’ll write a marvellous poem, Niki.”

“Just an old postcard, anything like that. Just so she can see what everything was like.”

“Well, Niki, I’m not so sure. It has to show what everything was like, does it?”

“You know what I mean.”

I laughed again. “I’ll have a look for you later.”

Niki had been buttering a piece of toast, but now she began to scrape some butter off again. My daughter has been thin since childhood, and the idea that she was concerned at becoming fat amused me. I watched her for a moment.

“Still,” I said, eventually, “it’s a pity you’re leaving today. I was about to suggest we went to the cinema this evening.”

“The cinema? Why, what’s on?”

“I don’t know what kind of films they show these days. I was hoping you’d know more about it.”

“Actually, Mother, it’s ages since we went to a film together, isn’t it? Not since I was little.” Niki smiled, and for a moment her face became child-like. Then she put down her knife and gazed at her coffee cup. “I don’t go to see films much either,” she said. “There’s always loads on in London, but we don’t go much.”

“Well, if you prefer, there’s always the theatre. The bus takes you right up to the theatre now. I don’t know what they have on at the moment, but we could find out. Is that the local paper there, just behind you?”

“Well, Mother, don’t bother. There’s not much point.”

“I think they do quite good plays sometimes. Some quite modern ones. It’ll say in the paper.”

“There’s not much point, Mother. I’ll have to go back today anyhow. I’d like to stay, but I’ve really got to get back.”

“Of course, Niki. There’s no need to apologize.” I smiled at her across the table. “As a matter of fact, it’s a great comfort to me you have good friends you enjoy being with. You’re always welcome to bring any of them here.”

“Yes, Mother, thank you.”

The spare bedroom Niki had been using was small and stark; the sun was streaming into it that morning.

“Will this do for your friend?” I asked, from the doorway.

Niki was packing her suitcase on the bed and glanced up briefly at the calendar I had found. “That’s fine,” she said.

I stepped further into the room. From the window, I could see the orchard below and the neat rows of thin young trees. The calendar I was holding had originally offered a photograph for each month, but all but the last had been torn away. For a moment, I regarded the remaining picture.

“Don’t give me anything important,” Niki said. “If there isn’t anything, it doesn’t matter.”

I laughed and laid the picture down on the bed alongside her other things. “It’s just an old calendar, that’s all. I’ve no idea why I’ve kept it.”

Niki pushed some hair back behind her ear, then continued packing.

“I suppose,” I said, eventually, “you plan to go on living in London for the time being.”

She gave a shrug. “Well, I’m quite happy there.”

“You must send my best wishes to all your friends.”

“All right, I will.”

“And to David. That was his name, wasn’t it?”

She gave another shrug, but said nothing. She had brought with her three separate pairs of boots and now she was struggling to find a way of putting them in her case.

“I suppose, Niki, you don’t have any plans yet to be getting married?”

“What do I want to get married for?”

“I was just asking.”

“Why should I get married? What’s the point of that?”

“You plan to just go on — living in London, do you?”

“Well, why should I get married? That’s so stupid, Mother.” She rolled up the calendar and packed it away. “So many women just get brainwashed. They think all there is to life is getting married and having a load of kids.”

I continued to watch her. Then I said: “But in the end, Niki, there isn’t very much else.”

“God, Mother, there’s plenty of things I could do. I don’t want to just get stuck away somewhere with a husband and a load of screaming kids. Why are you going on about it suddenly anyway?” The lid of her suitcase would not shut. She pushed down at it impatiently.

“I was only wondering what your plans were, Niki,” I said, with a laugh. “There’s no need to get so cross. Of course, you must do what you choose.”

She opened the lid again and adjusted some of the contents.

“Now, Niki, there’s no need to get so cross.”

This time, she managed to close the lid. “God knows why I brought so much,” she muttered to herself.

“What do you say to people, Mother?” Niki asked. “What do you say when they ask where I am?”

My daughter had decided she need not leave until after lunch and we had come out walking through the orchard behind the house. The sun was still out, but the air was chilly. I gave her a puzzled look.

“I just tell them you’re living in London, Niki. Isn’t that the truth?”

“I suppose so. But don’t they ask what I’m doing? Like that old Mrs Waters the other day?”

“Yes, sometimes they ask. I tell them you’re living with your friends. Really, Niki, I had no idea you were so concerned about what people thought of you.”

“I’m not.”

We continued to walk slowly. In many places, the ground had become marshy.

“I suppose you don’t like it very much, do you, Mother?”

“Like what, Niki?”

“The way things are with me. You don’t like me living away. With David and all that.”

We had come to the end of the orchard. Niki stepped out on to a small winding lane and crossed to the other side, towards the wooden gates of a field. I followed her. The grass field was large and rose gradually as it spread away from us. At its crest, we could see two thin sycamore trees against the sky.

“I’m not ashamed of you, Niki,” I said. “You must live as you think best.”

My daughter was gazing at the field. “They used to have horses here, didn’t they?” she said, putting her arms up on to the gate. I looked, but there were no horses to be seen.

“You know, it’s strange,” I said. “I remember when I first married, there was a lot of argument because my husband didn’t want to live with his father. You see, in those days that was still quite expected in Japan. There was a lot of argument about that.”

“I bet you were relieved,” Niki said, not taking her eyes from the field.

“Relieved? About what?”

“About not having to live with his father.”

“On the contrary, Niki. I would have been happy if he’d lived with us. Besides, he was a widower. It’s not a bad thing at all, the old Japanese way.”

“Obviously, you’d say that now. I bet that’s not what you thought at the time though.”

“But Niki, you really don’t understand. I was very fond of my father-in-law.” I looked at her for a moment, then finally gave a laugh. "Perhaps you're right. Perhaps I was relieved he didn't come to live with us. I don't remember now." I reached forward and touched the top of the wooden gate. A little moisture came away on my fingers. I realized Niki was watching me and I held up my hand to show her. "There's still some frost," I said.

"Do you still think about Japan a lot, Mother?"

"I suppose so." I turned back to the field. "I have a few memories."

Two ponies had appeared near the sycamore trees. For a moment they stood quite still, in the sunshine, side by side.

"That calendar I gave you this morning," I said. "That's a view of the harbour in Nagasaki. This morning I was remembering the time we went there once, on a day-trip. Those hills over the harbour are very beautiful."

The ponies moved slowly behind the trees.

"What was so special about it?" said Niki.

"Special?"

"About the day you spent at the harbour."

"Oh, there was nothing special about it. I was just remembering it, that's all. Keiko was happy that day. We rode on the cable-cars." I gave a laugh and turned to Niki. "No, there was nothing special about it. It's just a happy memory, that's all."

My daughter gave a sigh. "Everything's so quiet out here," she said. "I don't remember things being this quiet."

"Yes, it must seem quiet after London."

"I suppose it gets a bit boring sometimes, out here on your own."

“But I enjoy the quiet, Niki. I always think it’s so truly like England out here. ”

I turned away from the field, and for a moment looked back towards the orchard behind us.

“All those trees weren’t here when we first came,” I said, eventually. “It was all fields, and you could see the house from here. When your father first brought me down here, Niki, I remember thinking how so truly like England everything looked. All these fields, and the house too. It was just the way I always imagined England would be and I was so pleased. ”

Niki took a deep breath and moved away from the gate. “We’d better be getting back,” she said. “I’ll have to be going fairly soon. ”

As we walked back through the orchard, the sky seemed to cloud over.

“I was just thinking the other day,” I said, “perhaps I should sell the house now. ”

“Sell it? ”

“Yes. Move somewhere smaller perhaps. It’s just an idea. ”

“You want to sell the house?” My daughter gave me a concerned look. “But it’s a really nice house. ”

“But it’s so large now. ”

“But it’s a really nice house, Mother. It’d be a shame. ”

“I suppose so. It was just an idea, Niki, that’s all. ”

I would like to have seen her to the railway station — it is only a few minutes’ walk — but the idea seemed to embarrass her. She left shortly after lunch with an oddly self-conscious air, as if she were leaving without my approval. The afternoon had turned grey and windy, and I stood in the doorway as she walked down to the end of the drive. She was dressed in the same tight-fitting clothes she had arrived in, and her suitcase made her drag her step a little. When she reached the gate, Niki glanced back and seemed surprised to find me still standing at the door. I smiled and waved to her.

我发现托尼·加德纳坐在游客当中的那天早上，春天刚刚降临威尼斯这里。我们搬到外面广场上来刚好一个星期——跟你说，真是松了口气，在咖啡厅的最里面演奏又闷又挡着要用楼梯的客人的路。那天早上微风习习，崭新的帐篷在我们身边啪啪作响，我们都觉得比平时更加愉悦和精神，我想这种心情一定反映在我们的音乐里了。

当然了，还有另外一个小小的原因：我不是意大利人，更别说是威尼斯人。那个吹中音萨克斯风的捷克大个子情况和我一样。大伙儿都喜欢我们，乐队需要我们，可我们就是不符合正式要求。咖啡厅的经理们总是告诉你：闭上你的嘴，只管演奏就是了。这样游客们就不会知道你不是意大利人了。穿上你的制服，戴上你的太阳镜，头发往后梳，没有人看得出来，只要别开口说话。

可是我混得还不错。三支乐队都需要吉他手，特别是当他们与竞争对手同时演奏的时候，他们需要一个轻柔、纯净，但是传得远的声音作背景和弦。我猜你会想：三支乐队同时在一个广场上演奏，听起来多混乱啊。可是圣马可广场很大，没有问题。在广场上溜达的游客会听见一个曲子渐渐消失，另一个曲子渐渐大声，就好像他在调收音机的台。会让游客们受不了的是你演奏太多古典的东西，这些乐器演奏版的著名咏叹调。得了，这里是圣马可，游客们不想听最新的流行

托尼·加德纳是我母亲最喜爱的歌手。在我离开家之前，在那个共产主义时代，那样的唱片是很难弄到的，可我母亲有他几乎所有的唱片。小时候我刮坏过一张母亲的珍贵收藏。我们住的公寓很挤，可像我那个年纪的男孩子有时就是好动，尤其是在冬天不能出去的时候。所以我就从家里的小沙发跳到扶手椅上这样玩，有一次，我不小心撞到了唱片机。唱针“嗞”的一声划过唱片——那时还没有CD——母亲从厨房里出来，冲我大声嚷嚷。我很伤心，不是因为她冲我大声嚷嚷，而是因为我知道那是托尼·加德纳的唱片，我知道那张唱片对她来说多么重要。我还知道从此以后，当加德纳轻声吟唱那些美国歌曲时，唱片就会发出“嗞嗞”的声音。多年以后，我在华沙工作时得知了黑市唱片，我给母亲买了所有的托尼·加德纳的唱片，代替旧的那些，包括我刮坏的那一张。我花了三年才买齐，可我坚持不懈地买，一张张地买，每次回去看望她都带回去一张。

现在你知道当我认出托尼·加德纳时为什么会那么激动了吧，就在六米以外啊。起初我不敢相信，我换一个和弦时一定慢了一拍。是托尼·加德纳！我亲爱的母亲要是知道了会说什么啊！为了她，为了她的回忆，我一定要去跟托尼·加德纳说句话，才不管其他乐手会不会笑话我，说我像个小听差。

但是我当然不可能推开桌椅，朝他冲过去。我还得把演出演完。跟你说，真是痛苦极了，还有三四首歌，每一秒钟我都以为他要起身离开了。可是他一直坐在那里，独自一人，盯着眼前的咖啡，搅呀搅，好像搞不清楚服务生给他端来的到底是什么东西。他的装扮与一般的美国游客一样，浅蓝色的套头运动衫、宽松的灰裤子。以前唱片封面上又黑又亮的头发如今几乎都白了，但还挺浓密，而且梳得整整

齐齐，发型也没有变。我刚认出他时，他把墨镜拿在手里——他要是戴着墨镜我不一定能认出来——但是后来我一边演奏一边盯着他，他一会儿把墨镜戴上，一会儿拿下来，一会儿又戴上。他看上去心事重重，而且没有认真在听我们演奏，让我很是失望。

这组歌曲终于演完了。我什么也没有对其他人说，匆匆走出帐篷，朝托尼·加德纳的桌子走去，突然想到不知如何与他攀谈，心里紧张了一下。我站在他的身后，他的第六感却让他转过身来，看着我——我想这是出于多年来有歌迷来找他的习惯——接着我就介绍自己，告诉他我多么崇拜他，我在他刚刚听的那个乐队里，我母亲是他热情的歌迷等等，一古脑儿全都说了。他表情严肃地听着，时不时点点头，好像他是我的医生。我不停地讲，他只偶尔说一声：“是吗？”过了一会儿我想我该走了，转身要离开，突然听见他说：

“你说你是从波兰来的。日子一定不好过吧？”

“都过去了。”我笑笑，耸了耸肩。“如今我们是个自由的国家了。一个民主的国家。”

“那太好了。那就是刚刚为我们演奏的你的同仁吧。坐下。来杯咖啡？”

我说我不想叨扰他，可是加德纳先生的语气里有丝丝温和的坚持。“不会，不会，坐下。你刚才说你母亲喜欢我的唱片。”

于是我就坐了下来，接着说。说我的母亲、我们住的公寓、黑市上的唱片。我记不得那些唱片的名字，但我能够描述我印象中那些唱片套子的样子，每当我这么做时，他就会举起一根手指说“哦，那张是《独一无二》。《独一无二的托尼·加德纳》”之类的。我觉得我们俩都很喜欢这个游戏，突然我注意到加德纳先生的视线从我身上移开了，我转过头去，刚好看见一个女人朝我们走来。

她是那种非常优雅的美国女人，头发优美，衣服漂亮，身材姣好，不仔细看的话不会发现她们已经不年轻了。远远地看，我还以为是从光鲜的时尚杂志里走出来的模特儿呢。可是当她在加德纳先生身旁坐下，把墨镜推到额头上时，我发现她至少五十了，甚至不止。加德纳先生对我说：“这位是我的妻子琳迪。”

加德纳太太朝我敷衍地笑了笑，问她丈夫：“这位是谁？你交了个朋友。”

“是的，亲爱的。我们聊得正欢呢，我和……抱歉，朋友，我还不知道你的名字呢。”

“扬，”我立刻答道。“但朋友们都叫我雅内克。”

琳迪·加德纳说：“你是说你的小名比真名长？怎么会这样呢？”

“别对人家无礼，亲爱的。”

“我没有无礼。”

“别取笑人家的名字，亲爱的。这样才是好姑娘。”

琳迪·加德纳无助地转向我说：“你瞧瞧他说些什么？我冒犯你了吗？”

“不，不，”我说，“一点也没有，加德纳太太。”

“他总是说我对歌迷无礼。可是我没有无礼。我刚刚对你无礼了吗？”然后她转向加德纳先生，“我很正常地在跟歌迷讲话，亲爱的。我就是这样讲话的。我从来没有无礼。”

“好了，亲爱的，”加德纳先生说，“别小题大做了。而且，这位先生也不是什么歌迷。”

“哦，他不是歌迷？那他是谁？失散多年的侄子？”

“别这么说话，亲爱的。这位先生是我的同行。一位职业乐手。刚刚他在为我们演奏呢。”他指了指我们的帐篷。

“哦，对！”琳迪·加德纳再次转向我，“刚刚你在那里演奏来着？啊，很好听。你是拉手风琴的？拉得真好！”

“谢谢。其实我是弹吉他的。”

“弹吉他的？少来了。一分钟之前我还在看着你呢。就坐在那里，坐在那个拉低音提琴的旁边，手风琴拉得真好。”

“抱歉，拉手风琴的是卡洛。秃头、个大的……”

“真的？你不是在骗我？”

“亲爱的，我说了，别对人家无礼。”

加德纳先生并没有提高音量，可是他的声音突然变得严厉和气愤，接着，出现了一阵异样的沉默。最后，是加德纳先生自己打破了

沉默，温柔地说：

“对不起，亲爱的。我不是有意要训你的。”

他伸出一只手去拉妻子的手。我本以为加德纳太太会推开他，没想到她在椅子上挪了挪身子，好靠近加德纳先生一点，然后把另一只手搭在他们握紧的手上。一时间他们就那么坐着，加德纳先生低着头，他妻子的视线越过他的肩膀，出神地看着广场那头的大教堂。她的眼睛虽然看着那里，但却好像并没有真的在看什么。那几秒钟，他们好像不仅忘了同桌的我，甚至忘了整个广场的人。最后加德纳太太轻声说：

“没关系，亲爱的。是我错了。惹你生气了。”

他们又这样手拉着手对坐了一会儿。最后她叹了口气，放开加德纳先生的手，看着我。这次她看我的样子和之前不一样。这次我能感觉到她的魅力，就好像她心里有这么个刻度盘，从一到十，此时，对我，她决定拨到六或七，可我已经觉得够强烈的了，如果此时她叫我为她做些什么——比如说到广场对面帮她买花——我会欣然从命。

“你说你叫雅内克，是吗？”她说。“对不起，雅内克。托尼说得对。我不应该那样子跟你说话。”

“加德纳太太，您真的不用担心……”

“我还打扰了你们的谈话。音乐家之间的谈话，我想。好吧，我走了，你们继续聊。”

“你用不着离开，亲爱的，”加德纳先生说。

“用得着，亲爱的。我很想去那家普拉达专卖店看看。我刚刚过来就是要跟你说我会晚一点。”

“好，亲爱的。”托尼·加德纳第一次直了直身子，深吸了一口气。“只要你喜欢就好。”

“我在那家店里会过得很愉快的。你们俩，好好聊吧。”她站起来，拍了一下我的肩膀。“保重，雅内克。”

我们看着她走远，接着加德纳先生问了我一些在威尼斯当乐手的事情，特别是夸德里乐队的事，因为他们刚好开始演出。他好像不是特别认真在听我回答，我正准备告辞时，他突然说道：

“我要跟你说一些事，朋友。我想说说我心里的事，你不想听的话我就不说了。”他俯过身来，降低了音量。“事情是这样。我和琳迪第一次到威尼斯来是我们蜜月的时候。二十七年前。为了那些美好的回忆，我们没有再回到这里来过，没有一起回来过。所以当我们计划这次旅行，这次特别的旅行时，我们对自己说我们一定要来威尼斯住几天。”

“是你们的结婚周年纪念啊，加德纳先生？”

“周年纪念？”他很吃惊的样子。

“抱歉，”我说。“我以为，因为您说是特别的旅行。”

他还是吃惊地看着我，突然大笑起来，高声、响亮的笑。我突然想起我母亲以前经常放的一首歌，在那首歌里加德纳先生有一段独白，说什么不在乎恋人已经离他而去之类的，中间就有这种冷笑。现在同样的笑声回荡在广场上。他接着说道：

“周年纪念？不，不，不是我们的周年纪念。可是我正在酝酿的这件事，也差不离。因为我要做一件非常浪漫的事。我要给她唱小夜曲。地地道道威尼斯式的。这就需要你的帮助。你弹吉他，我唱歌。我们租条刚朵拉，划到她的窗户下，我在底下唱给她听。我们在这附近租了一间房子。卧室的窗户就临着运河。天黑以后就万事俱备了，有墙上的灯把景物照亮。我和你乘着刚朵拉，她来到窗前。所有她喜欢的歌。我们用不着唱很久，夜里还是有点冷。三四首歌就好，这些就是我心里想的。我会给你优厚的报酬。你觉得呢？”

“加德纳先生，我荣幸至极。正如我对您说的，您是我心中的一个大人物。您想什么时候进行呢？”

“如果不下雨，就今晚如何？八点半左右？我们晚饭吃得早，那会儿就已经回去了。我找个借口离开房间，来找你。我安排好刚朵拉，我们沿着运河划回来，停在窗户下。不会有问题的。你觉得呢？”

你或许可以想象：这就像美梦成真一样。而且这主意多甜蜜啊，这对夫妇——一个六十几岁，一个五十几岁——还像热恋中的年轻人似的。这甜蜜的想法差点儿让我忘了刚才所见的那一幕。可我没忘，因为即便在那时，我心里深知事情一定不完全像加德纳先生说的那样。

接下来我和加德纳先生坐在那里讨论所有的细节——他想唱哪些歌，要什么音高，等等之类。后来时间到了，我该回帐篷去进行下一场演出了。我站起来，和他握了握手，告诉他今天晚上他完全可以信任我。

那天晚上我去见加德纳先生时，漆黑的街道十分安静。那个时候，一到离圣马可广场较远的地方我就会迷路，所以尽管我早早出发，尽管我知道加德纳先生告诉我的那座小桥，我还是晚了几分钟。

加德纳先生站在路灯底下，穿着一件皱皱的深色西装，衬衫敞到第三四个扣子处，所以能看见胸口的毛。我为迟到的事向他道歉，他说道：

“几分钟算什么？我和琳迪已经结婚二十七年了。几分钟算什么？”

他没有生气，但似乎心情沉重——一点儿也不浪漫。他身后的刚朵拉轻轻地在水里摇晃，我看见刚朵拉上的船夫是维托里奥，我很讨厌的一个人。他当着我的面总是一副友好的样子，可是我知道——我知道在我背后——他到处说些难听的话，说像我一样的人的闲话，他把我们这种人称为“新国家来的外地人”。所以那天晚上，当他像兄弟似的跟我打招呼时，我只是点点头，静静地看着他扶加德纳先生上船。然后我把我的吉他递给他——我带了一把西班牙吉他，而不是有椭圆形音孔的那把——自己上了船。

加德纳先生在船头不停变换着姿势，然后突然用力地坐下去，船差点翻了。可是他似乎并没有注意到。我们开船了，他一直盯着水面。

我们静静地在水上漂着，经过黑色的建筑，穿过低矮的小桥。就这么过了好一会儿，加德纳先生从沉思中回过神来，说道：

“听着，朋友。我知道下午我们已经说好了今晚要唱哪几首歌。但是我在想，琳迪喜欢《当我到达凤凰城的时候》这首歌。我很久以前录的一首歌。”

“我知道，加德纳先生。以前我母亲总说你唱的版本比辛纳特拉<sup>(4)</sup>的，或者那个家喻户晓的格伦·坎贝尔<sup>(5)</sup>版的都好听。”

加德纳先生点点头，接着有一小会儿我看不见他的脸。维托里奥吆喝了一声，船转弯了，吆喝声在墙壁间回响。

“以前我经常唱给她听，”加德纳先生说。“所以我想今晚她一定乐意听到这首歌。你记得调子吗？”

此时我已经把吉他拿出来了，我就弹了几小节。

“高一点，”他说。“升到降E调。我在唱片里就是这么唱的。”

于是我就用降E调弹了起来，弹了差不多整个主歌的部分以后，加德纳先生唱了起来，很轻很柔地，像是只记得一部分歌词。可是他的声音还是清晰地回响在安静的运河上。而且真是太好听了。一时间我仿佛又回到了童年，回到了那个公寓，躺在地毯上，而我母亲坐在沙发上，筋疲力尽，或者伤心无比地听着托尼·加德纳的唱片在房间的角落里旋转着。

加德纳先生突然停下来，说道：“很好。《凤凰城》我们就用降E调。然后是《我太易坠入爱河》，如我们计划的那样。最后是《给我的宝贝》。这样就够了。她不会想听再多的了。”

说完，加德纳先生又陷入了沉思，我们在黑暗中慢慢地往前漂去，只听见维托里奥轻轻泼溅起的水声。

“加德纳先生，”我终于忍不住问道，“希望您别介意我这么问，可是加德纳太太知道今晚的表演吗？还是说这会是个惊喜？”

他深深地叹了口气，说道：“我想应该是属于惊喜这一类的。”他停了一下，又说道，“天晓得她会有什么反应。兴许我们唱不到《给我的宝贝》。”

维托里奥又转了一个弯，突然传来了音乐声和笑声，我们正漂过一家灯火通明的大餐厅。好像客满了，侍者忙碌地穿梭其间，食客们都很开心的样子，尽管那时运河边上还不是非常暖和。我们刚刚一直在宁静和黑暗中行驶，现在看见餐厅显得有些纷乱。感觉好像我们是静止不动的，站在码头上，看着这只闪闪发光的开着派对的船驶过。我注意到有几张脸朝我们这里看了看，可是没有人太在意我们。把餐厅甩在身后以后，我说道：

“真有意思。要是那些游客发现一条载着著名的托尼·加德纳的船刚刚开了过去，不知他们会有什么反应？”

维托里奥英语懂的不多，但是他听懂了这句话的大意，笑了一下。而加德纳先生却没有反应。直到我们又驶入黑暗，驶进一条狭窄的河道，驶过沿岸灯光昏暗的门口时，他才说道：

“我的朋友，你是从波兰来的，所以你不知道是怎么回事。”

“加德纳先生，”我说，“我的祖国现在是自由的民族了。”

“抱歉。我没有侮辱你们国家的意思。你们是勇敢的民族。我希望你们赢得和平和繁荣。可是朋友，我想告诉你的是。我想说的是从你来的地方，自然还有很多东西是你不明白的。正如在你们国家也有很多事情我不会明白。”

“我想是这样的，加德纳先生。”

“我们刚刚经过的那些人。要是你过去问他们：‘嘿，你们还有人记得托尼·加德纳吗？’也许当中一些人，甚至是大部分人，会说记得。谁知道呢？但是像我们刚才那样子经过，就算他们认出了我，他们会兴奋不已吗？我想不会。他们不会放下他们的叉子，不会停下他们的烛光晚餐。为什么要呢？只不过是已经过时的歌手。”

“我不相信，加德纳先生。您是经典。就像辛纳特拉或者迪安·马丁<sup>(6)</sup>一样。一些一流的大师是不会过时的。不像那些流行歌星。”

“谢谢你这么说，朋友。我知道你是好意。可是唯独今晚，不要开我的玩笑。”

我正想反驳，但加德纳先生举止里的某些东西让我放开了这个话题。于是我们继续前进，没有人说话。说实话，我开始纳闷自己是不是搅和进了一件什么事，这个小夜曲到底是怎么回事。他们毕竟是美国人啊。说不定当加德纳先生开始唱时，加德纳太太会拿着枪走到窗前，朝我们开火。

也许维托里奥跟我想到了一块儿，因为当我们驶过一面墙上的路灯下时，他朝我递了眼色，像是在说：“他真是个怪人，不是吗，朋友？”可是我没有理他。我不会跟他那种人一起反对加德纳先生的。在维托里奥看来，像我这种外地人，成天敲诈游客，弄脏河水，总之就是破坏了这座该死的城市。哪天遇上他心情不好，他会说我们是强盗——甚至是强奸犯。有一次，我当面问他是不是真的说过这样的话，他赌誓说全是一派胡言。他有一个他敬如母亲的阿姨是犹太人，他怎么可能是个种族主义者呢？可是一天下午幕间休息的时候，我靠在多尔索杜罗的一座桥上打发时间，一条刚朵拉从桥下经过。船

上有三名游客，维托里奥摇着桨站在他们身后，高谈阔论，讲的正是这些垃圾。所以他尽可以看着我，但别想从我这里得到伙伴情谊。

“我来教你一个秘诀，”加德纳先生突然说道。“一个表演的小秘诀。给同行的你。很简单。你要多少了解你的观众，不管是哪个方面，你得知道一点儿。一件让你心里觉得今晚的观众跟昨晚的不同的事。比如说你在密尔沃基演出。你就得问问自己，有什么不同，密尔沃基的观众有何特别之处？他们跟麦迪逊的观众有何不同？想不出来也要一直想，直到想到为止。密尔沃基，密尔沃基。密尔沃基有上好的猪排。这就行了，当你走上台时心里就想着这个。不用说出来让观众知道，你唱歌的时候心里知道就行。你面前的这些人吃上好的猪排。他们对猪排非常讲究。你明白我的意思吗？这样观众就成了你知道的人了，成了你可以为之演出的人。这就是我的秘诀。给同行的你。”

“谢谢，加德纳先生。我以前从没这样想过。像您这样的人的指点，我永生难忘。”

“那么今晚，”他接着说，“我们是为琳迪表演。琳迪是我们的观众。所以现在我要告诉你一些琳迪的事情。你想听吗？”

“当然，加德纳先生，”我说。“我很想听听她的事情。”

接下来二十分钟左右的时间，我们坐在刚朵拉里，顺着水流漂，听加德纳先生讲。他的声音时而低得近乎耳语，像是在自言自语。而当路灯或者沿途窗户的灯光照到船上时，他就会突然想起我，提高音量，然后问“你明白我的意思吗，朋友？”之类的。

他说，他妻子来自美国中部明尼苏达州的一个小镇。中学时，学校的老师让她的日子很不好过，因为她老看电影明星的杂志，不学习。

“老师们不知道琳迪有远大的计划。看看现在的她。富有、美丽、周游世界。而那些学校里的老师呢，他们如今有什么成就？过得怎么样呢？他们要是多看些电影杂志，多些梦想，也许也能够拥有一些琳迪今日的成就。”

十九岁时，她搭便车到了加州，想进好莱坞，却在洛杉矶郊外的一家路边餐厅当起了服务生。

“意想不到啊，”加德纳先生说。“这家餐厅，这个高速公路旁不起眼的小地方，却成了她最好的去处。因为这里是所有野心勃勃的姑娘来的地方，从早到晚。她们在这里见面，七个、八个、十来个。她们吃啊喝啊，坐在那里聊上好几个钟头。”

这些姑娘都比琳迪大一些，来自美国的四面八方，在洛杉矶待了至少两三年了。她们聚在餐厅里聊八卦，聊倒霉事，讨论计策，汇报大家的进展。可是这里最引人注目的是一个叫梅格的女人，一个四十多岁的女招待。

“梅格是这群姑娘的大姐头，智囊袋。因为以前她就和她们一样。你得明白，她们是一群正经的姑娘，野心勃勃、意志坚定的姑娘。她们是不是和其他女孩子一样谈论衣服、鞋子、化妆品？是，她们也谈这些。但是她们只关心哪些衣服、鞋子、化妆品能帮助她们嫁给明星。她们谈不谈论电影？她们谈不谈论歌坛？当然了。但是她们谈的是哪个电影明星或者歌星还是单身，哪个婚姻不幸，哪个离了婚。而所有这些，梅格都能告诉她们，还有其他很多、很多的东西。梅格走过她们要走的路。她知道钓到大腕的所有规矩和门道。琳迪和她们坐在一起，一字不落地听着。这家小小的热狗店就是她的哈佛、她的耶鲁。明尼苏达来的一个十九岁的小姑娘？现在想想她可能会变成什么样，都让我哆嗦。可是她是走运的。”

“加德纳先生，”我说道，“请原谅我打断您。可要是这个梅格这么神通广大，她干吗不自己嫁个明星？她干吗还在餐厅里端盘子？”

“问得好，可你不太明白这些事情到底是怎么一回事。好，这位女士，梅格，她自己没有成功。可是重点是，她看过别人是怎么成功的。你明白吗，朋友？她曾经和这些姑娘一样，她目睹谁成功了，谁失败了。她见过圈套陷阱，也见过阳关大道。她把所有的故事都讲给她们听，而其中一些人学进去了。琳迪就是其中一个。就像我说的，这里是她的哈佛。这里成就了后来的她。这里给了她日后需要的力量，天啊，她确实需要。她等了六年才交了第一次好运。你想象得到吗？六年的处心积虑，六年的如履薄冰。一次次地遇到挫折。可是就跟我们的事业一样。你不能因为最初的一些小挫折就打退堂鼓。大部分人做不到，这样的姑娘随处可见，在默默无闻的地方嫁给默默无闻的人。而有一些人，有一些像琳迪这样的人，她们从每一次的挫折中吸取经验教训，变得越来越坚强，她们屡败屡战，却越战越勇。你以为琳迪没有蒙过羞？像她这么漂亮，这么有魅力的人？人们不明白美

丽不是最主要的，一半都不到。用得不对，人们就视你为娼妇。总之，六年之后，琳迪终于有了好运。”

“她遇到您是了吗，加德纳先生？”

“我？不，不是。我没有这么快出现。她嫁给了迪诺·哈特曼。没听说过迪诺？”说到这里加德纳先生微微冷笑了一下。“可怜的迪诺。我想他的唱片没有流传到共产主义国家去。不过那时他很有些名气。当时他频频在维加斯演出，出了几张金唱片。我刚才说了，琳迪交了好运。我初次见到琳迪时，她是迪诺的妻子。这种情况老梅格早跟她们解释过了。诚然有的姑娘能第一次就撞了大运，一步登天，钓上辛纳特拉或者白兰度这样的人。可是这种事情并不多见。姑娘们得准备好在二楼就出电梯，走出来。她得习惯二楼的空气。也许将来有一天，她会在二楼这里遇见一个从顶楼公寓下来的人，也许是下来取一下东西。这人对她说，嘿，要不要跟我一起回去，一起上顶楼去。琳迪清楚游戏规则。她的战斗力没有因为嫁给了迪诺而减退，她的雄心也没有因此而大打折扣。迪诺是个正派人。我一直都喜欢他。所以虽然我第一次见到琳迪就深深地爱上了她，但我没有采取行动。我是个绝对的绅士。后来我得知琳迪因此而更加下定决心。啊，你应该钦佩这样的姑娘！我得告诉你，朋友，我那个时候非常非常红。我猜你母亲就是在那个时期听我的歌的。然而迪诺却开始迅速走下坡路。那段时期很多歌手的日子都不好过。时代变了。孩子们都听披头士、滚石。可怜的迪诺，他的歌太像平·克劳斯贝<sup>(7)</sup>了。他尝试做了一张巴萨诺瓦<sup>(8)</sup>的唱片，却被大家耻笑。这时琳迪肯定不能再跟着他了。当时的情况没有人能指责我们。我想就是迪诺也没有真的责怪我们。所以我行动了。她就这样到了顶楼公寓。

“我们在维加斯结了婚，我们把酒店的浴缸装满香槟。今晚我们要唱的那首《我太易坠入爱河》，知道我为什么选这首歌吗？知道吗？新婚后不久，有一次我们在伦敦。吃完早饭以后我们回到客房，女佣正在打扫我们的套房。可是我们欲火烧身。于是我们进了房间，我们可以听见女佣在用吸尘器打扫客厅的声音，可是我们看不见她，隔着隔板墙。我们踮着脚尖偷偷地溜进去，像孩子似的，你瞧。我们悄悄地溜回卧室，把门关上。我们看得出卧室已经打扫完了，所以女佣应该不用再回到卧室来了，但我们也不是很肯定。管他呢，我们才不在乎。我们脱掉衣服，在床上大干起来，女佣一直都在隔壁，在套房里走来走去，不晓得我们已经回来了。我说了，我们欲火烧身，可是过了一会儿，我们突然觉得整件事情太好玩了，我们开始笑个不停。后来我们完事了，躺在床上拥抱着对方，女佣还在外面，你知道

加德纳先生不说了，我看见他擦去眼泪。船又转了个弯，我发现我们第二次经过那家餐厅了。餐厅似乎比先前更加热闹，有个人，我知道他叫安德烈亚，正在角落里弹钢琴。

当我们再次驶入黑暗之中时，我说道：“加德纳先生，我知道这不关我的事，可我看得出眼下您和加德纳太太的关系不是很好。我想让您知道我是明白这些事的。以前我母亲经常悲伤，大概就和您现在一样。她以为这次她找到了一个好人，她高兴极了，告诉我这个人要做我的新爸爸了。头几次我相信了。可后来，我知道事情不会尽如人意的。可是我母亲从来没有停止相信。每当她伤心的时候，大概就像您今晚这样，你猜她怎么着？她会放你的唱片，跟着唱。那些漫长的冬天，在我们住的小公寓里，她坐在那里，蜷起膝盖，手里头拿着一杯喝的，轻轻地跟着唱。有时候，我还记得，加德纳先生，楼上的邻居会用力地敲天花板，特别是当你放一些大声的快歌时，比如《希冀》、《他们都笑话》之类的。我仔细地看母亲，可是她好像什么也没听见，专心地听着你的歌，头跟着拍子一点一点，嘴唇跟着歌词一张一合。加德纳先生，我想说的是，您的音乐帮助我母亲度过那些伤心的日子，也一定帮助了其他成千上万的人。所以也一定能帮助您自己的。”说完我笑了笑，本想作为鼓励，没想到笑得大声了点。

“今晚您可以信任我，加德纳先生。我会全力以赴。今晚我的演出不会输给任何一个管弦乐队的，您等着瞧吧。加德纳太太听了以后，天晓得？也许你们就会重归于好。夫妻间都会有不愉快的时候。”

加德纳先生微微一笑。“你是个好人儿。我很感激你今晚的帮助。但是我们没有时间再聊了。琳迪回到房里了。我看见灯亮了。”

说话间我们正经过一座我们至少已经路过两次的公寓。现在我明白了为什么维托里奥带着我们兜圈子。加德纳先生在等某个窗户的灯光，每次他看见灯还没亮，我们就再绕一圈。但是这一次，三楼的窗

户亮了，百叶窗打开着，从我们这里可以看见屋里的一小块带黑色木梁的天花板。加德纳先生示意维托里奥停下，维托里奥早已经停下桨，让船慢慢漂到窗户的正下方。

加德纳先生站起身来，又一次把船弄得激烈地摇晃起来，维托里奥赶紧把船稳住。加德纳先生朝上面轻轻地喊道：“琳迪？琳迪？”然后他终于大声叫道：“琳迪！”

一只手推开百叶窗，接着一个身影出现在狭小的阳台上。虽然公寓墙上不远的地方有一盏灯，但是灯光昏暗，看不清加德纳太太的样子。然而我依稀看出她把头发梳起来了，和上午在广场上不一样，大概是为了刚刚的晚餐。

“是你吗，亲爱的？”她靠在阳台的栏杆上问。“我还以为你被绑架之类了呢。你害我担心死了。”

“别傻了，亲爱的。在这种地方会出什么事呢？再说，我给你留了纸条。”

“我没有看见什么纸条，亲爱的。”

“我给你留了纸条。让你别担心。”

“纸条在哪儿呢？上面写什么？”

“我不记得了，亲爱的。”加德纳先生生气了。“只是张普通的纸条，说我要去买烟之类的。”

“你现在在那里就是干这个吗？买烟？”

“不是，亲爱的。这是另外一件事。我要唱歌给你听。”

“是在开什么玩笑吗？”

“不，亲爱的，不是开玩笑。这里是威尼斯。这里的人就是这么干的。”说着指了指我和维托里奥，像是要证明他的话。

“我觉得外面有点冷，亲爱的。”

加德纳先生重重地叹了口气。“那你进屋里去听吧。进屋里去，亲爱的，舒舒服服地坐好。只要把窗户开着就能听得很清楚。”

加德纳太太仍旧低头看着他，他也抬头往上看，两个人都没有说话。片刻后，加德纳太太进屋里去了，加德纳先生好像很失望的样

子，即便是他自己劝她这么做的。他低下头，又叹了口气，我能感觉到加德纳先生正在犹豫还要不要做。于是我说道：

“来吧，加德纳先生，我们开始吧。第一首《当我到达凤凰城的时候》。”

我轻轻地弹了几个开始的音符，拍子还没有出来，只是一些音符，可以是歌曲的导入，也可以就这么渐渐退去。我试着弹得美国一点，伤心的路边酒吧，长长的高速公路。我还想起了我母亲，想我以前是怎么走进屋里，看见她坐在沙发上，盯着唱片的封面，封面上画着一条美国公路，或者一个歌手坐在一辆美国车里。我的意思是，我试着要弹得让我母亲能听出就是那个国家，她唱片封面上的那个国家。

还没等我反应过来，还没等我弹出什么连续的拍子来，加德纳先生就唱了起来。他站在摇摇晃晃的刚朵拉上，我担心他随时会掉下去。然而他的声音和我记忆里的一模一样——温柔、近乎沙哑，但是集结了全身的力量，像是从一个看不见的麦克风里传出来的。而且和所有一流的美国歌手一样，他的声音略带疲倦，甚至是丝丝的犹豫，仿佛他并非一个惯于如此敞开心扉的人。所有的大师都是这样。

我弹着，他唱着，一首充满漂泊和离别的歌。一个美国人离开他的情人。歌曲一节节，城镇一座座，凤凰城、阿尔伯克基、俄克拉何马，他一路不停地思念着情人。车子沿着大路一直开，这是我母亲永远不可能做到的。要是我们能像这样子将事情抛在身后——我猜母亲听这首歌的时候是这么想的。要是我们能像这样子将悲伤抛在身后。

这首歌结束了，加德纳先生说：“好，直接唱下一首吧。《我太易坠入爱河》。”

这是我第一次为加德纳先生演奏，我小心翼翼地弹每一个音，结果我们配合得还不错。听了 he 给我讲的这首歌的故事以后，我不停地抬头看窗户，然而加德纳太太那里一点儿反应也没有，没有动静，没有声音，什么都没有。歌唱完了，宁静和黑暗包围了我们。我听见不远处有人推开百叶窗，估计是住在附近的人想听得清楚些。可是加德纳太太的窗户什么情况也没有。

我们慢慢地唱起了《给我的宝贝》，慢到几乎没有拍子，然后一切又归于平静。我们一直抬头看着窗户，过了许久，大概足足有一分钟的时间，我们终于听见了。声音若隐若现，但是绝对错不了，是加德纳太太在啜泣。

“我们成功了，加德纳先生！”我轻声说。“我们成功了。我们打动她了。”

可是加德纳先生的样子并不高兴。他疲倦地摇摇头，坐了下来，朝维托里奥摆了摆手。“把船划到另一边去吧。我该进去了。”

当船再次开动时，我觉得加德纳先生一直在避开我的眼睛，几乎像是在为今晚的事情感到羞愧。我不禁想到这整件事情也许是一个恶作剧。因为就我我我我我所知，这些歌对加德纳太太都有讨厌的含义。于是我收起吉他，坐在那里，或许有点儿闷闷不乐，我们就这么往前划去。

船到了开阔一些的水面，突然一艘观光游艇迎面从我们身边疾驶而过，在刚朵拉边溅起不小的波浪。然而我们快到加德纳先生公寓的门口了。维托里奥把船慢慢靠近岸边时，我说道：

“加德纳先生，您是我成长过程中重要的一部分。今晚对我来说太特别了。如果我们就此告别，以后我不会再见到您，那么我余生都会一直琢磨。所以加德纳先生，请您告诉我。刚才，加德纳太太是因为喜悦而哭泣，还是因为伤心？”

我以为他不会回答我。昏暗的灯光下，我只能看见船头加德纳先生弓着背的身影。可是当维托里奥系缆绳时，加德纳先生静静说道：

“我想我以这种方式唱歌给她听，她很高兴。但当然了，她很伤心。我们俩都很伤心。漫长的二十七年，这次旅行之后，我们就要分开了。这是我们最后一次一起旅行了。”

“听您这么说我真的很难过，加德纳先生，”我轻轻地说。“我想很多婚姻最后都走到了尽头，即便是一起过了二十七年。但至少你们能以这种方式分开。一起到威尼斯度假，在刚朵拉上唱歌。很少有夫妻能这么友好地分手。”

“我们为什么不友好呢？我们仍然深爱着对方。这就是她为什么哭了。她还像我爱着她一样地爱着我。”

维托里奥已经上岸了，可是加德纳先生和我都还坐在黑暗里。我等着他往下讲，果然，过了一会儿，他接着说道：

“就像我说的，我对琳迪一见钟情。可是她也爱我吗？我想她根本没考虑过这个问题。我是个明星，她只关心这一点。我是她梦寐以求的，是她在那家小餐厅里处心积虑想要得到的。她爱不爱我不是问

题。可是二十七年的婚姻会发生很多有趣的事情。很多夫妻，他们渐渐地越来越不喜欢对方，厌倦对方，最后憎恨对方。而有时候情况刚好相反。过了很多年，琳迪逐渐慢慢地开始喜欢我。一开始我不敢相信，可是后来没什么可怀疑的了。离开餐桌时轻轻碰一下我的肩膀。在房间那一头莫名其妙地微微一笑，没什么好笑的事，只是她自己不知道在乐什么。我敢说她自己也很惊讶，但事实如此。五六年后，我们发现我们在一起非常惬意。我们关心对方，在乎对方。总而言之，我们爱对方。而如今我们仍旧爱着对方。”

“我不明白，加德纳先生。那您和加德纳太太为什么要分开呢？”

他又叹了一口气。“你怎么可能明白呢，朋友，从那样的国家来的？但是今天晚上你对我太好了，我试着解释给你听吧。事实是，我的名声已经不如从前了。你尽可以反对，但在美国，这是不可否认的事实。我不再是大明星了。如今的我可以接受现实，慢慢隐退，生活在过去的荣誉之上。但我也可以说，不，我还没玩完呢。换句话说，我的朋友，我可以重返歌坛。很多像我这样的人，甚至还不如我的人，都这么做了。但是重返歌坛并非易事。你得做好做出种种改变的心理准备，有些改变是很困难的。你得改变你的做法，甚至改变一些你喜欢的东西。”

“加德纳先生，您的意思是，因为您要重返歌坛，您和加德纳太太不得不分开？”

“看看其他人，看看那些成功重返歌坛的人，看看那些至今仍活跃在歌坛的我这一辈人。他们每一个，每一个都再婚了。两次，甚至三次。他们每一个都牵着年轻的妻子。我和琳迪会成为笑柄的。而且，现在有一个我看上眼的姑娘，她也看上了我。琳迪明白这其中的道理，比我还早明白，也许在餐厅里听梅格讲各种奇闻轶事时就明白了。我们商量过了。她明白我们该各走各的了。”

“我还是不明白，加德纳先生。您和加德纳太太来的地方不会和其他地方相差到哪儿去。所以，加德纳先生，这些年来您唱的歌能感动各个地方的人。甚至是我生长的地方。这些歌里头都唱些什么呢？两个人不再相爱了，只好分开，所以伤心。可要是两人还彼此相爱，就应该永远在一起。这就是那些歌里唱的。”

“我明白你的意思，朋友。我知道你很难明白这件事情。但事实如此。而且，这对琳迪也好。我们现在就分开对她来说最好。她还

老。你见过她，她依旧美丽动人。她得趁现在还来得及的时候抽身。还来得及再找一个爱人，再结一次婚。她得趁还为时未晚赶紧抽身。”

我不知道该回答什么，加德纳先生突然问道：“我猜你母亲始终没能再找到一个好人吧。”

我被这个问题吓了一跳。我想了想，轻声说：“没有，加德纳先生。她始终没能再婚。她没能活着看见我们国家的变化。”

“太遗憾了。我相信她是个好女人。如果真像你说的那样，我的歌真的让她感到幸福，那对我而言意义重大。很遗憾她最终没能再找到一个好人。我不希望我的琳迪会这样。不，我的琳迪不会的。我要我的琳迪再找到一个好人。”

刚朵拉轻轻地敲打着河岸。维托里奥轻声唤着，伸出一只手，几秒钟后，加德纳先生站起来，爬上岸去。等我也拿着吉他爬上岸时——我不想求维托里奥让我白搭一程——加德纳先生已经掏出了钱包。

看来维托里奥对自己的酬劳非常满意，他带着一贯的彬彬有礼，说着一贯的恭维话，回到刚朵拉上，划走了。

我们看着船消失在黑暗之中。加德纳先生往我手里塞进一大把钞票。我对他说太多了，而且今晚是我极大的荣幸。可他一点儿也不肯收回去。

“不，不，”他边说边在眼前摆了摆手，像是要了结这件事，不仅是钱，还包括我、包括这个夜晚，或许还包括他人生的这整个阶段。他迈步朝公寓走去，可才走了几步，他就停下来，回头看着我。我们所在的小街，运河，一切都很安静，只有远方模糊的电视的声音。

“今天晚上你弹得很好，我的朋友，”他说。“你的指法很好。”

“谢谢您，加德纳先生。您唱得也很好，和以前一样好。”

“也许在我们离开之前我会再到广场去一次。去听听你和同事们的演出。”

“我希望如此，加德纳先生。”

可是我没有再见到他。几个月后，秋天的时候，我听说加德纳先生和加德纳太太离婚了——弗洛里安的一个侍者在哪里看到，告诉我的。那天晚上的情景再次浮现在我的脑海里，而且回想起这件事情，我黯然神伤。因为加德纳先生看上去是个很正派的人，不管你怎么看，无论复出与否，他都是伟大的歌手之一。

不论下雨或晴天

埃米莉太喜欢这些唱片了，每次我无意中撞见她在和别的同学讲某个自命不凡的摇滚乐队或某个空虚无物的加利福尼亚创作歌手，我都会吓一跳。有时，她会像在和我谈论格什温<sup>(9)</sup>或哈罗德·阿伦<sup>(10)</sup>那样开始谈论一张“概念”唱片，我得咬紧嘴唇才不把愤怒表现出来。

那时候的埃米莉苗条、漂亮，要不是她早早就和查理在一起，我相信会有一大堆人追求她。可她从来不风骚、放荡，所以她和查理在一起后，其他追求者就撤退了。

“所以我才把查理留在身边，”有一次她一脸严肃地这样对我说，看见我很吃惊的样子她扑哧笑了出来。“开玩笑的，傻瓜。我爱他，爱他，爱他。”

查理是我大学时最好的朋友。一年级时我们成天在一起，因此我才认识了埃米莉。第二年，查理和埃米莉在城里找了间房子同居。虽然我常常去他们那，但是那些与埃米莉在唱片机旁的交谈已经成为往事。一来，我每次去，都有几个其他同学坐在那里又说又笑。再者，如今有了一台漂亮的立体声音响大声地播放着摇滚乐，说话都得用喊的。

这些年来查理和我还是好朋友。确实我们不如以前那样常见面，但这主要是因为距离太远。我在意大利、葡萄牙，还有西班牙这里待了好几年，而查理则一直待在伦敦。要是这么说让你觉得好像我是个空中飞人，他是个宅男，那就好笑了。因为查理才是整天飞来飞去的人——得克萨斯、东京、纽约——参加一个个高端会议，而我则年复一年困在潮湿的房子里，安排拼写测试，或者重复着一成不变的慢速英语谈话：“我叫雷。”“你叫什么？”“你有孩子吗？”

大学毕业后我选择了教英语，刚开始貌似还不错——很像大学生活的延伸。语言学校在欧洲如雨后春笋般涌现。若说教书很无聊、课酬很低，那个年纪的你不会太在乎。你泡在酒吧里，很容易就交到朋友，感觉自己是一个遍布全球的巨大网络的一部分。你会遇见刚从秘鲁或泰国教了一阵子书回来的人，你会觉得只要你愿意就可以满世界跑，就可以利用你的关系在哪个你向往的遥远的角落找到一份工作。而且你永远是这个舒适的巡回教师大家庭的一分子，一边喝酒一边聊着以前的同事、神经质的学校主管、英国文化协会里的怪人。

八十年代末期听说去日本教书很赚钱，我认真地计划要去，但最终没去成。我还想过去巴西，甚至读了一些介绍那里的文化的书，要了申请表。可不知为什么我从来没有去那么远的地方。我只去意大利南部、葡萄牙教了一阵子书，又回到西班牙。不知不觉就到了四十七岁，身边共事的人早就变成了聊不同话题、嗑不同药、听不同音乐的另一代人。

与此同时，查理和埃米莉结了婚，在伦敦定居下来。有一次查理对我说，等他们有了孩子以后，要我做一个孩子的教父。可到现在都还没有。我的意思是他们一直没有孩子，我想如今要孩子已经太迟了。我必须承认，我一直觉得有点失望。也许我一直幻想给他们的孩子做教父能让他们在英国的生活与我在这里的生活有了正式的联系，不管这种联系多么微小。

总而言之，今年初夏，我去了伦敦待在他们那里。事情已经事先安排妥当，动身前两天，我打电话确认时，查理说他们俩都“很好”。所以我一心只想着在经历了肯定不是我人生最美好的几个月后好好休息、放松一下，根本没想到别的。

事实上，那个阳光灿烂的早晨，当我走出伦敦地铁站时，脑子里想着：不知自从我上次来了以后，他们会对“我的”房间做怎样的改进。这些年来，几乎每次都有不一样的东西。有一次，房间的角落里摆着一个闪着光的电子小玩意儿；还有一次，整个房间都重新装修过了。但不管怎样，几乎有一条基本原则，他们按着高级旅馆的样子为我布置房间：摆好毛巾，床头放着一小罐饼干，梳妆台上备着几张CD。几年前，查理带我走进房间，若无其事地炫耀着打开各种开关，各种巧妙地隐藏起来的灯开了关、关了开：床头板后面、衣橱上面等等。还有一个开关按了以后，隆隆隆，两扇窗户上的百叶窗慢慢放了下来。

“查理，我要百叶窗干吗？”那一次我问道。“醒来的时候我想看见外面。窗帘就可以了。”

“这些百叶窗是瑞士的，”他这么回答，好像这就说明了一切。

可是这一次带我上楼时，查理一直小声咕哝着，等到了我的房间，我才明白他是在道歉。眼前的景象我从未见过。床上空荡荡的，床垫污渍点点、歪歪斜斜。地上一堆堆的杂志、书和旧衣服，还散落着一支曲棍和一个喇叭。我吃惊地站在门口，查理则清理出一个地方放下我的包。

“你那样子好像要见经理，”他挖苦地说。

“没有，没有。只是这里看上去和以前不太一样。”

“乱糟糟的，我知道。乱糟糟的。”他在床垫上坐下，叹了口气。“我以为清洁工会来打扫。结果没有。鬼知道怎么没来。”

他好像很沮丧，可突然他腾地站了起来。

“走，我们去外面吃午饭吧。我给埃米莉留个信。我们慢慢吃，等我们回来，你的房间——这整间公寓——就都收拾好了。”

“可我们不能叫埃米莉收拾。”

“哦，她不会自己收拾的。她会去叫清洁工。她知道怎么烦他们。我，我连他们的电话都没有。午饭，我们吃午饭吧。点它三道菜，来瓶红酒什么的。”

查理所说的公寓其实是一栋四层楼高的排屋的最顶上两层，位于一条繁华而忙碌的大街上。一出大门就是川流的人群和车辆。我跟着查理走过一家家商店、办公室，到了一家小巧的意大利餐厅。我们没有订座，但餐馆的招待像朋友一样招呼查理，领我们到了一张桌子。我看了看四周，发现周围都是西装领带的商务人士，所以很高兴查理和我一样一副脏兮兮的样子。他好像猜到了我在想什么，我们坐下时，他说道：

“哦，你真是乡巴佬，雷。如今都变了。你离开这个国家太久了。”接着他突然提高音量，很大声地说：“我们看上去才是成功人士。这儿的其他人看上去都像中层管理。”说完他倾向我，轻声说：“听着，我们得谈谈。我要你帮我一个忙。”

我不记得上一次查理叫我帮忙是什么时候，但我装作随意地点点头，等他开口。他摆弄了一会儿菜单，然后放下。

“是这样的，我和埃米莉正在闹别扭。事实上，最近，我们完全避开对方。所以刚刚她没有来迎接你。如今恐怕你得从我们两个中选一个。有我就没有她，有她就没有我。有点像戏里一人分饰两角。很幼稚，是不是？”

“显然我来的不是时候。我走，吃完午饭就走。我去芬奇利找我姑妈凯蒂。”

“你说什么啊？你没有在听我说话。我说了，我要你帮我一个忙。”

“我以为你指的是……”

“不是，你这个白痴，该离开的人是我。我得去法兰克福开会，今天下午的飞机。两天以后回来，最迟星期四。而你留在这里善后，让一切恢复原样。等我回来的时候，我愉快地说声‘哈罗’，亲吻亲爱的妻子，就当过去的两个月没发生过，我们又和好如初。”

这时服务生过来点单，她走了以后，查理似乎不愿接着刚才的话茬，而是开始一个劲儿地问我在西班牙过得怎么样。每次我说了件什么事情，不管好事坏事，他都会微微地苦笑一下，摇摇头，好像我说的都验证了他最担心的。我正说到我的厨艺大有进步——我几乎是独自一人作为四十多名师生准备了一顿圣诞自助餐——他打断我的话。

他说：“听我说，你这样子下去不行。把工作辞了。但辞职之前你得先找到新工作。用那个愁眉苦脸的葡萄牙人当中间人。保住马德里的职位，然后丢掉那个公寓，另找一个。好，你要这样，首先。”

他扳起手指头，开始一条条罗列应该做些什么。我们的菜来了，他还没数完，可他不管，接着数到完。开始吃饭时，他说道：

“我敢说一条都不会去做。”

“不，不，你说的每一条都很有道理。”

“你回去以后还是一切照旧。一年以后我们再见时，你又抱怨一模一样的事情。”

“我没有在抱怨……”

“要知道，雷，别人只能建议你这么多。到了一定的时候，你得学会自主自己的生活。”

“好，我会的。我答应你。但是刚才你说有事要我帮忙。”

“啊，对。”他若有所思地嚼着嘴里的食物。“说实话，这才是我叫你来的真正目的。当然，我也很想见到你什么的。但是最主要的是，我想请你帮我一个忙。毕竟你是我认识最久的朋友，一辈子的朋友……”

突然他又低头吃饭，我惊讶地发现他在轻声啜泣。我伸手去拍拍他的肩膀，但他只是低着头、一个劲儿地往嘴里塞意面。就这样过了一分钟左右，我又伸手去拍拍他的肩头，但跟第一次一样没有什么效果。这时服务生微笑着走过来问我们今天的菜怎么样，我俩都说菜好极了。她走了以后，查理好像情绪稳定了一些。

“好，雷，听着。我要你做的事简单得不得了。我要你这几天跟埃米莉待在一起，在我们家好好做客。就这样。直到我回来。”

“就这样？你要我在你不在的时候照顾她？”

“没错。或者说，让她照顾你。你是客人。我给你找了些事做，看戏什么的。我最迟星期四就回来了。你的任务就是让她一直保持好心情。这样当我回来的时候，我说‘哈罗，亲爱的’，拥抱她，她就回答说，‘哦，哈罗，亲爱的，欢迎回来，这几天好吗？’然后拥抱我。这样我们就和好如初。如同当初噩梦开始以前。这就是你的任务。很简单。”

“我很乐意尽我所能，”我说。“可是，查理，你确定她现在有心情招待客人？你们显然出现了什么危机。她一定和你一样心烦意乱。老实说，我不理解为什么你这个时候叫我来。”

“你不理解？什么意思？我叫你来是因为你是我认识最久的朋友。对，没错，我有很多朋友。可是在这件事情上，我想来想去，发现只有你能行。”

我承认听了他的话我很感动。但同时，我能察觉到里头有什么事不对劲，有什么事他没有告诉我。

“要是你们俩都在这里的话，我能理解你叫我来住，”我说。
“我能理解那样做的用意。你们互相不说话，找个客人来转移目标，你们俩都拿出最好的表现来，事情就慢慢缓和了。可现在不是这样的，你不在这里。”

“帮帮我吧，雷。我想能行的。你总是能让埃米莉开心起来。”

“我让她开心？查理，你知道我想帮你。可是你肯定哪里搞错了。因为我印象中，说实话，我根本不能让埃米莉开心，即便是在最美好的时候。最近几次我到这里来，她……呃，她显然对我不耐烦。”

“听着，雷，相信我。我知道自己在做什么。”

我们回去时，埃米莉在公寓里。我得承认我被她的老态吓了一跳。她不仅比我上次见到她时胖了许多：她过去那张自然而美丽的脸，如今赘肉明显，嘴角上还挂着怒气。她正坐在客厅的沙发上阅读《金融时报》，看见我进来，闷闷不乐地站了起来。

“见到你真好，雷蒙德。”她说，敷衍地吻了吻我的脸颊，然后又坐了下去。她的这种态度让我忍不住想说抱歉，深深地抱歉在这个

时候打扰他们。可不等我开口，埃米莉就拍了拍身旁的沙发，说：“来，雷蒙德，坐这里，回答我的问题。我想知道你所有的近况。”

我坐了下来，她开始不停地问我问题，跟刚刚查理在饭馆里一样。而这时候查理在收拾他的行李，在屋子里进进出出，找这找那。我注意到他们避开对方的视线，可并没有像查理说的那样，因为待在同一个屋子里而感觉不自在。他们没有直接交谈，但是查理用一种奇怪的、间接的方式参与谈话。比如说，当我在跟埃米莉解释为什么很难找到一个室友分担房租时，查理在厨房里大声说道：

“他住的地方不适合两人合住！适合一个人住，一个比他收入高一些的人住！”

埃米莉没有回答，但她显然是听进去了，因为她接着说道：“雷蒙德，你不应该找那样的公寓。”

接下来至少二十分钟，我们都是这样子交谈。查理在楼梯上或者要去厨房时说上几句，通常是大声地从第三者的角度说说我的事情。讲着讲着，埃米莉突然说道：

“哦，说真的，雷蒙德。你处处被那所可恶的语言学校剥削，傻傻地让房东多收你的钱，而你做了什么？跟爱喝酒、还没有工作的傻姑娘混在一起。你好像故意要跟这些还关心你的人过不去！”

“这些人不多了！”查理在走廊里大声说道。我听见他已经把箱子拖到外面去了。“你二十几岁时像个愣头青没有问题。可你都已经快五十了还这样！”

“我只有四十七……”

“什么叫你只有四十七？”埃米莉嚷了起来，虽然我就坐在她身边。“只有四十七。就是这个‘只有’毁了你的人生，雷蒙德。只有，只有，只有。只不过尽力了。只有四十七。很快你就只有六十七，只不过在到处找一个安身之处！”

“他得振作些才行！”查理在楼梯上吼道。“别人把他逼急了他才会努力！”

“雷蒙德，难道你不曾停下来问问自己是什么人？”埃米莉问道。“想想你的潜力，你不觉得羞愧吗？看看你现在过的是什么生活！这种生活……这种生活怎么让人受得了！简直欺人太甚！”

查理穿着雨衣出现在门口。一时间，他们两个同时朝我开火，各骂各的。最后查理先收声，说他要走了——像是因为讨厌我似的——接着就离开了。

查理的离开使埃米莉的谩骂暂告一段落。我利用这个机会站起来，说：“抱歉，我去帮查理拿行李。”

“我干吗要你帮我拿行李？”查理在走廊里说。“我只有一个包。”

可他还是让我跟他下了楼，我看着包，他自己到路边去拦的士。路上没有一辆的士，他担心地探出身去，举着一只胳膊。

我走上前去，说：“查理，我想行不通。”

“什么行不通？”

“埃米莉绝对是讨厌我。她见了我几分钟就这个样子，三天以后会成什么呢？你到底凭什么觉得你回来的时候会雨过天晴呢？”

说着说着，我心里好像豁然开朗，我不做声了。查理发觉到不对劲，转过身来，仔细地打量着我。

我终于说道：“我想我知道你为什么选我，而不选别人了。”

“啊哈。雷突然开窍了？”

“对，可能是。”

“但是那又怎么样？没有变，我要你做的事没有变。”这时他的眼睛里又有了泪水。“雷，你还记得以前埃米莉常说她相信我时的模样吗？她说了一年又一年。我相信你，查理，你前途无量，你那么有才华。直到三四年前，她都还一直这么说。你知道这话变得多让人难受吗？我混得不错。现在还混得不错。很不错。可她以为我应该成为……天晓得，成为这个世界的总统，天晓得！我只是一个混得不错的普通人。可她这么认为。这就是核心，所有问题的核心。”

查理开始沿着人行道慢慢往前走，陷入沉思。我赶忙转回身去拿他的箱子，拖动轮子。街上人还很多，我很难一面跟上他，一面注意不让箱子撞到行人。可查理还是一步步朝前走去，全然不顾我的难处。

“她觉得我不够努力，”他边走边说。“可我没有。我做得很不错。年轻时有无尽梦想是好的。可是到了我们这个年纪，你就

得……你就得现实点了。每当埃米莉实在不可理喻时，我脑子里都这么想。现实，她应该面对现实。我一直对自己说，看，我做得不错。看看其他人，我们认识的人。看看雷。看看他过得像什么鸟样。埃米莉应该面对现实。”

“所以你就把我叫来了。来当‘现实先生’。”

查理终于停下脚步，回过头来看着我。“别误会，雷。不是说你真的一无是处。你既不是瘾君子也不是杀人犯。可实话实说，跟我比起来，你不像是最成功的。所以我叫你来，叫你来帮帮我。我们的关系快完了，我已经无计可施了。我需要你的帮助。而且老天啊，我叫你做什么？只不过是做你自己。你平时怎么样，现在还怎么样。不多也不少。帮帮我吧，雷蒙德。帮帮我和埃米莉。我们还没结束，我知道还没有。我不在这几天好好在我们家做客。这个要求不过分吧？”

我深吸了一口气，说：“好，好，要是你觉得这样能行。可埃米莉迟早都会发现的，不是吗？”

“发现什么？她知道我要去法兰克福开一个很重要的会。对她来说，这事再简单不过了。她就是接待一个客人。她很乐意，她喜欢你。啊，的士。”他拼命挥手，车朝我们开过来。这时，他抓住我的手臂。“谢谢你，雷。你要替我们扭转局面，我知道你能行。”

我回到公寓，发现埃米莉的态度全变了。她像欢迎一个年老体衰的亲戚一样把我迎进屋。她面带和蔼的微笑，轻轻地拍拍我的手臂。她问我要不要喝茶，我说好，她就带我进了厨房，让我在桌子旁坐下，然后站在一旁关切地看了我一会儿。末了，她轻声道：

“我很抱歉刚才那样子说你，雷蒙德。我没有权利那样子说你。”她转过身去泡茶，接着说：“我老是忘记我们已经离开大学好多年了。我做梦也想不到我会那样子说其他的朋友。可如果是你，咳，我想我看见你就以为又回到了过去，回到了从前，忘了早就离开大学了。你千万别往心里去。”

“没，没有。我根本没放在心上。”我还在想着刚才查理说的话，有点心不在焉的样子。我想埃米莉以为我在生气，她的声音更温柔了。

“很抱歉我惹你生气了。”她仔细地把一排排饼干摆在我面前的盘子里。“记得吗，雷蒙德，以前我们对你几乎是想说什么就说什

么，你只是笑笑，我们也笑笑，什么事情都是玩笑一场。我真是太傻了，以为你还可以像从前那样。”

“啊，其实我现在还和以前差不多。我一点儿也不介意。”

她显然没有听见我的话，接着说：“我没想到现在的你不一样了。你已经快走投无路了。”

“听着，埃米莉，说真的，我还没有到……”

“我想这些年的生活已经把你折磨得够呛了。你像个到了悬崖边的人，再轻轻一推就会崩溃了。”

“你是说掉下去吧。”

她刚刚在摆弄水壶，这会儿再次转过身来注视着我。“别这样，雷蒙德，别说这种话。开玩笑也不要。我永远不要听见你说这种话。”

“不，你误会了。你说我会崩溃，可要是我站在悬崖边，我应该掉下去，而不是崩溃。”

“哦，可怜的人儿。”她好像还是没有理解我的话。“只剩下一副外壳。”

这次我决定还是别应的好，我们就静静地等水开。一会儿，水开了，她给我泡了一杯茶放在面前，没有给自己也倒一杯。

“很抱歉，雷，我得回办公室去了。有两个会我一定得去。我要是知道你会这样，我是不会把你一个人留下的。我会另做安排的。可现在我得回去。可怜的雷蒙德。你一个人在这里怎么好呢？”

“我没问题的，真的。其实我在想，你不在时我干吗不来准备晚餐呢？你可能不信，可是我最近厨艺大有长进。事实上，圣诞节前我们的自助餐……”

“你想帮忙真是太好了。但我想你还是休息吧。毕竟在一个不熟悉的厨房很容易会手忙脚乱。你就把这里当作自己家，泡个药澡，听听音乐。我回来以后再来做晚饭。”

“可是你工作了一整天不会想再操心晚饭的事。”

“不，雷，你就休息吧。”她拿出一张名片，放在桌上。“这上面有我的直线电话和手机。我得走了，但你随时可以打电话给我。记住，我不在时别给自己找难题。”

一段时间以来，我发现我在自己家里没办法好好休息。我要是一个人在家就会越来越焦躁不安，总觉得外头有什么重要的邂逅在等着我。可我要是一个人在别人家里反而常常能得到安宁。我喜欢窝在陌生的沙发里，随手拿本书来看。这正是艾米莉走了以后我做的事情。或者说，我至少看了两章《曼斯菲尔德庄园》才打了个二十来分钟的盹。

我打开碗橱找饼干、巧克力什么的，突然看见厨房的桌子上有一本小记事本。带衬垫的紫色封面在光滑而极其简洁的厨房里特别显眼。刚刚我喝茶时，艾米莉匆匆忙忙地准备出门，把包里的东西统统倒到桌子上，再重新装进去。一定是那个时候落下的。可马上另一种念头出现在我脑子里：这个紫色的小本子是一本私密日记，是艾米莉故意留下来要我看的；出于某种原因，她无法公开表达她的感受，于是用这种方式来倾诉她内心的混乱。

我站在那儿盯着记事本。过了一会儿，我走上前去，把食指伸进记事本当中，小心翼翼地翻开。艾米莉挤挤挨挨的字映入我的眼帘，我一下子把手收了回来，离开餐桌，告诉自己我不应该偷看艾米莉的本子，不管她一时昏了头想干什么。

我回到客厅，在沙发上坐下，又看了几页《曼斯菲尔德庄园》。可现在我集中不了精神。我的脑子一直回想着那个紫色的记事本。那会不会不是一时冲动，而是她计划了好几天的呢？她会不会认真地写了一些东西要我读呢？

十分钟后，我又回到厨房，盯着紫色记事本。然后，我在刚刚喝茶的椅子上坐下来，把本子拉到面前，打开。

很快我就弄清楚了一个问题：埃米莉要是有一本记录内心深处秘密的日记本的话，一定在别处。我面前的这个本子顶多只是一本顶漂亮的日志，每天埃米莉都潦草地记着些提醒自己记得去做的事情，有些字写得超大。比如有一条用粗的毡头墨水笔写着：“还没给马蒂尔达打电话，怎么又忘了？？？记得打！！！”

还有一条写着：“他妈的菲利普·罗斯读完了。还给马里恩！”

我一页页地翻过去，突然，我看见：“雷蒙德星期一来。痛苦啊，痛苦。”

我又翻了两页，发现：“雷明天就来了。怎么活？”

最后，在今天早上刚记的几件琐事中有一条：“牢骚王子要来了，记得买酒。”

牢骚王子？我犹豫了好一会儿才不得不承认这个称呼指的是我。我设想了种种可能——客户？水管工人？——可是最后，看看日期，看看前前后后，我不得不承认不可能有其他更靠谱的候选人了。突然间，一股无名的怒火涌了上来：她怎么可以给我安一个如此不公平的头衔？我一气之下把那张讨厌的纸捏成一团。

我的动作并不是很用力：连纸都没有撕下来。我只是一把捏紧了拳头，转眼我就恢复了理智，可是当然了，为时已晚。我放开手，发现不单单那张纸被我一气之下捏坏了，连底下两页也遭了殃。我拼命把纸张弄平，可它们还是皱起来，好像它们就是很想被捏成一团垃圾。

尽管如此，我还是继续固执地想把被我捏坏的纸张弄平，心里忐忑不安。正当我准备放弃的时候——我现在不管做什么都掩盖不了我的失误——我听见屋子里有电话在响。

我决定不理睬电话，继续想搞清楚我刚刚的失误会有什么后果。但是不一会儿电话答录机响了，我听见查理在留言的声音。也许我觉得抓到了救命稻草，也许我只是想找人倾诉一下，总之是我发现自己冲到了客厅，抓起玻璃咖啡桌上的电话听筒。

“哦，你在啊。”查理好像有点生气我打断了他的留言。

“查理，听着。我刚刚做了一件蠢事。”

“我在机场，”他说。“飞机晚点了。我想给要在法兰克福接我的汽车服务公司打个电话，可我没带他们的电话。所以我要你给我念

一下。”

接着他开始指示我到哪里去找电话本，但是我打断他的话，说道：

“听着，我刚刚做了一件蠢事。我不知道怎么办才好。”

几秒钟的沉默后，查理说道：“你可能在想，雷。你可能在想有第三者。想说我现在是要飞去见她。我猜你是这样想的。跟你看到的一切对得上。刚刚我出门的时候埃米莉的样子，等等。可是你错了。”

“是，我知道你的意思。可是你听着，我有事要跟你说……”

“承认吧，雷。你错了。没有第三者。我现在是要去法兰克福开一个有关更换我们波兰代理的会。我只是要去干这个。”

“是，我知道。”

“从来就没有什么第三者。我是不会看其他女人的，起码不会正经地看。是真的。是他妈的真的，没有第三者！”

他说着说着就嚷了起来，可能是因为出发大厅里太吵了。现在他不说话了，我仔细听他是不是又哭了，但是只能听见机场里的嘈杂声。突然，他说道：

“我知道你在想什么。你在想，好吧，没有其他女人。但会不会是其他男人呢？你就认了吧，你是这么想的，对吧？快说！”

“没有。我从没想过你会是同性恋。即便是那次期末考以后，你喝得酩酊大醉，假装……”

“闭嘴，你这个白痴！我是说其他男人，埃米莉的情人！会不会有一个他妈的埃米莉的情人？我是这个意思。而我的回答是，根据我的判断，没有，没有，没有。在一起这么多年，我很了解她。可问题就在于，就因为我太了解她了，我还能看见些别的。我能看出她开始想找个情人了。没错，雷，她在物色男人。比如说大卫·科里！”

“大卫·科里是谁？”

“大卫·科里是一个虚情假意的饭桶，一个混得不错的律师。我知道怎么不错，因为她告诉我怎么不错，很他妈的详细。”

“你觉得……他们看上了？”

“没有，我说了！还没有，什么都没有！大卫·科里根本不会理她。他娶了一个在康泰纳仕出版集团工作的漂亮妞儿。”

“那你不用担心……”

“我要担心，还有个迈克尔·艾迪生。还有美林银行的新星罗杰·范德伯格，年年都参加世界经济论坛……”

“听着，查理，听我说。我有麻烦了。不是大麻烦，可总归是个麻烦。你听我说。”

我终于把刚才的事情讲给他听，尽量忠实地叙述一切，虽说我把我觉得埃米莉给我留了秘密信息的想法轻轻带过。

“我知道我很蠢，”末了，我说道。“可本子就放在那里，在厨房的桌子上。”

“是。”查理现在听上去冷静了许多。“是。你有麻烦了。”

突然他笑了。我受到鼓舞，也跟着笑了。

“我想我反应过度了。”我说。“毕竟那不像是她的私人日记什么的。只是个记事本……”我说不下去了，因为查理还在笑，笑声有点歇斯底里。他不笑了，冷冷地说：

“她要是知道了，会把你的蛋蛋割下来的。”

一阵短暂的沉默，我只听见机场里的嘈杂声。然后，他接着说道：

“大概六年前，我自己翻过那本子，应该说是当年的那本日记本。很偶然，我坐在厨房里，她在做饭。你瞧，就是边说话边无意间随手翻开。她马上就发现了，说她不喜欢人家看她的东西。就是那次她说她要把我的蛋蛋割下来。那时她挥着根擀面杖，我说用擀面杖可不好干她威胁的那件事。她就说擀面杖是蛋蛋割下来以后用的。蛋蛋割下来以后她要用擀面杖碾碎。”

电话那头通报了一则航班信息。

“那我该怎么办？”我问。

“你能怎么办？把纸弄平呗。她可能不会注意到。”

“我试了，就是不行。她不可能不会注意到……”

“听着，雷，我要操心的事多着呢。我要告诉你的是埃米莉梦想的这些男人不是真的可能的情人。她只是觉得这些人很不错，那么有成就。她没有看见他们的缺点。他们根本就是……畜牲。总之这些人跟她不是一路的。关键是，这个关键既让人痛心又讽刺，关键是，归根结底，她爱我。她还爱我。我知道的，我知道。”

“查理，这么说你没有什么办法咯。”

“没有！我没有他妈的办法！”他又开始大嚷起来。“你自己想办法！你坐你的飞机，我坐我的。我们看看哪架会掉下来！”

说完，查理把电话挂了。我倒进沙发里，深深地吸了一口气。我告诉自己要理智，可是我心里一直感到隐隐的害怕。我想了各种各样的办法。一种办法是就这么溜之大吉，几年都不再跟查理和埃米莉联系，几年以后我会写一封措词谨慎的信来。即便事已至此，我也觉得这么做太绝望了。好一点的办法是我把他们柜子里的酒一瓶瓶喝掉，等埃米莉回来的时候就会发现我烂醉如泥了。那时我就告诉她我看了她的日记，在酒精的作用下把纸张给捏了。而且，我还可以借着酒疯扮演受害者的角色。我可以冲她嚷嚷，指指点点，告诉她看了她写的话我受了多么深的伤害。我是多么珍视她的爱意和友谊，是她支撑我在孤独的异乡度过那些最难过的日子。可她却那样子说我。虽然这个计划挺可行的，但我隐隐觉得这里头——在这个计划的底下，有什么东西是我不敢去碰的——所以这个计划对我来说也行不通。

过了一会儿，电话响了，答录机里又传来查理的声音。我拿起电话，查理的声音显然比刚才平静了许多。

“我到登机口了，”他说。“很抱歉我刚刚的胡言乱语。我到了机场就这样。要在登机口坐下来才能觉得安稳。听着，雷，我突然想到一件事情。关系到我们的计划。”

“我们的计划？”

“对，我们的全盘计划。当然了，你也已经发现现在不是粉饰形象、让埃米莉对你改观的时候。绝不是掩盖缺点、炫耀你自己的时候。不是，不是。你还记得我当初为什么会选你吧。雷，我全靠你在埃米莉面前做真实的你。只要你做到这点，我们的计划就没有问题。”

“咳，听着，我现在很难成为埃米莉的大英雄了……”

“是，你明白目前的情况，我很感激。可我刚刚想到一件事情。就一件事情，你的条件里有一件小事，跟目前的计划有出入。是这样，雷，埃米莉觉得你很有音乐品位。”

“啊……”

“只有一次，只有一次她说我不如你，就是音乐品位。除了这一条，你就是这个任务十全十美的人选了。所以，雷，你得答应不提音乐。”

“哦，天啊……”

“答应我吧，雷。这个要求不过分。不要提起那些……那些她喜欢的抒情老歌。要是她提起了，你别搭腔。我就要求这一点。剩下的你只要跟平时一样就可以了。雷，你能做到这点，对不对？”

“这个，我想可以。反正这些都只是理论上说说而已。我想我们今天晚上不会聊什么天。”

“很好！那就没事了。现在来说说你那个小问题。我想了一下你那事儿，你高兴吧。而且我想出了一个办法。你在听吗？”

“在，我在听。”

“有一对夫妇经常到我们家来。安杰拉和索利。他们人还行，可要不是因为是邻居我们不会跟他们打交道的。反正就是他们经常到我们家来。不事先打招呼就过来喝杯茶。然后关键点，他们经常是白天什么时候带亨德里克斯出来时，顺便过来。”

“亨德里克斯？”

“亨德里克斯是一只臭烘烘、脾气暴躁，甚至可能杀人的拉布拉多猎狗。当然了，对安杰拉和索利来说，那畜牲就像他们的孩子。他们没有孩子，可能他们还不算太老，还能生孩子。可他们更喜欢亲爱、亲爱的亨德里克斯。每次过来，亲爱的亨德里克斯都会像个很不爽的小偷一样尽力搞破坏。砰，落地灯倒了。哦天啊，没关系，亲爱的，你吓到了吗？你明白吧。听好了。大约一年以前，我们买了一本放在咖啡几上摆设的大画册，花了不少钱，是一帮年轻的男同性恋在北非城堡拍的艺术照片。埃米莉就喜欢翻开那页，觉得跟沙发很配。你要是翻到别页去她会很生气。反正就是大约一年以前，亨德里克斯过来的时候把那照片啃了个精光。没错，就这么把它的牙齿伸到蜡光

纸里去，啃啊啃，总共啃了二十来页它妈咪才让它停下来。知道我为什么跟你说这些吧？”

“是。我知道你说的办法了，可……”

“很好，我来给你解释清楚。你这样跟埃米莉说。有人敲门，你开了门，那对夫妇牵着亨德里克斯站在门口。他们跟你说他们是安杰拉和索利，是我们的好朋友，来喝杯茶。你让他们进来了，亨德里克斯胡闹起来，咬了日记本。能混过去的。怎么了？你怎么不谢我？你不满意？”

“我很感激，查理。我只是在考虑。你瞧，比如说，要是他们真的出现怎么办？我是说在埃米莉回来以后？”

“我想有这个可能。我只能说若真的是这样，你真的是太背、太背了。我说他们经常过来，意思是顶多一个月一次。所以别挑刺了，快谢我。”

“可是查理，那狗只咬那本日记本，还刚好咬到了那几页，是不是太牵强了？”

我听见他叹了一口气。“我以为不用说得这么详细的。你当然要把整个地方都弄一弄啦。把落地灯弄倒，洒点糖到厨房的地板上。你要弄得好像亨德里克斯把那里弄得乱七八糟的。听着，在叫登机了。我得走了。我到了德国再跟你联系。”

听查理说话让我感觉像在听一个人絮絮叨叨地讲他做过的梦，或者讲他的车门是怎么被撞到的。他的办法很好——甚至可以说是天才——可是我看不出这跟埃米莉回来以后我想说的或做的有什么关系，我越听越不耐烦。但是挂了电话以后，我发现查理的话对我有一种催眠的作用。尽管我脑子里觉得他的办法很白痴，但我的手脚却开始把他的“办法”付诸实践。

我把落地灯放倒，小心不撞到其他的東西。我先把灯罩拿掉，把灯放倒，再把灯罩歪歪斜斜地放回去。然后我从书架上拿下一个花瓶，把它放到地毯上，把里面的干草洒在旁边。接着我选了咖啡几旁的一个好地方把垃圾桶“撞倒”。我做这些的时候感觉很奇怪，很不真实。我不相信这样做能有什么用，可我发现做这些事让我觉得心里好过一些。突然我想到我搞这些破坏都是为了那本日记。于是我走进厨房。

我想了想，从碗柜里拿出一罐糖，放在桌子上日记本旁边，慢慢倾斜，让糖倒出来。我本来还想让罐子从桌子边掉下去，但最后没有这么做。因为这个时候，一直折磨着我的害怕的感觉挥发殆尽了。我并不是恢复了平静，而是觉得这样做实在是太傻了。

我回到客厅，在沙发上躺下，拿起简·奥斯丁的书，读了几行，感觉累得不行，不知不觉又睡着了。

我被电话吵醒。听见埃米莉的声音出现在答录机里，我坐起来接电话。

“哦天啊，雷蒙德，你在啊。你还好吗，亲爱的？现在感觉怎么样？有好好休息吗？”

我告诉她别担心，我很好，刚刚正在睡觉。

“哦对不起！你可能已经几星期没好好睡觉了，可是你好不容易睡着了，我又把你吵醒！太对不起了！还有一件事我也很抱歉，雷，我要让你失望了。公司里出了要紧的事情，我没办法早回去。我至少还得再过一个钟头。你能坚持一下吧。”

我重申我现在很好，很舒服。

“是啊，听你的声音确实挺好。太对不起了，雷，我得挂电话去做事情了。你想要什么就拿什么吧。再见，亲爱的。”

我放下电话，伸了伸胳膊。天色渐暗，我起来打开公寓里的灯。我看着被我“破坏”了的客厅，越看越觉得不自然。害怕的感觉再次涌上心头。

电话又响了，这次是查理。他说他现在在法兰克福机场的行李传送带旁。

“真他妈的慢。到现在一件行李都没有。你那里怎么样了？女主人还没回来吗？”

“还没。听着，查理，你的办法行不通。”

“你说行不通是什么意思？不要告诉我你到现在还没动手，还在犹豫。”

“我照你说的做了。我把房间弄乱了，可是看着不像那么回事。不像有狗来过，倒像个艺术展。”

他没有说话，可能是在注意看行李来了没有。过了一会儿，他说道：“我理解你的顾虑。因为是别人的东西，你一定会缩手缩脚。听好了，我点名几样东西我衷心希望你把它们砸个稀巴烂。你在听吗，雷？我要你把这些东西砸烂。那个垃圾瓷牛。在CD机旁边。那是王八蛋大卫·科里从拉各斯回来的时候送的。你就从那个开始。事实上，我不在乎你砸什么东西。统统都砸了吧！”

“查理，你要冷静。”

“好，好。但那个房子里的东西全是破烂。就像我们现在的婚姻。全是一堆破烂。那个红色海绵沙发，你知道我说哪个吧，雷？”

“是。我刚刚还在上面睡觉来着。”

“早就该扔到垃圾桶里去了。把外面的皮撕开，把里面的海绵统统翻出来。”

“查理，冷静一下。你这根本不是在帮我。你只是把我当作发泄你的愤怒和沮丧的工具……”

“别胡说八道了！我当然是在帮你。而且我的办法很好。我保证能行的。埃米莉恨那条狗，恨安杰拉和索利，她抓住一切机会更恨他们一点。听着。”他的声音突然变成近乎耳语。“我教你这个最大的秘诀。用这个秘密配方一定能让埃米莉相信。我早该想到了。你还有多少时间？”

“大约一个小时……”

“很好。仔细听好了。味道。没错。在房子里弄出狗的味道。她一进门就会察觉到，即使只是下意识地。然后她走进房间，看见亲爱的大卫的瓷牛在地上摔成粉碎，看见那个破沙发里的海绵到处都是……”

“听着，我没有说我……”

“别插嘴。她看见屋子里乱七八糟的，马上就会有意无意地联想到狗的气味。你什么都还没说，她就会想到是亨德里克斯干的。太漂亮了！”

“瞎说，查理。那好，我怎么把你家弄出狗的味道来呢？”

“我知道怎么弄。”他的声音还是低低的，但很兴奋。“我清楚得很。以前我和托尼·巴顿在中学六年级时干过。他弄了个配方，我改进了一下。”

“为什么？”

“为什么？因为他的配方更像臭白菜，而不是狗，这就是为什么。”

“不是，我是说你们为什么……好了，算了。你告诉我吧，只要不用出去买一套化学品就行。”

“很好。你转过弯来了。拿支笔来，雷。记下来。啊，行李终于来了！”他一定是把手机放到口袋里了，我听见一阵窸窣窸窣的声音。然后他重新拿起电话说道：

“我没时间多说了。记下来。准备好了吗？中等大小的长柄锅一只。可能灶子上已经有了。放入一品脱左右的水和两块牛肉浓缩汤块、一小勺孜然、一大勺辣椒粉、两大勺醋、一大把月桂叶。记下来了吗？然后放进一只皮鞋或皮靴，底朝上，别让鞋底完全浸在水里，这样就不会有烧焦橡胶的味道。接着就可以打开煤气，把这堆东西放上去煮了，让它慢慢炖。很快就会有味道出来了。不是很难闻。托尼·巴顿原来的配方里还加了鼻涕虫，可我这个更像狗的臭味。我知道你要问我去哪里找这些材料。所有的香料什么的都在厨房的柜子里。楼梯底下的储物柜里有一双旧靴子。不是那双高筒靴，拿破破烂烂的那双，有点像加长的鞋子。我以前常穿去散步。已经不能穿了，该扔掉了。拿一只。怎么了？听着，雷，就这么做，好吗？救救你自己。因为我告诉你，发飙的埃米莉可不是闹着玩的。我得挂电话了。哦，对了，记住不要卖弄你的音乐学问。”

也许是因为得到了一系列清楚的指示，不管这些指示多么荒唐，我放下电话时，刚才害怕的感觉没有了，变得干劲十足。我很清楚自己该做什么。我走进厨房，打开电灯。炉子上确实有一只“中等大小的”长柄锅等着执行任务。我装了半锅水，然后放回炉子上。我虽忙活着，但心里清楚，在我往下做之前得先确认一件事：即我到底有多少时间来完成这些事情。我走回客厅，拿起电话，拨通埃米莉办公室的号码。

助理接的电话，告诉我埃米莉在开会。我半是亲切半是坚决地要把埃米莉从会场叫出来，“看看她是否真的在开会”。不一会儿，埃米莉来了。

“怎么了，雷蒙德？什么事？”

“没事。我只是想看看你怎么样了。”

“雷，你怪怪的。怎么了？”

“什么叫我怪怪的？我只是想确认你什么时候会回来。我知道你觉得我是个懒人，但我还是想要个时间表什么的。”

“雷蒙德，没必要生气嘛。我想想。还要一个小时……也可能是一个半小时。我真的很抱歉，公司里出了非常要紧的事情……”

“一个到一个半小时。好的。我就想知道这个。那我们一会儿见。你回去工作吧。”

埃米莉可能还想说些什么，但我已经把电话挂了，大步走进厨房，决心不让我现在坚定的心情很快消失。事实上，我现在慢慢地越来越兴奋，想不通之前怎么会让自己那么绝望。我搜遍厨房的柜子，把我需要的香料和调味品在炉子旁整整齐齐地摆成一排。然后我各取适量倒进水里，很快地搅拌一下，开始找靴子。

楼梯底下的储物柜里藏着一大堆破破烂烂的鞋子。我搜寻了一番，发现确实有一只查理方子里的靴子——有一只特别破烂的靴子，脚后跟的边上结着陈年泥土块。我用指尖捏住鞋，拿到厨房里，小心翼翼地底朝上放进锅里。接着我打开炉子，开到中火，然后就坐下来，等水开。当电话再次响起时，我真不愿意离开我的锅，但我听见查理在答录机里说啊说，最后我还是把火关小，去接电话。

“你刚刚说什么呢？”我问。“听起来一副可怜样。我很忙，没听清。”

“我到旅馆了。只有三星级。你能相信这种厚颜无耻的事吗！那么大一家公司！房间也小得要命！”

“可你就住两三个晚上……”

“听着，雷，之前我没有完全说实话。我觉得对你不公平。毕竟你是在帮我，在尽全力帮我，帮我弥补和埃米莉的关系。而我却没有对你诚实。”

“你要是想说狗气味的配方，已经太迟了。我已经全都弄下去了。我想也许还可以再加一种香料什么的……”

“我之前没有对你诚实是因为我没有对自己诚实。可现在离开了家，我的脑子清楚多了。雷，之前我跟你说不说没有第三者不完全正确。有这么个女生。没错，年轻女生，顶多三十出头。她很关心发展中国家的教育，关心更加公平的全球贸易。她吸引我的不是性，那只能说

是副产品。是她还未失去光泽的理想主义，让我想起以前的我们。记得吗，雷？”

“对不起，查理，我不记得你以前特别理想主义。说实话，你一直很自私，喜欢享乐……”

“好吧，也许以前我们都是一群没用的笨蛋，我们这些人。可是在我心里一直有另一个我想要跳出来。这就是她吸引我的地方……”

“查理，这是什么时候的事？什么时候开始的？”

“什么什么时候开始的？”

“婚外情。”

“没有什么婚外情！我没有和她性交，没有。连一起吃饭都没有。我只是……我只是喜欢看见她。”

“什么意思，喜欢看见她？”我边说边踱进厨房，盯着那锅东西。

“啊，我喜欢看见她，”他说。“我总是找机会见她。”

“你是说她是应召女郎。”

“不是，不是，我说了，我们没有性交。不是，她是个牙医。我老去找她，说这里痛，那里不舒服，能多去几次就多去几次。当然，最后埃米莉怀疑了。”说到这里，查理好像在强忍着不哭出来。但大坝还是决堤了。“她发现了……她发现了……因为我老用牙线清洁牙齿！”他现在几乎是在叫嚷。“她说，你从来没有这么勤快地清洁牙齿……”

“可这说不通啊。你越保护你的牙，就越没有理由去找她了……”

“谁管它说得通说不通？我只想取悦她！”

“听着，查理，你没有跟她约会，没有跟她性交，那有什么问题？”

“问题就在于，我太想要这么一个人，一个能把关在我心里的那个自我放出来的人……”

“查理，听我说。接了你上一次的电话以后，我就大大地振作了。老实说，我觉得你也应该振作起来。你回来以后我们可以把这整

件事好好地谈一谈。可埃米莉再过大概一个小时就回来了，我得把一切都布置好。我这儿正忙着呢，查理。我想你可以从我的声音里听出来。”

“笑死人了！你正忙着呢。很好！他妈的什么朋友……”

“查理，我想你是不喜欢那个旅馆才会这么心烦意乱的。但你应该振作起来。理智一些。打起精神。我这儿正忙着呢。我得先解决狗的事，然后我会尽全力帮你。我会对埃米莉说：‘埃米莉，看看我，看看我多没用。’其实，很多人都和我一样没用。可是查理他不一样。查理比我们优秀。”

“你不能这样说。太假了。”

“我当然不是照这样说了，白痴。听着，交给我吧。一切都在我的掌握之中。你要冷静。好了，我得挂电话了。”

我放下电话，查看锅里的东西。锅里的液体已经沸腾了，不断冒着蒸汽，可是还没有什么味道。我把火开得再大一点，锅里开始不停冒泡。这时，我突然很想呼吸一下新鲜空气，而我又还没去过他们的天台，于是我打开厨房门，走了出去。

对于六月初的英国，今晚特别暖和。只有微风中的少许凉意提醒我现在不是在西班牙。天还没有全黑，但已经布满了星星。越过天台尽头的那堵墙，我能望见数英里内的窗户和几码内邻居屋里的家具。很多人家的窗户都亮了；眯起眼，远处的窗户就像星星的延伸。天台不大，却很有情调。你可以想象一对夫妇在繁忙的都市生活中，在一个温和的夜晚，到天台上来，手挽着手，漫步于盆栽的小树丛里，交换彼此一天的故事。

我本可以再多待一会儿，但我怕我的干劲消失，就回到厨房里，走过冒着泡的锅，走到客厅的入口，端详着我之前的布置。突然，我意识到我犯了一个大错，我完全没有从亨德里克斯的角度来想问题。现在我明白了事情的关键是把自己当作亨德里克斯。

这么一来，我发现不仅我之前的努力全是白费，而且查理的建议大多都没有用。一只精力过剩的狗怎么会从音响中间把一只小瓷牛拔出来砸碎呢？割开沙发、掏出海绵这事儿也太不现实了。亨德里克斯得有剃刀般的牙齿才能做到。厨房里弄翻糖罐的主意还行，可是我发现客厅得完全重新布置。

我弯着腰走进客厅，以便更好地从亨德里克斯的视角来看东西。我一眼就看见咖啡几上的那堆杂志是最明显的目标。于是我一把把书扫了出去，就像一只畜牲用嘴甩出去的一样。书掉在地板上的样子看起来很真实。我受到了鼓舞，跪下来，翻开一本杂志，揉碎其中的一页，希望能模仿日记本的效果，但结果并不理想：一看就是人手弄的，不像狗的牙齿弄的。我又犯了之前的错误：我还没有完全把自己当作亨德里克斯。

这次我四脚着地，低下头，把牙齿伸进同一本杂志。味道香香的，不是很糟。我翻开另一本掉在地上的杂志，翻到中间，重复同样的动作。我渐渐领悟到，最理想的动作跟在露天市场里玩不用手咬起浮在水里的苹果的游戏类似。轻轻地咀嚼、下巴不停地轻盈摆动，效果最好：这样书页就会变得乱糟糟、皱巴巴的。相反，咬得太用力只会把书页都“钉”在一起，没有明显效果。

我想我太在意这些细节，才没有早点发现埃米莉站在走廊里，就在门口，看着我。看见她，我的第一反应不是害怕或者尴尬，而是受伤：她居然就那么站在那里，不告诉我说她回来了。想到几分钟前我为了避免现在这种情况还特意打电话给她，我觉得自己被骗了。这大概就是为什么我的第一个动作只是疲惫地叹了口气，仍旧四脚着地跪在地上，没有起来。我看着埃米莉走进屋子，一只手很温柔地搭在我的背上。我不确定她有没有跪下来，但她说话时，脸离我很近。

“雷蒙德，我回来了。我们坐下来吧，好吗？”

说着，她扶我起来，我强忍着不把她推开。

“真奇怪，”我说。“几分钟前你才说要去开会。”

“没错。可是接到你的电话以后，我发现有必要提早回来。”

“有必要？什么意思？埃米莉，你不用这样抓住我的胳膊，我不会摔倒的。你说有必要提早回来是什么意思？”

“你的电话。我后来明白你为什么打电话。你打电话找我求救。”

“没有的事。我只是想……”我停住了，因为我发现埃米莉正好奇地打量着客厅。

“哦，雷蒙德，”她轻声说，几乎是自言自语。

“我刚刚不小心把这里弄乱了，正在收拾，想不到你提早回来了。”

我弯下腰去捡倒在地上的落地灯，但是埃米莉拉住我。

“没关系，雷。真的没关系。待会儿我们可以一起收拾。你先坐下来休息。”

“埃米莉，我知道这儿是你家什么的。可是刚刚你为什么一声不响偷偷地进来？”

“我没有偷偷地进来，亲爱的。我进门时叫你了，可你好像不在。我就赶紧去了下厕所，出来时，咳，发现你在。好了，别说这些了。有什么关系呢？现在我回来了，我们可以一起过个轻松愉快的夜晚。坐下来吧，雷蒙德。我去泡茶。”

说着，她朝厨房走去。我正在摆弄落地灯的灯罩，过了一会儿才记起厨房里在煮什么——可为时已晚。我侧耳倾听她的反应，可是没有什么声音也没有。最后，我放下灯罩，朝厨房门口走去。

长柄锅还在均匀地冒着气泡，蒸汽从靴子周围冒出来。而且味道出来了，在外面没注意，厨房里就很明显。那味道闻起来自然很辛辣，有点像咖喱。但最主要的是像你走了很长时间的路以后，把臭汗淋淋的脚从靴子里拔出来时的味儿。

埃米莉站在离炉子几步远的地方，伸长脖子，从一个安全距离看清锅里的东西。她好像完全被眼前的景象迷住了，我苦笑了一声表明我在，她没有转移视线，更没有转身。

我从她身边挤过去，在桌子旁坐下。最后，埃米莉终于亲切地微笑着转向我说：“这主意真是太可爱了，雷蒙德。”

说完，她的视线又不由自主地回到了炉子上。

我看见面前放着被我弄倒的糖罐——和日记——突然感到一股巨大的疲惫。一切都完了，我唯一的出路就是放弃所有的把戏，如实交待。我深吸了一口气，说道：

“是这样的，埃米莉。事情好像有点古怪，但一切都是因为你的日记本。就这本。”我翻开被我捏烂的那一页给她看。“我真的很对不起，我真不该这样做。我顺手翻开了你的本子，然后，然后不小心弄坏了这一页。像这样……”我轻轻地把先前的动作又做了一遍，然后看着她。

出人意料的是，她只匆匆扫了一眼本子，就又看着炉子，说：“哦，那只是一本记事本。没有什么隐私。不用担心，雷。”说完她向前走了一步，好把锅里的东西看得更清楚些。

“什么意思？不用担心？你怎么能这样说？”

“怎么了，雷蒙德？那本子只是用来记一些我怕忘记的事。”

“可是查理跟我说你会发飙！”看来埃米莉全忘了她写了我什么，我更生气了。

“真的？查理跟你说我会生气？”

“是！他说有一次你跟他说，他要是敢看这小本子，你就把他的蛋蛋割下来！”

我不确定埃米莉一脸的疑惑是因为听了我的话，还是还没从那锅东西中缓过来。她在我旁边坐下，思索起来。

“没有，”过了好一会儿，她说道。“是别的事。我现在想起来了。去年大概这个时候，查理为了什么事情很沮丧，问我要是他自杀了，我会怎么办。他只是在试探我，他那么胆小，根本不可能去做那种事。可是他问了，我就回答他说要是他自杀了，我就把他的蛋蛋割下来。我就只有那次跟他说了这个。我意思是，这又不是我的口头禅。”

“我不明白。要是他自杀了，你要割他的蛋蛋？死了以后？”

“这只是一个比方，雷蒙德。我只是想说要是他自杀了，我会多讨厌他。我想让他自信起来。”

“你没明白我的意思。死了才割不算是阻止他吧？也许你说得对，这样会……”

“雷蒙德，别说这些了。我们别说这些了。我们昨天吃羊肉砂锅，还剩大半锅。味道很不错，今天再炖一炖味道会更好。我们还可以开瓶上好的波尔多。我很高兴你动手准备晚餐，但是我们今晚吃砂锅吧，你说呢？”

如今我不想再解释了。“好，好。羊肉砂锅。很好。行，可以。”

“那……把这些扔了吧？”

“嗯，对。扔了吧。”

我站起来，走进客厅——客厅还是一团糟，但我没有力气收拾了。我一屁股躺倒在沙发上，盯着天花板。过了一会儿，我听见艾米莉也到客厅里来了，我以为她要到走廊去，但她走到客厅的另一头，蹲下来摆弄音响。不一会儿，屋里响起了优美、忧郁的管弦乐声，然后是萨拉·沃恩的《爱人》。

我突然感到无比轻松、宽慰，和着缓缓的拍子，闭上眼睛，想起许多年以前，在艾米莉的宿舍里，我们俩争论说这首歌比利·霍利迪是不是每次都唱得比萨拉·沃恩好，争论了一个多小时。

艾米莉碰了碰我的肩膀，递给我一杯红酒，自己手里也拿着一杯。她的套装外系着一条镶边围裙。她在沙发的另一头、我的脚边坐下来，抿了一口酒。然后用遥控器把音量关小。

“乱糟糟的一天，”她说。“不单单是工作，今天公司里一团糟。还包括查理离开什么的。别以为我不难过，我们还没和好他就这么出国去。最后，你又这个样子。”她长长地叹了口气。

“不，不是的，艾米莉，没有那么糟。首先，查理很爱你。至于我，我很好。真的很好。”

“胡说。”

“是真的。我感觉很好……”

“我是说你说查理很爱我。”

“哦，这个。你要是觉得我是胡说，那你就大错特错了。事实上，我知道查理比以前更爱你。”

“你怎么知道，雷蒙德？”

“我怎么知道……首先，中午吃饭时，他就是这个意思。就算他没有直说，我也看得出来。你瞧，艾米莉，我知道现在事情是不太如意，但你应该记住最重要的一点，那就是查理仍旧非常爱你。”

她又叹了一口气。“知道吗？我好几年没听这张唱片了。都是因为查理。我一放这些唱片，他立马反对。”

我们都不说话，静静听着萨拉·沃恩的歌声。歌曲间奏的时候，艾米莉说道：“雷蒙德，我想你更喜欢她的另一个版本。只有钢琴和贝司伴奏的那个。”

我没有回答，只是坐直了些，喝了一小口酒。

“肯定是，”她说，“你更喜欢那个版本，对不对，雷蒙德？”

“这个嘛，”我说，“我不知道。老实说，我不记得那个版本了。”

我能感觉到埃米莉在沙发那头动了动。“开玩笑，雷蒙德。”

“真好笑，可我最近不大听这些东西了。老实说，我已经忘得差不多了。我都记不得现在这首是什么歌了。”说完，我笑了笑，但可能笑得有点奇怪。

“你那是什么话？”埃米莉突然生气了。“太荒唐了。除非你把脑子给切了，不然你是不可能忘记的。”

“啊。过去好多年了。变了。”

“你那是什么话？”这次她的声音里透出丝丝的恐惧。“不可能变那么多。”

我实在不想再说下去，就转移话题：“工作不顺利真是够呛。”

埃米莉根本不理睬。“那你是什么意思？你是说你不喜欢这个？你要我把它关掉，是不是？”

“不，不是，埃米莉，别这样，很好听。而且……而且勾起我的回忆。拜托，让我们回到刚才，一分钟以前安安静静、轻轻松松的样子。”

埃米莉又叹了一口气。当她再次开口时，又变得很温柔了。

“对不起，亲爱的。我忘了。你最不希望我朝你大嚷大叫。我很抱歉。”

“不，不，没关系。”我坐了起来。“要知道，埃米莉，查理是个好人。很优秀的人。而且他爱你。你不可能找到比他更好的了。”

埃米莉耸耸肩，喝了口酒。“也许你说得对。而且我们不年轻了。事情变成这样我们双方都有责任。我们应该觉得自己是幸运的。可是我们似乎从来不满意。我不知道为什么。因为每当我静下来细想，我知道除了他我不是真的想要其他人。”

埃米莉不说话了，只是喝着酒，听着音乐。过了一会儿她接着说：“雷蒙德，就好像你参加派对、舞会。正慢慢地跳着舞，跟你最想在一起的人在一起，房间里的其他人就会消失。可不知为什么，不是这样的。不是。你很清楚其他人都比不上你怀里这个。可是……可

是，房间里都是人。这些人让你不得安宁。不停叫啊喊啊，招呼你啊，做各种蠢事吸引你的注意。‘哦，你怎么能这样就满足了呢？！你可以找到更好的！看看我！’他们好像一直在朝我喊这样的话，越来越让人受不了，结果你没法安安静静地跟你喜欢的人跳舞。你懂我的意思吗，雷蒙德？”

我想了想，才答道：“我没有你和查理幸运。我没有像你们一样找到一个挚爱。但从某些方面来说，我懂你的意思。人很难知道哪里可以安身，何以安身。”

“太对了。我希望这些不请自来的人走开。我希望他们走开，让我们过我们自己的。”

“要知道，埃米莉，我刚刚说的不是在开玩笑。查理很爱你。跟你闹得不愉快他也很伤心。”

此时埃米莉几乎是背对着我，而且很久都没有说话。萨拉·沃恩缓缓地唱起优美的超慢版《四月的巴黎》。这时，埃米莉突然站了起来，好像萨拉喊了她的名字。她转向我，摇摇头。

“我不相信，雷。我不相信你不再听这些歌了。以前我们常常一起听这些唱片。用妈妈在我上大学前给我买的那台小电唱机。你怎么可以忘记了呢？”

我站起来，拿着酒杯，走到落地窗前。我往天台上望去，发觉眼睛里充满泪水。于是我打开窗子，走了出去，想趁埃米莉不注意把眼泪擦掉。但是她跟了出来，不知道她是不是看到了。

那晚温暖宜人，萨拉·沃恩的歌声和乐队的伴奏声飘到了天台上。星星比刚才更亮了，邻居家的灯光依旧像夜空里的星星一样眨着眼睛。

“我喜欢这首歌，”埃米莉说。“我想你连这首也忘了吧。但就算你不记得了，我们还是可以跟着音乐跳支舞，对不对？”

“是。我想可以。”

“我们可以像弗雷德·阿斯泰尔和金洁·罗杰斯<sup>[12]</sup>一样。”

“是，我们可以。”

我们把杯子放在石桌上，开始跳舞。我们跳得不是很好，老撞到对方的膝盖，但是我把埃米莉紧紧地抱着，全身心地感觉着她的衣

服、头发、肌肤。这样抱着她再次提醒我她胖了不少。

“你说得对，雷蒙德，”她在我耳边轻声说道。“查理是个好人。我们会好起来的。”

“是。当然了。”

“有你这个朋友太好了，雷蒙德。没有你我怎么办？”

“我很高兴我是个好朋友。除此之外我一无是处。老实说，我真的很没用。”

我感到肩膀被重重地拍了一下。

“别说这种话，”埃米莉轻声说道。“不许说这种话。”过了一会儿，她又说了一遍：“有你这个朋友真是太好了，雷蒙德。”

埃米莉放的是萨拉·沃恩1954年版的《四月的巴黎》，克利福德·布朗演奏的小号，所以我知道这首歌很长，至少有八分钟。我很高兴，因为我知道歌曲一结束，我们就不会再跳舞了，而是进去吃砂锅。而且我知道，到时埃米莉就会重新考虑日记本的事，这次她不会再觉得不是什么大不了的事了。谁知道呢？可是至少还有几分钟我们是安全的，我们就这么在星空下跳舞。

莫尔文山

春天，我在伦敦度过。总的来说，虽然我没有完成所有的预定任务，但这段日子还是相当激动人心的。然而，随着日子一天天过去，夏天临近，以往的烦躁不安又回来了。比方说，我隐隐地害怕再遇见以前的大学同学。当我在卡姆登区闲逛时，当我搜寻着我在西区大商场买不起的CD时，总能遇见以前的同学，问我自从离开学校出来“追求功名利禄”以后，混得怎么样。我不是不好意思告诉他们我的现状，而是他们没人——除了极少数的几个例外——能理解对现在的我来说，什么才叫“成功的”数个月。

我说了，我没有完成所有的预定任务，但这些任务更像是长期的奋斗目标。所有的这些试音，就算是最无聊的，也是很宝贵的经验。几乎每一次我都不会空手而归，我都能了解到一些伦敦，甚至全世界乐坛的事情。

有的试音挺正式的。你到一个仓库或改装的车库里去，有经理或者乐队成员的女朋友记下你的名字，端茶给你，叫你等一会儿，这时隔壁传来很大声的、乐队时断时续的演奏。但是大部分试音则很随便。事实上，看了大多数乐队行为处事的方式之后，你就会明白为什么伦敦乐坛每况愈下。我一次次穿梭于伦敦郊区不知名的街道间，带着我的原声吉他走上楼梯，走进散发着霉味的公寓。屋子里的地板上垫子和睡袋扔得到处都是。乐队的人嘴里一直嘀咕着，几乎不看你的眼睛。我弹唱的时候他们只是两眼空洞地看着你，直到其中一个人叫我停下来，说：“噢，可以了。谢谢你来试音，但这跟我们的风格不太一样。”

我很快就发现这些人其实很多都很害羞，对试音这事儿很不自在。若我和他们聊些别的，他们就放松多了。我就是这样收集到各种有用的信息的：哪儿有有意思的夜总会，哪个乐队需要吉他手。或者只是推荐你听听哪里的乐队。我说了，我从来不会空手而归。

基本上大家都觉得我吉他弹得不错，很多人还说我的声音很适合和声。但我很快就发现有两个因素对我不利。一是我没有装备。很多乐队都希望找到一个自带电吉他、扩音器、喇叭，最好还有交通工具的人，能够马上开始和他们一起表演。我只有两条腿和一把破破烂烂

的原声吉他。所以不管他们多喜欢我的演奏或声音，都不得不叫我走人。公平得很。

另一主要障碍才让人难以接受——而且我得说，这一点是我完全没有预料到的。我自己写歌竟然成了问题。真不敢相信。我在某个乱糟糟的公寓里，对着一群面无表情的脸孔演奏，弹完了以后，经过十五、甚至三十秒钟的停顿，会有一个人疑惑地问道：“这是谁的歌？”我说是我自己的歌，刷的一声，窗子关上了。耸肩的耸肩，摇头的摇头，还诡异地互相笑一笑，然后送上他们打发人的那套说辞。

在这种情况下发生到第无数次的时候，我实在生气了。我说：“我不明白。难道你们想永远做一支翻唱乐队？就算是这样，你们以为那些歌打哪儿来的？当然是有人写的！”

可是听我说话的那个人一脸茫然地看着我，说：“没有冒犯之意，伙计。只是写歌的浑球儿太多了。”

似乎整个伦敦乐坛都是这种傻瓜论调。正是这一点使我相信：在这里，就在最根部，有一种就算不是完全腐烂，但至少也是极其肤浅、极其虚伪的东西在蔓延；这种现象无疑直达最上层，反映了整个音乐界的现状。

这一发现，加上夏天临近，使得我再没有地方可以寄居，我决定：虽然伦敦魅力四射——我的大学生活跟它一比，真是暗淡无光——我还是离开一阵子的好。于是我打电话给家姐玛吉。她和丈夫在莫尔文山经营一家小餐厅。就这样，我决定这个夏天和他们一起住。

玛吉比我大四岁，而且老是为我担心，所以我知道她一定赞成我到她那里去。其实，我还知道她很高兴有人帮她。我说她在莫尔文山开小餐厅，并不是指在大莫尔文镇或一级公路上，而是确确实实在山上。餐厅是一栋维多利亚时期的老房子，面朝西独自屹立在山上，因此天气晴朗时，可以把茶和蛋糕拿到店外的露台上去，俯瞰整个赫里福郡的景色。冬天的时候只得关门大吉，但夏天则总是忙得不可开交。客人主要是本地人——他们把车停在山下一百米的“西英格兰”停车场，穿着凉鞋和花花绿绿的衣服，气喘吁吁地沿着小路爬上来——有时也有手拿地图、穿戴整齐、徒步登山的游客。

玛吉说她和杰夫没钱付我工资，这正合我意，因为这样我就不用做得很辛苦。但是既然我在这里吃、在这里住，大家自然把我当作第

三名店员。一开始的时候事情有点乱，特别是杰夫，有时很想揍我一顿，因为我干得太少，有时又不好意思叫我做事情，好像我是客人。但情况很快就步入了正轨。工作很简单——我特别会做三明治——但我得时不时提醒自己不要忘了最初决定来乡下的主要目的，是为了写一批新歌，秋天回伦敦的时候用。

我天生就是个早起的人，但是我很快就发现店里的早餐时间真是噩梦：客人要的蛋要做成这样、面包要烤成那样，东西常常煮过头。于是我决定十一点之前不出现。当楼下吵吵嚷嚷的时候，我打开房里的凸窗，坐在宽大的窗台上，面向绵延数英里的山丘弹奏吉他。我刚来的时候，一连几个早上都是大晴天，感觉好极了，景色一望无际。我随意拨弄琴弦，琴声好像能传遍整个英国。只有当我把脑袋伸出窗外，才会看见底下餐厅的露台，看见人们牵着狗、推着婴儿车进进出出。

我对这个地方并不陌生。玛吉和我就在离这里只有几英里的珀肖尔长大，父母经常带我们到山上来散步。可是那时候我不喜欢这里，等我长大一点，我就不跟他们一起来了。但是那年夏天，我感到这里是世界上最美的地方；感到从许多方面说来，我来自并且属于这片山丘。这种感觉也许跟我们的父母已经离异有关，多年来，理发店对面的那间灰色小屋不再是“我们的”家了。不管是什么原因，现在我对这里的感受不再是童年印象中的幽闭、可怕，而是亲切，甚至是怀念。

我几乎每天都到山上去走一走，要是确定不会下雨的话，还会把吉他带上。我特别喜欢位于山脉北端的桌山和尾山，当天来、当天回的人一般不会到这里来。有时候，我在这里坐上好几个小时，独自思考，一个人影也见不到。感觉就好像我是第一次发现这里，有无数的新旋律在我脑子里冒出来。

然而在店里帮忙就是另一回事了。做三明治的时候，总有一个熟悉的声音或面孔，朝柜台这边过来，把我猛地拉回到过去。父母的老朋友会过来盘问我的近况，我只好瞎扯一通，直到他们不再烦我。离开之前他们常常会一边看我切面包、切西红柿，一边点点头，说“啊，至少你现在有事可做”之类的话，才拿着杯子、碟子蹒跚地回到座位上去。有时是遇见我的老同学，操着一副新学来的“大学”腔跟我搭话，对最新的蝙蝠侠电影评头论足一番，或者侃侃而谈世界贫困的根本原因。

我不是真的介意这些事，有些人我很高兴见到他们。可是那年夏天，当这个人走进店里时，我一看见她浑身就僵掉了。等我想到我应该躲到厨房里去时，她已经看见我了。

这个人就是弗雷泽太太——或者按照以前我们的叫法：哈格·弗雷泽。当她牵着一只脏兮兮的小斗牛犬进来时我一眼就认出了她。我真想告诉她不可以带狗进来，虽说很多人进来点餐时都会把狗带进来。哈格·弗雷泽是我在珀肖尔读书时的一个老师。谢天谢地，她在我上中学六年级以前就退休了，可是她的阴影却留在了我整个读书阶段。除她之外，学校里的日子并不坏，可是她从一开始就讨厌我、处处为难我，面对她这种人，一个十一岁的小孩子只能逆来顺受。她所用的伎俩是变态老师常用的那种，比如上课时专挑我不会的问题叫我起来回答，让全班同学笑话我。后来就更高明了。记得有一次，我十四岁那年，一个新来的老师，特拉维斯先生，在课堂上跟我互相开玩笑，不是挖苦我的笑话，而是好像我们是朋友，同学们都笑了，我感觉挺好。可是两天后，我下楼梯时，碰巧特拉维斯先生和她一起说着话，迎面走来。我走过去时，哈格·弗雷泽把我叫住，说我迟交作业还是什么的，把我臭骂一顿。她这么做的目的是让特拉维斯先生知道我是个“捣蛋学生”；要是特拉维斯先生以为我是个值得他尊敬的孩子，就大错特错了。或许是因为她年纪大，我说不准，但是其他老师好像从来都不怀疑她，都把她的话当真。

那天哈格·弗雷泽进来时显然认出了我，但她既没有笑一笑也没有叫我的名字。她要了一杯茶和一包奶油夹心饼干以后就到露台去了。我以为事情就这样了，没想到过了一会儿，她又进来，把空茶杯和空碟子放到柜台上，说：“我想你不会去收拾桌子，就自己拿进来了。”她还是用以前那副“真想揍你”的眼神看我，目光在我身上多停留了两三秒钟才离开。

我对这个老妖婆的仇恨一下子又回来了。几分钟后玛吉下来时，我已经是怒不可遏。她一眼就看出来，问我怎么了。那时只有几个客人在露台上，屋里没人，我就大喊大叫起来，把哈格·弗雷泽骂得狗血淋头。玛吉要我冷静下来，然后说：

“她不再是谁的老师了，只是一个丈夫离她而去的可怜的老妇人。”

“活该。”

“可你应该稍微同情她一下。正当她准备享受退休生活时，她的丈夫却为了一个比她年轻的女人而抛弃了她。如今她只得自己一个人经营旅馆，人们都说那个地方一天不如一天了。”

可是我并不想多说哈格·弗雷泽的事。我对她或她的旅馆不感兴趣。我在这里说到她是为以后的事——蒂洛和索尼娅的出现——做交待。

那天杰夫到大莫尔文镇上去了，只有我和玛吉坚守岗位。午饭的客流高峰已经差不多过去了，但是“德国佬”进来时，我们还挺忙的。一听到他们的口音我脑子里马上就想到“德国佬”。不是种族歧视，而是当你站在柜台后面，要记住谁不要甜菜、谁多要一份面包、谁又多点了什么时，就不得不把客人都区别开来，给他们取外号、记住他们的外貌特征。那个驴子脸要一份面包、腌菜配奶酪和两杯咖啡。温斯顿·丘吉尔和他老婆要金枪鱼配蛋黄酱的法式长棍三明治。我就是这么记的。因此，蒂洛和索尼娅就成了“德国佬”。

那天下午很热，可是大多数客人——都是英国人——还是想坐在外面的露台上，有些还不用遮阳伞，想把皮肤晒得通红。那两个“德国佬”却决定坐在里面乘凉。他们穿着普通的宽松驼色裤子、运动鞋和T恤衫，但看上去挺聪明，欧洲大陆来的人常给人这种感觉。我猜他们四十多岁，或者五十出头——那时我没太在意。他们一边吃饭一边轻声交谈，跟大多数欧洲来的和蔼的中年夫妇没什么两样。过了一会儿，那个男的站起来，在店里头溜达，走到玛吉挂在墙上的一张褪色老照片前时停下来欣赏，那是这所房子1915年时的照片。然后他伸展了一下胳膊，说道：

“你们这儿的景色真漂亮！瑞士也有很多漂亮的山，可你们这儿的不一樣。瑞士是高山，你们这儿是小山，但平缓、亲切，有自己独特的魅力。”

“哦，您是从瑞士来的，”玛吉礼貌地说。“我一直想去瑞士。阿尔卑斯啊、缆车啊，听上去很棒。”

“是啊，我们国家有很多美景。但是这里，这个地方，有一种特殊的魅力。我们很早以前就想到这里来了。说了那么久，现在终于来了！”说着他开怀大笑。“真高兴啊！”

“太好了，”玛吉说道。“祝愿你们玩得开心。你们会在这里待很久吗？”

“我们还可以再待三天，然后就得回去工作。很多年前我们看了一部关于埃尔加的纪录片，从那以后就一直想来这里。显然埃尔加热爱这些山，骑着自行车把这些山都走遍了。如今我们终于来了！”

接下来的几分钟，玛吉和他聊起了他们到过的英国景点，在这里哪些地方值得一看，就是你常跟游客聊的那一套。这些话我听了无数遍了，自己也能不假思索地说一遍，所以渐渐把注意力移开。我只听见这两个德国佬其实是瑞士人，正在租车旅游。那男的反复赞美英国是个很棒的地方，英国人都很友好，有时玛吉插几句玩笑话，他都会哈哈大笑。可是我说了，我把注意力移开了，觉得他们只是一对挺无趣的普通夫妇。过了一会儿我又开始注意他们，因为我发现那男的一直想把他妻子带到谈话里来，可他妻子就是不说话，眼睛直盯着旅游指南，好像根本不知道有人在跟她说话。这让我留意他们。

“当然了，我妻子很喜欢埃尔加，很想去看看他出生的房子。”

沉默。

或者：“我得承认我不太喜欢巴黎。我更喜欢伦敦。可是索尼娅她喜欢巴黎。”

没有回答。

每次他说这些话时，都要转头看看坐在角落的妻子，玛吉只好也朝她那里看一看。可他妻子只顾看书，头也不抬一下。那男的似乎不

觉得有什么不对，仍旧兴高采烈地说个不停。然后他又一次伸展了一下胳膊，说：“请原谅，我想我要出去欣赏一下你们这里的美丽景色！”

他走了出去。起先我们看见他在露台上溜达，后来就不见了。他妻子仍旧坐在角落里读旅游指南。一会儿，玛吉过去擦桌子。那女的完全没有理睬玛吉，直到我姐姐要把还剩一小块面包卷的盘子收拾走时，她突然啪地放下书，挺大声地说：“我还没吃完呢！”

玛吉向她道歉，放下盘子，走开了——而我看她根本没有去动那盘子。玛吉从我身边走过去时看了我一眼，我耸耸肩。过了一会儿，我姐姐很客气地问那女的还要不要别的。

“不，不要了。”

我能听出来那女的不想别人去吵她，可是对于玛吉来说，她条件反射地问道（好像她真的想知道）：“食物什么的都还好吗？”

那女的只是看书，好像没有听见。过了五六秒钟，她才放下书，看着我姐姐，说：

“既然你问了，我就告诉你。食物很好，比附近其他鬼地方的好多了。可是，我们只不过要了三明治和沙拉，却等了三十五分钟。三十五分钟。”

突然间我意识到这个女人满腔怒火。不是突然间来了气，等下就会没了。不是，我看得出这个女人已经憋了一肚子火了。她是那种一旦生气就不会轻易消气的人，怒气会维持在一个固定的水平，类似严重的头痛，不会达到顶点，但也不想发泄出来。玛吉一向脾气好，不会察觉到这些征兆，大概以为对方只是在合情合理地抱怨。玛吉向她道歉，然后说：“可是您看，刚才客人太多了……”

“肯定每天都这样咯？不是吗？不是这样？到了夏天，天气好的时候，才会有这么多客人？是吗？那你们为什么不能提前准备好呢？每天都有这么多客人超出你们的预料了，你是想这么说吗？”

那女人本来看着我姐姐，我从柜台后面走出来站在玛吉旁边，她就目光转移到我身上。可能是因为我脸上的表情，我感觉她的怒气又增加了两度。玛吉转头看我，轻轻把我推开，可我没动，一直看着那个女人。我要她明白这不单单是她和玛吉之间的事。谁知道事情可能变成什么样，可就在这时，她丈夫回来了。

“这儿的风景太棒了！很棒的风景，很棒的午餐，很棒的国家！”

我等着他明白这会儿的情况，可就算他注意到了，也没太在意的样子。他微笑着对他妻子说（或许是因为我们的缘故他说英语）：“索尼娅，你真该去看看。就沿着那边那条小路一直走到头！”

他妻子则用德语回答他，然后又埋头看书。他往里走了些，对我们说：

“本来我们今天下午要继续开车到威尔士去的。可是你们这儿的莫尔文山太漂亮了，我真想剩下这三天就都待在这里得了。要是索尼娅同意，那就太好了！”

他看看他妻子，对方耸耸肩，又说了几句德语。说完，男的开怀大笑。

“太好了！她同意！那就这么定了。不去威尔士了。接下来这三天我们就都待在你们这里！”

说完朝我们笑了笑，玛吉应了几句客套话。看见他妻子把书收起来准备离开，我松了口气。那男的也走回餐桌，提起一个小背包，搭在肩上。这时他问玛吉：

“我在想不知你能不能介绍一家附近的小旅馆给我们？不用太贵的，但要舒适、整洁。带点英国味儿的就更好了！”

玛吉一时不知怎么回答，净问些没有用的问题，比如：“你们想要什么样的旅馆？”而我马上说道：

“这附近最好的旅馆是弗雷泽太太的。就在去伍斯特郡的路上。叫莫尔文旅馆。”

“莫尔文旅馆！好像正是我们需要的！”

玛吉不以为然地转过头去假装继续擦桌子，我则把旅馆的位置详细地告诉他们。然后这对夫妇就离开了，那男的满面笑容感谢我们，那女的没有回头看一眼。

我姐姐疲惫地看了我一眼，摇摇头。我却笑了笑，说：

“你得承认，那女的和哈格·弗雷泽真是天生一对。机不可失。”

“你倒好，给自己找乐子，”玛吉推开我，走到厨房里去。“我可得住在这里。”

“那又怎么样？听着，你再也不会见到那两个德国佬了。而要是哈格·弗雷泽知道我们把她的旅馆介绍给过路的游客，她还有什么好抱怨的？”

玛吉摇摇头，可是这次不再板着一张脸了。

德国夫妇走了以后店里安静了许多，后来杰夫回来了，我觉得自己已经做了超出我应做的份儿，就上楼去了。我回到房间，拿出吉他坐在窗台上，开始全神贯注地继续想一首写到一半的歌。可后来——好像才没过多久——我就听见楼下来喝下午茶的客人渐渐多起来了。若又像平时一样客人太多，玛吉肯定会叫我下去的。我决定我最好偷偷溜出去，到山上继续写歌。

我从后门出去，没有遇到一个人，一出来就感到到外面来太好了。天还很热，特别是我背着吉他箱，但是微风习习、沁人心脾。

我朝上周发现的一处地方走去。这个地方在餐厅后面，要先爬一段陡峭的小路，再走一段较平缓的斜坡，走几分钟，就来到了这条长椅跟前。我精心挑选了这个地方，不单单因为这里风景好，还因为这里不在山路的交界处，没有大人带着筋疲力尽的小孩气喘吁吁地走过来坐在你旁边。但另一方面，这里也不是完全看不见人，偶尔会有散步的人经过，随意地跟你打声招呼，有时还会拿我的吉他开个玩笑，但都不会停下脚步。对此我并不介意。这样好像有听众，又好像没有，给了我所需的想象空间。

我在长椅上待了大约半个小时，突然感觉到刚刚有人像平常一样打了声招呼走过去，但现在站在几码远的地方不动了，看着我。我恼了，略带讥讽地说：

“好了，你们不用给我钱。”

只听一阵熟悉的开怀大笑，我抬起头来，看见那对德国夫妇朝长椅这折回来。

我马上想到可能他们去了哈格·弗雷泽的旅馆，发现我骗了他们，现在回来找我算账。可我又看见不仅是那个男的，连那女的也笑嘻嘻的。他们走回到我面前，那时太阳快落山了，所以有一会儿我只

能看见他们的轮廓，身后是一轮巨大的落日。他们又走近了些，我看见两个人都惊喜地看着我的吉他——我还在弹着——像在看一个婴孩。更令人吃惊的是，那女的跟着我的节拍点着脚。我突然觉得不好意思，便把手停下。

“嘿，接着弹！”那女的说。“你弹得真好听。”

“是啊，”男的说，“太好听了！我们远远地听到了。”他指了指。“刚才我们在那里，在那个山脊上。我对索尼娅说我听见弹琴的声音。”

“还有唱歌的声音，”女的说。“我对蒂洛说，听，有人在唱歌。我说对了，不是？刚刚你还唱了一小段。”

我一时无从接受面前这个面带微笑的女人就是中午刁难我们的那一个。我把他俩又仔细地打量了一番，生怕认错了人。可是错不了，他们还穿着刚才那身衣服，虽然那男的阿巴头型被风吹得有点乱。不管怎样，只听那男的说道：

“我想你是中午给我们做了好吃的那家餐厅里的那位先生？”

我说是。那女的又说：

“你刚刚唱的那首曲子。我们隐隐约约远远地听到了。我特别喜欢每一小节结束时的调子。”

“谢谢，”我说。“这是我的新歌，还没写完。”

“你自己写的歌？真是个天才！请把你的歌再唱一遍，像刚刚那个样子。”

“知道吗？”男的说，“你录这首歌的时候，一定要告诉制作人你要这首歌听起来是这种感觉。像这样！”他转身指了指我们面前一望无际的赫里福郡。“你一定要告诉他你要像这样的音响环境。你要听众像我们今天这个样子听到这首歌，下山的时候，在风中隐约听见……”

“不过当然要清楚些才行，”女的说。“不然听众就听不清歌词了。但蒂洛说得对。一定要让人联想到户外、空气、回声。”

两个人越说越激动，仿佛在山上遇到了又一个埃尔加似的。虽然我刚刚怀疑他们是来找我麻烦的，但现在禁不住热情以待。

“这个嘛，”我说，“既然我这首歌大部分时间是在这里写的，歌里有些这里的感觉也不奇怪。”

“没错，”两人一齐点点头说道。那女的又说：“别不好意思。把你的歌拿出来跟我们分享。很好听。”

“好吧，”我随意拨弄着琴弦，说。“好吧，你们真想听的话，我就给你们唱一首。不唱这首还没写完的。唱另外一首。但是，你们这样子站在我面前我没法唱。”

“当然了，”蒂洛说。“是我们失礼了。我和索尼娅经常要在很多奇奇怪怪的场合表演，都忘了要替别的乐手着想了。”

他在小路旁找了块矮草地坐下，背对着我，面朝风景。索尼娅给了我一个鼓励的微笑，在他身旁坐下。她一坐下，蒂洛就把手搭在她的肩膀上，两人偎依在一起，好像当我不存在了，只是一对情意绵绵的夫妇在一起欣赏乡村的黄昏。

“那好，我唱了，”说完，我弹起了试音时经常唱的那首歌。我对着远处的地平线唱歌，但眼睛不停地去瞅他们两个。虽然我看不见他们的脸，但看到他们一直紧紧地靠在一起，没有丝毫不自在，我知道他们很享受我的音乐。唱完以后，他们转过来，笑容灿烂，还鼓起了掌，掌声在群山间回荡。

“太好听了！”索尼娅说。“真是天才！”

“太棒了，太棒了，”蒂洛说。

我有点不好意思，假装忙着摆弄吉他。当我再次抬起头来时，他们还坐在那里，但把身子转了过来，好跟我说话。

“那么说你们是乐手咯？”我问。“我是指职业乐手？”

“对，”蒂洛说，“我想你可以说我们是职业的。索尼娅和我表演二重奏。在旅馆啦、酒店啦、婚礼上啦、宴会上表演。满欧洲跑，但还是最喜欢在瑞士和奥地利演出。我们以此为生，所以，对，可以说我们是职业的。”

“但是首先在于，”索尼娅说，“我们干这行是因为我们相信音乐。我看得出你也一样。”

我答道：“若有一天我不再相信音乐，我就撒手不干了，就这样。”说完我补充道：“我也想成为职业乐手。那种生活一定很棒。”

“是啊，是很棒，”蒂洛说。“我们很庆幸自己能干这一行。”

“对了，”我有点唐突地说道，“你们去了我说的那家旅馆了吗？”

“我们真是太失礼了！”蒂洛惊呼道。“我们被你的音乐吸引住了，压根儿忘了要谢谢你。是，我们去了，正是我们想要的旅馆。幸好还有空房间。”

“那旅馆正合我们的意，”索尼娅说。“谢谢你。”

我又假装忙着摆弄琴弦。然后尽量装出很随意的样子，说道：“我突然想到我还知道一家旅馆，比莫尔文旅馆好些。我想你们不妨换一下。”

“哦，可是我们已经安顿下来了，”蒂洛说。“我们已经把行李都拿出来了，而且，那旅馆正是我们想要的旅馆。”

“是啊，但是……但是，之前，你们问我有没有旅馆的时候，我不知道你们是乐手。我还以为你们是银行职员什么的。”

两个人都大笑起来，好像我说了一个很好笑的笑话。接着，蒂洛说道：

“不，不，我们不是银行职员。虽说我们常常希望自己是银行职员！”

“我意思是，”我说，“有其他的旅馆更适合，嗯，搞艺术的人。很难跟一个你完全不了解的陌生人推荐合适的旅馆。”

“多谢你费心，”蒂洛说。“可是请别再为我们操心了。我们现在这样很好。再说了，人与人的差别没那么大。银行家也好，音乐家也罢，我们对生活的基本需求是一样的。”

“我想你说的不全对，”索尼娅说道。“我们这位年轻朋友，你瞧他没有到银行里去谋职。他的梦想很不一样呢。”

“也许你说得对，索尼娅。总之，我们觉得现在这个旅馆很好。”

我低头随意弹了几个小节，一时间没有人说话。过了一会儿，我问：“那你们演奏什么类型的音乐呢？”

蒂洛耸耸肩。“索尼娅和我都会几种乐器。我们都会弹键盘。我喜欢单簧管。索尼娅善于拉小提琴，还很会唱歌。我想我们最喜欢演

奏的是传统的瑞士民歌，但是是用现代的方式来演绎。有时都称得上是激进的了。我们从类似这样做的大作曲家那里吸取灵感。比方说扬纳切克。你们英国的沃恩·威廉斯<sup>(3)</sup>。”

“但是我们现在不常表演这些了，”索尼娅说。

他们递了一下眼色，我想这是紧张的暗示。但转眼蒂洛一贯的笑容又回到了脸上。

“是啊，就像索尼娅说的，在这个现实的世界，大部分时候，我们得演观众想听的东西。所以我们多演一些热门歌曲。披头士啦，卡彭特啦。也有新一点的歌。观众们很喜欢。”

“那阿巴乐队呢？”我脱口而出，马上就后悔了。但蒂洛好像并没有听出我话里的调侃。

“啊，我们也唱阿巴的。《舞会皇后》，这歌永远受欢迎。其实，在《舞会皇后》里我还自己唱上一段，和声的部分。索尼娅会告诉你我的嗓音有多难听。所以我们一定得在听众吃饭吃到一半的时候唱这首歌，这样他们才不会跑掉。”

说完他哈哈大笑起来，索尼娅也笑了，但没有他笑得厉害。这时，一个穿着像是黑色潜水衣、职业打扮的自行车手从我们旁边飞驰而过，我们默默地看着他剧烈运动的背影渐渐远去。

“我去过瑞士一次，”我打破沉默。“两年前的夏天。我去了因特拉肯，住在当地的青年旅社。”

“啊是，因特拉肯，漂亮的地方。一些瑞士人瞧不起那儿，觉得那里只是给游客观光用的。可索尼娅和我都很喜欢在那里表演。其实，夏天的夜晚，在因特拉肯给来自全世界的欢欢喜喜的人们演出，是一件非常棒的事。你在那里玩得开心吗？”

“是，很开心。”

“我们每年夏天都要去因特拉肯的一个餐厅表演几个晚上。我们坐在帐篷里表演，面对餐桌，这种晚上餐桌当然是在外面啦。我们表演时能看见所有的游客在星空下一边吃着一边有说有笑。游客的身后是一大片空地，白天用来给滑翔伞降落，到了晚上就被何维克街的灯火照亮了。如果你还能看得更远，可以看见远处耸立的阿尔卑斯山。艾格尔峰、门希峰、少女峰。而且空气温暖宜人，还洋溢着我们演奏

的音乐。每次在那里演出我都觉得是特别的荣幸。我心想，啊，干这行真是太好了。”

“去年，那家餐厅的经理叫我们演出时穿上全套的传统服装，”索尼娅说。“可天热得不得了，很不舒服。我们说有什么差别呢？为什么一定要穿上大大的马甲、围围巾、戴帽子？我们就算只是穿衬衫也一样很像瑞士人，又整洁。可是餐厅经理说我们要么穿上全套衣服，要么走人，自己选，说完就走了，就这样。”

“可是索尼娅，哪个工作都一样，都有制服，老板都要求你一定要穿。在银行工作也一样！而人家要我们穿的至少是我们所相信的。瑞士的文化。瑞士的传统。”

这时我又一次隐隐感觉到他们之间有什么不愉快，可这种感觉只持续了一两秒钟，他们看着我的吉他，就又都露出了微笑。我觉得自己该说点什么，就讲道：

“我想到不同的国家去表演一定很有趣。你得保持敏感，了解你的听众。”

“是，”蒂洛说，“我很高兴我们能给各种各样的人表演。不单单在欧洲。总而言之，我们因此得去了解很多的城市。”

“比如说杜塞尔多夫，”索尼娅说。她的口气变了一——变的有些硬——我仿佛又见到了中午餐厅里的那个人。可蒂洛似乎并没有察觉到什么异常，愉快地说道：

“我们的儿子现在就住在杜塞尔多夫。他跟你差不多大，可能比你大一些。”

“今年初，”索尼娅说，“我们去了杜塞尔多夫。有人邀请我们去表演。不是常有的事，是表演我们自己真正的音乐的机会。所以我们给儿子打了电话，我们的独子，告诉他我们要去他的城市。他没有接电话，我们就留了言。我们留了好几次留言。没有回音。我们到了杜塞尔多夫又给他留言，说我们到了，到你这里了。还是没有回音。蒂洛说别担心，也许他那天晚上会来，来看我们表演。可是他没有来。我们表演完了又去了别的城市，进行下一场演出。”

蒂洛咯咯地笑了。“我想彼得大概是受够了我们的音乐，从小听到大！可怜的孩子，不得不听我们排练，日复一日。”

“我想又要带孩子又要搞音乐挺难的。”我说。

“我们只有一个孩子，”蒂洛说，“所以还不算太难。当然我们是幸运的。我们外出表演不能带着他，他的祖父母总是很乐意帮忙。等他长大一点，我们就把他送到一家很好的寄宿学校。他的祖父母又帮了我们大忙，不然我们付不起那么高的学费。所以说我们是幸运的。”

“是，我们很幸运，”索尼娅说。“除了彼得讨厌那所学校。”

很显然之前的愉快气氛正在流逝。为了活跃气氛，我赶忙说：“不管怎么说，看样子你们很喜欢你们的工作。”

“哦，没错，我们很喜欢这个工作，”蒂洛说。“工作就是我们的一切。但即便如此，我们也很想放个假。知道吗？这是我们这三年来头一次像样的假期。”

蒂洛的话又一次让我觉得特别不好受，我想再次劝他们换旅馆，但我知道这么做很可笑。我只能希望哈格·弗雷泽对他们好一点。我心里想着这个，嘴上却说：

“瞧，要是你们喜欢的话，我可以把刚刚那首歌再唱一遍给你们听。那歌还没写完，我不常演唱还没完成的作品。可既然你们已经听到了一些，我不妨把已经写出来的部分唱给你们听。”

索尼娅的脸上又露出了笑容，说：“好啊，快唱来听。那歌儿太好听了。”

我准备演唱的时候，他们把身子转回去，像刚刚那样面对着赫里福郡，背对着我。但是这次他们没有拥抱在一起，而是坐得异常的笔直，一只手放在眉毛上挡太阳。我弹的时候他们一直是这个姿势，一动不动，在草地上留下两道长长的夕照的影子，像两尊塑像。我慢慢地结束这首还没写完的歌。歌唱完了，他们仍旧一动不动，过了一会儿才放松身子，鼓了鼓掌，虽然没有前一次那么热烈。蒂洛一面称赞着一面站起来，然后扶索尼娅起来。看着他们站起来的样子我才意识到他们的年纪确实不小了。也有可能他们只是累了。就我所知，遇到我之前他们已经走了不少的路。总之就是我觉得他们起身的时候挺吃力的。

“你的演出太精彩了，”蒂洛说。“今天我们是游客，别人唱歌给我们听！调了过来，多有意思啊！”

“歌写完了以后要唱给我听，”索尼娅说，很认真的样子。“说不定有一天我会在电台里听到呢。”

“是啊，”蒂洛说，“到时索尼娅和我就可以翻唱给客人们听！”他洪亮的笑声在空气中回荡。接着他礼貌地微微鞠了一躬，说：“今天我们总共欠了你三次人情。可口的午餐，舒适的旅馆，还有美妙的山上音乐会！”

分别的时候，我很想告诉他们真相。告诉他们我故意给他们推荐了这里最烂的旅馆，希望他们趁还来得及赶紧搬出来。可是看着他们欢欢喜喜地跟我握手道别，我真是说不出口。就这样，他们下山了，又剩我一个人坐在长椅上。

我从山上下来时餐厅已经关门了。玛吉和杰夫看上去都累坏了。玛吉说这是他们最忙的一天，挺高兴的样子。可是晚餐上——我们的晚饭是店里各种各样的剩菜——杰夫说到同一件事时却是一脸的不高兴，像是在责怪我：他们累得半死的时候，我不帮忙跑哪儿去了？玛吉问我下午干什么去了，我没有提起蒂洛和索尼娅——说起来太复杂了——只是告诉她我到山上写歌去了。她又问我可有进展，我说有，大有进展。这时杰夫闷闷不乐地走了出去，盘子里的东西还没吃完。玛吉假装没看见，也对，几分钟后杰夫拿着一罐啤酒回来，坐下看报纸，一声不吭。我不希望他们俩为了我吵架，便很快离开了餐桌，回到楼上继续写歌。

白天我的房间很可以给人灵感，但到了晚上就不那么吸引人了。首先，窗帘不能把整个窗子遮住。大热天的时候，我把窗户一打开，数英里以内的蚊虫看到灯光，就会蜂拥而入。其次，房里只有一只赤裸裸的灯泡从天花板的灯线盒垂下来，投下昏暗的灯光，原本简陋的房间看起来更加不堪。那天晚上，我本想开灯把脑子里想到的歌词写下来。可是天实在太热了，最后我关掉灯，拉开窗帘，把窗子开得大大的，像白天那样抱着吉他坐在窗台上。

我就这样坐了大约一个小时，试验着各种桥段，突然听见敲门声，玛吉的头探了进来。房里漆黑一片，但是楼下露台的安全灯亮着，所以我能依稀辨认出她的脸。她的脸上挂着不自然的微笑，我心想她又要叫我下去帮忙干活了。她走到房间里，关上身后的门，说：

“对不起，亲爱的。今天实在把杰夫累坏了。他说他现在想安安静静地看电影？”

她的语气像是在发问。我过了一会儿才反应过来她是要我别再弹琴了。

“可我正写到关键的地方呢，”我答道。

“我知道。可是杰夫今天真的累坏了。他说你的吉他让他没办法休息。”

“杰夫应该知道：他有他的工作，我也有我的。”我说。

玛吉像是在掂量我的话，过了一会儿重重地叹了一口气。“我想我不该把这话告诉杰夫。”

“为什么？为什么不该告诉他？他应该知道。”

“为什么？因为他会不高兴，这就是为什么。而且我想他会认为你的工作跟他的工作根本不是同一个档次。”

一时间我看着玛吉，说不出话来。“你胡说八道什么啊。你说什么蠢话呢？”

玛吉疲惫地摇摇头，没有说什么。

“我不明白你为什么说这种蠢话，”我说。“而且是正当我进展得很顺利的时候。”

“你进展得很顺利，是吗，亲爱的？”昏暗中她一直看着我，过了好一会儿，她说道，“好了，我不跟你吵。”她转身打开门。“你愿意的话就下来跟我们一起看电影吧，”离开前她说道。

我看着在她身后关上的门，气得整个人都僵掉了。楼下隐隐约约传来电视的声音。即便是正在气头上，大脑深处仍旧有一个声音告诉我：我不应该朝玛吉发火，我应该气的人是杰夫，是他从我一到这里就有计划一步步地想要搞我。但我还是生我姐姐的气。我在她家待了这么久，她从来没有像蒂洛和索尼娅那样要我唱首歌给她听。这个要求对自己的姐姐来说不过分，而且我突然想到，她十几岁的时候也热衷于音乐。可现在，她在我想专心写歌的时候打断我，说些愚不可及的话。我一想到她说“好了，我不跟你吵”的样子，气又上来了。

我从窗台上下来，收起吉他，躺倒在床上，盯着天花板。如今我总算明白了他们叫我来是有目的的，是在旺季找一个廉价的，甚至不用付工资的帮手。而玛吉不懂得我现在奋斗的目标比她那个笨蛋老公大得多。我真应该明天就离开这里回伦敦去，让他们自己收拾烂摊子。我就这么胡思乱想了大约一个小时以后，冷静了一些，决定脱衣服睡觉。

第二天早上，我像往常一样在早餐的高峰过后下楼去，没有怎么跟玛吉和杰夫说话。我烤了几片面包，泡了咖啡，还吃了些剩下的炒鸡蛋，然后在店内的角落坐下。吃早饭的时候，我脑子里一直在想今天会不会在山上再次遇到蒂洛和索尼娅。虽说见到他们我可能得面对旅馆的事情，但我发现我还是想再遇到他们。再说，就算哈格·弗雷泽的旅馆真的很糟糕，他们也不会想到我是故意耍他们的。我有好些理由替自己开脱。

玛吉和杰夫可能想要我在午餐的时候帮忙，但我决定应该给他们一个教训，他们不应该不把别人当一回事。于是吃完早饭，我回到楼上，拿上吉他，从后门溜走了。

又是一个大热天，我爬上通往长椅的小路，汗不停地从脸上流下来。虽说早饭的时候我一直在想着蒂洛和索尼娅，但这会儿早把他们抛在了脑后，所以当我爬上最后一段斜坡，看见索尼娅独自一人坐在梯田上时，不禁吓了一跳。索尼娅一眼就看见了我，朝我挥手。

我对她仍旧有点提防，特别是蒂洛不在这里，我不是很想跟她坐在一起。可是她给了我一个灿烂的微笑，还往旁边挪了挪，像是给我让位，我别无选择。

我们互相打了招呼，并排坐在一起，彼此都不说话。一开始这样并不奇怪，一方面是因为我还气喘吁吁，一方面是因为眼前的景色。今天的天气没有昨天晴朗，云也比较多，但是你注意看的话，还是可以看见威尔士境内的布莱克群山。风挺大的，但不会感觉不舒服。

“蒂洛呢？”我终于开口问道。

“蒂洛？哦……”她把手罩在眼睛上。然后她指着远处说：“在那。看见了吗？那里。那个就是蒂洛。”

远远的我看见一个人影，隐约穿着绿色T恤衫、戴着白色太阳帽，朝着伍斯特郡的比肯山往上爬。

“蒂洛说他想去散步，”索尼娅说。

“你不和他一起？”

“不。我想留在这里。”

虽说她现在不是那个在店里发飙的顾客，但也不是昨天那个对我那么热情和鼓励的人。肯定出了什么事，我心里准备着对哈格·弗雷泽旅馆的说辞。

“对了，”我说，“昨天那首歌我又写了一点。想不想听听看？”

她想了想，说：“你要是不介意，恐怕现在不太合适。蒂洛和我刚刚发生了口角，或者可以叫做争吵。”

“哦，好吧。很抱歉听你这么说。”

“所以他散他的步去了。”

我们又不说话了。过了一会儿，我叹了口气，说道：“我想都是因为。”

索尼娅转过来看着我。“因为你？为什么？”

“你们吵架，你们的假期搞砸了，都是因为我，因为那旅馆，不是吗？那旅馆不是很好，对吧？”

“旅馆？”她一脸困惑。“这个嘛，那旅馆是有些毛病。可它就是个旅馆，跟其他的旅馆一样。”

“可你注意到了是吧？你注意到所有的毛病了。一定注意到了。”

她像是想了想我的话，才点点头，说：“没错，我注意到了旅馆的毛病。可蒂洛没有。他当然是觉得旅馆很好。他老说我们运气很好。很幸运能找到一家那样的旅馆。然后，今天早上吃早饭的时候，蒂洛说早饭真不错，是他吃过的最好的早餐。我说蒂洛，别傻了，这早饭不怎么样，这旅馆也不怎么样。他说不，不，我们很幸运。我生气了，向女主人投诉所有的问题。蒂洛把我拉开，说，我们去散步吧。走一走你就会感觉好些了。于是我们就到这儿来了。他说，索尼娅，看看这些山，不漂亮吗？我们能到这种地方来度假不是很幸运吗？他说，这些山比他听埃尔加的时候想象的还要美丽。他问我，不是吗？我可能是又生气了，说，这些山不怎么样，不是我听埃尔加的时候想象的那个样子。埃尔加的山雄伟、神秘，这儿只不过像个公园。我这么跟他说的，这回轮到他生气了。他说既然这样，他要自个儿去散步。他说我们完了，如今我们什么都说不到一块儿去了。他说，没有错，索尼娅，你和我，我们完了。说完他就走了！事情就是这样。这就是为什么他在那里，我在这里。”说完她又把手罩在眼睛上，追随着蒂洛的身影。

“真的很抱歉，”我说。“当初我要是没有推荐你们到那里去……”

“别这么说。旅馆不重要。”她往前探了探身子，好把蒂洛看得清楚些。然后转过来对我微微一笑，我想她的眼睛里噙着些许泪水。她说：“说说你今天是不是打算再写几首歌？”

“我是这么打算的。或者至少把还没写完的那首写完。昨天你们听的那首。”

“那首歌很美。你在这里写完这些歌以后要做什么呢？有什么计划吗？”

“我要回伦敦去组建一支乐队。这些歌需要一支合适的乐队，不然就没有用了。”

“多令人兴奋啊。我衷心地祝你好运。”

过了一会儿，我轻声说：“也有可能我不会去费这个劲。你知道组建一支乐队不是那么容易的。”

她没有回答，我想她可能没听见，因为她又转过头去看蒂洛了。

“知道吗？”过了好一会儿她说道，“以前没有什么事情会让我生气。可现在我老是生气。我不知道我为什么会变成这个样子。这样不好。咳，我想蒂洛不会回这边来了。我回旅馆等他吧。”她站起来，视线没有离开远处的身影。

我也站了起来，说道：“真遗憾你们在度假的时候吵架。昨天我弹琴给你们听的时候，你们看上去是那么幸福的一对。”

“是啊，多美好的时刻。谢谢你的歌。”她突然伸过手来，亲切地笑着。“认识你真好。”

我和她轻轻地握了握手。她转身准备离开，突然又停下来，看着我。

“如果蒂洛在这，”她说，“他会对你说，永远别灰心。他会说你一定要回到伦敦试着组建自己的乐队。你一定会成功的。蒂洛会这么说的。因为他就是这么一个人。”

“那你会说什么呢？”

“我也会这么说。因为你既年轻又有才华。可是我不那么肯定。生活总是有很多不尽如人意的地方。但如果那是你的梦想……”她又

笑了笑，耸耸肩。“可我不应该说这些。我不是你的好榜样。而且，我看得出来你跟蒂洛比较像。假设真的遇上困难，你也不会放弃。你会跟他一样，说我太幸运了。”她盯着我看了几秒钟，像是要记住我的模样。微风吹动了她的头发，使得她看上去比平时老。“我衷心地祝你好运，”她最后说道。

“也祝你好运，”我说。“希望你们能重归于好。”

她最后一次挥了挥手，走下坡去，不见了。

我从盒子里拿出吉他，坐回到长椅上，并没有马上弹起来，而是看着远方，看着伍斯特郡的比肯山和斜坡上蒂洛细小的身影。也许是太阳照射在山上的角度的问题，现在蒂洛的身影比刚才清楚多了，虽然他离得更远了。他在小路上驻足了片刻，似乎在环顾四周的山峰，就好像是想重新评价它们。然后他的身影又开始移动。

我继续写歌，可老是开小差，老是在想早上索尼娅去找哈格·弗雷泽理论时，哈格·弗雷泽会是什么表情。我看了看天上的白云，又看了看脚下广袤的大地，然后把思绪重新拉回到我的歌上，拉回到还没写好的桥段上。

小夜曲

两天前，琳迪·加德纳还住在我的隔壁。好吧，你会想，要是琳迪·加德纳住在我隔壁，那是不是说我住在贝弗利山；我是个电影制片人、演员或者音乐家。没错，我是个乐手。但虽说我在一两个你听说过的艺人身后表演过，我并不是什么大明星。我的经纪人布拉德利·史蒂文森，同时也是我多年的好友，说我有成为大明星的潜质。不只是成为在录音室里替人灌制唱片的大牌录音乐手，而是成为抛头露面的大腕。谁说萨克斯手再也成不了腕儿了，他说，然后开出一串名单。马库斯·莱特富特，西尔维奥·塔伦蒂尼，他们都是爵士乐手，我指出。“你不是爵士乐手，是什么？”他说。然而只有在我梦想的最深处我才是一个爵士乐手。在现实生活中——在我像现在这样把整张脸都缠上绷带之前——我只是一个打零工的萨克斯手，在录音室里讨生活，或者给乐队补缺。他们要流行歌曲，我就吹流行歌曲。节奏布鲁斯？没问题。汽车广告，脱口秀的进场音乐，我都做。只有在我自己的小卧室里我才是一个爵士乐手。

我更想在客厅里吹萨克斯，可是我们的公寓是造价低廉的那种，整条走廊上的邻居都会抱怨。于是我就把最小的房间改造成一间练习室。说是房间，其实也不过就一个厕所那么大——在里面放把办公椅就满了一一可是我用泡沫、鸡蛋托和布拉德利从办公室寄来的旧加垫信封把这里隔了音。我妻子海伦，以前还和我住在一起的时候，看我拿着萨克斯要去那个房间时，就会笑着说，我像是要去厕所，而有时候感觉就是这样。也就是说，我坐在那间阴暗、不通风的房间里，做着自己的事，没人会想要来打扰。

你已经猜到琳迪·加德纳不可能住在我说的这么一个公寓隔壁。她也不可能是我在隔音室外面吹萨克斯就来“乒乒”敲门的邻居。我说她住在我的隔壁是另有所指，我现在就来解释给你听。

两天前，琳迪还住在这家豪华酒店的隔壁，而且和我一样，整张脸都缠着绷带。琳迪当然在这附近有一所舒适的大房子，还有帮佣，所以鲍里斯医生就让她回家了。事实上，从严格的医学角度来讲，她大概早就可以回去了，但很明显还有其他原因。比如说，回到自己家里就不那么容易躲开照相机和八卦专栏作者了。再者，我的直觉告诉我鲍里斯医生名声好是因为他的做法不是百分百合法，所以他把病人藏在酒店里极其隐秘的这一层，普通员工和客人是找不到这里的，他

也嘱咐我们不到万不得已不要离开房间。要是你能透视这些纱布，你在这里待上一个星期比你在夏特蒙特酒店住上一个月更能发现名人。

那么像我这种人怎么会跟这些大明星和大富翁住在一起，让全城最顶尖的医生给我整容呢？我想这事儿是我的经纪人布拉德利起的头。他自己也不是什么大腕，也不比我长得更像乔治·克鲁尼。他第一次提起这事儿是在几年前，半开玩笑地，后来再提起的时候，一次比一次认真。他的大意就是我太丑了。正是这一点阻碍我成名。

“看看马库斯·莱特富特，”他说。“看看克里斯·布戈斯基，或者塔伦蒂尼。他们哪一个能吹出你这么有特色的声音？没有。哪一个有你的温柔、你的想象力？哪一个有你一半的技巧？没有。可人家长得端正，所以大门一直为他们敞开。”

“那比利·福格尔呢？”我说。“他丑得不行，可他混得不错。”

“比利是很丑。可他是性感的、坏坏的丑。而你，史蒂夫，你是……咳，你是平庸的、失败者的丑。不对路子的丑。听着，你有没有想过对你的容貌做点什么？我是指外科手术方面的？”

回家以后我把这些话原原本本地讲给海伦听，因为我想她会和我一样觉得太滑稽了。刚开始确实是这样，我们把布拉德利好好地嘲笑了一番。接着海伦不笑了，伸手搂住我，说，至少对她来说，我是世界上最帅的。然后她后退了一步，不说话了。我问她怎么了，她说没什么。接着她说，也许，只是也许，布拉德利说得对。也许我是应该考虑一下改变我的容貌。

“没必要这么看着我！”她喊道。“大家都这么做。而你，你这么做是出于职业需要。想要当好司机的人就得去买一辆好车。你也一样！”

然而那个时候我没有细想这件事，虽说我开始接受这个说法：我是“失败者的丑”。一方面，我没有钱。实话告诉你，海伦说什么好司机的那会儿，我们欠债九千五百美元。这就是海伦。就很多方面而言她是个好人，可是这种全然忘记我们实际的经济状况、开始幻想大笔新的花销的能力，这就是海伦。

除了钱以外，一想到要被人切来划去的，我就满心的不喜欢。我受不了这类事情。我刚开始和海伦拍拖时，有一次，她叫我跟她一起跑步。那是一个寒冷而干燥的冬天的早晨，我自己从来不怎么跑步，

但是那时我被她迷住了，急于想表现自己。于是我们就绕着公园慢跑，一开始我稳稳地跟在她后面，突然我的鞋踢到了地上凸出来的什么硬物，脚疼了一下，但不太厉害。可是当我脱掉运动鞋和袜子一看，大拇指上的趾甲翘了起来，像在做一个希特勒式的敬礼。我感到一阵恶心，昏了过去。我就是这个样子。所以你瞧，我对整容这事儿不感冒。

此外，当然了，还有原则问题。好吧，像我刚才说的，我并不坚持只做什么类型的音乐。为了赚钱，我什么都演。但整容就是另外一码事了，我还是有点尊严的。布拉德利说对了一件事：我的才华是这座城市里大多数人的两倍。然而如今这个不重要了。重要的是形象好、有市场、上杂志、上电视、去派对，还有你和什么人吃饭。这些统统让我恶心。我是个音乐家，我为什么要加入这个游戏呢？我为什么不能按照我心中最理想的方式演奏我的音乐，并且不断进步呢？即使只是在我的小卧室里，也许有一天，只是也许，真正喜欢音乐的人会听见并且欣赏我的演奏。我为什么要整容呢？

刚开始海伦像是站在我这边的，有一段时间没有再提起这件事。就是说，直到她从西雅图打电话来，说她要离开我去跟克里斯·普伦德加斯特在一起。这个普伦德加斯特她从高中起就认识，如今在华盛顿拥有成功的连锁餐厅。这些年我见过这个普伦德加斯特几次——他还来吃过一次晚饭——可是我从来没有怀疑过。“你那个隔音的碗柜，”那时布拉德利说道，“作用是双向的。”我想他说得对。

然而除了说明他们跟我现在在这里有什么关系以外，我不想多说海伦和普伦德加斯特的事情。你大概在想我立马北上，找那快乐的一对算账，在与情敌进行了一番男子汉大丈夫的争吵过后，整容就是自然而然的了。很浪漫，可惜你错了，事实不是这样的。

事实是：打电话来几个星期以后，海伦回来收拾她的东西。她伤心地在公寓里走来走去——毕竟我们在这里有过美好的时光。我以为她要哭出来了，可是她没有哭，只是继续整理东西，把所有的东西整整齐齐地打包好，说这一两天会有人过来取走行李。我手里拿着萨克斯往小卧室走时，她抬起头来，静静地说：

“史蒂夫，求你了。别再去那里了。我们得谈谈。”

“谈什么？”

“史蒂夫，看在上帝的分上。”

于是我把萨克斯放回盒子里，我们走进小厨房，在桌子旁面对面坐下。她开口了。

做了这个决定她不会回头了。她和普伦德加斯特在一起很开心，她在学校的时候就暗恋他了。可是离开我她感到难过，特别是在我事业不如意的时候。所以她考虑了以后，和她的新欢谈了谈，那人也替我难过。他的原话是：“史蒂夫得为我们的幸福买单真是太不幸了。”于是就这么定了。普伦德加斯特愿意为我出钱到全城最好的外科医生那里做整容手术。“是真的，”发现我茫然地看着她，她说道。“他说真的。费用他全包。医院的费用、康复的费用、所有费用。全城最好的外科医生。”一旦我整了容，就没有什么能阻止我前进了，她说。我会一飞冲天，我怎么可能会失败呢，以我的才华？

“史蒂夫，为什么这样看着我？机会难得。天晓得半年以后他还愿不愿意。现在就答应下来，好好地对待自己一回。只需忍耐几个星期，然后，嗖！你就一炮而红了！”

十五分钟后，在门口，海伦用严厉得多的语气说道：“你说的是什么话？什么叫做你愿意一辈子都在那个小房间里吹萨克斯？什么叫做你喜欢做一个大失败者？”说完，她走了。

第二天，我走进布拉德利的办公室，看看他有没有活给我，碰巧提起了这件事，原以为他会和我一起笑一笑，没想到他根本没有笑。

“这家伙很有钱？而且他愿意给你找最好的外科医生？也许他会给你找克雷斯波，甚至是鲍里斯。”

现在又多了个布拉德利，劝我要抓住这次机会，若我错过了这次机会，我这辈子就永远是个失败者。我生气地离开他的办公室，但是那天下午，他打电话给我，不停地劝我。他说，如果是因为我不想打这通电话；如果是因为拿起电话对海伦说，好，求你了，我愿意，求你让你的男朋友开那张大支票吧，会挫伤我的自尊心；如果是这个原因阻止了我，那么，他，布拉德利，愿意替我进行所有的交涉。我叫他吃屎去吧，挂断了电话。可一个小时后他又打过来，说他已经把事情都想通了，说我自己没想明白真是个傻瓜。

“这可是海伦精心策划的。想想她的处境吧。她爱你。可说到相貌，咳，你真的长得很抱歉。你不是靓仔。她希望你采取一点行动，但是你拒绝了。所以她能怎么办呢？啊，她这一步真是壮举。处心积虑。作为一名职业经纪人，我不得不佩服她。她跟这个人走了。好吧，也许她一直对这个人念念不忘，但其实她根本不爱他。海伦利用

他来为你的脸出钱。一旦你手术成功，她就会回来，看见帅气的你，她就会想要你这个人，迫不及待地想让人看见跟你出入宾馆……”

接下来的几个星期，工作似乎比以前少了。每次我打电话给布拉德利，问他有没有活，他都会说：“你自己都不帮自己，别人怎么帮你。”最后，我开始更加务实地考虑整件事情。我不得不面对这个事实：我得吃饭。还有，若这么做意味着最后会有更多的人听到我的音乐，这样的结果也不错啊？还有，我不是希望有朝一日能组建自己的乐队吗？什么时候能够实现呢？

最后，大概在海伦提议后六个星期，我随口跟布拉德利说到我重新考虑了这件事情。有我这句话就够了。他立马行动，打电话、做安排、又喊又叫，兴奋得不得了。说句公道话，他说到做到：所有的中间协商他全包了，我一次也不用跟海伦进行丢脸的谈话，更不用说跟普伦德加斯特了。有时候布拉德利甚至能够制造出这种假象，感觉他在替我谈一桩生意，感觉有东西可卖的人是我。即便如此，我还是每天都要怀疑好几次。当事情真的来临的时候，来得很突然。布拉德利打电话来说鲍里斯医生突然临时取消了原定计划，我得自己一个人拿着行李在当天下午三点半之前到达指定地点。大概那个时候我临阵退缩了，因为我记得布拉德利在电话里冲我大嚷，叫我振作起来，说他会亲自送我去。接下来，经过九拐十八弯，我被载到了好莱坞山上的一所大房子，打了麻药，就像雷蒙德·钱德勒小说里的人物。

两天以后，我被送到了这里，贝弗利山上的一家酒店，在夜色的掩护下从后门进来。我被推到了走廊的深处，这里十分隐蔽，与酒店的正常营业完全隔绝。

第一个星期，我的脸疼得要命，体内的麻药让我觉得恶心。我得把枕头立起来靠着才能睡，也就是说我根本睡不着。护士坚持二十四小时都把窗帘拉得严严实实的，所以我不知道到了什么钟点。然而，我一点儿也不觉得坏。事实上，我感觉好极了，兴奋、乐观。我

对鲍里斯医生充满信心，多少电影明星把自己的前程交到他的手里。再者，我知道我将是他的杰作；看见我这张失败者的脸，激起了他内心最深处的雄心壮志，让他想起了当初为什么选择了这个职业。他会百分之两百地全力以赴。解开绷带以后，我会看见一张精心雕琢过的脸，有点野性但又很有味道。毕竟像他这么有名望的人，会认真思考一个严肃的爵士乐手的各种需求，不会把爵士乐手跟其他人，比如说，电视上的新闻主播混为一谈。他甚至有可能还给我加了点那种似有似无的忧郁气质，有点像年轻时的德尼罗，或者吸毒前的切特·贝克。我畅想着我要做的专辑，要请哪些明星来助阵。我感觉得意洋洋，不敢相信曾经迟迟不愿整容。

就是在这期间，格雷西第一次告诉我琳迪·加德纳住在隔壁。她要是早点告诉我这件事，在亢奋期的时候，我听了会很开心，甚至把它当作我美好新生活的首个标志。可我偏巧在这个时候听说这件事，在我跌入低潮的时候，听了这个消息我讨厌得又是一阵恶心。若你是琳迪众多的崇拜者之一，我说声抱歉。但事实就是，那时，如果有这么一个人能代表世上所有肤浅和恶心的东西，非琳迪·加德纳莫属：一个一无是处的人——实事求是吧，她已经证明她不会演戏，也不假装有什么音乐才能——可她还是照样能走红，电视和杂志争相报道她，怎么拍都拍不够她的笑脸。之前，我路过一家书店，书店外大排长龙。我以为是斯蒂芬·金什么的来了，结果是琳迪在签售她最新的口述自传。她是怎么做到的？当然是靠老一套。适时的绯闻，适时的结婚，适时的离婚。这样她自然而然就上了应景的封面、脱口秀，或者是像最近她在广播上做的那个节目，我不记得节目的名字了，她在节目里教大家离婚后的首个重要约会应该如何着装打扮，抑或是如果你怀疑你丈夫是同志，你该怎么做，等等。你会听见人们谈论她有什么“明星气质”，但其中的秘诀再简单不过了。就是不断地在电视和杂志封面上抛头露面，不停地出席各种首映礼和派对，把自己的手搭到名人的胳膊上。如今她就在这里，在隔壁，和我一样接受了鲍里斯医生的面部手术，在休养中。没有什么比这件事更能反映出现在我堕落了什么地步。一个星期前，我还是一个爵士乐手。如今我成了又

一个可怜的骗子，妄图通过整容跟在琳迪·加德纳们的后面，爬进空虚的名流堆。

接下来的几天，我试着用看书来打发时间，却无法集中精神。绷带之下的脸有的地方生疼地抽动，有的地方痒得要命。还有一阵一阵的发热和被关久了的幽闭感。我渴望吹萨克斯，一想到还要过好几周我的面部肌肉才能承受萨克斯的压力，我就更加沮丧。最后，我发现最好的打发大白天的做法不是听CD，而是盯着活页乐谱——我把小卧室里装和弦谱和乐谱的文件夹带来了一一哼些即兴的调子。

第二个星期快过去的时候，我肉体上和精神上的情况都开始好转。就在这时，我的护士递给我一个信封，神秘地笑了笑，说：“这可不是天天都有的。”信封里是一张酒店的便笺纸。这张纸现在就在我手边，我转抄如下：

格雷西告诉我说你厌倦了这种安逸的生活。我也是。你过来看看我，如何？今晚五点喝鸡尾酒会不会太早了？鲍医生说我不能喝酒，我猜你也是。所以看来只有苏打水和矿泉水了。去他的！五点见，不然我会伤心的。琳迪·加德纳。

也许是因为我那个时候实在是无聊至极；或者是我心情又好起来了；或者是觉得有个一起被关的伙伴能聊聊天、说说话很不错。又或者是我并不是对美女完全免疫。总之，虽然我对琳迪·加德纳有种种成见，看了这封信以后，我还是感到兴奋，叫格雷西转告琳迪，我五点过去。

琳迪·加德纳脸上的绷带比我还多。我至少头顶上还留了一块，我的头发就像沙漠里的棕榈树那样露在外面。可鲍里斯把琳迪的整个脑袋都包得严严实实的，活像一个椰子的形状，只在眼睛、鼻子和嘴巴的地方开了条槽。她那头浓密的金发怎么了，我不得而知。她的声音倒是没有受到绷带的影响，我在电视上看见过她几次，听得出她的声音。

“你现在感觉怎么样？”她问道。我回答说感觉还不错。她说：“史蒂夫。我能叫你史蒂夫吗？我从格雷西那里听说了你所有的事情。”

“哦？但愿她略过了不好的地方。”

“嗯，她说你是个乐手。很有前途的乐手。”

“她说的？”

“史蒂夫，你在紧张。我希望你和我在一起时不要紧张。我知道有些名人喜欢崇拜者见到他们时觉得紧张。这让他们更加觉得自己与众不同。可我讨厌这样。我希望你把我当成普通朋友。你刚才说什么？你说你不太在意这些。”

她的房间比我的大很多，这里只是套房的客厅。我们面对面地坐在一对白色沙发上，中间隔着一张矮矮的烟色玻璃的咖啡桌，能看见玻璃底下垫着的大块浮木。桌上放满了光鲜的杂志和一只未拆掉玻璃纸的水果篮。和我一样，她的空调也开得很大——裹着绷带是很热的——百叶窗也放得低低的，挡住窗外的夕阳。一个女佣给我端来了一杯水和咖啡，两杯里面都浮着吸管——我们喝什么都得用吸管——然后就离开了。

为了回答她的问题，我说我最痛苦的地方是不能吹萨克斯。

“可是你应该明白鲍里斯为什么不让你吹，”她说。“试想一下。你还没完全康复之前就去吹那管子，你脸上的肉会飞得屋里到处都是的！”

她好像被逗乐了，朝我挥了挥手，好像说那俏皮话的人是我。她说：“好了，你笑得太厉害了！”我也笑了，然后用吸管吸了几口咖啡。接着她聊起了最近整了容的朋友，聊他们都说了些什么、他们身上发生了什么好笑的事。她提到的人要么是名人，要么是跟名人结婚的人。

“这么说你是个萨克斯手咯，”她突然改变了话题。“选得好。萨克斯是种好乐器。知道我对所有年轻的萨克斯手说什么吗？我叫他们多听听前辈的作品。我认识一个萨克斯手，和你一样刚刚崭露头角，只听那些喜欢标新立异的人的。韦恩·肖特<sup>(3)</sup>之类。我对他说，从老一辈人那里你可以学到更多的东西。他们也许不是特别创新，但是他们的技术是一流的。史蒂夫，介不介意我放点东西给你听？好让你明白我的意思？”

“不，我不介意。可是加德纳太太……”

“哦，叫我琳迪。在这里没有辈分之分。”

“好吧。琳迪。我想说，我不年轻了。事实上，我快三十九了。”

“哦，真的？那也不老。不过你说得对，我没想到你年纪这么大了。鲍里斯给我们戴上这些一模一样的面具就看不出来了，是不是？听格雷西说的，我以为你是个刚刚崭露头角的孩子，被父母送来这里准备飞黄腾达。对不起，我搞错了。”

“格雷西说我‘刚刚崭露头角’？”

“别难为她。她说你是个音乐家，我就问她你的名字。我说我没听过这个名字，她说：‘那是因为他刚刚崭露头角。’就是这样。好了，听着，你多大又有什么关系呢？你还是可以从老一辈乐手那里学到东西。我想让你听听这个。我想你会喜欢的。”

她走到一个柜子前，不一会儿拿出了一张CD。“你会喜欢这个的。这首歌里的萨克斯太棒了。”

不久，我的注意力从音乐上面转移到了琳迪身上。她在我面前缓缓地随着歌曲起舞，自我陶醉了。她动作轻盈、优雅——显然手术没有影响到她的身体——而且她身材苗条、匀称。她穿着一件半是睡衣半是晚礼服的衣服，也就是说，看上去既像病人但又迷人。与此同时，我努力在搞清楚一件事。我印象中琳迪最近刚刚和托尼·加德纳离了婚，但说到演艺圈的八卦，我是全国最差的一个，所以我渐渐地怀疑是我搞错了。要不然她怎么会这样跳着舞，沉醉在音乐里，一副很陶醉的样子？

托尼·加德纳的声音停了下来，弦乐器在桥段达到高潮，最后只剩下钢琴独奏。这时，琳迪好像回到了人间，停止摇摆，用遥控器关掉音响，然后走过来在我对面坐下。

“是不是很棒？明白我刚才说的话了吗？”

“是，很美，”我说道，心想不知道现在是不是还只谈论萨克斯。

“对了，你的耳朵没有骗你。”

“什么？”

“那个歌手。正是你想的那个人。并不因为他不再是我丈夫了我就不能放他的唱片，不是吗？”

“啊，当然不是。”

“而且歌里的萨克斯很美。现在明白我为什么要你听这个了吧。”

“是，很美。”

“史蒂夫，你有唱片吗？我指你自己演奏的？”

“当然有了。事实上隔壁就有几张CD。”

“亲爱的，你下次过来时把它们拿过来。我想听听你的演奏。好吗？”

“好的，但愿你不嫌弃。”

“哦，不，不会的。可我希望你不要觉得我多管闲事。托尼总说我爱多管闲事，我不应该干涉别人的事。可你知道，我觉得他那是势利。很多名人认为他们应该只对其他名人感兴趣。可我从不这么想。我把每个人都当作可能的朋友。比如说格雷西。她就是我的朋友。我家里所有的用人，他们也都是我的朋友。再比如在派对上。其他人都相互聊着他们最新的电影什么的，只有我和女服务员或者吧台的男招待聊天。我不觉得这是多管闲事，你觉得呢？”

“不，我丝毫不觉得那是多管闲事。不过，你瞧，加德纳太太……”

“请叫我琳迪。”

“琳迪。你瞧，跟你聊天真是太愉快了。可是这些药物真的把我搞得很累。我想我得回去躺一会儿。”

“哦，你不舒服？”

“没什么。只是这些药。”

“太糟了！你感觉好一些的时候一定要再过来。把那些唱片带来，你演奏的唱片。说定了？”

我不得不再次向她保证我今天聊得很愉快，我一定会再来。我正要出门时，她突然说道：

“史蒂夫，你下象棋吗？我是全世界下象棋下得最糟的，可我有一副很可爱的象棋。上周梅格·瑞安<sup>(6)</sup>带来给我的。”

回到房里，我从迷你冰箱里拿了瓶可乐，在写字桌前坐下，看着窗外。窗外是一大片粉红色的夕阳。我们住得很高，我能看见远处高速公路上来来往往的汽车。几分钟后，我打电话给布拉德利。他的秘书让我等了很长时间，但他最后终于来听电话了。

“脸怎么样了？”他担心地问，好像在询问一只他放在我这里托管的心爱的宠物。

“我怎么知道？我仍旧是个隐形人。”

“你还好吧？你听上去……无精打采的。”

“我确实无精打采。这整件事都错了。我现在看明白了。事情不会成的。”

一阵沉默。接着他问道：“手术失败了？”

“我肯定手术没问题。我是说其余的部分，这事的发展。这个计划……事情的结果不会是像你所说的那个样子。我真不应该被你打动。”

“你是怎么了？你听上去情绪低落。他们给你灌什么了？”

“我很好。事实上，现在我的头脑比以前清楚多了。所以麻烦就来了。现在我看明白了。你的计划……我真不应该听你的。”

“你说什么呢？什么计划？听着，史蒂夫，事情很简单。你是个很有天赋的艺术家。等这件事过了，你还和以前一样该做什么做什么。你现在只是在清除一个障碍，没别的。没有什么计划……”

“听着，布拉德利，这里糟透了。不只是肉体上的难受。我现在意识到我在对自己做什么了。整件事都错了。我应该更看得起自己一些。”

“史蒂夫，什么事让你突然想说这些？出了什么事？”

“是他妈的出事了。所以我才给你打电话。我要你把我从这里弄出去。我要你给我换家酒店？”

“换家酒店？你以为你是谁？阿卜 杜拉王储啊？那家酒店他妈的怎么了？”

“怎么了？就是琳迪·加德纳住在我隔壁。她刚刚请我过去，叫我以后还要去。就是这么了！”

“琳迪·加德纳住在隔壁？”

“听着，我受不了再去一次。我刚刚去了，耐着性子待在那里。现在她说我们要玩她那副梅格·瑞安的国际象棋……”

“史蒂夫，你是说琳迪·加德纳住在隔壁？你还去看了她？”

“她放她丈夫的唱片！妈的，我想她现在又在放另一张。我现在堕落到这种地步了。跟她那种人。”

“打住，史蒂夫，把事情从头说一遍。史蒂夫，你他妈的闭嘴，把整件事解释给我听。解释一下你怎么会去看琳迪·加德纳。”

这时我确实暂时冷静下来了。我就简要地告诉他琳迪怎么请我过去，后来又发生了什么事。

“那么你没有对她无礼？”我一说完他就这么问道。

“没有，我没有对她无礼。我一直忍着。可是我不再去了。我要换酒店。”

“史蒂夫，你不能换酒店。琳迪·加德纳？她缠着绷带，你也缠着绷带。她就住在你隔壁。史蒂夫，这是一个绝好的机会。”

“没有的事，布拉德利。这里是名流地狱。她那副梅格·瑞安的国际象棋，我的老天！”

“梅格·瑞安的国际象棋？什么意思？棋子长得像梅格·瑞安？”

“她还要听我演奏！她要我下次一定带CD过去！”

“她要你……天啊，史蒂夫，你还没把绷带拆掉就已经撞大运了。她想听你演奏？”

“我要你摆平这件事，布拉德利。我现在真是麻烦大了，我做了手术，你说动我做的，我居然傻到相信了你的话。可我用不着忍受这个。我用不着接下来两个星期都得和琳迪·加德纳在一起。我要你马上把我搬出去！”

“我不会把你搬出去的。你知不知道琳迪·加德纳是多重要的人物？你知不知道她都和哪些人往来，她打个电话就能替你做什么事？没错，如今她是和托尼·加德纳离婚了。可这没有影响。拉拢她，加上你的新面孔，大门就为你打开了。你会成为大明星的，只要一眨眼的工夫。”

“没有什么大明星，布拉德利，因为我不会再过去了，我也不要什么门为我打开，除非是因为我的音乐。我不相信你以前说的那些话，我不相信什么计划不计划的……”

“你别讲得这么激动。我很担心你脸上的线。”

“布拉德利，很快你就不用再担心我脸上的线了，知道为什么吗？我要把这副木乃伊面具拆下来，我要把手指伸到嘴里去，使劲拉我的脸，能拉成什么样就拉成什么样。你听到了吗，布拉德利？”

我听到他叹了口气，然后说：“好吧，冷静。冷静。你最近压力太大。我可以理解。如果你现在不想见到琳迪，如果你想让这么好的机会白白溜走，好吧，我理解你的立场。但是要礼貌，好吗？找个好借口。别断了后路。”

跟布拉德利通完电话以后，我感觉好多了，过了一个相当惬意的晚上，看了半部电影，然后听比尔·埃文斯<sup>(7)</sup>的CD。第二天早餐过后，鲍里斯医生和两个护士过来，看似很满意就离开了。不久之后，十一点左右，有人来看望我——一个叫李的鼓手，几年前我在圣地亚哥的一支室内乐队里和他共事过。布拉德利也是他的经纪人，让他过来看我。

李是个不错的家伙，我很高兴见到他。他待了一个小时左右，我们交换彼此都认识的朋友的新闻，谁在哪个乐队，谁收拾行李去了加拿大或者欧洲。

“好多老队友都走了，不在了，太可惜了，”他说。“大家本来相处得很愉快，可转眼你就不知道对方身在何处了。”

他聊了聊他最近接的活，我们回忆了在圣地亚哥的一些时光，聊得很开心。就在他的来访接近尾声时，他说道：

“那杰克·马弗尔呢？你怎么解释？世界真奇怪，不是吗？”

“是很奇怪，”我说。“可话说回来，杰克一直是个好乐手。他现在的成就是他应得的。”

“是，可还是奇怪啊。记得那时候的杰克吗？在圣地亚哥时？史蒂夫，你随便哪一天晚上都有可能把他赶下台去。现在看看他。纯粹是运气还是其他？”

“杰克一直是个好人，”我说，“就我而言，看见任何一个萨克斯手得到认可都是好的。”

“认可是没错，”李说。“而且还就在这家酒店。我找找，我带着呢。”他在包里找了一通，掏出一份皱巴巴的《洛杉矶周报》。

“找到了，在这里。西蒙——韦斯伯里音乐奖。年度最佳爵士乐手。杰克·马弗尔。看看，什么时候举行？明天在楼下舞厅。你可以溜达下去参加颁奖仪式。”他放下报纸，摇了摇头。“杰克·马弗尔。年度最佳爵士乐手。谁想得到呢，啊，史蒂夫？”

“我想我是不可能下楼的，”我说。“但我会记得举杯祝贺的。”

“杰克·马弗尔。天啊，这世界是不是疯了？”

午饭后大约一个小时，电话铃响了，是琳迪。

“棋盘摆好了，亲爱的，”她说。“过来玩吧？别说不行，我无聊得快发疯了。哦，别忘了带CD过来。我太想听你的演奏了。”

我放下电话，坐在床边，想不通刚才为什么没有更加坚定自己的立场。我甚至连暗示说“不”都没有。也许我就是没有骨气。也有可能我虽然嘴上不承认，但其实认同了布拉德利的话。可是现在没时间想这些了，我得赶紧决定我的哪些CD最有可能感动她。前卫的是肯定不行的，比如去年我在旧金山跟一群电子乐手合录的那些。最后，我选了一张CD，换上干净的衬衫，再把晨衣披上，到隔壁去。

琳迪也穿着晨衣，可她穿着这身衣服去参加个电影首映礼也没多大问题。棋盘确实已经在矮矮的玻璃桌上摆好了。我们像上次那样面对面坐下，开始下棋。大概是因为有事可做，这次的气氛比上次轻松多了。我们边下棋边东聊西聊：电视节目啦、她最喜欢的欧洲城市啦、中国菜啦。这次没有像上次那样提到很多人的名字，她似乎也比上次安静许多。下着下着，她突然说道：

“你知道我怎么没让自己在这个地方待到疯掉吗？我的秘诀？我来告诉你，可你不能说出去，对格雷西也不能说，好吗？我的秘诀就是半夜出去散步。只在这栋楼里，但是楼很大，可以走个不停。而且夜深人静的时候真是太不可思议了。昨天晚上我走了有一个小时？你也得当心，还是一直都有工作人员在走来走去，但是我从来没有被人撞见。我一听到动静就跑开躲起来。有一次清洁工瞥见了，但是我马上躲到阴影里去了！太刺激了。整个白天你是个囚犯，到了晚上，你就好像完全自由了，真的是太好玩了。哪天晚上我带你一起去，亲爱的。我带你看好东西。酒吧、餐厅、会议室，还有很棒的舞厅。一个人也没有，又空又黑。我还发现了一个最有意思的地方，一间顶层公寓，我想以后是总统套房？建了一半，可被我找到了，我还进得去。我待在那里，二十分钟，半个小时，在那里想事情。嘿，史蒂夫，这样对吗？我可以这样走，吃掉你的皇后吗？”

“哦。对，我想是。我没看见。嘿，琳迪，你说你不会下棋，可实际上你挺行的嘛。现在我要怎么走呢？”

“好吧，听我说。你是客人，而且听我说话确实让你分心了。我就假装没看见。我是不是很好？对了，史蒂夫，我不记得问没问过你。你结婚了吧？”

“结了。”

“她对这件事怎么看？我的意思是这不便宜。用这些钱她可以买好几双鞋。”

“她同意这件事。事实上，这事最初是她的想法。看看现在是谁不专心了？”

“哦，该死。反正我下得很臭。我不是要多管闲事，可她经常来看你吗？”

“她一次也没来过。可这是我们的共识，在我来这里之前。”

“哦？”

她好像没听懂，我就说：“是挺奇怪，我知道。可我们说好了要这样。”

“好吧。”过了一会儿，她说道：“那是不是说没人来看你呢？”

“有人来看我。其实今天早上就有。我以前共事的乐手。”

“哦，是吗？那太好了。亲爱的，我一直都搞不清楚马怎么走。你要是发现我走错了就告诉我，好吗？我不是有意要作弊的。”

“好的。”然后我说道，“今天来看我的那家伙给我带来一条新闻。有点奇怪。挺巧的。”

“嗯哼？”

“几年前我们认识了一个萨克斯手，在圣地亚哥，一个叫杰克·马弗尔的人。你可能听说过他。如今他是个明星了。可那个时候，我们认识他的时候，他还默默无闻。但他其实是个骗子、冒牌货。从来都找不着调。最近我也听过他的演出，好几次，没有比以前进步。可他交了几次好运，如今成了红人了。我向你发誓他没有比以前好到哪儿去，一点也没有。可你知道是什么新闻吗？就是这家伙，杰克·马弗尔，明天要参加一个盛大的音乐奖颁奖礼，就在这家酒店。年度最佳爵士乐手。真是疯了，你知道吗？那么多的有才华的萨克斯手，他们却决定要把奖给杰克？”

我停了下来，抬头看着棋盘对面的琳迪，笑了笑，用平静了些的语气说道：“你能怎么办？”

琳迪坐了起来，把注意力全都放在我身上。“太糟了。你说这个人根本不优秀？”

“对不起，我有点失态了。他们想颁给杰克一个奖，有什么不可以呢？”

“可要是他根本不优秀……”

“他不比其他人差。我说说而已。对不起，你不用搭理我。”

“嘿，对了，”琳迪说道。“你把你的唱片带来了吗？”

我指了指身旁沙发上的CD。“不晓得你会不会有兴趣。你用不着非得听……”

“哦，可我要听，一定要。来，给我看看。”

我把CD递给她。“这是我在帕萨迪纳市时共事的一支乐队。我们演奏经典曲目，老派的摇摆乐，有点巴萨诺瓦。没什么特别的地方，只是你要我带我就带了。”

她端详着CD封面，先拿近了看，又拿开，又拿近，说：“你在封面上吗？我很好奇你长什么样。或者我应该说，你以前长什么样。”

“右边第二个。穿着一件夏威夷衬衫，拿着烫衣板。”

“这个？”她看了看CD，然后又看着我，说，“嘿，你长得很可爱。”可是她的声音很轻，一点儿都不让人信服，我甚至能清楚地感觉到有丝丝的怜悯。然而她马上回过神来。“好，我们来听听看！”

她朝音响走去，我说道：“第九首，《你在身旁》，是我的特别曲目。”

“《你在身旁》来了。”

我是经过一番思考才选了这首歌的。这支乐队里的成员水平很高。作为个人我们都有更加激进的理想，但是我们组了这么个乐队，专门演奏一些优秀的主流作品，晚餐食客们喜欢听的那种。我们演奏的《你在身旁》——我的萨克斯贯穿整首歌——并非完全颠覆托尼·加德纳的版本，但是我总是引以为豪。你可能会想这首歌的各种版本你都听过了。好吧，听听我们的。比如说，听听副歌第二段。或是中间的八个小节，乐队从III-5和弦升到VI x-9和弦时，我的萨克斯一直高上去，期间的跨度是你无法想象的，然后停留在那甜蜜的、非常温柔的降B大调。我觉得我的演绎赋予了歌曲不一样的味道，渴望、悔恨，你以前一定没有听过。

因此可以说，我有信心这首歌能让琳迪满意。头一两分钟，她似乎很享受。把CD放进去以后她就站在原地，像上次放她丈夫的唱片时那样开始随着缓缓的节拍恍恍惚惚地摇摆起来。可是渐渐地，她的动作越来越小，最后站在那里不动了，背对着我，低着头，像是在专心思考。一开始我并不觉得这是什么坏兆头。可歌还没播完，她就走回来坐下，这时我才意识到哪里不对了。隔着绷带，我当然没办法看到她的表情，可是她跌倒在沙发里的样子可不好看，像个紧绷绷的模特衣架。

歌播完了，我拿起桌上的遥控器，把音响整个儿关掉了。琳迪还是那么坐着，姿势僵硬、难看。似乎过了很久，她才稍微振作起来，伸手抚弄一颗棋子。

“很好听，”她说。“谢谢你给我听这个。”很客套，而她似乎并不在意她的话说得这么没有诚意。

“这首歌大概不合你的胃口。”

“没有，没有。”她的声音变得阴沉、冷淡。“很不错。谢谢你给我听这个。”说着她走出手里的棋子，说道，“轮到你了。”

我看着棋盘，努力回忆我们下到哪里。片刻后，我轻声问道：“也许那首歌，那首歌让你产生特别的联想？”

她抬起头来，我能感觉到绷带后面的怒气。可她还是用冷冷的声音说道：“那首歌？没有什么联想。没有。”突然她笑了起来——短促的、冷酷的笑。“哦，你是说有关他的联想，有关托尼的？没有，没有。他从没唱过那首歌。你吹得很好。很专业。”

“很专业？什么意思？”

“意思就是……就是很专业。我是在表扬你。”

“专业？”我站了起来，走过去把碟从音响里拿出来。

“你生什么气？”她的声音仍旧冷冰冰的。“我说错话了？抱歉。我没有恶意。”

我走回桌子边，把碟放进盒子里，但没有坐下。

“棋还下吗？”她问。

“你若不介意，我有一些事情得处理。电话啦，文件啦。”

“你生什么气？我不明白。”

“我没有生气。时间晚了，就这样。”

她终于站起来，送我到门口。我们冷冷地握手道别。

我说过手术以后我的睡眠规律被打乱了。那天晚上我突然觉得累，早早睡觉，酣睡了几个小时，半夜醒来，就睡不着了。我躺了一会儿就起来开电视。我发现一部小时候看的电影，就拖了把椅子过来，声音开得小小的，把剩下的看完。看完了以后，我又看两名传教士在一群叫嚣愚蠢的看客面前吵来吵去。总的说来我很满意。我感觉惬意，觉得自己远离了外面的世界。所以当电话响起时，我的心脏都快跳出来了。

“史蒂夫？是你吗？”是琳迪。她的声音怪怪的，像是喝了酒。

“是我。”

“我知道很晚了。可是我刚才路过的时候看见门缝底下有光。我想你和我一样睡不着。”

“我想是吧。如今很难正常起居。”

“是啊。肯定。”

“没事吧？”我问道。

“没事。都好。好得很。”

此时我听出来她并没有喝醉，可我仍搞不清楚她是怎么了。她也不一定就是喝醉了——可能只是睡不着，有话想跟我说，所以兴奋。

“真的没事？”我又问了一遍。

“没事，真的，可是……听着，亲爱的，我有个东西，我有个东西想给你。”

“哦？是什么呢？”

“我不想说。我要给你一个惊喜。”

“有意思。我什么时候过去拿吧，嗯，早饭以后？”

“我希望你现在就过来拿。我是说，东西在这里，而且你醒着，我也醒着。我知道很晚了，可是……听着，史蒂夫，今天白天，下午的事，我觉得我欠你一个解释。”

“忘了吧。我不介意……”

“你以为我不喜欢你的音乐，所以生我的气。不是的。不是这样的，恰恰相反。你给我听的，那个版本的《你在身旁》，我怎么也不能把它赶出脑海。不，我指的不是头脑，我指的是心。我怎么也不能把它赶出心扉。”

我不知道该说什么，不等我回答，她又说道：

“你过来吗？现在？我好好地解释给你听。而且最重要的是……不，不，我现在不能说。我要给你一个惊喜。你过来就知道了。把你的CD再带过来。好吗？”

琳迪一开门就把CD从我手里拿过去，好像我是送货的，可是接着她就抓住我的手腕，把我拉进去。她还穿着那件漂亮的晨衣，但是看起来没有之前那么完美了：衣服一边高一边低，后脑勺领口附近的绷带钩住了一团绒毛。

“我想你刚刚夜游回来。”我说。

“你醒着我太高兴了。我不知道我是不是能等到早上。好了，听着，就像我刚刚说的，我要给你一个惊喜。我希望你会喜欢，我想你会喜欢的。可我要你先坐下来。我们再听一遍你那首歌。我看看，是第几首？”

我在老地方坐下，看着她摆弄音响。屋里的灯光柔和，空气凉爽宜人。接着《你在身旁》的音乐高声响了起来。

“不会吵到别人吗？”我说。

“管他的。我们付了这里一大笔钱，其他人不关我们的事。好了，嘘！听，听！”

她开始像之前那样随着音乐摇摆，只是这次她没有中途停下来，而且随着音乐的进行，她似乎越来越陶醉，张开手臂，像是在与一个假想的舞伴共舞。音乐停止以后，她关掉CD，一动不动地背对着我站在房间的尽头。她那样子站了似乎很长一段时间才朝我走过来。

“我不知道该说什么，”她说道。“太出色了。你是个很棒、很棒的乐手。你是个天才。”

“呃，谢谢。”

“我第一次听就知道了。是真的。所以今天下午我才会有那样的反应。假装不喜欢，假装讨厌？”她坐了下来，看着我，叹了口气。

“以前托尼总叫我别这样。我老是这样，怎么也改不掉。我遇见一个，你知道，一个真正的天才，一个天资过人的人，我就忍不住，我的第一反应就是像我今天下午对你的那样。这就是，我不知道，我想是嫉妒吧。就好像有时候一群女人，姿色平庸，一个漂亮的女人走了进来，就会遭到其他人的憎恨，想把她的眼睛挖出来。我遇见像你这样的人时就是这样。特别是不期而遇时，像今天这样，我没有准备。我是说，一分钟前我以为你只是一个普通人，突然间你……你不再是普通人了，你变成另一个人了。你明白我在说什么吗？总之我试着跟你解释为什么今天下午我会表现得那么坏。你完全有理由生我的气。”

一时间我们都没有说话，午夜的寂静笼罩下来。过了许久，我说道：“啊，谢谢，谢谢你跟我说这些。”

琳迪突然站了起来。“现在，我要给你的惊喜！在那里等着，别动。”

她走进隔壁的房间，传来开、关抽屉的声音。她回来的时候，胸前双手握着一件东西，然而她用丝手帕把东西盖着，我不知道她拿的是什么。她在房间的中央站住了。

“史蒂夫，我要你过来领。这是一个颁奖仪式。”

虽然不知道她要干什么，我还是站了起来，走过去。她揭开手帕，伸手递给我一个亮晶晶的铜像。

“你完全配得上这个奖。这个奖是你的了。年度最佳爵士乐手。也许是史上最佳。恭喜你。”

她把铜像放到我手中，透过纱布轻轻地亲了亲我的脸颊。

“啊，谢谢。确实是个惊喜。嘿，真好看。这是什么？鳄鱼吗？”

“鳄鱼？拜托！是一对可爱的小天使在接吻。”

“哦，是，我看出来了。啊，谢谢你，琳迪。我不知道该说什么。真的很漂亮。”

“鳄鱼！”

“对不起。只是这个小家伙把腿伸得这么老长。可现在我看出来了。真的很漂亮。”

“啊，奖是你的了。你应该得到这个奖。”

“我很感动，琳迪。真的。这下面写什么？我没戴眼镜。”

“写着‘年度最佳爵士乐手’啊。不然还能写什么？”

“真的？”

“是啊，当然是真的。”

我握着铜像走回沙发，坐下来想了一会儿，说：“告诉我，琳迪。你刚刚给我的东西。不可能是你在夜里散步的时候碰巧拿到的吧？”

“是啊。当然可能了。”

“这样。那不可能是，是真的奖杯吧？我指他们要颁给杰克的那个奖？”

琳迪没有马上回答，而是静静地站了一会儿才答道：

“当然是真的了。给你一个旧破烂有什么意义呢？本来会发生一件不公平的事，如今公正得到了伸张。这才是关键。嘿，亲爱的，好了。你知道你才应该得到这个奖。”

“你这么说我很感激。只是……啊，这有点像偷窃。”

“偷窃？不是你自己说那家伙一点儿都不优秀吗？是个冒牌货？可你是个天才。是谁偷了谁的？”

“琳迪，你到底是在哪里拿到这个东西的？”

她耸耸肩。“一个地方。我去的一个地方。可能是个办公室。”

“今天晚上？你今天晚上拿的？”

“当然是今天晚上拿的。昨天晚上我又不知道这个奖。”

“没错，没错。那么是一个小时前，对吗？”

“一小时。也有可能是两小时。谁知道？我出来了一段时间，去了一会儿我的总统套房。”

“天啊。”

“听着，谁会在意？你担心什么呢？他们丢了一个奖杯可以再去拿一个。说不定他们有一整柜的奖杯。我给你一个你应得的东西。你不会不要吧，史蒂夫？”

“我不是不要，琳迪。这份好意，这份荣誉，等等，我都接受，我真的很高兴。可是这个，这个真的奖杯，我们得还回去。我们得把它放回原处。”

“见鬼！谁会在意？”

“琳迪，好好想想。事情被发现了你会怎么样？你能想象得到媒体对这件事会怎么说吗？你的崇拜者们会怎么说？快点。我们现在就还回去，在大家还没起来之前。告诉我你在哪里找到这个东西的。”

她突然像个做错事的小孩，叹了口气，说：“我想你是对的，亲爱的。”

说好了还回去以后，琳迪变得对这个奖杯特别恋恋不舍，一直把铜像紧紧地捏在胸前。我们匆匆地走过寂静的走廊，偌大的旅馆都在沉睡中。琳迪带着我走下隐蔽的楼梯和员工通道，走过桑拿浴室和自动贩卖机。我们一个人也没有看见或者听见。走着走着，琳迪突然小声说道：“这边。”我们推开厚厚的门，走进一个黑咕隆咚的地方。

我确定周围没有人后就打开从琳迪房里拿的手电筒，照了照四周。我们在一个舞厅里，可是如果你打算这时候跳舞的话，会有餐桌碍事。每张餐桌上都铺着白色亚麻桌布，摆着相应的椅子。天花板上有一盏华丽的中央吊灯。房间的最里面有一个凸起的台子，幕布遮着，但挺大的，应该可以进行一场相当规模的演出。房间的中央搁着一架活动梯子，一台真空吸尘器竖直靠在墙边。

“看来要举行一个派对，”琳迪说。“四五百人？”

我往里面走了走，又用手电筒照了照。“可能就是这里了。就在这里给杰克颁奖。”

“当然是了。我发现这个地方”——她举起铜像——“还有其他铜像。最佳新人，最佳年度R&B专辑，等等这类东西。是个大活动呢。”

虽然手电筒不是很亮，可我的眼睛适应了这里的光线，能把这个地方看得更清楚了。刹那间，我站在那里看着舞台，能想象这个地方明天会是什么样子。我想象着所有的人穿着盛装，唱片公司的人、知名的活动赞助商、演艺圈的各路明星，大家有说有笑，互相恭维。每当主持人提到某个赞助商的名字，大家奉承地鼓鼓掌；而当得奖人登台时，大家就认真鼓掌了，还夹杂着欢呼声和喝彩声。我想象着杰克·马弗尔站在台上，手握奖杯，脸上挂着一副自鸣得意的微笑，就像在圣地亚哥他独奏完、接受观众鼓掌时的那种微笑。

“也许我们错了。”我说道。“也许没必要把这个还回来。也许我们应该把它扔到垃圾堆里去。和你找到的其他奖杯一起。”

“哦？”琳迪糊涂了。“你这样想的，亲爱的？”

我叹了口气。“不，不是。可是这样做……很痛快，不是吗？把所有的奖杯都扔进垃圾堆里。我敢说所有的得奖人都是冒牌货。我敢说他们那群人连个热狗面包都做不来。”

我等着琳迪接我的话，可是她什么也没说。而当她开口时，她的声音里有一丝与先前不同的语气，严厉的语气。

“你怎么知道有些得奖人不行？你怎么知道有些人不配得到他们的奖？”

“我怎么知道？”我突然很生气。“我怎么知道？想想看吧。一个认为杰克·马弗尔是年度最杰出的爵士乐手的评审团，他们会把奖给什么样的人呢？”

“可是你怎么知道其他人怎么样？甚至是这个杰克。你怎么知道他取得这个奖不是他努力来的？”

“这算什么话？难不成现在你成了杰克最大的粉丝了？”

“我只是说说我的想法。”

“你的想法？这是你的想法？我想我不应该这么惊讶。我差点忘了你是什么人了。”

“你这话是什么意思？你怎么敢这么跟我说话？！”

我突然意识到我情绪失控了，赶紧说道：“好了，我失态了。对不起。我们开始找那间办公室吧。”

琳迪没有做声。我转过去看着她，光线太暗，我猜不出她在想什么。

“琳迪，办公室在哪儿？我们得找到那里。”

最后，她终于用拿着雕像的手指向舞厅的后面，然后在我前面穿过那些桌子，仍旧没有说话。我们走到舞厅的后面，我把耳朵贴在门上听了几秒钟，没有声响，我小心地打开门。

我们到了一个似乎与舞厅平行的狭长的地方。不知哪里有盏昏暗的灯开着，所以我们不用手电筒就能依稀看得见。这里显然不是我们要找的办公室，而像是个餐厅连着厨房的地方。墙的两边摆着长长的工作台，中间留着一条仅供工作人员取食物的过道。

然而琳迪好像认识这个地方，大踏步朝走道里面走去。走到半中间突然停下来，研究起留在台子上的一个烤盘。

“嘿，是饼干！”她的情绪好像恢复了平静。“真可惜都包着玻璃纸。我饿扁了。看！我们看看这底下是什么。”

她又往前走了几步，打开一个穹顶状的大盖子。“看啊，亲爱的。真是诱人！”

出现在琳迪面前的是一只又肥又大的烤火鸡。她没有把盖子盖上，而是小心翼翼地放在火鸡的旁边。

“我扯条腿他们会不会介意？”

“我想他们会很介意，琳迪。可管他呢。”

“这腿真大。你要和我分吗？”

“不要白不要。”

“好。来吧。”

她把手伸向火鸡。可是突然间她直起身子，转向我。

“刚才到底是什么意思？”

“什么什么意思？”

“你刚才说的话。说你不应该惊讶。对我的想法。什么意思？”

“对不起。我不是有意冒犯。我只是自言自语。”

“自言自语？干吗不再多自言自语一些？我说也许有些人配得到他们的奖。这有什么好笑的？”

“我的意思只是这些奖颁错了人。可是你好像不这么认为。你觉得不是这样……”

“其中一些人可能很努力才取得今天的成就。他们需要一点认可。像你这样的人问题就在于，就因为上天赋予了你们特殊的才华，你们就觉得你们应该应有尽有。你们比我们其他人优秀，你们每次都应该排在前面。你们没有看见还有很多其他人不如你们幸运，可是他们很努力赢得社会的认可……”

“那你觉得我没有努力咯？你觉得我整天游手好闲？我费尽千辛万苦才做出有价值的、优美的音乐，可到头来谁受到认可？杰克·马弗尔！你这样的人！”

“你该死的敢这么说！我跟这件事有什么关系？我今天得奖了吗？谁给我颁过他妈的什么奖？我得到过什么？就是在学校，有没有什么唱歌、跳舞还是其他什么玩意的证书？没有！什么都没有！我总是看着别人，看着你们这些讨厌的家伙上台领奖，你们的父母在台下鼓掌……”

“没得过奖？没得过奖？看看你！谁是名人？谁住漂亮房子……”

就在这时，啪的一声，开关开了，我们俩在刺眼的强光下对视。两名男子从我们刚才进来的地方进来，朝我们走过来。过道刚好够他们两个人并排走。其中一个黑人大个儿穿着酒店的保安制服，一开始我以为他手里拿着枪，后来看清那是一部对讲机。另一个是个小个子白人，穿着浅蓝色西服，一头黑亮的头发。两个人看起来都不怎么友善。他们在我们面前一两码的地方停下，小个子从上衣里掏出证件。

“洛杉矶警局的摩根，”他说。

“晚上好，”我说。

那个警察和保安一言不发地看着我们。过了一会儿，那个警察问道：

“酒店的客人？”

“是的，”我说。“我们是酒店的客人。”

我感觉到琳迪柔软的睡袍擦过我的后背。接着她拉住我的胳膊，我们肩并肩站着。

“晚上好，警官。”她用和平时不一样的、懒洋洋、甜滋滋的声音说道。

“晚上好，夫人，”警察说道。“你们这会儿不睡觉是不是有什么特殊原因？”

我们俩马上抢着回答。我们笑了，但另外两个人可一点笑容也没有。

“我们睡不着，”琳迪说。“所以出来散步。”

“出来散步。”警察借着刺眼的白光环顾了一下四周。“还是找吃的。”

“是，警官！”琳迪还是尖着嗓门说。“我们饿了，我相信您晚上有时候也会肚子饿。”

“我想客房服务不够好，”警察说道。

“是不怎么好，”我说。

“尽是一些稀疏平常的东西，”警察说。“牛排、比萨、汉堡、三明治。我刚刚自己从通宵营业的客房服务那里点了一份，所以知道。不过我想你们不喜欢这些东西。”

“嗯，您知道的，警官，”琳迪说道。“只是好玩。偷偷下来吃点东西，明知不允许。您小时候也干过吧？”

那两个人都没有软化的迹象。可是那个警察说道：

“抱歉打扰二位，可是要知道这里不对客人开放。而且刚刚丢了一两件东西。”

“真的？”

“是的。二位今晚看见什么奇怪、可疑的东西了吗？”

琳迪和我对视了一下，然后她朝我使劲地摇摇头。

“没有，”我说。“我们没有看见什么奇怪的东西。”

“什么都没有？”

说话间保安慢慢走上前来，他的大块头挤过我们身边的餐台，走到我们身后。我明白了他们的策略是保安上前来检查我们，看看我们有没有把什么东西藏在身上，而他的同伴不停地跟我们说话。

“没有，什么都没有。”我说。“你们觉得有什么呢？”

“可疑的人。不寻常的举动。”

“警官，您的意思是，”琳迪惊恐地说，“房间遭盗窃了？”

“不算是，夫人，可是确有一些重要的东西不见了。”

我能感觉到保安在我们身后晃动。

“所以您才会在这里，”琳迪说道。“来保护我们的人身和财产安全。”

“是的，夫人。”那个警察的视线微微动了一下，我感到他和我们身后的那个人交换了一下眼神。“好了，要是你们看见什么奇怪的东西，请马上联系保安。”

看来盘问结束了，警察让开道让我们出去。我松了一口气，准备离开，可是琳迪说道：

“我想我们太调皮了，跑到这里来吃东西。我们本想吃些那里的奶油蛋糕，可是我们想那蛋糕可能是有特殊用途的，糟蹋了可惜。”

“酒店里有很好的客房服务，”警察说。“全天候的服务。”

我想把琳迪拽走，可她好像突然中了邪，变成人们常说的那种莽撞、不知死活的罪犯。

“您刚刚自己点了东西，警官？”

“是的。”

“东西好吗？”

“挺不错的。我建议二位也这么做。”

“让先生们继续他们的调查吧，”我拽着琳迪的胳膊说，可她仍不走。

“警官，您介不介意我问您一个问题？”她问道。

“请问。”

“您刚才说看见什么奇怪的东西。您自己不就看见什么奇怪的东西了吗？我是指，我们两个？”

“我不明白你的意思，夫人？”

“比如说我们两个脸上都缠满绷带？您没注意到吗？”

警察仔细地看了看我们，像在验证琳迪说的最后一句话，然后说道：“事实上，我注意到了，夫人。可是我不想过问私事。”

“哦，这样啊。”琳迪说道，然后转向我，“他是不是很体贴？”

“走吧，”我说道，这次用力地把她拽走了。我能感觉到那两个人一直盯着我们的后背，直到门口。

我们故作镇定地穿过舞厅。可一走出那扇双开式弹簧大门，我们就害怕得几乎跑起来了。我们一直搭着胳膊，所以一路上跌跌撞撞。琳迪领着我往前走，最后把我拉进了一架货运电梯。当电梯的门关上、我们开始往上升时，琳迪才放开我的手，背靠在金属墙上，发出一阵奇怪的声音，是透过绷带传来的歇斯底里的笑声。

走出电梯以后，她再次把手搭在我的胳膊上，说：“好了，我们安全了。现在我带你去一个地方。很特别的地方。看这个？”她拿出一张钥匙卡。“看看它能干什么用。”

她拿着卡片打开一扇写着“私人禁地”的门，然后又打开一扇写着“危险，禁止入内”的门。最后我们来到一个充满油漆和石灰味的地方。墙上、天花板上都垂着电线，冷冰冰的地板上满是水渍和污渍。我们能看清楚是因为房间有一面整个儿是玻璃——还没有挂上窗帘或者百叶窗——外面所有的亮光在这里投下淡黄色的斑点。这里比我们的房间还要高：看窗外的高速公路和周围的区域，我们像是从直升飞机上往下看。

“这里要建新的总统套房，”琳迪说道。“我喜欢来这里。还没有电灯，没有地毯。可正渐渐成形。我第一次来的时候比现在粗糙得多呢。如今你可以看出形状来了，甚至还多了这张睡椅。”

屋子的中央有一大团黑影，被床单完全盖住了。琳迪像看见老朋友一样走过去，疲惫地一屁股坐了下去。

“虽然这是我的想象，”她说，“可是我相信他们建这房间是为了我。所以我能到这里来。这一切。因为他们在帮我。帮我塑造我的未来。这里以前乱七八糟的。可是看看现在。它在渐渐成形。这里以后会很漂亮。”她拍了拍身旁的垫子。“来吧，亲爱的，休息一下。我累坏了。你一定也是。”

想不到这睡椅——抑或床单底下是其他什么东西——这么舒服。我一坐下去就感觉一阵阵的疲惫朝我袭来。

“天啊，我困了，”琳迪说道，把全部的重量压在我的肩膀上。“这里是不是很棒？我在狭缝里发现了钥匙，第一次来的时候。”

有一会儿我们都不说话，我自己也困了。可是我突然想到什么事情。

“嘿，琳迪。”

“哼？”

“琳迪。奖杯哪儿去了？”

“奖杯？哦，对了。奖杯。我藏起来了。不然还能怎么样？要知道，亲爱的，你真的配得那个奖。我希望这事儿对你有意义，我把奖颁给你，像今晚这样。不是我一时心血来潮。我考虑过，很认真地考虑过。我不知道这样做对你意义大不大，也不知道十年、二十年后你还会不会记得。”

“我当然会记得。而且这件事对我意义重大。可是琳迪，你说你藏起来了，藏在哪里？你把铜像藏到哪里去了？”

“哼？”她又昏昏欲睡了。“藏在我唯一能藏的地方。我把它放到火鸡里去了。”

“你把它放到火鸡里。”

“跟我九岁的时候一模一样。我把妹妹的荧光球藏在火鸡里。就想到了。反应够快吧？”

“是，确实。”我累得不行，可我强迫自己集中精神。“但是琳迪，你藏得很好吗？我是说那些警察现在会不会已经发现了？”

“我想不会。没有角露出来，如果你是指这个。他们怎么会想到找那里呢？我在背后塞的，像这样。一直塞。我没有转头去看，不然那两个人就会怀疑了。不是心血来潮。决定给你那个奖。我想过，很认真地想过。我真的希望这事儿对你有意义。天啊，我得睡了。”

她倒在我身上，不一会儿就打起呼噜来了。考虑到她动的手术，我小心翼翼地移动她的脑袋，以免她的脸颊压在我的肩膀上。接着，我也渐渐入睡。

我猛地醒过来，看见面前的大窗户外天快亮了。琳迪还在熟睡，所以我小心翼翼地离开她，站起来，伸了伸胳膊。我走到窗户前，看着灰白的天空和底下远远的高速公路。我拼命回忆我睡着之前想到了一件什么事，可是我的脑子累得不行、迷迷糊糊的。突然间我想起来了，我走回睡椅，摇醒琳迪。

“什么事？什么事？你要干吗？”她闭着眼睛说。

“琳迪，”我说。“奖杯。我们把奖杯忘了。”

“我告诉过你了。奖杯在火鸡里。”

“是，所以你听着。那些警察可能不会想到去看火鸡里面。可是迟早会有人发现的。说不定现在就有人在切火鸡了。”

“那又怎么样？他们发现奖杯在里面。那又怎么样？”

“他们发现奖杯在里面，他们会报告这一重大发现。那个警察就会想起我们。他会想起我们曾经在那里，站在火鸡旁。”

琳迪好像清醒多了，说道：“是，我明白你的意思了。”

“只要奖杯在火鸡里，他们就会怀疑我们跟这一罪行有关。”

“罪行？嘿，什么罪行？”

“随便你怎么说。我们得回去把东西从鸡里拿出来。然后随便放哪里都可以，就是不能放在那里。”

“亲爱的，我们真的非这样做不可吗？我现在累死了。”

“我们非这样做不可，琳迪。奖杯放在那里，我们会有麻烦的。而且记住，对于记者来说，这可是一条大新闻啊。”

琳迪想了想，然后稍微直了直身子，看着我说：“好吧，我们回那里去吧。”

这一次走廊里有做清洁和人说话的声音，但我们还是安全地回到了那个舞厅，没遇见一个人。光线也好多了，琳迪指了指双开门旁边的告示。上面用塑料的字母拼块写着：J. A. 普尔清洁剂公司早餐会。

“难怪昨晚找不到放奖杯的办公室，”她说，“不是这个舞厅。”

“这没关系。现在我们要的东西在这里面。”

我们穿过舞厅，小心翼翼地走进餐厅。和昨天晚上一样有盏昏暗的灯开着，现在又多了些气窗照进来的自然光。没有看见人，可我沿着长长的工作台扫了一眼，发现我们有麻烦了。

“看来有人来过，”我说道。

“是啊。”琳迪往过道里走了几步，看看两边。“是啊。看那里。”

之前我们看见的罐子、盘子、蛋糕盒、有银色穹顶盖子的大盘子统统不见了。取而代之的是一堆堆间隔整齐地摆放着的盘子和餐巾。

“得，他们把食物都搬走了，”我说。“问题是，搬到哪儿去了？”

琳迪又往过道里走了几步，然后突然转过来。“记得吗，史蒂夫，上次在这里，在那两个人进来之前，我们在讨论一个问题。”

“是的，我记得。可又提起它干吗？我知道我失态了。”

“是啊，不提了。那只火鸡到底哪儿去了？”她又左右看了看。
“知道吗，史蒂夫？小时候我十分渴望成为舞蹈家或歌唱家。我努力啊努力，老天知道我努力了，可人们只知道笑话我，我觉得这个世界太不公平了。但是后来我长大一些，我发现这个世界也不是那么不公平。即使是像我这样的人，没有什么天赋的人，也仍然是有机会的。你仍旧可以在天底下找到自己的位置，不一定只能是个默默无闻的人。要做到不容易。你得十分努力，不理睬别人怎么说。可机会一定有。”

“啊，你似乎干得不错。”

“世界上的事真奇怪。知道吗，我觉得这是非常明智的。我指你妻子，叫你来做这个手术。”

“我们别提她。嘿，琳迪，你知道那扇门通向哪里吗？那边那扇？”

房间的尽头，餐台的末端，有三个台阶通向一扇绿色的门。

“干吗不去看看？”琳迪说。

我们像刚刚一样小心翼翼地打开门，一时间我完全找不着北了。这里很暗，我每次想转身都会碰上帘子或防水布之类的东西。琳迪拿着手电筒在我前面，似乎没有我这么狼狈。接着我终于踉跄地走到了一个黑咕隆咚的场子，琳迪正等着我，手电筒照着我的脚。

她低声说道：“我发现你不喜欢谈到她。我指你妻子。”

我也低声回答她：“没有的事。我们这是在哪儿？”

“她没来看过你。”

“那是因为我们现在不在一起。既然你非得知道。”

“哦，对不起。我不是要多管闲事。”

“你不是要多管闲事？！”

“嘿，亲爱的，看！就是这个！我们找到了！”

她用手电筒照着不远处的一张桌子。桌子上铺着白色桌布，并排放着两个银色穹顶盖子。

我走到第一个穹顶前，小心地打开。一只肥肥的烤火鸡端坐在里面。我摸索着它的腹腔，伸了根指头进去找。

“什么都没有，”我说。

“你得伸到里面去。我塞得很里面。这些鸡比你想的要大。”

“我说了里面什么都没有。手电筒照那里。我们试试另一只。”我小心地掀开第二只的盖子。

“你知道，史蒂夫，我觉得这样不对。你不应该觉得说这件事是丢脸的。”

“说什么事？”

“说你和妻子分开了。”

“我说我们分开了？我那样说了吗？”

“我以为……”

“我说我们不在一起。两码事。”

“像一回事……”

“啊，不是。只是暂时的，试验性的。嘿，我摸到什么东西了。这里面有东西。找到了。”

“把它拽出来，亲爱的。”

“不然你以为我在干吗？天啊！你非得塞这么里面吗？”

“嘘！外面有人！”

一开始很难判断外面有几个人。接着声音近了，我听出来只有一个人，在不停地打电话。我也明白我们在哪里了。我本以为我们到了一个什么后台，但其实我们就站在舞台上，我面前的帘子是把我和舞厅隔开的唯一东西。打电话的男子正穿过舞池，朝舞台走过来。

我轻声示意琳迪关掉手电筒，灯熄了，一片漆黑。她在我耳边说道：“我们离开这里。”说完我听见她悄悄地离开。我再次试图把铜像从火鸡里拿出来，可现在我不敢弄出声音，而且我的手指头没法抓牢铜像。

声音越来越近，最后那家伙像是就在我面前。

“……那不是我的问题，拉里。菜单上得印上公司标志。我不管你们怎么印。好吧，那你就自己印吧。对，你自己印，自己送过来，我不管你怎么做。只要在今天早上送过来，最迟七点半。我们这里要那些东西。桌子很好。桌子很多，相信我。好好。我会确认的。好，好。对。我马上就确认。”

那男的边说最后一句话，边走到了房间的另一头。他一定是按了墙上的什么开关，一道强烈的光线从我头顶上直射下来，同时传来类似空调的嗡嗡的声音。只是我意识到发出声音的不是空调，而是我面前的帘子在慢慢打开。

在我职业生涯中我总共上台过两次进行独奏表演，突然间我不知道从何开始，不知道要用哪个调，不知道怎么换弦。那两次我都僵住了，像电影里的定格，直到乐队里有个人上来救我。我入行二十年这种事情只发生过两次。总之，这就是头顶的聚光灯打开、幕帘慢慢掀开时我的反应。我僵住了。而且我突然感觉自己置身事外，有点好奇帘子拉开以后会看见什么。

我看见了舞厅，而且从舞台上更能看出桌子从头到尾被排列成整齐的两排。头顶的灯光在舞厅里投下了些许阴影，可我还是能看见大吊灯和华丽的天花板。

打电话的男子是个秃头的胖子，穿着灰色西服、开领衬衫。他一定是按了开关以后就走开了，如今他几乎和我平齐。他的电话贴在耳朵上，看他的表情你以为他在专心听对方讲话。可是我想他没有，他的眼睛死死地盯着我。他瞪着我，我也瞪着他，我们会这样子永远瞪下去，要不是他又接着打电话，可能是对方问他为什么突然不说话了。

“没事。没事。是个人。”他停顿了一下，接着说，“我刚刚以为是什么东西。没想到是个人。头上包着绷带，穿着睡衣。就是这样，现在我看清楚了。他手里抓着一只鸡什么的。”

我突然清醒过来，下意识地开始甩动手臂。我右手手腕以下还在火鸡里，我用力的甩动弄得整张桌子哐当作响。可至少现在我不用担心被发现了，因此我不管三七二十一，拼了命努力把手和铜像拿出来。而那个男的继续打他的电话。

“不，我没有骗你。现在他把鸡拿掉了。哦，他从里面拿出了什么东西。嘿，老天，那是什么？鳄鱼？”

他平静地说出最后那几个字，真是令人佩服。铜像拿出来了，火鸡嘭的一声掉到地板上。我急忙走进身后漆黑的地方，听见那个男的对他的朋友说：

“我怎么知道？可能是什么魔术吧。”

我不记得我们是怎么回到我们住的地方了。离开舞台后我又被一堆帘子搞得晕头转向，好在琳迪抓住我的手。然后，我们急匆匆地奔回房间，再也不管我们弄出了多少声响，或者撞见了谁。路上，我把铜像放在某个房间外客房服务的盘子上，不知谁吃剩的晚餐旁。

回到琳迪的房间，我们一屁股坐到沙发上，大笑起来，一直笑到我们两个倒成一团。琳迪站起来，走到窗户旁，打开百叶窗。天已经亮了，虽说是阴天。她走到橱子前调起饮料——“世界上最棒的无酒精鸡尾酒”——然后递给我一杯。我以为她会在我旁边坐下，可她又走回窗前，小口喝着自己的饮料。

过一会儿她问道：“你期待吗，史蒂夫？期待绷带拆下来？”

“我想是吧。”

“上周我都还没怎么想这件事。觉得事情还远着呢。可现在不远了。”

“是啊，离我也不远了。”说完我轻声叫道，“天啊。”

琳迪抿了一口酒，看着窗外。然后我听见她说：“嘿，亲爱的，你怎么了？”

“我很好，只是得睡一觉。”

她看了我好一会儿，说道：“听我说，史蒂夫，会好起来的。鲍里斯是最棒的医生。你瞧着吧。”

“是。”

“嘿，你是怎么了？听着，这是我第三次整容。第二次找鲍里斯。会好起来的。你会变帅，很帅。而你的事业，从此以后蒸蒸日上。”

“可能吧。”

“不是可能！会焕然一新的，相信我。你会上杂志，上电视。”

我没有回答。

“嘿，好了！”她朝我走了几步。“打起精神来。你不是还生我的气吧？在下面我们不是搭档得很好吗？我还要告诉你，从今以后我就是你的搭档。你是个天才，我来助你一臂之力。”

“行不通的，琳迪。”我摇摇头。“行不通的。”

“谁说行不通。我去找人，能帮你大忙的人。”

我仍旧摇头。“我很感激。可是没有用。行不通的。从来就行不通。我不应该听布拉德利的。”

“嘿，好了。没错，我不再是托尼的妻子了，可我在城里还有很多好朋友。”

“这我知道，琳迪。可是没有用。是这样的，是布拉德利，我的经纪人，说动我来做手术的。我真是个白痴，听了他的话，可我没办法。我无计可施了，而他想出了这么套理论。他说是我妻子海伦想出了这个计划。她不是真的离开我。不是，这只是她计划的一部分。她那么做都是为了我，为了让我能做这个手术。绷带拆掉以后，我有了张新面孔，她就会回来，一切就又会好起来。布拉德利这么说的。他说的时候我就不相信，可我能怎么样呢？至少还有希望。布拉德利利用了这个，他利用了这个，他就是这样，你知道。他是个卑鄙小人，整天只想着生意，还有什么大腕。他怎么会关心她会不会回来？”

我不说了，琳迪也没有出声。过了好一会儿，她说道：

“听着，亲爱的，听着。我希望你妻子回来。真的。可如果她不回来，你也应该向前看。她也许是个好人，可是生活不单单只是爱一个人。你得振作起来，史蒂夫。像你这样的人，你们不属于普通人一类的。看看我。绷带拆掉以后，我会回到二十年前吗？我不知道。而且我已经很久没有在男人们之间周旋了。可我还是要去，去试一试。”她走过来，推了推我的肩膀。“嘿，你只是累了。睡一觉就会

感觉好多了。听着，鲍里斯是最棒的。他会搞定的，我们俩都是。你瞧着吧。”

我把杯子放到桌子上，站起来。“我想你说得对。就像你说的，鲍里斯是最棒的。而且在下面我们搭档得很好。”

“在下面我们搭档得很好。”

我往前把手搭在她的肩上，亲了亲她两个缠着绷带的脸颊，说：“你自己也好好睡一觉。我很快会再过来，我们再来下棋。”

可是那天早上以后，我们很少再见面。事后想想，那天晚上我说了什么话本应该道歉，或至少是给个解释的。可是那时，回到她房间的时候，我们在沙发上大笑的时候，似乎没有必要，甚至是不应该旧事重提。那天早上道别的时候，我以为我们俩都已经不再想那件事了。即便如此，我已经见识了琳迪的反复无常。没准后来她回想起来，又生我的气了。谁知道？总之，我以为那天她会打电话给我，可是没有，第二天也没有。相反，透过墙壁，我听见托尼·加德纳的唱片高声播放着，一张接一张。

当我终于又过去的时候，大概是四天以后，她欢迎我，但有点冷淡。和第一次一样，她侃侃而谈她的名人朋友——虽然没有一个跟帮助我的事业有关，可是我不介意。我们下了棋，可是她的电话响个不停，她老得去卧室接电话。

后来，大前天晚上，她过来敲门说她要离开酒店了。鲍里斯对她的情况很满意，同意她回家拆绷带。我们友好地道别，可是似乎我们真正的道别已经说过了，就在那次大冒险过后的早上，当我上前亲吻她的两个脸颊的时候。

这就是琳迪·加德纳住在我隔壁的故事。我祝她顺利。至于我，我还要六天才能拆绷带，还要很久才能吹萨克斯。可现在我已经习惯这种生活了，我安心地过着每一天。昨天我接到海伦的电话，问我怎么样了。当我告诉她我认识了琳迪·加德纳时，她十分震惊。

“她还没再婚吗？”她问。当我把事情说给她听，她说：“哦，好吧。我一定是把她跟什么人混起来了，她叫什么名字来着。”

我们尽谈些无关紧要的事——她看了什么电视，她的朋友带着孩子顺道去看望她。接着她说普伦德加斯特向我问好，她说这句话的时

候语气明显变紧张了。我差点要说：“喂？我是不是听见你说情人的名字时没好气？”可是没有。我只说向他问声好，她没有再提起他。也有可能是我自己想象出来的。说不定她是希望我感激一下他。

她准备挂机的时候，我用夫妻间打完电话时那种快速、例行公事的语气说：“我爱你。”几秒钟的沉默，然后她也用同样例行公事的语气说“我也爱你”，就挂了。天知道她什么意思。我想如今我没什么可做的了，只能等着拆绷带。然后呢？也许琳迪说得对。也许像她说的，我应该向前看，生活确实不单单只是爱一个人。也许这次真的是我的转折点，我的明星梦不远了。也许她说得对。

大提琴手

这是午饭后我们第三次演奏《教父》了，我扫视了一下坐在广场上的游客，想看看大概有多少是听过之前一次的。经典的歌曲人们不介意多听一遍，但不能太频繁，不然他们就会怀疑你是不是没有其他节目了。每年到了这个时候，重复一些曲目通常没什么问题。渐起的秋风和贵得离谱的咖啡总是让客人换了一批又一批。总之，这就是为什么我会去注意广场上的面孔，意外地发现了蒂博尔。

他正挥舞着手臂，一开始我以为他是在跟我们挥手，后来发现他是在招呼服务生。他看上去比以前老，还胖了些，但不难认出来。我用胳膊肘轻轻地推了推身边拉手风琴的费边，摆头示意他注意那个年轻人，因为当时我没法从萨克斯上腾出手来指给他看。就在这时，当我环顾乐队时，突然间发现：我们认识蒂博尔的那年夏天，当时在乐队里的那群人就只剩下我和费边了。

没错，那是七年前的事了，可我还是感到不小的震撼。像这样天天在一起演出，渐渐地你会把乐队当作家，把乐队里的其他成员当作你的兄弟。当时不时有人离开的时候，你就会想他们会一直保持联系，从威尼斯、伦敦或其他地方寄明信片回来，抑或是寄一张目前所在乐队的照片——就像给老家写信一样。因此想到以前的乐队就剩我们两个人，不禁令人感慨世事无常。今日的知己明日就变成失去联络的陌路人，分散在欧洲各地，在你永远不会去的广场和咖啡馆里演奏着《教父》或者《秋叶》。

这支曲子奏完了，费边狠狠地瞪了我一眼，怪我在他的“特别小节”推了他——算不上独奏，却是一段小提琴和单簧管难得停下来的时候，我的萨克斯以柔和的音符给他伴奏，由他的手风琴把持调子。我跟他解释，把蒂博尔指给他看，这会儿蒂博尔正在阳伞下搅动着咖啡。费边想了好一会儿才认出他来，说：

“啊，对了，那个拉大提琴的小子。不知道他是不是还跟那个美国女人在一起。”

“当然不在了，”我说。“你不记得了？事情那个时候就结束了。”

费边耸耸肩，把注意力放到他的乐谱上，不一会儿我们开始演奏下一首歌。

我很失望费边对蒂博尔的出现不怎么感兴趣，不过我想他跟其他人不一样，从来就不曾对这个年轻的大提琴手有特别的兴趣。是这样的，费边只是个在酒吧和咖啡厅里演出的乐手，不像詹卡洛，我们当时的小提琴手，或者欧内斯托，当时的贝司手，他们是受过专业训练的，所以对蒂博尔这样的人总是很感兴趣。也许是有一点点的嫉妒在里面——嫉妒蒂博尔受过顶级的音乐教育，嫉妒他还有大好的前途。但平心而论，我觉得他们只是想保护像蒂博尔这样的人，给他们一些帮助，甚至让他们对未来做好准备，这样，当事情不尽人意的时候，他们就不会太接受不了。

七年前的那个夏天异常炎热，即便在这个城市有时也感觉像是在亚得里亚海。我们要在室外演出四个多月——在咖啡店的遮阳篷底下，面对着广场和所有的桌子——告诉你吧，干这活儿热得不得了，就算有两三台电扇在你旁边呼呼地吹。可是这倒带来了好生意，游客熙熙攘攘，很多是从德国和奥地利来的。本地的居民也跑到沙滩上来乘凉。那年夏天我们还开始留意到俄国人。如今看见俄国游客不稀奇，他们和其他游客没什么两样。可当时俄国人还很罕见，让人不禁停下来看几眼。他们穿着古怪，像学校里新来的小孩子一般不自在。我们第一次见到蒂博尔是在幕间休息的时候，我们在一旁咖啡馆为我们准备的一张桌子旁休息喝饮料。他就坐在旁边，不停地起来摆弄琴箱，不让太阳照到。

“瞧他，”詹卡洛说。“俄国来的穷音乐学生。他在这儿做什么呢？打算把所有的钱都扔在中央广场的咖啡上吗？”

“准是个傻瓜，”欧内斯托说。“但是个浪漫的傻瓜。为了在广场上坐一下午宁可饿肚子。”

他瘦瘦的，浅褐色头发，戴着一副老土的厚框眼镜，活像只熊猫。他每天都来，我不记得究竟是怎么起的头，只记得过了一段时间我们开始在幕间休息时和他坐在一起聊天。有时他在我们晚上演出的时候过来，演出结束以后我们会把他叫来，请他喝杯酒，或者吃烤面包片什么的。

不久我们就知道了蒂博尔不是俄国人，是匈牙利人；他的实际年龄要比长相大一些，他在伦敦的皇家音乐学院学习过，然后在维也纳待了两年，师从奥列格·彼得罗维奇。经过一开始痛苦的适应期后，

他学会了应付大师出了名的坏脾气，信心满满地离开维也纳——应邀到欧洲一些不大、但是很有名的地方演出。可是后来由于演出市场不景气，音乐会逐渐被取消；他开始被迫演奏一些他讨厌的音乐；住的地方不是贵就是脏。

于是乎我们这里精心组织的文化艺术节——那年夏天他正是为此而来——就成了他最需要的助推器。当皇家学院的一个老朋友愿意夏天把运河旁的一间公寓借给他时，他毫不犹豫就答应了。他说他很喜欢我们的城市，可是钱永远是个问题，虽然他偶尔有些演出，但现在他不得不好好考虑下一步怎么走了。

听说了蒂博尔的烦恼以后不久，詹卡洛和欧内斯托决定：我们应该为他做些事情。就这样蒂博尔见到了阿姆斯特丹来的考夫曼先生，詹卡洛的一个远房亲戚，在酒店界有点关系。

我仍然清楚地记得那个晚上。那时还是初夏，考夫曼先生、詹卡洛、欧内斯托，还有乐队里其他所有的人，我们坐在咖啡馆的里屋，听蒂博尔拉琴。年轻人一定是知道这是考夫曼先生的试听，所以那天晚上表演得特别卖力，现在回想起来真是有意思。他显然很感激我们，当考夫曼先生答应回阿姆斯特丹以后会尽力帮助他的时候，他的喜悦之情溢于言表。大家说那年夏天蒂博尔开始走下坡路，说他头脑发热、不知好歹，说都是因为那个美国女人，咳，也许不无道理。

一天，蒂博尔喝着第一杯咖啡，注意到了那个女人。那时广场上还挺凉快——早上大部分时候咖啡馆的尽头都照不到太阳——洒过水的石块路面还湿湿的。蒂博尔没有吃早饭，所以眼红地看着隔壁的女人点了好几种混合果汁，后来又要了一盘蒸贻贝——肯定是一时兴起点的，因为那时还不到十点。他隐约觉得那女的也在偷偷看他，可他没有放在心上。

“她长得不错，甚至算得上漂亮，”那时蒂博尔这么对我们说。
“可你们瞧，她比我大十、十五岁。所以我干吗要胡思乱想呢？”

不久蒂博尔就把她给忘了，准备回去，在邻居回家吃午饭、开起收音机前练两个小时琴。突然那女的站到他面前。

女人笑嘻嘻地看着他，那样子好像他们认识似的。只不过蒂博尔天性害羞，才没有跟她打招呼。女人把一只手搭到他的肩上，像是在原谅一个考试不及格的学生，说：

“几天前我看了你的独奏会。在圣洛伦佐。”

“谢谢，”他答道，但心里知道自己的回答傻乎乎的。看见那女的还是低头朝着他笑，他又说道：“哦，是的，圣洛伦佐教堂。没错。我确实在那里演出过。”

那女的笑了一声，突然在他面前坐了下来。“说得好像你最近演出很多似的，”女人略带讥讽地说道。

“如果您这么觉得，恐怕我给了您错误的印象。您看的那场独奏会是我最近两个月唯一的一次演出。”

“可是你才刚开始，”女的说。“有演出就是好事。而且那天观众不少。”

“观众不少？那天才二十四个人。”

“那是下午。下午的独奏会能有那些人算不错了。”

“我不应该抱怨。可是观众实在不多。都是些没有其他事可做的游客。”

“哦！别这么瞧不起人。毕竟我在那里。我也是游客之一。”蒂博尔脸红了——因为他无意冒犯——这时那女的拍了拍他的手臂，微笑着说道：“你才刚开始。别在意有多少观众。你不是为了这个演出的。”

“哦？若不是为了观众，那我为了什么演出呢？”

“我不是这个意思。我想说的是在你事业的这个阶段，二十个观众还是两百个观众，没有关系。为什么？因为你行！”

“我行？”

“没错。你行。你有……这个潜力。”

蒂博尔差点儿很没礼貌地笑出声来。他不怪那女的，更多的是怪他自己。他本以为对方会说“天赋”，或至少是“才能”，可马上转念想到：他希望对方这么评价自己是多么的愚蠢。然而那女的继续说道：

“现阶段，你要做的是等有人来听见你的音乐。这个人很可能就在周二那天的那间屋子里，在那二十个人里面……”

“是二十四个人，不包括组织者……”

“二十四，随便。我的意思是目前观众的人数不重要。重要的是那一个人。”

“您是指唱片公司的？”

“唱片公司？哦，不，不是。用不着操心那个。不，我指能挖掘你潜力的人。听了你的音乐，知道你不是又一个训练有素的平庸之才的人。知道虽然你现在还只是一枚茧，但只要些许帮助，就可以破茧成蝶。”

“我懂您的意思了。您是不是碰巧就是那个人？”

“哦，拜托！我看得出来你是个自尊心很强的年轻人，可我不觉得会经常有导师主动来找你。至少不是我这个级别的。”

这时，蒂博尔突然意识到自己可能在犯一个大错。他仔细端详着那个女人的脸。那女的已把墨镜摘下，她的脸温柔友善，但带着失望，甚至是些许愤怒。蒂博尔直盯着她看，脑子里拼命在想她是谁，但最后他只能说道：

“很抱歉。您大概是位著名的音乐家？”

“我叫埃洛伊丝·麦科马克，”她微笑着说道，伸出一只手来。可惜这个名字对蒂博尔来说毫无意义，他不知该如何是好。他的第一反应是假装惊讶，他说：“真的。太惊讶了。”可他马上就振作起来，知道这种谎话既不诚实，而且几秒钟内就会被揭穿的，那样更加尴尬。于是他坐直了身子，说道：

“麦科马克小姐，很荣幸见到您。我知道您一定会觉得不可思议，然而就是这样，我还年轻，而且是在冷战时期的东欧、在铁幕下长大的，很多西欧人家喻户晓的电影明星和政治人物，我至今还一无所知。所以请您原谅，我并不知道您是谁。”

“呃……真是诚实可嘉。”虽然她嘴上这么说，但显然觉得受到了冒犯，没有了之前的热情。两人尴尬地沉默了片刻，蒂博尔接着说道：

“您是著名音乐家，没错吧？”

她点点头，目光游移到广场上。

“我再次向您道歉，”蒂博尔说。“像您这样的人会来看我的演出真是我的荣幸。请问您演奏什么乐器？”

“和你一样，”那女的很快地说道。“大提琴。所以我才会进去听。即便是那天那种不起眼的小音乐会，我也忍不住要去听，不能走开。我想我有一种使命感。”

“使命感？”

“我不知道还有别的什么叫法。我希望每个大提琴手都能拉好琴。拉出优美的琴。他们的演奏方法常常被误导了。”

“抱歉，是只有我们大提琴手犯有这个毛病，还是指所有的音乐家？”

“其他乐器可能也有。但我是一个大提琴手，所以我也听其他大提琴手的。当我听出毛病的时候……你瞧，有一次，我看见一群年轻人在科雷尔博物馆的大厅演奏，大家都从他们身边匆匆走过去，我却停下来听他们演奏。我极力控制住自己没有走到他们面前去跟他们说。”

“他们拉错了？”

“不算是。但……咳，就是没有。就是少了。不过你瞧，我要求太高了。我知道我不应该要求每个人都达到我给自己定的水平。我想他们还只是音乐学院的学生。”

那女的第一次靠到椅背上，看着在中央喷泉泼水嬉闹的孩子们。最后蒂博尔打破沉默，说道：

“星期二那天您大概也有这种冲动吧。想过来找我把您的意见说出来。”

她微笑了一下，但马上变得非常严肃。“没错，”她说道。“我确实想。因为当我听你演奏的时候，我听见了以前的我。恕我直言，你现在的路子不对。当我听你演奏的时候，我很想帮你走上正轨。宜早不宜迟。”

“我必须声明，我接受过奥列格·彼得罗维奇的指导。”蒂博尔平静地说道，等着对方的反应。他惊奇地看见那女的强忍着没笑出来。

“彼得罗维奇，是，”对方说道。“彼得罗维奇在他的鼎盛时期是一位非常令人尊敬的音乐家。我也知道在他的学生心里，他一定仍然是一位重要的人物。可是对我们很多人来说，如今他的想法，他那整套方法……”她摇摇头，两手一摊。一时间蒂博尔气得说不出话

来，只是瞪着她。那女的又一次把一只手搭在他的胳膊上，说：“我说得够多了。我没有权利。我不再打扰你了。”

她站了起来，这个动作平息了蒂博尔的怒火；蒂博尔天生一副好脾气，从不会对别人耿耿于怀。再者，那女人刚才说的关于他旧日老师的那番话触到了他内心深处一根隐隐作痛的心弦——一些他一直不敢面对的想法。因此，当蒂博尔抬头看着那女人时，他脸上更多的是迷惑。

“瞧，”那女的说道，“我这么说你一定很生气。可我想帮你。要是你决定想谈一谈，我就住在那里。怡东酒店。”

这家全城最好的酒店坐落在广场的另一头，与咖啡店相对。那女的微笑着指给蒂博尔看，然后迈步朝酒店走去。蒂博尔一直看着她，快到中央喷泉时，那女的突然转过身来，惊起一群鸽子。她朝蒂博尔挥挥手才继续往前走。

接下来的两天，这次会面在蒂博尔的脑海里挥之不去。他又想起当他那么自豪地说出彼得罗维奇的名字时她嘴角的冷笑，心里的怒火又烧了起来。回想那时的情景，蒂博尔知道他并不是为他旧日的老师感到生气，而是他已经习惯认为彼得罗维奇这个名字一定会产生效果，他可以依靠彼得罗维奇这个名字得到关注和尊敬：换句话说，他把这个名字当作向世人炫耀的证书。让他感到如此不安的是这个证书也许并不像他原来想的那么有分量。

他还念念不忘那女的临别时的邀请。当他坐在广场上时，他的视线不时游移到广场的另一端，怡东酒店的大门口，出租车和豪华轿车在门口不停地迎来送往。

终于，那次会面后的第三天，蒂博尔穿过广场，走进酒店的大理石大堂，请前台拨打那女人的分机号。前台拨通电话，问蒂博尔名字，说了几句以后就把话筒递给他。

“对不起，”蒂博尔听见那女人的声音说。“那天我忘了问你的名字，一下子没想起来你是谁。可我当然没有忘记你。其实我一直在想你。我有好多话想对你说。但是要知道，我们得把这事给做对了。你带着琴吗？没有，当然没有了。你一个小时以后再过来吧，一个小时整，到时把琴带上。我在这里等你。”

当蒂博尔带着乐器回到怡东酒店时，前台马上把电梯指给他看，告诉他麦科马克小姐在等他。

想到在大下午进她的房间，蒂博尔觉得很不好意思，好在麦科马克小姐的房间是一间大套房，卧室锁着，看不见。高大的落地窗外装有两扇木质遮阳板，此时打开着，所以蕾丝窗帘随风摇摆。蒂博尔发现走到阳台上就可以俯视广场。房间里粗糙的石墙和深色的木地板，感觉非常朴素，只有花、垫子和古典式家具作为装饰。相反，女主人穿着T恤衫、田径裤和运动鞋，像刚跑步回来。她什么招待也没有——没有茶也没有咖啡——就说：

“拉琴给我听。拉些你在独奏会上拉的曲子。”

她指了指端正地摆放在屋子中央的一把光亮的直椅，蒂博尔坐下来，拿出琴。那女的则在一扇大窗户前坐下，整个人侧对着蒂博尔，让人感觉不太自在。蒂博尔调音的时候，那女的一直都看着窗外。他开始拉了，那女的姿势也没有改变。第一支曲子拉完了，女人不发一言，于是他紧接着演奏下一首，然后又是一首。半个小时过去了，然后一个小时过去了。昏暗的房间、简陋的音效、飘动的蕾丝窗帘掩映下的午后阳光、远远传来的广场上的嘈杂声，但最主要的是那个女人的存在，使他的音符有了新的深度和含义。快一小时的时候，蒂博尔深信他的表现超出了对方的预期。然而当他演奏完最后一曲时，两个人默默地坐了好一会儿，那女的才终于转向他，说道：

听了她的话，蒂博尔真想马上收拾东西走人。可是另一种本能——也许仅仅是好奇，也许是其他更深层次的东西——压过了他的自尊心，迫使他开始重新演奏那女的叫他拉的曲子。他刚拉了几小节，那女的就叫他停下来，开始讲。蒂博尔再次想起身走人。出于礼貌，他决定对这自来的指导最多再忍五分钟。可是他发现自己没有离开，多待了一会儿，然后又多待了一会儿。他又拉了几小节，那女的又接着说。她的话一开始总是让人觉得狂妄又很抽象，但当他试着把她的意思表现在音乐里的时候，他发现效果惊人。就这样，不知不觉又一个小时过去了。

“我突然间看见了什么东西，”蒂博尔这么跟我们说。“一座我没进去过的花园。就在那里，在远处。有东西挡着我的去路。可第一次有这么一个花园。一个我从来没见过的花园。”

当他终于离开酒店，穿过广场来到咖啡馆的时候，太阳已经快落山了。他犒赏了自己一份搅奶油杏仁蛋糕，喜悦之情一览无余。

接下来的几天，蒂博尔每天下午都到酒店去，回来的时候，虽不像第一次那样有茅塞顿开之感，但至少是精神焕发、信心满满。麦科马克小姐的评论越来越大胆，旁观者（若有这么个旁观者的话）也许会觉得她的话太过分了，可是现在当她打断他的演奏时，蒂博尔再也不会这样想了。如今他害怕的是麦科马克小姐什么时候会离开这个城市。这个问题开始在他心里萦绕，让他睡不好觉，在每一次愉快的交流过后，当他走出酒店、走进广场时，在他心头投下一层阴影。可是每次蒂博尔试探地问她的时候，她的回答总是含含糊糊，不能让蒂博尔安心。“哦，等天凉到我受不了的时候，”一次她这么说道。还有一次：“我想我会一直待到我觉得烦为止。”

“可她自己呢？”我们一直问他。“她的琴拉得怎么样？”

我们第一次问他这个问题的时候，蒂博尔并没有好好地回答我们，只是说“她一开始就跟我说她是一个大师”之类的话，然后就把话题转到别的地方去了。可我们揪着问题不放，他只好叹了口气，跟我们解释。

事实是，从第一次指导开始，蒂博尔就想听麦科马克小姐演奏，可是不好意思开口。他看了看麦科马克小姐的房间，没有大提琴的影子，心里有些生疑。可毕竟度假时没把琴带着是很正常的。而且，也有可能确有一把琴——可能是租来的——在关着的卧室的门后。

然而随着他一次次来到这里练琴，这种疑问越来越强烈。蒂博尔努力不去想这些，因为他原本对他们的会面还有所保留，现在统统没有了。麦科马克小姐只听不拉，似乎给了蒂博尔想象的空间。在不去麦科马克小姐那里的时间里，蒂博尔发觉自己常常在脑子里准备着曲子，想象着她会怎么评论，想象着她摇头、皱眉，或者肯定地点点头。可最让人开心的还数看到她陶醉在自己的音乐里，闭着眼睛，手跟着他假装拉起来。然而，他心里的疑问一直挥之不去。一天，他走进麦科马克小姐的套房，卧室的门半掩着。他看见房间里的石墙、一张中世纪风格的四柱床，可没有大提琴的影子。一个大师就算是在度

假，也这么久不碰她的乐器吗？可蒂博尔同样把这个问题赶出了脑海。

夏日一天天过去，渐渐地，他们练习完了以后还要到咖啡厅里来继续交谈。麦科马克小姐给他买咖啡，买蛋糕，或者三明治。如今他们不仅仅谈论音乐——虽然每每都会回到音乐上来。比如，麦科马克小姐会问蒂博尔与他在维也纳相好的德国女孩的事。

“可您要知道，她不是我的女朋友，”蒂博尔说。“我们从没正式交往。”

“你的意思是你们从来没有亲密的肢体接触？这并不代表你不爱她。”

“不，麦科马克小姐，不是的。我当然喜欢她。可是我们没有相恋。”

“可是昨天你拉拉赫玛尼诺夫的时候，你想起了一段感情。是爱，罗曼蒂克的爱。”

“不，太荒谬了。我们是好朋友，但不是恋人。”

“但是你拉那一段的时候就像在回忆一段恋情。你还这么年轻就已经知道抛弃、离别。所以你会那样演奏第三乐章。大多数大提琴手演奏那一段时都是喜悦的。但是在你看来，那不是喜悦，而是追忆一去不复返的快乐时光。”

他们的交谈就像这样子。蒂博尔也很想回问她的事。可是就像他跟着彼得罗维奇学习的时候，他不敢问老师一个私人问题一样，如今他也没有勇气问她的私事。蒂博尔只是问些她无意中提到的小事——她现在怎么会住在俄勒冈州的波特兰，三年前她怎么从波士顿搬到那里，为什么她“因为有不好的回忆”而讨厌巴黎——但从不深究。

如今麦科马克小姐的笑容比他们刚认识的时候自然得多。她还养成了走出酒店时挽着蒂博尔的手走过广场的习惯。我们就是这样开始注意他们的，奇怪的一对，男的长相比实际年龄年轻许多，女的有时像个母亲，有时又像个“风骚的女演员”（欧内斯托语）。认识蒂博尔之前，我们总爱拿他们俩来嚼舌根。看见他们手挽着手从我们面前信步走过，我们交换一下眼神，说道：“你们觉得呢？他们好上了吧？”可是乐完了以后，我们还是耸耸肩，承认不像：他们没有恋人

的感觉。认识蒂博尔以后，听了他给我们讲他每天下午在她套房里的事，我们就不再消遣他，或者拿他开玩笑。

一天下午，他们坐在广场上喝着咖啡、吃着蛋糕，她讲起了一个想跟她结婚的男子。那人名叫彼得·亨德森，在俄勒冈州做高尔夫器材生意，做得很成功。他聪明、亲切，受到邻里的爱戴。他比埃洛伊丝大六岁，但这点年龄差不算大。他跟前妻生有两个孩子，但事情已经妥善解决了。

“现在你知道我在这里干什么了吧，”她说道，不安地笑了笑，蒂博尔还没见过她这样子笑。“我在躲他。彼得不知道我在哪里。我想我很残忍。上周二我给他打了电话，告诉他我在意大利，但没说在哪个城市。他很生我的气，我想他有权生气。”

“这么说，”蒂博尔说道。“这个夏天你在考虑你的未来。”

“不算是。我只是在躲着他。”

“您不喜欢他？”

她耸耸肩。“他是个好人。再说，我也没其他什么人可选。”

“这个彼得。他喜欢音乐吗？”

“哦……在我现在住的地方，他当然算是喜欢音乐的。至少他去听音乐会。然后到餐厅吃饭的时候，他会就刚刚听的东西大加赞美。所以我想他是喜欢音乐的。”

“可是他……欣赏您吗？”

“他知道跟一个音乐大师一起生活不容易。”她叹了口气。“我一辈子都有这个问题。你也一样。可是你和我，我们别无选择。我们有我们的路要走。”

她没有再提起彼得。可是从那以后，他们的关系又加深了一些。当他演奏完、她陷入沉思的时候，当他们一起坐在广场上，她看着旁边的阳伞默不做声的时候，蒂博尔一点儿也不会觉得不自在。他知道麦科马克小姐不是不理睬他，反而是感谢有他在。

一天下午，蒂博尔拉完一曲后，麦科马克小姐叫他把接近尾声的一个八小节再拉一遍。他照做了，然后看见麦科马克小姐仍旧微微地皱着眉。

“拉的不是我们，”她摇摇头，说。麦科马克小姐和平常一样坐在落地窗前侧对着蒂博尔。“其他部分都很好。剩下的全部都是我们。可是这一小段……”她轻轻地哆嗦了一下。

他用不同的方法又演奏了一遍，但其实并不清楚他到底应该怎么拉，所以看见麦科马克小姐再次摇头他不奇怪。

“请原谅，”蒂博尔说道。“请您说得明白一点。我不明白您说的‘不是我们’是什么意思。”

“你是要我示范给你看吗？你是这意思吗？”

她的语气平静，转过脸来看着蒂博尔，蒂博尔感到气氛紧张。她目不转睛地看着他，近乎挑战，等着他回答。

最后，蒂博尔说道：“不是，我再试一次。”

“可你在想我为什么不示范给你看，对不对？为什么不借你的琴来说明我的意思。”

“没有……”蒂博尔摇摇头，努力装作若无其事的样子。“没有。我觉得现在这样很好。您口述，我拉琴。这样我才不是在模仿、模仿、模仿。您的话给我打开了一扇扇窗子。要是您来拉，窗子就不会打开。我就只是在模仿。”

麦科马克小姐想了想，说：“也许你说得对。好吧，我尽量解释得明白一点。”

接下来的几分钟，麦科马克小姐跟他解释乐曲的尾声与桥段的差别。然后蒂博尔把那一小段又拉了一遍，麦科马克小姐笑了笑，赞许地点点头。

然而这个小插曲以后，他们的下午时光就蒙上了一层阴影。也许阴影一直都在，只不过现在不小心从瓶子里跑出来，萦绕着他们。又有一次，他们坐在广场上，蒂博尔说起他的大提琴的前一任主人怎么在苏联时代用几条美国牛仔裤换得这把琴。故事讲完以后，麦科马克小姐似笑非笑地看着他，说：

“这是把好琴。声音不错。可我碰都没碰过，说不准。”

蒂博尔知道她又在试图闯入那个领域，马上把目光转向别处，说道：

“它不适合像您这种地位的人。就算是我，现在也感觉不太够用了。”

蒂博尔发现他再也不能无忧无虑地与麦科马克小姐交谈了。他害怕麦科马克小姐重新提起这件事，又回到那里。即便是在他们交谈甚欢的时候，蒂博尔大脑的一部分也在提防着，她一想从别的突破口转到那里去，蒂博尔马上把门关上。即便如此，蒂博尔也不是每一次都能把话题转开，于是当她说：“哦，要是我能示范给你看就容易多了！”之类的话时，他只能装作没听见。

九月下旬——风渐渐转凉——詹卡洛接到考夫曼先生从阿姆斯特丹打来的电话：在市中心的一家五星级饭店里一支小型室内乐队需要一个**大提琴手。乐队在一个俯瞰餐厅的音乐席上演奏，一周演出四次。除了演出，乐手们在酒店里还有其他“与音乐无关的、轻松的工作”，包食宿。考夫曼先生马上想到蒂博尔，把空缺给他留着。我们立即把这个消息告诉蒂博尔——就在考夫曼先生打来电话的当晚，在咖啡馆里——我想大家都被蒂博尔的冷淡反应吓了一跳。与之前我们安排考夫曼先生对他进行“试听”时判若两人。尤其是詹卡洛非常生气。

“你还有什么好考虑的？”他质问蒂博尔。“你想要什么样儿的？卡内基音乐厅？”

“我不是不领情。可我总得考虑一下。给在吃饭聊天的人演奏，还有酒店的其他工作，是不是真的适合我？”

詹卡洛是个容易冲动的人，我们大家赶紧拦住他，不让他抓住蒂博尔的衣服，冲他大嚷。我们当中的一些人帮蒂博尔说话，说毕竟这是他自己的事，他没有义务接受他觉得不合适的工作。事情终于平静下来，这时蒂博尔也说这份工作若作为一份临时工作，也是有诸多优点的。他冷冷地指出，这座城市过了旅游旺季就是一潭死水，阿姆斯特丹好歹是个文化中心。

“我会好好考虑的，”最后他说道。“麻烦你转告考夫曼先生，我会在三天之内给他答复。”

詹卡洛对这个结果一点儿都不满意——他原本期望蒂博尔会对他感恩戴德——可他还是去给考夫曼先生打了电话。整个晚上，没有人

提起埃洛伊丝·麦科马克，然而大家都清楚蒂博尔会说那些话都是因为她。

“那个女人把他变成了一个不知天高地厚的小笨蛋，”蒂博尔离开以后欧内斯托说。“让他就这副德性去阿姆斯特丹吧。很快他就会尝到苦头了。”

蒂博尔从未跟埃洛伊丝提起考夫曼先生的试听。他好几次想把事情说出来，却总是开不了口。他们的友谊越深，蒂博尔就越觉得若他接受了这份工作就像是背叛了埃洛伊丝。因此蒂博尔自然不会把事情的最新进展与埃洛伊丝商量，甚至都没有让她知道。可是蒂博尔从来就不善于隐藏秘密，他决定不让埃洛伊丝知道这件事，却发生了意想不到的事。

那天下午异常暖和。蒂博尔像往常一样来到酒店，开始把他准备的新曲子演奏给埃洛伊丝听。但是刚拉了三分钟，埃洛伊丝就叫他停下，说道：

“你有心事，你一进来我就看出来。我现在很了解你了，蒂博尔，我几乎从你敲门的声音就能听出来。听你拉琴以后，我更肯定了。没用的，你瞒不过我。”

蒂博尔沮丧地放下琴弓，正准备和盘托出时，埃洛伊丝举起一只手，说道：

“这件事我们逃避不了。你一直在回避这个问题，没用的。我想谈一谈。这一个星期以来，我一直想谈一谈。”

“真的？”蒂博尔惊讶地看着她。

“对，”她说道，并且把椅子转过来，第一次正对着蒂博尔。
“我从没有要骗你，蒂博尔。过去这几周，我很不好受，你是这么好的一个朋友。若你觉得我是个无耻的骗子，我会非常非常难过的。不，求你，别再拦着我了。我要说出来。如果现在你把琴给我，叫我拉，我只能说不行，我拉不了。不是因为那把琴不好，不是的。要是你现在觉得我是一个骗子、我是一个冒牌货，那我要告诉你，你错了。看看我们一起取得的成绩。难道还不足以证明我是货真价实的？没错，我跟你说是个大师。好吧，我来解释一下我这么说的意思。我天生拥有非常特殊的天赋，像你一样。你和我，我们拥有其他大多数大提琴手没有的东西，这种东西不管他们怎么努力练习，都没

法得到。我在教堂里第一次听你演出时，就在你身上看见了这种东西。而你一定也从哪里看出我身上的这种东西，所以你当初才会决定到酒店来找我。

“像我们这种人不多，蒂博尔，而我们认识了彼此。就算我还没学会拉琴，又有什么关系。你得明白，我确实是一个大师。只是我的才能还没得到挖掘。你也一样，你的才能还没有被完全挖掘出来。这就是我这几周以来一直在做的事情，帮你剥去外面的表层。但是我从没有要骗你。百分之九十九的大提琴手表层下面没东西了，没有才能可挖。所以我们这类人应该互相帮助。当我们在一个拥挤的广场，还是别的什么地方发现对方时，应该主动伸出援手，因为像我们这样的人太少了。”

蒂博尔发现她的眼睛里噙着泪水，但声音却始终平稳。如今她不说话了，再次把脸转开。

“这么说您相信自己将来会成为一名特别的大提琴演奏家，”片刻的沉默之后蒂博尔说道。“一位大师。我们其他人，埃洛伊丝小姐，按您的话说，我们得鼓起勇气挖掘自己，却始终不确定能挖到什么。而您，您不在乎什么挖掘。您什么都不做。但您很肯定自己是个大师……”

“请别生气。我知道我说的像疯话。可我说的是真的，事实就是如此。我母亲在我很小的时候就发现了我的天赋。我至少很感激她这一点。可是她给我找的那些老师，我四岁的那个，七岁的，十一岁的，统统不好。妈妈不知道，可我知道。虽然我还只是个孩子，可是我有这种直觉。我知道我得保护我的天赋，不让别人给毁了，不管这些人多么好心。于是我把这些人统统赶走了。你也一样，蒂博尔。你的天赋很宝贵。”

“请原谅，”蒂博尔打断埃洛伊丝，但语气没有刚才那么冲了。“你是说你小时候拉过琴。可现在……”

“我从十一岁以后就再也没碰过琴了，从我向我母亲解释我不能跟罗斯先生学琴的那天起。她理解。她同意最好等等，先什么都别做。最重要的是不要破坏我的天赋。总有一天我的时机到。好吧，有时候我也觉得拖得太久了。我今年四十一了。可至少我没有破坏我与生俱来的那些东西。这些年来我遇到了多少自称能帮助我的老师，可是我把他们看透了。就算是他们，有时候也很难辨别出来，蒂博尔。这些人，他们太……太专业了，他们讲得头头是道，你听着，然

后就被骗了，以为，啊，终于有人能帮我了，他跟我们是一类。可后来你就知道他根本不是。这个时候你就得坚决地把自己关起来。记住，蒂博尔，宁可再等一等。有时候我也感到痛苦，我的才华还没被挖掘出来。可我也还没把它给毁了，这才是最重要的。”

蒂博尔终于把他准备的曲子拉了两首给麦科马克小姐听，但是两个人心情都不好，就早早结束了练习。他们来到广场上喝咖啡，很少说话，直到蒂博尔告诉麦科马克小姐他打算离开这里几天。他说他一直想到附近的乡村去走一走，所以给自己安排了一个短假。

“放个假好，”麦科马克小姐平静地说。“可别去太久。我们还有很多事要做。”

蒂博尔保证说他顶多一个星期就回来。可当他们分手的时候，麦科马克小姐的样子还是有些不安。

蒂博尔说他要离开不全是实话：他还什么都没准备。但是那天下午与埃洛伊丝道别以后，他回到家里，打了几通电话，最后在翁布里亚附近山区的一家青年旅馆订了一张床位。那天晚上他来咖啡馆看我们，同时告诉我们他准备去旅行——我们七嘴八舌地告诉他应该去哪里、应该看些什么——他还怯怯地请詹卡洛告诉考夫曼先生说愿意接受那份工作。

“不然我能怎么办？”他说。“等我回来就分文不剩了。”

蒂博尔在附近的乡村度过了一个不错的假期。他没有告诉我们多少旅行见闻，只说和几个徒步旅行的德国游客交了朋友，在山坡上的小饭馆多花了一些钱。他去了一个星期，回来以后明显精神了许多，但也急于想知道埃洛伊丝·麦科马克是不是还在这里。

那时游客已经逐渐变少，店里的服务生也把室外暖气搬了出来、放在餐桌旁。蒂博尔回来的那天下午就拿着琴，在跟平时一样的时间，来到怡东酒店。他高兴地发现埃洛伊丝不仅在等他，而且看得出来还在想念他。埃洛伊丝热情地欢迎他，就好像一般人激动的时候会拿一大堆吃的或者喝的招待客人一样，埃洛伊丝一把把蒂博尔推到他平时坐的那把椅子上，迫不及待地打开琴盒，说：“拉琴给我听！快点！快拉吧！”

他们在一起度过了一个愉快的下午。来之前蒂博尔还在担心在她“坦白”了以后，在他们上次那样分手了以后，事情会变成什么样。

但是所有的紧张好像都消失了，他们之间的气氛比以前更融洽了。即便是在他拉完一曲，埃洛伊丝闭着眼睛，开始长篇大论、尖刻地批评他的演奏的时候，他也不觉得生气，只希望自己尽可能地理解她的意思。第二天、第三天都一样：气氛轻松，有时还开开玩笑。蒂博尔觉得自己的琴从来没拉得这么好过。他们没有再提起他离开之前的那次谈话，埃洛伊丝也没有问起他在乡下的旅行。他们只谈论音乐。

到了他回来以后的第四天，接二连三的小意外——包括他房里马桶的蓄水池漏水了——害他没法准时到怡东酒店去。等他从咖啡馆走过去的时候，天已经开始暗了，服务生已经把小玻璃碗里的蜡烛点亮了，我们也已经演奏了两个晚餐的节目。他朝我们挥挥手，穿过广场朝酒店走去，因为背着琴，走起路来看上去一瘸一拐的。

蒂博尔注意到前台在打电话给埃洛伊丝之前稍稍犹豫了一下。埃洛伊丝打开门，热情地欢迎他，但感觉跟平时不太一样。不等蒂博尔开口，埃洛伊丝就很快地说道：

“蒂博尔，真高兴你来了。我正把你的事说给彼得听呢。没错，彼得终于找到我了！”说完，她朝屋里喊道，“彼得，他来了！蒂博尔来了。还带着琴！”

蒂博尔走进房间，看见一个穿着浅色开领短袖衬衫、身材高大、步履蹒跚、头发灰白的男人微笑着站了起来。彼得紧紧地握住蒂博尔的手说：“哦，我听说了你所有的事。埃洛伊丝肯定你将来会是个大明星。”

“彼得不肯放弃，”埃洛伊丝说。“我就知道他迟早会找到我的。”

“别想躲着我，”说着，彼得拉来一把椅子请蒂博尔坐下，从壁橱上的冰桶里给他倒了一杯香槟。“来吧，蒂博尔，为我们庆祝重逢。”

蒂博尔抿了一口酒，注意到彼得给他的椅子刚好是他平时坐的那把“琴椅”。埃洛伊丝不知哪里去了，只剩蒂博尔和彼得一面喝酒一面聊天。彼得很友善的样子，问了很多问题。他问蒂博尔是怎么在匈牙利那样的地方长大的。他刚到西欧来的时候有没有感到震撼？

“会乐器真好，”彼得说。“你真幸运。我也想学。可我想有点迟了。”

“哦，永远不会太迟，亨德森先生，”蒂博尔说。

“说得对。永不言迟。说太迟了永远只是借口。不，事实是，我是个大忙人，我对自己说我太忙了，没时间学法语，没时间学乐器，没时间读《战争与和平》等等我一直想做的事。埃洛伊丝小时候拉过琴，我想她跟你说了。”

“是，她说过。我知道她很有天赋。”

“哦，没错。认识她的人都看得出来。她有对音乐的敏感。她就应该学音乐。至于我，我只是个香蕉手。”他举起手，笑了。“我想弹钢琴，可这手怎么弹？倒是很适合挖土，我家祖祖辈辈就是干这个的。可那位女士”——他用拿着酒杯的手指了指房门——“她有对音乐的敏感。”

埃洛伊丝终于从房里出来了，穿着一件深色晚礼服，戴着满身珠宝。

“彼得，别烦蒂博尔了，”她说。“他对高尔夫不感兴趣。”

彼得伸出手，恳求地看着蒂博尔。“告诉我，蒂博尔。我跟你提起过高尔夫一个字吗？”

蒂博尔说他得走了；他看得出来他耽搁他们去吃晚饭了。他的话遭到了两人的反对，彼得说：

“看看我。我这打扮像要去吃饭吗？”

虽然蒂博尔觉得彼得这样穿就很得体，但他还是会意地笑了。彼得又说道：

“你得给我们拉点什么才能走。我听说了很多你的琴技。”

蒂博尔不知如何是好，打开琴盒正准备把琴拿出来，突然听见埃洛伊丝坚定地说道，语气跟刚刚不太一样：

“蒂博尔说得对。时间不早了。这里的饭店你不准时去的话，他们不会给你留着位置的。彼得，去换衣服吧。也许把脸也刮一下？我送蒂博尔出去。我想和他单独谈谈。”

电梯里，他们脉脉地相视而笑，但没有说话。他们走出酒店，发现广场上已经华灯初上。放暑假回来的当地孩子们有的在踢球，有的在喷泉边追逐嬉戏。夜晚的行人熙来攘往，我想我们的音乐应该传到了他们的耳朵里。

“咳，就是这样了，”她终于开口说道。“他找到了我，所以我想他应该得到我。”

“他很有魅力，”蒂博尔说。“那您要回美国去了？”

“我想过几天就会回去了吧。”

“您要结婚？”

“我想是吧。”一时间埃洛伊丝严肃地看着蒂博尔，但马上把脸转开了。“我想是吧，”她重复道。

“我衷心地祝您幸福。他是个好人。而且喜欢音乐。这点对您来说很重要。”

“是的，很重要。”

“刚才您换衣服的时候，我们不是在聊高尔夫，我们在聊学音乐。”

“哦，真的？他学还是我学？”

“都有。不过我想在俄勒冈波特兰没有多少人能教您。”

她笑了一声。“就像我说的，我们这类人不好过。”

“是，我明白。经过这几周我更加明白这个道理。”蒂博尔停顿了一下，接着说道，“埃洛伊丝小姐，我们道别之前我有件事情要告诉您。我很快就要去阿姆斯特丹了。我在那里的一家大酒店里找到了一份工作。”

“你要去当门卫？”

“不是。我要在酒店餐厅的小乐队里演出。在客人吃饭的时候提供娱乐。”

蒂博尔凝视着埃洛伊丝，看见她的眼睛里闪过一道火花，然后慢慢褪去。她一手搭在蒂博尔的手臂上，笑了。

“那祝你好运。”她停顿了一下，又补充道，“那些酒店里的客人有耳福了。”

“希望如此。”

一时间他们俩默默地站在那里，站在酒店前门的灯光照不到的地方，硕大的提琴立在他们中间。

“我也祝愿您与彼得先生过得幸福。”蒂博尔说。

“我也希望如此。”埃洛伊丝说道，又笑了笑。接着她亲了亲蒂博尔的脸颊，给了他一个匆匆的拥抱，说道：“保重。”

蒂博尔道了声谢，不等他反应过来，就只看见埃洛伊丝走进怡东酒店的背影。

不久之后蒂博尔就离开了这里。他最后一次跟我们喝酒时好好地感谢了詹卡洛和欧内斯托帮他找到这份工作，也感谢我们大家的友谊，但我不由得感觉他的态度有点冷淡。不只我，其他人也这么想，可是直性子的詹卡洛现在又站在蒂博尔一边，说他只是对人生的这下一步感到兴奋、紧张。

“兴奋？他怎么可能兴奋？”欧内斯托说。“整个夏天他都被别人叫做天才。到酒店工作是委屈了他。坐在这里跟我们聊天也是委屈了他。夏天刚到那会儿他还是个好孩子。可那女人对他做了那些事以后，我很高兴能看见他回来。”

我说过了，这是七年前的事了。詹卡洛、欧内斯托，当时乐队里的其他人，除了我和费边都走了。我很久没再想起我们这位年轻的匈牙利天才，直到那天偶然在广场上发现他。他没怎么变，只是胖了些，脖子粗了好一圈。他用手指头招呼服务生的动作——也许是我的想象——有些不耐烦，有些粗鲁，自然而然就有些愤恨。我这么说可能不公平，毕竟我只瞥了他几眼。但我还是觉得他似乎失去了年轻时的快活劲儿和以前认认真真的态度。你可能会说在这世上这不是什么坏事。

我本想过去跟他聊聊，可是等表演结束，他已经走了。据我所知，他只在广场上待了一个下午。他穿着西装——不是什么特别好的，普通西装而已——所以我猜他现在白天在哪里坐办公室。他可能是到附近办事，想起以前的时光，顺路到这里来一下，谁知道？要是他再到广场上来时我不在演出的话，我一定过去跟他聊聊。

\(1\) 本杰明·布里顿（1913—1976），英国著名作曲家。

浮世音乐家——代译后记

说到石黑一雄，中国读者大多会想到他是一名英籍日裔小说家，是“英国文坛移民三雄”之一，会想到他的那些获奖小说，想到那些发人深省的主题、简洁优雅的语言。石黑给人的感觉是一位温文尔雅的作家。很少人会想到他还是一个爵士乐迷（更多人知道村上春树是一个超级爵士乐迷），甚至算得上是半个音乐人。其实，音乐一直是石黑生活中的一个重要部分。

谁会把石黑跟大喊大叫的摇滚乐联系在一起呢？石黑的形象和作品很难让人想到他青少年时期曾经是个嬉皮，留着长发，带着吉他，背着背包在美国到处旅行，爱听流行音乐、爵士音乐。那时，他的梦想是当一名摇滚歌手，他不仅会弹吉他和钢琴，还寄了很多小样给唱片公司，当然都是石沉大海。直到二十八岁发表处女作获得成功，石黑才确定自己的才华在于写作，而不是搞音乐。但他也没有就此放弃或者远离音乐，虽然不嬉皮了，歌还可以照听，吉他还可以照弹。如今石黑家里就有很多的吉他。2007年，他还为爵士乐新星史黛西·肯特填写歌词，也算如愿以偿了。

书的标题很浪漫，故事发生的地点也很浪漫：水城威尼斯、优美的莫尔文山、好莱坞的豪华酒店等。可故事里的人和事一点儿也不浪漫。年过半百、风光不再的过气老歌手；连自己儿子都不搭理他们的瑞士老夫妇；人到中年仍一事无成的英语教师和萨克斯手；才能得不到挖掘、只能孤芳自赏的前“大提琴手”；遭遇婚姻危机的中年夫

妇；年轻有潜力但无处施展才能、对前途感到迷茫的大提琴手；一心想成为作曲家但处处碰壁的大学青年等。不管老的、年轻的，有钱的、没钱的，他们的生活都不如意，他们对生活都有“满腹牢骚”。

故事里的人都是音乐家或者音乐爱好者，但是故事的主题不限于音乐，仍是石黑一贯的对现代人的生存状态的反思：理想与现实的差距，满腹的才华得不到施展和认可，这些才华反而成了最折磨人的东西。在石黑的小说世界中，人物被庞大的社会机器所控制，无法掌握自己的命运，情感被压抑。《长日将尽》中盲目忠诚的管家、《莫失莫忘》中的克隆人皆是如此，成了环境的牺牲品。《小夜曲》比以前的作品都更接近普通人，也不因为篇幅减小而降低了深度。通过作者精心设计的人物对话和心理活动，读者能看出人物的悲剧是由外部环境原因和内部自身原因共同造成的。

书里反复出现一类人：郁郁不得志的打零工的餐厅乐队乐手（第一篇里的扬，第三篇里的瑞士夫妇，第五篇里的“我”和蒂博尔）。在浪漫的水城威尼斯，在风景如画的阿尔卑斯山脉，一般人都觉得在这种地方工作，而且是演奏音乐，太优美、太惬意了，可石黑偏偏不这么想。夏天热得要命，咖啡厅老板、经理不友善，队友今天来、明天去，“今日的知己明日就变成失去联络的陌路人”，为挣口饭吃，在食客们大快朵颐的时候演奏一些通俗歌曲娱乐大众，没有办法演奏自己喜欢的音乐。倒也不是说这份工作就这么坏，正如瑞士夫妇说的“我们干这行是因为我们相信音乐”，只是他们有更大、更远的理想和目标。餐厅乐队这个舞台对他们来说太小了。

第一篇讲述过气歌手托尼·加德纳为重返歌坛、重振事业决定与相爱的妻子离婚。夫妇二人来到蜜月之地威尼斯故地重游，托尼·加德纳心中充满感伤。怎样才算成功、幸福？是事业永远大红大紫，还是跟心爱的人共度此生？每个人有每个人的选择。当然，他的悲剧歌迷大众也有责任，明星结多少次婚都不稀罕，不离婚、再婚反而不正常了。名气大小不在于你的才华多少，更多的在于话题多少。这种现象现代人见怪不怪。

说到第二篇，很多评论家都用到“闹剧”一词。“我”为了伪装出狗弄乱朋友家客厅的效果，居然干出把鞋放到锅里煮、像狗一样在地上爬这样的荒唐事。因为可笑，所以也是最让人觉得可怜的。“我”得知埃米莉并不为日记的事生气，没有什么查理偷看了日记、埃米莉就要把他的眼珠挖出来的事，依旧帮查理说好话，还谎称自己不听爵士唱片了。查理这个人物最突出体现了石黑一贯的不可靠的第

一人称叙述，读者最后会发现他的话不能照单全收。表面上“我”是失败者，查理夫妇是成功人士，有收入丰厚的工作、有摆设高档的房子，但他们的家更像是个“艺术展”：

“查理，我要百叶窗干吗？”那一次我问道。“醒来的时候我想看见外面。窗帘就可以了。”

“这些百叶窗是瑞士的，”他这么回答，好像这就说明了一切。

一味追求物质，却不感到满足。能给埃米莉带来心灵慰藉的是那些查理不让她听的老唱片。

“天生我材必有用，千金散尽还复来。”为名也好，为利也罢，实现人生的自我价值是古今中外人们的共同理想。可幸运儿又有多少？理想与现实总是有差距的。就好像史蒂夫的朋友问的那样：“纯粹是运气还是其他？”史蒂夫（第四篇故事的叙述者）也不能把自己的不成功完全归咎于长得丑而没有机会。他是有机遇的，但是他的两次登台表演都因为紧张而搞砸了，这能怪谁呢？假设他正常发挥，观众很可能就被他的音乐感动了，他不是对自己的音乐很有信心吗？观众也不总是以貌取人，这种例子现实生活中就有不少。与他相比，被他说得一无是处的琳迪按她丈夫的话说，就能处处留心、忍辱负重，并且抓住机会。虽然有情人眼里出西施之嫌，但应该也有几分是真的。

石黑的作品就是这样总是能引发读者的思考，书看完了以后仍然回味无穷。书里提及的大多数歌手、歌名都是真实的，均是二十世纪五十至八十年代的当红歌手和经典曲目。它们是小说的有机组成部分，请读者们务必把这些歌找来听一听，泡上一壶茶，放上一张经典爵士唱片，开始欣赏由石黑一雄谱写的《小夜曲》吧。

Nocturnes
Five Stories of Music and Nightfall

Crooner

THE MORNING I spotted Tony Gardner sitting among the tourists, spring was just arriving here in Venice. We'd completed our first full week outside in the piazza - a relief, let me tell you, after all those stuffy hours performing from the back of the cafe, getting in the way of customers wanting to use the staircase. There was quite a breeze that morning, and our brand-new marquee was flapping all around us, but we were all feeling a little bit brighter and fresher, and I guess it showed in our music.

But here I am talking like I'm a regular band member. Actually, I'm one of the 'gypsies', as the other musicians call us, one of the guys who move around the piazza, helping out whichever of the three cafe orchestras needs us. Mostly I play here at the Caffé Lavena, but on a busy afternoon, I might do a set with the Quaddri boys, go over to the Florian, then back across the square to the Lavena. I get on fine with them all - and with the waiters too - and in any other city I'd have a regular position by now. But in this place, so obsessed with tradition and the past, everything's upside down. Anywhere else, being a guitar player would go in a guy's favour. But here? A guitar! The cafe managers get uneasy. It looks too modern, the tourists won't like it. Last autumn I got myself a vintage jazz model with an oval sound-hole, the kind of thing Django Reinhardt might have played, so there was no way anyone would mistake me for a rock-and-roller. That made things a little easier, but the cafe managers, they still don't like it. The truth is, if you're a guitarist, you can be Joe Pass, they still wouldn't give you a regular job in this square.

There's also, of course, the small matter of my not being Italian, never mind Venetian. It's the same for that big Czech guy with the alto sax. We're well liked, we're needed by the other musicians, but we don't quite fit the official bill. Just play and keep your mouth shut, that's what the cafe managers always say. That way the tourists won't know you're not Italian. Wear your suit, sunglasses, keep the hair combed back, no one will know the difference, just don't start talking.

But I don't do too bad. All three cafe orchestras, especially when they have to play at the same time from their rival tents, they need a guitar - something soft, solid, but amplified, thumping out the chords from the back. I guess you're thinking, three bands playing at the same time in the same square, that would sound like a real mess. But the Piazza San Marco's big enough to take it. A tourist strolling across the square will hear one tune fade out, another fade in, like he's shifting the dial on a radio. What tourists can't take too much of is the classical stuff, all these instrumental versions of famous arias. Okay, this is San Marco, they don't want the latest pop hits. But every few minutes they want something they recognise, maybe an old Julie Andrews number, or the theme from a famous movie. I remember once last summer, going from band to band and playing 'The Godfather' nine times in one afternoon.

Anyway there we were that spring morning, playing in front of a good crowd of tourists, when I saw Tony Gardner, sitting alone with his coffee, almost directly in front of us, maybe six metres back from our marquee. We get famous people in the square all the time, we never make a fuss. At the end of a number, maybe a quiet word will go around the band members. Look, there's Warren Beatty. Look, it's Kissinger. That woman, she's the one who was in the movie about the men who swap their faces. We're used to it. This is the Piazza San Marco after all. But when I realised it was Tony Gardner sitting there, that was different. I did get excited.

Tony Gardner had been my mother's favourite. Back home, back in the communist days, it had been really hard to get records like that, but my mother had pretty much his whole collection. Once when I was a boy, I scratched one of those precious records. The apartment was so cramped, and a boy my age, you just had to move around sometimes, especially during those cold months when you couldn't go outside. So I was playing this game jumping from our little sofa to the armchair, and one time I misjudged it and hit the record player. The needle went across the record with a zip - this was long before CDs - and my mother came in from the kitchen and began shouting at me. I felt so bad, not just because she was shouting at me, but because I knew it was one of Tony Gardner's records, and I knew how much it meant to her. And I knew that this one too would now have those popping noises going through it while he crooned those American songs. Years later, when I was working in Warsaw and I got to know about black-market records, I gave my mother replacements of all her worn-out Tony Gardner albums, including that one I scratched. It took me over three years, but I kept getting them, one by one, and each time I went back to see her I'd bring her another.

So you see why I got so excited when I recognised him, barely six metres away. At first I couldn't quite believe it, and I might have been a beat late with a chord change. Tony Gardner! What would my dear mother have said if she'd known! For her sake, for the sake of her memory, I had to go and say something to him, never mind if the other musicians laughed and said I was acting like a bellboy.

But of course I couldn't just rush over to him, pushing aside the tables and chairs. There was our set to finish. It was agony, I can tell you, another three, four numbers, and every second I thought he was about to get up and walk off. But he kept sitting there, by himself, staring into his coffee, stirring it like he was really puzzled by what the waiter had brought him. He looked like any other American tourist, dressed in a pale-blue polo shirt and loose grey trousers. His hair, very dark, very shiny on those record covers, was almost white now, but there was still plenty of it, and it was immaculately groomed in the same style he'd had back then. When I'd first spotted him, he'd had his dark glasses in his hand - I doubt if I'd have recognised him otherwise - but as our set went on and I kept watching him, he put them on his face, took them off again, then back on again. He looked preoccupied and it disappointed me to see he wasn't really listening to our music.

Then our set was over. I hurried out of the tent without saying anything to the others, made my way to Tony Gardner's table, then had a moment's panic not knowing how to start the conversation. I was standing behind him, but some sixth sense made him turn and look up at me - I guess it was all those years of having fans come up to him - and next thing I was introducing myself, explaining how much I admired him, how I was in the band he'd just been listening to, how my mother had been such a fan, all in one big rush. He listened with a grave expression, nodding every few seconds like he was my doctor. I kept talking and all he said every now and then was: 'Is that so?' After a while I thought it was time to leave and I'd started to move away when he said:

'So you come from one of those communist countries. That must have been tough.'

'That's all in the past.' I did a cheerful shrug. 'We're a free country now. A democracy.'

'That's good to hear. And that was your crew playing for us just now. Sit down. You want some coffee?'

I told him I didn't want to impose, but there was now something gently insistent about Mr Gardner. 'No, no, sit down. Your mother liked my records, you were saying.'

So I sat down and told him some more. About my mother, our apartment, the black-market records. And though I couldn't remember what the albums were called, I started describing the pictures on their sleeves the way I remembered them, and each time I did this, he'd put his finger up in the air and say something like: 'Oh, that would be Inimitable. The Inimitable Tony Gardner.' I think we were both really enjoying this game, but then I noticed Mr Gardner's gaze move off me, and I turned just in time to see a woman coming up to our table.

She was one of those American ladies who are so classy, with great hair, clothes and figure, you don't realise they're not so young until you see them up close. Far away, I might have mistaken her for a model out of those glossy fashion magazines. But when she sat down next to Mr Gardner and pushed her dark glasses onto her forehead, I realised she must be at least fifty, maybe more. Mr Gardner said to me: 'This is Lindy, my wife.'

Mrs Gardner flashed me a smile that was kind of forced, then said to her husband: 'So who's this? You've made yourself a friend.'

'That's right, honey. I was having a good time talking here with . . . I'm sorry, friend, I don't know your name.'

'Jan,' I said quickly. 'But friends call me Janeck.'

Lindy Gardner said: 'You mean your nickname's longer than your real name? How does that work?'

'Don't be rude to the man, honey.'

'I'm not being rude.'

'Don't make fun of the man's name, honey. That's a good girl.'

Lindy Gardner turned to me with a helpless sort of expression. 'You know what he's talking about? Did I insult you?'

'No, no,' I said, 'not at all, Mrs Gardner.'

'He's always telling me I'm rude to the public. But I'm not rude. Was I rude to you just now?' Then to Mr

Gardner: 'I speak to the public in a natural way, sweetie. It's my way. I'm never rude.'

'Okay, honey,' Mr Gardner said, 'let's not make a big thing of it. Anyhow, this man here, he's not the public.'

'Oh, he's not? Then what is he? A long-lost nephew?'

'Be nice, honey. This man, he's a colleague. A musician, a pro. He's just been entertaining us all.' He gestured towards our marquee.

'Oh right!' Lindy Gardner turned to me again. 'You were playing up there just now? Well, that was pretty. You were on the accordion, right? Real pretty!'

'Thank you very much. Actually, I'm the guitarist.'

'Guitarist? You're kidding me. I was watching you only a minute ago. Sitting right there, next to the double bass man, playing so beautifully on your accordion.'

'Pardon me, that was in fact Carlo on the accordion. The big bald guy . . .'

'Are you sure? You're not kidding me?'

'Honey, I've told you. Don't be rude to the man.'

He hadn't shouted exactly, but his voice was suddenly hard and angry, and now there was a strange silence. Then Mr Gardner himself broke it, saying gently:

'I'm sorry, honey. I didn't mean to snap at you.'

He reached out a hand and grasped one of hers. I'd kind of expected her to shake him off, but instead, she moved in her chair so she was closer to him, and put her free hand over their clasped pair. They sat there like that for a few seconds, Mr Gardner, his head bowed, his wife gazing emptily past his shoulder, across the square towards the Basilica, though her eyes didn't seem to be seeing anything. For those few moments it was like they'd forgotten not just me sitting with them, but all the people in the piazza. Then she said, almost in a whisper:

‘That’s okay, sweetie. It was my fault. Getting you all upset.’

They went on sitting like that a little longer, their hands locked. Then she sighed, let go of Mr Gardner and looked at me. She’d looked at me before, but this time it was different. This time I could feel her charm. It was like she had this dial, going zero to ten, and with me, at that moment, she’d decided to turn it to six or seven, but I could feel it really strong, and if she’d asked some favour of me – if say she’d asked me to go across the square and buy her some flowers – I’d have done it happily.

‘Janeck,’ she said. ‘That’s your name, right? I’m sorry, Janeck. Tony’s right. I’d no business speaking to you the way I did.’

‘Mrs Gardner, really, please don’t worry . . .’

‘And I disturbed the two of you talking. Musicians’ talk, I bet. You know what? I’m gonna leave the two of you to get on with it.’

‘No reason to go, honey,’ Mr Gardner said.

‘Oh yes there is, sweetie. I’m absolutely yearning to go look in that Prada store. I only came over just now to tell you I’d be longer than I said.’

‘Okay, honey.’ Tony Gardner straightened for the first time and took a deep breath. ‘So long as you’re sure you’re happy doing that.’

‘I’m gonna have a good time in that store. So you two fellas, you have yourselves a good talk.’ She got to her feet and touched me on the shoulder. ‘You take care, Janeck.’

We watched her walk away, then Mr Gardner asked me a few things about being a musician in Venice, and about the Quaddri orchestra in particular, who'd started playing just at that moment. He didn't seem to listen so carefully to my answers and I was about to excuse myself and leave, when he said suddenly:

'There's something I want to put to you, friend. Let me tell you what's on my mind and you can turn me down if that's what you want.' He leaned forward and lowered his voice.

'Can I tell you something? The first time Lindy and I came here to Venice, it was our honeymoon. Twenty-seven years ago. And for all our happy memories of this place, we'd never been back, not together anyway. So when we were planning this trip, this special trip of ours, we said to ourselves we've got to spend a few days in Venice.'

'It's your anniversary, Mr Gardner?'

'Anniversary?' He looked startled.

'I'm sorry,' I said. 'I just thought, because you said this was your special trip.'

He went on looking startled for a while, then he laughed, a big, booming laugh, and suddenly I remembered this particular song my mother used to play all the time where he does a talking passage in the middle of the song, something about not caring that this woman has left him, and he does this sardonic laugh. Now the same laugh was booming across the square. Then he said:

'Anniversary? No, no, it's not our anniversary. But what I'm proposing, it's not so far off. Because I want to do something very romantic. I want to serenade her. Properly, Venice style. That's where you come in. You play your guitar, I sing. We do it from a gondola, we drift under the window, I sing up to her. We're renting a palazzo not far from here. The bedroom window looks over the canal. After dark, it'll be perfect. The lamps on the walls light things up just right.'

You and me in a gondola, she comes to the window. All her favourite numbers. We don't need to do it for long, the evenings are still kinda chilly. Just three or four songs, that's what I have in mind. I'll see you're well compensated. What do you say?'

'Mr Gardner, I'd be absolutely honoured. As I told you, you've been an important figure for me. When were you thinking of doing this?'

'If it doesn't rain, why not tonight? Around eight-thirty? We eat dinner early, so we'll be back by then. I'll make some excuse, leave the apartment, come and meet you. I'll have a gondola fixed up, we'll come back along the canal, stop under the window. It'll be perfect. What do you say?'

You can probably imagine, this was like a dream come true. And besides, it seemed such a sweet idea, this couple - he in his sixties, she in her fifties - behaving like teenagers in love. In fact it was so sweet an idea it almost, but not quite, made me forget the scene I'd just witnessed between them. What I mean is, even at that stage, I knew deep down that things wouldn't be as straightforward as he was making out.

For the next few minutes Mr Gardner and I sat there discussing all the details - which songs he wanted, the keys he preferred, all those kinds of things. Then it was time for me to get back to the marquee and our next set, so I stood up, shook his hand and told him he could absolutely count on me that evening.

The streets were dark and quiet as I went to meet Mr Gardner that night. In those days I'd always get lost whenever I moved much beyond the Piazza San Marco, so even though I'd allowed myself plenty of time, even though I knew the little bridge where Mr Gardner had told me to be, I was still a few minutes late.

He was standing right under a lamp, wearing a crumpled dark suit, and his shirt was open down to the third or fourth button, so you could see the hairs on his chest. When I apologised for being late, he said:

‘What’s a few minutes? Lindy and I have been married twenty-seven years. What’s a few minutes?’

He wasn’t angry, but his mood seemed grave and solemn – not at all romantic. Behind him was the gondola, gently rocking in the water, and I saw the gondolier was Vittorio, a guy I don’t like much. To my face, Vittorio’s always friendly, but I know – I knew back then – he goes around saying all kinds of foul things, all of it rubbish, about people like me, people he calls ‘the foreigners from the new countries’. That’s why, when he greeted me that evening like a brother, I just nodded, and waited silently while he helped Mr Gardner into the gondola. Then I passed him my guitar – I’d brought my Spanish guitar, not the one with the oval sound-hole – and got in myself.

Mr Gardner kept shifting positions at the front of the boat, and at one point sat down so heavily we nearly capsized. But he didn’t seem to notice and as we pushed off, he kept staring into the water.

For a few minutes we drifted in silence, past dark buildings and under low bridges. Then he came out of his deep thoughts and said:

‘Listen, friend. I know we agreed on a set for this evening. But I’ve been thinking. Lindy loves that song, “By the Time I Get to Phoenix”. I recorded it once a long time ago.’

‘Sure, Mr Gardner. My mother always said your version was better than Sinatra’s. Or that famous one by Glenn Campbell.’

Mr Gardner nodded, then I couldn’t see his face for a while. Vittorio sent his gondolier’s cry echoing around the walls before steering us round a corner.

‘I used to sing it to her a lot,’ Mr Gardner said. ‘You know, I think she’d like to hear it tonight. You’re familiar with the tune?’

My guitar was out of the case by this time, so I played a few bars of the song.

‘Take it up,’ he said. ‘Up to E-flat. That’s how I did it on the album.’

So I played the chords in that key, and after maybe a whole verse had gone by, Mr Gardner began to sing, very softly, under his breath, like he could only half remember the words. But his voice resonated well in that quiet canal. In fact, it sounded really beautiful. And for a moment it was like I was a boy again, back in that apartment, lying on the carpet while my mother sat on the sofa, exhausted, or maybe heart-broken, while Tony Gardner’s album spun in the corner of the room.

Mr Gardner broke off suddenly and said: ‘Okay. We’ll do “Phoenix” in E-flat. Then maybe “I Fall in Love Too Easily”, like we planned. And we’ll finish with “One for My Baby”. That’ll be enough. She won’t listen to any more than that.’

He seemed to sink back into his thoughts after that, and we drifted along through the darkness to the sound of Vittorio’s gentle splashes.

‘Mr Gardner,’ I said eventually, ‘I hope you don’t mind me asking. But is Mrs Gardner expecting this recital? Or is this going to be a wonderful surprise?’

He sighed heavily, then said: ‘I guess we’d have to put this in the wonderful surprise category.’ Then he added: ‘Lord knows how she’ll react. We might not make it all the way to “One for My Baby”.’

Vittorio steered us round another corner, and suddenly there was laughter and music, and we were drifting past a large, brightly lit restaurant. Every table seemed taken, the waiters were rushing about, the diners looked very happy, even though it couldn't have been so warm next to the canal at that time of year. After the quiet and the darkness we'd been travelling through, the restaurant was kind of unsettling. It felt like we were the stationary ones, watching from the quay, as this glittering party boat slid by. I noticed a few faces look our way, but no one paid us much attention. Then the restaurant was behind us, and I said:

'It's funny. Can you imagine what those tourists would do if they realised a boat had just gone by containing the legendary Tony Gardner?'

Vittorio, who doesn't understand much English, got the gist of this and gave a little laugh. But Mr Gardner didn't respond for some time. We were back in the dark again, going along a narrow canal past dimly lit doorways, when he said:

'My friend, you come from a communist country. That's why you don't realise how these things work.'

'Mr Gardner,' I said, 'my country isn't communist any more. We're free people now.'

'I'm sorry. I didn't mean to denigrate your nation. You're a brave people. I hope you win peace and prosperity. But what I intended to say to you, friend, what I meant was that coming from where you do, quite naturally, there are many things you don't understand yet. Just like there'd be many things I wouldn't understand in your country.'

'I guess that's right, Mr Gardner.'

'Those people we passed just now. If you'd gone up to them and said, "Hey, do any of you remember Tony Gardner?" then maybe some of them, most of them even, might have said yes. Who knows? But drifting by the way we just did, even if they'd recognised me, would they get excited? I don't think so. They wouldn't put down their forks, they wouldn't interrupt their candlelit heart-to-hearts. Why should they? Just some crooner from a bygone era.'

'I can't believe that, Mr Gardner. You're a classic. You're like Sinatra or Dean Martin. Some class acts, they never go out of fashion. Not like these pop stars.'

'You're very kind to say that, friend. I know you mean well. But tonight of all nights, it's no time to be kidding me.'

I was about to protest, but something in his manner told me to drop the whole subject. So we kept moving, no one speaking. To be honest, I was now beginning to wonder what I'd got myself into, what this whole serenade thing was about. And these were Americans, after all. For all I knew, when Mr Gardner started singing, Mrs Gardner would come to the window with a gun and fire down at us.

Maybe Vittorio's thoughts were moving along the same lines, because as we passed under a lantern on the side of a wall, he gave me a look as though to say: 'We've got a strange one here, haven't we, amico?' But I didn't respond. I wasn't going to side with the likes of him against Mr Gardner. According to Vittorio, foreigners like me, we go around ripping off tourists, littering the canals, in general ruining the whole damn city. Some days, if he's in a bad mood, he'll claim we're muggers - rapists, even. I asked him once to his face if it was true he was going around saying such things, and he swore it was all a pack of lies. How could he be a racist when he had a Jewish aunt he adored like a mother? But one afternoon I was killing time between sets, leaning over a bridge in Dorsoduro, and a gondola passed underneath. There were three tourists sitting in it, and Vittorio standing over them with his oar, holding forth for the world to hear, coming out with this very same rubbish. So he can meet my eye all he likes, he'll get no camaraderie from me.

'Let me tell you a little secret,' Mr Gardner said suddenly. 'A little secret about performance. One pro to another. It's quite simple. You've got to know something, doesn't matter what it is, you've got to know something about your audience. Something that for you, in your mind, distinguishes that audience from the one you sang to the night before. Let's say you're in Milwaukee. You've got to ask yourself, what's different, what's special about a Milwaukee audience? What makes it different from a Madison audience? Can't think of anything, you just keep on trying till you do. Milwaukee, Milwaukee. They have good pork chops in Milwaukee. That'll work, that's what you use when you step out there. You don't have to say a word about it to them, it's what's in your mind when you sing to them. These people in front of you, they're the ones who eat good pork chops. They have high standards when it comes to pork chops. You understand what I'm saying? That way the audience becomes someone you know, someone you can perform to. There, that's my secret. One pro to another.'

'Well, thank you, Mr Gardner. I'd never thought about it that way. A tip from someone like you, I won't forget it.'

'So tonight,' he went on, 'we're performing for Lindy. Lindy's the audience. So I'm going to tell you something about Lindy. You want to hear about Lindy?'

'Of course, Mr Gardner,' I said. 'I'd like to hear about her very much.'

For the next twenty minutes or so, we sat in that gondola, drifting round and round, while Mr Gardner talked. Sometimes his voice went down to a murmur, like he was talking to himself. Other times, when a lamp or a passing window threw some light across our boat, he'd remember me, raise his voice, and say something like: 'You understand what I'm saying, friend?'

His wife, he told me, had come from a small town in Minnesota, in the middle of America, where her schoolteachers gave her a hard time because she was always looking at magazines of movie stars instead of studying.

'What these ladies never realised was that Lindy had big plans. And look at her now. Rich, beautiful, travelled all over the world. And those schoolteachers, where are they today? What kind of lives have they had? If they'd looked at a few more movie magazines, had a few more dreams, they too might have a little of what Lindy has today.'

At nineteen, she'd hitch-hiked to California, wanting to get to Hollywood. Instead, she'd found herself in the outskirts of Los Angeles, working as a waitress in a roadside diner.

'Surprising thing,' Mr Gardner said. 'This diner, this regular little place off the highway. It turned out to be the best place she could have wound up. Because this was where all the ambitious girls came in, morning till night. They used to meet there, seven, eight, a dozen of them, they'd order their coffees, their hot-dogs, sit in there for hours and talk.'

These girls, all a little older than Lindy, had come from every part of America and had been in the LA area for at least two or three years. They came into the diner to swap gossip and hard-luck stories, discuss tactics, keep a check on each other's progress. But the main draw of the place was Meg, a woman in her forties, the waitress Lindy worked with.

'To these girls Meg was their big sister, their fountain of wisdom. Because once upon a time, she'd been exactly like them. You've got to understand, these were serious girls, really ambitious, determined girls. Did they talk about clothes and shoes and make-up like other girls? Sure they did. But they only talked about which clothes and shoes and make-up would help them marry a star. Did they talk about movies? Did they talk about the music scene? You bet. But they talked about which movie stars and singers were single, which ones were unhappily married, which ones were getting divorced. And Meg, you see, she could tell them all this, and much, much more. Meg had been down that road before them. She knew all the rules, all the tricks, when it came to marrying a star. And Lindy sat with them and took everything in. That little hot-dog diner was her Harvard, her Yale. A nineteen-year-old from Minnesota? Makes me shudder now to think what could have happened to her. But she got lucky.'

'Mr Gardner,' I said, 'excuse me for interrupting. But if this Meg was so wise about everything, how come she wasn't married to a star herself? Why was she serving hot-dogs in this diner?'

'Good question, but you don't quite see how these things work. Okay, this lady, Meg, she hadn't made it. But the point is, she'd watched the ones who had. You understand, friend? She'd been just like those girls once, and she'd watched some succeed, others fail. She'd seen the pitfalls, she'd seen the golden stairways. She could tell them all the stories and those girls listened. And some of them learned. Lindy, for one. Like I say, that was her Harvard. It made her what she is. It gave her the strength she needed later on, and boy, did she need it. It took her six years before her first break came along. Can you imagine it? Six years of manoeuvring, planning, putting yourself on the line like that. Getting knocked back over and over again. But it's just like in our business. You can't roll over and give up after the first few knocks. The girls who do, you can see them any place, married to nobodies in nowhere towns. But just a few of them, the ones like Lindy, they learn from every knock, they come back stronger, tougher, they come back fighting and mad. You think Lindy didn't suffer humiliation? Even with her beauty and charm? What people don't realise is that beauty isn't the half of it. Use it wrong, you get treated like a whore. Anyway, after six years, she finally got her break. '

'That's when she met you, Mr Gardner? '

'Me? No, no. I didn't come on the scene for a while longer. She married Dino Hartman. You've never heard of Dino?' Mr Gardner did a slightly unkind laugh here. 'Poor Dino. I guess Dino's records wouldn't have made it to the communist countries. But Dino had quite a name for himself in those days. He sang in Vegas a lot, had a few gold records. Like I said, that was Lindy's big break. When I first met her, she was Dino's wife. Old Meg had explained that's how it happens all the time. Sure, a girl can get lucky first time, go straight to the top, marry a Sinatra or a Brando. But it doesn't usually happen like that. A girl's got to be prepared to get out of the elevator at the second floor, walk around. She needs to get used to the air on that floor. Then maybe, one day, on that second floor, she'll run into someone who's come down from the penthouse for a few minutes, maybe to fetch something. And this guy says to her, hey, how about coming back up with me, up to the top floor. Lindy knew that's how it usually played out. She wasn't weakening when she married Dino, she wasn't cutting her ambition down to size. And Dino was a decent guy. I always liked him. That's why, even though I fell badly for Lindy the moment I first saw her, I didn't make a move. I was the perfect gentleman. I found out later that was what made Lindy all the more determined. Man, you've got to admire a girl like that! I have to tell you, friend, I was a bright, bright star around this time. I guess this would be around when your mother was listening to me. Dino, though, his star was starting to go down fast. It was tough for a lot of singers just around then. Everything was changing. Kids were listening to the Beatles, the Rolling Stones. Poor Dino, he sounded too much like Bing Crosby. He tried a bossa nova album folks just laughed at. Definitely time for Lindy to get out. No one could have accused us of anything in that situation. I don't think even Dino really blamed us. So I made my move. That's how she got up to the penthouse.

'We got married in Vegas, we had the hotel fill the bathtub with champagne. That song we're gonna do tonight, "I Fall in Love Too Easily". You know why I chose that one? You want to know? We were in London once, not long after we got married. We came up to our room after break-fast and the maid's in there cleaning our suite. But Lindy and I are horny as rabbits. So we go in, and we can hear the maid vacuuming our lounge, but we can't see her, she's through the partition. So we sneak through on tip-toes, like we're kids, you know? We sneak through to the bedroom, close the door. We can see the maid's finished the bedroom already, so maybe she doesn't need to come back, but we don't know that for sure. Either way, we don't care. We tear off our clothes, we make love on the bed, and all the time the maid's on the other side, moving around our suite, no idea we've come in. I tell you, we were horny, but after a while, we found the whole thing so funny, we just kept laughing. Then we'd finished and we were lying there in each other's arms, and the maid was still out there and you know what, she starts singing! She's finished with the vacuum, so she starts singing at the top of her voice, and boy, did she have one lousy voice! We were laughing and laughing, but trying to keep it silent. Then what do you know, she stops singing and turns on the radio. And suddenly we hear Chet Baker. He's singing "I Fall in Love Too Easily", nice and slow and mellow. And Lindy and me, we just lay there across the bed together, listening to Chet singing. And after a while, I'm singing along, really soft, singing along with Chet Baker on the radio, Lindy curled up in my arms. That's how it was. That's why we're gonna do that song tonight. I don't know if she'll remember though. Who the hell knows?'

Mr Gardner stopped talking and I could see him wiping away tears. Vittorio brought us around another corner and I realised we were going past the restaurant a second time. It looked even more lively than before, and a pianist, this guy I know called Andrea, was now playing in the corner.

As we drifted again into the dark, I said: 'Mr Gardner, it's none of my business, I know. But I can see maybe things haven't been so good between you and Mrs Gardner lately. I want you to know I understand about things like that. My mother often used to get sad, maybe just the way you are now. She'd think she'd found someone, she'd be so happy and tell me this guy was going to be my new dad. The first couple of times I believed her. After that, I knew it wouldn't work out. But my mother, she never stopped believing it. And every time she felt down, maybe like you are tonight, you know what she did? She put on your records and sang along. All those long winters, in that tiny apartment of ours, she'd sit there, knees tucked up under her, glass of something in her hand, and she'd sing along softly. And sometimes, I remember this, Mr Gardner, our neighbours upstairs would bang on the ceiling, especially when you were doing those big up-tempo numbers, like "High Hopes" or "They All Laughed". I used to watch my mother carefully, but it was like she hadn't heard a thing, she'd be listening to you, nodding her head to the beat, her lips moving with the lyrics. Mr Gardner, I wanted to say to you. Your music helped my mother through those times, it must have helped millions of others. And it's only right it should help you too.' I did a little laugh, which I meant to be encouraging, but it came out louder than I'd meant it to. 'You can count on me tonight, Mr Gardner. I'm going to put everything I've got into it. I'll make it as good as any orchestra, you just see. And Mrs Gardner will hear us and who knows? Maybe things will start going fine between you again. Every couple goes through difficult times.'

Mr Gardner smiled. 'You're a sweet guy. I appreciate you helping me out tonight. But we don't have any more time to talk. Lindy's in her room now. I can see the light on.'

We were going by a palazzo we'd passed at least twice before, and I now realised why Vittorio had been taking us round in circles. Mr Gardner had been watching for the light to come on in a particular window, and each time he'd found it still dark, we'd moved on to do another circle. This time, though, the third-storey window was lit, the shutters were open, and from down where we were, we could see a small part of the ceiling with its dark wooden beams. Mr Gardner signalled to Vittorio, but he'd already stopped rowing and we drifted slowly till the gondola was directly beneath the window.

Mr Gardner stood up, making the boat rock alarmingly again, and Vittorio had to move quickly to steady us. Then Mr Gardner called up, much too softly: 'Lindy? Lindy?' Finally he called out much louder: 'Lindy!'

A hand pushed the shutters out wider, then a figure came onto the narrow balcony. A lantern was fixed to the palazzo wall not far above us, but the light wasn't good, and Mrs Gardner wasn't much more than a silhouette. I could see though that she'd put up her hair since I'd met her in the piazza, maybe for their dinner earlier on.

'That you, sweetie?' She leaned over the balcony rail. 'I thought you'd been kidnapped or something. You had me all anxious.'

'Don't be foolish, honey. What could happen in a town like this? Anyway, I left you that note.'

'I didn't see any note, sweetie.'

'I left you a note. Just so you wouldn't get anxious.'

'Where is it, this note? What did it say?'

'I don't remember, honey.' Mr Gardner now sounded irritated. 'It was just a regular note. You know, saying I'd gone to buy cigarettes or something.'

'Is that what you're doing down there now? Buying cigarettes?'

‘No, honey. This is something different. I’m gonna sing to you.’

‘Is this some sort of joke?’

‘No, honey, it isn’t a joke. This is Venice. It’s what people do here.’ He gestured around to me and Vittorio, like our being there proved his point.

‘It’s kind of chilly for me out here, sweetie.’

Mr Gardner did a big sigh. ‘Then you can listen from inside the room. Go back in the room, honey, make yourself comfortable. Just leave those windows open and you’ll hear us fine.’

She went on gazing down at him for a while, and he went on gazing back up, neither of them saying anything. Then she’d gone inside, and Mr Gardner seemed disappointed, even though this was exactly what he’d suggested she should do. He lowered his head with another sigh, and I could tell he was hesitating about going ahead. So I said:

‘Come on, Mr Gardner, let’s do it. Let’s do “By the Time I Get to Phoenix”.’

And I played gently a little opening figure, no beat yet, the sort of thing that could lead into a song or just as easily fade away. I tried to make it sound like America, sad roadside bars, big long highways, and I guess I was thinking too of my mother, the way I’d come into the room and see her on the sofa gazing at her record sleeve with its picture of an American road, or maybe of the singer sitting in an American car. What I mean is, I tried to play it so my mother would have recognised it as coming from that same world, the world on her record sleeve.

Then before I realised it, before I’d picked up any steady beat, Mr Gardner started to sing. His posture, standing in the gondola, was pretty unsteady, and I was afraid he’d lose his balance any moment. But his voice came out just the way I remembered it - gentle, almost husky, but with a huge amount of body, like it was coming through an invisible mike. And like all the best American singers, there was that weariness in his voice, even a hint of hesitation, like he's not a man accustomed to laying open his heart this way. That's how all the greats do it.

We went through that song, full of travelling and goodbye. An American man leaving his woman. He keeps thinking of her as he passes through the towns one by one, verse by verse, Phoenix, Albuquerque, Oklahoma, driving down a long road the way my mother never could. If only we could leave things behind like that - I guess that's what my mother would have thought. If only sadness could be like that.

We came to the end and Mr Gardner said: 'Okay, let's go straight to the next one. "I Fall in Love Too Easily".'

This being my first time playing with Mr Gardner, I had to feel my way around everything, but we managed okay. After what he'd told me about this song, I kept looking up at that window, but there was nothing from Mrs Gardner, no movement, no sound, nothing. Then we'd finished, and the quiet and the dark settled around us. Somewhere nearby, I could hear a neighbour pushing open shutters, maybe to hear better. But nothing from Mrs Gardner's window.

We did 'One for My Baby' very slow, virtually no beat at all, then everything was silent again. We went on looking up at the window, then at last, maybe after a full minute, we heard it. You could only just make it out, but there was no mistaking it. Mrs Gardner was up there sobbing.

'We did it, Mr Gardner!' I whispered. 'We did it. We got her by the heart.'

But Mr Gardner didn't seem pleased. He shook his head tiredly, sat down and gestured to Vittorio. 'Take us round the other side. It's time I went in.'

As we started to move again, I thought he was avoiding looking at me, almost like he was ashamed of what we'd just done, and I began thinking maybe this whole plan had been some kind of malicious joke. For all I knew, these songs all held horrible meanings for Mrs Gardner. So I put my guitar away and sat there, maybe a bit sullen, and that's how we travelled for a while.

Then we came out to a much wider canal, and immediately a water-taxi coming the other way rushed past us, making waves under the gondola. But we were nearly up to the front of Mr Gardner's palazzo, and as Vittorio let us drift towards the quay, I said:

'Mr Gardner, you've been an important part of my growing up. And tonight's been a very special night for me. If we just said goodbye now and I never saw you again, I know for the rest of my life I'll always be wondering. So Mr Gardner, please tell me. Just now, was Mrs Gardner crying because she was happy or because she was upset?'

I thought he wasn't going to answer. In the dim light, his figure was just this hunched-up shape at the front of the boat. But as Vittorio was tying the rope, he said quietly:

'I guess she was pleased to hear me sing that way. But sure, she was upset. We're both of us upset. Twenty-seven years is a long time and after this trip we're separating. This is our last trip together.'

'I'm really sorry to hear that, Mr Gardner,' I said gently. 'I guess a lot of marriages come to an end, even after twenty-seven years. But at least you're able to part like this. A holiday in Venice. Singing from a gondola. There can't be many couples who split up and stay so civilised.'

'But why wouldn't we be civilised? We still love each other. That's why she's crying up there. Because she still loves me as much as I still love her.'

Vittorio had stepped up onto the quay, but Mr Gardner and I kept sitting in the darkness. I was waiting for him to say more, and sure enough, after a moment, he went on:

‘Like I told you, the first time I laid eyes on Lindy I fell in love with her. But did she love me back then? I doubt if the question ever crossed her mind. I was a star, that’s all that mattered to her. I was what she’d dreamt of, what she’d planned to win for herself back in that little diner. Whether she loved me or not didn’t come into it. But twenty-seven years of marriage can do funny things. Plenty of couples, they start off loving each other, then get tired of each other, end up hating each other. Sometimes though it goes the other way. It took a few years, but bit by bit, Lindy began to love me. I didn’t dare believe it at first, but after a while there was nothing else to believe. A little touch on my shoulder as we were getting up from a table. A funny little smile across the room when there wasn’t anything to smile about, just her fooling around. I bet she was as surprised as anyone, but that’s what happened. After five or six years, we found we were easy with each other. That we worried about each other, cared about each other. Like I say, we loved each other. And we still love each other today.’

‘I don’t get it, Mr Gardner. So why are you and Mrs Gardner separating?’

He did another of his sighs. ‘How would you understand, my friend, coming from where you do? But you’ve been kind to me tonight, so I’m gonna try and explain it. Fact is, I’m no longer the major name I once was. Protest all you like, but where we come from, there’s no getting round something like that. I’m no longer a major name. Now I could just accept that and fade away. Live on past glories. Or I could say, no, I’m not finished yet. In other words, my friend, I could make a come-back. Plenty have from my position and worse. But a come-back’s no easy game. You have to be prepared to make a lot of changes, some of them hard ones. You change the way you are. You even change some things you love.’

‘Mr Gardner, are you saying you and Mrs Gardner have to separate because of your come-back?’

‘Look at the other guys, the guys who came back successfully. Look at the ones from my generation still hanging round. Every single one of them, they’ve re-married. Twice, sometimes three times. Every one of them, young wives on their arms. Me and Lindy are getting to be a laughing-stock. Besides, there’s been this particular young lady I’ve had my eye on, and she’s had her eye on me. Lindy knows the score. She’s known it longer than I have, maybe ever since those days in that diner listening to Meg. We’ve talked it over. She understands it’s time to go our separate ways.’

‘I still don’t get it, Mr Gardner. This place you and Mrs Gardner come from can’t be so different from everywhere else. That’s why, Mr Gardner, that’s why these songs you’ve been singing all these years, they make sense for people everywhere. Even where I used to live. And what do all these songs say? If two people fall out of love and they have to part, then that’s sad. But if they go on loving each other, they should stay together forever. That’s what these songs are saying.’

‘I understand what you’re saying, friend. And it might sound hard to you, I know. But that’s the way it is. And listen, this is about Lindy too. It’s best for her we do this now. She’s nowhere near old yet. You’ve seen her, she’s still a beautiful woman. She needs to get out now, while she has time. Time to find love again, make another marriage. She needs to get out before it’s too late.’

I don’t know what I would have said to that, but then he caught me by surprise, saying: ‘Your mother. I guess she never got out.’

I thought about it, then said quietly: ‘No, Mr Gardner. She never got out. She didn’t live long enough to see the changes in our country.’

‘That’s too bad. I’m sure she was a fine woman. If what you say is true, and my music helped make her happy, that means a lot to me. Too bad she didn’t get out. I don’t want that to happen to my Lindy. No, sir. Not to my Lindy. I want my Lindy to get out.’

The gondola was bumping gently against the quay. Vittorio called out softly, reaching out his hand, and after a few seconds, Mr Gardner got to his feet and climbed out. By the time I too had climbed out with my guitar – I wasn’t going to beg any free rides from Vittorio – Mr Gardner had his wallet out.

Vittorio seemed pleased with what he was given, and with his usual fine phrases and gestures, he got back in his gondola and set off down the canal.

We watched him disappear into the dark, then next thing, Mr Gardner was pushing a lot of notes into my hand. I told him it was way too much, that anyway it was a huge honour for me, but he wouldn’t hear of taking any of it back.

‘No, no,’ he said, waving his hand in front of his face, like he wanted to be done, not just with the money, but with me, the evening, maybe this whole section of his life. He started to walk off towards his palazzo, but after a few paces, he stopped and turned back to look at me. The little street we were in, the canal, everything was silent now except for the distant sound of a television.

‘You played well tonight, my friend,’ he said. ‘You have a nice touch.’

‘Thank you, Mr Gardner. And you sang great. As great as ever.’

‘Maybe I’ll come by the square again before we leave. Listen to you playing with your crew.’

‘I hope so, Mr Gardner.’

But I never saw him again. I heard a few months later, in the autumn, that Mr and Mrs Gardner got their divorce - one of the waiters at the Florian read it somewhere and told me. It all came back to me then about that evening, and it made me feel a little sad thinking about it again. Because Mr Gardner had seemed a pretty decent guy, and whichever way you look at it, come-back or no come-back, he'll always be one of the greats.

COME RAIN OR COME SHINE

LIKE ME, EMILY loved old American Broadway songs. She'd go more for the up-tempo numbers, like Irving Berlin's 'Cheek to Cheek' and Cole Porter's 'Begin the Beguine', while I'd lean towards the bitter-sweet ballads - 'Here's That Rainy Day' or 'It Never Entered My Mind'. But there was a big overlap, and anyway, back then, on a university campus in the south of England, it was a near-miracle to find anyone else who shared such passions. Today, a young person's likely to listen to any sort of music. My nephew, who starts university this autumn, is going through his Argentinian tango phase. He also likes Edith Piaf as well as any number of the latest indie bands. But in our day tastes weren't nearly so diverse. My fellow students fell into two broad camps: the hippie types with their long hair and flowing garments who liked 'progressive rock', and the neat, tweedy ones who considered anything other than classical music a horrible din. Occasionally you'd bump into someone who professed to be into jazz, but this would always turn out to be of the so-called crossover kind - endless improvisations with no respect for the beautifully crafted songs used as their starting points.

So it was a relief to discover someone else, and a girl at that, who appreciated the Great American Songbook. Like me, Emily collected LPs with sensitive, straightforward vocal interpretations of the standards - you could often find such records going cheap in junk shops, discarded by our parents' generation. She favoured Sarah Vaughan and Chet Baker. I preferred Julie London and Peggy Lee. Neither of us was big on Sinatra or Ella Fitzgerald.

In that first year, Emily lived in college, and she had in her room a portable record player, a type that was quite common then. It looked like a large hat box, with pale-blue leatherette surfaces and a single built-in speaker. Only when you raised its lid would you see the turntable sitting inside. It gave out a pretty primitive sound by today's standards, but I remember us crouching around it happily for hours, taking off one track, carefully lowering the needle down onto another. We loved playing different versions of the same song, then arguing about the lyrics, or about the singers' interpretations. Was that line really supposed to be sung so ironically? Was it better to sing 'Georgia on My Mind' as though Georgia was a woman or the place in America? We were especially pleased when we found a recording - like Ray Charles singing 'Come Rain or Come Shine' - where the words themselves were happy, but the interpretation was pure heartbreak.

Emily's love of these records was obviously so deep that I'd be taken aback each time I stumbled on her talking to other students about some pretentious rock band or vacuous Californian singer-songwriter. At times, she'd start arguing about a 'concept' album in much the way she and I would discuss Gershwin or Howard Arlen, and then I'd have to bite my lip not to show my irritation.

Back then, Emily was slim and beautiful, and if she hadn't settled on Charlie so early in her university career, I'm sure she'd have had a whole bunch of men competing for her. But she was never flirty or tarty, so once she was with Charlie, the other suitors backed off.

'That's the only reason I keep Charlie around,' she told me once, with a dead straight face, then burst out laughing when I looked shocked. 'Just a joke, silly. Charlie is my darling, my darling, my darling.'

Charlie was my best friend at university. During that first year, we hung around together the whole time and that was how I'd come to know Emily. In the second year, Charlie and Emily got a house-share down in town, and though I was a frequent visitor, those discussions with Emily around her record-player became a thing of the past. For a start, whenever I called round to the house, there were several other students sitting around, laughing and talking, and there was now a fancy stereo system churning out rock music you had to shout over.

Charlie and I have remained close friends through the years. We may not see each other as much as we once did, but that's mainly down to distances. I've spent years here in Spain, as well as in Italy and Portugal, while Charlie's always based himself in London. Now if that makes it sound like I'm the jet-setter and he's the stay-at-home, that would be funny. Because in fact Charlie's the one who's always flying off - to Texas, Tokyo, New York - to his high-powered meetings, while I've been stuck in the same humid buildings year after year, setting spelling tests or conducting the same conversations in slowed-down English. My-name-is-Ray. What-is-your-name? Do-you-have-children?

When I first took up English teaching after university, it seemed a good enough life - much like an extension of university. Language schools were mushrooming all over Europe, and if the teaching was tedious and the hours exploitative, at that age you don't care too much. You spend a lot of time in bars, friends are easy to make, and there's a feeling you're part of a large network extending around the entire globe. You meet people fresh from their spells in Peru or Thailand, and this gets you thinking that if you wanted to, you could drift around the world indefinitely, using your contacts to get a job in any faraway corner you fancied. And always you'd be part of this cosy, extended family of itinerant teachers, swapping stories over drinks about former colleagues, psychotic school directors, eccentric British Council officers.

In the late '80s, there was talk of making a lot of money teaching in Japan, and I made serious plans to go, but it never worked out. I thought about Brazil too, even read a few books about the culture and sent off for application forms.

But somehow I never got away that far. Southern Italy, Portugal for a short spell, back here to Spain. Then before you know it, you're forty-seven years old, and the people you started out with have long ago been replaced by a generation who gossip about different things, take different drugs and listen to different music.

Meanwhile, Charlie and Emily had married and settled down in London. Charlie told me once, when they had children I'd be godfather to one of them. But that never happened. What I mean is, a child never came along, and now I suppose it's too late. I have to admit, I've always felt slightly let down about this. Perhaps I always imagined that being godfather to one of their children would provide an official link, however tenuous, between their lives in England and mine out here.

Anyway, at the start of this summer, I went to London to stay with them. It had been arranged well in advance, and when I'd phoned to check a couple of days beforehand, Charlie had said they were both 'superbly well'. That's why I'd no reason to expect anything other than pampering and relaxation after a few months that hadn't exactly been the best in my life.

In fact, as I emerged out of their local Underground that sunny day, my thoughts were on the possible refinements that might have been added to 'my' bedroom since the previous visit. Over the years, there's almost always been something or other. One time it was some gleaming electronic gadget standing in the corner; another time the whole place had been redecorated. In any case, almost as a point of principle, the room would be prepared for me the way a posh hotel would go about things: towels laid out, a bedside tin of biscuits, a selection of CDs on the dressing table. A few years ago, Charlie had led me in and with nonchalant pride started flicking switches, causing all sorts of subtly hidden lights to go on and off: behind the headboard, above the wardrobe and so on. Another switch had triggered a growling hum and blinds had begun to descend over the two windows.

‘Look, Charlie, why do I need blinds?’ I’d asked that time. ‘I want to see out when I wake up. Just the curtains will do fine.’

‘These blinds are Swiss,’ he’d said, as though this were explanation enough.

But this time Charlie led me up the stairs mumbling to himself, and as we got to my room, I realised he was making excuses. And then I saw the room as I’d never seen it before. The bed was bare, the mattress on it mottled and askew. On the floor were piles of magazines and paperbacks, bundles of old clothes, a hockey stick and a loudspeaker fallen on its side. I paused at the threshold and stared at it while Charlie cleared a space to put down my bag.

‘You look like you’re about to demand to see the manager,’ he said, bitterly.

‘No, no. It’s just that it’s unusual to see it this way.’

‘It’s a mess, I know. A mess.’ He sat down on the mattress and sighed. ‘I thought the cleaning girls would have sorted all this. But of course they haven’t. God knows why not.’

He seemed very dejected, but then he suddenly sprang to his feet again.

‘Look, let’s go out for some lunch. I’ll leave a note for Emily. We can have a long leisurely lunch and by the time we come back, your room – the whole flat – will be sorted out.’

‘But we can’t ask Emily to tidy everything.’

‘Oh, she won’t do it herself. She’ll get on to the cleaners. She knows how to harass them. Me, I don’t even have their number. Lunch, let’s have lunch. Three courses, bottle of wine, everything.’

What Charlie called their flat was in fact the top two floors of a four-storey terrace in a well-to-do but busy street. We came out of the front door straight into a throng of people and traffic. I followed Charlie past shops and offices to a smart little Italian restaurant. We didn't have a reservation, but the waiters greeted Charlie like a friend and led us to a table. Looking around I saw the place was full of business types in suits and ties, and I was glad Charlie looked as scruffy as I did. He must have guessed my thoughts, because as we sat down he said:

'Oh, you're so home counties, Ray. Anyway, it's all changed now. You've been out the country too long.' Then in an alarmingly loud voice: 'We look like the ones who've made it. Everyone else here looks like middle management.' Then he leant towards me and said more quietly: 'Look, we've got to talk. I need you to do me a favour.'

I couldn't remember the last time Charlie had asked my help for anything, but I managed a casual nod and waited. He played with his menu for a few seconds, then put it down.

'The truth is, Emily and I have been going through a bit of a sticky patch. In fact, just recently, we've been avoiding one another altogether. That's why she wasn't there just now to welcome you. Right now, I'm afraid, you get a choice of one or the other of us. A bit like those plays when the same actor's playing two parts. You can't get both me and Emily in the same room at the same time. Rather childish, isn't it?'

'This is obviously a bad time for me to have come. I'll go away, straight after lunch. I'll stay with my Auntie Katie in Finchley.'

'What are you talking about? You're not listening. I just told you. I want you to do me a favour.'

'I thought that was your way of saying ...'

‘No, you idiot, I’m the one who has to clear out. I’ve got to go to a meeting in Frankfurt, I’m flying out this afternoon. I’ll be back in two days, Thursday at the latest. Meanwhile, you stay here. You bring things round, make everything okay again. Then I come back, say a cheerful hello, kiss my darling wife like the last two months haven’t happened, and we pick up again.’

At this point the waitress came to take our order, and after she’d gone Charlie seemed reluctant to take up the subject again. Instead, he fired questions at me about my life in Spain, and each time I told him anything, good or bad, he’d do this sour little smile and shake his head, like I was confirming his worst fears. At one point I was trying to tell him how much I’d improved as a cook – how I’d prepared the Christmas buffet for over forty students and teachers virtually single-handed – but he just cut me off in mid-sentence.

‘Listen to me,’ he said. ‘Your situation’s hopeless. You’ve got to hand in your notice. But first, you have to get your new job lined up. This Portuguese depressive, use him as a go-between. Secure the Madrid post, then ditch the apartment. Okay, here’s what you do. One.’

He held up his hand and began counting off each instruction as he made it. Our food arrived when he still had a couple of fingers to go, but he ignored it and carried on till he’d finished. Then as we began to eat, he said:

‘I can tell you won’t do any of this.’

‘No, no, everything you say is very sound.’

‘You’ll go back and carry on just the same. Then we’ll be here again in a year’s time and you’ll be moaning about exactly the same things.’

‘I wasn’t moaning ...’

‘You know, Ray, there’s only so much other people can suggest to you. After a certain point, you’ve got to take charge of your life.’

‘Okay, I will, I promise. But you were saying earlier, something about a favour.’

‘Ah yes.’ He chewed his food thoughtfully. ‘To be honest, this was my real motive in inviting you over. Of course, it’s great to see you and all of that. But for me, the main thing, I wanted you to do something for me. After all you’re my oldest friend, a life-long friend . . .’

Suddenly he began eating again, and I realised with astonishment he was sobbing quietly. I reached across the table and prodded his shoulder, but he just kept shovelling pasta into his mouth without looking up. When this had gone on for a minute or so, I reached over and gave him another little prod, but this had no more effect than my first one. Then the waitress appeared with a cheerful smile to check on our food. We both said everything was excellent and as she went off, Charlie seemed to become more himself again.

‘Okay, Ray, listen. What I’m asking you to do is dead simple. All I want is for you to hang about with Emily for the next few days, be a pleasant guest. That’s all. Just until I get back.’

‘That’s all? You’re just asking me to look after her while you’re gone?’

‘That’s it. Or rather, let her look after you. You’re the guest. I’ve lined up some things for you to do. Theatre tickets and so on. I’ll be back Thursday at the latest. Your mission’s just to get her in a good mood and keep her that way. So when I come in and say, “Hello darling,” and hug her, she’ll just reply, “Oh hello, darling, welcome home, how was everything,” and hug me back. Then we can carry on as before. Before all this horrible stuff began. That’s your mission. Quite simple really.’

‘I’m happy to do anything I can,’ I said. ‘But look, Charlie, are you sure she’s in the mood to entertain visitors? You’re obviously going through some sort of crisis. She must be as upset as you are. Quite honestly, I don’t understand why you asked me here right now.’

‘What do you mean, you don’t understand? I’ve asked you because you’re my oldest friend. Yes, all right, I’ve got a lot of friends. But when it comes down to it, when I thought hard about it, I realised you’re the only one who’d do.’

I have to admit I was rather moved by this. All the same, I could see there was something not quite right here, something he wasn’t telling me.

‘I can understand you inviting me to stay if you were both going to be here,’ I said. ‘I can see how that would work. You’re not talking to each other, you invite a guest as a diversion, you both put on your best behaviour, things start to thaw. But it’s not going to work in this case, because you’re not going to be here.’

‘Just do it for me, Ray. I think it might work. Emily’s always cheered up by you.’

‘Cheered up by me? You know, Charlie, I want to help. But it’s possible you’ve got this a bit wrong. Because I get the impression, quite frankly, Emily isn’t cheered up by me at all, even at the best of times. The last few visits here, she was . . . well, distinctly impatient with me.’

‘Look, Ray, just trust me. I know what I’m doing.’

Emily was at the flat when we returned. I have to admit, I was taken aback at how much she’d aged. It wasn’t just that she’d got significantly heavier since my last visit: her face, once so effortlessly graceful, was now distinctly bulldoggy, with a displeased set to the mouth. She was sitting on the living-room sofa reading the Financial Times, and got up rather glumly as I came in.

‘Nice to see you, Raymond,’ she said, kissing me quickly on the cheek, then sitting down again. The whole way she did this made me want to blurt out a profuse apology for intruding at such a bad time. But before I could say anything, she thumped the space beside her on the sofa, saying: ‘Now, Raymond, sit down here and answer my questions. I want to know all about what you’ve been up to.’

I sat down and she began to interrogate me, much as Charlie had done in the restaurant. Charlie, meanwhile, was packing for his journey, drifting in and out of the room in search of various items. I noticed they didn’t look at each other, but neither did they seem so uncomfortable being in the same room, despite what he’d claimed. And although they never spoke directly to each other, Charlie kept joining in the conversation in an odd, once-removed manner. For instance, when I was explaining to Emily why it was so difficult to find a flat-mate to share my rent burden, Charlie shouted from the kitchen:

‘The place he’s in, it’s just not geared up for two people! It’s for one person, and one person with a bit more money than he’ll ever have!’

Emily made no response to this, but must have absorbed the information, because she then went on: ‘Raymond, you should never have chosen an apartment like that.’

This sort of thing continued for at least the next twenty minutes, Charlie making his contributions from the stairs or as he passed through to the kitchen, usually by shouting out some statement that referred to me in the third person. At one point, Emily suddenly said:

‘Oh, honestly Raymond. You let yourself be exploited left, right and centre by that ghastly language school, you let your landlord rip you off silly, and what do you do? Get in tow with some airhead girl with a drink problem and not even a job to support it. It’s like you’re deliberately trying to annoy anyone who still gives a shit about you!’

‘He can’t expect many of that tribe to survive!’ Charlie boomed from the hall. I could hear he had his suitcase out there now. ‘It’s all very well behaving like an adolescent ten years after you’ve ceased to be one. But to carry on like this when you’re nearly fifty!’

‘I’m only forty-seven ...’

‘What do you mean, you’re only forty-seven?’ Emily’s voice was unnecessarily loud given I was sitting right next to her. ‘Only forty-seven. This “only”, this is what’s destroying your life, Raymond. Only, only, only. Only doing my best. Only forty-seven. Soon you’ll be only sixty-seven and only going round in bloody circles trying to find a bloody roof to keep over your head!’

‘He needs to get his bloody arse together!’ Charlie yelled down the staircase. ‘Fucking well pull his socks up till they’re touching his fucking balls!’

‘Raymond, don’t you ever stop and ask yourself who you are?’ Emily asked. ‘When you think of all your potential, aren’t you ashamed? Look at how you lead your life! It’s . . . it’s simply infuriating! One gets so exasperated!’

Charlie appeared in the doorway in his raincoat, and for a moment they were shouting different things at me simultaneously. Then Charlie broke off, announced he was leaving – as though in disgust at me – and vanished.

His departure brought Emily’s diatribe to a halt, and I took the opportunity to get to my feet, saying: ‘Excuse me, I’ll just go and give Charlie a hand with his luggage.’

‘Why do I need help with my luggage?’ Charlie said from the hall. ‘I’ve only got the one bag.’

But he let me follow him down into the street and left me with the suitcase while he went to the edge of the kerb to hail a cab. There didn’t seem to be any to hand, and he leaned out worriedly, an arm half-raised.

I went up to him and said: 'Charlie, I don't think it's going to work.'

'What's not going to work?'

'Emily absolutely hates me. That's her after seeing me for a few minutes. What's she going to be like after three days? Why on earth do you think you'll come back to harmony and light?'

Even as I was saying this, something was dawning on me and I fell silent. Noticing the change, Charlie turned and looked at me carefully.

'I think', I said, eventually, 'I have an idea why it had to be me and no one else.'

'Ah ha. Can it be Ray sees the light?'

'Yes, maybe I do.'

'But what does it matter? It remains the same, exactly the same, what I'm asking you to do.' Now there were tears in his eyes again. 'Do you remember, Ray, the way Emily always used to say she believed in me? She said it for years and years. I believe in you, Charlie, you can go all the way, you're really talented. Right up until three, four years ago, she was still saying it. Do you know how trying that got? I was doing all right. I am doing all right. Perfectly okay. But she thought I was destined for . . . God knows, president of the fucking world, God knows! I'm just an ordinary bloke who's doing all right. But she doesn't see that. That's at the heart of it, at the heart of everything that's gone wrong.'

He began to walk slowly along the pavement, very preoccupied. I hurried back to get his suitcase and began pulling it along on its rollers. The street was still fairly crowded, so it was a struggle to keep up with him without crashing the bag into other pedestrians. But Charlie kept walking at a steady pace, oblivious to my difficulties.

‘She thinks I’ve let myself down,’ he was saying. ‘But I haven’t. I’m doing perfectly okay. Endless horizons are all very well when you’re young. But get to our age, you’ve got to . . . you’ve got to get some perspective. That’s what kept going round in my head whenever she got unbearable about it. Perspective, she needs perspective. And I kept saying to myself, look, I’m doing okay. Look at loads of other people, people we know. Look at Ray. Look what a pig’s arse he’s making of his life. She needs perspective.’

‘So you decided to invite me for a visit. To be Mr Perspective.’

At last, Charlie stopped and met my eye. ‘Don’t get me wrong, Ray. I’m not saying you’re an awful failure or anything. I realise you’re not a drug addict or a murderer. But beside me, let’s face it, you don’t look the highest of achievers. That’s why I’m asking you, asking you to do this for me. Things are on their last legs with us, I’m desperate, I need you to help. And what am I asking, for God’s sake? Just that you be your usual sweet self. Nothing more, nothing less. Just do it for me, Raymond. For me and Emily. It’s not over between us yet, I know it isn’t. Just be yourself for a few days until I get back. That’s not so much to ask, is it?’

I took a deep breath and said: ‘Okay, okay, if you think it’ll help. But isn’t Emily going to see through all this sooner or later?’

‘Why should she? She knows I’ve got an important meeting in Frankfurt. To her the whole thing’s straightforward. She’s just looking after a guest, that’s all. She likes to do that and she likes you. Look, a taxi.’ He waved frantically and as the driver came towards us, he grasped my arm. ‘Thanks, Ray. You’ll swing it for us, I know you will.’

I returned to find Emily’s manner had undergone a complete transformation. She welcomed me into the apartment the way she might a very aged and frail relative. There were encouraging smiles, gentle touches on the arm. When I agreed to some tea, she led me into the kitchen, sat me down at the table, then for a few seconds stood there regarding me with a concerned expression. Eventually she said, softly:

‘I’m so sorry I went on at you like that earlier, Raymond. I’ve got no right to talk to you like that.’ Then turning away to make the tea, she went on: ‘It’s years now since we were at university together. I always forget that. I’d never dream of talking to any other friend that way. But when it’s you, well, I suppose I look at you and it’s like we’re back there, the way we all were then, and I just forget. You really mustn’t take it to heart.’

‘No, no. I haven’t taken it to heart at all.’ I was still thinking about the conversation I’d just had with Charlie, and probably seemed distant. I think Emily misinterpreted this, because her voice became even more gentle.

‘I’m so sorry I upset you.’ She was carefully laying out rows of biscuits on a plate in front of me. ‘The thing is, Raymond, back in those days, we could say virtually anything to you, you’d just laugh and we’d laugh, and everything would be a big joke. It’s so silly of me, thinking you could still be like that.’

‘Well, actually, I am more or less still like that. I didn’t think anything of it.’

‘I didn’t realise’, she went on, apparently not hearing me, ‘how different you are now. How close to the edge you must be.’

‘Look, really Emily, I’m not so bad . . .’

‘I suppose the passing years have just left you high and dry. You’re like a man on the precipice. One more tiny push and you’ll crack.’

‘Fall, you mean.’

She’d been fiddling with the kettle, but now turned round to stare at me again. ‘No, Raymond, don’t talk like that. Not even in fun. I don’t ever want to hear you talking like that.’

‘No, you misunderstand. You said I’d crack, but if I’m on a precipice, then I’d fall, not crack.’

‘Oh, you poor thing.’ She still didn’t seem to take in what I was saying. ‘You’re only a husk of the Raymond from those days.’

I decided it might be best not to respond this time, and for a few moments we waited quietly for the kettle to boil. She prepared a cup for me, though not for herself, and placed it in front of me.

‘I’m so sorry, Ray, but I’ve got to get back to the office now. There are two meetings I absolutely can’t miss. If only I’d known how you’d be, I wouldn’t have deserted you. I’d have made other arrangements. But I haven’t, I’m expected back. Poor Raymond. What will you do here, all by yourself?’

‘I’ll be terrific. Really. In fact, I was thinking. Why don’t I get our dinner ready while you’re gone? You probably won’t believe this, but I’ve become a pretty good cook these days. In fact, we had this buffet just before Christmas . . .’

‘That’s terribly sweet of you, wanting to help. But I think it’s best you rest just now. After all, an unfamiliar kitchen can be the source of so much stress. Why don’t you just make yourself completely at home, have a herbal bath, listen to some music. I’ll take care of dinner when I come in.’

‘But you don’t want to worry about food after a long day at the office.’

‘No, Ray, you’re just to relax.’ She produced a business card and placed it on the table. ‘This has got my direct line on it, my mobile too. I’ve got to go now, but you can call me any time you want. Now remember, don’t take on anything stressful while I’m gone.’

For some time now I’ve been finding it hard to relax properly in my own apartment. If I’m alone at home, I get increasingly restless, bothered by the idea that I’m missing some crucial encounter out there somewhere. But if I’m left by myself in someone else’s place, I often find a nice sense of peace engulfing me. I love sinking into an unfamiliar sofa with whatever book happens to be lying nearby. And that’s exactly what I did this time, after Emily had left. Or at least, I managed to read a couple of chapters of Mansfield Park before dozing off for twenty minutes or so.

When I woke up, the afternoon sun was coming into the flat. Getting off the sofa, I began a little nose-around. Perhaps the cleaners had indeed been in during our lunch, or maybe Emily had done the tidying herself; in any case, the large living room was looking pretty immaculate. Tidiness aside, it had been stylishly done up, with modern designer furniture and arty objects – though someone being unkind might have said it was all too obviously for effect. I took a browse through the books, then glanced through the CD collection. It was almost entirely rock or classical, but finally, after some searching, I found tucked away in the shadows a small section devoted to Fred Astaire, Chet Baker, Sarah Vaughan. It puzzled me that Emily hadn’t replaced more of her treasured vinyl collection with their CD reincarnations, but I didn’t dwell on this, and wandered off into the kitchen.

I was opening up a few cupboards in search of biscuits or a chocolate bar when I noticed what seemed to be a small notebook on the kitchen table. It had purple cushioned covers, which made it stand out amidst the sleek minimalist surfaces of the kitchen. Emily, in a big hurry just before she'd left, had been emptying and re-filling her bag on the table while I'd been drinking my tea. Obviously she'd left the notebook behind by mistake. But then in almost the next instant another idea came to me: that this purple book was some kind of intimate diary, and Emily had left it there on purpose, fully intending for me to have a peek; that for whatever reason, she'd felt unable to confide more openly, so had resorted to this way of sharing her inner turmoil.

I stood there for a while, staring at the notebook. Then I reached forward, inserted my forefinger into the pages at the mid-way point and gingerly levered it up. The sight of Emily's closely-packed handwriting inside made me pull my finger out, and I moved away from the table, telling myself I had no business nosing in there, never mind what Emily had intended in an irrational moment.

I went back into the living room, settled into the sofa and read a few more pages of Mansfield Park. But now I found I couldn't concentrate. My mind kept going back to the purple notebook. What if it hadn't been an impulsive action at all? What if she'd planned this for days? What if she'd composed something carefully for me to read?

After another ten minutes, I went back into the kitchen and stared some more at the purple notebook. Then I sat down, where I'd sat before to drink my tea, slid the notebook towards me, and opened it.

One thing that became quickly apparent was that if Emily confided her innermost thoughts to a diary, then that book was elsewhere. What I had before me was at best a glorified appointments diary; under each day she'd scrawled various memos to herself, some with a distinct aspirational dimension. One entry in bold felt-tip went: 'If still not phoned Mathilda, WHY THE HELL NOT??? DO IT!!!'

Another one ran: 'Finish Philip Bloody Roth. Give back to Marion!'

Then, as I kept turning the pages, I came across: 'Raymond coming Monday. Groan, groan.'

I turned a couple more pages to find: 'Ray tomorrow. How to survive?'

Finally, written that very morning, amidst reminders for various chores: 'Buy wine for arrival of Prince of Whiners.'

Prince of Whiners? It took me some time to accept this really could be referring to me. I tried out all sorts of possibilities - a client? a plumber? - but in the end, given the date and the context, I had to accept there was no other serious candidate. Then suddenly the sheer unfairness of her giving me such a title hit me with unexpected force, and before I knew it, I'd screwed up the offending page in my hand.

It wasn't a particularly fierce action: I didn't even tear the page. I'd simply closed my fist on it in a single motion, and the next second I was in control again, but of course, by then, it was too late. I opened my hand to discover not only the page in question but also the two beneath it had fallen victim to my wrath. I tried to flatten the pages back to their original form, but they simply curled back up again, as though their deepest wish was to be transformed into a ball of rubbish.

All the same, for quite some time, I carried on performing a kind of panicked ironing motion on the damaged pages. I was just about coming to accept that my efforts were pointless - that nothing I now did could successfully conceal what I'd done - when I became aware of a phone ringing somewhere in the apartment.

I decided to ignore it, and went on trying to think through the implications of what had just happened. But then the answering machine came on and I could hear Charlie's voice leaving a message. Perhaps I sensed a lifeline, perhaps I just wanted someone to confide in, but I found myself rushing into the living room and grabbing the phone off the glass coffee table.

'Oh, you are there.' Charlie sounded slightly cross I'd interrupted his message.

'Charlie, listen. I've just done something rather stupid.'

'I'm at the airport,' he said. 'The flight's been delayed. I want to call the car service that's picking me up in Frankfurt, but I didn't bring their number. So I need you to read it over to me.'

He began to issue instructions about where I'd find the phone book, but I interrupted him, saying:

'Look, I've just done something stupid. I don't know what to do.'

There was quiet for a few seconds. Then he said: 'Maybe you're thinking, Ray. Maybe you're thinking there's someone else. That I'm going off now to see her. It occurred to me that might be what you were thinking. After all, it would fit with everything you've observed. The way Emily was when I left, all of that. But you're wrong.'

'Yes, I take your point. But look, there's something I have to talk to you about . . .'

'Just accept it, Ray. You're wrong. There's no other woman. I'm going now to Frankfurt to attend a meeting about changing our agency in Poland. That's where I'm going right now.'

'Right, I've got you.'

'There's never been another woman in any of this. I wouldn't look at anyone else, at least not in any serious way. That's the truth. It's the bloody truth and there's nothing else to it!'

He'd started to shout, though possibly this was because of all the noise around him in the departure lounge. Now he went quiet, and I listened hard to work out if he was crying again, but all I heard were airport noises. Suddenly he said:

'I know what you're thinking. You're thinking, all right, there's no other woman. But is there another mat? Go on, admit it, that's what you're thinking, isn't it? Go on, say it!'

'Actually, no. It's never occurred to me you might be gay. Even that time after finals when you got really drunk and pretended to . . .'

'Shut up, you fool! I meant another man, as in Lover of Emily! Lover of Emily, does this figure bloody exist? That's what I'm getting at. And the answer, in my judgement, is no, no, no. After all these years, I can read her pretty well. But the trouble is, precisely because I know her so well, I can tell something else too. I can tell she's started to think about it. That's right, Ray, she's looking at other guys. Guys like David bloody Corey!'

'Who's that?'

'David bloody Corey is a smarmy git of a barrister who's doing well for himself. I know exactly how well, because she tells me how well, in excruciating detail.'

'You think . . . they're seeing each other?'

'No, I just told you! There's nothing, not yet! Anyway, David bloody Corey wouldn't give her the time of day. He's married to a glamourpuss who works for Condé Nast.'

'Then you're okay . . .'

'I'm not okay, because there's also Michael Addison. And Roger Van Den Berg who's a rising star at Merrill Lynch who gets to go to the World Economic Forum every year . . .'

‘Look, Charlie, please listen. I’ve got this problem here. Small by most standards, I admit. But a problem all the same. Please just listen.’

At last I got to tell him what had happened. I recounted everything as honestly as I could, though maybe I went easy on the bit about my thinking Emily had left a confidential message for me.

‘I know it was really stupid,’ I said, as I came to the end. ‘But she’d left it sitting there, right there on the kitchen table.’

‘Yes.’ Charlie was now sounding much calmer. ‘Yes. You’ve rather let yourself in for it there.’

Then he laughed. Encouraged by this, I laughed too.

‘I suppose I’m over-reacting,’ I said. ‘After all, it’s not like her personal diary or anything. It’s just a memo book. . .’ I trailed off because Charlie had continued to laugh, and there was something a touch hysterical in his laughter. Then he stopped and said flatly:

‘If she finds out, she’ll want to saw your balls off.’

There was a short pause while I listened to airport noises. Then he went on:

‘About six years ago, I opened that book myself, or that year’s equivalent. Just casually, when I was sitting in the kitchen, and she was doing some cooking. You know, just flicked it open absent-mindedly while I was saying something. She noticed immediately and told me she wasn’t happy about it. In fact, that’s when she told me she would saw my balls off. She was wielding this rolling pin at the time, so I pointed out she couldn’t very well do what she was threatening with a rolling pin. That’s when she said the rolling pin was for afterwards. For what she’d do to them once she’d cut them off.’

A flight announcement went off in the background.

‘So what do you suggest I do?’ I asked.

‘What can you do? Just keep smoothing the pages down. Maybe she won’t notice.’

‘I’ve been trying that and it just doesn’t work. There’s no way she won’t notice ...’

‘Look, Ray, I’ve got a lot on my mind. What I’m trying to tell you is that all these men Emily dreams about, they’re not really potential lovers. They’re just figures she thinks are wonderful because she believes they’ve accomplished so much. She doesn’t see their warts. Their sheer . . . brutality. They’re all out of her league anyway. The point is, and this is what’s so pathetically sad and ironic about all this, the point is, at the bottom of it all, she loves me. She still loves me. I can tell, I can tell.’

‘So, Charlie, you don’t have any advice.’

‘No! I don’t have any fucking advice!’ He was shouting full blast again. ‘You figure it out! You get on your plane and I’ll get on mine. And we’ll see which one crashes!’

With that, Charlie was gone. I slumped down into the sofa and took a deep breath. I told myself I had to keep things in proportion, but all the while I could feel in my stomach a vaguely nauseous sensation of panic. Various ideas ran through my mind. One solution was simply to flee the apartment, and have no contact with Charlie and Emily for several years, after which I’d send them a cautious, carefully-worded letter. Even in my current state, I dismissed this plan as being a touch too desperate. A better plan was that I steadily work through the bottles in their drinks cabinet, so that when Emily arrived home, she’d find me pathetically drunk. Then I could claim to have looked through her diary and attacked the pages in an alcoholic delirium. In fact, in my drunken unreasonableness, I could even adopt the role of the injured party, shouting and pointing, telling her how bitterly hurt I’d been to read those words about me, written by someone whose love and friendship I'd always counted on, the thought of which had helped sustain me through my lousiest moments in strange and lonely countries. But while this plan had points to recommend it from a practical aspect, I could sense something there - something near the bottom of it, something I didn't care to examine too closely - that I knew would make it an impossibility for me.

After a time, the phone began to ring and Charlie's voice came onto the machine again. When I picked it up he sounded considerably calmer than before.

'I'm at the gate now,' he said. 'I'm sorry if I was a little flustered earlier on. Airports always make me that way. Can't ever settle until I'm sitting right by the gate. Ray, listen, there's just one thing that occurred to me. Concerning our strategy.'

'Our strategy?'

'Yes, our overall strategy. Of course, you've realised, this isn't the time for little tweakings of the truth to show yourself in a better light. Absolutely not the time for the small self-aggrandising white lie. No, no. You're remembering, aren't you, why you were given this job in the first place. Ray, I'm depending on you to present yourself to Emily just as you are. So long as you do that, our strategy stays on course.'

'Well, look, I'm hardly on course here to come over like Emily's greatest hero . . .'

'Yes, you appreciate the situation and I'm grateful. But something's just occurred to me. There's just one thing, one little thing in your repertoire that won't quite do here. You see, Ray, she's got this idea that you have good musical taste.'

'Ah ...'

‘Just about the only time she ever uses you to belittle me is in this area of musical taste. It’s the one respect in which you aren’t absolutely perfect for your current assignment. So Ray, you’ve got to promise not to talk about this topic.’

‘Oh, for God’s sake . . .’

‘Just do it for me, Ray. It’s not much to ask. Just don’t start going on about that . . . that croony nostalgia music she likes. And if she brings it up, then you just play it dumb. That’s all I’m asking. Otherwise, you just be your natural self. Ray, I can count on you about this, can’t I?’

‘Well, I suppose so. This is all pretty theoretical anyway. I don’t see us chatting about anything this evening.’

‘Good! So that’s settled. Now, let’s move to your little problem. You’ll be glad to hear I’ve been giving it some thought. And I’ve come up with a solution. Are you listening?’

‘Yes, I’m listening.’

‘There’s this couple who keep coming round. Angela and Solly. They’re okay, but if they weren’t neighbours we wouldn’t have much to do with them. Anyway they often come round. You know, dropping in without warning, expecting a cup of tea. Now here’s the point. They turn up at various times in the day when they’ve been taking Hendrix out.’

‘Hendrix?’

‘Hendrix is a smelly, uncontrollable, possibly homicidal Labrador. For Angela and Solly, of course, the foul creature’s the child they never had. Or the one they haven’t had yet, they’re probably still young enough for real children. But no, they prefer darling, darling Hendrix. And when they call round, darling Hendrix routinely goes about demolishing the place as determinedly as any disaffected burglar. Down goes the standard lamp. Oh dear, never mind, darling, did you have a fright? You get the picture. Now listen. About a year ago, we had this coffee-table book, cost a fortune, full of arty pictures of young gay men posing in North African casbahs. Emily liked to keep it open at this particular page, she thought it went with the sofa. She'd go mad if you turned over the page. Anyway, about a year ago, Hendrix came in and chewed it all up. That's right, sank his teeth into all that glossy photography, went on to chew up about twenty pages in all before Mummy could persuade him to desist. You see why I'm telling you this, don't you?'

'Yes. That is, I see a hint of an escape route, but . . . ,

'All right, I'll spell it out. This is what you tell Emily. The door went, you answered it, this couple are there with Hendrix tugging at the leash. They tell you they're Angela and Solly, good friends needing their cup of tea. You let them in, Hendrix runs wild, chews up the diary. It's utterly plausible. What's the matter? Why aren't you thanking me? Won't quite do for you, sir?'

'I'm very grateful, Charlie. I'm just thinking it through, that's all. Look, for one thing, what if these people really turn up? After Emily's home, I mean.'

'That's possible, I suppose. All I can say is you'd be very, very unlucky if such a thing happened. When I said they came round a lot, I meant maybe once a month at most. So stop picking holes and be grateful.'

'But Charlie, isn't it a little far-fetched that this dog would chew just the diary, and exactly those pages?'

I heard him sigh. 'I assumed you didn't need the rest of it spelt out. Naturally, you have to do the place over a bit. Knock over the standard lamp, spill sugar over the kitchen floor. You have to make it like Hendrix did this whirlwind job on the place. Look, they're calling the flight. I've got to go. I'll check in with you once I'm in Germany.'

While listening to Charlie, a feeling had come over me similar to the one I get when someone starts on about a dream they had, or the circumstances that led to the little bump on their car door. His plan was all very well - ingenious, even - but I couldn't see how it had to do with anything I was really likely to say or do when Emily got home, and I'd found myself getting more and more impatient. But once Charlie had gone, I found his call had had a kind of hypnotic effect on me. Even as my head was dismissing his idea as idiotic, my arms and legs were setting out to put his 'solution' into action.

I began by putting the standard lamp down on its side. I was careful not to bump anything with it, and I removed the shade first, putting it back on at a cocked angle only once the whole thing was arranged on the floor. Then I took down a vase from a bookshelf and laid it down on the rug, spreading around it the dried grasses that had been inside. Next I selected a good spot near the coffee table to 'knock over' the wastepaper basket. I went about my work in a strange, disembodied mode. I didn't believe any of it would achieve anything, but I was finding the whole procedure rather soothing. Then I remembered all this vandalism was supposed to relate to the diary, and went through into the kitchen.

After a little think, I took a bowl of sugar from a cupboard, placed it on the table not far from the purple notebook, and slowly tilted it until the sugar slid out. I had a bit of a job preventing the bowl rolling off the edge of the table, but in the end got it to stay put. By this time, the gnawing panic I'd been feeling had evaporated. I wasn't tranquil, exactly, but it now seemed silly to have got myself in the state I had.

I went back to the living room, lay down on the sofa and picked up the Jane Austen book. After a few lines, I felt a huge tiredness coming over me and before I knew it, I was slipping into sleep once more.

I was woken up by the phone. When Emily's voice came on the machine, I sat up and answered it.

'Oh goody, Raymond, you are there. How are you, darling? How are you feeling now? Have you managed to relax?'

I assured her I had, that in fact I'd been sleeping.

'Oh what a pity! You probably haven't been sleeping properly for weeks, and now just when you finally get a moment's escape, I go and disturb you! I'm so sorry! And I'm sorry too, Ray, I'm going to have to disappoint you. There's an absolute crisis on here and I won't be able to get home quite as quickly as I'd hoped. In fact, I'm going to be another hour at least. You'll be able to hold out, won't you?'

I reiterated how relaxed and happy I was feeling.

'Yes, you do sound really stable now. I'm so sorry, Raymond, but I've got to go and sort this out. Help yourself to anything and everything. Goodbye, darling.'

I put down the phone and stretched my arms. The light was starting to fade now, so I went about the apartment switching on lights. Then I contemplated my 'wrecked' living room, and the more I looked at it, the more it seemed overwhelmingly contrived. The sense of panic began to grow once more in my stomach.

The phone went again, and this time it was Charlie. He was, he told me, beside the luggage carousel at Frankfurt airport.

'They're taking bloody ages. We haven't had a single bag come down yet. How are you making out over there? Madam not home yet?'

‘No, not yet. Look, Charlie, that plan of yours. It’s not going to work.’

‘What do you mean, it’s not going to work? Don’t tell me you’ve been twiddling your thumbs all this time mulling it over.’

‘I’ve done as you suggested. I’ve messed the place up, but it doesn’t look convincing. It just doesn’t look like a dog’s been here. It just looks like an art exhibition.’

He was silent for a moment, perhaps concentrating on the carousel. Then he said: ‘I can understand your problem. It’s someone else’s property. You’re bound to be inhibited. So listen, I’m going to name a few items I’d dearly love to see damaged. Are you listening, Ray? I want the following things ruined. That stupid china ox thing. It’s by the CD player. That’s a present from David bloody Corey after his trip to Lagos. You can smash that up for a start. In fact, I don’t care what you destroy. Destroy everything!’

‘Charlie, I think you need to calm down.’

‘Okay, okay. But that apartment’s full of junk. Just like our marriage right now. Full of tired junk. That spongy red sofa, you know the one I mean, Ray?’

‘Yes. Actually I fell asleep on it just now.’

‘That should have been in a skip ages ago. Why don’t you rip open the covering and throw the stuffing around.’

‘Charlie, you have to get a grip. In fact, it occurs to me you’re not trying to help me at all. You’re just using me as a tool to express your rage and frustration . . .’

‘Oh shut up with that bollocks! Of course I’m trying to help you. And of course my plan’s a good one. I guarantee it’ll work. Emily hates that dog, she hates Angela and Solly, so she’ll seize any opportunity to hate them even more. Listen.’ His voice suddenly dropped to a near-whisper.

‘I’ll give you the big tip. The secret ingredient that’ll ensure she's convinced. I should have thought of this before. How much time do you have left?'

'Another hour or so ...'

'Good. Listen carefully. Smell. That's right. You make that place smell of dog. From the moment she walks in, she'll register it, even if it's only subliminally. Then she steps into the room, notices darling David's china ox smashed up on the floor, the stuffing from that foul red sofa all over . . . ,'

'Now look, I didn't say I'd . . . '

'Just listen! She sees all the wreckage, and immediately, consciously or unconsciously, she'll make the connection with the dog smell. The whole scene with Hendrix will flash vividly through her head, even before you've said a word to her. That's the beauty of it!'

'You're hawering, Charlie. Okay, so how do I make your home pong of dog?'

'I know exactly how you create a dog smell.' His voice was still an excited whisper. 'I know exactly how you do it, because me and Tony Barton used to do it in the Lower Sixth. He had a recipe, but I refined it.'

'But why?'

'Why? Because it stank more like cabbage than dog, that's why.'

'No, I meant why would you . . . Look, never mind. You might as well tell me, so long as it doesn't involve going out and buying a chemistry set.'

'Good. You're coming round to it. Get a pen, Ray. Write this down. Ah, here it comes at last.' He must have put the phone in his pocket, because for the next few moments I listened to womb noises. Then he came back and said:

‘I have to go now. So write this down. Are you ready? The middle-sized saucepan. It’s probably on the stove already. Put about a pint of water in it. Add two beef stock cubes, one dessertspoon of cumin, one tablespoon of paprika, two tablespoons of vinegar, a generous lot of bay leaves. Got that? Now you put in there a leather shoe or boot, upside down, so the sole’s not actually immersed in the liquid. That’s so you don’t get any hint of burning rubber. Then you turn on the gas, bring the concoction to the boil, let it sit there simmering. Pretty soon, you’ll notice the smell. It’s not an awful smell. Tony Barton’s original recipe involved garden slugs, but this one’s much more subtle. Just like a smelly dog. I know, you’re going to ask me where to find the ingredients. All the herbs and stuff are in the kitchen cupboards. If you go to the understairs cupboard, you’ll find a discarded pair of boots in there. Not the wellingtons. I mean the battered-up pair, they’re more like built-up shoes. I used to wear them all the time on the common. They’ve had it and they’re waiting for the heave. Take one of those. What’s the matter? Look, Ray, you just do this, okay? Save yourself. Because I’m telling you, an angry Emily is no joke. I’ve got to go now. Oh, and remember. No showing off your wonderful musical knowledge.’

Perhaps it was simply the effect of receiving a clear set of instructions, however dubious: when I put the phone down, a detached, business-like mood had come over me. I could see clearly just what I needed to do. I went into the kitchen and switched on the lights. Sure enough, the ‘middle-sized’ saucepan was sitting on the cooker, awaiting its next task. I filled it to halfway with water, and put it back on the hob. Even as I was doing this, I realised there was something else I had to establish before proceeding any further: namely, the precise amount of time I had to complete my work. I went into the living room, picked up the phone, and called Emily’s work number.

I got her assistant, who told me Emily was in a meeting. I insisted, in a tone that balanced geniality with resolution, that she bring Emily out of her meeting, 'if indeed she is in one at all'. The next moment, Emily was on the line.

'What is it, Raymond? What's happened?'

'Nothing's happened. I'm just calling to find out how you are.'

'Ray, you sound odd. What is it?'

'What do you mean, I sound odd? I just called to establish when to expect you back. I know you regard me as a layabout, but I still appreciate a timetable of sorts.'

'Raymond, there's no need to get cross like that. Now let me see. It's going to be another hour . . . Maybe an hour and a half. I'm awfully sorry, but there's a real crisis on here . . .'

'One hour to ninety minutes. That's fine. That's all I need to know. Okay, I'll see you soon. You can get back to your business now.'

She might have been about to say something else, but I hung up and strode back into the kitchen, determined not to let my decisive mood evaporate. In fact, I was beginning to feel distinctly exhilarated, and I couldn't understand at all how I'd allowed myself to get into such a state of despondency earlier on. I went through the cupboards and lined up, in a neat row beside the hob, all the herbs and spices I needed. Then I measured them out into the water, gave a quick stir, then went off to find the boot.

The understairs cupboard was hiding a whole heap of sorry-looking footwear. After a few moments of rummaging, I discovered what was certainly one of the boots Charlie had prescribed - a particularly exhausted specimen with ancient mud encrusted along the rim of its heel. Holding it with fingertips, I took it back to the kitchen and placed it carefully in the water with the sole facing up to the ceiling. Then I lit a medium flame under the pan, sat down at the table and waited for the water to heat. When the phone rang again, I felt reluctant to abandon the saucepan, but then I heard Charlie on the machine going on and on. So I eventually turned the flame down low and went to answer him.

‘What were you saying?’ I asked. ‘It sounded particularly self-pitying, but I was busy so I missed it.’

‘I’m at the hotel. It’s only a three-star. Can you believe the cheek! A big company like them! And it’s a poxy little room too!’

‘But you’re only there for a couple of nights ...’

‘Listen, Ray, there’s something I wasn’t entirely honest about earlier. It’s not fair on you. After all, you’re doing me a favour, you’re doing your best for me, trying to heal things with Emily, and here I am, being less than frank with you.’

‘If you’re talking about the recipe for the dog smell, it’s too late. I’ve got it all going. I suppose I might be able to add an extra herb or something . . .’

‘If I wasn’t straight with you before, that’s because I wasn’t being straight with myself. But now I’ve come away, I’ve been able to think more clearly. Ray, I told you there wasn’t anyone else, but that’s not strictly true. There’s this girl. Yes, she is a girl, early thirties at most. She’s very concerned about education in the developing world, and fairer global trade. It wasn’t really a sexual attraction thing, that was just a kind of by-product. It was her untarnished idealism. It reminded me of how we all were once. You remember that, Ray?’

‘I’m sorry, Charlie, but I don’t remember you ever being especially idealistic. In fact, you were always utterly selfish and hedonistic . . .’

‘Okay, maybe we were all decadent slobs back then, the lot of us. But there’s always been this other person, somewhere inside of me, wanting to come out. That’s what drew me to her . . .’

‘Charlie, when was this? When did this happen?’

‘When did what happen?’

‘This affair.’

‘There was no affair! I didn’t have sex with her, nothing. I didn’t even have lunch with her. I just . . . I just made sure I kept seeing her.’

‘What do you mean, kept seeing her?’ I’d drifted back into the kitchen by this time and was gazing at my concoction.

‘Well, I kept seeing her,’ he said. ‘I kept making appointments to see her.’

‘You mean, she’s a call girl.’

‘No, no, I told you, we’ve never had sex. No, she’s a dentist. I kept going back, kept making things up about a pain here, discomfort of the gums there. You know, I spun it out. And of course, in the end, Emily guessed.’ For a second, Charlie seemed to be choking back a sob. Then the dam burst. ‘She found out . . . she found out . . . because I was flossing so much!’ He was now half-shrieking. ‘She said, you never, ever floss your teeth that much!’

‘But that doesn’t make sense. If you look after your teeth more, you’ve less reason to go back to her . . .’

‘Who cares if it makes sense? I just wanted to please her!’

‘Look, Charlie, you didn’t go out with her, you didn’t have sex with her, what’s the issue?’

‘The issue is, I so wanted someone like that, someone who’d bring out this other me, the one that’s been trapped inside . . . '

'Charlie, listen to me. Since the last time you called, I've pulled myself together considerably. And quite frankly, I think you should pull yourself together too. We can discuss all of this when you get back. But Emily will be here in an hour or so, and I've got to have everything ready. I'm on top of things here now, Charlie. I suppose you can tell that from my voice.'

'Fucking fantastic! You're on top of things. Great! Some fucking friend ...'

'Charlie, I think you're upset because you don't like your hotel. But you should pull yourself together. Get things in perspective. And take heart. I'm on top of things here. I'll sort out the dog business, then I'll play my part up to the hilt for you. Emily, I'll say. Emily, just look at me, just look how pathetic I am. The truth is, most people are just as pathetic. But Charlie, he's different. Charlie is in a different league.'

'You can't say that. That sounds completely unnatural.'

'Of course I won't put it literally like that, idiot. Look, just leave it to me. I've got the whole situation under control. So calm down. Now I've got to go.'

I put the phone down and examined the pot. The liquid had now come to the boil and there was a lot of steam about, but as yet no real smell of any sort. I adjusted the flame until everything was bubbling nicely. It was around this point I was overcome by a craving for some fresh air, and since I hadn't yet investigated their roof terrace, I opened the kitchen door and stepped out.

It was surprisingly balmy for an English evening in early June. Only a little bite in the breeze told me I wasn't back in Spain. The sky wasn't fully dark yet, but was already filling with stars. Beyond the wall that marked the end of the terrace, I could see for miles around the windows and back yards of the neighbouring properties. A lot of the windows were lit, and the ones in the distance, if you narrowed your eyes, looked almost like an extension of the stars. This roof terrace wasn't large, but there was definitely something romantic about it. You could imagine a couple, in the midst of busy city lives, coming out here on a warm evening and strolling around the potted shrubs, in each other's arms, swapping stories about their day.

I could have stayed out there a lot longer, but I was afraid of losing my momentum. I went back into the kitchen, and walking past the bubbling pot, paused at the threshold of the living room to survey my earlier work. The big mistake, it struck me, lay in my complete failure to consider the task from the perspective of a creature like Hendrix. The key, I now realised, was to immerse myself within Hendrix's spirit and vision.

Once I'd started on this tack, I saw not only the inadequacy of my previous efforts, but how hopeless most of Charlie's suggestions had been. Why would an over-lively dog extract a little ox ornament from the midst of hi-fi equipment and smash it? And the idea of cutting open the sofa and throwing around the stuffing was idiotic. Hendrix would need razor teeth to achieve an effect like that. The capsized sugar bowl in the kitchen was fine, but the living room, I realised, would have to be re-conceptualised from scratch.

I went into the room in a crouched posture, so as to see it from something like Hendrix's eyeline. Immediately, the glossy magazines piled up on the coffee table revealed themselves as an obvious target, and so I pushed them off the surface along a trajectory consistent with a shove from a rampant muzzle. The way the magazines landed on the floor looked satisfyingly authentic. Encouraged, I knelt down, opened one of the magazines and scrunched up a page in a manner, I hoped, would find an echo when eventually Emily came across the diary. But this time the result was disappointing: too obviously the work of a human hand rather than canine teeth. I'd fallen into my earlier error again: I'd not merged sufficiently with Hendrix.

So I got down on all fours, and lowering my head towards the same magazine, sank my teeth into the pages. The taste was perfumy, and not at all unpleasant. I opened a second fallen magazine near its centre and began to repeat the procedure. The ideal technique, I began to gather, was not unlike the one needed in those fairground games where you try to bite apples bobbing in water without using your hands. What worked best was a light, chewing motion, the jaws moving flexibly all the time: this would cause the pages to ruffle up and crease nicely. Too focused a bite, on the other hand, simply 'stapled' pages together to no great effect.

I think it was because I'd become so absorbed in these finer points that I didn't become aware sooner of Emily standing out in the hall, watching me from just beyond the doorway. Once I did realise she was there, my first feeling wasn't one of panic or embarrassment, but of hurt that she should be standing there like that without having announced her arrival in some way. In fact, when I remembered how I'd gone to the trouble of calling her office only several minutes earlier precisely to pre-empt the sort of situation now engulfing me, I felt the victim of a deliberate deception. Perhaps that was why my first visible response was simply to give a weary sigh without making any attempt to abandon my all-fours posture. My sigh brought Emily into the room, and she laid a hand very gently on my back. I'm not sure if she actually knelt down, but her face seemed close to mine as she said:

'Raymond, I'm back. So let's just sit down, shall we?'

She was easing me up onto my feet, and I had to resist the urge to shake her off.

'You know, it's odd,' I said. 'No more than a few minutes ago, you were about to go into a meeting.'

‘I was, yes. But after your phone call, I realised the priority was to come back.’

‘What do you mean, priority? Emily, please, you don’t have to keep holding my arm like that, I’m not about to topple over. What do you mean, a priority to come back?’

‘Your phone call. I recognised it for what it was. A cry for help.’

‘It was nothing of the sort. I was just trying to . . .’ I trailed off, because I noticed Emily was looking around the room with an expression of wonder.

‘Oh, Raymond,’ she muttered, almost to herself.

‘I suppose I was being a little clumsy earlier on. I would have tidied up, except you came back early.’

I reached down to the fallen standard lamp, but Emily restrained me.

‘It doesn’t matter, Ray. It really doesn’t matter at all. We can sort it all out together later. You just sit down now and relax.’

‘Look, Emily, I realise it’s your own home and all that. But why did you creep in so quietly?’

‘I didn’t creep in, darling. I called when I came in, but you didn’t seem to be here. So I just popped into the loo and when I came out, well, there you were after all. But why go over it? None of it matters. I’m here now, and we can have a relaxing evening together. Please do sit down, Raymond. I’ll make some tea.’

She was already going towards the kitchen as she said this. I was fiddling with the shade of the standard lamp and so it took me a moment to remember what was in there – by which time it was too late. I listened for her reaction, but there was only silence. Eventually I put down the lampshade and made my way to the kitchen doorway.

The saucepan was still bubbling away nicely, the steam rising around the upheld sole of the boot. The smell, which I'd barely registered until this point, was much more obvious in the kitchen itself. It was pungent, sure enough, and vaguely curryish. More than anything else, it conjured up those times you yank your foot out of a boot after a long sweaty hike.

Emily was standing a few paces back from the cooker, craning her neck to get as good a view of the pot as possible from a safe distance. She seemed absorbed by the sight of it, and when I gave a small laugh to announce my presence, she didn't shift her gaze, let alone turn around.

I squeezed past her and sat down at the kitchen table. Eventually, she turned to me with a kindly smile. 'It was a terribly sweet thought, Raymond.'

Then, as though against her will, her gaze was pulled back to the cooker.

I could see in front of me the tipped-up sugar bowl - and the diary - and a huge feeling of weariness came over me. Everything felt suddenly overwhelming, and I decided the only way forward was to stop all the games and come clean. Taking a deep breath, I said:

'Look, Emily. Things might look a little odd here. But it was all because of this diary of yours. This one here.' I opened it to the damaged page and showed her. 'It was really very wrong of me, and I'm truly sorry. But I happened to open it, and then, well, I happened to scrunch up the page. Like this . . . ' I mimicked a less venomous version of my earlier action, then looked at her.

To my astonishment, she gave the diary no more than a cursory glance before turning back to the pot, saying: 'Oh, that's just a jotter. Nothing private. Don't you worry about it, Ray.' Then she moved a step closer to the saucepan to study it all the better.

‘What do you mean? What do you mean, don’t worry about it? How can you say that?’

‘What’s the matter, Raymond? It’s just something to jot down stuff I might forget.’

‘But Charlie told me you’d go ballistic!’ My sense of outrage was now being added to by the fact that Emily had obviously forgotten what she’d been writing about me.

‘Really? Charlie told you I’d be angry?’

‘Yes! In fact, he said you’d once told him you’d saw his balls off if he ever peeked inside this little book!’

I wasn’t sure if Emily’s puzzled look was due to what I was saying, or still left over from gazing at the saucepan. She sat down next to me and thought for a moment.

‘No,’ she said, eventually. ‘That was about something else. I remember it clearly now. About this time last year, Charlie got despondent about something and asked what I’d do if he committed suicide. He was just testing me, he’s far too chicken to try anything like that. But he asked, so I told him if he did anything like that I’d saw his balls off. That’s the only time I’ve said that to him. I mean, it’s not like a refrain on my part.’

‘I don’t get this. If he committed suicide, you’d do that to him? Afterwards?’

‘It was just a figure of speech, Raymond. I was just trying to express how much I’d dislike him topping himself. I was making him feel valued.’

‘You’re missing my point. If you do it afterwards, it’s not really a disincentive, is it? Or maybe you’re right, it would be . . .’

‘Raymond, let’s forget it. Let’s forget all of this. There’s a lamb casserole from yesterday, there’s over half of it left. It was pretty good last night, and it’ll be even better tonight. And we can open a nice bottle of Bordeaux. It was awfully sweet of you to start preparing something for us. But the casserole's probably the thing for tonight, don't you think?'

All attempts to explain now seemed beyond me. 'Okay, okay. Lamb casserole. Terrific. Yes, yes.'

'So ... we can put this away for now?'

'Yes, yes. Please do. Please put it away.'

I got up and went into the living room - which of course was still a mess, but I no longer had the energy to start tidying. Instead, I lay down on the sofa and stared at the ceiling. At one point, I was aware of Emily coming into the room, and I thought she'd gone through to the hall, but then I realised she was crouched in the far corner, fiddling with the hi-fi. The next thing, the room filled with lush strings, bluesy horns, and Sarah Vaughan singing 'Lover Man'.

A sense of relief and comfort washed over me. Nodding to the slow beat, I closed my eyes, remembering how all those years ago, in her college room, she and I had argued for over an hour about whether Billie Holiday always sang this song better than Sarah Vaughan.

Emily touched my shoulder and handed me a glass of red wine. She had a frilly apron on over her business suit, and was holding a glass for herself. She sat down at the far end of the sofa, next to my feet, and took a sip. Then she turned down the volume a little with her remote.

'It's been an awful day,' she said. 'I don't mean just work, which is a total mess. I mean Charlie going, everything. Don't imagine it doesn't hurt me, to have him go off abroad like that when we haven't made up. Then to cap it all, you finally go and tip over the edge.' She gave a long sigh.

‘No, really, Emily, it’s not as bad as that. For a start, Charlie thinks the world of you. And as for me, I’m fine. I’m really fine.’

‘Bollocks.’

‘No, really. I feel fine . . .’

‘I meant about Charlie thinking the world of me.’

‘Oh, I see. Well, if you think that’s bollocks, you couldn’t be more wrong. In fact, I know Charlie loves you more than ever.’

‘How can you know that, Raymond?’

‘I know because . . . well, for a start he more or less told me so, when we were having lunch. And even if he didn’t spell it out, I can tell. Look, Emily, I know things are a bit tough right now. But you’ve got to hang onto the most important thing. Which is that he still loves you very much.’

She did another sigh. ‘You know, I haven’t listened to this record for ages. It’s because of Charlie. If I put this sort of music on, he immediately starts groaning.’

We didn’t speak for a few moments, but just listened to Sarah Vaughan. Then as an instrumental break started, Emily said: ‘I suppose, Raymond, you prefer her other version of this. The one she did with just piano and bass.’

I didn’t reply, but just propped myself up a little more so as to sip my wine better.

‘I bet you do,’ she said. ‘You prefer that other version. Don’t you, Raymond?’

‘Well,’ I said, ‘I really don’t know. To tell you the truth, I don’t remember the other version.’

I could feel Emily shift at the end of the sofa. ‘You’re kidding, Raymond.’

‘It’s funny, but I don’t listen to this kind of stuff much these days. In fact, I’ve forgotten almost everything about it. I’m not even sure what song this is right now.’ I did a little laugh, which perhaps didn’t come out very well.

‘What are you talking about?’ She sounded suddenly cross. ‘That’s ridiculous. Short of having had a lobotomy, there’s no way you could have forgotten.’

‘Well. A lot of years have gone by. Things change.’

‘What are you talking about?’ There was now a hint of panic in her voice. ‘Things can’t change that much.’

I was pretty desperate to get off the subject. So I said: ‘Pity things are such a mess at your work.’

Emily completely ignored this. ‘So what are you saying? You’re saying you don’t like this? You want me to turn it off, is that it?’

‘No, no, Emily, please, it’s lovely. It . . . it brings back memories. Please, let’s just get back to being quiet and relaxed, the way we were a minute ago.’

She did another sigh, and when she next spoke her voice was gentle again.

‘I’m sorry, darling. I’d forgotten. That’s the last thing you need, me yelling at you. I’m so sorry.’

‘No, no, it’s okay.’ I heaved myself up to a sitting position. ‘You know, Emily, Charlie’s a decent guy. A very decent guy. And he loves you. You won’t do better, you know.’

Emily shrugged and drank some more wine. ‘You’re probably right. And we’re hardly young any more. We’re as bad as one another. We should count ourselves lucky. But we never seem to be contented. I don’t know why. Because when I stop and think about it, I realise I don’t really want anyone else.’

For the next minute or so, she kept sipping her wine and listening to the music. Then she said: 'You know, Raymond, when you're at a party, at a dance. And it's maybe a slow dance, and you're with the person you really want to be with, and the rest of the room's supposed to vanish. But somehow it doesn't. It just doesn't. You know there's no one half as nice as the guy in your arms. And yet. . . well, there are all these people everywhere else in the room. They don't leave you alone. They keep shouting and waving and doing daft things just to attract your attention. "Oi! How can you be satisfied with that?! You can do much better! Look over here!" It's like they're shouting things like that all the time. And so it gets hopeless, you can't just dance quietly with your guy. Do you know what I mean, Raymond?'

I thought about it for a while, then said: 'Well, I'm not as lucky as you and Charlie. I don't have anyone special like you do. But yes, in some ways, I know just what you mean. It's hard to know where to settle. What to settle to.'

'Bloody right. I wish they'd just lay off, all these gatecrashers. I wish they'd just lay off and let us get on with it.'

'You know, Emily, I wasn't kidding just now. Charlie thinks the world of you. He's so upset things haven't been going well between you.'

Her back was more or less turned to me, and she didn't say anything for a long time. Then Sarah Vaughan started on her beautiful, perhaps excessively slow version of 'April in Paris', and Emily started up like Sarah had called her name. Then she turned to me and shook her head.

'I can't get over it, Ray. I can't get over how you don't listen to this kind of music any more. We used to play all these records back then. On that little record player Mum bought me before I came to university. How could you just forget?'

I got to my feet and walked over to the french doors, still holding my glass. When I looked out to the terrace, I realised my eyes had filled with tears. I opened the door and stepped outside so I could wipe them without Emily noticing, but then she was following right behind me, so maybe she noticed, I don't know.

The evening was pleasantly warm, and Sarah Vaughan and her band came drifting out onto the terrace. The stars were brighter than before, and the lights of the neighbourhood were still twinkling like an extension of the night sky.

'I love this song,' Emily said. 'I suppose you've forgotten this one too. But even if you've forgotten it, you can dance to it, can't you?'

'Yes. I suppose I can.'

'We could be like Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers.'

'Yes, we could.'

We placed our wine glasses on the stone table and began to dance. We didn't dance especially well - we kept bumping our knees - but I held Emily close to me, and my senses filled with the texture of her clothes, her hair, her skin. Holding her like this, it occurred to me again how much weight she'd put on.

'You're right, Raymond,' she said, quietly in my ear. 'Charlie's all right. We should sort ourselves out.'

'Yes. You should.'

'You're a good friend, Raymond. What would we do without you?'

'If I'm a good friend, I'm glad. Because I'm not much good at anything else. In fact, I'm pretty useless, really.'

I felt a sharp tug on my shoulder.

'Don't say that,' she whispered. 'Don't talk like that.' Then a moment later, she said again: 'You're such a good friend, Raymond. '

This was Sarah Vaughan's 1954 version of 'April in Paris', with Clifford Brown on trumpet. So I knew it was a long track, at least eight minutes. I felt pleased about that, because I knew after the song ended, we wouldn't dance any more, but go in and eat the casserole. And for all I knew, Emily would re-consider what I'd done to her diary, and decide this time it wasn't such a trivial offence. What did I know? But for another few minutes at least, we were safe, and we kept dancing under the starlit sky.

MALVERN HILLS

I'D SPENT THE SPRING in London, and all in all, even if I hadn't achieved everything I'd set out to, it had been an exciting interlude. But with the weeks slipping by and summer getting closer, the old restlessness had started to return. For one thing, I was getting vaguely paranoid about running into any more of my former university friends. Wandering around Camden Town, or going through CDs I couldn't afford in West End megastores, I'd already had too many of them come up to me, asking how I was getting on since leaving the course to 'seek fame and fortune'. It's not that I was embarrassed to tell them what I'd been up to. It was just that - with a very few exceptions - none of them was capable of grasping what was or wasn't, for me at this particular point, a 'successful' few months.

As I've said, I hadn't achieved every goal I'd set my sights on, but then those goals had always been more like long-term targets. And all those auditions, even the really dreary ones, had been an invaluable experience. In almost every case, I'd taken something away with me, something I'd learned about the scene in London, or else about the music business in general.

Some of these auditions had been pretty professional affairs. You'd find yourself in a warehouse, or a converted garage block, and there'd be a manager, or maybe the girlfriend of a band member, taking your name, asking you to wait, offering you tea, while the sounds of the band, stopping and starting, thundered out from the adjoining space. But the majority of auditions happened at a much more shambolic level. In fact, when you saw the way most bands went about things, it was no mystery why the whole scene in London was dying on its feet. Time and again, I'd walk past rows of anonymous suburban terraces on the city outskirts, carry my acoustic guitar up a staircase, and enter a stale-smelling flat with mattresses and sleeping bags all over the floor, and band members who mumbled and barely looked you in the eye. I'd sing and play while they stared emptily at me, till one of them might bring it to an end by saying something like: 'Yeah, well. Thanks anyway, but it's not quite our genre.'

I soon worked out that most of these guys were shy or plain awkward about the audition process, and that if I chatted to them about other things, they'd become a lot more relaxed. That's when I'd pick up all kinds of useful info: where the interesting clubs were, or the names of other bands in need of a guitarist. Or sometimes it was just a tip about a new act to check out. As I say, I never came away empty-handed.

On the whole, people really liked my guitar-playing, and a lot of them said my vocals would come in handy for harmonies. But it quickly emerged there were two factors going against me. The first was that I didn't have equipment. A lot of bands were wanting someone with electric guitar, amps, speakers, preferably transport, ready to slot right into their gigging schedule. I was on foot with a fairly crappy acoustic. So no matter how much they liked my rhythm work or my voice, they'd no choice but to turn me away. This was fair enough.

Much harder to accept was the other main obstacle - and I have to say, I was completely surprised by this one. There was actually a problem about me writing my own songs. I couldn't believe it. There I'd be, in some dingy apartment, playing to a circle of blank faces, then at the end, after a silence that could go on for fifteen, thirty seconds, one of them would ask suspiciously: 'So whose number was that?' And when I said it was one of my own, you'd see the shutters coming down. There'd be little shrugs, shakes of the head, sly smiles exchanged, then they'd be giving me their rejection patter.

The umpteenth time this happened, I got so exasperated, I said: 'Look, I don't get this. Are you wanting to be a covers band forever? And even if that's what you want to be, where do you think those songs come from in the first place? Yeah, that's right. Someone writes them!'

But the guy I was talking to stared at me vacantly, then said: 'No offence, mate. It's just that there are so many wankers going around writing songs.'

The stupidity of this position, which seemed to extend right across the London scene, was key to persuading me there was something if not utterly rotten, then at least extremely shallow and inauthentic about what was going down here, right at the grass-roots level, and that this was undoubtedly a reflection of what was happening in the music industry all the way up the ladder.

It was this realisation, and the fact that as the summer came closer I was running out of floors to sleep on, that made me feel for all the fascination of London - my university days looked grey by comparison - it would be good to take a break from the city. So I called up my sister, Maggie, who runs a cafe with her husband up in the Malvern Hills, and that's how it came to be decided I'd spend the summer with them.

Maggie's four years older and is always worrying about me, so I knew she'd be all for my coming up. In fact, I could tell she was glad to be getting the extra help. When I say her cafe is in the Malvern Hills, I don't mean it's in Great Malvern or down on the A road, but literally up there in the hills. It's an old Victorian house standing by itself facing the west side, so when the weather's nice, you can have your tea and cake out on the cafe terrace with a sweeping view over Herefordshire. Maggie and Geoff have to close the place in the winter, but in the summer it's always busy, mainly with the locals - who park their cars in the West of England car park a hundred yards below and come panting up the path in sandals and floral dresses - or else the walking brigade with their maps and serious gear.

Maggie said she and Geoff couldn't afford to pay me, which suited me just fine because it meant I couldn't be expected to work too hard for them. All the same, since I was getting bed and board, the understanding seemed to be that I'd be a third member of staff. It was all a bit unclear, and at the start, Geoff, in particular, seemed torn between giving me a kick up the arse for not doing enough, and apologising for asking me to do anything at all, like I was a guest. But things soon settled down to a pattern. The work was easy enough - I was especially good at making sandwiches - and I sometimes had to keep reminding myself of my main objective in coming out to the country in the first place: that's to say, I was going to write a brand-new batch of songs ready for my return to London in the autumn.

I'm naturally an early riser, but I quickly discovered that breakfast at the cafe was a nightmare, with customers wanting eggs done this way, toast like that, everything getting overcooked. So I made a point of never appearing until around eleven. While all the clatter was going on downstairs, I'd open the big bay window in my room, sit on the broad window sill and play my guitar looking out over miles and miles of countryside. There was a run of really clear mornings just after I arrived, and it was a glorious feeling, like I could see forever, and when I strummed my chords, they were ringing out across the whole nation. Only when I turned and stuck my head right out of the window would I get an aerial view of the cafe terrace below, and become aware of the people coming and going with their dogs and pushchairs.

I wasn't a stranger to this area. Maggie and I had grown up only a few miles away in Pershore and our parents had often brought us for walks on the hills. But I'd never been much up for it in those days, and as soon as I was old enough, I'd refused to go with them. That summer though, I felt this was the most beautiful place in the world; that in many ways I'd come from and belonged to the hills. Maybe it was something to do with our parents having split up, the fact that for some time now, that little grey house opposite the hairdresser was no longer 'our' house. Whatever it was, this time round, instead of the claustrophobia I remembered from my childhood, I felt affection, even nostalgia, about the area.

I found myself wandering in the hills practically every day, sometimes with my guitar if I was sure it wouldn't rain. I liked in particular Table Hill and End Hill, at the north end of the range, which tend to get neglected by day-trippers. There I'd sometimes be lost in my thoughts for hours at a time without seeing a soul. It was like I was discovering the hills for the first time, and I could almost taste the ideas for new songs welling up in my mind.

Working at the cafe, though, was another matter. I'd catch a voice, or see a face coming up to the counter while I was preparing a salad, that would jerk me back to an earlier part of my life. Old friends of my parents would come up and grill me about what I was up to, and I'd have to bluff until they decided to leave me in peace. Usually they'd sign off with something like: 'Well at least you're keeping busy,' nodding towards the sliced bread and tomatoes, before waddling back to their table with their cup and saucer. Or someone I'd known at school would come in and start talking to me in their new 'university' voice, maybe dissecting the latest Batman film in clever-clever language, or else starting on about the real causes of world poverty.

I didn't really mind any of this. In fact, some of these people I was genuinely quite glad to see. But there was one person who came into the cafe that summer, the instant I saw her, I felt myself freezing up, and by the time it occurred to me to escape into the kitchen, she'd already seen me.

This was Mrs Fraser - or Hag Fraser, as we used to call her. I recognised her as soon as she came in with a muddy little bulldog. I felt like telling her she couldn't bring the dog inside, though people always did that when they came to get things. Hag Fraser had been one of my teachers at school in Pershore. Thankfully she retired before I went into the sixth form, but in my memory her shadow falls over my entire school career. Her aside, school hadn't been that bad, but she'd had it in for me from the start, and when you're just eleven years old, there's nothing you can do to defend yourself from someone like her. Her tricks were the usual ones twisted teachers have, like asking me in lessons exactly the questions she sensed I wouldn't be able to answer, then making me stand up and getting the class to laugh at me. Later, it got more subtle. I remember once, when I was fourteen, a new teacher, a Mr Travis, had exchanged jokes with me in class. Not jokes against me, but like we were equals, and the class had laughed, and I'd felt good about it. But a couple of days later, I was going down the corridor and Mr Travis was coming the other way, talking with her, and as I came by she stopped me and gave me a complete bollocking about late homework or something. The point is she'd done this just to let Mr Travis know I was a 'troublemaker'; that if he'd thought for one moment I was one of the boys worthy of his respect, he was making a big mistake. Maybe it was because she was old, I don't know, but the other teachers never seemed to see through her. They all took whatever she said as gospel.

When Hag Fraser came in that day, it was obvious she remembered me, but she didn't smile or call me by name. She bought a cup of tea and a packet of Custard Creams, then took them outside to the terrace. I thought that was that. But then a while later, she came in again, put her empty cup and saucer down on the counter and said: 'Since you won't clear the table, I've brought these in myself.' She gave me a look that went on a second or two longer than was normal - her old if-only-I-could-swat-you look - then left.

All my old hatred for the old dragon came back, and by the time Maggie came down a few minutes later, I was completely fuming. She saw it straight away and asked what was wrong. There were a few customers out on the terrace, but no one inside, so I started shouting, calling Hag Fraser every filthy name she deserved. Maggie got me to calm down, then said:

‘Well, she’s not anybody’s teacher any more. She’s just a sad old lady whose husband’s gone and left her.’

‘Not surprised.’

‘But you have to feel a bit sorry for her. Just when she thought she could enjoy her retirement, she’s left for a younger woman. And now she has to run that bed-and-breakfast by herself and people say the place is falling apart.’

This all cheered me up no end. I forgot about Hag Fraser soon after that, because a group came in and I had to make a lot of tuna salads. But a few days later when I was chatting to Geoff in the kitchen, I got a few more details from him; like how her husband of forty-odd years had gone off with his secretary; and how their hotel had got off to a reasonable start, but now all the gossip was of guests demanding their money back, or checking out within hours of arrival. I saw the place myself once when I was helping Maggie with the cash-and-carry and we drove past. Hag Fraser’s hotel was right there on the Elgar Route, a fairly substantial granite house with an outsize sign saying ‘Malvern Lodge’.

But I don’t want to go on about Hag Fraser too much. I’m not obsessed with her or with her hotel. I’m only putting this all here now because of what happened later, once Tilo and Sonja came in.

Geoff had gone into Great Malvern that day, so it was just me and Maggie holding the fort. The main lunch rush was over, but at the point when the Krauts came in, we still had plenty going on. I’d clocked them in my mind as ‘the Krauts' the moment I heard their accents. I wasn't being racist. If you have to stand behind a counter and remember who didn't want beetroot, who wanted extra bread, who gets what put on which bill, you've no choice but to turn all the customers into characters, give them names, pick out physical peculiarities. Donkey Face had a ploughman's and two coffees. Tuna mayo baguettes for Winston Churchill and his wife. That's how I was doing it. So Tilo and Sonja were 'the Krauts' .

It was very hot that afternoon, but most of the customers - being English - still wanted to sit outside on the terrace, some of them even avoiding the parasols so they could go bright red in the sun. But the Krauts decided to sit indoors in the shade. They had on loose, camelcoloured trousers, trainers and T-shirts, but somehow looked smart, the way people from the continent often do. I supposed they were in their forties, maybe early fifties - I didn't pay too much attention at that stage. They ate their lunch talking quietly to each other, and they seemed like any pleasant, middle-aged couple from Europe. Then after a while, the guy got up and started wandering about the room, pausing to study an old faded photo Maggie has on the wall, of the house as it was in 1915. Then he stretched out his arms and said:

'Your countryside here is so wonderful! We have many fine mountains in Switzerland. But what you have here is different. They are hills. You call them hills. They have a charm all their own because they are gentle and friendly.'

'Oh, you're from Switzerland,' Maggie said in her polite voice. 'I've always wanted to go there. It sounds so fantastic, the Alps, the cable-cars.'

'Of course, our country has many beautiful features. But here, in this spot, you have a special charm. We have wanted to visit this part of England for so long. We always talked of it, and now finally we are here! ' He gave a hearty laugh.

'So happy to be here! '

'That's splendid,' Maggie said. 'I do hope you enjoy it. Are you here for long? '

'We have another three days before we must return to our work. We have looked forward to coming here ever since we observed a wonderful documentary film many years ago, concerning Elgar. Evidently Elgar loved these hills and explored them thoroughly on his bicycle. And now we are finally here! '

Maggie chatted with him for a few minutes about places they'd already visited in England, what they should see in the local area, the usual stuff you were supposed to say to tourists. I'd heard it loads of times before, and I could do it myself more or less on automatic, so I started to tune out. I just took in that the Krauts were actually Swiss and that they were travelling around by hired car. He kept saying what a great place England was and how kind everyone had been, and made big laughing noises whenever Maggie said anything halfway jokey. But as I say, I'd tuned out, thinking they were just this fairly boring couple. I only started paying attention again a few moments later, when I noticed the way the guy kept trying to bring his wife into the conversation, and how she kept silent, her eyes fixed on her guidebook and behaving like she wasn't aware of any conversation at all. That's when I took a closer look at them.

They both had even, natural suntans, quite unlike the sweaty lobster looks of the locals outside, and despite their age, they were both slim and fit-looking. His hair was grey, but luxuriant, and he'd had it carefully groomed, though in a vaguely seventies style, a bit like the guys in Abba. Her hair was blonde, almost snowy white, and her face was stern-looking, with little lines etched around the mouth that spoilt what would otherwise have been the beautiful older woman look. So there he was, as I say, trying to bring her into the conversation.

‘Of course, my wife enjoys Elgar greatly and so would be most curious to visit the house in which he was born.’

Silence.

Or: ‘I am not a great fan of Paris, I must confess. I much prefer London. But Sonja here, she loves Paris.’

Nothing.

Each time he said something like this, he’d turn towards his wife in the corner, and Maggie would be obliged to look over to her, but the wife still wouldn’t glance up from her book. The man didn’t seem especially perturbed by this and went on talking cheerfully. Then he stretched out his arms again and said: ‘If you will excuse me, I think I may for a moment go and admire your splendid scenery!’

He went outside, and we could see him walking around the terrace. Then he disappeared out of our view. The wife was still there in the corner, reading her guidebook, and after a while Maggie went over to her table and began clearing up. The woman ignored her completely until my sister picked up a plate with a tiny bit of roll still left on it. Then suddenly she slammed down her book and said, far more loudly than necessary: ‘I have not finished yet!’

Maggie apologised and left her with her piece of roll - which I noticed the woman made no move to touch. Maggie looked at me as she came past and I gave her a shrug. Then a few moments later, my sister asked the woman, very nicely, if there was anything else she’d like.

‘No. I want nothing else.’

I could tell from her tone she should be left alone, but with Maggie it was a kind of reflex. She asked, like she really wanted to know: ‘Was everything all right?’

For at least five or six seconds, the woman went on reading, like she hadn't heard. Then she put down her book again and glared at my sister.

'Since you ask,' she said, 'I shall tell you. The food was perfectly okay. Better than in many of the awful places you have around here. However, we waited thirty-five minutes simply to be served a sandwich and a salad. Thirty-five minutes.'

I now realised this woman was livid with anger. Not the sort that suddenly hits you, then drains away. No, this woman, I could tell, had been in a kind of white heat for some time. It's the sort of anger that arrives and stays put, at a constant level, like a bad headache, never quite peaking and refusing to find a proper outlet. Maggie's always so even-tempered she couldn't recognise the symptoms, and probably thought the woman was complaining in a more or less rational way. Because she apologised and started to say: 'But you see, when there's a big rush like we had earlier . . .'

'Surely you get it every day, no? Is that not so? Every day, in the summer, when the weather is fine, there is just such a big rush? Well? So why can't you be ready? Something that happens every day and it surprises you. Is that what you are telling me?'

The woman had been glaring at my sister, but as I came out from behind the counter to stand beside Maggie, she transferred her gaze to me. And maybe it was to do with the expression I had on my face, I could see her anger go up a couple more notches. Maggie turned and looked at me, and began gently to push me away, but I resisted, and kept gazing at the woman. I wanted her to know it wasn't just her and Maggie in this. God knows where this would have got us, but at that moment the husband came back in.

'Such a marvellous view! A marvellous view, a marvellous lunch, a marvellous country!'

I waited for him to sense what he'd walked into, but if he noticed, he showed no sign of taking it into account. He smiled at his wife and said, presumably for our benefit in English: 'Sonja, you really must go and have a look. Just walk to the end of the little path out there!'

She said something in German, then went back to her book. He came further into the room and said to us:

'We had considered driving on to Wales this afternoon. But your Malvern Hills are so wonderful, I really think we might stay here in this district for the remaining three days of our vacation. If Sonja agrees, I will be overjoyed!'

He looked at his wife, who shrugged and said something else in German, to which he laughed his loud, open laugh.

'Good! She agrees! So it is settled. We will no longer drive to Wales. We will hang out here in your district for the next three days!'

He beamed at us, and Maggie said something encouraging. I was relieved to see the wife putting her book away and getting ready to leave. The man, too, went to the table, picked up a small rucksack and put it on his shoulder. Then he said to Maggie:

'I wonder. Is there by any chance a small hotel you can recommend for us nearby? Nothing too expensive, but comfortable and pleasant. And if possible, with something of the English flavour!'

Maggie was a bit stumped by this and delayed her answer by saying something meaningless like: 'What sort of place did you want?' But I said quickly:

'The best place around here is Mrs Fraser's. It's just down along the road to Worcester. It's called Malvern Lodge.'

'The Malvern Lodge! That sounds just the ticket!'

Maggie turned away disapprovingly and pretended to be clearing away more things while I gave them all the details on how to find Hag Fraser's hotel. Then the couple left, the guy thanking us with big smiles, the woman not giving a backward glance.

My sister gave me a weary look and shook her head. I just laughed and said:

'You've got to admit, that woman and Hag Fraser really deserve one another. It was just too good an opportunity to miss.'

'It's all very well for you to amuse yourself like that,' Maggie said, pushing past me to the kitchen. 'I have to live here.'

'So what? Look, you'll never see those Krauts again. And if Hag Fraser finds out we've been recommending her place to passing tourists, she's hardly going to complain, is she?'

Maggie shook her head, but there was more of a smile about it this time.

The cafe got quieter after that, then Geoff came back, so I went off upstairs, feeling I'd done more than my share for the time being. Up in my room, I sat at the bay window with my guitar and for a while got engrossed in a song I was halfway through writing. But then - and it seemed like no time - I could hear the afternoon tea rush starting downstairs. If it got really mad, like it usually did, Maggie was bound to ask me to come down - which really wouldn't be fair, given how much I'd done already. So I decided the best thing would be for me to slip out to the hills and continue my work there.

I left the back way without encountering anyone, and immediately felt glad to be out in the open. It was pretty warm though, especially carrying a guitar case, and I was glad of the breeze.

I was heading for a particular spot I'd discovered the previous week. To get there you climbed a steep path behind the house, then walked a few minutes along a more gradual incline till you came to this bench. It's one I'd chosen carefully, not just because of the fantastic view, but because it wasn't at one of those junctions in the paths where people with exhausted children come staggering up and sit next to you. On the other hand it wasn't completely isolated, and every now and then, a walker would pass by, saying 'Hi!' in the way they do, maybe adding some quip about my guitar, all without breaking stride. I didn't mind this at all. It was kind of like having an audience and not having one, and it gave my imagination just that little edge it needed.

I'd been there on my bench for maybe half an hour when I became aware that some walkers, who'd just gone past with the usual short greeting, had now stopped several yards away and were watching me. This did rather annoy me, and I said, a little sarcastically:

'It's okay. You don't have to toss me any money.'

This was answered by a big hearty laugh which I recognised, and I looked up to see the Krauts coming back towards the bench.

The possibility flashed through my mind that they'd gone to Hag Fraser's, realised I'd pulled a fast one on them, and were now coming to get even with me. But then I saw that not only the guy, but the woman too, was smiling cheerfully. They retraced their steps till they were standing in front of me, and since by this time the sun was falling, they appeared for a moment as two silhouettes, the big afternoon sky behind them. Then they came closer and I could see they were both gazing at my guitar - which I'd continued to play - with a look of happy amazement, the way people gaze at a baby. Even more astonishing, the woman was tapping her foot to my beat. I got self-conscious and stopped.

‘Hey, carry on!’ the woman said. ‘It’s really good what you play there.’

‘Yes,’ the husband said, ‘wonderful! We heard it from a distance.’ He pointed. ‘We were right up there, on that ridge, and I said to Sonja, I can hear music.’

‘Singing too,’ the woman said. ‘I said to Tilo, listen, there is singing somewhere. And I was right, yes? You were singing also a moment ago.’

I couldn’t quite accept that this smiling woman was the same one who’d given us such a hard time at lunch, and I looked at them again carefully, in case this was a different couple altogether. But they were in the same clothes, and though the man’s Abba-style hair had come undone a bit in the wind, there was no mistaking it. In any case, the next moment, he said:

‘I believe you are the gentleman who served us lunch in the delightful restaurant.’

I agreed I was. Then the woman said:

‘That melody you were singing a moment ago. We heard it up there, just in the wind at first. I loved the way it fell at the end of each line.’

‘Thanks,’ I said. ‘It’s something I’m working on. Not finished yet.’

‘Your own composition? Then you must be very gifted! Please do sing your melody again, as you were before.’

‘You know,’ the guy said, ‘when you come to record your song, you must tell the producer this is how you want it to sound. Like this!’ He gestured behind him at Herefordshire stretched out before us. ‘You must tell him this is the sound, the aural environment you require. Then the listener will hear your song as we heard it today, caught in the wind as we descend the slope of the hill . . . ’

‘But a little more clearly, of course,’ the woman said.

‘Or else the listener will not catch the words. But Tilo is correct. There must be a suggestion of outdoors. Of air, of echo. ’

They seemed on the verge of getting carried away, like they’d just come across another Elgar in the hills. Despite my initial suspicions, I couldn’t help but warm to them.

‘Well,’ I said, ‘since I wrote most of the song up here, it’s no wonder there’s something of this place in it. ’

‘Yes, yes,’ they both said together, nodding. Then the woman said: ‘You must not be shy. Please share your music with us. It sounded wonderful. ’

‘All right,’ I said, playing a little doodle. ‘All right, I’ll sing you a song, if you really want me to. Not the one I haven’t finished. Another one. But look, I can’t do it with you two standing right over me like this. ’

‘Of course,’ Tilo said. ‘We are being so inconsiderate. Sonja and I have had to perform in so many strange and difficult conditions, we become insensitive to the needs of another musician. ’

He looked around and sat down on a patch of stubbly grass near the path, his back to me and facing the view. Sonja gave me an encouraging smile, then sat down beside him. Immediately, he put an arm around her shoulders, she leaned towards him, then it was almost like I wasn’t there any more, and they were having an intimate lovey-dovey moment gazing over the late-afternoon countryside.

‘Okay, here goes,’ I said, and went into the song I usually open with at auditions. I aimed my voice at the horizon but kept glancing at Tilo and Sonja. Though I couldn’t see their faces, the whole way they remained snuggled up to each other with no hint of restlessness told me they were enjoying what they were hearing. When I finished, they turned to me with big smiles and applauded, sending echoes around the hills.

‘Fantastic!’ Sonja said. ‘So talented!’

‘Splendid, splendid,’ Tilo was saying.

I felt a little embarrassed by this and pretended to be absorbed in some guitar work. When I eventually looked up again, they were still sitting on the ground, but had now shifted their positions so they could see me.

‘So you’re musicians?’ I asked. ‘I mean, professional musicians?’

‘Yes,’ said Tilo, ‘I suppose you could call us professionals. Sonja and I, we perform as a duo. In hotels, restaurants. At weddings, at parties. All over Europe, though we like best to work in Switzerland and Austria. We make our living this way, so yes, we are professionals.’

‘But first and foremost,’ Sonja said, ‘we play because we believe in the music. I can see it is the same for you.’

‘If I stopped believing in my music,’ I said, ‘I’d stop, just like that.’ Then I added: ‘I’d really like to do it professionally. It must be a good life.’

‘Oh yes, it’s a good life,’ said Tilo. ‘We’re very lucky we are able to do what we do.’

‘Look,’ I said, maybe a little suddenly. ‘Did you go to that hotel I told you about?’

‘How very rude of us!’ Tilo exclaimed. ‘We were so taken by your music, we forgot completely to thank you. Yes, we went there and it is just the ticket. Fortunately there were still vacancies.’

‘It’s just what we wanted,’ said Sonja. ‘Thank you.’

I pretended again to become absorbed in my chords. Then I said as casually as I could: 'Come to think of it, there's this other hotel I know. I think it's better than Malvern Lodge. I think you should change.'

'Oh, but we're quite settled now,' said Tilo. 'We have unpacked our things, and besides, it's just what we need.'

'Yeah, but . . . Well, the thing is, earlier on, when you asked me about a hotel, I didn't know you were musicians. I thought you were bankers or something.'

They both burst out laughing, like I'd made a fantastic joke. Then Tilo said:

'No, no, we're not bankers. Though there have been many times we wished we were!'

'What I'm saying,' I said, 'is there are other hotels much more geared, you know, to artistic types. It's hard when strangers ask you to recommend a hotel, before you know what sort of people they are.'

'It's kind of you to worry,' said Tilo. 'But please, don't do so any longer. What we have is perfect. Besides, people are not so different. Bankers, musicians, we all in the end want the same things from life.'

'You know, I'm not sure that is so true,' Sonja said. 'Our young friend here, you see he doesn't look for a job in a bank. His dreams are different.'

'Perhaps you are right, Sonja. All the same, the present hotel is fine for us.'

I leant over the strings and practised another little phrase to myself, and for a few seconds nobody spoke. Then I asked: 'So what sort of music do you guys play?'

Tilo shrugged. 'Sonja and I play a number of instruments between us. We both play keyboards. I am fond of the clarinet. Sonja is a very fine violinist, and also a splendid singer. I suppose what we like to do best is to perform our traditional Swiss folk music, but in a contemporary manner. Sometimes even what you might call a radical manner. We take inspiration from great composers who took a similar path. Janáček, for instance. Your own Vaughan Williams.'

'But that kind of music', Sonja said, 'we don't play so much now.'

They exchanged glances with what I thought was just a hint of tension. Then Tilo's usual smile was back on his face.

'Yes, as Sonja points out, in this real world, much of the time, we must play what our audience is most likely to appreciate. So we perform many hits. Beatles, the Carpenters. Some more recent songs. This is perfectly satisfying.'

'What about Abba?' I asked on an impulse, then immediately regretted it. But Tilo didn't seem to sense any mockery.

'Yes, indeed, we do some Abba. "Dancing Queen". That one always goes down well. In fact, it is on "Dancing Queen" I actually do a little singing myself, a little harmony part. Sonja will tell you I have the most terrible voice. So we must make sure to perform this song only when our customers are right in the middle of their meal, when there is for them no chance of escape!'

He did his big laugh, and Sonja laughed too, though not so loudly. A power-cyclist, kitted out in what looked like a black wetsuit, went speeding by us, and for the next few moments, we all watched his frantic, receding shape.

'I went to Switzerland once,' I said eventually. 'A couple of summers ago. Interlaken. I stayed at the youth hostel there.'

'Ah yes, Interlaken. A beautiful place. Some Swiss people scoff at it. They say it is just for the tourists. But Sonja and I always love to perform there. In fact, to play in Interlaken on a summer evening, to happy people from all over the world, it is something very wonderful. I hope you enjoyed your visit there.'

'Yeah, it was great.'

'There is a restaurant in Interlaken where we play a few nights every summer. For our performance, we position ourselves under the restaurant's canopy, so we are facing the dining tables, which of course are outdoors on such an evening. And as we perform, we are able to see all the tourists, eating and talking together under the stars. And behind the tourists, we see the big field, where during the day the paragliders are landing, but which at night is lit up by the lamps along the Höheweg. And if your eye may travel further, there are the Alps overlooking the field. The outlines of the Eiger, the Mönch, the Jungfrau. And the air is pleasantly warm and filled with the music we are making. I always feel when we are there, this is a privilege. I think, yes, it is good to be doing this.'

'That restaurant,' Sonja said. 'Last year, the manager made us wear full costumes while we performed, even though it was so hot. It was very uncomfortable, and we said, what difference does it make, why must we have our bulky waistcoats and scarves and hats? In just our blouses, we look neat and still very Swiss. But the restaurant manager tells us, we put on the full costumes or we don't play. Our choice, he says, and walks away, just like that.'

'But Sonja, that is the same in any job. There is always a uniform, something the employer insists you must wear. It is the same for bankers! And in our case, at least it is something we believe in. Swiss culture. Swiss tradition.'

Once again something vaguely awkward hovered between them, but it was just for a second or two, and then they both smiled as they fixed their gazes back on my guitar. I thought I should say something, so I said:

‘I think I’d enjoy that. Being able to play in different countries. It must keep you sharp, really aware of your audiences.’

‘Yes,’ Tilo said, ‘it is good that we perform to all kinds of people. And not only in Europe. All in all, we have got to know so many cities so well.’

‘Düsseldorf, for instance,’ said Sonja. There was something different about her voice now – something harder – and I could see again the person I’d encountered back at the cafe. Tilo, though, didn’t seem to notice anything and said to me, in a carefree sort of way:

‘Düsseldorf is where our son is now living. He is your age. Perhaps a little older.’

Tilo made a chuckling noise. ‘I think perhaps Peter heard enough of our music while he was growing up! The poor boy, you see, he had to listen to us rehearsing, day after day.’

‘I suppose it can be a bit tricky,’ I said. ‘Having children and being musicians.’

‘We only had the one child,’ Tilo said, ‘so it was not so bad. Of course we were fortunate. When we had to travel, and we couldn’t take him with us, his grandparents were always delighted to help. And when Peter was older, we were able to send him to a good boarding school. Again, his grandparents came to the rescue. We could not afford such school fees otherwise. So we were very fortunate.'

'Yes, we were fortunate,' Sonja said. 'Except Peter hated his school.'

The earlier good atmosphere was definitely slipping away. In an effort to cheer things up, I said quickly: 'Well, anyway, it looks like you both really enjoy your work.'

'Oh yes, we enjoy our work,' said Tilo. 'It's everything to us. Even so, we very much appreciate a vacation. Do you know, this is our first proper vacation in three years.'

This made me feel really bad all over again, and I thought about having another go at persuading them to change hotels, but I could see how ridiculous this would look. I just had to hope Hag Fraser pulled her finger out. Instead, I said:

'Look, if you like, I'll play you that song I was working on earlier. I haven't finished it, and I wouldn't usually do this. But since you heard some of it anyway, I don't mind playing you what I've got so far.'

The smile returned to Sonja's face. 'Yes,' she said, 'please do let us hear. It sounded so beautiful before.'

As I got ready to play, they shifted again, so they were facing the view like before, their backs to me. But this time, instead of cuddling, they sat there on the grass with surprisingly upright postures, each with a hand up to the brow to shield away the sun. They stayed like that all the time I played, peculiarly still, and what with the way each of them cast a long afternoon shadow, they looked like matching art exhibits. I brought my incomplete song to a meandering halt, and for a moment they didn't move. Then their postures relaxed, and they applauded, though perhaps not quite as enthusiastically as the last time. Tilo got to his feet, muttering compliments, then helped Sonja up. It was only when you saw how they did this that you remembered they were really quite middle-aged. Maybe they were just tired. For all I know, they might have done a fair bit of walking before they'd come across me. All the same, it seemed to me they found it quite a struggle to get up.

'You've entertained us so marvellously,' Tilo was saying. 'Now we are the tourists, and someone else plays for us! It makes a pleasant change.'

'I would love to hear that song when it is finished,' Sonja said, and she seemed really to mean it. 'Maybe one day I will hear it on the radio. Who knows?'

'Yes,' Tilo said, 'and then Sonja and I will play our cover version to our customers!' His big laugh rang through the air. Then he did a polite little bow and said: 'So today we are in your debt three times over. A splendid lunch. A splendid choice of hotel. And a splendid concert here in the hills!'

As we said our goodbyes, I had an urge to tell them the truth. To confess that I'd deliberately sent them to the worst hotel in the area, and warn them to move out while there was still time. But the affectionate way they shook my hand made it all the harder to come out with this. And then they were going down the hill and I was alone on the bench again.

The cafe had closed by the time I came down from the hills. Maggie and Geoff looked exhausted. Maggie said it had been their busiest day yet and seemed pleased about it. But when Geoff made the same point over supper - which we ate in the cafe from various left-overs - he put it like it was a negative thing, like it was awful they'd been made to work so hard and where had I been to help? Maggie asked how my afternoon had gone, and I didn't mention Tilo and Sonja - that seemed too complicated - but told her I'd gone up to the Sugarloaf to work on my song. And when she asked if I'd made any progress, and I said yes, I was making real headway now, Geoff got up and marched out moodily, even though there was still food on his plate. Maggie pretended not to notice, and fair enough, he came back a few minutes later with a can of beer, and sat there reading his newspaper and not saying much. I didn't want to be the cause of a rift between my sister and brother-in-law, so I excused myself soon after that and went upstairs to work some more on the song.

My room, which was such an inspiration in the daytime, wasn't nearly so appealing after dark. For a start, the curtains didn't pull all the way across, which meant if I opened a window in the stifling heat, insects from miles around would see my light and come charging in. And the light I had was just this one bare bulb hanging down from the ceiling rose, which cast gloomy shadows all round the room, making it look all the more obviously the spare room it was. That evening, I was wanting light to work by, to jot down lyrics as they occurred to me. But it got far too stuffy, and in the end I switched off the bulb, pulled back the curtains, and opened the windows wide. Then I sat in the bay with my guitar, just the way I did in the day.

I'd been there like that for about an hour, playing through various ideas for the bridge passage, when there was a knock and Maggie stuck her head round the door. Of course everything was in darkness, but outside down on the terrace there was a security light, so I could just about make out her face. She had on this awkward smile, and I thought she was about to ask me to come and help with yet another chore. She came right in, closed the door behind her and said:

'I'm sorry, love. But Geoff's really tired tonight, he's been working so hard. And now he says he wants to watch his movie in peace?'

She said it like that, like it was a question, and it took me a moment to realise she was asking me to stop playing my music.

‘But I’m working on something important here,’ I said.

‘I know. But he’s really tired tonight, and he says he can’t relax because of your guitar.’

‘What Geoff needs to realise,’ I said, ‘is that just as he’s got his work to do, I’ve got mine.’

My sister seemed to think about this. Then she did a big sigh. ‘I don’t think I ought to report that back to Geoff.’

‘Why not? Why don’t you? It’s time he got the message.’

‘Why not? Because I don’t think he’d be very pleased, that’s why not. And I don’t really think he’d accept that his work and your work are quite on the same level.’

I stared at Maggie, for a moment quite speechless. Then I said: ‘You’re talking such rubbish. Why are you talking such rubbish?’

She shook her head wearily, but didn’t say anything.

‘I don’t understand why you’re talking such rubbish,’ I said. ‘And just when things are going so well for me.’

‘Things are going well for you, are they, love?’ She kept looking at me in the half-light. ‘Well, all right,’ she said in the end. ‘I won’t argue with you.’ She turned away to open the door. ‘Come down and join us, if you like,’ she said as she left.

Rigid with rage, I stared at the door that had closed behind her. I became aware of muffled sounds from the television downstairs, and even in the state I was in, some detached part of my brain was telling me my fury should be directed not at Maggie, but at Geoff, who’d been systematically trying to undermine me ever since I’d got here. Even so, it was my sister I was livid at. In all the time I’d been in her house, she hadn’t once asked to hear a song, the way Tilo and Sonja had done. Surely it wasn’t too much to ask of your own sister, and one who'd been, I happened to remember, a big music fan in her teens? And now here she was, interrupting me when I was trying to work and talking all this rubbish. Every time I thought of the way she'd said: 'All right, I won't argue with you,' I felt fresh fury coursing through me.

I came down off the window sill, put away the guitar, and threw myself down on my mattress. Then for the next little while I stared at the patterns on the ceiling. It seemed clear I'd been invited here on false pretences, that this had all been about getting cheap help for the busy season, a mug they didn't even have to pay. And my sister didn't understand what I was trying to achieve any better than did her moron of a husband. It would serve them both right if I left them here in the lurch and went back to London. I kept going round and round with this stuff, until maybe an hour or so later, I calmed down a bit and decided I'd just turn in for the night.

I didn't speak much to either of them when I came down as usual just after the breakfast rush. I made some toast and coffee, helped myself to some left-over scrambled eggs, and settled down in the corner of the cafe. All through my breakfast the thought kept occurring to me I might run into Tilo and Sonja again up in the hills. And though this might mean having to face the music about Hag Fraser's place, even so, I realised I was hoping it would happen. Besides, even if Hag Fraser's was truly awful, they'd never suppose I'd recommended it out of malice. There'd be any number of ways for me to get out of it.

Maggie and Geoff were probably expecting me to help again with the lunch rush, but I decided they needed a lesson about taking people for granted. So after breakfast, I went upstairs, got my guitar and slipped out the back way.

It was really hot again and the sweat was running down my cheek as I climbed the path leading up to my bench. Even though I'd been thinking about Tilo and Sonja at breakfast,

I'd forgotten them by this point, and so got a surprise when, coming up the final slope, I looked towards the bench and saw Sonja sitting there by herself. She spotted me immediately and waved.

I was still a bit wary of her, and especially without Tilo around, I wasn't so keen to sit down with her. But she gave me a big smile and did a shifting movement, like she was making room for me, so I didn't have much choice.

We said our hellos, then for a time we just sat there side by side, not speaking. This didn't seem so odd at first, partly because I was still getting my breath back, and partly because of the view. There was more haze and cloud than the previous day, but if you concentrated, you could still see beyond the Welsh borders to the Black Mountains. The breeze was quite strong, but not uncomfortable.

'So where's Tilo?' I asked in the end.

'Tilo? Oh ...' She put her hand up to shield her eyes. Then she pointed. 'There. You see? Over there. That is Tilo.'

Some way in the distance, I could see a figure, in what might have been a green T-shirt and a white sun cap, moving along the rising path towards Worcestershire Beacon.

'Tilo wished to go for a walk,' she said.

'You didn't want to go with him?'

'No. I decided to stay here.'

While she wasn't by any means the irate customer from the cafe, neither was she quite the same person who'd been so warm and encouraging to me the day before. There was definitely something up, and I started preparing my defence about Hag Fraser's.

'By the way,' I said, 'I've been working a bit more on that song. You can hear it if you like.'

She gave this consideration, then said: 'If you do not mind, perhaps not just at this minute. You see, Tilo and I have just had a talk. You might call it a disagreement.'

'Oh okay. Sorry to hear that.'

'And now he has gone off for his walk.'

Again, we sat there not talking. Then I sighed and said: 'I think maybe this is all my fault.'

She turned to look at me. 'Your fault? Why do you say that?'

'The reason you've quarrelled, the reason your holiday's all messed up now. It's my fault. It's that hotel, isn't it? It wasn't very good, right?'

'The hotel?' She seemed puzzled. 'That hotel. Well, it has some weak points. But it is a hotel, like many others.'

'But you noticed, right? You noticed all the weak points. You must have done.'

She seemed to think this over, then nodded. 'It is true, I noticed the weak points. Tilo, however, did not. Tilo, of course, thought the hotel was splendid. We are so lucky, he kept saying. So lucky to find such a hotel. Then this morning we have our breakfast. For Tilo, this is a fine breakfast, the best breakfast ever. I say, Tilo, don't be stupid. This is not a good breakfast. This is not a good hotel. He says, no, no, we are so very lucky. So I become angry. I tell the proprietress everything that is wrong. Tilo leads me away. Let's go for a walk, he says. You will feel better then. So we come out here. And he says, Sonja, look at these hills, aren't they so beautiful? Aren't we fortunate to come to such a place as this for our vacation? These hills, he says, are even more wonderful than he imagined them when we listen to Elgar. He asks me, isn't this so? Perhaps I become angry again. I tell him, these hills are not so wonderful. It is not how I imagine them when I hear Elgar's music. Elgar's hills are majestic and mysterious. Here, this is just like a park. This is what I say to him, and then it is his turn to be cross. He says in that case, he will walk by himself. He says we are finished, we never agree on anything now. Yes, he says, Sonja, you and me, we are finished. And off he goes! So there you are. That is why he is up there and I am down here.' She shielded her eyes again and watched Tilo's progress.

'I'm really sorry,' I said. 'If only I hadn't sent you to that hotel in the first place ...'

'Please. The hotel is not important.' She leaned forward to get a better view of Tilo. Then she turned to me and smiled, and I thought maybe there were little tears in her eyes. 'Tell me,' she said. 'Today, you mean to write more songs?'

'That's the plan. Or at least, I want to finish the one I've been working on. The one you heard yesterday.'

'That was beautiful. And what will you do then, once you have finished writing your songs here? You have a plan?'

'I'll go back to London and form a band. These songs need just the right band or they won't work.'

'How exciting. I do wish you luck.'

After a moment, I said, quite quietly: 'Then again, I may not bother. It's not so easy, you know.'

She didn't reply, and it occurred to me she hadn't heard, because she'd turned away again, to look towards Tilo.

'You know,' she said eventually, 'when I was younger, nothing could make me angry. But now I get angry at many things. I don't know how I have become this way. It is not good. Well, I do not think Tilo is coming back here. I will return to the hotel and wait for him.' She got to her feet, her gaze still fixed on his distant figure.

‘It’s a shame,’ I said, also getting up, ‘you having a row on your holiday. And yesterday, when I was playing to you, you seemed so happy together.’

‘Yes, that was a good moment. Thank you for that.’ Suddenly, she held out her hand to me, smiling warmly. ‘It has been so nice to meet you.’

We shook hands, in the slightly limp way you do with women. She started to walk away, then stopped and looked at me.

‘If Tilo were here,’ she said, ‘he would say to you, never be discouraged. He would say, of course, you must go to London and try and form your band. Of course you will be successful. That is what Tilo would say to you. Because that is his way.’

‘And what would you say?’

‘I would like to say the same. Because you are young and talented. But I am not so certain. As it is, life will bring enough disappointments. If on top, you have such dreams as this . . .’ She smiled again and shrugged. ‘But I should not say these things. I am not a good example to you. Besides, I can see you are much more like Tilo. If disappointments do come, you will carry on still. You will say, just as he does, I am so lucky.’ For a few seconds, she went on gazing at me, like she was memorising the way I looked. The breeze was blowing her hair about, making her seem older than she usually did. ‘I wish you much luck,’ she said finally.

‘Good luck yourself,’ I said. ‘And I hope you two make it up okay.’

She waved a last time, then went off down the path out of my view.

I took the guitar from its case and sat back on the bench. I didn’t play anything for a while though, because I was looking into the distance, towards Worcestershire Beacon, and Tilo's tiny figure up on the incline. Maybe it was to do with the way the sun was hitting that part of the hill, but I could see him much more clearly now than before, even though he'd got further away. He'd paused for a moment on the path, and seemed to be looking about him at the surrounding hills, almost like he was trying to reappraise them. Then his figure started to move again.

I worked on my song for a few minutes, but kept losing concentration, mainly because I was thinking about the way Hag Fraser's face must have looked as Sonja laid into her that morning. Then I gazed at the clouds, and at the sweep of land below me, and I made myself think again about my song, and the bridge passage I still hadn't got right.

NOCTURNE

UNTIL TWO DAYS AGO, Lindy Gardner was my nextdoor neighbor. Okay, you're thinking, if Lindy Gardner was my neighbor, that probably means I live in Beverly Hills; a movie producer, maybe, or an actor or a musician. Well, I'm a musician all right. But though I've played behind one or two performers you'll have heard of, I'm not what you'd call big-league. My manager, Bradley Stevenson, who in his way has been a good friend over the years, maintains I have it in me to be big-league. Not just big-league session player, but big-league headliner. It's not true saxophonists don't become headliners any more, he says, and repeats his list of names. Marcus Lightfoot. Silvio Tarrentini. They're all jazz players, I point out. 'What are you, if you're not a jazz player?' he says. But only in my innermost dreams am I still a jazz player. In the real world - when I don't have my face entirely wrapped in bandages the way I do now - I'm just a jobbing tenor man, in reasonable demand for studio work, or when a band's lost their regular guy. If it's pop they want, it's pop I play. R & B? Fine. Car commercials, the walk-on theme for a talk show, I'll do it. I'm a jazz player these days only when I'm inside my cubicle.

I'd prefer to play in my living room, but our apartment's so cheaply made the neighbors would start complaining all the way down the hall. So what I've done is convert our smallest room into a rehearsal room. It's no more than a closet really - you can get an office chair in there and that's it - but I've sound-proofed it with foam and egg-trays and old padded envelopes my manager Bradley sent round from his office. Helen, my wife, when she used to live with me, she'd see me going in there with my sax and she'd laugh and say it was like I was going to the toilet, and sometimes that's how it felt. That's to say, it was like I was sitting in that dim, airless cubicle taking care of personal business no one else would ever care to come across.

You've guessed by now Lindy Gardner never lived next to this apartment I'm talking about. Neither was she one of the neighbors who banged the door whenever I played outside the cubicle. When I said she was my neighbor, I meant something else, and I'm going to explain this right now.

Until two days ago, Lindy was in the next room here at this swanky hotel, and like me, had her face encased in bandages. Lindy, of course, has a big comfortable house nearby, and hired help, so Dr Boris let her go home. In fact, from a strictly medical viewpoint, she could probably have gone much sooner, but there were clearly other factors. For one, it wouldn't be so easy for her to hide from cameras and gossip columnists back in her own house. What's more, my hunch is Dr Boris's stellar reputation is based on procedures that aren't one hundred per cent legal, and that's why he hides his patients up here on this hush-hush floor of the hotel, cut off from all regular staff and guests, with instructions to leave our rooms only when absolutely necessary. If you could see past all the crêpe, you'd spot more stars up here in a week than in a month at the Chateau Marmont.

So how does someone like me get to be here among these stars and millionaires, having my face altered by the top man in town? I guess it started with my manager, Bradley, who isn't so big-league himself, and doesn't look any more like George Clooney than I do. He first mentioned it a few years ago, in a jokey sort of way, then seemed to get more serious each time he brought it up again. What he was saying, in a nutshell, was that I was ugly. And that this was what was keeping me from the big league.

'Look at Marcus Lightfoot,' he said. 'Look at Kris Bugoski. Or Tarrentini. Do any of them have a signature sound the way you do? No. Do they have your tenderness? Your vision? Do they have even half your technique? No. But they look right, so doors keep opening for them. '

'What about Billy Fogel?' I said. 'He's ugly as hell and he's doing fine. '

'Billy's ugly all right. But he's sexy, bad guy ugly. You, Steve, you're . . . Well, you're dull, loser ugly. The wrong kind of ugly. Listen, have you ever considered having a little work done? Of a surgical nature, I mean? '

I went home and repeated this all to Helen because I thought she'd find it as funny as I did. And at first, sure enough, we had a lot of laughs at Bradley's expense. Then Helen came over, put her arms around me and told me that for her at least, I was the most handsome guy in the universe. Then she kind of took a step back and went quiet, and when I asked her what was wrong, she said nothing was wrong. Then she said that perhaps, just perhaps, Bradley had a point. Maybe I should consider having a little work done.

'No need to look at me like that!' she yelled back.

'Everyone's doing it. And you, you have a professional reason. Guy wants to be a fancy chauffeur, he goes and buys a fancy car. It's no different with you! '

But at that stage I gave the idea no further thought, even if I was beginning to accept this notion that I was 'loser ugly'. For one thing, I didn't have the money. In fact, the very moment Helen was talking about fancy chauffeurs, we were nine and a half thousand dollars in debt. This was characteristic of Helen. A fine person in many ways, but this ability to forget completely the true state of our finances and start dreaming up major new spending opportunities, this was very Helen.

Money aside, I didn't like the idea of someone cutting me up. I'm not so good with that kind of thing. One time, early in my relationship with Helen, she invited me to go running with her. It was a crisp winter's morning, and I've never been much of a jogger, but I was taken by her and anxious to impress. So there we were running around the park, and I was doing fine keeping up with her, when suddenly my shoe hit something very hard jutting out of the ground. I could feel a pain in my foot, which wasn't so bad, but when I took off my sneaker and sock, and saw the nail on my big toe rearing up from the flesh like it was doing a Hitler-style salute, I got nauseous and fainted. That's the way I am. So you can see, I wasn't wild about face surgery.

Then, naturally, there was the principle of the thing. Okay, I've told you before, I'm no stickler for artistic integrity. I play every kind of bubble-gum for the pay. But this proposition was of another order, and I did have some pride left. Bradley was right about one thing: I was twice as talented as most other people in this town. But it seemed that didn't count for much these days. Because it has to do with image, marketability, being in magazines and on TV shows, about parties and who you ate lunch with. It all made me sick. I was a musician, why should I have to join in this game? Why couldn't I just play my music the best way I knew, and keep getting better, if only in my cubicle, and maybe some day, just maybe, genuine music lovers would hear me and appreciate what I was doing. What did I want with a plastic surgeon?

At first Helen seemed to see it my way, and the topic didn't come up again for some time. That is, not until she phoned from Seattle to say she was leaving me and moving in with Chris Prendergast, a guy she'd known since high school and who now owned a string of successful diners across Washington. I'd met this Prendergast a few times over the years - he'd even come to dinner once - but I'd never suspected a thing. 'All that sound-proofing in that cupboard of yours,' Bradley said at the time. 'It works both ways.' I suppose he had a point.

But I don't want to dwell on Helen and Prendergast except to explain their part in getting me where I am now. Maybe you're thinking I drove up the coast, confronted the happy couple, and plastic surgery became necessary following a manly altercation with my rival. Romantic, but no, that's not the way it happened.

What happened was that a few weeks after her phone call, Helen came back to the apartment to organise moving out her belongings. She looked sad walking around the place - where, after all, we'd had some happy times. I kept thinking she was about to cry, but she didn't, and just went on putting all her things into neat piles. Someone would be along to pick them up in a day or two, she said. Then as I was on my way to my cubicle, tenor in hand, she looked up and said quietly:

'Steve, please. Don't go into that place again. We need to talk.'

'Talk about what?'

'Steve, for God's sake.'

So I put the sax back in its case and we went into our little kitchen and sat down at the table facing one another. Then she put it to me.

There was no going back on her decision. She was happy with Prendergast, for whom she'd carried a torch since school. But she felt bad about leaving me, especially at a time when my career wasn't going so good. So she'd thought things over and talked with her new guy, and he too had felt bad about me. Apparently, what he'd said was: 'It's just too bad Steve has to pay the price for all our happiness.' So here was the deal. Prendergast was willing to pay for me to have my face fixed by the best surgeon in town. 'It's true,' she said, when I looked back at her blankly. 'He means it. No expense spared. All the hospital bills, recuperation, everything. The best surgeon in town.' Once my face was fixed, there'd be nothing holding me back, she said. I'd go right to the top, how could I fail, with the kind of talent I had?

‘Steve, why are you looking at me like that? This is a great offer. And God knows if he’ll still be willing in six months. Say yes right now and do yourself a big favor. It’s just a few weeks of discomfort, then whoosh! Jupiter and beyond!’

Fifteen minutes later, on her way out, she said in much sterner tones: ‘So what is it you’re saying? That you’re happy playing in that little closet for the rest of your life? That you just love being this big a loser?’ And with that, she left.

The next day I went into Bradley’s office to see if he had anything for me, and I happened to mention what had occurred, expecting us to laugh about it. But he didn’t laugh at all.

‘This guy’s rich? And he’s willing to get you a top surgeon? Maybe he’ll get you Crespo. Or even Boris.’

So now I had Bradley too, telling me how I had to take this opportunity, how if I didn’t I’d be a loser all my life. I left his office pretty angry, but he phoned later that same afternoon and kept on about it. If it was the call itself holding me back, he said, if it was the blow to my pride involved in picking up a phone and saying to Helen, yes, please, I want to do it, please get your boyfriend to sign that big check, if that’s what was holding me up, then he, Bradley, was happy to do all the negotiations on my behalf. I told him to go sit on a tall spike, and hung up. But then he called again an hour later. He told me he’d now figured it all out and I was a fool not to have done so myself.

for him, but really, she doesn't love him at all. She gets the guy to pay for your face. Once you're healed up, she comes back, you're good-looking, she's hungry for your body, she can't wait to be seen with you in restaurants . . . '

I stopped him here to point out that though over the years I'd become accustomed to the depths to which he could sink when persuading me to do something to his professional advantage, this latest ploy was somewhere so far down in the pits it was a place no light penetrated and where steaming horseshit would freeze in seconds. And on the subject of horseshit, I told him that while I understood how he, on account of his nature, couldn't help shovelling the stuff all the time, it would still be sound strategy on his part to come up with the sort that had at least a chance of taking me in for a minute or two. Then I hung up on him again.

Over the next few weeks, work seemed scarcer than ever, and each time I called Bradley to see if he had anything, he'd say something like: 'It's hard to help a guy who won't help himself.' In the end, I began considering the whole matter more pragmatically. I couldn't get away from the fact that I needed to eat. And if going through with this meant that eventually a lot more people got to hear my music, was that such a bad result? And what about my plans to lead my own band one day? How was that ever going to happen?

Finally, maybe six weeks after Helen came up with the offer, I mentioned casually to Bradley that I was thinking it over again. That was all he needed. He was off, making phone calls and arrangements, shouting a lot and getting excited. To give him his due, he was true to his word: he did all the go-between stuff so I didn't have to have a single humiliating conversation with Helen, let alone with Prendergast. At times Bradley even managed to create the illusion he was negotiating a deal for me, that it was me who had something to sell. Even so, I was having doubts several times each day. When it happened, it happened suddenly. Bradley called to say Dr Boris had a last-minute cancellation and I had to get myself to a particular address by three-thirty that same afternoon with all my bags packed. Maybe I had some final jitters at that point, because I remember Bradley yelling down the phone at me to pull myself together, that he was coming to get me himself, and then I was being driven up winding roads to a big house in the Hollywood hills and put under anaesthetic, just like a character in a Raymond Chandler story.

After a couple of days I was brought down here, to this Beverly Hills hotel, by the back entrance under cover of dark, and wheeled down this corridor, so exclusive we're sealed off entirely from all the regular life of the hotel.

The first week, my face was painful and the anaesthetic in my system made me nauseous. I had to sleep propped up on pillows, which meant I didn't sleep much at all, and because my nurse insisted on keeping the room dark all the time, I lost sense of what hour of the day it was. Even so, I didn't feel at all bad. In fact, I felt exhilarated and optimistic. I felt complete confidence in Dr Boris, who was after all a guy in whose hands movie stars placed their entire careers. What's more, I knew that with me he'd completed his masterpiece; that on seeing my loser's face, he'd felt his deepest ambitions stir, remembered why he'd chosen his vocation in the first place, and put everything into it and more. When the bandages came off, I could look forward to a cleanly chiselled face, slightly brutal, yet full of nuance. A guy with his reputation, after all, would have thought through carefully the requirements of a serious jazz musician, and not confused them with, say, those of a TV anchorman. He may even have put in something to give me that vaguely haunted quality, kind of like the young De Niro, or like Chet Baker before the drugs ravaged him. I thought about the albums I'd make, the line-ups I'd hire to back me. I felt triumphant and couldn't believe I'd ever hesitated about the move.

Then came the second week, when the effect of the drugs wore off, and I felt depressed, lonely and cheap. My nurse, Gracie, now let a little more light into the room - though she kept the blinds at least halfway down - and I was allowed to walk about the room in my dressing gown. So I put one CD after another into the Bang & Olufsen and went round and round the carpet, now and then stopping in front of the dressing-table mirror to inspect the weird bandaged monster gazing back through peephole eyes.

It was during this phase that Gracie first told me Lindy Gardner was next door. Had she brought this news in my earlier, euphoric phase, I'd have greeted it with delight. I might even have taken it as the first indicator of the glamorous life I was now headed for. Coming when it did though, just as I was falling into my trough, the news filled me with such disgust it set off another bout of nausea. If you're one of Lindy's many admirers, I apologise for what's coming up here. But the fact was, at that moment, if there was one figure who epitomised for me everything that was shallow and sickening about the world, it was Lindy Gardner: a person with negligible talent - okay, let's face it, she's demonstrated she can't act, and she doesn't even pretend to have musical ability - but who's managed all the same to become famous, fought over by TV networks and glossy magazines who can't get enough of her smiling features. I went past a bookstore earlier this year and saw a snaking line and wondered if someone like Stephen King was around, and here it turns out to be Lindy signing copies of her latest ghosted autobiography. And how was this all achieved? The usual way, of course. The right love affairs, the right marriages, the right divorces. All leading to the right magazine covers, the right talk shows, then stuff like that recent thing she had on the air, I don't remember its name, where she gave advice about how to dress for that first big date after your divorce, or what to do if you suspect your husband is gay, all of that. You hear people talk about her 'star quality', but the spell's easy enough to analyse.

It's the sheer accumulation of TV appearances and glossy covers, of all the photos you've seen of her at premieres and parties, her arm linked to legendary people. And now here she was, right next door, recovering just like me from a face job by Dr Boris. No other news could have symbolised more perfectly the scale of my moral descent. The week before, I'd been a jazz musician. Now I was just another pathetic hustler, getting my face fixed in a bid to crawl after the Lindy Gardners of this world into vacuous celebrity.

The next few days, I tried to pass the time reading, but couldn't concentrate. Under the bandages, parts of my face throbbed awfully, others itched like hell and I had bouts of feeling hot and claustrophobic. I longed to play my sax, and the thought that it would be weeks yet until I could put my facial muscles under that kind of pressure made me even more despondent. In the end, I worked out the best way to get through the day was to alternate listening to CDs with spells of staring at sheet music - I'd brought the folder of charts and lead sheets I worked with in my cubicle - and humming improvisations to myself.

It was towards the end of the second week, when I was starting to feel a little better both physically and mentally, my nurse handed me an envelope with a knowing smile, saying: 'Now that ain't something you'll get every day.' Inside was a page of hotel notepaper, and since I've got it right here beside me, I'll quote it just the way it came.

Gracie tells me you're getting weary of this high life. I'm that way too. How about you come and visit? If five o'clock tonight isn't too early for cocktails? Dr B. says no alcohol, I expect same for you. So looks like club sodas and Perrier.

Curse him! See you at five or I'll be heartbroken. Lindy Gardner.

Maybe it was because I'd become so bored by this point; or just that my mood was on the up again; or that the thought of having a fellow prisoner to swap stories with was extremely appealing. Or maybe I wasn't so immune myself to the glamor thing. In any case, despite everything I felt about Lindy Gardner, when I read this, I felt a tingle of excitement, and I found myself telling Gracie to let Lindy know I'd be over at five.

Lindy Gardner had on even more bandages than I did. I'd at least been left an opening at the top, from which my hair sprang up like palms in a desert oasis. But Boris had encased the whole of Lindy's head so it was a contoured coconut shape, with slots only for eyes, nose and mouth. What had happened to all that luxuriant blonde hair, I didn't know. Her voice, though, wasn't as constricted as you'd expect, and I recognized it from the times I'd seen her on TV.

'So how are you finding all this?' she asked. When I replied I wasn't finding it too bad, she said: 'Steve. May I call you Steve? I've heard all about you from Gracie.'

'Oh? I hope she left out the bad part.'

'Well, I know you're a musician. And a very promising one too.'

'She told you that?'

'Steve, you're tense. I want you to relax when you're with me. Some famous people, I know, they like the public to be tense around them. Makes them feel all the more special. But I hate that. I want you to treat me just like I'm one of your regular friends. What were you telling me? You were saying you don't mind this so much.'

Her room was significantly bigger than mine, and this was just the lounge part of her suite. We were sitting facing each other on matching white sofas, and between us was a low coffee table made of smoked glass, through which I could see the hunk of driftwood it rested on. Its surface was covered with shiny magazines and a fruit basket still in cellophane. Like me, she had the air-conditioning up high - it gets warm in bandages - and the blinds low over the windows against the evening sun. A maid had just brought me a glass of water and a coffee, both with straws bobbing in them - which is how everything has to be served here - then had left the room.

In answer to her question, I told her the toughest part for me was not being able to play my sax.

‘But you can see why Boris won’t let you,’ she said. ‘Just imagine. You blow on that horn a day before you’re ready, bits of your face will fly out all over the room!’

She seemed to find this pretty funny, waving her hand at me, as though it was me that had made the wisecrack and she was saying: ‘Stop it, you’re too much!’ I laughed with her, and sipped some coffee through the straw. Then she began talking about various friends who’d recently gone through cosmetic surgery, what they’d reported, funny things that had happened to them. Every person she mentioned was a celebrity or else married to one.

‘So you’re a sax player,’ she said, suddenly changing the subject. ‘You made a good choice. It’s a wonderful instrument. You know what I say to all young saxophone players? I tell them to listen to the old pros. I knew this sax player, up-and-coming like you, only ever listened to these far-out guys. Wayne Shorter and people like that. I said to him, you’ll learn more from the old pros. Might not have been so ground-breaking, I said to him, but those old pros knew how to do it. Steve, do you mind if I play you something? To show you exactly what I’m talking about?’

‘No, I don’t mind. But Mrs Gardner . . .’

‘Please. Call me Lindy. We’re equals here.’

‘Okay. Lindy. I just wanted to say, I’m not so young. In fact, I’ll be thirty-nine next birthday.’

‘Oh really? Well, that’s still young. But you’re right, I thought you were much younger. With these exclusive masks Boris has given us, it’s hard to tell, right? From what Gracie said, I thought you were this up-and-coming kid, and maybe your parents had paid for this surgery to get you off to a flying start. Sorry, my mistake.’

‘Gracie said I was “up-and-coming”?’

‘Don’t be hard on her. She said you were a musician so I asked her your name. And when I said I wasn’t familiar with it, she said, “That’s because he’s up-and-coming.” That’s all it was. Hey, but listen, what does it matter how old you are? You can always learn from the old pros. I want you to listen to this. I think you’ll find it interesting.’

She went over to a cabinet and a moment later held up a CD. ‘You’ll appreciate this. The sax on this is so perfect.’

Her room had a Bang & Olufsen system just like mine, and soon the place filled with lush strings. A few measures in, a sleepy, Ben Webster-ish tenor broke through and proceeded to lead the orchestra. If you didn’t know too much about these things, you could even have mistaken it for one of those Nelson Riddle intros for Sinatra. But the voice that eventually came on belonged to Tony Gardner. The song – I just about remembered it – was something called “Back at Culver City”, a ballad that never quite made it and which no one plays much any more. All the time Tony Gardner sang, the sax kept up with him, replying to him line by line. The whole thing was utterly predictable, and way too sugary.

After a while, though, I’d stopped paying much attention to the music because there was Lindy in front of me, gone into a kind of dream, dancing slowly to the song. Her movements were easy and graceful – clearly the surgery hadn't extended to her body - and she had a shapely, slim figure. She was wearing something that was part nightgown, part cocktail dress; that's to say, it was at the same time vaguely medical yet glamorous. Also, I was trying to work something out. I'd had the distinct impression Lindy had recently divorced Tony Gardner, but given I'm the nation's worst when it comes to showbiz gossip, I began to think maybe I'd got it wrong. Otherwise why was she dancing this way, lost in the music, evidently enjoying herself?

Tony Gardner stopped singing a moment, the strings swelled into the bridge, and the piano player started a solo. At this point, Lindy seemed to come back to the planet. She stopped swaying around, turned the music off with the remote, then came and sat down in front of me.

'Isn't that marvellous? You see what I mean?'

'Yeah, that was beautiful,' I said, not sure whether we were still only talking about the sax.

'Your ears weren't deceiving you, by the way.'

'I'm sorry?'

'The singer. That was who you thought it was. Just because he's no longer my husband, that doesn't mean I can't play his records, right?'

'No, of course not.'

'And that's a lovely saxophone. You see now why I wanted you to hear it.'

'Yeah, it was beautiful.'

'Steve, are there recordings of you somewhere? I mean, of your own playing?'

'Sure. In fact I have a few CDs with me next door.'

'The next time you come, sweetie, I want you to bring them. I want to hear how you sound. Will you do that?'

‘Okay, if it’s not going to bore you.’

‘Oh no, it won’t bore me. But I hope you don’t think I’m nosy. Tony always used to say I was nosy, I should just let people be, but you know, I think he was just being snobby. A lot of famous people, they think they should be interested only in other famous people. I’ve never been that way. I see everybody as a potential friend. Take Gracie. She’s my friend. All my staff at home, they’re also my friends. You should see me at parties. Everyone else, they’re talking to each other about their latest movie or whatever, I’m the one having a conversation with the catering girl or the bartender. I don’t think that’s being nosy, do you?’

‘No, I don’t think that’s nosy at all. But look, Mrs Gardner . . .’

‘Lindy, please.’

‘Lindy. Look, it’s been fabulous being with you. But these drugs, they really tire me out. I think I’m going to have to go lie down for a while.’

‘Oh, you’re not feeling well?’

‘It’s nothing. It’s just these drugs.’

‘Too bad! You definitely have to come back when you’re feeling better. And bring those recordings, the ones with you playing. Is that a deal?’

I had to reassure her some more that I’d had a good time and that I’d come back. Then as I was going out the door, she said:

‘Steve, do you play chess? I’m the world’s worst chess player, but I’ve got the cutest chess set. Meg Ryan brought it in for me last week.’

Back in my own room, I took a Coke from the mini-bar, sat down at the writing desk and looked out my window. There was a big pink sunset now, we were a long way up, and I could see the cars moving along the freeway in the distance. After a few minutes I phoned Bradley, and though his secretary kept me on hold a long time, he eventually came on the line.

‘How’s the face?’ he asked worriedly, like he was inquiring after a well-loved pet he’d left in my care.

‘How should I know? I’m still the Invisible Man.’

‘Are you all right? You sound ... dispirited.’

‘I am dispirited. This whole thing was a mistake. I can see that now. It’s not going to work.’

There was a moment’s silence, then he asked: ‘The operation’s a failure?’

‘I’m sure the operation’s fine. I mean all the rest of it, what it’s going to lead to. This scheme . . . It’s never going to play out the way you said. I should never have let you talk me into it.’

‘What’s the matter with you? You sound depressed. What have they been pumping into you?’

‘I’m fine. In fact, my head’s straighter than it’s been for a long while. That’s the trouble. I can see it now. Your scheme . . . I should never have listened to you.’

‘What is this? What scheme? Look, Steve, this isn’t complicated. You’re a very talented artist. When you’re through with this, all you do is what you’ve always done. Just now you’re simply removing an obstacle, that’s all. There’s no scheme . . .’

‘Look, Bradley, it’s bad here. It’s not just the physical discomfort. I realise now what I’m doing to myself. It’s been a mistake, I should have had more respect for myself.’

‘Steve, what’s triggered this? Did something just happen over there?’

‘Damn right something happened. That’s why I’m calling, I need you to get me out of this. I need you to get me to a different hotel.’

‘Different hotel? Who are you? Crown Prince Abdullah? What the fuck’s wrong with the hotel?’

‘What’s wrong is I’ve got Lindy Gardner right next door. And she just invited me over, and she’s going to keep on inviting me over. That’s what’s wrong!’

‘Lindy Gardner’s next door?’

‘Look, I can’t go through that again. I’ve just been in there, it was all I could do to stay as long as I did. And now she’s saying we have to play with her Meg Ryan chess set . . . .’

‘Steve, you’re telling me Lindy Gardner’s next door? You spent time with her?’

‘She put on her husband’s record! Fuck it, I think she’s playing another one right now. This is what I’ve come to. This is my level now.’

‘Steve, hold it, let’s go over this again. Steve, just shut the fuck up, then explain it to me. Explain to me how you get to be with Lindy Gardner.’

I did calm down then for a while, and I gave a brief account of how Lindy had asked me over, and the way things had gone.

‘So you weren’t rude to her?’ he asked as soon as I was through.

‘No, I wasn’t rude to her. I kept it all held in. But I’m not going back in there. I need to change hotels.’

‘Steve, you’re not going to change hotels. Lindy Gardner? She’s in bandages, you’re in bandages. She’s right next door. Steve, this is a golden opportunity.’

‘It’s nothing of the sort, Bradley. It’s inner-circle hell. Her Meg Ryan chess set for God’s sake!’

‘Meg Ryan chess set? How does that work? Every piece looks like Meg?’

‘And she wants to hear my playing! She’s insisting next time I take in CDs!’

‘She wants to . . . Jesus, Steve, you haven’t even got the bandages off and everything’s going your way. She wants to hear you play?’

‘I’m asking you to deal with this, Bradley. Okay, I’m in deep, I’ve had the surgery, you talked me into it, because I was fool enough to believe what you said. But I don’t have to put up with this. I don’t have to spend the next two weeks with Lindy Gardner. I’m asking you to get me moved pronto!’

‘I’m not getting you moved anywhere. Do you realise how important a person Lindy Gardner is? You know the kind of people she’s pals with? What she could do for you with one phone call? Okay, she’s divorced from Tony Gardner now. That doesn’t change a thing. Get her on your team, get your new face, doors will open. It’ll be big league, five seconds flat.’

‘It won’t be big-league anything, Bradley, because I’m not going over there again, and I don’t want any doors opening for me other than ones that open because of my music. And I don’t believe what you said before, I don’t believe this crap about a scheme . . .’

‘I don’t think you should be expressing yourself so emphatically. I’m very concerned about those stitches . . .’

‘Bradley, very soon you won’t have to be concerned about my stitches at all, because you know what? I’m going to pull off this mummy mask and I’m going to put my fingers into the corners of my mouth and yank my face into every kind of stretchy combination possible! Do you hear me, Bradley?’

I heard him sigh. Then he said: 'Okay, calm down. Just calm down. You've been under a lot of stress lately. It's understandable. If you don't want to see Lindy right now, if you want to let gold go floating by, okay, I understand your position. But be polite, okay? Make a good excuse. Don't burn any bridges.'

I felt a lot better after this talk with Bradley, and had a reasonably contented evening, watching half a movie, then listening to Bill Evans. The next morning after breakfast, Dr Boris came in with two nurses, seemed satisfied and left. A little later, around eleven, I had a visitor - a drummer called Lee who I'd played with in a house band in San Diego a few years ago. Bradley, who's also Lee's manager, had suggested he come by.

Lee's okay and I was pleased to see him. He stayed for an hour or so, and we swapped news of mutual friends, who was in which band, who'd packed their bags and gone to Canada or to Europe.

'It's too bad how so many of the old team aren't around any more,' he said. 'You have great times together, next thing you don't know where they are.'

He told me about his recent gigs, and we laughed over some memories from our San Diego days. Then towards the end of his visit, he said:

'And what about Jake Marvell? What do you make of it? Strange world, ain't it?'

'It's strange all right,' I said. 'But then again, Jake was always a good musician. He deserves what he's getting.'

'Yeah, but it's strange. Remember how Jake was back then? In San Diego? Steve, you could have blown him off the stage every night of the week. And now look at him. Is that just luck or what?'

'Jake was always a nice guy,' I said. 'And as far as I'm concerned, it's good to see any sax player getting recognition.'

'Recognition's right,' Lee said. 'And right here in this hotel too. Let me see, I've got it here.' He rummaged in his bag and produced a tattered copy of LA Weekly. 'Yeah, here it is. The Simon and Wesbury Music Awards. Jazz Musician of the Year. Jake Marvell. Let's see, when is this fucker? Tomorrow down in the ballroom. You could take a stroll down those stairs and attend the ceremony.' He put down the paper and shook his head. 'Jake Marvell. Jazz Musician of the Year. Who'd have thought it, eh, Steve?'

'I guess I won't make it downstairs,' I said. 'But I'll remember to raise a glass to him.'

'Jake Marvell. Boy, is this a screwed-up world or what?'

About an hour after lunch, the phone rang and it was Lindy.

'The chess set's all laid out, sweetie,' she said. 'You ready to play? Don't say no, I'm going crazy here with boredom. Oh, and don't forget now, bring those CDs. I'm just dying to hear your playing.'

I put down the phone, then sat on the edge of the bed trying to figure out how it was I hadn't stood my ground better. In fact, I hadn't put up even a hint of a 'no'. Maybe it was plain spinelessness. Or maybe I'd taken on board much more of Bradley's argument on the phone than I'd admitted. But now there wasn't time to think about it, because I had to decide which of my CDs were most likely to impress her. The more avant-garde stuff was definitely out, as was the stuff I'd recorded with the electro-funk guys in San Francisco last year. In the end, I chose just the one CD, changed into a fresh shirt, put my dressing gown back over the top and went next door.

She too had on a dressing gown, but it was the kind she could have worn to a movie premiere without too much embarrassment. Sure enough, the chess set was there on the low glass table, and we sat down on opposite sides like before and began a game. Maybe because we had something to do with our hands, things felt much more relaxed than the last time. As we played, we found ourselves talking about this and that: TV shows, her favourite European cities, Chinese food. There was far less name-dropping this time round, and she seemed much calmer. At one point she said:

‘You know what I do to stop myself going crazy in this place? My big secret? I’ll tell you, but not a word, not even to Gracie, promise? What I do is go out for midnight walks. Just inside this building, but it’s so vast you can walk around forever. And in the dead of night, it’s amazing. Last night I was out there maybe a whole hour? You have to be careful, there’s still staff roving around all the time, but I’ve never been caught. I hear anything at all, I run away and hide somewhere. Once these cleaning guys saw me for a second, but like that I was away into the shadows! It’s so exciting. All day you’re this prisoner, then it’s like you’re completely free, it’s truly wonderful. I’m gonna take you with me some night, sweetie. I’ll show you great things. The bars, the restaurants, conference rooms. Wonderful ballroom. And there’s no one there, everything’s just dark and empty. And I discovered the most fantastic place, a kind of penthouse, I think it’s gonna be a presidential suite? They’re halfway through building it, but I found it and I was able to walk right in, and I stayed there, twenty minutes, half an hour, just thinking things over. Hey, Steve, is this right? I can do this and take your queen?’

‘Oh. Yeah, I guess so. I didn’t see that. Hey, Lindy, you’re a lot smarter at this than you let on. Now what am I supposed to do?’

‘All right, I tell you what. Since you’re the guest, and you were obviously distracted by what I was saying, I’m gonna pretend I never saw it. Isn’t that nice of me? Say, Steve, I can’t remember if I asked you this before. You’re married, right?’

‘That’s right.’

‘So what does she think of all this? I mean, this isn’t cheap. Quite a few pairs of shoes she could buy with this kind of money.’

‘She’s okay about it. In fact, this was her idea in the first place. Look who’s not paying attention now.’

‘Oh hell. I’m such a lousy player anyway. Say, I don’t mean to be nosy, but does she come visit you much?’

‘Actually she hasn’t been here at all. But that was always the understanding we had, before I came in here.’

‘Yeah?’

She seemed puzzled so I said: ‘It might sound odd, I know, but that’s the way we wanted to do it.’

‘Right.’ Then after a while she said: ‘So does that mean no one comes to visit you here?’

‘I get visitors. Matter of fact, someone called this morning. Musician I used to work with.’

‘Oh yeah? That’s good. You know, sweetie, I’ve never been sure how these knights move. If you see me do something wrong, you just say, okay? It’s not me trying to pull a fast one.’

‘Sure.’ Then I said: ‘The guy who came to see me today, he told me some news. It was kind of strange. A coincidence.’

‘Yeah?’

‘There’s this saxophone player we both knew a few years back, in San Diego, guy called Jake Marvell. Maybe you’ve heard of him. He’s big-league now. But back then, when we knew him, he was nothing. In fact, he was a phoney. What you’d call a bluffer. Never knew his way around the keys properly. And I’ve heard him recently, plenty of times, and he hasn’t gotten any better. But he’s had a few breaks and now he’s considered hot. I swear to you he’s not one bit better than he used to be, not one bit. And you know what this news was? This same guy, Jake Marvell, he’s getting a big music award tomorrow, right here in this hotel. Jazz Musician of the Year. It’s just crazy, you know? So many talented sax players out there, and they decide to give it to Jake.’

I made myself stop, and looking up from the chess board, did a little laugh. ‘What can you do?’ I said, more gently.

Lindy was sitting up, her attention fully on me. ‘That’s too bad. And this guy, he’s no good, you say?’

‘I’m sorry, I was kind of out of line there. They want to give Jake an award, why shouldn’t they?’

‘But if he’s no good ...’

‘He’s as good as the next guy. I was just talking. I’m sorry, you have to ignore me.’

‘Hey, that reminds me,’ Lindy said. ‘Did you remember to bring your music?’

I indicated the CD beside me on the sofa. ‘I don’t know if it would interest you. You don’t have to listen ...’

‘Oh, but I do, I absolutely do. Here, let me see it.’

I handed her the CD. ‘It’s a band I played with in Pasadena. We played standards, old-fashioned swing, a little bossa nova. Nothing special, I just brought it because you asked. '

She was examining the CD case, holding it close to her face, then away from her again. 'So are you in this picture?' She brought it up close again. 'I'm kind of curious what you look like. Or I should say, what you looked like.'

'I'm second from the right. In the Hawaiian shirt, holding the ironing board.'

'This one?' She stared at the CD, then over at me. Then she said: 'Hey, you're cute.' But she said it quietly, in a voice devoid of conviction. In fact, I noted a definite touch of pity there. Almost immediately, though, she'd recovered. 'Okay, so let's hear it!'

As she moved towards the Bang & Olufsen, I said: 'Track number nine. "The Nearness of You". That's my special track.'

' "The Nearness of You" coming up. '

I'd settled on this track after some thought. The musicians in that band had been top-notch. Individually we'd all had more radical ambitions, but we'd formed the band with the express purpose of playing quality mainstream material, the sort the supper crowd would want. Our version of "The Nearness of You" - which featured my tenor all the way through - wasn't a hundred miles from Tony Gardner territory, but I'd always been genuinely proud of it. Maybe you think you've heard this song done every way possible. Well, listen to ours. Listen, say, to that second chorus. Or to that moment as we come out of the middle eight, when the band go III-5 to VIx-9 while I rise up in intervals you'd never believe possible and then hold that sweet, very tender high B-flat. I think there are colours there, longings and regrets, you won't have come across before.

So you could say I was confident this recording would meet with Lindy's approval. And for the first minute or so, she looked to be enjoying herself. She'd stayed on her feet after loading the CD, and just like the time she'd played me her husband's record, she began swaying dreamily to the slow beat. But then the rhythm faded from her movements, until she was standing there quite still, her back to me, head bent forward like she was concentrating. I didn't at first see this as a bad sign. It was only when she came walking back and sat down with the music still in full flow, I realised something was wrong. Because of the bandages, of course, I couldn't read her expression, but the way she let herself slump into the sofa, like a tense mannequin, didn't look good.

When the track ended, I picked up the remote and turned it all off. For what felt a long time, she stayed the way she was, stiff and awkward. Then she hauled herself up a little and began fingering a chess piece.

'That was very nice,' she said. 'Thank you for letting me hear it.' It sounded formulaic, and she didn't seem to mind that it did.

'Maybe it wasn't quite your kind of thing.'

'No, no.' Her voice had become sulky and quiet. 'It was just fine. Thank you for letting me hear it.' She put the chess piece down on a square, then said: 'Your move.'

I looked at the board, trying to remember where we were. After a while, I asked gently: 'Maybe that particular song, it has special associations for you?'

She looked up and I sensed anger behind her bandages. But she said in the same quiet voice: 'That song? It has no associations. None at all.' Suddenly she laughed - a short, unkind laugh. 'Oh, you mean associations with him, with Tony? No, no. It was never one of his numbers. You play it very nicely. Really professional.'

‘Really professional? What’s that supposed to mean?’

‘I mean ... that it’s really professional. I mean it as a compliment.’

‘Professional?’ I got to my feet, crossed the room and got the disc out of the machine.

‘What are you so mad about?’ Her voice was still distant and cold. ‘I say something wrong? I’m sorry. I was trying to be nice.’

I came back to the table, put the disc back in its case, but didn’t sit down.

‘So we going to finish the game?’ she asked.

‘If you don’t mind, I’ve got a few things I have to do. Phone calls. Paperwork.’

‘What are you so mad about? I don’t understand.’

‘I’m not mad at all. Time’s getting on, that’s all.’

She at least got to her feet to walk me to the door, where we parted with a cold handshake.

I’ve said already how my sleep rhythm had been screwed up after the surgery. That evening I became suddenly tired, went to bed early, slept soundly for a few hours, then woke in the dead of night unable to go back to sleep. After a while I got up and turned on the TV. I found a movie I’d seen as a kid, so pulled up a chair and watched what remained of it with the volume down low. When that was over I watched two preachers shouting at each other in front of a baying audience. All in all, I was contented. I felt cosy and a million miles from the outside world. So my heart just about jumped out of my chest when the phone rang.

‘Steve? That you?’ It was Lindy. Her voice sounded odd and I wondered if she’d been drinking.

‘Yeah, it’s me.’

‘I know it’s late. But just now, when I was passing, I saw your light on under your door. I supposed you were having trouble sleeping, just like me.’

‘I guess so. It’s difficult keeping regular hours.’

‘Yeah. It sure is.’

‘Is everything okay?’ I asked.

‘Sure. Everything’s good. Very good.’

I realised now she wasn’t drunk, but I couldn’t put my finger on what was up with her. She probably wasn’t high on anything either – just peculiarly awake and maybe excited about something she had to tell me.

‘You sure everything’s okay?’ I asked again.

‘Yeah, really, but . . . Look, sweetie, I have something here, something I want to give to you.’

‘Oh? And what might that be?’

‘I don’t want to say. I want it to be a surprise.’

‘Sounds interesting. I’ll come and get it, maybe after breakfast?’

‘I was kinda hoping you’d come and get it now. I mean, it’s here, and you’re awake and I’m awake. I know it’s late, but . . . Listen, Steve, about earlier, about what happened. I feel I owe you an explanation.’

‘Forget it. I didn’t mind . . .’

‘You were mad at me because you thought I didn’t like your music. Well, that wasn’t true. That was the reverse of the truth, the exact reverse. What you played me, that version of “Nearness of You”? I haven’t been able to get it out of my head. No, I don’t mean head, I mean heart. I haven’t been able to get it out of my heart.’

I didn't know what to say, and before I could think of anything she was talking again.

'Will you come over? Right now? Then I'll explain it all properly. And most important . . . No, no, I'm not saying. It's gonna be a surprise. Come on over and you'll see. And bring your CD again. Will you do that?'

She took the CD from me as soon as she opened the door, like I was the delivery boy, but then grasped me by the wrist and led me in. Lindy was in the same glamorous dressing gown as before, but she looked a little less immaculate now: one side of the gown was hanging lower than the other, and a woolly dangle of fluff was caught on the back of her bandages near the neckline.

'I take it you've been on one of your nocturnal walks,' I said.

'I'm so glad you're up. I don't know if I could have waited till morning. Now listen, like I told you, I have a surprise. I hope you're gonna like it, I think you will. But first I want you to make yourself comfortable. We're gonna listen to your song again. Let me see, which track was it?'

I sat down on my usual sofa and watched her fussing with the hi-fi. The lighting in the room was soft, and the air felt pleasantly cool. Then "The Nearness of You" came on at high volume.

'Don't you think this might disturb people?' I said.

'To hell with them. We pay enough for this place, it's not our problem. Now shhh! Listen, listen!'

She began to sway to the music like before, only this time she didn't stop after a verse. In fact, she seemed to get more lost in the music the longer it went on, holding out her arms like she had an imaginary dance partner. When it finished, she turned it off and remained very still, standing at the end of the room with her back to me. She stayed like that for what felt like a long time, then finally came towards me.

‘I don’t know what to say,’ she said. ‘It’s sublime. You’re a wonderful, wonderful musician. You’re a genius.’

‘Well, thank you.’

‘I knew it the first time. That’s the truth. That’s why I reacted the way I did. Pretending not to like it, pretending to be snotty?’ She sat down facing me and sighed.

‘Tony used to pull me up about it. I’ve always done it, it’s something I don’t ever seem to get over. I run into a person who’s, you know, who’s really talented, someone who’s just been blessed that way by God, and I can’t help it, my first instinct is to do what I did with you. It’s just, I don’t know, I guess it’s jealousy. It’s like you see these women sometimes, they’re kind of plain? A beautiful woman comes into the same room, they hate it, they want to claw her eyes out. That’s the way I am when I meet someone like you. Especially if it’s unexpected, the way it was today and I’m not ready. I mean, there you were, one minute I’m thinking you’re just one of the public, then suddenly you’re . . . well, something else. You know what I’m saying? Anyway, I’m trying to tell you why I behaved so badly earlier on. You had every right to be mad at me.’

The late-night silence hung between us for a while.

‘Well, I appreciate it,’ I said eventually. ‘I appreciate you telling me this.’

She stood up suddenly. ‘Now, the surprise! Just wait there, don’t move.’

She went through into the adjoining room and I could hear her opening and shutting drawers. When she came back, she was holding something in front of her with both hands, but I couldn’t see what the something was, because she’d thrown a silk handkerchief over it. She halted in the middle of the room.

‘Steve, I want you to come and receive this. This is going to be a presentation.’

I was puzzled, but got to my feet. As I went to her, she pulled off the handkerchief and held towards me a shiny brass ornament.

‘You thoroughly deserve this. So it’s yours. Jazz Musician of the Year. Maybe of all time. Congratulations.’

She placed it in my hands and kissed me lightly on the cheek through the crêpe.

‘Well, thanks. This is a surprise. Hey, this looks pretty. What is it? An alligator?’

‘An alligator? Come on! It’s a pair of cute little cherubs kissing each other.’

‘Oh yeah, I can see it now. Well, thanks, Lindy. I don’t know what to say. It’s really beautiful.’

‘An alligator!’

‘I’m sorry. It’s just the way this guy has his leg stretched all the way out. But I see now. It’s really beautiful.’

‘Well, it’s yours. You deserve it.’

‘I’m touched, Lindy. I really am. And what does this say down here? I don’t have my glasses.’

‘It says “Jazz Musician of the Year”. What else would it say?’

‘That’s what it says?’

‘Sure, that’s what it says.’

I went back to the sofa, holding the statuette, sat down and thought a little. ‘Say, Lindy,’ I said eventually.

‘This item you’ve just given me. It’s not possible, is it, you came across it on one of your midnight walks?’

‘Sure. Sure it’s possible.’

‘I see. And it’s not possible, is it, this is the real award? I mean the actual gong they were going to hand to Jake?’

Lindy didn’t reply for a few seconds, but kept standing there very still. Then she said:

‘Of course it’s the real thing. What would be the point, giving you any old junk? There was an injustice about to be committed, but now justice has prevailed. That’s all that matters. Hey, sweetie, come on. You know you’re the one who deserves this award.’

‘I appreciate your viewpoint. It’s just that . . . well, this is kind of like stealing.’

‘Stealing? Didn’t you say yourself this guy’s no good? A fake? And you’re a genius. Who’s trying to steal from who here?’

‘Lindy, where exactly did you come across this thing?’

She shrugged. ‘Just some place. One of the places I go. An office, you’d call it maybe.’

‘Tonight? You picked it up tonight?’

‘Of course I picked it up tonight. I didn’t know about your award last night.’

‘Sure, sure. So that was an hour ago, would you say?’

‘An hour. Maybe two hours. Who knows? I was out there some time. I went to my presidential suite for a while.’

‘Jesus.’

‘Look, who cares? What are you so worried about? They lose this one, they can just go get another one. They’ve probably got a closet full somewhere. I presented you with something you deserve. You’re not going to turn it down, are you, Steve?’

‘I’m not turning it down, Lindy. The sentiment, the honour, all of that, I accept it all, I’m really happy about it. But this, the actual trophy. We’re going to have to take it back. We’ll have to put it back exactly where you found it.’

‘Screw them! Who cares?’

‘Lindy, you haven’t thought this through. What will you do when this gets out? Can you imagine what the press will do with this? The gossip, the scandal? What will your public say? Now come on. We’re going out there right now before people start waking up. You’re going to show me exactly where you found this thing.’

She suddenly looked like a kid who’d been scolded. Then she sighed and said: ‘I guess you’re right, sweetie.’

Once we’d agreed to take it back, Lindy became quite possessive about the award, holding it close to her bosom all the time we hurried through the passageways of the vast, sleeping hotel. She led the way down hidden stairways, along back corridors, past sauna rooms and vending machines. We didn’t see or hear a soul. Then Lindy whispered: ‘It was this way,’ and we pushed through heavy doors into a dark space.

Once I was sure we were alone, I switched on the flashlight I’d brought from Lindy’s room and shone it around. We were in the ballroom, though if you were looking to dance just then, you’d have had trouble with all the dining tables, each one with its white linen cover and matching chairs. The ceiling had a fancy central chandelier. At the far end there was a raised stage, probably large enough to put on a fair-sized show, though right now the curtains were drawn across it. Someone had left a step-ladder in the middle of the room and an upright vacuum cleaner against the wall.

I wandered further into the room and threw the torch beam around some more. 'Maybe this is where it's going to happen. Where they're going to give Jake his award.'

'Of course it is. Where I found this' - she held up the statuette - 'there were other ones too. Best Newcomer. R&B Album of the Year. That kind of stuff. It's going to be a big event.'

Now my eyes had adjusted, I could see the place better, even though the flashlight wasn't so powerful. And for a moment, as I stood there looking up at the stage, I could imagine the way the place would look later on. I imagined all the people in their fancy clothes, the record-company men, the big-time promoters, the random showbiz celebrities, laughing and praising each other; the fawningly sincere applause every time the MC mentioned the name of a sponsor; more applause, this time with whoops and cheers, when the award winners went up. I imagined Jake Marvell up on that stage, holding his trophy, the same smug smile he'd always have in San Diego when he'd finished a solo and the audience had clapped.

'Maybe we've got this wrong,' I said. 'Maybe there's no need to return this. Maybe we should throw it in the garbage. And all the other awards you found with it.'

'Yeah?' Lindy sounded puzzled. 'Is that what you want to do, sweetie?'

I let out a sigh. 'No, I guess not. But it would be . . . satisfying, wouldn't it? All those awards in the garbage. I bet every one of those winners is a fake. I bet there isn't enough talent between the lot of them to fill a hot-dog bun.'

I waited for Lindy to say something to this, but nothing came. Then when she did speak, there was some new note, something tighter, in her voice.

‘How do you know some of these guys aren’t okay? How do you know some of them don’t deserve their award?’

‘How do I know?’ I felt a sudden tide of irritation.

‘How do I know? Well, think about it. A panel that considers Jake Marvell the year’s outstanding jazz musician. What other kind of people are they going to honour?’

‘But what do you know about these guys? Even this Jake fella. How do you know he didn’t work really hard to get where he has?’

‘What is this? You’re Jake’s greatest fan now?’

‘I’m just expressing my opinion.’

‘Your opinion? So this is your opinion? I guess I shouldn’t be so surprised. For a moment there, I was forgetting who you were.’

‘What the hell’s that supposed to mean? How dare you speak to me that way?!’

It occurred to me I was losing my grip. I said quickly: ‘Okay, I’m out of line. I’m sorry. Now let’s go find this office.’

Lindy had gone silent, and when I turned to face her, I couldn’t see well enough in the light to guess what she was thinking.

‘Lindy, where’s this office? We need to find it.’

Eventually, she indicated with the statuette towards the back of the hall, then led the way past the tables, still not speaking. When we were there, I put my ear against the door for a few seconds, and hearing nothing, opened it carefully.

We were in a long narrow space that seemed to run parallel with the ballroom. A dim light had been left on somewhere, so we could just about make things out without the flashlight. It was obviously not the office we were after, but some kind of catering-cum-kitchen area. Long extended work counters ran along both walls, leaving a gangway down the middle wide enough for staff to put final touches to the food.

But Lindy seemed to recognise the place and went striding purposefully down the gangway. About halfway along, she stopped suddenly to examine one of the baking trays left on the counter.

‘Hey, cookies!’ She seemed completely to have regained her equanimity. ‘Too bad it’s all under cellophane. I’m famished. Look! Let’s see what’s under this one.’

She went on a few more steps, to a big dome-shaped lid, and raised it. ‘Look at this, sweetie. This looks really good.’

She was leaning over a plump roast turkey. Instead of replacing the lid, she laid it down carefully next to the bird.

‘Do you think they’d mind if I pulled off a leg?’

‘I think they’d mind a lot, Lindy. But what the hell.’

‘It’s a big baby. You want to share a leg with me?’

‘Sure, why not?’

‘Okay. Here goes.’

She reached towards the turkey. Then suddenly she straightened and turned to face me.

‘So what was that supposed to mean back there?’

‘What was what supposed to mean?’

‘What you were saying. When you said you weren’t surprised. About my opinion. What was that about?’

‘Look, I’m sorry. I wasn’t trying to be offensive. Just thinking aloud, that’s all.’

‘Thinking aloud? Well, how about thinking aloud some more? So I suggest some of these guys may have deserved their awards, why is that a ridiculous statement?’

‘Look, all I’m saying is that the wrong people end up with the awards. That’s all. But you seem to know better. You think that’s not what happens . . .’

‘Some of those guys, maybe they worked damn hard to get where they have. And maybe they deserve a little recognition. The trouble with people like you, just because God’s given you this special gift, you think that entitles you to everything. That you’re better than the rest of us, that you deserve to go to the front of the line every time. You don’t see there’s a whole lot of other people weren’t as lucky as you who work really hard for their place in the world . . .’

‘So you don’t think I work hard? You think I sit on my ass all day? I sweat and heave and break my balls to come up with something worthwhile, something beautiful, then who is it gets the recognition? Jake Marvell! People like you!’

‘How fucking dare you! What do I have to do with this? Am I getting an award today? Has anyone ever given me a goddamn award? Have I ever had anything, even in school, one lousy certificate for singing or dancing or any damn thing else? No! Not a fucking thing! I had to watch all of you, all you creeps, going up there, getting the prizes, and all the parents clapping . . .’

‘No prizes? No prizes? Look at you! Who gets to be famous? Who gets the fancy houses . . .’

At that moment someone flicked a switch and we were blinking at each other under harsh bright lights. Two men had come in the same way we had, and were now moving towards us. The gangway was just wide enough to let them walk side by side. One was a huge black guy in a hotel security guard’s uniform, and what I first thought was a gun in his hand was a two-way radio. Beside him was a small white man in a light-blue suit with slick black hair. Neither of them looked particularly deferential. They stopped a yard or two away, then the small guy took an ID out of his jacket.

‘LAPD,’ he said. ‘Name’s Morgan.’

‘Good evening,’ I said.

For a moment the cop and the security guard went on looking at us in silence. Then the cop asked:

‘Guests of the hotel?’

‘Yes, we are,’ I said. ‘We’re guests.’

I felt the soft material of Lindy’s night-gown brush against my back. Then she’d taken my arm and we were standing side by side.

‘Good evening, officer,’ she said in a sleepy, honeydew voice quite unlike her usual one.

‘Good evening, ma’am,’ the cop said. ‘And are you folks up at this time for any special reason?’

We both started to answer at once, then laughed. But neither of the men laughed or smiled.

‘We were having trouble sleeping,’ Lindy said. ‘So we were just walking.’

‘Just walking.’ The cop looked around in the stark white light. ‘Maybe looking for something to eat.’

‘That’s right, officer!’ Lindy’s voice was still way over the top. ‘We got a little hungry, the way I’m sure you do too sometimes in the night.’

‘I guess room service isn’t up to much,’ the cop said.

‘No, it’s not so good,’ I said.

‘Just the usual stuff,’ the cop said. ‘Steaks, pizzas, hamburgers, triple-decker clubs. I know because I just ordered from all-night room service myself. But I guess you folks don't like that kind of food. '

'Well, you know how it is, officer,' Lindy said. 'It's the fun. The fun of creeping down and taking a bite, you know, a little bit forbidden, the way you did when you were a kid? '

Neither men showed any sign of melting. But the cop said:

'Sorry to trouble you folks. But you understand this area isn't open to guests. And one or two items have gone missing just lately. '

'Really? '

'Yeah. You folks see anything odd or suspicious tonight? '

Lindy and I looked at each other, then she shook her head at me dramatically.

'No,' I said. 'We haven't seen anything odd. '

'Nothing at all? '

The security guard had been coming closer, and now he came past us, squeezing his bulk along the counter. I realised the plan was for him to check us over more closely, to see if maybe we were concealing anything on our persons, while his partner kept us talking.

'No, nothing,' I said. 'What kind of thing did you have in mind? '

'Suspicious people. Unusual activity. '

'Do you mean, officer,' Lindy said with shocked horror, 'that rooms have been broken into? '

'Not exactly, ma'am. But certain items of value have gone missing. '

I could sense the security guard shift behind us.

‘So that’s why you’re here with us,’ Lindy said. ‘To protect us and our belongings.’

‘That’s right, ma’am.’ The cop’s gaze moved fractionally, and I got the impression he’d exchanged a look with the man behind us. ‘So if you see anything odd, please call security right away.’

The interview seemed to be over and the cop moved aside to let us out. Relieved, I made a move to go, but Lindy said:

‘I suppose it was kind of naughty of us, coming down here to eat. We thought about helping ourselves to some of that gateau over there, but then we thought it might be for a special occasion and it would be such a shame to spoil it.’

‘This hotel has good room service,’ the cop said. ‘Twenty-four hours.’

I tugged at Lindy, but she seemed now to be seized by the oft-cited mania of criminals to flirt with being caught.

‘And you just ordered something up yourself, officer?’

‘Sure.’

‘And was it good?’

‘It was pretty good. I recommend you folks do the same.’

‘Let’s leave these gentlemen to get on with their investigations,’ I said, tugging at her arm. But still she didn’t budge.

‘Officer, may I ask you something?’ she asked. ‘Do you mind?’

‘Try me.’

‘You were talking just now about seeing something odd. You see anything odd yourself? I mean, about us?’

‘I don’t know what you mean, ma’am.’

‘Like we both of us have our faces entirely wrapped in bandages? Did you notice that?’

The cop looked at us carefully, as though to verify this last statement. Then he said: ‘As a matter of fact, I did notice, ma’am, yes. But I didn’t wish to make personal remarks.’

‘Oh, I see,’ Lindy said. Then turning to me: ‘Wasn’t that considerate of him?’

‘Come on,’ I said, pulling her along now quite forcefully. I could feel both men staring at our backs all the way to the exit.

We crossed the ballroom with an outward show of calm. But once we were past the big swing doors, we gave in to panic and broke into a near-run. Our arms stayed linked, so we did a lot of stumbling and colliding as Lindy led me through the building. Then she pulled me into a service elevator, and only when the doors closed and we were climbing did she let go, lean back against the metal wall and start up a weird noise, which I realised was how hysterical laughter sounds coming through bandages.

When we stepped out of the elevator, she put her arm through mine again. ‘Okay, we’re safe,’ she said. ‘Now I want to take you somewhere. This is really something. See this?’ She was holding up a key card. ‘Let’s see what this can do for us.’

She used the card to get us through a door marked ‘Private’, then a door marked ‘Danger. Keep Out.’ Then we were standing in a space smelling of paint and plaster. There were cables dangling from the walls and ceiling, and the cold floor was splashed and mottled. We could see fine because one side of the room was entirely glass – unadorned by curtains or blinds – and all the outdoor lighting was filling the place with yellowish patches. We were up even higher than on our floor: there was in front of us a helicopter-style view over the freeway and the surrounding territory.

‘It’s going to be a new presidential suite,’ Lindy said. ‘I love coming here. No light switches yet, no carpet. But it’s slowly coming together. When I first found it, it was much rougher. Now you can see how it’ll look. There’s even this couch now.’

In the centre of the room was a bulky shape with a sheet draped completely over it. Lindy went to it like it was an old friend and flopped down tiredly.

‘It’s my fantasy,’ she said, ‘but I kind of believe in it. They’re building this room just for me. That’s why I get to be in here. All of this. It’s because they’re helping me. Helping me build my future. This place used to be a real mess. But look at it now. It’s taking shape. It’s gonna be grand.’ She patted the space next to her. ‘Come on, sweetie, have a rest. I’m feeling drained. You must be too.’

The couch – or whatever it was under the sheet – was surprisingly comfortable, and as soon as I’d sunk into it, I felt waves of tiredness coming over me.

‘Boy, am I sleepy,’ Lindy said, and her weight fell onto my shoulder. ‘Isn’t this a great place? I found the key in the slot, first time I came here.’

We were quiet for a while, and I felt myself falling asleep. But then I remembered something.

‘Hey, Lindy.’

‘Mmm?’

‘Lindy. What happened to that award?’

‘The award? Oh yeah. The award. I hid it. What else could I do? You know, sweetie, you really deserved that award. I hope it means something to you, my presenting it to you tonight, the way I did. It wasn’t just a whim. I thought about it. I thought about it really carefully. I don't know if it means much to you. I don't know if you'll even remember it ten years, twenty years down the line.'

'I will for sure. And it does mean a lot to me. But Lindy, you say you hid it, but where? Where did you hide it?'

'Mmm?' She was falling asleep again. 'I hid it the only place I could. I put it in that turkey.'

'You put it in the turkey.'

'I did exactly the same thing once when I was nine years old. I hid my sister's glowball inside a turkey. That's what gave me the idea. Quick thinking, right?'

'Yeah, it sure was.' I felt so tired, but I forced myself to focus. 'But Lindy, how well did you hide it? I mean, would those cops have found it by now?'

'I don't see how. There wasn't anything sticking out, if that's what you mean. Why would they think to look up there? I was pushing it behind my back, like this. And kept pushing. I didn't turn around to look at it, because then those boys would have wondered what I was doing. It wasn't just a whim, you know. Deciding to give you that award. I thought about it, real hard. I sure hope it means something to you. God, I need to sleep.'

She slumped against me and the next moment she was making snoring noises. Concerned about her surgery, I adjusted her head carefully so her cheek wasn't pressing on my shoulder. Then I too began to drift off.

I woke with a jerk and saw signs of dawn in the big window in front of us. Lindy was still fast asleep, so I carefully extricated myself from her, stood up and stretched my arms. I went to the window and looked at the pale sky and the freeway far below. Something had been on my mind as I was falling asleep and I tried to remember what it was, but my brain was foggy and exhausted. Then I remembered, and I went to the couch and shook Lindy awake.

‘What is it? What is it? Whaddaya want?’ she said without opening her eyes.

‘Lindy,’ I said. ‘The award. We’ve forgotten about the award.’

‘I told you already. It’s in that turkey.’

‘Okay, so listen. Those cops may not have thought to look inside the turkey. But sooner or later, someone’s going to find it. Maybe someone’s carving it right now.’

‘So what? So they find the thing in there. So what?’

‘They find the thing in there, they report the big find. Then that cop remembers us. He remembers we were there, standing next to that turkey.’

Lindy seemed to get more awake. ‘Yeah,’ she said. ‘I see what you’re saying.’

‘While that trophy stays in the turkey, they can link us to the crime.’

‘Crime? Hey, what do you mean crime?’

‘Doesn’t matter what you call it. We need to go back there and get that thing out of the turkey. It doesn’t matter where we leave it after that. But we can’t leave it where it is now.’

‘Sweety, are you sure we have to do this? I’m so tired now.’

‘We have to do it, Lindy. We leave it the way it is, you’ll get in trouble. And remember that means a big story for the press.’

Lindy thought about this, then she straightened up her posture a few notches and looked up at me. ‘Okay,’ she said. ‘Let’s go back there.’

This time round there were cleaning noises and voices down corridors, but we still made it back to the ballroom without encountering anyone. There was also more light to see by, and Lindy pointed out the notice beside the double doors. It said in plastic mix-and-spell letters: J. A. POOL CLEANSERS ASSOCIATION LUNCH. '

'No wonder we couldn't find that office with all the awards,' she said. 'This is the wrong ballroom.'

'It makes no difference. What we want is in there now.'

We crossed the ballroom, then cautiously entered the catering room. Like before, a dim light had been left on, and now there was also some natural light from the ventilation windows. There was nobody in sight, but when I glanced along the long work counters, I saw we were in trouble.

'Looks like someone's been here,' I said.

'Yeah.' Lindy took a few steps down the gangway, glancing about her. 'Yeah. Looks that way.'

All the canisters, trays, cake-boxes, silver-domed platters we'd seen earlier had vanished. In their place were neat piles of plates and napkins positioned at regular intervals.

'Okay, so they've moved all the food,' I said. 'Question is, where to?'

Lindy wandered further down the gangway, then turned to me. 'Remember, Steve, the last time we were here, before those men came in? We were having quite a discussion.'

'Yeah, I remember. But why go over that again? I know I was out of line.'

'Yeah right, let's forget it. So where's that turkey gone?' She glanced around some more. 'You know what, Steve? When I was a kid, I so wanted to be a dancer and a singer. And I tried and tried, God knows I tried, but people just laughed, and I thought, this world is so unfair. But then I grew up a little and I realised the world wasn't so unfair after all. That even if you were like me, one of the unblessed, there was still a chance for you, you could still find a place in the sun, you didn't have to settle for being just public. It wasn't going to be easy. You'd have to work at it, not mind what people said. But there was definitely still a chance.'

'Well, it looks like you did okay.'

'It's funny the way this world works. You know, I think it was very insightful. On the part of your wife, I mean. Telling you to get this surgery.'

'Let's leave her out of it. Hey, Lindy, do you know where that leads? Over there?'

At the far end of the room, where the counters came to an end, there were three steps leading up to a green door.

'Why don't we try it?' Lindy said.

We opened the door as cautiously as the last one, then for a while I became utterly disoriented. Everything was very dark and each time I tried to turn I found I was beating back curtain material or else tarpaulin. Lindy, who'd taken the flashlight, seemed to be doing better somewhere in front of me. Then I stumbled out into a dark space, where she was waiting for me, shining the torch at my feet.

'I've noticed,' she said, in a whisper. 'You don't like talking about her. Your wife, I mean.'

'It's not that exactly,' I whispered back. 'Where are we?'

'And she never comes to visit.'

'That's because we're not exactly together just now. Since you must know.'

'Oh, I'm sorry. I didn't mean to be nosy.'

‘You didn’t mean to be nosy?!’

‘Hey, sweetie, look! This is it! We’ve found it!’

She was pointing the beam at a table a short distance away. It had a white tablecloth on it, and two silver domes side by side.

I went up to the first dome and carefully raised it. Sure enough, there was a fat roast turkey sitting there. I searched out its cavity and inserted a finger.

‘Nothing here,’ I said.

‘You have to get right in there. I pushed it right up. These birds are bigger than you think.’

‘I’m telling you there’s nothing in there. Hold the flashlight over here. We’ll try this other one.’ I carefully took the lid off the second turkey.

‘You know, Steve, I think it’s a mistake. You shouldn’t be embarrassed to talk about it.’

‘Talk about what?’

‘About you and your wife being separated.’

‘Did I say we were separated? Did I say that?’

‘I thought ...’

‘I said we weren’t exactly together. That’s not the same thing.’

‘It sounds the same thing ...’

‘Well, it isn’t. It’s just a temporary thing, something we’re trying out. Hey, I’ve got something. There’s something in here. This is it.’

‘Then why don’t you pull it out, sweetie?’

‘What do you think I’m trying to do?! Jesus! Did you have to push it in so far?’

‘Sssh! There’s someone out there!’

At first it was hard to say how many of them there were. Then the voice came closer and I realised it was just the one guy, talking continuously into a cellphone. I also realised exactly where we were. I’d been thinking we’d wandered into some vague backstage area, but in fact we were up on the stage itself, and the curtain facing me was the only thing now dividing us from the ballroom. The man on the cellphone, then, was walking across the floor of the ballroom towards the stage.

I whispered to Lindy to turn off the flashlight and it went dark. She said into my ear: ‘Let’s get out of here,’ and I could hear her creeping away. I tried again to pull the statuette out of the turkey, but now I was afraid of making noise, and besides, my fingers just couldn’t get any purchase.

The voice kept coming closer until it felt like the guy was right there in front of me.

‘. . . It’s not my problem, Larry. We need the logos to be on these menu cards. I don’t care how you do it. Okay, then you do it yourself. That’s right, you do it yourself, bring them over yourself, I don’t care how you do it. Just get them here this morning, nine-thirty latest. We need those things here. The tables look fine. There are plenty of tables, trust me. Okay. I’ll check that out. Okay, okay. Yeah. I’m gonna check that out right now.’

For the last part of this, his voice had been moving over to one side of the room. He must now have flicked a switch on some wall panel, because a strong beam came on directly above me, and also a whirring noise like the air-conditioning had come on. Only I realised the noise wasn’t the air-conditioning, but the curtains opening in front of me.

Twice in my career I’ve had it happen when I’ve been on stage, I’ve had a solo to play, and suddenly it hits me I don't know how to start, which key I'm in, how the chords change. On both occasions this happened, I just froze up, like I was in a still from a movie, until one of the other boys stepped in to the rescue. It's only happened twice in over twenty years of playing professionally. Anyway, this is how I reacted to the spotlight coming on above me and the curtains starting to move. I just froze. And I felt oddly detached. I felt a kind of mild curiosity concerning what I'd see once the curtain was gone.

What I saw was the ballroom, and from the vantage point of the stage, I could appreciate better the way the tables were laid out in two parallel lines all the way to the back. The spot above me was putting the room in shade a little, but I could make out the chandelier and the fancy ceiling.

The cellphone man was an overweight bald guy in a pale suit and open-neck shirt. He must have walked away from the wall as soon as he'd flicked the switch, because now he was more or less level with me. He had his phone pressed to his ear, and from his expression you'd guess he was listening with extra attention to what was being said at the other end. But I supposed he wasn't, because his eyes were fixed on me. He kept looking at me and I kept looking at him, and the situation might have gone on indefinitely if he hadn't said into the phone, maybe in response to a query about why he'd gone silent:

'It's all right. It's all right. It's a man.' There was a pause, then he said: 'I thought for a moment it was something else. But it's a man. With a bandaged head, wearing a night-gown. That's all it is, I see it now. It's just that he's got a chicken or something on the end of his arm.'

Straightening up, I instinctively started to stretch out my arms in a shrugging motion. My right hand still being inside the turkey beyond the wrist, the sheer weight brought the whole arrangement back down with a crash. But at least I'd no more worries about concealment, so I went right at it, no holds barred, in an effort to extricate both my hand and the statuette. Meanwhile the man went on talking into his phone.

‘No, it’s exactly what I say. And now he’s taking his chicken off. Oh, and he’s producing something out of it. Hey, fella, what is that? An alligator?’

These last words he’d addressed to me with admirable nonchalance. But now I had the statuette in my hands and the turkey fell to the floor with a thud. As I hurried towards the darkness behind me, I heard the man say to his friend:

‘How the hell do I know? Some kind of magic show maybe.’

I don’t remember how we got back to our floor. I was lost again in a mess of curtains coming off the stage, then she was there pulling me by the hand. Next thing, we were hurrying through the hotel, no longer caring how much noise we made or who saw us. Somewhere along the way I left the statuette on a room-service tray outside a bedroom, beside the remains of someone’s supper.

Back in her room, we flopped down into a sofa and laughed. We laughed till we were collapsing into each other, then she got up, went to the window and raised the blinds. It was now light outside, though the morning was overcast. She went to her cabinet to mix drinks - ‘the world’s sexiest alcohol-free cocktail’ - and brought me over a glass. I thought she’d sit down beside me, but she drifted back towards the window, sipping from her own glass.

‘You looking forward to it, Steve?’ she asked after a while. ‘To the bandages coming off?’

‘Yeah. I suppose so.’

‘Even last week, I didn’t think about it so much. It seemed such a long way off. But now it’s not so long.’

‘That’s right,’ I said. ‘It’s not long for me either.’ Then I said quietly: ‘Jesus.’

She sipped her drink and looked out of the window. Then I heard her say: ‘Hey, sweetie, what’s the matter with you?’

‘I’m fine. I just need to get some sleep, that’s all.’

She kept looking at me for a while. ‘I tell you, Steve,’ she said eventually. ‘It’s gonna be fine. Boris is the best. You’ll see.’

‘Yeah.’

‘Hey, what’s wrong with you? Listen, this is my third time. Second time with Boris. It’s gonna be just fine. You’re gonna look great, just great. And your career. From here it’s gonna rocket.’

‘Maybe.’

‘No maybe about it! It’ll make such a difference, believe me. You’ll be in magazines, you’ll be on TV.’

I said nothing to this.

‘Hey, come on!’ She took a few steps towards me.

‘Cheer up there. You’re not still mad at me, are you? We were a great team down there, weren’t we? And I’ll tell you something else. From now on I’m gonna stay part of your team. You’re a goddamn genius, and I’m gonna make sure things go well for you.’

‘It won’t work, Lindy.’ I shook my head. ‘It won’t work.’

‘Like hell it won’t work. I’ll talk to people. People who can do you a lot of good.’

I kept shaking my head. ‘I appreciate it. But it’s no use. It won’t work. It was never going to work. I should never have listened to Bradley.’

‘Hey, come on. I may not be married to Tony any more, but I still have a lot of good friends in this town.’

‘Sure, Lindy, I know that. But it’s no use. You see, Bradley, that’s my manager, he talked me into this whole thing. I was an idiot to listen to him, but I couldn’t help it. I was at my wit’s end, and then he came out with this theory. He said my wife, Helen, she had this scheme. She hadn’t really left me. No, it was all part of this scheme she had. She was doing it all for me, to make it possible for me to get this surgery. And when the bandages came off, and I had a new face, she’d come back and it’d be all right again. That’s what Bradley said. Even when he was saying it, I knew it was bullshit, but what could I do? It was some kind of hope at least. Bradley used it, he used it, he’s like that, you know? He’s lowlife. All he thinks about is business. And about the big league. What does he care if she comes back or not?’

I stopped and she didn’t say anything for a long time. Then she said:

‘Look, sweetie, listen. I hope your wife comes back. I really do. But if she doesn’t, well, you’ve just got to start getting some perspective. She might be a great person, but life’s so much bigger than just loving someone. You got to get out there, Steve. Someone like you, you don’t belong with the public. Look at me. When these bandages come off, am I really going to look the way I did twenty years ago? I don’t know. And it’s a long time since I was last between husbands. But I’m going to go out there anyway and give it a go.’ She came over to me and shoved me on the shoulder. ‘Hey. You’re just tired. You’ll feel a lot better after some sleep. Listen. Boris is the best. He’ll have fixed it, for the both of us. You just see.’

I put my glass down on the table and stood up. ‘I guess you’re right. Like you say, Boris is the best. And we were a good team down there.’

‘We were a great team down there.’

I reached forward, put my hands on her shoulders, then kissed each of her bandaged cheeks. ‘You have yourself a good sleep,’ I said. ‘I’ll come over soon and we’ll play more chess.’

But after that morning, we didn’t see much more of each other. When I thought about it later, it occurred to me there’d been some things said during the course of that night, things I should maybe have apologised about, or at least tried to explain. At the time, though, once we’d made it back to her room, and we’d been laughing together on the sofa, it hadn’t seemed necessary, or even right, to bring all of that up again. When we parted that morning, I thought the two of us were well beyond that stage. Even so, I’d seen how Lindy could switch. Maybe later on, she thought back and got mad at me all over again. Who knows? Anyway, though I’d expected a call from her later that day, it never came, and neither did one come the day after. Instead, I heard Tony Gardner records through the wall, playing at top volume, one after the next.

When I did eventually go round there, maybe four days later, she was welcoming, but distant. Like that first time, she talked a lot about her famous friends – though none of it about getting them to help with my career. Still, I didn’t mind that. We gave chess a try, but her phone kept ringing and she’d go into the bedroom to talk.

Then two evenings ago she knocked on my door and said she was about to check out. Boris was pleased with her and had agreed to take the bandages off in her own house. We said our goodbyes in a friendly way, but it was like our real goodbyes had been said already, that morning right after our escapade, when I’d reached forward and kissed her on both cheeks.

So that’s the story of my time as Lindy Gardner’s neighbor. I wish her well. As for me, it’s six more days till my own unveiling, and a lot longer still before I'm allowed to blow a horn. But I'm used to this life now, and I pass the hours quite contentedly. Yesterday I got a call from Helen asking how I was doing, and when I told her I'd gotten to know Lindy Gardner, she was mightily impressed.

'Hasn't she married again?' she asked. And when I put her straight on that, she said: 'Oh, right. I must have been thinking about that other one. You know. What's-her-name.'

We talked a lot of unimportant stuff - what she'd watched on TV, how her friend had stopped by with her baby. Then she said Prendergast was asking for me, and when she said that, there was a noticeable tightening in her voice. And I almost said: 'Hello? Do I detect a note of irritation associated with lover boy's name?' But I didn't. I just said to say hi to him, and she didn't bring him up again. I'd probably imagined it anyway. For all I know, she was just angling for me to say how grateful I was to him.

When she was about to go, I said: 'I love you,' in that fast, routine way you say it at the end of a call with a spouse. There was a silence of a few seconds, then she said it back, in the same routine way. Then she was gone. God knows what that meant. There's nothing to do now, I guess, but wait for these bandages to come off. And then what? Maybe Lindy's right. Maybe, like she says, I need some perspective, and life really is much bigger than loving a person. Maybe this really is a turning point for me, and the big league's waiting. Maybe she's right.

CELLISTS

IT WAS OUR THIRD TIME playing the Godfather theme since lunch, so I was looking around at the tourists seated across the piazza to see how many of them might have been there the last time we'd played it. People don't mind hearing a favourite more than once, but you can't have it happen too often or they start suspecting you don't have a decent repertoire. At this time of year, it's usually okay to repeat numbers. The first hint of an autumn wind and the ridiculous price of a coffee ensure a pretty steady turnover of customers. Anyway, that's why I was studying the faces in the piazza and that's how I spotted Tibor.

He was waving his arm and I thought at first he was waving to us, but then I realised he was trying to attract a waiter. He looked older, and he'd put on some weight, but he wasn't hard to recognise. I gave Fabian, on accordion right next to me, a little nudge and nodded towards the young man, though I couldn't take either hand off my saxophone just then to point him out properly. That was when it came home to me, looking around the band, that apart from me and Fabian, there was no one left in our line-up from that summer we'd met Tibor.

Okay, that was all of seven years ago, but it was still a shock. Playing together every day like this, you come to think of the band as a kind of family, the other members as your brothers. And if every now and then someone moves on, you want to think he'll always stay in touch, sending back postcards from Venice or London or wherever he's got to, maybe a polaroid of the band he's in now - just like he's writing home to his old village. So a moment like that comes as an unwelcome reminder of how quickly things change. How the bosom pals of today become lost strangers tomorrow, scattered across Europe, playing the Godfather theme or 'Autumn Leaves' in squares and cafes you'll never visit.

When we finished our number, Fabian gave me a dirty look, annoyed I'd nudged him during his 'special passage' - not a solo exactly, but one of those rare moments when the violin and clarinet have stopped, I'm blowing just quiet notes in the background, and he's holding the tune together on his accordion. When I tried to explain, pointing out Tibor, now stirring his coffee beneath a parasol, Fabian seemed to have trouble remembering him. In the end, he said:

'Ah yes, the boy with the cello. I wonder if he's still with that American woman.'

'Of course not,' I said. 'Don't you remember? That all came to an end at the time.'

Fabian shrugged, his attention now on his sheet music, and then we were starting our next number.

I was disappointed Fabian hadn't shown more interest, but I suppose he'd never been one of those particularly concerned about the young cellist. Fabian, you see, he's only ever played in bars and cafes. Not like Giancarlo, our violin player at that time, or Ernesto, who was our bass player. They'd had formal training, so to them someone like Tibor was always fascinating. Maybe there was a tiny bit of jealousy there - of Tibor's top-drawer musical education, of the fact that his future was still in front of him. But to be fair, I think it was just that they liked to take the Tibors of this world under their wing, look after them a little, maybe prepare them for what lay ahead, so when the disappointments came they wouldn't be quite so hard to take.

That summer seven years ago had been an unusually warm one, and even in this city of ours, there were times you could believe we were down on the Adriatic. We played outdoors for over four months - under the cafe awning, facing out to the piazza and all the tables - and I can tell you that's hot work, even with two or three electric fans whirring around you. But it made for a good season, plenty of tourists passing through, a lot from Germany and Austria, as well as natives fleeing the heat down on the beaches. And that was the summer we first started noticing Russians. Today you don't think twice about Russian tourists, they look like everyone else. But back then, they were still rare enough to make you stop and stare. Their clothes were odd and they moved around like new kids at school. The first time we saw Tibor, we were between sets, refreshing ourselves at the big table the cafe always kept aside for us. He was sitting nearby, continually getting up and re-positioning his cello case to keep it in the shade.

'Look at him,' Giancarlo said. 'A Russian music student with nothing to live on. So what does he do? Decides to waste his money on coffees in the main square.'

'No doubt a fool,' Ernesto said. 'But a romantic fool. Happy to starve, so long as he can sit in our square all afternoon.'

He was thin, sandy-haired and wore unfashionable spectacles - huge frames that made him look like a panda. He turned up day after day, and I don't remember how exactly it happened, but after a while we began to sit and talk with him in between sets. And sometimes if he came to the cafe during our evening session, we'd call him over afterwards, maybe treat him to some wine and crostini.

We soon discovered Tibor was Hungarian, not Russian; that he was probably older than he looked, because he'd already studied at the Royal Academy of Music in London, then spent two years in Vienna under Oleg Petrovic. After a rocky start with the old maestro, he'd learnt to handle those legendary temper tantrums and had left Vienna full of confidence - and with a series of engagements in prestigious, if small venues around Europe. But then concerts began to get cancelled due to low demand; he'd been forced to perform music he hated; accommodation had proved expensive or sordid.

So our city's well-organised Arts and Culture Festival - which was what brought him here that summer - had been a much-needed boost, and when an old friend from the Royal Academy had offered him a free apartment for the summer down near the canal, he'd taken it up without hesitation. He was enjoying our city, he told us, but cash was always a problem, and though he'd had the occasional recital, he was now having to think hard about his next move.

It was after a while of listening to these worries that Giancarlo and Ernesto decided we should try and do something for him. And that was how Tibor got to meet Mr Kaufmann, from Amsterdam, a distant relative of Giancarlo's with connections in the hotel world.

I remember that evening very well. It was still early in the summer, and Mr Kaufmann, Giancarlo, Ernesto, all the rest of us, we sat indoors, in the back room of the cafe, listening to Tibor play his cello. The young man must have realised he was auditioning for Mr Kaufmann, so it's interesting now to remember how keen he was to perform that night. He was obviously grateful to us, and you could see he was pleased when Mr Kaufmann promised to do what he could for him on his return to Amsterdam. When people say Tibor changed for the worse that summer, that his head got too big for his own good, that this was all down to the American woman, well, maybe there's something in that.

Tibor had become aware of the woman while sipping his first coffee of the day. At that moment, the piazza was pleasantly cool - the cafe end remains shaded for much of the morning - and the paving stones were still wet from the city workers' hoses. Having gone without breakfast, he'd watched enviously while at the next table she'd ordered a series of fruit-juice concoctions, then - apparently on a whim, for it wasn't yet ten o'clock - a bowl of steamed mussels. He had the vague impression the woman was, for her part, stealing glances back at him, but hadn't thought too much about it.

'She looked very pleasant, beautiful even,' he told us at the time. 'But as you see, she's ten, fifteen years older than me. So why would I think anything was going on?'

He'd forgotten about her and was preparing to get back to his room for a couple of hours' practice before his neighbour came in for lunch and turned on that radio, when suddenly there was the woman standing in front of him.

She was beaming broadly, everything in her manner suggesting they already knew each other. In fact it was only his natural shyness that stopped him greeting her. Then she placed a hand on his shoulder, as though he'd failed some test but was being forgiven anyway, and said:

'I was at your recital the other day. At San Lorenzo.'

'Thank you,' he replied, even as he realised how foolish this might sound. Then when the woman just went on beaming down at him, he said: 'Oh yes, the San Lorenzo church. That's correct. I did indeed give a recital there.'

The woman laughed, then suddenly seated herself in the chair in front of him. 'You say that like you've had a whole string of engagements lately,' she said, a hint of mockery in her voice.

'If that is so, I've given you a misleading impression. The recital you attended was my only one in two months.'

'But you're just starting out,' she said. 'You're doing fine to get any engagements at all. And that was a good crowd the other day.'

'A good crowd? There were only twenty-four people.'

'It was the afternoon. It was good for an afternoon recital.'

‘I should not complain. Still, it wasn’t a good crowd. Tourists with nothing better to do.’

‘Oh! You shouldn’t be so dismissive. After all, I was there. I was one of those tourists.’ Then as he began to redden – for he hadn’t meant to give offence – she touched his arm and said with a smile: ‘You’re just starting out. Don’t worry about audience size. That’s not why you’re performing.’

‘Oh? Then why am I performing if not for an audience?’

‘That’s not what I said. What I’m saying to you is that at this stage in your career, twenty in the audience or two hundred, it doesn’t matter. Should I tell you why not? Because you’ve got it!’

‘I have it?’

‘You have it. Most definitely. You have ... potential.’

He stifled a brusque laugh that came to his lips. He felt more reproach towards himself than for her, for he had expected her to say ‘genius’ or at least ‘talent’ and it immediately struck him how deluded he’d been to expect such a comment. But the woman was continuing:

‘At this stage, what you’re doing is waiting for that one person to come and hear you. And that one person might just as easily be in a room like that one on Tuesday, in a crowd of just twenty people . . .’

‘There were twenty-four, not including the organisers. . .’

‘Twenty-four, whatever. What I’m saying is that numbers don’t matter right now. What matters is that one person.’

‘You refer to the man from the recording company?’

‘Recording? Oh no, no. That’ll take care of itself. No, I mean the person who’ll make you blossom. The person who’ll hear you and realise you’re not just another well-trained mediocrity. That even though you're still in your chrysalis, with just a little help, you'll emerge as a butterfly.'

'I see. By any chance, might you be this person?'

'Oh, come on! I can see you're a proud young man. But it doesn't look to me like you have so many mentors falling over themselves to get to you. At least not ones of my rank.'

It occurred to him then that he was in the midst of making a colossal blunder, and he considered the woman's features carefully. She'd now removed her sunglasses, and he could see a face that was essentially gentle and kind, yet with upset and perhaps anger not far away. He went on looking at her, hoping he'd soon recognise her, but in the end he was forced to say:

'I'm very sorry. You are perhaps a distinguished musician?'

'I'm Eloise McCormack,' she announced with a smile, and held out her hand. Unfortunately, the name meant nothing to Tibor and he found himself in a quandary. His first instinct was to feign astonishment, and he actually said: 'Really. This is quite amazing.' Then he pulled himself together, realising such bluffing was not only dishonest, but likely to lead to embarrassing exposure within seconds. So he sat up straight and said:

'Miss McCormack, it's an honour to meet you. I realise this will seem unbelievable to you, but I beg you to make allowances both for my youth and for the fact that I grew up in the former Eastern bloc, behind the Iron Curtain. There are many film stars and political personalities who are household names in the West, of whom, even today, I remain ignorant. So you must forgive me that I do not know precisely who you are.'

'Well . . . that's commendably frank.' Despite her words, she was clearly affronted, and her ebullience seemed to drain away. After an awkward moment, he said again:

‘You are a distinguished musician, yes?’

She nodded, her gaze drifting across the square.

‘Once again I must apologise,’ he said. ‘It was indeed an honour that someone like you should come to my recital. And may I ask your instrument?’

‘Like you,’ she said quickly. ‘Cello. That’s why I came in. Even if it’s a humble little recital like yours, I can’t help myself. I can’t walk by. I have a sense of mission, I guess.’

‘A mission?’

‘I don’t know what else to call it. I want all cellists to play well. To play beautifully. So often, they play in a misguided way.’

‘Excuse me, but is it just we cellists who are guilty of this misguided performance? Or do you refer to all musicians?’

‘Maybe the other instruments too. But I’m a cellist, so I listen to other cellists, and when I hear something going wrong . . . You know, the other day, I saw some young musicians playing in the lobby of the Museo Civico and people were just rushing past them, but I had to stop and listen. And you know, it was all I could do to stop myself going right up to them and telling them.’

‘They were making errors?’

‘Not errors exactly. But . . . well, it just wasn’t there. It wasn’t nearly there. But there you go, I ask too much. I know I shouldn’t expect everyone to come up to the mark I set for myself. They were just music students, I guess.’

She leaned back in her seat for the first time and gazed at some children, over by the central fountain, noisily soaking one another. Eventually, Tibor said:

‘You felt this urge also on Tuesday perhaps. The urge to come up to me and make your suggestions.’

She smiled, but then the next moment her face became very serious. ‘I did,’ she said. ‘I really did. Because when I heard you, I could hear the way I once was. Forgive me, this is going to sound so rude. But the truth is, you’re not quite on the correct path just now. And when I heard you, I so wanted to help you find it. Sooner rather than later.’

‘I must point out, I have been tutored by Oleg Petrovic.’ Tibor stated this flatly and waited for her response. To his surprise, he saw her trying to suppress a smile.

‘Petrovic, yes,’ she said. ‘Petrovic, in his day, was a very respectable musician. And I know that to his students he must still appear a considerable figure. But to many of us now, his ideas, his whole approach . . .’ She shook her head and spread out her hands. Then as Tibor, suddenly speechless with fury, continued to stare at her, she once again placed a hand on his arm. ‘I’ve said enough. I’ve no right. I’ll leave you in peace.’

She rose to her feet and this action soothed his anger; Tibor had a generous temperament and it wasn’t in his nature to remain cross with people for long. Besides, what the woman had just said about his old teacher had struck an uncomfortable chord deep within him – thoughts he’d not quite dared to express to himself. So when he looked up at her, his face showed confusion more than anything else.

‘Look,’ she said, ‘you’re probably too angry with me just now to think about this. But I’d like to help you. If you do decide you want to talk this over, I’m staying over there. At the Excelsior.’

This hotel, the grandest in our city, stands at the opposite end of the square from the cafe, and she now pointed it out to Tibor, smiled, and began to walk off towards it. He was still watching her when she turned suddenly near the central fountain, startling some pigeons, gave him a wave, then continued on her way.

Over the next two days he found himself thinking about the encounter many times. He saw again the smirk around her mouth as he'd so proudly announced Petrovic's name and felt the anger rising afresh. But on reflection, he could see he had not really been angry on his old teacher's behalf. It was rather that he had become accustomed to the idea that Petrovic's name would always produce a certain impact, that it could be relied upon to induce attention and respect: in other words, he'd come to depend on it as a sort of certificate he could brandish around the world. What had so disturbed him was the possibility that this certificate didn't carry nearly the weight he'd supposed.

He kept remembering too her parting invitation, and during those hours he sat in the square, he found his gaze returning to the far end, and the grand entrance of the Excelsior Hotel, where a steady stream of taxis and limousines drew up in front of the doorman.

Finally, on the third day after his conversation with Eloise McCormack, he crossed the piazza, entered the marbled lobby and asked the front desk to call her extension. The receptionist spoke into the phone, asked his name, then after a short exchange, passed the receiver to him.

'I'm so sorry,' he heard her voice say. 'I forgot to ask you your name the other day and it took me a while to figure out who you were. But of course I haven't forgotten you. As a matter of fact, I've been thinking about you an awful lot. There's so much I'd like to talk through with you. But you know, we have to do this right. Do you have your cello? No, of course you don't. Why don't you come back in an hour, exactly one hour, and this time bring your cello. I'll be waiting here for you.'

When he returned to the Excelsior with his instrument, the receptionist immediately indicated the elevators and told him Miss McCormack was expecting him.

The idea of entering her room, even in the middle of the afternoon, had struck him as awkwardly intimate, and he was relieved to find a large suite, the bedroom closed off entirely from view. The tall French windows had boarded shutters, for the moment folded back, so the lace curtains moved in the breeze, and he could see that by stepping through onto the balcony, he'd find himself looking over the square. The room itself, with its rough stone walls and dark wood floor, had almost a monastic air about it, softened only partially by the flowers, cushions and antique furniture. She, in contrast, was dressed in T-shirt, tracksuit trousers and trainers, as though she'd just come in from running. She welcomed him with little ceremony - no offer of tea or coffee - and said to him:

'Play for me. Play me something you played at your recital.'

She had indicated a polished upright chair carefully placed in the centre of the room, so he sat down on it and unpacked his cello. Rather disconcertingly, she sat herself in front of one of the big windows so that he could see her almost exactly in profile, and she continued to stare into the space before her all the time he tuned up. Her posture didn't alter as he began to play, and when he came to the end of his first piece, she didn't say a word. So he moved quickly to another piece, and then another. A half-hour went by, then a whole hour. And something to do with the shaded room and its austere acoustics, the afternoon sunlight diffused by the drifting lace curtains, the background hubbub rising from the piazza, and above all, her presence, drew from him notes that held new depths, new suggestions. Towards the end of the hour, he was convinced he'd more than fulfilled her expectations, but when he had finished his last piece, and they had sat in silence for several moments, she at last turned in her chair towards him and said:

‘Yes, I understand exactly where you are. It won’t be easy, but you can do it. Definitely, you can do it. Let’s start with the Britten. Play it again, just the first movement, and then we’ll talk. We can work through this together, a little at a time.’

When he heard this, he felt an impulse just to pack away his instrument and leave. But then some other instinct – perhaps it was simply curiosity, perhaps something deeper – overcame his pride and compelled him to start playing again the piece she had requested. When after several bars she stopped him and began to talk, he again felt the urge to leave. He resolved, just out of politeness, to endure this uninvited tutorial for at most another five minutes. But he found himself staying a little longer, then longer again. He played some more, she talked again. Her words would always strike him initially as pretentious and far too abstract, but when he tried to accommodate their thrust into his playing, he was surprised by the effect. Before he realised, another hour had gone by.

‘I could suddenly see something,’ he explained to us.

‘A garden I’d not yet entered. There it was, in the distance. There were things in the way. But for the first time, there it was. A garden I’d never seen before.’

The sun had almost set when he finally left the hotel, crossed the piazza to the cafe tables, and allowed himself the luxury of an almond cake with whipped cream, his sense of elation barely contained.

For the next several days, he returned to her hotel each afternoon and always came away, if not with the same sense of revelation he’d experienced on that first visit, then at least filled with fresh energy and hope. Her comments grew bolder, and to an outsider, had there been one, might have seemed presumptuous, but Tibor was no longer capable of regarding her interventions in such terms. His fear now was that her visit to the city would come to an end, and this thought began to haunt him, disturbing his sleep, and casting a shadow as he walked out into the square after another exhilarating session. But whenever he tentatively raised this question with her, the replies were always vague and far from reassuring. 'Oh, just until it gets too chilly for me,' she had said once. Or another time: 'I guess I'll stay as long as I'm not bored here.'

'But what's she like herself?' we kept asking him. 'On the cello. What's she like?'

The first time we raised this question, Tibor didn't answer us properly, just saying something like: 'She told me she was a virtuoso, right from the start,' then changing the subject. But when he realised we wouldn't let it go, he sighed and began to explain it to us.

The fact was, even at that first session, Tibor had been curious to hear her play, but had been too intimidated to ask her to do so. He'd felt only a tiny nudge of suspicion when, looking around her room, he'd seen no sign of her own cello. After all, it was perfectly natural she wouldn't bring a cello on holiday with her. And then again, it was possible there was an instrument - perhaps a rented one - in the bedroom behind the closed door.

But as he'd continued to return to the suite for further sessions, the suspicions had grown. He'd done his best to push them out of his mind, for by this time, he'd lost any lingering reservations about their meetings. The mere fact that she was listening to him seemed to draw fresh layers from his imagination, and in the hours between these afternoon sessions, he'd often find himself preparing a piece in his mind, anticipating her comments, her shakes of the head, her frown, the affirming nod, and most gratifying of all, those instances she became transported by a passage he was playing, when her eyes would close and her hands, almost against her will, began shadowing the movements he was making. All the same, the suspicions wouldn't go away, and then one day he came to the room and the bedroom door had been left ajar. He could see more stone walls, what looked to be a medieval four-poster bed, but no trace of a cello. Would a virtuoso, even on holiday, go so long without touching her instrument? But this question, too, he pushed out of his mind.

As the summer went on, they began to prolong their conversations by coming over to the cafe together after their sessions, and she'd buy him coffees, cakes, sometimes a sandwich. Now their talk was no longer just about music - though everything always seemed to come back to it. For instance, she might question him about the German girl he'd been close to in Vienna.

'But you must understand, she was never my girlfriend,' he would tell her. 'We were never like that.'

'You mean you never became physically intimate? That doesn't mean you weren't in love with her.'

'No, Miss Eloise, that is incorrect. I was fond of her, certainly. But we were not in love.'

'But when you played me the Rachmaninov yesterday, you were remembering an emotion. It was love, romantic love.'

'No, that is absurd. She was a good friend, but we did not love.'

'But you play that passage like it's the memory of love. You're so young, and yet you know desertion, abandonment. That's why you play that third movement the way you do. Most cellists, they play it with joy. But for you, it's not about joy, it's about the memory of a joyful time that's gone for ever.'

They had conversations like this, and he was often tempted to question her in return. But just as he'd never dared ask Petrovic a personal question in the whole time he'd studied under him, he now felt unable to ask anything of substance about her. Instead, he dwelt on the little things she let fall - how she now lived in Portland, Oregon, how she'd moved there from Boston three years ago, how she disliked Paris 'because of its sad associations' - but drew back from asking her to expand.

She would laugh much more easily now than in the first days of their friendship, and she developed the habit, when they stepped out of the Excelsior and crossed the piazza, of linking her arm through his. This was the point at which we first started noticing them, a curious couple, he looking so much younger than he actually was, she looking in some ways motherly, in other ways 'like a flirty actress', as Ernesto put it. In the days before we got to talking with Tibor, we used to waste a lot of idle chat on them, the way men in a band do. If they strolled past us, arm in arm, we'd look at each other and say: 'What do you think? They've been at it, yes?' But having enjoyed the speculation, we'd then shrug and admit it was unlikely: they just didn't have the atmosphere of lovers. And once we came to know Tibor, and he began telling us about those afternoons in her suite, none of us thought to tease him or make any funny suggestions.

Then one afternoon when they were sitting in the square with coffee and cakes, she began to talk about a man who wanted to marry her. His name was Peter Henderson and he ran a successful business in Oregon selling golfing equipment. He was smart, kind, well respected in the community. He was six years older than Eloise, but that was hardly old. There were two young children from his first marriage, but things had been settled amicably.

'So now you know what I'm doing here,' she said with a nervous laugh he'd never heard from her before. 'I'm hiding out. Peter has no idea where I am. I guess it's cruel of me.'

I called him last Tuesday, told him I was in Italy, but I didn't say which city. He was mad at me and I guess he's entitled to be.'

'So,' said Tibor. 'You are spending the summer contemplating your future.'

'Not really. I'm just hiding.'

'You do not love this Peter?'

She shrugged. 'He's a nice man. And I don't have a lot of other offers on the table.'

'This Peter. He is a music lover?'

'Oh . . . Where I live now, he would certainly count as one. After all, he goes to concerts. And afterwards, in the restaurant, he says a lot of nice things about what we just heard. So I guess he's a music lover.'

'But he ... appreciates you?'

'He knows it won't always be easy, living with a virtuoso.' She gave a sigh. 'That's been the problem for me all my life. It won't be easy for you either. But you and me, we don't really have a choice. We have our paths to follow.'

She didn't bring Peter up again, but now, after that exchange, a new dimension had opened in their relationship. When she had those quiet moments of thought after he'd finished playing, or when, sitting together in the piazza, she became distant, staring off past the neighbouring parasols, there was nothing uncomfortable about it, and far from feeling ignored, he knew his presence there beside her was appreciated.

One afternoon when he'd finished playing a piece, she asked him to play again one short passage - just eight bars - from near the close. He did as asked and saw the little furrow remain on her forehead.

‘That doesn’t sound like us,’ she said, shaking her head. As usual, she was sitting in profile to him in front of the big windows. ‘The rest of what you played was good. All the rest of it, that was us. But that passage there . . .’ She did a little shudder.

He played it again, differently, though not at all sure what he was aiming for, and wasn’t surprised to see her shake her head again.

‘I’m sorry,’ he said. ‘You must express yourself more clearly. I do not understand this “not us”.’

‘You mean you want me to play it myself? Is that what you’re saying?’

She’d spoken calmly, but as she now turned to face him, he was aware of a tension descending on them. She was looking at him steadily, almost challengingly, waiting for his answer.

Eventually he said: ‘No, I’ll try again.’

‘But you’re wondering why I don’t just play it myself, aren’t you? Borrow your instrument and demonstrate what I mean.’

‘No . . .’ He shook his head with what he hoped looked like nonchalance. ‘No. I think it works well, what we’ve always done. You suggest verbally, then I play. That way, it’s not like I copy, copy, copy. Your words open windows for me. If you played yourself, the windows would not open. I’d only copy.’

She considered this, then said: ‘You’re probably right. Okay, I’ll try and express myself a little better.’

And for the next few minutes she talked – about the distinction between epilogues and bridging passages. Then when he played those bars once more, she smiled and nodded approvingly.

But from that little exchange on, something shadowy had entered their afternoons. Perhaps it had been there all along, but now it was out of the bottle and hovered between them. Another time, when they were sitting in the piazza, he'd been telling her the story of how the previous owner of his cello had come by it in the Soviet Union days by bartering several pairs of American jeans. When he'd finished the story, she looked at him with a curious half-smile and said:

'It's a good instrument. It has a fine voice. But since I've never so much as touched it, I can't really judge it.'

He knew then she was again moving towards that territory, and he quickly looked away, saying:

'For someone of your stature, it would not be an adequate instrument. Even for me, now, it is barely adequate.'

He found he could no longer relax during a conversation with her for fear she would hijack it and bring it back onto this territory. Even during their most enjoyable exchanges, a part of his mind would have to remain on guard, ready to shut her off if she found yet another opening. Even so, he couldn't divert her every time, and he'd simply pretend not to hear when she said things like: 'Oh, it would be so much easier if I could just play it for you!'

Towards the end of September - there was now a chill in the breeze - Giancarlo received a phone call from Mr Kaufmann in Amsterdam; there was a vacancy for a cellist in a small chamber group at a five-star hotel in the centre of the city. The group played in a minstrels' gallery overlooking the dining room four evenings a week, and the musicians also had other 'light, non-musical duties' elsewhere in the hotel. Board and accommodation terms were available. Mr Kaufmann had immediately remembered Tibor and the post was being held open for him. We gave Tibor the news straight away - in the cafe the very evening of Mr Kaufmann's call - and I think we were all taken aback by the coolness of Tibor's response. It was certainly a contrast to his attitude earlier in the summer, when we'd fixed up his 'audition' with Mr Kaufmann. Giancarlo, in particular, became very angry.

'So what is it you have to think over so carefully?' he demanded of the boy. 'What were you expecting? Carnegie Hall?'

'I'm not ungrateful. Nevertheless, I must give this matter some thought. To play for people while they chat and eat. And these other hotel duties. Is this really suitable for someone like me?'

Giancarlo always lost his temper too quickly, and now the rest of us had to stop him from grabbing Tibor by his jacket and shouting into his face. Some of us even felt obliged to take the boy's side, pointing out it was his life, after all, and that he was under no obligation to take any job he was uncomfortable with. Things eventually calmed down, and Tibor then began to agree the job had some good points if viewed as a temporary measure. And our city, he pointed out rather insensitively, would become a backwater once the tourist season was over. Amsterdam at least was a cultural centre.

'I'll give this matter careful thought,' he said in the end. 'Perhaps you will kindly tell Mr Kaufmann I will give him my decision within three days.'

Giancarlo was hardly satisfied by this - he'd expected fawning gratitude, after all - but he went off all the same to call back Mr Kaufmann. During the whole of this discussion that evening, Eloise McCormack had not been mentioned, but it was clear to us all her influence was behind everything Tibor had been saying.

'That woman's turned him into an arrogant little shit,' Ernesto said after Tibor had left. 'Let him take that attitude with him to Amsterdam. He'll soon get a few corners knocked off him. '

Tibor had never told Eloise about his audition with Mr Kaufmann. He'd been on the verge of doing so many times, but had always drawn back, and the deeper their friendship had grown, the more it seemed a betrayal that he'd ever agreed to such a thing. So naturally Tibor felt no inclination to consult Eloise about these latest developments, or even allow her any inkling of them. But he'd never been good at concealment, and this decision to keep a secret from her had unexpected results.

It was unusually warm that afternoon. He'd come to the hotel as usual, and begun to play for her some new pieces he'd been preparing. But after barely three minutes, she made him stop, saying:

'There's something wrong. I thought it when you first came in. I know you so well now, Tibor, I could tell, almost from the way you knocked on the door. Now I've heard you play, I know for certain. It's useless, you can't hide it from me. '

He was in some dismay, and lowering his bow, was about to make a clean breast of everything, when she put up her hand and said:

'This is something we can't keep running away from. You always try to avoid it, but it's no use. I want to discuss it. The whole of this past week, I've been wanting to discuss it. '

'Really?' He looked at her in astonishment.

'Yes,' she said, and moved her chair so that for the first time she was directly facing him. 'I never intended to deceive you, Tibor. These last few weeks, they haven't been the easiest for me, and you've been such a dear friend. I'd so hate it if you thought I ever meant to play some cheap trick on you. No, please, don't try and stop me this time. I want to say this. If you gave me that cello right now and asked me to play, I'd have to say no, I can't do it. Not because the instrument isn't good enough, nothing like that. But if you're now thinking I'm a fake, that I've somehow pretended to be something I'm not, then I want to tell you you're mistaken. Look at everything we've achieved together. Isn't that proof enough I'm no fake anything? Yes, I told you I was a virtuoso. Well, let me explain what I meant by that. What I meant was that I was born with a very special gift, just as you were. You and me, we have something most other cellists will never have, no matter how hard they practise. I was able to recognise it in you, the moment I first heard you in that church. And in some way, you must have recognised it in me too. That's why you decided to come to this hotel that first time.

'There aren't many like us, Tibor, and we recognise each other. The fact that I've not yet learned to play the cello doesn't really change anything. You have to understand, I am a virtuoso. But I'm one who's yet to be unwrapped. You too, you're still not entirely unwrapped, and that's what I've been doing these past few weeks. I've been trying to help you shed those layers. But I never tried to deceive you. Ninety-nine per cent of cellists, there's nothing there under those layers, there's nothing to unwrap. So people like us, we have to help each other. When we see each other in a crowded square, wherever, we have to reach out for one another, because there are so few of us.'

He noticed that tears had appeared in her eyes, but her voice had remained steady. She now fell silent and turned away from him again.

'So you believe yourself to be a special cellist,' he said after a moment. 'A virtuoso. The rest of us, Miss Eloise, we have to take our courage in our hands and we unwrap ourselves, as you put it, all the time unsure what we will find underneath. Yet you, you do not care for this unwrapping. You do nothing. But you are so sure you are this virtuoso . . .’

‘Please don’t be angry. I know it sounds a little crazy. But that’s how it is, it’s the truth. My mother, she recognised my gift straight away, when I was tiny. I’m grateful to her for that at least. But the teachers she found for me, when I was four, when I was seven, when I was eleven, they were no good. Mom didn’t know that, but I did. Even as a small girl, I had this instinct. I knew I had to protect my gift against people who, however well-intentioned they were, could completely destroy it. So I shut them out. You’ve got to do the same, Tibor. Your gift is precious.’

‘Forgive me,’ Tibor interrupted, now more gently. ‘You say you played the cello as a child. But today . . .’

‘I haven’t touched the instrument since I was eleven. Not since the day I explained to Mom I couldn’t continue with Mr Roth. And she understood. She agreed it was much better to do nothing and wait. The crucial thing was not to damage my gift. My day may still come though. Okay, sometimes I think I’ve left it too late. I’m forty-one years old now. But at least I haven’t damaged what I was born with. I’ve met so many teachers over the years who’ve said they’d help me, but I saw through them. Sometimes it’s difficult to tell, Tibor, even for us. These teachers, they’re so . . . professional, they talk so well, you listen and at first you’re fooled. You think, yes, at last, someone to help me, he’s one of us. Then you realise he’s nothing of the kind. And that’s when you have to be tough and shut yourself off. Remember that, Tibor, it’s always better to wait. Sometimes I feel bad about it, that I still haven’t unveiled my gift. But I haven’t damaged it, and that’s what counts.’

He eventually played for her a couple of the pieces he’d prepared, but they couldn’t retrieve their usual mood and they ended the session early. Down in the piazza, they drank their coffee, speaking little, until he told her of his plans to leave the city for a few days. He'd always wanted to explore the surrounding countryside, he said, so now he'd arranged a short holiday for himself.

'It'll do you good,' she said quietly. 'But don't stay away too long. We still have a lot to do.'

He reassured her he'd be back within a week at the most. Nevertheless, there was still something uneasy in her manner as they parted.

He'd not been entirely truthful about his going away: he hadn't yet made any arrangements. But after leaving Eloise that afternoon, he went home and made several phone calls, eventually reserving a bed at a youth hostel in the mountains near the Umbrian border. He came to see us at the cafe that night, and as well as telling us about his trip - we gave him all kinds of conflicting advice about where to go and what to see - he rather sheepishly asked Giancarlo to let Mr Kaufmann know he'd like to take up the job offer.

'What else can I do?' he said to us. 'By the time I get back, I'll have no money left at all.'

Tibor had a pleasant enough break in our countryside. He didn't tell us much about it, other than that he'd made friends with some German hikers, and that he'd spent more than he could afford in the hillside trattorias. He came back after a week, looking visibly refreshed, but anxious to establish that Eloise McCormack had not left the city during his absence.

The tourist crowds were beginning to thin by then, and the cafe waiters were bringing out terrace heaters to place among the outdoor tables. On the afternoon of his return, at their usual time, Tibor took his cello to the Excelsior again, and was pleased to discover not only that Eloise was there waiting for him, but that she'd obviously missed him. She welcomed him with emotion, and just as someone else, in a surfeit of affection, might have plied him with food or drink, she pushed him into his usual chair and began impatiently unpacking the cello, saying: 'Play for me! Come on! Just play!'

They had a wonderful afternoon together. He'd worried beforehand how things would be, after her 'confession' and the way they'd last parted, but all the tension seemed simply to have evaporated, and the atmosphere between them felt better than ever. Even when, after he'd finished a piece, she closed her eyes and embarked on a long, stringent critique of his performance, he felt no resentment, only a hunger to understand her as fully as possible. The next day and the day after, it was the same: relaxed, at times even jokey, and he felt sure he'd never played better in his life. They didn't allude at all to that conversation before he'd gone away, nor did she ask about his break in the countryside. They only talked about the music.

Then on the fourth day after his return, a series of small mishaps - including a leaking toilet cistern in his room - prevented him going to the Excelsior at the usual hour. By the time he came past the cafe, the light was fading, the waiters had lit the candles inside the little glass bowls, and we were a couple of numbers into our dinner set. He waved to us, then went on across the square towards the hotel, his cello making him look like he was limping.

He noticed the receptionist hesitate slightly before phoning up to her. Then when she opened the door, she greeted him warmly, but somehow differently, and before he had a chance to speak, she said quickly:

'Tibor, I'm so glad you've come. I was just telling Peter everything about you. That's right, Peter's found me at last!' Then she called into the room: 'Peter, he's here! Tibor's here. And with his cello too!'

As Tibor stepped into the room, a large, shambling, greying man in a pale polo shirt rose to his feet with a smile. He gripped Tibor's hand very firmly and said: 'Oh, I've heard all about you. Eloise is convinced you're gonna be a big star.'

'Peter's persistent,' she was saying. 'I knew he'd find me in the end.'

'No hiding from me,' said Peter. Then he was pulling up a chair for Tibor, pouring him a glass of champagne from an ice-bucket on the cabinet. 'Come on, Tibor, help us celebrate our reunion.'

Tibor sipped the champagne, aware that Peter had pulled up for him, by chance, his usual 'cello chair'. Eloise had vanished somewhere, and for a while, Tibor and Peter made conversation, their glasses in their hands. Peter seemed kindly and asked a lot of questions. How had it been for Tibor growing up in a place like Hungary? Had it been a shock when he'd first come to the West?

'I'd love to play an instrument,' Peter said. 'You're so lucky. I'd like to learn. A little late now though, I guess.'

'Oh, you can never say too late,' Tibor said.

'You're right. Never say too late. Too late is always just an excuse. No, the truth is, I'm a busy man, and I tell myself I'm too busy to learn French, to learn an instrument, to read War and Peace. All the things I've always wanted to do. Eloise used to play when she was a kid. I guess she told you about that.'

'Yes, she did. I understand she has a lot of natural gifts.'

'Oh, she sure does. Anyone who knows her will be able to see that. She has such sensitivity. She's the one who should be having those lessons. Me, I'm just Mr Banana Fingers.' He held up his hands and laughed. 'I'd like to play piano, but what can you do with hands like these? Great for digging the earth, that's what my people did for generations. But that lady' - he indicated towards the door with his glass - 'now she's got sensitivity.'

Eventually, Eloise emerged from the bedroom in a dark evening dress and a lot of jewellery.

'Peter, don't bore Tibor,' she said. 'He's not interested in golf.'

Peter held out his hands and looked pleadingly at Tibor. 'Now tell me, Tibor. Did I say a single word to you about golf?'

Tibor said he should be going; that he could see he was keeping the couple from their dinner. This was met by protests from both of them, and Peter said:

'Now look at me. Do I look like I'm dressed for dinner?'

And though Tibor thought he looked perfectly decent, he gave the laugh that seemed expected of him. Then Peter said:

'You can't leave without playing something. I've been hearing so much about your playing.'

Confused, Tibor had actually started to unfasten his cello case, when Eloise said firmly, some new quality in her voice:

'Tibor's right. Time's getting on. The restaurants in this town, they don't keep your table if you don't come on time. Peter, you get yourself dressed. Maybe a shave too? I'll see Tibor out. I want to speak with him in private.'

In the lift, they smiled affectionately at each other, but didn't speak. When they came outside, they found the piazza lit up for the night. Local kids, back from their holidays, were kicking balls, or chasing each other around the fountain. The evening passeggiata was in full flow, and I suppose our music would have come drifting through the air to where they were standing.

‘Well, that’s it,’ she said, eventually. ‘He’s found me, so I guess he deserves me.’

‘He is a most charming person,’ Tibor said. ‘You intend to return to America now?’

‘In a few days. I suppose I will.’

‘You intend to marry?’

‘I guess so.’ For an instant, she looked at him earnestly, then looked away. ‘I guess so,’ she said again.

‘I wish you much happiness. He is a kind man. Also a music lover. That’s important for you.’

‘Yes. That’s important.’

‘When you were getting ready just now. We were talking not of golf, but of music lessons.’

‘Oh really? You mean for him or for me?’

‘For both. However, I don’t suppose there will be many teachers in Portland, Oregon, who could teach you.’

She gave a laugh. ‘Like I said, it’s difficult for people like us.’

‘Yes, I appreciate that. After these last few weeks, I appreciate that more than ever.’ Then he added: ‘Miss Eloise, there is something I must tell you before we part. I will soon leave for Amsterdam, where I have been given a position in a large hotel.’

‘You’re going to be a porter?’

‘No. I will play in a small chamber group in the hotel dining room. We will entertain the hotel guests while they eat.’

He was watching her carefully and saw something ignite behind her eyes, then fade away. She laid a hand on his arm and smiled.

‘Well then, good luck.’ Then she added: ‘Those hotel guests. They’ve got some treat coming up.’

‘I hope so.’

For another moment, they remained standing there together, just beyond the pool of light cast by the front of the hotel, the bulky cello between them.

‘And I hope also’, he said, ‘you’ll be very happy with Mr Peter.’

‘I hope so too,’ she said and laughed again. Then she kissed him on the cheek and gave him a quick hug. ‘You take care of yourself,’ she said.

Tibor thanked her, then before he quite realised it, he was watching her walking back towards the Excelsior.

Tibor left our city soon after that. The last time we had drinks with him, he was clearly very grateful to Giancarlo and Ernesto for his job, and to us all for our friendship, but I couldn’t help getting the impression he was being a little aloof with us. A few of us thought this, not just me, though Giancarlo, typically, now took Tibor’s side, saying the boy had just been feeling excited and nervous about this next step in his life.

‘Excited? How can he be excited?’ Ernesto said. ‘He’s spent the summer being told he’s a genius. A hotel job, it’s a comedown. Sitting talking to us, that’s a comedown too. He was a nice kid at the start of the summer. But after what that woman’s done to him, I’m glad we’re seeing the back of him.’

Like I said, this all happened seven years ago. Giancarlo, Ernesto, all the boys from that time except me and Fabian, they've all moved on. Until I spotted him in the piazza the other day, I hadn't thought about our young Hungarian maestro for a long time. He wasn't so hard to recognise. He'd put on weight, certainly, and was looking a lot thicker around the neck. And the way he gestured with his finger, calling for a waiter, there was something - maybe I imagined this - something of the impatience, the off-handedness that comes with a certain kind of bitterness. But maybe that's unfair. After all, I only glimpsed him. Even so, it seemed to me he'd lost that youthful anxiety to please, and those careful manners he had back then. No bad thing in this world, you might say.

I would have gone over and talked with him, but by the end of our set he'd already gone. For all I know, he was here only for the afternoon. He was wearing a suit - nothing very grand, just a regular one - so perhaps he has a day job now behind a desk somewhere. Maybe he had some business to do nearby and came through our city just for old times' sake, who knows? If he comes back to the square, and I'm not playing, I'll go over and have a word with him.
